And I said, Sir, I named there no word of Tythes in my preaching. But more than a month after that I was arrested there in prison, a man came to me into the prison, asking me what I said of Tythes: and I said to him, Sir, in this Town are many Clerks and Priests, of which some are called religious men, though many of them be Seculars: Therefore ask ye of them this question. And this man said to me, Sir, our Prelates say, That we also are obliged to pay our Tythes of all things that renew to us; and that they are accursed that withdraw any part wittingly from them of their Tythes. And I said (Sir) to that man, as with my protestation I say now before you, That I wonder that any Priest dare say men to be accursed, without the ground of Gods Word. And the man said, Sir, our Priests say, That they curse men thus by the authority of Gods Law. And I said, Sir, I know not where this sentence of cursing is authorised now in the Bible. And therefore, Sir, I pray ye that ye will ask the most cunning Clerk of this Town, that ye may know where this Sentence of cursing them that tythe not, is now written in Gods Law: for if it were written there, I would right gladly be learned where. But shortly this man would not go from me to ask this question of another body: But required me there, as I would answer before God, if in this case that cursing of Priests were lawful and approved of God? And shortly herewith came to my mind the learning of Saint Peter, teaching Priests specially to hallow the Lord Christ in their hearts: being evermore ready (as far as in them is) to answer through faith and hope to them that ask of them a reason. And this lesson Peter teacheth men to use with a meek spirit, and with dread of the Lord. Wherefore Sir, I said to this man in this wise: In the Old Law, which ended not fully till the time that Christ rose up again from death to life, God commanded Tythes to be given to the Levites, for the great business and daily travel that pertained to their Office. But Priests, because their travel was mikle more ease and light, than was the Office of the Levites: God ordained the Priests should take for their livelode to do their Office, the tenth part of those Tythes that were given to the Levites. But now (I said) in the New Law, neither Christ nor any of his Apostles took Tythes of the people, nor commanded the people to pay Tythes, neither to Priests, nor to Deacons. But Christ taught the people to do Alms; that is, works of mercy, to poor needy men (of surplus, that is, superfluous of their Temporal goods) which they had more than them needed reasonably to their necessary livelode. And thus (I said) not of Tythes, but of pure Alms of the people, Christ lived and his Apostles, when they were so busie in preaching of the Word of God to the people, that they might not travel otherwise to get their livelode. But after Christs Ascension, and when the Apostles had received the Holy Ghost, they travelled with their hands to get their livelode, when that they might thus do for busie preaching. Therefore by example of himself, Saint Paul teacheth all the Priests of Christ to travel with their hand, when for busie teaching of the people they might thus do. And thus all these Priests, whose Priesthood God accepteth now, or will accept, or did in the Apostles time, and after their decease, will do to the worlds end. But (as Cisterciensis telleth) in the thousand year of our Lord Jesus Christ, 211. year, one Pope Gregory the Tenth ordained new Tythes first to be given to Priests now in the New Law. But Saint Paul in his time, whose trace or trample all Priests of God inforce them to follow, seeing the covetousness that was among the people, desiring to destroy that foul sin through the Grace of God and true vertuous living and example of himself, wrought and taught all Priests to follow him as he followed Christ, patiently, willingly, and gladly in high Poverty: Wherefore Paul saith thus, The Lord hath ordained that they that preach the Gospel, shall live of the Gospel. But we (saith Paul*)* that covet and busie us to be faithful Followers of Christ, use not this power. For lo (as Paul witnesseth afterward) when he was full poor and needy, preaching among the people: he was not chargeous unto them, but with his hands he travelled not only to get his own living, but also the living of other poor and needy Creatures: and since the people was never so covetous, nor so avaritious (I ghess) as they are now; it were good counsel that all Priests took good heed to this heavenly learning of Paul, following him here in wilful poverty, nothing charging the people for their bodily livelode. But because that many Priests do contrary to Paul in this foresaid Doctrine, Paul biddeth the people take heed to those Priests that follow him as he had given them example. As if Paul would say thus to the people, Accept ye none other Priests than they, that live after the form that I have taught you. For certain, in whatsoever Dignity or Order that any Priest is in, if he conform him not to follow Christ and his Apostles in wilful poverty, and in other heavenly vertues, and especially in true preaching of Gods Word; though such a one be named a Priest, yet he is no more but a Priest in name, for the work of every Priest in such an one wanteth. This sentence approveth Augustine, Gregory, Chrysostome, and Lincoln plainly.

Paul having power to take, yet used it not.

Paul would not be chargeous.

If Priests were covetous then, what be they now? This rule with the rule of begging Friers cannot stand together.

And the Archbishop said to me, Thinkest thou this wholesome learning to sow openly, or yet privily among the people? Certain this Doctrine contrarieth plainly the Ordinance of holy Fathers, which have ordained, granted, and licensed Priests to be in divers degrees, and to live by Tythes and Offerings of the people, and by other duties.

Wholesome enough my Lord if your taste were good to savour it. But contrarieth not the Ordinance either of God, or of his Word.

And I said, Sir, if Priests were now in measurable measure and number, and lived vertuously, and taught busily and truly the Word of God, by example of Christ and of his Apostles, without Tythes, Offerings, and other duties that Priests now challenge and take; the people would give them freely sufficient livelode.

If Priests would not lack in their duty, they should not lack in having sufficient.

And a Clerk said to me, How wilt thou make this good, that the people will give freely to Priests their livelode; since that now by the Law every Priest can scarcely constrain the people to give them their livelode?

Fallax argumentum secundum non causam ut causam.

And I said, Sir, it is now no wonder though the people grudge to give Priests the livelode that they ask: Mekill people know now, how that Priests should live, and how that they live contrary to Christ and to his Apostles. And therefore the people is full heavy to pay (as they do) their Temporal goods to Parsons, and to other Vicars and Priests, which should be faithful Dispensators of the Parishes goods: taking to themselves no more but a scarce living of Tythes, nor of Offerings, by the Ordinance of the Common Law. For whatsoever Priests take of the people (be it tythe or offering, or any other duty or service) the Priests ought to have thereof no more, but a bare living: and to depart the residue to the poor men and women, specially of the Parish of whom they take this Temporal living. But the most deal of Priests now wasteth their Parishes goods, and spendeth them at their own will after the World, in their vain lusts: So that in few places poor men have duly (as they should have) their own sustenance, neither of Tythes, nor of Offerings, nor of other large wages and foundations that Priests take of the people in divers manners above that they need for needful sustenance of meat and clothing: but the poor needy people are forsaken and left of Priests to be sustained of the Parishioners, as if the Priests took nothing of the Parishioners to help the people with.

The evil demeanour of the Priests is the cause why the people be so slack in their tythes.

Priests being content with sufficiency, and a bare living, ought to part the residue to the poor.

Priests did so then, but our Priests do not so now.

And thus Sir, into over great Charges of the Parishioners they pay their Temporal goods twice, where once might suffice, if Priests were true Dispensators. Also Sir, the Parishioners that pay their Temporal goods (be they Tythes or Offerings) to Priests that do not their Office among them justly, are Partners of every sin of those Priests; because that they sustain those Priests folly in their

Whether tythes are to be paid to Priests doing not their duty.

A Paradox without Gods word?

A difference to be put betwixt the old Law and the new.

Priests had the tenth part of the Tythes given to the Levites.

Christ commandeth Alms, not Tythes, except Tythes be Alms.

Tythes by whom and when they were first commanded in the new Law.

their ſin, with their Temporal goods. If theſe things be well conſidered; what wonder is it then Sir, if the Pariſhioners grudge againſt theſe Diſpenſators?

Ghoſtly Mother, nay an unghoſtly ſtep-dame, to all Gods Children.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Thou that ſhouldſt be judged and ruled by holy Church, preſumptuouſly thou deemeſt holy Church to have erred in the Ordinance of Tythes and other duties to be paid to Prieſts. It ſhall be long ere thou thrive Loſſel, that thou deſpiſeſt thy ghoſtly Mother. How dareſt thou ſpeak this (Loſſel) among the people? Are not Tythes given to Prieſts to live by?

By the law none could challenge Tythes, but only the ſeed of Levi: Our Prieſts be not of the ſeed of Levi: Ergo, by the Law our Prieſts cannot challenge Tythes. As the Prieſthood is changed, ſo is the law changed

And I ſaid, Sir, S. Paul ſaith, That Tythes were given in the Old Law to Levites and to Prieſts, that came of the Lineage of Levi. But our Prieſts, he ſaith, came not of the Lineage of Levi, but of the Lineage of Juda, to which Juda no Tythes were promiſed to be given. And therefore Paul ſaith, ſince the Prieſthood is changed from the Generation of Levi to the Generation of Juda; It is neceſſary that changing alſo be made of the Law. So that Prieſts live now without Tythes and other Duties that they claim, following Chriſt and his Apoſtles in wilful Poverty, as they have given them example. For ſince Chriſt lived (all the time of his Preaching) by pure Alms of the people; and by Example of him his Apoſtles lived in the ſame wiſe, or elſe by the travel of their hands, as it is ſaid above: every Prieſt, whoſe Prieſthood Chriſt approveth, knoweth well, and confeſſeth in word and in work, That a Diſciple ought not to be above his Maſter, but it ſufficeth to a Diſciple to be as his Maſter, ſimple and pure, meek and patient; and by Example eſpecially of his Maſter Chriſt every Prieſt ſhould rule him in all his living; and ſo after his cunning and power, a Prieſt ſhould buſie him to inform and to rule whomſoever he might charitably.

Bleſs, but curſe not, ſaith S. Paul He goeth near you my Lord, when he voucheth your tythes. The difference of the freedoms between the Old and New Law.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me with a great ſpirit, Gods Curſe have thou and mine for this teaching: for thou wouldſt hereby make the Old Law more free and perfect than the New Law. For thou ſayſt that it is leful to Levites and to Prieſts to take Tythes in the Old Law, and ſo to enjoy their Priviledges: but to us Prieſts in the New Law, thou ſayſt it is not lawful to take Tythes: and thus thou giveſt to Levites of the Old Law, more freedom than to Prieſts of the New Law.

For what cauſe tythes were given in the old Law.

And I ſaid, Sir, I marvel that ye underſtand this plain Text of Paul thus; Ye wot well, that the Levites and Prieſts in the Old Law that took Tythes, were not ſo free nor ſo perfect, as Chriſt and his Apoſtles that took no Tythes. And Sir, there is a Doctor (I think that it is Saint Hierome) that ſaith thus, The Prieſts that challenge now in the New Law, Tythes; ſay in effect, that Chriſt is not become man, nor that he hath yet ſuffered death for mans love. Wherefore this Doctor ſaith this Sentence: Since Tythes were the heirs and wages limited to Levites and to Prieſts of the Old Law for bearing about of the Tabernacle, and for ſlaying and fleying of Beaſts, and for burning of Sacrifice, and for keeping of the Temple, and for trumping of battel before the Hoſt of Iſrael, and other divers Obſervances that pertained to their Office: thoſe Prieſts that will challenge or take Tythes, deny that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, and do the Prieſts Office of the Old Law, for whom Tythes were granted, for elſe (as this Doctor ſaith) Prieſts take now Tythes wrongfully.

If you take away tithes you undo the Church.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to his Clerks, Heard you ever Loſſell ſpeak thus? Certain this is the Learning of them all, that whereſoever they come, and they may be ſuffered, they enforce them to expugn the freedom of holy Church.

And I ſaid, Sir, why call ye the taking of Tythes, and of ſuch other duties that Prieſts challenge now (wrongfully) the freedom of holy Church: ſince neither Chriſt nor his Apoſtles, challenged nor took ſuch duties? Therefore theſe takings of Prieſts now are not called juſtly the freedom of holy Church, but all ſuch giving and taking ought to be called and holden, the ſlanderous covetouſneſs of men of the holy Church.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Why Loſſell, wilt not thou and other that are confederate with thee, ſeek out of holy Scripture and of the ſenſe of Doctors, all ſharp Authorities againſt Lords, Knights, and Squires, and againſt other ſecular men as thou doſt againſt Prieſts?

And I ſaid, Sir, whatſoever men or women, Lords or Ladies, or any other that are preſent in our preaching ſpecially, or in our communing, after our cunning, we tell out to them their Office and their Charges: but Sir, ſince Chryſoſtome ſaith, That Prieſts are the ſtomach of the people, it is needful in preaching, and alſo in communing, to be moſt buſie about this Prieſthood: Since by the viciouſneſs of Prieſts both Lords and Commons are moſt ſinfully infected and led into the worſt. And becauſe that the covetouſneſs of Prieſts and pride, and the boaſt that they have and make of their Dignity and Power, deſtroyeth not only the vertues of Prieſthood in Prieſts themſelves, but alſo over this, it ſtirreth God to take great vengeance both upon the Lords, and upon the Commons, which ſuffer theſe Prieſts charitably.

KING Hen. 4.

Thorpe, preach againſt whom thou wilt, touch not this ſcab.

The viciouſneſs and pride of Prieſts infecteth all the World.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Thou judgeſt every Prieſt proud that will not go arrayed as thou doſt: by God I deem him to be more meek that goeth every day in a ſcarlet Gown, than thou in thy thread-bare blue Gown. Whereby knowſt thou a proud man?

Spiteful meekneſs that is in ſcarlet Gowns. The ſigns and marks of proud Prieſts.

And I ſaid, Sir, a proud Prieſt may be known, when he denieth to follow Chriſt and his Apoſtles in wilful Poverty and other Vertues: and coveteth worldly worſhip, and taketh it gladly, and gathereth together with pleading, menacing, or with flattering, or with ſimony, any worldly goods; and moſt, if a Prieſt buſie him not chiefly in himſelf, and after in all other men and women after his cunning and power to withſtand ſin.

Paul ſaith, God ſhall judge all Fornicators. What ſay you my Lord?

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Though thou knoweſt a Prieſt to have all theſe vices, and though thou ſaweſt a Prieſt lovely lie now by a woman knowing her fleſhly, wouldſt thou therefore damn this Prieſt damnable? I ſay to thee, that in the turning about of thy hand, ſuch a Sinner may be verily repented.

And I ſaid, Sir, I will not damn any man for any ſin that I know done or may be done, ſo that the Sinner leaveth his ſin. But by authority of holy Scripture, he that ſinneth thus openly as you ſhew here, is damnable for doing of ſuch a ſin; and moſt ſpecially, a Prieſt that ſhould be example to all other to hate and fly ſin. And in how ſhort time ſoever ye ſay that ſuch a Sinner may be repented: he ought not of him that knoweth his ſinning, to be judged verily repentant, without open evidence of great ſhame and hearty ſorrow for ſin. For whoſoever (and ſpecially a Prieſt) that uſeth pride, envy, covetouſneſs, lechery, ſimony, or any other Vices, ſheweth not as open evidence of repentance as he hath given evil example and occaſion of ſinning, if he continue in any ſuch ſin as long as he may; it is likely that ſin leaveth him, and he not ſin. And as I underſtand, ſuch a one ſinneth unto death, for whom no body oweth to pray, as S. John ſaith.

Prieſts ought to be examples of good living

And a Clerk ſaid then to the Archbiſhop, Sir, the longer that ye appoſe him, the worſe he is; and the more you buſie you to amend him, the wayarder he is. For he is of ſo ſhrewd a kind, that he ſhameth not only to be himſelf a foul neſt, but without ſhame he buſieth him to make his neſt fouler.

Clerkly ſpoken, and like a paraple.

And then the Archbiſhop ſaid to his Clerk, Suffer a while, for I am at an end with him, for there is another point certified againſt him, and I will hear what he ſaith thereto.

Forget nothing I pray you my Lord.

And ſo then he ſaid to me, Lo it is here certified againſt thee, that thou preacheſt openly at Shrewsbury, that it is not lawful to ſwear in any caſe.

Not lawful to ſwear by any Creature.

And I ſaid, Sir, I never preached ſo openly, nor have I taught in this wiſe in any place. But Sir, as I preached in Shrewsbury, with my proteſtation I ſay to you now here, That by the authority of the Epiſtle of Saint James, and by witneſs of divers Saints and Doctors, I have preached openly in one place or other, that it is not lawful in any caſe to ſwear by any Creature. And over this Sir, I have alſo preached and taught by the foreſaid authorities, that no body ſhould ſwear in any caſe, if that without Oath in any wiſe he that is charged to ſwear might excuſe him to them that have power to compel him to ſwear in leful thing and lawful. But if a man may not excuſe him, without Oath, to them that have power to compel him to ſwear, then he ought to ſwear only by God, taking him only; that is, ſoothfaſtneſs, to witneſs to ſoothfaſtneſs.

Men ought not to ſwear, when without an oath he may excuſe himſelf that is compelled to.

And

KING Hen. 4. Well ſaid, Sir John, of you, your holy Mother ſtroke your head.

And then a Clerk asked me, If it were not leful to a Subject, at the bidding of his Prelate, to kneel down and touch the holy Goſpel book, and kiſs it, ſaying, So help me God and this holy dome? for he ſhould after his cunning and power do all things that his Prelate commandeth him.

And I ſaid to them, Sirs, ye ſpeak here full generally or largely. What if a Prelate commanded his Subject to do an unlawful thing, ſhould he obey thereto?

The Prelate would be thought to be goody be they never ſo bad.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, A Subject ought not to ſuppoſe, that his Prelate will bid him do an unlawful thing. For a Subject ought to think that his Prelate will bid him do nothing, but that he will anſwer for before God, that it is leful: And then, though the bidding of the Prelate be unlawful, the ſubject hath no peril to fulfil it, ſince that he thinketh and judgeth that whatſoever thing his Prelate biddeth him do, that it is leful to him for to do it.

And I ſaid, Sir, I truſt not thereto. But to our purpoſe; Sir, I tell you, that I was once in a Gentlemans houſe, and there were then two Clerks there, a Maſter of Divinity, and a Man of Law, which Man of Law was alſo communing in Divinity. And among other things, theſe Men ſpake of Oaths; and the Man of Law ſaid, at the bidding of his Sovereign which had power to charge him to ſwear, he would lay his hand upon a Book and hear his charge; and if his charge, to his underſtanding, were unleful, he would haſtily withdraw his hand upon the Book, taking there only God to witneſs, that he would fulfil that leful charge after his power. And the Maſter of Divinity ſaid then to him thus; Certain he that layeth his hand upon a Book in this wiſe, and maketh there a promiſe to do that thing that he is commanded, is obliged thereby by Book-oath, then to fulfil his charge. For no doubt, he that chargeth him to lay his hand thus upon a Book (touching the Book, and ſwearing by it, and kiſſing it, promiſing in this form to do this thing or that) will ſay and witneſs that he that toucheth thus a Book, and kiſſeth it, hath ſworn upon that Book. And all other men that ſee that man thus do, and alſo all thoſe that hear hereof, in the ſame wiſe will ſay and witneſs, that this man hath ſworn upon a Book. Wherefore, the Maſter of Divinity ſaid, It was not leful either to give or to take any ſuch charge upon a Book: for every Book is nothing elſe, but divers creatures of which it is made of. Therefore to ſwear upon a Book is to ſwear by creatures, and this ſwearing is ever unleful. This ſentence witneſſeth Chryſoſtome plainly, blaming them greatly that bring forth a Book to ſwear upon, charging Clerks that in no wiſe they conſtrain any body to ſwear, whether they think a man to ſwear true or falſe.

A communication betwixt a Lawyer and a Divine.

To ſwear by a book, is to ſwear by creatures.

Chryſoſtome blameth Book-oath.

And the Archbiſhop and his Clerks ſcorned me, and blamed me greatly for this ſaying. And the Archbiſhop menaced me with great puniſhment and ſharp, except I left this opinion of ſwearing.

Here now lacked Boner to ſcratch him by the face.

And I ſaid, Sir, this is not mine opinion, but it is the opinion of Chriſt our Saviour, and of S. James, and of Chryſoſtome, and of other divers Saints and Doctors.

Then the Archbiſhop had a Clerk read this Homily of Chryſoſtome; which Homily this Clerk held in his hand written in a Roll; which Roll the Archbiſhop cauſed to be taken from my fellow at Canterbury. And ſo then this Clerk read this Roll, till he came to a clauſe where Chryſoſtome ſaith, that it is ſin to ſwear well.

Either Malveren, or elſe Sir Brian Elowcole.

And then a Clerk (Malveren as I gueſs) ſaid to the Archbiſhop, Sir, I pray you wete of him, how he underſtandeth Chryſoſtome here, ſaying it to be ſin to ſwear well.

And ſo the Archbiſhop asked me, how I underſtood here Chryſoſtome.

Chriſt promiſeth and giveth mouth and utterance.

And certainly I was ſomewhat afraid to anſwer hereto. For I had bulied me to ſtudy about the ſenſe thereof, but lifting up my mind to God, I prayed him of grace. And as faſt as I thought how Chriſt ſaid to his Apoſtles, When for my name ye ſhall be brought before Judges, I ſhall give into your mouth wiſdom that your adverſaries ſhall not againſt ſay; and truſting faithfully in the Word of God, I ſaid, Sir, I know well that many men and women have now ſwearing ſo in cuſtom, that they neither know or will know, that they do evil to ſwear as they do; but they think and ſay, that they do well to ſwear as they do, though they know well that they ſwear untruly. For they ſay, they may by their ſwearing (though it be falſe) void blame or temporal harm, which they ſhould have if they ſwear not thus. And Sir, many men and women maintain ſtrongly that they ſwear well, when that thing is ſooth that they ſwear for. Alſo full many men and women ſay now, that it is well done to ſwear by creatures, when they may not (as they ſay) otherwiſe be believed. And alſo, full many men and women ſay now, that it is well done to ſwear by God, and by our Lady, and by other Saints, to have them in mind. But ſince all theſe ſayings are but excuſations, and ſin; me thinketh Sir, that this ſenſe of Chryſoſtome may be alleadged well againſt all ſuch ſwearers; witneſſing that all theſe ſin grievouſly, though they think themſelves to ſwear in this foreſaid wiſe well; for it is evil done, and great ſin to ſwear truth, when in any manner a man may excuſe himſelf without Oath.

The place of Chryſoſtome from expounded, howw it is ſin to ſwear wvell. What it is to ſwear wvell.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, That Chryſoſtome might be thus underſtood.

And then a Clerk ſaid to me, Wilt thou tarry my Lord no longer, but ſubmit thee here meekly to the Ordinance of holy Church, and lay thy hand upon a Book, touching the holy Goſpel of God, promiſing not only with thy mouth, but alſo with thine heart to ſtand to my Lords Ordinance.

Pope holy Church.

And I ſaid, Sir, have I not told you here, how that I heard a Maſter of Divinity ſay, That in ſuch a caſe it is all one to touch a book, and to ſwear by a book?

To touch a book is to ſwear by a book.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, There is no Maſter of Divinity in England ſo great, but if he hold this opinion before me, I ſhall puniſh him as I ſhall do thee, except thou ſwear as I ſhall charge thee.

It is happy he called not for a Candle, and made a Scevola of him, as Boner did of Tomkins.

And I ſaid, Sir, is not Chryſoſtome an ententive Doctor? And the Archbiſhop ſaid Yea.

And I ſaid, if Chryſoſtome proveth him worthy of great blame, that bringeth forth a book to ſwear upon; it muſt needs follow, that he is more to blame that ſweareth on that book.

It is happy that Chryſoſtome wvas not here, or elſe he wvould have had him by the back.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, If Chryſoſtome meant accordingly to the Ordinance of holy Church, we will accept him.

But that wvord cannot be touched.

And then ſaid a Clerk to me, Is not the Word of God and God himſelf equipollent, that is, of one authority? And I ſaid Yea.

Thorp refuſeth not to ſwear.

Then he ſaid to me, Why wilt thou not ſwear then by the Goſpel of God, that is, Gods Word, ſince it is all one to ſwear by the Word of God, and by God himſelf?

And I ſaid, Sir, ſince I may not now otherwiſe be believed, but by ſwearing, I perceive (as Auguſtine ſaith) that it is not ſpeedful that ye that ſhould be my brethren, ſhould not believe me; therefore I am ready by the Word of God (as the Lord commanded me by his Word) to ſwear.

Then the Clerk ſaid to me, Lay then thine hand upon the book, touching the Holy Goſpel of God, and take thy charge.

And I ſaid, Sir, I underſtand that the holy Goſpel of God may not be touched with mans hand.

And the Clerk ſaid I fonded, and that I ſaid not truth.

And I asked this Clerk, whether it were more to read the Goſpel, than to touch the Goſpel.

And he ſaid, it was more to read the Goſpel.

Then I ſaid, Sir, by authority of St. Hierome the Goſpel is not the Goſpel for reading of the letter, but for the belief that men have in the Word of God. That it is the Goſpel that we believe, and not the Letter that we read; becauſe the letter that is touched with mans hand, is not the Goſpel, but the ſentence that is verily believed in mans heart is the Goſpel. For ſo Hierome ſaith, The Goſpel, that is the vertue of Gods Word, is not in the leaves of the book, but it is in the root of reaſon. Neither the Goſpel (he ſaith) is in the writing alone of the letters, but the Goſpel is in the marking of the ſentence of Scriptures. This ſentence approveth St. Paul, ſaying thus, The Kingdom of God is not in word, but in vertue. And David ſaith, The voice of the Lord, that is, his Word is in vertue. And after David ſaith, Through the Word of God the Heavens were formed, and in the ſpirit of his mouth is all the vertue of them. And I pray you, Sir, underſtand ye well how David ſaith then, In the ſpirit of the mouth of the Lord is all the vertue of Angels and of Men.

Whether the book be the Goſpel. Hierome ſaith, the Goſpel is not the Goſpel for reading, but for believing.

The Goſpel is not the leaves of the book, but the root of reaſon. St. Paul.

David.

This Clerk was vvell ſeen in the Maſs-book.

And the Clerk ſaid to me, Thou wouldſt make us too fond with thee. Say we not that the Goſpel is written in the Maſs-book?

And I ſaid, Sir, though men uſe to ſay thus, yet it is an unperfect ſpeech. For the principal part of a thing is properly the whole thing. For lo, Mans ſoul that may not now be ſeen here, nor touched with any ſenſible thing, is properly Man. And all the vertue of a tree is in the root thereof, that may not be ſeen; for do away the root, and the tree is deſtroyed. And Sir, as ye ſaid to me right now, God and his Word are of one authority; And Sir, St. Hierome witneſſeth that Chriſt (very God and very Man) is hid in the letter of the Law; thus alſo, Sir, the Goſpel is hid in the letter. For Sir, as it is full likely, many and divers Men and Women here in the earth, touched Chriſt and ſaw him, and knew his bodily perſon, which neither touched, nor ſaw, nor knew, ghoſtly his Godhead: Right thus Sir, many Men now touch and ſee, and write, and read the Scriptures of Gods Law; which neither ſee, touch, nor read effectually the Goſpel. For as the Godhead of Chriſt (that is, the vertue of God) is known by the vertue of belief, ſo is the Goſpel, that is, Chriſts Word.

The Goſpel is not the letter, but hid in the letter.

Miſty matters for your blind eyes.

And a Clerk ſaid to me, Theſe be full miſty matters and unſavoury, that thou ſheweſt here to us.

And I ſaid, Sir, if ye that are Maſters know not plainly this ſentence, ye may ſore dread that the Kingdom of Heaven be taken from you, as it was from the Princes of Prieſts, and from the Elders of the Jews.

And then a Clerk (as I gueſs Malveren) ſaid to me, Thou knoweſt not thine equivocations: for the Kingdom of Heaven hath divers underſtandings. What calleſt thou the Kingdom of Heaven in this ſentence that thou ſheweſt here?

The Kingdom of God taken for the underſtanding of Gods word.

And I ſaid, Sir, by good reaſon and ſentence of Doctors, the Realm of Heaven is called here the underſtanding of Gods Word.

And a Clerk ſaid to me, From whom thinkeſt thou that this underſtanding is taken away?

This ſalt vvas ſomevvhat too ſharp for their rotten fleſh to abide.

And I ſaid, Sir, (by authority of Chriſt himſelf) the effectual underſtanding of Chriſts Word is taken away from all them chiefly, which are great lettered Men, and preſume to underſtand high things, and will be holden wiſe men, and deſire Maſterſhip, and high ſtate and dignity; but they will not conform them to the living and teaching of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid, Well, well, thou wilt judge thy Sovereigns. By God, the King doth not his duty, unleſs he ſuffer thee to be condemned.

Help down with him Sir John.

And then another Clerk ſaid to me, Why, (on Friday that laſt was) counſelledſt thou a Man of my Lords, that he ſhould not ſhrieve him to no man, but only to God?

And with this asking I was abaſhed; and then by and by I knew that I was ſubtilly betrayed of a man that came to me in Priſon on the Friday before, communing with me in this matter of confeſſion. And certain, by his words I thought that this man came then to me of full fervent and charitable will; but now I know he came to tempt me and to accuſe me; God forgive him, if it be his will. And with all my heart when I had thought thus, I ſaid to this Clerk: Sir, I pray you that you would fetch this man hither; and all the words, as near as I can, repeat them, which I ſpake to him on Friday in the Priſon, I will rehearſe now here before you all, and before him.

Note here the crafty practice of this holy Church.

And (as I gueſs) the Archbiſhop ſaid then to me, They that are now here ſuffice to repeat them. How ſaidſt thou to him?

A falſe brother.

And I ſaid, Sir, that man came and asked me in divers things, and after his asking, I anſwered him (as I underſtood) that good was. And as he ſhewed to me by his words, he was ſorry of his living in Court, and right heavy for his own vicious living, and alſo for the viciouſneſs of other men, and ſpecially of Prieſts evil living; and therefore he ſaid to me with a ſorrowful heart (as I gueſſed) that he purpoſed fully within ſhort time to leave the Court and to buſie him to know Gods law, and to conform all his life thereafter. And when he had ſaid to me theſe words and more other which I would rehearſe if he were preſent, he prayed me to hear his confeſſion. And I ſaid to him, Sir, wherefore come ye to me, to be confeſſed of me? Ye wot well that the Archbiſhop putteth and holdeth me here, as one unworthy either to give or to take any Sacrament of holy Church.

Auricular Confeſſion.

KING Hen.4

And he ſaid unto me, Brother, I wot well, and ſo I wot many other more, that you and ſuch other are wrongfully vexed, and therefore I commune with you the more gladly. And I ſaid to him, certain I wot well, that many men of this Court, and ſpecially the Prieſts of this Houſhold would be full evil apaid both with you and me, if they wiſt that ye were confeſſed of me. And he ſaid, that he cared not therefore, for he had full little affection in them. And as me thought, he ſpake theſe words and many other, of a good will and of a high deſire, to have known and done the pleaſant will of God. And I ſaid to him, as with my foreſaid proteſtation I ſay to you now here; Sir, I counſel you to abſent you from all evil company, and to draw you to them that love and buſie them to know and to keep the precepts of God; and then the good Spirit of God will move you to occupy buſily all your wits in gathering together of all your ſins, as far as ye can bethink you, ſhaming greatly of them, and ſorrowing heartily for them: yea Sir, the Holy Ghoſt will then put in your heart a good will and a fervent deſire to take and to hold a good purpoſe, to hate ever and to fly (after your cunning and power) all occaſion of ſin; and ſo then wiſdom ſhall come to you from above, lightning (with divers beams of grace and of heavenly deſire) all your wits, enforming you how ye ſhall truſt ſtedfaſtly in the mercy of the Lord, knowledging to him only all your vicious living, praying to him ever devoutly of charitable counſel and continuance, hoping without doubt, that if ye continue thus, buſying you faithfully to know and to keep his biddings, he will (for he only may) forgive you all your ſins. And this man ſaid to me, Though God forgive men their ſins, yet it behoveth men to be aſſoyled of Prieſts, and to do the penance that they enjoyn them.

A crafty traine of a ſpiſh diſſembler.

God only forgiveth ſin, Man can only counſel to leave ſin.

And I ſaid to him, Sir, it is all one to aſſoil Men of their ſins, and to forgive Men their ſins. Wherefore ſince it pertaineth only to God to forgive ſin; it ſufficeth in this caſe, to counſel Men and Women to leave their ſin, and to comfort them that buſie them thus to do, to hope ſtedfaſtly in the mercy of God. And again, Prieſts ought to tell ſharply to cuſtomable ſinners, that if they will not make an end of their ſin, but continue in divers ſins while that they may ſin, all ſuch deſerve pain without any end. And therefore Prieſts ſhould ever buſie them to live well and holily, and to teach the people buſily and truly the Word of God, ſhewing to all folk in open preaching, and in privy counſelling, That the Lord God only forgiveth ſin. And therefore, thoſe Prieſts that take upon them to aſſoil men of their ſins, blaſpheme God; ſince that it pertaineth only to the Lord to aſſoil men of all their ſins. For no doubt, a thouſand year after that Chriſt was Man, no Prieſt of Chriſt durſt take upon him to teach the people, neither privily nor apertly, that they behoved needs to come to be aſſoiled of them as Prieſts now do. But by authority of Chriſts Word Prieſts bound indurate, cuſtomable ſinners to everlaſting pains, which in no time of their living would buſie them faithfully to know the biddings of God, nor to keep them. And again, all they that would occupy all their wits to hate and to fly all occaſion of ſin, dreading over all things to offend God, and loving to pleaſe him continually; to theſe men and women Prieſts ſhewed how the Lord aſſoiled men of all their ſins; and thus Chriſt promiſed to confirm in Heaven all the binding and looſing that Prieſts by authority of his Word, bind men in ſin that are indurate therein, or looſe them out of ſin here upon Earth that are verily repentant. And this man hearing theſe words ſaid, that he might well in Conſcience conſent to this ſentence. But he ſaid, Is it not needful to the lay people that cannot thus do, to go ſhrieve them to the Prieſts? And I ſaid, if a man feel himſelf ſo diſtroubled with any ſin, that he cannot by his own wit avoid this ſin without counſel of them that are herein wiſer than he; in ſuch a caſe the counſel of a good Prieſt is full neceſſary. And if a good Prieſt fail, as they do now commonly, in ſuch a caſe, Saint Auguſtine ſaith, That a man may lawfully commune and take counſel of a vertuous ſecular man. But certain, that man or woman is overladen and too beaſtly, which cannot bring their own ſins into their mind, buſying them night and day to hate and to forſake all their ſins, doing a ſigh for them after their cunning and power. And Sir, full accordingly to this ſentence upon Midlent Sunday (two year as I gueſs now agone) I heard a Monk of Feverſham, that Men called Morden, preach at Canterbury at the Croſs within Chriſt-Church Abbey, ſaying thus of Confeſſion; That as though the ſuggeſtion of the fiend, without counſel of any other body, of themſelves many men and women can imagine and find means and ways enough to come to pride, to theft, to lechery, and other divers vices; in contrariwiſe this Monk ſaid, Since the Lord God is more ready to forgive ſin than the fiend is or may be of power to move any body to ſin, then whoſoever will ſhame and ſorrow heartily for their ſins, knowledging them faithfully to God, amending them after their power and cunning, without counſel of any other body than of God and of himſelf (through the grace of God) all ſuch men and women may find ſufficient means to come to Gods mercy, and ſo to be clean aſſoiled of all their ſinss This ſentence I ſaid, Sir, to this Man of yours, and the ſelf words as near as I can gueſs.

Shrift and confeſſion to Prieſts.

Morden Monk of Feverſham, preaching of Confeſſion.

Hearty repentance to God needeth not confeſſion to Prieſt.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, Holy Church approveth not this learning.

No not any thing elſe that is good

And I ſaid, Sir, holy Church, of which Chriſt is Head in Heaven and in Earth, muſt needs approve this ſentence. For lo, hereby all men and women may, if they will, be ſufficiently taught to know and keep the Commandments of God, and to hate and to fly continually all occaſion of ſin, and to love and to ſeek vertues buſily, and to believe in God ſtably; and to truſt in his mercy ſtedfaſtly, and ſo to come to perfect charity, and continue therein perſeverantly. And more the Lord asketh not of any man here now in this life. And certain, ſince Jeſus Chriſt died upon the Croſs, wilfully to make men free; Men of the Church are too bold and too buſie to make men thrall, binding them under the pain of endleſs curſe (as they ſay) to do many obſervances and ordinances, which neither the living nor teaching of Chriſt nor of his Apoſtles approveth.

Chriſt giveth freedom the Pope giveth thraldom.

And a Clerk ſaid then to me, Thou ſhewest plainly here thy deceit, which thou haſt learned of them that travelled to ſow the popple among the wheat. But I counſel thee to go away clean from this learning, and ſubmit thee lowly to my Lord, and thou ſhalt find him yet to be gracious to thee.

And as faſt then, another Clerk ſaid to me, How waſt thou ſo bold at Paul's Croſs in London, to ſtand there hard with thy tippet bounden about thine head, and to reprove in his Sermon the worthy Clerk Alkerton, drawing away all that thou mighteſt? yea, and the ſame day at afternoon; thou meeting the worthy Doctor in Watlingſtreet, calledſt him falſe flatterer and hypocrite.

And I ſaid, Sir, I think certainly, that there was no man nor woman that hated verily ſin, and loved vertues (hearing the Sermon of the Clerk at Oxford, and alſo Alkerton's Sermon) but they ſaid, or might juſtly ſay, that Alkerton reproved that Clerk untruly, and ſlandred him wrongfully and uncharitably. For no doubt, if the living and teaching of Chriſt chiefly and of his Apoſtles be true, no body that loveth God and his Law will blame any ſentence that the Clerk then preached there; ſince by authority of Gods Word, and by approved Saints and Doctors, and by open reaſon, this Clerk approved all things clearly that he preached there.

And a Clerk of the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, his Sermon was falſe, and that he ſhewed openly, ſince he dare not ſtand forth and defend his preaching that he then preached there.

And I ſaid, Sir, I think that he purpoſeth to ſtand ſtedfaſtly thereby, or elſe he ſlandereth foully himſelf, and alſo many other that have great truſt that he will ſtand by the truth of the Goſpel. For I wot well, this Sermon is written both in Latine and Engliſh, and many men have it, and they ſet great price thereby. And Sir, if ye were preſent with the Archbiſhop at Lambeth when this Clerk appeared, and was at his anſwer before the Archbiſhop, ye wot well that this Clerk denied not there his Sermon, but two days he maintained it before the Archbiſhop and his Clerks.

And then the Archbiſhop or one of his Clerks ſaid (I wot not which of them) That harlot ſhall be met with for that Sermon. For no Man but he and thou, and ſuch other falſe harlots, praiſeth any ſuch preaching.

And then the Archbiſhop ſaid, Your curſed Sect is buſie, and it joyeth right greatly to contrary and to deſtroy the priviledge and freedom of holy Church.

And I ſaid, Sir, I know no man that travel ſo buſily as this Sect doth (which you reprove) to make reſt and peace in holy Church. For pride, covetouſneſs, and ſimony, which diſtrouble moſt holy Church, this Sect hateth and fleeth, and travelleth buſily to move all other men in like manner unto meekneſs and wilful poverty, and charity, and free miniſtring of the Sacrament, this Sect loveth and uſeth, and is full buſie to move all other folks thus to do. For theſe vertues ow all members of holy Church to their Head Chriſt.

The true freedom of holy Church not deſtroyed but increaſed by true preachers.

Then a Clerk ſaid to the Archbiſhop, Sir, it is far day, and ye have far to ride to night; therefore make an end with him, for he will none make: but the more Sir, that ye buſie you to draw him toward you, the more contumax he is made, and the further from you.

And then Malvoren ſaid to me, William, kneel down, and pray my Lords grace, and leave all thy fantaſies, and become a child of holy Church.

Take my Lords bleſſing and ſtand up.

And I ſaid, Sir, I have prayed the Archbiſhop oft, and yet I pray him for the love of Chriſt, that he will leave his indignation that he hath againſt me: and that he will ſuffer me after my cunning and power, to do mine office of Prieſthood, as I am charged of God to do it. For I covet nought elſe but to ſerve my God to his pleaſing in the ſtate that I ſtand in, and have taken me to.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, If of good heart thou wilt ſubmit thee now here meekly, to be ruled from this time forth by my counſel, obeying meekly and wilfully to my Ordinance, thou ſhalt find it moſt profitable and beſt to thee to do thus. Therefore tarry thou me no longer, grant to do this that I have ſaid to thee now here ſhortly, or deny it utterly.

My Lord hath haſt, for being benighted.

And I ſaid to the Archbiſhop, Sir, owe we to believe that Jeſus Chriſt was and is very God and very Man?

And the Archbiſhop ſaid Yea.

And I ſaid, Sir, owe we to believe that all Chriſts living and his teaching is true in every point?

And he ſaid. Yea.

And I ſaid, Sir, owe we to believe that the living of the Apoſtles, and the teaching of Chriſt and all the Prophets are true which are written in the Bible for the health and ſalvation of good people?

And he ſaid Yea.

And I ſaid, Sir, owe all Chriſtian Men and Women after ther cunning and power, to conform all their living to the teaching ſpecially of Chriſt, and alſo to the teaching and living of his Apoſtles and of Prophets, in things that are pleaſant to God and edification of his Church?

And he ſaid, Yea.

And I ſaid, Sir, ought the Doctrine, the bidding, or the counſel of any body to be accepted or obeyed unto; except this Doctrine, theſe biddings, or this counſel may be granted and affirmed by Chriſts living and his teaching ſpecially, or by the living and teaching of his Apoſtles and Prophets?

And why compel you this man to the contrary.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Other Doctrines ought not to be accepted, nor owe we to obey to any mans bidding or counſel, except we can perceive that this bidding or counſel accordeth with the life and teaching of Chriſt, and of his Apoſtles and Prophets.

And I ſaid, Sir, is not all the learning, and biddings and counſels of holy Church, means and healful remedies, to know and to underſtand the privy ſuggeſtions, and the apert temptations of the fiend? and alſo ways and healful remedies to ſlay pride and all other deadly ſins, and the branches of them, and ſovereign means to purchaſe grace, to withſtand and overcome all the fleſhly luſts and movings?

Thorp content to ſubmit himſelf to the ordinance of Councils.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid Yea.

And I ſaid, Sir, whatſoever thing ye or any other body bid or counſel me to do, accordingly to this foreſaid learning, after my cunning and power, through the help of God, I will meekly with all my heart obey thereto.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Submit thee then now here meekly and wilfully to the ordinance of holy Church, which I ſhall ſhew to thee.

And I ſaid, Sir, accordingly as I have here now before you rehearſed, I will now be ready to obey full gladly to Chriſt the Head of the holy Church, and to the learnings and bidding, and counſels of every pleaſing member of him.

If Bonner had been here, he would not have ſtrucken the Cupboard.

Then the Archbiſhop, ſtriking with his hand fiercely upon a Cupboard, ſpake to me with a great ſpirit, ſaying, By Jeſus, but if thou leave not ſuch additions, obliging thee now here without any exception to mine Ordinance (ere that I go out of this place) I ſhall make thee as ſure as any Thief that is in the Priſon of Lanterne; adviſe thee now what thou wilt do. And then, as if he had been angred, he went from the Cupboard where he ſtood, to a Window.

The multitude is not to be followed in evil.

And then Malvereen and another Clerk came nearer me, and they ſpake to me many words full pleaſantly; and another while they menaced me, and counſelled full buſily to ſubmit me, or elſe, they ſaid, I ſhould not eſcape puniſhing over meaſure; for they ſaid, I ſhould be degraded, curſed, and burned, and ſo then damned. But now they ſaid, Thou mayſt eſchew all theſe miſchiefs, if thou wilt ſubmit thee wilfully and meekly to this worthy Prelate, that hath cure of thy ſoul. And for the pity of Chriſt (ſaid they) bethink thee, how great Clerks the Biſhop of Lincoln, Herford and Purvey were, and yet are, and alſo B. that is a well underſtanding man. Which alſo have forſaken and revoked all the learning and opinions that thou and ſuch other hold. Wherefore ſince each of them is mickle wiſer than thou art, we counſel thee for the beſt; that by the example of theſe four Clerks, thou follow them, ſubmitting thee as they did.

See what mania, God giving him up to himſelf.

And one of the Biſhops Clerks ſaid then there, that he heard Nicholas Herford ſay, That ſince he forſook and revoked all the learning and Lollards opinions, he hath had mickle greater favour, and more delight to hold againſt them, than ever he had to hold with them, while he held with them.

As clean from thrift as from ſin.

And therefore Malvereen ſaid to me, I underſtand, and thou wilt take thee to a Prieſt, and ſhrieve thee clean, forſake all ſuch opinions, and take the penance of my Lord here, for the holding and teaching of them; within ſhort time thou ſhalt be greatly comforted in this doing.

And I ſaid to the Clerks, that thus buſily counſelled me to follow theſe foreſaid men; Sirs, if theſe men, of whom ye counſel me to take example, had forſaken Benefices of temporal profit, and of worldly worſhip, ſo that they had abſented them, and eſchewed from all occaſions of covetouſneſs and of fleſhly luſt, and had taken upon them ſimple living, and wilful poverty; they had herein given good example to me and to many other, to have followed them. But now, ſince all theſe four men have ſlanderouſly and ſhamefully done the contrary, conſenting to receive, and to have and to hold temporal Benefices, living now more worldly, and more fleſhly than they did before, conforming them to the manners of this World: I forſake them herein, and in all their foreſaid ſlanderous doing. For I purpoſe, with the help of God (into remiſſion of my ſins, and of my foul curſed living) to hate and to flee privily and apertly to follow theſe men, teaching and counſelling whomſoever that I may, to flee and to eſchew the way that they have choſen to go in, which will lead them to the worſt end, (if in convenient time they repent them not) verily forſaking and revoking openly the ſlander that they have put, and every day yet put to Chriſts Church. For certain, ſo open blaſphemy and ſlander as they have ſpoken and done in their revoking and forſaking of the truth, ought not, nor may not privily be amended duly. Wherefore Sirs, I pray you that you buſie not to move me to follow theſe men in revoking and forſaking the truth, ſoothfaſtneſs as they have done, and yet do; wherein by open evidence they ſtir God to great wrath, and not only againſt themſelves, but alſo againſt all them that favour them, or conſent to them herein, or that commune with them, except it be for their amendment. For whereas theſe men firſt were purſued of enemies, now they have obliged them by Oath to ſlander and purſue Chriſt in his Members. Wherefore (as I truſt ſtedfaſtly in the goodneſs of God) the worldly covetouſneſs, and the luſty living, and the ſliding from the truth, of theſe runagates, ſhall be to me, and to many other men and women an example and an evidence to ſtand more ſtifly by the truth of Chriſt.

Other mens examples are ſo to be followed, as they be the followers of Chriſt.

For certain, right many men and women do mark and abhor the foulneſs and cowardneſs of theſe foreſaid untrue men, how that they are overcome and ſtopped with Benefices, and withdrawn from the truth of Gods Word, forſaking utterly to ſuffer therefore bodily Perſecution. For by this unfaithful doing, and apoſtaſie of them (ſpecially that are great lettered men) and have knowledged openly the truth, and now either for pleaſure or diſpleaſure of Tyrants have taken hire and temporal wages to forſake the truth, and to hold againſt it, ſlandering and purſuing them that covet to follow Chriſt in the way of righteouſneſs; many men and women therefore are now moved. But many more, through the grace of God ſhall be moved hereby to learn the truth of God to do thereafter, and to ſtand boldly thereby.

KING Hen. 4. Promotions commonly and great livings choke truth. Men following the ways of Balaam.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to his Clerks, Buſie you no longer about him, for he, and other ſuch as he is, are confederate together, that they will not ſwear to be obedient, and to ſubmit them to Prelates of holy Church. For now ſince I ſtood here, this fellow alſo ſent me word that he will not ſwear, and that this fellow counſelled him that he ſhould not ſwear to me. And Loſel, in that thing that in thee is, thou haſt buſied thee to loſe this young man, but bleſſed be God, thou ſhalt not have thy purpoſe of him. For he hath forſaken all thy learning, ſubmitting him to be buxome and obedient to the ordinance of holy Church, and weepeth full bitterly, and curſeth thee full heartily for the venomous teaching which thou haddeſt ſhewed to him, counſelling him to do thereafter.

Thorp ſeldom love reſuſeth to ſwear to the Prelates.

And for thy falſe counſelling of many other and him thou haſt great cauſe to be right ſorry. For long time thou haſt buſied thee to pervert whomſoever thou mighteſt. Therefore as many deaths thou art worthy of, as thou haſt given evil counſels. And therefore, By Jeſus, thou ſhalt go thither, where Nicholas Herford and Thomas Purvey were harboured. And I undertake, ere this day eight days, thou ſhalt be right glad to do what thing that ever I bid thee to do. And Loſſel, I ſhall aſſay, if I can make thee there as ſorrowful (as it was told me) thou waſt glad at my laſt going out of England. By S. Thomas, I ſhall turn thy joy into ſorrow.

Vide ſupra. Arundel the Arch. going out of England.

And I ſaid, Sir, there can no body prove lawfully that I joyed ever of the manner of your going out of this Land.

But Sir, to ſay the ſooth, I was joyful when ye were gone; for the Biſhop of London, in whoſe Priſon ye left me, found in me no cauſe to hold me longer in his Priſon, but at the requeſt of my friends, he delivered me to them, asking of me no manner of ſubmitting.

The gentleneſs of the Biſhop of London to Thorp.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Wherefore that I yede out of England, is unknown to thee: But be this thing well known to thee, that God (as I wote well) hath called me again, and brought me into this Land, to deſtroy thee and the falſe Sect that thou art of: as, By God, I ſhall purſue you ſo narrowly, that I ſhall not leave a ſlip of you in this land.

So promiſed Winchester in Queen Maries time but that ſhe had his power to perform.

And I ſaid to the Archbiſhop, Sir, the holy Prophet Jeremy ſaid to the falſe Prophet Anany, When the word, that is the propheſie of a Prophet, is known or fulfilled; then it ſhall be known, that the Lord ſent the Prophet in truth.

A notable anſwer of Thorp to the Biſhop, promiſing to deſtroy all the Goſpellers.

And the Archbiſhop (as if he had not been pleaſed with my ſaying) turned him awayward hither and thither, and ſaid, By God, I ſhall ſet upon thy Shins a pair of Pearls, that thou ſhalt be glad to change thy voice.

Such Pearls would better beſeem my Lord, your golden Shoes.

Theſe and many more wonders and convicious words were ſpoken to me, menacing me and all other of the ſame Sect to be puniſhed and deſtroyed unto the uttermoſt.

And the Archbiſhop called then to him a Clerk, and rowned with him; and that Clerk went forth, and ſoon he brought in the Conſtable of Saltwood Caſtle, and the Archbiſhop rowned a good while with him; and then the Conſtable went forth, and then came in divers Seculars, and they ſcorned me on every ſide, and menaced me greatly, and ſome counſelled the Archbiſhop to burn me by and by, and ſome other counſelled him to drown me in the Sea, for it is near hand there.

At illi eſtimabant diu cunctantes tollat, crucifigat eum. Luke 23.

And a Clerk ſtanding beſide me, there kneeled down to the Archbiſhop, praying him, that he would deliver me to him to ſay Matens with him, and he would undertake, that within three days I ſhould not reſiſt any thing that were commanded me to do of my Prelate.

And

KING Hen. 4. And the Archbiſhop ſaid, that he would ordain for me himſelf.

And then after, came again the Conſtable and ſpake privily to the Archbiſhop; and the Archbiſhop commanded the Conſtable to lead me forth thence with him, and ſo he did. And when we were gone forth thence, we were ſent after again. And when I came in again before the Archbiſhop; a Clerk bad me kneel down and ask grace, and ſubmit me lowly, and I ſhould find it for the beſt.

Obedience to God and to his law would not

And I ſaid then to the Archbiſhop, Sir, as I have ſaid to you divers times to day, I will wiltully and lowly obey and ſubmit me to be ordained ever, after my cunning and power, to God and to his Law, and to every Member of Holy Church, as far forth as I can perceive that theſe Members accord with their Head Chriſt, and will teach me, rule me, or chaſtiſe me by authority, ſpecially of Gods law.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, I wiſt well he would not without ſuch additions ſubmit him.

And then I was rebuked, ſcorned and menaced on every ſide; and yet after this divers perſons cried upon me to kneel down and ſubmit me; but I ſtood ſtill, and ſpake no word. And then there was ſpoken of me, and to me, many great words, and I ſtood and heard them menace, curſe, and ſcorn me, but I ſaid nothing.

In patience and ſilence keſs your foes

Then a while after the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Wilt thou not ſubmit thee to the Ordinance of Holy Church?

And I ſaid, Sir, I will full gladly ſubmit me, as I have ſhewed you before.

And then the Archbiſhop bad the Conſtable to have me forth thence in haſt.

Thorp caſt into priſon. Thorp comforted and ſtrengthned of the Lord, after his conflict with the Biſhop.

And ſo then I was led forth, and brought into a foul unhoneſt Priſon, where I came never before. But thanked be God, when all men were gone forth then from me, and had ſparred faſt the Priſon door after them; by and by after, I therein by my ſelf, buſied me to think on God, and to thank him for his goodneſs. And I was then greatly comforted in all my wits, not only for that I was then delivered for a time, from the ſight, from the hearing, from the preſence, from the ſcorning, and from the menacing of mine enemies; but much more I rejoyced in the Lord, becauſe that through his grace he kept me ſo, both among the flattering ſpecially, and among the menacing of mine adverſaries, that without heavineſs and anguiſh of my Conſcience, I paſſed away from them. For as a Tree laid upon another Tree, overthwart or croſs-wiſe, ſo was the Archbiſhop and his three Clerks always contrary to me, and I to them.

Now good God for thine holy Name, and to the praiſing of thy moſt bleſſed Name, make us one together, if it be thy will, (by authority of thy Word, that is true perfect charity) and elſe not. And that it may thus be, all that this writing read or hear, pray heartily to the Lord God, that he for his great goodneſs, that cannot be with tongue expreſſed, grant to us, and to all other which in the ſame wiſe, and for the ſame cauſe ſpecially, or for any other cauſe be at diſtance, to be knit and made one in true faith, in ſtedfaſt hope, and in perfect charity. Amen.

Beſides this Examination here above deſcribed, came another Treatiſe alſo to our hands of the ſame Will. Thorp, under the Name and Title of his Teſtaments which rather by the matter and handling thereof might ſeem to be counted a complaint of vicious Prieſts; which Treatiſe or Teſtament, in this place we thought not meet to be left out.

'Matthew an Apoſtle of Chriſt, and his Goſpeller, witneſſeth truly in the holy Goſpel, the moſt holy living, and the moſt wholeſome teaching of Chriſt. He rehearſeth how that Chriſt likeneth them that hear his words, and keep them, to a wiſe Man that buildeth his houſe, upon a ſtone, that is, a ſtable and a ſure ground. This houſe is Mans Soul, in whom Chriſt delighteth to dwell, if it be grounded, that is, ſtabliſhed faithfully in his living and in his true teaching, adorned or made fair with divers vertues, which Chriſt uſed and taught without any medling of any errour, as are chiefly the conditions of Charity.

Chriſt dwelleth in a faithful ſoul.

Chriſt is the ſtone whereon we muſt build.

'This foreſaid ſtone is Chriſt, upon which every faithful ſoul muſt be builded, ſince upon none other ground, than upon Chriſts living and his teaching, any body may make any building or houſing wherein Chriſt will come and dwell. This ſentence witneſſeth St. Paul to the Corinthians, ſhewing to them that no body may ſet any other ground than is ſet, that is Chriſts living and teaching. And becauſe that all men and women ſhould give all their buſineſs here in this life, to build them vertuouſly upon this ſure foundation: St. Paul, knowledging the fervent deſire, and the good will of the people of Epheſy, wrote to them comfortably, ſaying, Now ye are not ſtrangers-gueſts, nor yet comelings, but ye are the Citizens, and of the Houſhold of God, builded above upon the foundament of the Apoſtles and Prophets. In which foundament, every building that is builded or made through the grace of God, it increaſeth or groweth into an holy Temple; that is, every body that is grounded or builded faithfully in the teaching and living of Chriſt, is there-through made the holy Temple of God.

How we are made the Temple of God.

'This is the ſtable ground and ſted faſt ſtone Chriſt, which is the ſure corner-ſtone, faſt joyning and holding mightily together two Walls. For through Chriſt Jeſus, mean or middle Perſon of the Trinity, the Father of Heaven is pitious or mercifully joyned and made one together to Mankind. And through dread to offend God, and fervent love to pleaſe him, men be unſeparably made one to God, and defended ſurely under his protection. Alſo this foreſaid ſtone Chriſt was figured by the ſquare ſtones of which the Temple of God was made. For as a ſquare ſtone, whereſoever it is caſt or laid, it abideth and lieth ſtably; ſo Chriſt and every faithful Member of his Church by example of him, abideth and dwelleth ſtably in true faith, and in all other heavenly vertues in all adverſities that they ſuffer in the valley of tears.

Mark what we have by Chriſt.

The property of a ſquare ſtone.

'For lo, when theſe foreſaid ſquare ſtones were hewen and wrought to be laid in the Wall's or Pillars of Gods Temple, no noiſe or ſtroke of the Workman was heard. Certain, this ſilence in working of this ſtone figureth Chriſt chiefly and his faithful Members, which by example of him have been, and yet are, and ever to the worlds end ſhall be ſo meek and patient in every adverſity, that no ſound, nor yet any grudging ſhall any time be perceived in them.

'Nevertheleſs, this chief and moſt worſhipful corner-ſtone, which only is the ground of all vertues, proud beggers reproved; but this deſpite and reproof Chriſt ſuffered moſt meekly in his own Perſon, to give example of all meekneſs and patience to all his faithful followers. Certain, this world is now ſo full of proud beggers, which are named Prieſts; but the very office or working of Prieſthood which Chriſt approveth true, and accepteth, is far from the multitude of Prieſts that now reign in this world.

Chriſt is an example of all perfect meekneſs.

'For from the higheſt Prieſt to the loweſt, all (as who ſay) ſtudy, that is, they imagine and travel buſily, how they may pleaſe this world and their fleſh. This ſentence and many ſuch other dependeth upon them, if it be well conſidered, either God the Father of Heaven hath deceived all Mankind by the living ſpecially and teaching of Jeſus Chriſt, and by the living and teaching of his Apoſtles and Prophets: or elſe all the Popes that have been ſince I had any knowledge or diſcretion, with all the College of Cardinals, Archbiſhops and Biſhops, Monks, Canons and Friers, with all the contagious flock of the commonalty of Prieſthood, which have (all my life time, and mickle longer) reigned and yet reign, and increaſe damnably from ſin into ſin, have been, and yet be proud obſtinate Hereticks, covetous ſimoners, and defouled adulterers in the miniſtring of the Sacraments, and ſpecially in the miniſtring of the Sacrament of the Altar. For as their works ſhew whereto Chriſt biddeth us take heed; the higheſt Prieſts and Prelates of this Prieſthood, challenge and occupy unleful temporal Lordſhips. And for temporal favour and mede, they ſell and give Benefices to unworthy and unable perſons; yea, theſe ſimoners ſell ſin, ſuffering men and women in every degree and eſtate to lie and continue from year to year, in divers vices ſlanderouſly. And thus, by evil example of high Prieſts in the Church, lower Prieſts under them are not only ſuffered, but they are maintained to ſell full dear (to the people for temporal mede) all the Sacraments.

Prieſts ſeek the pleaſure of this World.

Great odds betwixt the life of the Popes, and Chriſt and his Apoſtles

When Prieſts forget Gods truth, ye ſee whither they run headlong. The great infect the ſmall.

'And thus all this foreſaid Prieſthood is blown ſo high, and born up in pride and vain glory of their eſtate and dignity, and ſo blinded with worldly covetouſneſs, that they diſdain to follow Chriſt in very meekneſs and wil-

Fleſhly Prieſts cannot away with thoſe things.

'ful poverty, living holily, and preaching Gods Word truly, freely and continually, taking their livelihood at the free will of the people of their pure alms, where and when they ſuffice not for their true and buſie preaching to get their ſuſtenance with their hands. To this true ſentence groun-

They hunt after this with tooth and nail.

'ded on Chriſts own living, and teaching of his Apoſtles, 'theſe foreſaid worldly and fleſhly Prieſts will not conſent 'effectually. But as their works and alſo their words ſhew, 'boldly and unſhamefaſtly theſe forenamed Prieſts and Pre'lates covet and enforce them mightily and buſily, that all 'holy Scripture were expounded and drawn accordingly to 'their manners, and to their ungrounded uſages and find'ings. For they will not (ſince they hold it but folly and 'madneſs) conform their manners to the pure and ſimple 'living of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, nor will they follow free'ly their learning. Wherefore all the Emperors and Kings,

An exhortation to all degrees, to ſee Prieſthood amended.

'and all other Lords and Ladies, and all the common peo'ple in every degree and ſtate, which have before time 'known, or might have known, and alſo all they that now 'yet know, or might know, this foreſaid witneſs of Prieſthood 'and would not, nor yet will inforce them after their cun'ning and power, to withſtand charitably the foreſaid ene'mies and Traitors of Chriſt, and of his Church: All theſe

Prelates and Prieſts negligent in their duty.

'ſtrive with Antichriſt againſt Jeſus, and they ſhall hear the 'indignation of God Almighty without end, if in conve'nient time they amend them not, and repent them verily, 'doing therefore due mourning and ſorrow, after their cun'ning and power. For through preſumptuouſneſs and negli'gence of Prieſts and Prelates (not of the Church of Chriſt, 'but occupying their Prelacy unduly in the Church) and 'alſo flattering and falſe covetouſneſs of other divers named 'Prieſts; Louſengers and Lounderers are wrongfully made 'and named Hermites, and have leave to defraud poor and 'needy creatures of their livelode, and to live by their falſe 'winning and begging, in ſloth and in other divers vices. 'And alſo of theſe Prelates, theſe coker noſes are ſuffered to 'live in pride and hypocriſie, and to defoul themſelves both 'bodily and ghoſtly. Alſo by the ſuffering and counſel of 'theſe foreſaid Prelates and other Prieſts, are made both vain 'brotherhoods and ſiſterhoods, full of pride and envy, which 'are full contrary to the brotherhood of Chriſt, ſince they 'are cauſe of mickle diſſention, and they multiply and ſuſtain 'it uncharitably; for unjuſtly eating and drinking unmea'ſurably and out of time, they exerciſe themſelves. Alſo 'this vain confederacy of brotherhood is permitted to be of 'one clothing, and to hold together.

'And in all theſe ungrounded and unleful doings, Prieſts 'are partners, and great medlers and counſellers; and over 'this viciouſneſs, hermites and pardoners, ankerers and ſtrange 'beggers, are licenſed and admitted of Prelates and Prieſts; 'to beguile the people with flatterings and leaſings ſlande'rouſly againſt all good reaſon and true belief; and ſo to in'creaſe divers vices in themſelves, and alſo among all them 'that accept them, or conſent to them.

'And thus the viciouſneſs of theſe foreſaid named Prieſts 'and Prelates hath been long time, and yet is; and ſhall be 'cauſe of wars both within the Realm and without. And in 'the ſame wiſe theſe unable Prieſts have been, and yet are, 'and ſhall be chief cauſe of peſtilence of Men, and murren 'of Beaſts, and of barenneſs of the earth, and of all other miſ'chiefs, to the time that Lords and Commons able them 'through grace to know and to keep the commandments 'of God, inforcing them then faithfully and charitably by 'one aſſent, to redreſs and make one this foreſaid Prieſthood, 'to the wilful, poor, meek and innocent living and teaching, 'ſpecially of Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

'Therefore all they that know, or might know the vici'ouſneſs that reigneth now curſedly in theſe Prieſts, and in 'their learning, if they ſuffice not to underſtand this conta'gious viciouſneſs: let them pray to the Lord heartily for 'the health of his Church, abſtaining them prudently from 'their indurate enemies of Chriſt and of his people, and 'from all their Sacraments, ſince to them, all that know 'them, or may know them, they are but fleſhly deeds and Cypr. t. 9. t. 1. cap. Si quis inquit.

'falſe; as S. Cyprian witneſſeth in the firſt queſtion of decrees, 'and in the firſt cauſe, Cap. Siquis inquit. For as this St. and 'great Doctor witneſſeth there, that not only vicious Prieſts, 'but alſo all they that favour them, or conſent to them in 'their viciouſneſs, ſhall together periſh with them, if they 'amend them not duly, as all they periſhed that conſented to 'Dathan and Abiram. For nothing were more confuſion to 'theſe foreſaid vicious Prieſts, than to eſchew them prudently 'in all their unlawful Sacraments, while they continue in their 'ſinful living ſlanderouſly as they have long time done, and 'yet do. And no body needs to be afraid (though death did 'follow by one wiſe or other) to die out of this world with'out taking of any Sacrament of theſe foreſaid Chriſts, ene'mies, ſince Chriſt will not fail to miniſter himſelf all leful 'and healful Sacraments, and neceſſary at all time (and eſpe'cially at the end) to all them that are in true faith, in ſtead'faſt hope, and in perfect charity.

'But yet ſome mad fools ſay (to eſchew ſlander) they will 'be ſhriven once in the year, and communed of their proper 'Prieſts, though they know them defouled with ſlanderous 'vices. No doubt but all they that thus do or conſent, privi'ly or apertly to ſuch doing are culpable of great ſin; ſince 'S. Paul witneſſeth, that not only they that do evil are wor'thy of death and damnation, but alſo they that conſent to 'evil doers. Alſo (as their ſlandrous works witneſs) theſe 'foreſaid vicious Prieſts, deſpiſe and caſt from them heavenly 'cunning that is given of the Holy Ghoſt. Wherefore the 'Lord throweth all ſuch deſpiſers from him, that they nei'ther uſe, nor do any Prieſthood to him.

'No doubt then, all they that wittingly or wilfully take 'or conſent that any other body ſhould take any Sacrament 'of any ſuch named Prieſt, ſinneth openly and damnably a'gainſt all the Trinity, and are unable to any Sacrament of 'health.

'And that this foreſaid ſentence is altogether true, into 'remiſſion of all my ſinful living, truſting ſteadfaſtly in the 'mercy of God, I offer to him my ſoul.

'And to prove alſo the foreſaid ſentence true, with the 'help of God, I purpoſe fully to ſuffer meekly and gladly my 'moſt wretched body to be tormented where God will, of 'whom he will, and when he will, and as long as he will, and 'what temporal pain and death he will, to the praiſing of 'his name, and to the edification of his Church.

'And I that am a moſt unworthy and wretched Caitiff 'ſhall now through the ſpecial grace of God, make to him 'pleaſant Sacrifice with my moſt ſinful and unworthy body. 'Beſeeching heartily all folk that read or hear this end of my 'purpoſed teſtament, that through the grace of God they 'diſpoſe verily and vertuouſly all their wits, and able in like 'manner all their members to underſtand truly, and to keep 'faithfully, charitably and continually all the commandments 'of God, and ſo then to pray devoutly to all the Bleſſed 'Trinity, that I may have grace with wiſdom and prudence 'from above, to end my life here in this foreſaid truth, and 'for this cauſe, in true faith and ſtedfaſt hope, and perfect cha'rity. Amen.

The end of W. Thorp uncertain.

What was the end of this good man, and bleſſed ſervant of God William Thorp, I find as yet in no ſtory ſpecified. By all conjectures it is to be thought that the Archbiſhop Thomas Arundel, being ſo hard an adverſary againſt thoſe men, would not let him go. Much leſs it is to be ſuppoſed, that he would ever retract his ſentence and opinion, which he ſo valiantly maintained before the Biſhop; neither doth it ſeem that he had any ſuch recanting ſpirit. Again, neither is it found that he was burned, wherefore it remaineth moſt like to be true, that he being committed to ſome ſtrait Priſon (according as the Archbiſhop in his examination before did threaten him) there (as Thorp confeſſeth himſelf) was ſo ſtraitly kept, that either he was ſecretly made away, or elſe there he died by ſickneſs.

The like end alſo I find to happen to John Aſhton, another good follower of Wickliff, who for the ſame Doctrine of the Sacrament was condemned by the Biſhops, and becauſe he would not recant, he was committed to perpetual Priſon, wherein the good man continued till his death: An. 1382.

John Purvey.

Joh. Purvey.

FUrthermore, in the ſaid Examination of William Thorp, mention is made (as ye heard) of John Purvey, of whom alſo ſomething we touched before: promiſing of the ſaid John Purvey more particularly to intreat in order and proceſs of time. Of this Purvey, Thomas Walden writeth thus in his ſecond Tome: John Purvey, ſaith he, was the Library of Lollards, and Gloſſer upon Wickliff.

He

KING Hen. 4.

He ſaid that the worſhipping of Abraham was but a ſalutation. And in his third Tome he ſaith, This John Purvey, with Herford a Doctor of Divinity, were grievouſly tormented and puniſhed in the Priſon of Saltwood, and at the length recanted at Pauls Croſs at London, Thomas Arundel being then Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Afterward again, he was impriſoned under Henry Chicheley Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 1421. Thus much writeth Walden. The Works of this man which he wrote were gathered by Richard Lavingham his adverſary, which I think worthy to be remembred. Firſt, as touching the Sacrament of the laſt Supper, the Sacrament of Penance, the Sacrament of Orders, the power of the Keys, the preaching of the Goſpel, of Marriages, of Vows, of Poſſeſſions, of the puniſhing and correcting of the Clergy, of the Laws and Decrees of the Church, of the ſtate and condition of the Pope and the Clergy; of all theſe generally, he left divers Monuments gravely and exactly written, part whereof here in the end of his ſtory we thought to exhibit, being tranſlated out of Latine into Engliſh.

John Purvey priſoned after his recantation.

The Articles which he taught, and afterward was forced to recant at Pauls-Croſs, were theſe hereafter following:

Articles of John Purvey recanted.

1. That in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Conſecration, there is not, neither can be any accident without the ſubject; but there verily remaineth the ſame ſubſtance, and the very viſible and corruptible bread, and likewiſe the very ſame Wine the which before the Conſecration were ſet upon the Altar to be conſecrate of the Prieſt; likewiſe as when a Pagan or Infidel is baptiſed, he is ſpiritually converted into a member of Chriſt through grace, and yet remaineth the very ſame man which he before was in his proper nature and ſubſtance.

2. Auricular confeſſion, or private Penance, is a certain whiſpering, deſtroying the liberty of the Goſpel, and newly brought in by the Pope and the Clergy, to intangle the conſciences of men in ſin, and to draw their ſouls into Hell.

He ſpeaketh of Prieſts here and not of publick Miniſters appointed in the Church.

3. Every lay man being holy and predeſtinate unto everlaſting life (albeit he be a lay man) yet is he a true Prieſt before God.

4. That divers Prelates and other of the Clergy do live wickedly, contrary to the Doctrine and Example of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Therefore they which ſo live, have not the Keys either of the Kingdom of Heaven, or yet of Hell; neither ought any Chriſtian to eſteem his cenſure any more than as a thing of no force. Yea, albeit the Pope ſhould peradventure, interdict the Realm, yet could he not hurt, but rather profit us, forſomuch as thereby we ſhould be diſmiſſed from the obſervation of his laws, and from ſaying of ſervice according to the cuſtom of the Church.

5. If any man do make an Oath or Vow, to keep perpetual chaſtity, or do any thing elſe whereunto God hath not appointed him, giving him grace to perform his purpoſe; the ſame Vow or Oath is unreaſonable and indiſcreet, neither can any Prelate compel him to keep the ſame, except he will do contrary unto Gods ordinance. But he ought to commit him unto the governance of the Holy Ghoſt and of his own conſcience; forſomuch as every Man, which will not fulfil his Vow or Oath, cannot do it for that cauſe.

The charge of Prieſts.

6. Whoſoever taketh upon him the office of Prieſthood, although he have not the charge of ſouls committed unto him, according to the cuſtom of the Church, not only may, but ought to preach the Goſpel freely unto the people; otherwiſe he is a thief, excommunicated of God, and of the holy Church.

Againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

7. That Innocentius the third Pope, and ſix hundred Biſhops, and a thouſand other Prelates, with all the reſt of the Clergy, which together with the ſame Pope agreed and determined, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the converſion of the bread and wine into the body and blod of Chriſt, the accidents of the ſaid bread and wine do remain there without any proper ſubject of the ſame; the which alſo ordained, that all Chriſtians ought to confeſs their ſins once a year unto a proper Prieſt, and to receive the reverend Sacrament at Eaſter, and made certain other laws at the ſame time: All they, ſaith he, in ſo doing, were fools and blockheads, hereticks, blaſphemers, and ſeducers of Chriſtian people. Wherefore we ought not to believe the determinations of them, or of their ſucceſſors, neither ought we to obey their laws or ordinances, except they be plainly grounded upon the holy Scripture, or upon ſome reaſon which cannot be impugned.

Other Articles drawn out of Purvey's Books more at large by Richard Levingham.

Articles out of Purvey's Books collected by R. Lavingham.

AS touching the Sacrament of thanſgiving, he ſaith, That that Chapter of repentance and remiſſion, Omnis utriuſque ſexus, wherein it is ordained, That every faithful man ought once every year at the leaſt, that is to ſay at Eaſter, to receive the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, is a beaſtly thing, heretical and blaſphemous.

Item, That Innocentius the third Pope, was the head of Antichriſt, who after the letting looſe of Satan, invented a new Article of our Faith, and a certain feigned verity touching the Sacrament of the Altar, that is to ſay, that the Sacrament of the Altar is an accident without a ſubſtance, or elſe an heap of accidents without a ſubſtance. But Chriſt and his Apoſtles do teach manifeſtly, that the Sacrament of the Altar is bread and the body of Chriſt together, after the manner that he ſpake. And in that he calleth it bread, he would have the people to underſtand, as they ought with reaſon, that it is very and ſubſtantial bread, and no falſe nor feigned bread.

The Sacrament of the Popiſh Altar.

And although Innocentius, that Antichriſt, doth alledge, that in the Council at Lions, where this matter was decided, were ſix hundred Biſhops with him and one thouſand Prelates, which were in one opinion of this determination; All thoſe notwithſtanding, he calleth Fools, according to that ſaying of Eccleſ. 1. Of fools there are an infinite number. And ſo in like manner he calleth them falſe Chriſts and falſe Prophets, of whom Chriſt ſpeaketh in the 24*th* of Matthew, Many falſe Chriſts and falſe Prophets ſhall ariſe, and deceive many. And therefore every Chriſtian man ought to believe firmly, that the Sacrament of the Altar is very bread indeed, and no falſe nor feigned bread. And although it be very bread indeed, yet notwithſtanding, it is the very body of Chriſt in that ſort he ſpake, and called it his body; and ſo it is very bread, and the very body of Chriſt. And as Chriſt concerning his humanity was both viſible and paſſible, and by his Divinity was inviſible and impaſſible: ſo likewiſe this Sacrament in that it is very bread, may be ſeen with the corporal eye, and may alſo abide corruption. But although a man may ſee that Sacrament, yet notwithſtanding cannot the body of Chriſt in that Sacrament be ſeen with the corporal eye, although it be the body of Chriſt in that manner he ſpake it; for that notwithſtanding, the body of Chriſt is now incorruptible in Heaven. So the Sacrament of the Cup is very wine, and the very bloud of Chriſt, according as his manner of ſpeaking was. Alſo Innocentius the third, with a great multitude of his ſecular Prieſts, made a certain new determination, That the Sacrament of the Altar is an accident without a ſubſtance, whereas neither Jeſus Chriſt, nor any of his Apoſtles taught this Faith (but openly and manifeſtly to the contrary) neither yet the holy Doctors, for the ſpace of a thouſand years and more, taught this Faith openly.

Pope Innocentius head of Antichriſt.

The Sacrament in ſubſtance bread in ſignification the body of Chriſt.

Tranſubſtantiation not openly taught 1000 years after Chriſt.

Therefore when Antichriſt or any of his ſhavelings doth ask of thee that art a ſimple Chriſtian, Whether that this Sacrament be the very body of Chriſt or not? affirm thou it manifeſtly ſo to be. And if he ask of thee whether it be material bread, or what other bread elſe? ſay thou, that it is ſuch bread as Chriſt underſtood and meant by his proper word; and ſuch bread as the Holy Ghoſt meant in S. Paul, when he called that to be very bread which he brake; and wade thou no further therein. If he ask thee how this bread is the body of Chriſt? ſay thou, as Chriſt underſtood the ſame to be his body, which is both omnipotent and true, and in whom is no untruth; ſay thou alſo as the holy Doctors do ſay, That the terreſtrial matter or ſubſtance may be converted into Chriſt, as the Pagan or Infidel may be baptiſed, and hereby ſpiritually be converted, and be a member of Chriſt, and ſo after a certain manner become Chriſt, and yet the ſame man remain ſtill in his proper nature. For ſo doth Saint Auguſtine grant, that a ſinner forſaking his ſin, and being made one Spirit with with God by faith, grace and charity, may be converted into God, and be after a manner God; as both David and Saint John do teſtifie, and yet be the ſame perſon in ſubſtance and nature, and in ſoul and vertue be altered and changed. But yet men of more knowledge and reaſon may more plainly convince the falſity of Antichriſt both in this matter and in others, by the gift of the Holy Ghoſt working in them. Notwithſtanding, if thoſe that be ſimple men will humbly hold and keep the manifeſt and apparent words of the holy Scripture, and the plain ſenſe and meaning of the holy Ghoſt, and proceed no further, but humbly commit that unto the Spirit of God, which paſſeth their underſtanding; then may they ſafely offer themſelves to death, as true Martyrs of Jeſus Chriſt.

The Sacrament both bread, and the body in divers reſpects.

Auricular confeſſion and penance.

As touching the Sacrament of Penance; that Chapter Omnis utriuſque ſexus, by which a certain new-found Auricular Confeſſion was ordained, is full of hypocriſie, hereſie, covetouſneſs, pride, and blaſphemy, he ſaith, and reproveth the ſame Chapter verbatim, and that by the ſentences of the ſame proceſs. Alſo, that the Penance and pains limited by the Canons be unreaſonable and unjuſt, for the auſterity and rigorouſneſs which they contain, more than are taxed by Gods law. He alſo doth exemplifie, of the ſolemn and publick denial of penitents to be received into Orders, according to the Decree of the General Council, Diſt. 50. cap. Ex pœnitentibus. Alſo of the ſeven-fold penitence of a Prieſt committing fornication, according to the Chapter, Presbyter, Diſt. 82. And further ſheweth another example of the penitence of Prieſts, according to that Chap. Qui presbyterium, &c. Whereas the Decretal of the General Council ſaith, That ſuch a one ought to remain continuing his life in the wars, and not to marry. And how Innocent the 3d. brought in a new-found confeſſion, whereby the Prieſts do oppreſs the ſimple Lay men. And that many other things they do, compelling them to confeſs themſelves to blind and ignorant Prieſts, in whom is nothing elſe but pride and covetouſneſs, having ſuch in contempt as are learned and wiſe. Alſo that the Decretal of Innocentius the third, touching the foreſaid auricular or vocal confeſſion, was brought in and invented to intricate and intangle mens conſciences with ſin, and to draw them down to Hell. And furthermore, that ſuch manner of confeſſion deſtroyeth the Evangelical liberty, and doth lett men to enquire after, and to retain the wiſe counſel and Doctrine of ſuch as be good Prieſts, which know faithfully how to obſerve his precepts and commandments, and which would willingly teach the people the right way to Heaven. For which abuſe all Chriſtian men, and ſpecially all Engliſhmen ought to exclaim againſt ſuch wicked laws.

The order of Prieſthood.

As touching the Sacrament of Order, he ſaith, That all good Chriſtians are predeſtinate, and be ordained of God, and made true Prieſts to offer Chriſt in themſelves, and to Chriſt themſelves; as alſo to teach and preach the Goſpel to their neighbours, as well in word, as in example of living. But the worldly ſhavelings do more magnifie the naked and bare ſigns of Prieſthood (invented by ſinful men) than the true and perfect Prieſthood of God, grounded by a true and lively faith, annexed with good works. Alſo, if it were needful to have ſuch ſhavelings, God knoweth how, and can make, when it pleaſeth him, Prieſts (without mans working and ſinful ſigns, that is to ſay, without either Sacraments or Characters) to be known and diſcerned of the people by their vertuous life and example, and by their true preaching of the law of God. For ſo made he the firſt-made Prieſts and Elders before the law of Moſes; and ſo made he Moſes a Prieſt before Aaron, and before the ceremonies of the Law, without Mans operation at all; and even ſo hath God made all ſuch as are predeſtinate, to be his Prieſts. But ſuch as be true Chriſtians receive none ſuch as Prieſts, unleſs they follow Chriſt and his Apoſtles: neither do they believe that they make the Sacrament of the Altar (which they affirm to be Gods body) when it pleaſeth them, leſt happily God be not with them, foraſmuch as they do this thing for covetouſneſs ſake, or elſe to brag of their own power. And therefore ſuch as be ſimple men will worſhip that Sacrament in this doubtfulneſs, with a ſilent condition; that is, if it be made by Gods authority, and have their devotion to the body of Chriſt in Heaven. Alſo, that ſuch as be Elders, if they be Gods Prieſts, be Biſhops, Prelates and Curates of their Chriſtian brethren, whom they may lead to Heaven by the

He meaneth of private preaching to their neighbours.

True Miniſters may be made without ſhaving.

Prieſts here have a private, not a publick underſtanding.

example of their holy converſation, and by preaching of the Goſpel, although they make no Sacrifice to that Antichriſt of Rome for their confirmation; neither be they dedicated to the world by ſecular divine things, and by conſuming the livings of the poor, as be thoſe ſecular Biſhops, Prelates and Curates. Alſo, that although there were no Pope, according as the cuſtom of the Church is, yet Chriſt, which is the Head of his Church, doth ordain ſuch a Pope as pleaſeth him; and that is, whoſoever is moſt humble and lowly, and beſt doth the office of a true Prieſt, although he be unknown to the world; and although there were no ſuch proud Biſhop above all the reſt, as the Church doth uſe, yet all the Prieſts might well govern the Church by common aſſent, as once they did, before ſuch worldly pride crept in amongſt the Biſhops, &c. And admit that no ſuch Prieſts were according to the accuſtomed uſe now of receiving of order and tonſure, by ſuch a Mitred Biſhop and his tonſure, yet Chriſt knoweth both how to make and chuſe ſuch as ſhall well pleaſe him both in converſation of life, and ſincere preaching of the Goſpel, in miniſtring to his people all neceſſary Sacraments. And every holy Man which is a Miniſter of Chriſt, although he be not ſhaven, is a true Prieſt ordained of God, although no Mitred Biſhop ever lay his Character upon him. So that the Pope and Prelates do make more eſtimation of their Characters (as tonſures and crowns by them invented) than of the true and perfect Prieſthood ordained of God; whereas all thoſe that are predeſtinate are true Prieſts made of him.

What if there were no Pope known? yet the Church could ſtand.

The Popes cenſures like the blaſt of a Serpent, or the blaſt of Lucifer.

As touching the authority of the Keys and Cenſures, no Chriſtian Man ought to eſteem Satan (whom Men call the Pope) and his unjuſt cenſures, more than the hiſſing of a Serpent, or the blaſt of Lucifer. Alſo, that no Man ought to truſt or put confidence in the falſe Indulgences of covetous Prieſts, which Indulgences do draw away the hope, which men ought to repoſe in God, to a ſort of ſinful men, and do rob the poor of ſuch alms as is given to them. Such Prieſts be manifeſt betrayers of Chriſt and of the whole Church, and be Satans own ſtewards to beguil Chriſtian ſouls by their hypocriſie and feigned Pardons. Alſo, foraſmuch as thoſe Prelates and Clergymen lived ſo execrable a life, contrary to the Goſpel of Chriſt and examples of his Apoſtles, and teach not truly the Goſpel, but only lies and the Traditions of ſinful wicked men; it appeareth moſt manifeſtly, that they have not the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, but rather the keys of Hell. And they may be right well aſſured, that God never gave unto them authority to make and eſtabliſh ſo many Ceremonies and Traditions which be contrary to the liberty of the Goſpel, and are blocks in Chriſtian mens ways, that they can neither know nor obſerve the ſame his Goſpel in liberty of Conſcience, and ſo attain a ready way to Heaven.

Popiſh Prieſts have not the Keys of Heaven, but rather of Hell.

Alſo, That all manner of Religious Men, notwithſtanding the Chapter Religioſi, touching the priviledges in the Clementines, may lawfully miniſter all Sacraments to them that are worthy the ſame; foraſmuch as the ſame is a work of charity, which only the Will and Ordinance of the Pope in his ſautors in this caſe is to hinder and lett. Item, If the Pope ſhall interdict this our Realm, that cannot hurt us, but much profit us, becauſe that thereby he ſhould ſeparate us from all his wicked laws, and from the charges of ſuſtaining of ſo many thouſand ſhavelings, which with ſmall devotion, or none at all, patter and chatter a new-found Song, Secundum uſum Sarum. So that not whatſoever the Pope in his General Council bindeth on Earth, is bound of God in Heaven, either for that he bindeth unreaſonably, and contradictorily doth againſt himſelf, or elſe for that he hath forſaken the judgment of God.

The Popes Curſe hurteth not, but profiteth.

As touching the preaching of the Goſpel, Whoſoever receiveth or taketh upon him the office of a Prieſt, or of a Biſhop, and diſchargeth not the ſame by the example of his good converſation and faithful preaching of the Goſpel, is a thief, excommunicate of God and of holy Church. And further, If the Curates preach not the Word of God, they ſhall be damned, and if they know not how to preach, they ought to reſign their Benefices. So that thoſe Prelates which preach not the Goſpel of Chriſt (although they could excuſe themſelves from the doing of any other evil) are dead in themſelves, are Antichriſts and Satans, tranſfigured into Angels of Light, night Thieves, Manquellers by day light, and betrayers of Chriſt his people.

Con-

KING Hen. 4.

Goſſoprie not ſufficient cauſe to reſtrain Matrimony.

Concerning the Sacrament of Matrimony: Notwithſtanding any ſpiritual kindred or Goſſoprie, a man and woman may lawfully marry together by the Law of God, without any diſpenſation Papiſtical. And in the ſame place he ſaith, That if our Realm do admit one not born in Matrimony, or illegitimate, to the Imperial Crown, ſo that he doth well diſcharge the office of a King, God maketh him a King, and by conſequence doth reject another King or heir of the Kingdom, being born in Matrimony and legitimate; ſo for ſuch ſpiritual kindred there ought no divorce to be made. Alſo notwithſtanding the Cap. Si inter de ſponſalibus: If any man ſhall make any contract with any woman by the words of the future tenſe, by an oath taken, and afterwards ſhall with another woman make the like contract by the words of the preſent tenſe; that then the ſecond contract ſtandeth. Alſo if a man make any contract with a woman by the words of the future tenſe, upon his oath taken, and maketh afterwards the like contract with another, not altering the words, and hath carnal copulation upon the ſame, the firſt contract maketh the Matrimony good, and not the ſecond. Alſo if a man before witneſs aſſure himſelf to a woman by a contract made in the preſent tenſe, and hath children by the ſame woman, and afterward the ſame man marrieth another woman, with the like words in the preſent tenſe before witneſs, although the firſt witneſſes be dead, or elſe by bribes corrupt, and the ſecond bring his witneſſes before the Judg to prove the ſecond contract, the firſt contract yet ſtandeth in force, although the Pope (allowing the ſecond contract) doth compel them to live in adultery againſt the Commandment of God. Alſo he condemneth the Decretal of the reſtitution of things ſtollen, Cap. Literas tuas; which willeth that a man and woman having carnal copulation in the degree of conſanguinity forbidden, and hath no witneſs hereof; if the woman will depart from the man, ſhe ſhall be compelled by the cenſures to remain with him, and to yield her debt. Alſo in caſe where a man hath made contract with two women, with one ſecretly having no witneſs, and with the other openly having witneſs, then were it better to acknowledg the inſufficiency of the Law, and to ſuffer men to be ruled by their own Conſciences, than by the Cenſures to compel them to commit and live in adultery.

The firſt Marriage lawfully before witneſs made ſtandeth.

Keeping and making Vows.

As touching the keeping and making of Vows: that Vow or Oath is beaſtly, and is without all diſcretion made, which to perform and keep a man hath no power but by grace given him of God; becauſe that ſome ſuch there be, whom God doth not accept to perſevere in the ſtate of chaſtity and perpetual virginity; and ſuch a one cannot keep his vow, although he make the ſame. Alſo that every one making a vow of continency or chaſtity, when making the ſame he ſhall not be accepted of God, doth very undiſcreetly, and as one without all reaſon maketh the ſame, when he is not able of himſelf, without the gift of God to fulfil his promiſe, according to that ſaying of the wiſe man, Chap. 8. No man hath the gift of continency, unleſs that God give it unto him. For otherwiſe if God help not ſuch a one to perform the vow or oath which he hath made and taken, no Prelate can compel him, unleſs he do contrary to Gods ordinance; but he ought to commit himſelf to the Government of Gods holy Spirit, and his own Conſcience.

Poſſeſſions of the Church.

For the poſſeſſions of the Church, In another Treatiſe it is declared, how the King, the Lords, and Commons, may without any charge at all keep fifteen Garriſons, and find 15000 Soulditers (having ſufficient lands and revenues to live upon) out of the Temporalties gotten into the hands of the Clergy, and fained Religious men, which never do that which pertaineth to the office of Curates to do, nor yet to ſecular Lords. And moreover the King may have every year 20000 pound to come freely into his Coffers, and above. Alſo he may find or ſuſtain fifteen Colledges more, and 15000 Prieſts and Clerks with ſufficient living, and an hundred Hoſpitals for the ſick, and every houſe to have one hundred Marks in lands. And all this may they take of the foreſaid Temporalties, without any charge to the Realm; whereunto the King, the Lords, and the Commons are to be invited. For otherwiſe there ſeemeth to hang over our heads a great and marvellous alteration of this Realm, unleſs the ſame be put in execution. Alſo, if the Secular Prieſts and fained religious, which be Simoniacks and Hereticks, which fain themſelves to ſay Maſs, and yet ſay none at all, according to the Canons, which to their purpoſe they bring and alledg, 1. q. 3. Audivimus, & Cap. Pudenda, & Cap. Schiſma; by which Chapter ſuch Prieſts and religious do not make the Sacrament of the Altar, that then all Chriſtians, eſpecially all the Founders of ſuch Abbies, and Endowers of Biſhopricks, Priories and Chanteries, ought to amend this fault and treaſon committed againſt their Predeceſſors, by taking from them ſuch ſecular Dominions which are the maintenance of all their ſins. And alſo that Chriſtian Lords and Princes are bound to take away from the Clergy ſuch ſecular Dominion as nouſleth and nouriſheth them in Hereſies, and ought to reduce them unto the ſimple and poor life of Chriſt Jeſus and his Apoſtles.

1. q. 3. 24. q. 1. Cap. Pudenda.

Belly-cheer of ill diſpoſed Prelates and of Monaſteries, not to be nouriſhed with temporalties and Appropriations.

And further, that all Chriſtian Princes (if they will amend the malediction and blaſphemy of the name of God) ought to take away their Temporalties from that ſhaven generation, which moſt of all doth nouriſh them in ſuch malediction. And ſo in like wiſe the fat Tythes from Churches appropriate to rich Monks, and other religious, fained by manifeſt lying, and other unlawful means; likewiſe ought to debar their gold to the proud Prieſt of Rome, which doth poyſon all Chriſtendom with ſimony and hereſie. Further, that it is a great abomination that Biſhops, Monks, and other Prelates, be ſo great Lords in this world, whereas Chriſt with his Apoſtles and Diſciples never took upon them ſecular dominion, neither did they appropriate unto them Churches, as theſe men do, but led a poor life, and gave a good teſtimony of their Prieſthood. And therefore all Chriſtians ought to the uttermoſt of their power and ſtrength to ſwear that they will reduce ſuch ſhavelings to the humility and power of Chriſt and his Apoſtles; and whoſoever doth not thus, conſenteth to their hereſie. Alſo that theſe two Chapters of the immunity of Churches are to be condemned, that is, Cap. Non minus, and Cap. Adverſus; becauſe they do decree, that Temporal Lords may neither require Tallages nor Tenths of any Eccleſiaſtical perſons.

Correction of the Clergy.

Now to the correction of the Clergy. By the Law of God, and by reaſon the King and all other Chriſtians may take revenge of Italy, and of all the falſe Prieſts and Clerks within the ſame, and reduce them unto the humble Ordinance of Jeſus Chriſt. Alſo that the Law of Silveſter the Pope, which is declared in 2. q. 5. Cap. Præſul, and Cap. Nullam, is contrary to the Law of Chriſt, and either Teſtament. And that proud and ambitious Silveſter by his Law ſo defended two Cardinals which were not to be defended by the Law of Chriſt, that by no means they might be convinced; although they were both vicious and evil. And although Chriſt ſuſtained and ſuffered the judgment of unjuſt temporal Judges; our Mitred Prelates in theſe days ſo magnifie themſelves beyond Chriſt and his Apoſtles, that they refuſe and will none of ſuch judgments. Alſo that thoſe Decretals of accuſations, Cap. Quando & Qualiter; which do prohibit that any Clerks ſhould be brought before a ſecular Judge to receive judgment, do contain both hereſie, blaſphemy, and error, and bring great gain and commodity to Antichriſts coffers.

2. q. 5. Præſul. Ibid. Nullam.

Furthermore that all Chriſtian Kings and Lords ought to exclaim againſt the Pope, and thoſe that be his fautors, and baniſh them out of their lands, till ſuch time as they will obey God and his Goſpel, Kings, and other Miniſters of Gods juſtice. Alſo that Biſhops and their favourers, that ſay it appertaineth not to Kings and ſecular Lords (but unto them and their Officials) to puniſh adultery and fornication, do fall into manifeſt treaſon againſt the King, and hereſie againſt the Scripture. Alſo that it appertaineth to the King to have the Order both of Prieſts and Biſhops, as theſe Kings Solomon and Joſaphat had.

Puniſhing of adultery belongeth to ſecular Magiſtrates rather than to Prelates.

Furthermore that Chapter, Nullus judicium de foro competenti, by the which ſecular Judges are forbidden, without the Biſhops commandment, to condemn any Clerk to death, is manifeſtly againſt the holy Scripture, declaring that Kings have power over Clerks and Prieſts to puniſh them for their deſerved crimes. Alſo that the Decree of Boniface de pœnis in 6. cap. Felicis, made againſt the proſecutors, ſtrikers, and impriſoners of Cardinals, is contrary both to the holy Scripture, and to all reaſon. Alſo that by the law of God and reaſon, a ſecular Lord may lawfully take a Cardinal and put him in priſon for committing the the crime of open ſimony, adultery, and manifeſt blaſphemy. Alſo that the Chapter *Si Papa, Diſt.*40. which ſaith that the Pope ought to be judged of none, unleſs he be Devius a fide, is contrary to the Goſpel, which ſaith, If thy brother ſin againſt thee, correct him. Alſo whereas St. Gregory and St. Auguſtine called themſelves the ſervants of Gods ſervants, this proud Biſhop of Rome, which will not be judged by his ſubjects (which be in very deed his Lords, if they be juſt and good men) doth deſtroy the order of Gods law, and all humility, and doth extoll himſelf above God and his Apoſtles. Alſo that Chriſtian Kings ought not only to judge this proud Biſhop of Rome, but alſo to depoſe him by the example that Ceſtrenſis, Lib. 6. Cap. 8. declareth of Otho the Emperor, which depoſed John the twelfth, and did inſtitute Leo in his place. And further he maketh an exhortation to the Princes to judge the Church of Rome, which he calleth the great and curſed ſtrumpet, of whom St. John writeth in Revel. 17.

Good Kings ought to depoſe wicked Popes.

Laſtly, touching the Laws and determinations of the Church; Chriſtians have reaſonable excuſes and cauſes to repell the ſtatutes of the Pope and of his ſhavelings, which be not expreſly grounded on the holy Scripture, or elſe upon reaſon inevitable. Alſo he ſaith, that that law which is ſet forth of conſecration, Diſtinctione 2. cap. Seculares, & cap. Omnis homo, & cap. Et ſi non frequentius. & cap. In cœna Domini: That ſuch ſecular men as do not receive the Sacrament of the Altar at Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſuntide, are not to be counted amongſt the number of Chriſtians, nor are to be eſteemed as Chriſtians; whereby it followeth that all Clerks and Laymen that obſerve not the ſame, it ſeemeth they go ſtraight to Hell. But if this law be of no force, for that the cuſtom and uſe in receiving is contrary to the ſame; then may we bleſs ſuch rebellion and diſobedience to the Pope, and his law; for otherwiſe we ſhould flee to Hell without any ſtay or let. Whereby we may conclude, that all Chriſtians ought well to practiſe this School of diſobedience againſt the Pope and all his laws (not founded upon the Scripture) which do let men to climb to Heaven by the keeping of charity, and the liberty of the Goſpel. Alſo that Chriſtian men have great cauſe to refuſe the laws and ſtatutes of theſe worldly Clerks, which the people call the Papal laws, and Biſhoplike ſtatutes, for the covetouſneſs and voluptuouſneſs of them; without the which the Church and congregation of God might ſafely run towards Heaven by the ſweet yoke of the Lord, as it did a thouſand years before the ſaid laws were preſcribed and ſent to the Univerſities, and withdrew men from ſtudying of the holy Scripture, for the deſire of Benefices and worldly goods. Alſo that ſimple men do reverently receive the ſentences of the Doctors and other laws, ſo far forth as they be expreſsly grounded upon the holy Scripture or good reaſon. Alſo that whereas the Popes laws, and laws of his Miniſters and Clerks be both contrary to themſelves, and have not their foundation either upon the Scripture, or yet upon reaſon, ſimple men ought to bid them farewell. Alſo that when all the Apoſtles faith failed them in the time of the Lords Paſſion, faith then reſted in the Bleſſed Virgin; much more might that proud Prieſt of Rome with all his rabble, eaſily err in the faith; and yet is the Chriſtian faith preſerved whole and ſafe in the faithful members of Chriſt, which are his true Church; but the Pope and all his rabblement cannot prove that they be any part of his Church. Alſo that the Pope with all his fautors may as well be deceived by a lying ſpirit, as was Achab and all his Prophets; and that one true Prophet, as was Michear, may have the verity ſhewed unto him, contra Concilium. Alſo that all good Chriſtians ought to caſt from them the Popes laws, ſaying, Let us break their bands in ſunder, and let us caſt from our necks thoſe heavy yokes of theirs. Alſo that where theſe Prelates do burn one good Book for one error perhaps contained in the ſame, they ought to burn all the Books of the Canon-Law, for the manifold Hereſies contained in them.

De conſecratione, id eſt 2 cap. Seculares.

The Popes Laws contrary to themſelves.

The Pope and his Cardinals no part of the true Church.

The Canon Law full of hereſie.

¶ And thus much out of a certain old written Book in Parchment, borrowed once of J.B. which Book containing divers ancient Records of the Univerſity, ſeemeth to belong ſometime to the Library of the Univerſity, bearing the year of the compiling thereof, 1396. Which computation if it be true, then was it written of him, ere that he recanted before Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop, at Saltwood, where he was impriſoned. Whereunto I thought good to annex a certain godly and moſt fruitful Sermon of like antiquity, preached at Pauls-Croſs much about the ſame time, which was in the year of our Lord 1388, by a certain learned Clerk, as I find in an old Monument, named R. Wimbeldon. Albeit among the ancient Regiſters and Records belonging to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, I have an old worn Copy of the ſaid Sermon, written in very old Engliſh, and almoſt half conſumed with age, purporting the ſaid Author hereof, bearing alſo the foreſaid name. The true copy of which Sermon, in his own ſpeech wherein it was firſt ſpoken, and preached at the Croſs on the Sunday of Quinquageſima, and after exhibited to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (being then as it ſeemeth William Courtney) here followeth.

{KING Hen. 4.

A Sermon no leſs godly than learned, preached at Pauls-Croſs on the Sunday of Quinquageſima, Anno 1389, by R. Wimbeldon.

Redde rationem villicationis tuæ. Lucæ xvi.

Matth. 20. The Sermon of R. Wimbeldon.

MY dere Frends, yee ſhullen underſtand that Chriſt Autor and Doctor of Truth, in his Book of the Goſpel (likening the Kingdom of Heaven to an Houſholder) ſaith on this manner: Like as the Kingdom of Heaven to an houſholding man, that went out firſt on the morrow to hire workmen into his Vine. Alſo about the third, ſixth, ninth, and eleventh hours he went out, and found men ſtanding idle, and ſaid to them, Go ye into my Vineyard, and that right is, I will give you. When the day was agoo, he cleped his ſteward, and bigh to give each man a peny.

The calling of God is divers.

'The ſpiritual underſtanding of this houſholder is our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that is head of the houſhold of holy Church. And thus clepeth men in diverſe hours of the day, that is in diverce agees of the world. As in time of law of kind, he cleped by enſpiring Abel, Enoch, Noe, and Abraham. In time of the old Law, Moſes, David, Iſay, and Jeremy: and in time of Grace, Apoſtles Martyrs, and Confeſſors, and Virgins. Alſo he cleped men in divers agees, ſome on childhode, as John Baptiſt; ſome on ſtate of wexing, as John the Evangeliſt; ſome in ſtate of manhode, as Peter and Andrew; and ſome in old agee, as Gamaliel, and Joſeph of Arimathie; and all theſe he clepeth to travaile in his vine, that is the Church, and that in divers manner. For right as yee ſeeth, that in tilling of the material vine there ben divers labours, for ſome kutten away the voide branches, ſome maken forkis and nailes to beren up the vine, and ſome diggen away the old earth fro the rote, and leyn there fatter. And all this offices ben ſo neceſſary to the vine, that if any of them fail, it ſhall harm greatly, other deſtroy the vine. For but if the vine be kut, ſhe ſhall wax wild; but if ſhe be railed, ſhe ſhall be overgo with nettles and wedis; but if the rote be fatted with dong, ſhe for febleneſs ſhuld wax barraine.

'Right ſo in the Church beth nedeful theſe three offices, Prieſthode, Knythode, and Laborers. To Prieſts it falleth, to kut away the void braunches of ſins with the ſwerd of her tong. To Knigthode it falleth to letten wrongs and theſts to be done, and to maintaine Goddis law, and them that ben teachers thereof, and alſo to kepe the lond from enemies of other londs. And to Laborers it falleth to travaile bodelich, and with their ſwete, geten out of the earth bodilich lifelode for hem, and other parties. And theſe ſtates beth alſo nedeful to the Church, that none may well ben without other: for if Prieſthode lacked, the people for default of knowing of Gods law, ſhould wax wild in vices, and deyen ghoſtly; and if the Knithode laked, and men to rulen the pople by law and hardineſs, theeves and enemies ſhulden ſo encres, that no man ſhuld live in peace. And if the labourers were nought, both Knights and Prieſts muſt become acte men and herdis, and elſe they ſhuld for default of bodily ſuſtenance dey. And therefore ſaith Clerk Auicenne, that every unreaſonable beaſt, if he have that that kind hath ordained for him, as kind hath ordained, he is ſuffiſance to live by himſelf, without any help of other of the ſame kind.

kind. As if there were but one horſe, other one ſhepe in the world, yet if he had graſſe and corne, as kind hath ordained for ſuch beaſts, he ſhuld live well now. But if there ne were but O man in the world, though he had all that good that is therein, yet for default he ſhuld dey, or his life ſhould be wors than if he were naught; and the cauſe is this, for that thing that kind ordaineth for a mans ſuſtenance, without other arraieng than it hath of kind, accordeth nought to him. As though a man have corne as it commeth from the earth, yet it is no meat according to him, untill it be by mans craft changed into bread: and though he have fleſh other fiſh, yet while it is raw, as kind ordained it, till it bee by mans travaile ſodden, roſted, or baken, it corded not to mans lifelode. And right ſo, wolle that the ſheepe beareth, mot by mans divers craftis and travailes be changed or it bee able to cloth any man; and certis O man, by himſelf ſhuld never doe all theſe labours. And therefore, ſaith this Clerke, It is need that ſome beemere men, ſome bakers, ſome makers of cloth, and ſome merchaints to fetch that, that one lond fetcheth from another there it is plenty.

And certis this ſhould bee a cauſe why every ſtate ſhould love other. And men of a craft ſhould not deſpiſe ne hate men of none other craft, ſith they bee ſo nedeful everich to other. And oft thelke crafts that been moſt unhoneſt, might worſt been forebore: and O thing I dare well ſay, that he that is neither travailling in this world, on ſtudying, on prayers, on preaching, for helpe of the people as it falleth to Prieſts, neither ruling the people, maiſtaining ne defending fro enemies, as it falleth to knights, neither travelling on the earth, in divers crafts, as it falleth to labourers: When the day of rekening cometh, that is, the end of this life, right as hee lived here withouten travaile, ſo hee ſhall there lacke the reward of the peny, that is, the endleſs joy of Heaven. And as hee was here living after none ſtate ne order, ſo he ſhall bee put then in that place that no order is in, but everlaſting horror and ſorrow, that is, in Hell. Herefore, everich man ſee to what ſtate God hath cleped him, and dwell hee therein by travaile, according to his degree. Thou that art a labourer or a crafty man, doe this truly. If thou art a ſervant or a bondman, be ſuget, and low in drede of diſpleaſing of thy Lord. If thou art a merchaunt deceive not thy brother in chaffering. If thou art a Knight, or a Lord, defend the poor man and needy fro hands that will harme them. If thou art a Juſtice or Judge, goe not on the right hand by favour, neither on the left hand, to puniſh any man for hate. If thou art a Prieſt, undermine, pray, and reprieve, in all manner patience and doctrine. Undermine thilke that been negligent, pray for thilke that been obedient, reprove tho that been unobedient to God. So every man travaile in his degree. For when the even is come, that is, the end of this world, then every man ſhall take reward, good or evil, after that he hath travailed here.

2 Cor. 9. 1 Pet. 2. 1 Theſſ. 4. Prov. 8. 2 Tim. 4.

The words that I have taken to make of my Sermon, be thus much to ſay: Yeld reckoning of thy baily. Chriſt autor of pitie, and lover of the ſalvation of his people, in the proceſs of this Goſpel, enformeth every man what is his baily, by manner of a Parable of a baily that he ſpeaketh of, to array him to anſwer of the goods that God hath taken him, when the day of ſtrait reckoning ſhall bee come, that is, the day of doom. And ſo I at this time, through the helpe of God, following him that is ſo great a maſter of authority, becauſe that I know nothing that ſhould more draw away mans unreaſonable love fro the paſſing joy of this world, than the minde of the dredful reckoning; as much as ſuffice, I ſhall ſhew you how yee ſhall diſpoſe you to avoid the vengeance of God, when there ſhall bee time of ſo ſtraight doom, that we ſhall geve reckoning of every idle word that we have ſpoken. For then it ſhall be ſaid to us, and we ſhall not flee it: Yeld reckoning of thy baily.

But for further proceſſe of this firſt party of this Sermon ye ſhall wete; that there ſhall bee three bailiffes that ſhall bee cleped to this ſtrait reckoning. Twaine to anſwer for themſelfe and for other, that been Prieſts that have cure of mens ſoules, and temporal men that have governaile of people; and the third bailiffe ſhall account onely for himſelfe, and that is every Chriſten man, of that hee hath received of God. And every of theſe ſhall anſwer to three queſtions.

Three Queſtions. The firſt, Second, Third.

To the firſt queſtion, How haſt thou entred? The ſecond, How haſt thou ruled? And to the third, How haſt thou lived? And if thou canſt well aſſoile theſe three queſtions, was there never none earthly Lord that ever ſo well rewarded his ſervant without compariſon, as thy Lord God ſhall reward thee, that is, with bliſſe, and joy, and life that ever ſhall laſt. But on that other ſide, and thou wilt now be recheles of thine own welfare, and take none heed of this reckoning: If that day take thee ſuddenly, ſo that thou paſſe hence in deadly ſinne (as thou wotſt never what ſhall fall thee) all the tongues that ever were, or ever ſhall bee, mow not tell the ſorrow and woe that thou ſhalt ever bee in, and ſuffer. Therefore the deſire of ſo great joy, and the dread of ſo great paine, though love ne dread of God were not in thine heart, yet ſhould that make thee afeard to ſinne, for to thinke that thou ſhalt give reckoning of thy baily. Therefore as I ſay to thee, the firſt queſtion that ſhall bee propoſed to the firſt baily, that is a Prelat, other a Curate of mens ſoules, is this:

How haſt thou entred: Matth. 22. Friend, how entredſt thou hether? Who brought thee into this office? Truth or Simony? God or the Devil? Grace or mony? The fleſh or the ſpirit? Give thou the reckoning if thou canſt. If thou canſt not, I rede that thou tarry for to learne. For up hap ere night thou ſhalt be cleped. And if thou ſtand dombe for unkunning, or elſe for confuſion of thy conſcience, thou fall into the ſentence that anon followeth: Binde his hands and his feet, and caſt him into the utterward of darkneſs, there ſhall be weeping and grenning of teeth. Therefore I rede thee, that thou adviſe thee how thou ſhalt anſwer to this queſtion: How haſt thou entred? whether by cleping, or by thine own procuring? for that thou wouldeſt travaile in Gods Goſpell, other for that thou wouldeſt bee richly arraied? Anſwer now to thine owne conſcience as thou ſhalt anſwer to God, thou that haſt take now the order of Prieſt, whether thou bee Curate of none: who ſtirred thee to take upon thee ſo high an eſtate? Whether for thou wouldeſt live as a Prieſt ought to doe, ſtudying of Gods law to preach, and moſt heartily to pray for the people; or for to live a delicious life upon other mens travaile, and thy ſelf travaile nought. Why alſo ſetten men their ſonnes, either their couſins to ſchoole? Whereto but for to get them great advancements, or to make them the better to know how they ſhulden ſerve God? This men may ſee openly by the ſciences that they ſet them to. Why I pray you put men their ſonnes to the Law Civill, or to the Kings Court to write Letters and Writs, rather than to Philoſophy or Divinity, but for the hope that theſe occupations ſhould be ever meanes to make them great in the world. I hope that there will no man ſay, that they ne ſhould better learne the rule of good living in the Book of Gods Law, than in any Bookes of mans worldly wiſdome. But certes now it is ſoothe, that John Chryſoſtom ſaith, Mothers bee loving to the bodies of their children, but the ſoule they deſpiſe; they deſire them to welfare in this world, but they take none heed what they ſhall ſuffer in the tother; ſome ordainen fees for their children, but noue ordaine them to Godward; the luſt of their bodies they woll deere buy, but the health of their ſoule they reke nought of. If they ſee them poore or ſicke, they ſorrow and ſigheth, but though they ſee them ſinne they ſorrow not. And in this they ſhew that they brought forth the bodies, but not the ſoules.

Againſt Simony. Queſtion. Solution. Queſtion. Solution. Johan. Chryſoſt. Hom. 27.

And if wee take heed truely, what abominations bee ſcattered and ſpread abroad in holy Church now adaies among Prieſts, we ſhull well wit, that they come not all to the fold of Chriſt by Chriſts cleping for to profit, but by otherwaies to get them worldly wealth, and this is the cauſe of leſing of ſoules, that Chriſt bought ſo deare, and of many errours among the people; and therefore it is iwrit in the Book of Mourning, where the Prophet ſpeaketh thus to God, Thren. 1. The enemy hath put his hand to all things deſirable to him; for hee hath let lawles folke enter into the Sanctuary, of the which thou hadſt commanded, that they ſhould not enter into the Church. This enemy is Satanas, as his name ſowneth, that

Note. The raſh making of Miniſters.

'that hath put his hand to all that him liketh. What 'ſinne I pray you, will the fiend have ſow on men, that 'nis now yuſed? In what plenty is now pride, envy, 'wrath, and covetiſe? when were they ſo great as they 'be now? and ſo of all other ſinnes. And why trow- 'eſt thou? But for there be a lawleſſe people entred into 'thy Sanctuary, that neither keepe in themſelfe the law of 'God, ne konne teachen other; and to every ſuch ſaith 'God by the Prophet, Oſe 4. For that thou haſt put away Oſe 4. 'cunning, I ſhall put thee away, that thou ſhall uſe no 'Prieſthood to mee. Lo that God expreſly here in Holy 'Writ forbiddeth men to take the ſtate of Prieſthood on 'them, but they have cunning that needeth them. Thou 'then that canſt neither rule thy ſelfe, ne other, after the 'Law of God, beware how thou wilt anſwer to God, at 'his dreadfull dome, when he ſhall ſay to thee, that which 'I took to my Theame:

'The ſecond Queſtion that every Curate and Prelate of 'Holy Church ſhall anſwere to, is this: How haſt thou 'ruled? That is to ſay, the ſoules of thy ſuggets, and 'the goods of poor men: Geve now thine accounts. Firſt, 'how thou haſt governed Gods folke that were take thee 'to keepe? Whether art thou an herd or an hired man, 'that doſt all for love of bodelich hire? As a father, or as 'a wolfe that eaten his ſheepe, and keepeth them nought? 'Say, whom haſt thou turned from his curſed living by 'thy devout preaching? Whom haſt thou taught the law 'of God that was earſt uncunning? There ſhall been 'heard a grievous accuſing of fatherleſs children, and a 'hard alledging, that Prieſts have liveden by their wages, 'and not done away their ſinnes. Yeld alſo reckoning 'how thou haſt ruled, and ſpended the goods of poore Bernar- 'men. Harke what Saint Bernard ſaith: Dread Clerkes, dus. 'dread the Miniſters of the Church, the which been in 'the place of Saints, that they doe ſo wickedly, nought 'holding them apaid with ſuch wages that were ſufficient 'to them; that overplus that needy men ſhould be ſuſtai- 'ned by, they bee not aſhamed to waſte in the houſe of 'their pride and lechery, and withholden to themſelfe 'wickedly and curſedly that which ſhould bee the lifeloode 'of poore men. With double wickedneſs truely they 'ſinne. Firſt, for they reeven other mens goods, and 'ſaith, they miſuſe holy things in their vanities and in 'their filths. Every ſuch baily therefore beware, for anon 'to the laſt farthing hee ſhall recken with Chriſt. Troweſt 'thou not then that thou ne ſhalt be diſallowed of God, of 'that thou haſt miſpended in feeding of fat Palfreys, of 'Hounds, of Hawkes, and if it ſo bee, that is worſt of 'all, on lecherous women? Heare what is ſaid of ſuch. 'They had led their daies in wealths: And in a point they 'ben gone downe into Hell. Think therefore I rede thee, 'that thou ſhalt yeld reckening of thy baily.

'The third Queſtion that this baily ſhall anſwere to, is 'this: How haſt thou lived? What light of holineſſe haſt 'thou ſhewed in thy living to the people, or what mirror 'haſt thou ben of holineſſe to them? Geve now thy 'reckoning how thou haſt lived, as a Prieſt, or as a leude 'man, as a man, or as a beaſt. That is to wonder truely 'how the life of Prieſts is chaunged. They bee clothen as 'Knights, they ſpeaken as unhoneſtly as carles; other of 'winning as Merchaunts; they riden as Princes, and all 'that is thus ſpended, is of the goods of poore men, and 'of Chriſts heritage. Therefore ſaith an holy Doctor, The 'clay of Egypt was tough and ſtinking, and medled with 'blood. The ſlates were hard to be undone, for they 'were baked with fire of covetiſe, and with the light of 'luſt. In this travaileth rich man, in this they wake, 'awaiting poore men. In theſe travaileth Prelates, that 'ben too much blent with too much ſhining of riches, 'that make them houſes like Churches in greatneſſe, that 'with divers paintries coloren their Chambers, that with 'divers clothings of colors make images gay; but the 'poore man, for default of clothes, beggeth, and with 'an empty wombe crieth at the doore. And if I ſhall the Eſa. 22. 'ſooth ſay, ſaith this Doctor, oft time poore men bee Quis tu hic aut quaſi quid hic. 'robbed for to clothe the trees and ſtones. Of ſuch ſpeak- 'eth the Prophet, How art thou here, or as who art thou?

'Here thou art occupying the place of Peter and of Paul, {KING Hen. 4.} 'or of Thomas, or of Martine: But how, as Judas a- 'mong the Apoſtles, as Simon Magus among the Diſ- 'ciples, as a candle new quent that ſtincheth all the 'houſe inſtead of a light lanterne, as a ſmoke that blind- 'eth mens eien, in place of cleane fire? If thou contrary 'thus the forme of living that Chriſt and his Diſciples left 'to Prieſts, Lo what ſaith the Prophet Jeremy, They have Jer. 31. 'entred, and they have had, and nought ben obedient: 'They haven with falſe title, or with their falſe and cor- 'rupt intention had poor mens goods to their miſuſing, 'and they have not bee obedient to the Law of God in 'their owne living. Therefore it is writ that the hardeſt 'dome ſhall fall on ſuch. An hard dome, for they have 'miſentred: An harder dome, for they have miſruled: 'And the hardeſt dome, for they have ſo curſedly lived. 'Think therefore I rede, how thou wilt give reckening of 'thy baily.

'The ſecond bailiffe that accounteth at this dome for Kings, Princes, and Magiſtrates admoniſhed. How haſt thou entred 'himſelfe and alſo for other, is hee that keeping hath of 'any communite, as Kings, Princes, Majors, and Shi- 'reves, and Juſtices. And theſe ſhull alſo anſwer to the 'ſame three Queſtions. The firſt Queſtion, How haſt 'thou entred, that is to ſay, into thine office? Other for 'helpe of the people to deſtroy falſhed and furtherer 'truth? Other for deſire of winning of worldly wor- 'ſhip: If thou take ſuch an office, more for thine owne 'worldly profit than for helpe of the communite, thou 'art a Tyrant as the Philoſopher ſeith. For it is to fear 'leſt there been too many that deſiren ſuch ſtates, that 'may the rather oppreſſe thilke that they hateth, and 'take gifts to ſpare to puniſh thilke that haven treſpaſſed, 'and ſo maketh them partners of their ſinnes. And many 'ſuch, when they been ſo high, they recke nought that 'they beth poore mens brethren, but they weene to paſſe 'them in kinde, as they paſſeth in worldly worſhip, that 'is but winde: Of which God ſaith by the Prophet, Oſe 8. 'They have raigned, but nought of mee, they have been 'Princes, but I know nought. So we reade of Reho- 'boam, that was the ſonne of King Salemon, what time 2 Para. 'hee was firſt King, the people of Iſrael comen to him, 'and ſaid, Thy father in his laſt dayes put on us great 'charge. Wee pray thee ſome deale make it lighter, 'and we willen ſerve thee. And the King tooke 'counſell of the old wiſe men, and they counſailden 'to anſwer them faire, and that ſhould be for the 'beſt. But hee left theſe old wiſe mennis counſaile, 'and did after the counſaile of children that were his 'playferen, and ſaid to the people when they came 'againe: My left finger is greater than my fathers 'riegge: My father grieved you ſomewhat, but I will 'echen more thereto. And the people heard this, and 'rebeleden to him, and took them anothor King: 'and ſith, the Kingdom came never whole again: 'and therefore it is good, that every ruler of Com- 'monalties, that they bee not lad by follies, ne by 'none other eare rowner, that he ne have an eygh of 'love to the comonty that hee hath to rule. For wete 'yee well, bee hee never ſo high, that he ſhall come 'afore higher, to yeeld reckoning of his baily.

'The ſecond Queſtion is, How haſt thou ruled the How haſt thou ruled. 'people, and the office that thou haddeſt to governe? 'Thou that haſt been a Judge in cauſes of poore men, 'how haſt thou kept this heſt of God. Thou ſhalt not Deut. 9. 'take heed to the perſon of a poore man, to be to him 'the harder for his poverty, ne thou ſhalt not behold 'a rech mans ſemblance, to ſpare or to favour him in 'his wrong for his riches. O Lord, what abuſions is 'there among officers of both Lawes now adays: If a 'great man pleadeth with a poore man to have ought 'that he holdeth, every officer ſhall be ready to hie all 'that he may, that the rich man might have ſuch an 'end as he deſired. But if a poore man plead with a 'rich man, then there ſhall bee ſo many delayes, that 'though the poore mans right be open to all the coun- 'trie, for pure fault of ſpending he ſhall bee glad to 'ceaſe. Shrieves and Bailiffes willen returne poore 'mens Writs, with tarde venit, but gif they ſelen meed 'in their hands. And yet I here ſay, men that have ſeyen

'both

KING 4 Hen. 4. 5

'both Lawes, and ilke Court that is cleped Chriſts Court, 'is much more Curſed. Therefore it is writ, gifts they 'taken out of Mens boſoms, to overtourn the right way 'of dome. But it is to dread the Word of Chriſt; In 'what dome ye deeme, ye ſhould be deemed when ye comen 'to yield a reckoning of your baily.

Hovv haſt thou lived.

'The third Queſtion is, How haſt thou lived, thou that 'deemeſt and puniſheſt other men for their treſpaſs? A 'great Doctor ſaith; thee behooveth to flee the wickedneſs 'of other men that thou chaſtieſt them for their treſpaſs. 'For if thy ſelf do unlawfullich in deming other men, 'thou damneſt thy ſelf, ſyth thou doſt that thou damneſt. 'And Paul ſaith, why techeſt thou nought thy ſelf, that 'thou teacheſt other? Why ſtealeſt thou, that teacheſt 'nought other men to ſteal? S. Gregory ſaith, he ſhall 'not take governail of other, that cannot go before them 'in good living. And when any man ſtand before him 'in dome, he muſt take heed tofore what judge he ſhall 'ſtand himſelf, to take his dome after his deeds. But it 'is to dred, that many fareth as twe falſe Prieſts that 'woulden have damned to death Holy Suſan for ſhe wold 'not aſſent to their lechery. Of the which it is writ, 'they turned away their eyen, for they would not ſee 'Heaven, ne heve mind of rightful domes. So it hap- 'peth oft they that were more worthy to be hanged, 'damneth them that be leſs worthy, as a Clerk telleth 'of Socrates the Philoſopher, ſaith he, upon a day a man 'aſked of him why he laughed: And he ſaid, for I ſee 'great Theeves leading a little Theef to hanging. I pray 'thee, whether is he a greater Theef that benimmeth a 'Man his Houſe and his Land from him and from his 'Heirs for evermore, other he that for making of great 'need ſtealeth a Sheep or a Calf? Whether trow we 'nought, that it happeth ſuch Extortioners to be other 'while Judges, and demeth men thus: But I read thee 'that thus deemeſt other, think on that dome thou ſhalt 'come to, to yeld the reckening of thy baily.

Valerius Maximus. libro. 7.

The thied baily.

'The Third Bailiffe that ſhall be cleped to this dread- 'ful account ſhall be to every Chriſtian Man, that ſhall 'geve reckning to his Lord God for goods that he had 'had of his. And here I will ſpeak but of the firſt Que- 'ſtion, that is this: How entreſt thou? And here by the 'way, ye that have got any worldly good, other take 'by extortion, by ravine, by uſury, other by deceit: Woe 'ſhall be to him at this dreadful day, as S. Auſten ſaith. 'If he be caſt into the fire that hath not given of his 'own good; where troweſt thou ſhall he be caſtin, that 'hath reved other mens from them? And he ſhulle bren 'with the fend that hath nought clothed the naked 'where troweſt ſhall he bren that hath made him naked that 'was erſt clothed. But as S. Gregory ſaith, Two things 'maketh men to live thus by ravaide of other Neighbours, 'that they deſire heynes and dread poverty, and what ven- 'geance falleth of this ſin of covetiſe, I may ſee by figure 'in holy writ, when the Angel ſaid to Propher Zacherye, 'Reare up they eien, and ſee what is that goeth out. 'And the Prophet ſaid, what is it? Then the Angel ſaid, 'This is the Pot going out, This is the eize of hem on all 'the Earth, and there was a weight of leade I bore, and 'there was a Woman ſitting in the middle of this Pot, 'And the Angel ſaid, This is impiety: and he took her 'and caſt her into the middle of this Pot, and he took 'the gobbet of lead and caſt it into the Pots mouth. 'And the Prophet lift up his eye, and he ſaw two Wo- 'men coming out, and Spirits in her Wingis like two 'Kytes other gledes, and they arerid up this Pot between 'Heaven and the Earth, and then the Prophet ſpake to 'the Angel wider wol theſe bear this Pot? And he 'ſaid, unto the Lord of Sennaar: This Pot is covetiſe. 'For right as a Pot hath a wide open mouth, ſo covetiſe 'gapeth after worldly good: and right as the licour in 'the Pot profiteth nought to the Pot, but to men that 'draweth and drinketh thereof: ſo worldly good oft 'profiteth not to Churles, but to other that cometh after, 'as it is written. He that hath Money ſhall have no 'Fruit of it: and this covetiſe is the eie of covetous men, 'for they ben blind to ſee how they ſhould ſee to go to 'Heaven, but to the winning of worldly things they ſee 'many ways, like to Owles and night Crowes, that 'ſeen better by night than by day. The gobbet of lead, 'is the ſin of obſtination. The Woman that ſat in the 'Pot, is unpity, as the Angel ſaid, that followeth un- 'righteouſneſs and avarice. For through avarice a man 'leeſeth the pity that he ſhould have of the miſchief of 'his ſoul. For oft time men leeſe the life of their ſoul 'by deadly ſin, that they do to have the worldly win- 'ning, and alſo they leeſe the pity that they ſhould have 'of their body, putting themſelfes to many great bodi- 'ly travayls and perils both by Sea and Land, and all 'maketh covetiſe. This Pot is ſtopped with the gobbet 'of lead, when unpity is thus by ſin of obſtination cloſed 'in covetiſe, that he may not go out of the chinches 'hart by penance. For as Job ſaith; when he is ful- 'filled, he ſhall be ſtopped. The two Women that bare 'up this Pot, are pride and luſt of fleſh, that be cleped 'in holy writ the twe daughtren of the watr Lethe, cry- 'ing, bring, bring. And they had wings, the firſt 'wing is grace ſpiritual, as cunning, wiſdom, and coun- 'ſel, with ſuch other many. For which gifres many 'men wexe proud. The ſecond wing is bodily grace, as 'ſtrength, fairehood, gentry; and many other ſuch; 'whereof men wexe proud. The wings of the ſecond 'Woman, that is, fleſhly deſire, beth gluttony and ſloth. 'Of gluttony ſpeaketh S. Gregory; when the wamb is 'fulfilled, the prickes of lechery beth meved. And of 'ſloth S. Auguſtine ſaith, Lot the while he dweled in 'buſineſs among ſhrewes in Sodome, he was a good man. 'But when he was in the hill ſlow, for ſykkernes he in his 'drunkenes lay by his daughtren. And theſe Women 'had wings like Kytes, that with a crying voice ſeecheth 'their meate, as Bartholmeus ſaith.

Job. 21.

Againſt covetiſe. Gregory. Auguſt. de confictu virtutis & vitiorum. Bartholomæus de proprietatibus rerum. Auſtin.

'And thus fareth covetiſe of men; witneſſing Saint 'Auguſtine, what is the greedineſs of fleſhly deſire. In- 'aſmuch as the ravenous Fiſhes have ſometime meaſure; 'yet when they hunger, they rapine; and when they 'fulfil they ſpare: But only covetiſe of men may not 'be fulfilled. For ever he taketh, and never hath 'enough. Neither he dreadeth God, neither ſhame of 'men. He ne ſpareth his Father, ne knoweth his Mo- 'ther, ne accordeth with his Brethren, neither keepeth 'truth with his Friend. He overpreſſeth Widowes and 'Fatherleſs Children. Free men he maketh bond, and 'bringeth forth falſe witneſs, and occupieth dead mens 'things, as he ſhoulden never dye. What manhood is 'this, ſayth this Doctor, thus to leeſe life and grace, 'and get death of ſoul? Win Gold, and leeſe Heaven? 'And herefore ſaith the Prophet, have travaile in the 'midſt, and leave unrighteouſneſs.

Auſtine. Pſal. 54. Innocentius.

'Alſo Innocent ſpeaking of the harmss that come of 'covetiſe, ſaith thus, O how many men have covetiſe 'decieved and ſpilt? when covetiſe Balaam would, for 'gifts that the King proferd him, have Curſed Gods 'people, his own Aſs reproved him, and hurt his foot 'againſt a wall. Achor was ſtoned to death: for cove- 'tiſe made him ſteal gold and clothes, againſt the com- 'mandment of God. Gieſy was ſmit with Meſilty, for 'he ſold Naamans heal, that came of Gods grace. Judas 'for covetiſe ſold Chriſt, and afterward hong himſelf. 'Anany and Zaphira his Wife were dead ſodenly, for 'they forſoken to give Peter their Money that they had. 'And covetiſe maketh alſo that rich men eate the poor, 'as Beaſts done their leſous holding them low. This 'may we ſee all day in deed I dread. For if a rich 'man have a Field and a poor man have in the midſt or 'in the ſide thereof one Acre, and a rich man have all 'a Street ſaveth O Houſe, that ſome poor Brother of his 'oweth, he ceaſeth never till he get it out of the poor 'Mans hand, either by prayer, or by bying, or by pur- 'ſuing of deceit. Thus fared it by King Achab, that 'through his falſe Queenes gin ſlew the poor man Na- 'both, for that he would not ſell him his Vineyard that 'was nigh to the Kings Palace.

Nu. 22. Joſua 7. 4 Reg. 5. Acts 5.

'Upon which proceſs, thus ſayth Saint Ambroſe; 'How farre will ye Rich men ſtretch your covetiſe? 'Will ye dwell alone upon the Earth, and have no poor 'Man with you? Why put ye out your fellow by kind, 'and challenge to your ſelf the poſſeſſion comen by 'kind? In commune to all rich and poor the Earth 'was made. Why will ye rich challenge proper right 'herein? Kind knoweth no riches, that bringeth foth 'all men poor. For we be not got with rich Clothes, 'ne born with Gold ne with Silver. Naked he bringeth 'them

Ambroſe de ſuo libello de Nabuth.

'them to this World, needy of meat and of drink
'and clothing. Naked the Earth taketh us and ſhe naked
'brought us hither. Shee cannot cloſe with us our poſ-
'ſeſſion in the Sepulchre, for kind maketh no difference
'between poor and rich, in coming hither, ne in going
'hence. All in o manner ſhe bringeth forth, all in o
'manner ſhe cloſeth in grave. Who ſo will make differ'ence of poor and rich, abyde till they have a little 'while leyne in the grave. Then open and look among 'dead bones who was rich, and who was poor; but 'if it be thus, that moe clothes rotteth with the rich
'than with the poor, and that harmeth to them that beth 'on live, and profit not to them that been dead; Thus
'ſaith the Doctor of ſuch extortion as it is writ. O-
Job. 24. 'ther mens Fields they repeth, and fro the vine of him
'that the harme oppreſſed they plucke away the Grapes;
'they leveth men naked, and taketh away her Clothes
'that hath nought wherewith to helle them in cold, and 'liſten up this Pot bytween Heaven and Earth. For cove-
'tous men nother haveth charity to their Brethren upon
'Earth, neither to God in Heaven; and they bare this pot
'into the Lond of Sennaar, that is to ſay, into the Lond
'of Stenche, that is Hell, for there ſhall be ſtench, in 'ſteed of ſweet ſmelling, as Iſay ſaith. Beware I read,
'that ye nought have to do with this Pot, ne with the 'Woman therein, and on all manner that ye be nought
'Weddid to her, for then ye muſt be both one. This is
'thilke foule lecherous Woman: the Kings and Morchaun-
'tis of the Earth have done lechery, and of her vertue they 'have been made rich, whoſe damnation is written in the 'Book of Privities in theſe words, In o day ſhall come all
'theſe vengeances of her death, weeping and hunger
'and fire ſhall brenne her, for ſtrong is God that ſhall
'venge him on her, and then ſhulleth weepe and howle
'uppe on her, the Kings of the Earth, that haveth done
'lechery with her, and having lived in Delices when they
'ſhull ſee the Smoke of her brenning, ſtonding aferre
'weeping and weyling and ſaying; Alas! Alas! thilke
'great City that was clothed with bys and purple, and
'braſile, and over gilt with Gold and pretious Stones and 'Pearle. For in one hour all theſe great riches ſhall be de'ſtroyed, then ſhall they ſey that ſhall be damned with 'her. We have erred fro the way of trouth and right-
'wiſneſs, light have not ſhined to us, and the ſunne of 'underſtonding have not riſen to us: we have be made
'weery in everich way of wickedneſs and of luſt, and have 'gone hard ways, but the ways of God we knew not:
'what hath Pride profited to us, or the boaſt of riches
'what hath it brought to us? All this is as a ſhadow of 'death, and we mow now ſhew no token of holineſs, in 'our wickedneſs we be waſted away. Think therefore
'I read, that thou ſhall yeld reckening of thy bayly. Here
'endeth the firſt part of this Sermon, and beginneth the 'ſecond part.

'IN the ſecond part with the help of God I will
'ſhew firſt, who ſhall clepe us to this reckoning,
'Afterward, tofore what Judge we ſhall reckyn, and
'laſt what puniſhing ſhall be doe to them that been 'found falſe ſervants and wicked, and what reward ſhall
'be give to them that be found good and true. For
'the firſt, ye ſhall wetoen that there ſhall be twey
'domes. The firſt dome anone after the departing of 'body and of ſoul, and this ſhall be ſpecial. And of Mat. 25. 'this reckoning or dome ſpeaketh the Goſpel of Luke.
'The ſecond reckoning or dome ſhall be anone after 'the general Reſurrection, and ſhall be univerſal. And
'of this is to ſpeken in the Goſpel. To the firſt
'every man ſhall be cleped after other, as the world
'paſſeth. To the ſecund ſhall come togedre in the 'ſtroke of an eye all mankind. To the firſt, men
'ſhall be cleped with three Sumners, other Sergeauntes:
'The firſt is Sickneſs, the ſecond is Age, and the 'third is Death; the firſt warneth, the ſecond threat-
'neth, and the third taketh. This is a kindly order.
3. Sumners. Sickneſs. Age. Death. 'but otherwiſe it faileth, for ſumme we ſeeth dieth
'that never wiſt what was Sickneſs ne Age, as Chil'dren that been ſuddenly ſlain. And ſumme, yea the 'moſt part that dyeth now adaies, deyeth before her
'kind agee of deeth. Therefore, I ſay, that the firſt
'that clepeth to this ſpecial reckoning is Sickneſs, that
'followeth all mankind, ſo that every man hath it: and KING Hen. 4.
'ſumme is Sickneſs that ſumme men haveth, but nought
'all. Yet the firſt Sickneſs is double, for ſumme is within
'in the mightes of the ſoul, and ſumme is without in feeble-
'neſs of the body that needis mo be ſtoried, when time
'by hemſelf is cauſe of corruption as Philoſphy ſaith, and 'thereby feebleneſs and ſickneſs. And ſo may we ſee
'hereby, though that a man ſhut out of the houſe of his 'heart all manner of worldly and fleſhly thoughts, yet
'unneth ſhall a man, for ought that he can do, think
'on God only, the ſpace of o Pater noſter, but that
'ſome other thing that is paſſing entreth into the ſoul,
'and draweth her from contemplation. But, O Lord
'God, what ſeekneſs is this, an heavy burden on the Sons
'of Adam, that one foule moocke and fenn of the World
'we many think long ynow. But on that the ſoul
'ſhould moſt delectation have by kind mow we nought
'think ſo little a ſpace, but if the cokle enter among
'the wheate. Of this ſeekeneſs ſpeaketh Paul, where
'he ſaith; I ſee a Law in my limmes fighting agenes
'the Law of my Spirit, and taking me into the Law
'of Sinne. So that if fares by us, as by a man that would 'look agyens the Sunne, and may nought do it long for 'nothing. And forſooth, that is for no default that is in 'the Sunne, for ſhe is moſt cleere in her ſelf, and ſo by
'reaſon beſt ſhould be ſeyn, but it is for feebleneſs of mans
'eye. Right ſo, ſyth, Adam our firſt fader was put out
'of Paradiſe, all his Off-ſpring have been thus ſicke, as
'the Prophet ſeyth. Our faders have eate a bytter Grape,
'and the teeth of the children be wexe an edge. The 'ſecond ſickeneſs, that is commune to all mankind, com-
'mith of feebleneſs of the body, as hunger and thirſt,
'colde and heate, ſorrow and wearineſs, and many other,
'as Job 14. ſaith. A man that is ybore of a Woman, Job. 14.
'lyving a little while, is fulfilled with many miſeaſes.
'Yet there is other ſickneſs that cometh to ſome men,
'but not to all, as Lepyr, Palſye, Fever, Dropſie, Blind- Deut.
'neſs, and many other, as it was ſeyden to the people
'of Iſrael, in holy writ. But thou keep the Comman-
'ments that be writ in this Book, God ſhall ſchren the 'ſickneſs of thee and of thy ſeed, great ſickeneſs and 'long abiding. Yet ye ſhall underſtond, that God ſend-
'eth otherwhile ſuch ſickeneſs to other men, and o-
'therwhile to ſhrews. To good men, God doth it
'for two cauſes, and that is ſooth. Of ſickeneſs I wol
'to be underſtond alſo, of all manner of Tribulations.
'The firſt cauſe, for they ſhould alway ever know,
'that they have none perfections of themſelf, but of 'God only, and to echen their meekneſs. And thus 'ſaieth Paul, leſt the greatneſs of revelations rere me up 1. Co. 12.
'into pride, is given a pricke of my fleſh, the Angel of 'Sathanas to ſmite me on the neck, wherefore I have
'thrice prayed God, that he ſhould go fro me, and he 'anſwered me: My grace is ſufficient to thee, for vertue is 'fulfilled in ſickneſs, whereon thus ſaith the gloſe. The 'Fiend, axing Job to be tempted, was heard of God,
'and nought the Apoſtle axing his temptation to be re-
'mooved. God heard him that ſhould be damned, and 'he heard nought him that he ſhould ſave. For oft
'the ſick man axit many things of the leche, that he wole
'not geve him, and that is for to make him whole of ſick-
'neſs. Alſo GOD ſendeth ſaincts oft ſickneſs and perſe-
'cution, to give us ſinful wretches example of patience:
'For if he ſuffer his ſaincts to have ſuch Tribulation in this 'World, and they thankin him thereof, much more
'wretchis, that God ſendeth not the hundred aparty of Tob. 2.
'their ſorrow, ſhulden beare it meekly, ſith we have de-
'ſerved a thouſand ſo much as they haveth. Whereof,
'Toby that one day when he was weary of burying of poor
'men, the which ſhulden have ley unburied, and have be 'etene of houndis, and foules, as Carynes, of other un-
'reaſonable Beaſts, when for wearineſs he had leyde him
'to reſt, through Goddis ſufferance the Swallowes that
'bredden above on his hous, mayden ordure into his eyen,
'and he waxet blind. Thus it is writ of this temptation
'forſooth; Therefore, GOD ſuffered to come to him,
'that to them that comen after ſhould be given enſample
'of patience, as by the temptation of Holy Job. For 'ſith from his Childhood evermore he dread God, and 'ever kept his Heſtes; was not agreeved ayenſt GOD
'that the miſchief of blindneſs fell to him; but un-
'moove-

{KING Hen. 4.} 'moveable dwelled in the dread of GOD, thanking him 'all the days of his life. Lo that holy Writ ſaith expreſly, 'That GOD ſuffered this holy man to have that ſick- 'neſs, to give them that ſhould come after him enſample 'of patience. Alſo otherwhile GOD ſendeth ſickneſs 'and tribulation to wicked men, and for two cauſes: 'Firſt, for that they ſhould the rather dread God, and 'leave their ſin. As it is writ, Their ſickneſs hath been 'multiplied, and after, they have hied to Godward. For 'we ſee oft men in ſickneſs know their GOD, that ne- 'ver would have turned to him while they had been 'whole. Alſo God ſendeth them ſickneſs oft to agaſt 'other men, leſt they follow their ſin. As the ſickneſs 'of King Antioche, whom GOD ſmote with ſuch a 'ſickneſs, that Worms fell out of his body while he lived, 'in ſo far forth that he ſtank ſo foul, that his friends were 'ſo weary of it, that they might not ſuffer it. And at 'the laſt, when he himſelf might not ſuffer his own 'ſtinch, then he began to know himſelf, and ſaid, It is 'rightful to be ſubject to GOD, and a deadly manne 'not to hold himſelf only even with God; and the ſtory 'ſaith, He asked mercy of GOD, and made a vow to 'God, that he would make the City of Jeruſalem free, 'and the Jews to make them as free as the men of 'Athens; and that he would honour GODS Temple 'with pretious ary, and multiply the holy Veſſels, and 'ſin of his own rent and ſpences perteining to the Sacri- 'fice. And he would become a Jew, and go over all 'the lond to preach Gods might. And yet God gaſe him 'not ſuch mercy as he delired. And I trow certain that it 'was for good. Inaſmuch as GOD knew he would 'not afterward hold his Covenant, or elſe for he asket it 'too late. What meede was it for him to forſake his 'wickedneſs? when he was unmighty to do good or 'evil. Nevertheleſs, I trow he was not damned, in as 'much as he had ſuch repentance; for repentance in this life 'come never too late if it be true. But by this Vengeance 'that GOD took on this King, ſhould men ſee, what 'it is to be unobedient to God. And alſo it is to take 'heed, that when ever ſickneſs cometh, ever it ſheweth, 'that he that ſuffereth this deadly, ſhall needs die. For 'though he may ſkape of his ſickneſs, yet he may not 'ſkape death. And ſo thou muſt needs come give reckon- 'ing of thy Baily. The ſecond Somnor that ſhall clepe 'thee to this particular dome, is elde or age. And the 'condition of him is this, though that he tarie with thee, 'he will not leave thee, till he bring thee to the third, 'that is death. But there be many that though they have 'this Somnor with them, they take none heed, though 'they ſee her hear hore, her back crooked, her breth ſtunk, 'her teeth fail, her yen derk, her viſage rively, her crene 'weixt hevy to her. What meaneth all this, but that age 'ſumneth to the dome?

The ſecond ſumner. Properties of death.

'But what more madhead may be than a man to be 'cleped, and draw to ſo dreadful a reckening there, 'where but he anſwere well, he forfeteth both body and 'ſoule to damnation for ever? If ſeeing a little worldly 'mirth on the way, he thinketh ſo mekil thereon, that he 'forgetteth who draweth him, or whether he draweth: 'So doth he that is ſmitten with Age and liketh ſo on the 'falſe worlds wealth, that he forgetteth whether he is 'away: Herefore ſaith an holy Doctour, that among all 'abuſions of the world moſt is of an old man that is ob- 'ſtinate: for he thinketh not on his outgoing of this 'world, ne of paſſing into the life that is to come: he 'beareth Meſſengers of death, and he leveth hem not, and 'the cauſe is this, for the threefold cord that ſuch an old 'man is bounden with is hard to breke. This cord is 'cuſtome, that is of three plightes, that is, of ydle thought, 'unhoneſt ſpeech, and wicked deed: the which if they 'groweth in a man from the childhode into mans age, 'they maketh a treble cord to bind the old man on cuſtom 'of ſinne. Herefore ſaith Eſay, breake the bondes of ſinne. 'Thinke herefore whoſoever that thou be that art thus 'ſumned that thou might not ſcape, that thou ne ſhalt 'yeld the reckening of thy baily.

The third ſumner. Diſtinctio tertia.

'The third ſomner to this reckening, is death. And the 'condition of him is, that when ever he come, firſt, other 'the ſecond, other the laſt hour he ne ſpareth, neyther 'power, ne yough, ne he dreadeth no threatning, ne he 'ne taketh hede of no prayer, ne of no gift, ne he grunt- 'eth no reſpit, but withouten delay he bringeth forth to 'the dome. Herefore ſeyth Saint Auſtin: Well ought 'every man drede the day of his death. For in what ſtate 'a mans laſt day findeth him, when he dyeth out of this 'world, in the ſame ſtate he bringeth him to his dome. 'Herefore ſeyth the wiſe man; Sonne thinke on thy laſt 'daye, and thou ſhalt never ſinne. Therefore I rede that 'thou thinke, that thou ſhalt geve reckoning of thy baily. 'I ſaid alſo, that there ſhall be another doome, to the 'which all men ſhall come together, and this ſhall be uni- 'verſal. And right as to the other doome, every man 'ſhall be cleped with theſe three ſumnours; ſo to this dome 'all this world ſhall be cleped with three general clepers. 'And right as the other three Meſſengers tell a mans end, ſo 'theſe tell the end of the world. The firſt cleper is the 'worldly ſickneſs, the ſecond cleper is feebleneſs, and the 'third is the end. The ſickeneſs of the world thou ſhalt 'know by charity acooling. His elde and feebleneſs thou 'ſhalt know by tokens fulfilling, and his end thou ſhalt 'know by Antichriſtis purſuing. Firſt I ſaid, thou ſhalt 'know the worlds ſickneſs by charity acooling. Clerkes 'that treate of kinde ſayne; that a body is ſicke, when 'his bodily heate is too lite, or when his unkindely heate is 'too much. Sythe then all mankinde is one body, whoſe 'kindelie heate is charity (that is, love to GOD and to 'our Neighbours) unkindely heate is luſtful love to other 'creatures. When therefore thou ſeeſt that the love of men 'to Godward and to their neighbour is little and faint, and 'the love of worldly things and luſtes of the fleſh is great 'and fervent; then wit thou well, that unkindely heate is 'too great, and kindly heate is too little. That this be ac- 'knowlich of this ſickeneſs, I may prove by authority of 'Chriſt. For he himſelfe gave them as a ſign of the draw- 'ing to the end of the World: For that wickedneſs ſhall 'be in plenty, charity ſhall acoole. Therefore when thou 'ſeeſt charity thus little in the world, and wickedneſs en- 'creaſe, know well that this world paſſeth and his wealth, 'and that this ſumner is come. And thus ſeyth S. Paul, 'Writ ye well, that in the laſt daies ſhall come perillous 'times, and there ſhall be men loving themſelfe, that is 'to ſay, their bodies, covetous by pride, unobedient to 'Father and Mother, unkynde ſelons, withouten affecti- 'on, withouten peace, blamers, incontinent, unmilde, 'withouten benignity, traitors, rebels, ſwelling, lovers of 'luſts more than of God, having a likeneſs of piety, and 'denying the vertue thereof. And theſe flee thou. If 'thou ſeeſt the people buſied with ſuch conditions, wit 'thou well, that the firſt ſumnour warneth all the world, 'that the day of reckoning draweth toward.

Auguſtinus.

The day of Judgment.

To know the worlds ſickneſs. Mat. 21.

'The ſecond ſumnour, that warneth all the world, is 'elde or age of the world and his feebleneſs, and ſhewes 'tokens fulfilling. But I know well that we be nought 'ſuffiſaunt to know the times other the whiles that the Fa- 'ther in Trinity hath put on his own power, to ſhew cer- 'teinely the day, year, other houre of this dome, ſith this 'knowlech was hid fro the privy Apoſtles of Chriſt, and 'from Chriſts manhood as to ſhew it to us. Nathleſs, we 'inough by authority of holy Writ, with reaſons, and ex- 'poſitions of Saints well and openly ſhew, that this day 'of wrath is nigh: But yet leſt any man ſey in his heart as 'it is written of follie baylies, that they ſhall ſeien, my 'Lord, that is, taryeth to come to the dome, and upon hope 'hereof he taketh to ſmite ſervants and hynen of God, 'eate and drinke and make him dronke, I ſhall ſhew that 'this day is at the hond; how ny nevertheles can I not 'ſeie ne wole. For if Paul ſaid nowe for a thouſand and 'three hundred yeare, and paſſed moe; we ben thilke in- 'to whom the endis of the world ben come, much rather 'may we ſeie the ſame that been ſo much neere the end 'than he was. Alſo S. Chryſoſtome ſaith; thou ſeeſt over 'all darknes, and thou douteſt that the day is goe, firſt 'on the valeys is darkneſs whan the day draweth down- 'ward: whan therefore thou ſeeſt the valeies yderked 'why donteſt thou whether it be nigh even, but if thou ſee 'the Sun ſo low that derknes is upon the hils, thou 'wole ſeie doubtles that it is night: Right ſo, if thou ſee 'firſt in the Saculars and the lewd Chriſtenmen beginneth 'derkeneſſes of ſinnes, and to have the maiſtrie, it is 'token that this world endeth. But when thou ſeeſt Prieſts 'that been put on the high top of ſpiritual Dignities, that 'ſhulden be as hils aboven the commune people in perfect 'living,

Maidenhildegar. 'den Hildegare in the Book of her propheſie the third 'parte, the eleventh viſion, the ſeventh Chapter meveth 'this reaſon. Right as on ſeven daies GOD made the 'world, ſo in 7000. year the world ſhall paſs. And right 'as in the ſixth day man was made and fourmed; ſo in '6000. yeare he was brought again and refourmed. And 'as in the ſeventh day the world was full made, and God 'left off his working, right ſo in the 7000. yeare, the 'number of them that ſhullen be ſaved ſhall be fulfilled, and 'reſt ſhall be to Seyntes full in bodie and ſoule. If that it 'be ſo as it ſeemeth to follow of this maydens words, that '7000. in paſſing of the world accordeth to ſeven dayes 'in his making it, ſee what lacketh that theſe 7000. yeares 'ne beth fulfilled. For if we reken the number of yeares 'fro the Nativity of Chriſt, to the yeares fro the beginning

So it ſuweth that this laſte day is more than a 'halfe agoe, if we ſhulden give credence to this maydens 'reaſun: But if we ſhull lene to the Goſpel, than we ſhall

Note. 'And Chriſt gave them no certaine time of theſe things 'when they ſhulden fall, but he gave them tokens, by 'which they might know when they drew nigh, and ſo as 'to the firſt Queſtion of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem he 'ſaid; when the Romanes come to Beſiege that City, then 'ſoon after ſhe ſhall be deſtroyed.

'And as to the ſecond and third; he gave many tokens, 'that is to ſay; That Realme ſhull riſe againſt Realme, 'and people againſt people, and peſtilences, and earth- 'quakings, the which we have ſeene in our dayes. But 'the laſt token that he gave, was this; When ye ſeene the 'abominatien of elengneſs ſaid of Danyel the Prophet, 'ſtanding on the Sanctuary; then who ſo readeth, under- 'ſtond. Upon which text, thus argueth a Doctour in a 'Book that he maketh of the end of the world. If the 'words of Danyel haven authority (as GOD ſayth that 'they haven) it ſufficeth of the number of the years of the 'ende of the world, that Daniel hath written. Now 'Daniel in the twelfth Chapter, ſpeaking of this abomina- 'tion, putteth betweene the ceaſing of the buſie Sacrifice of 'the Jewes, the which fell, when by Titus and Veſpaſianus 'Jeruſalem was deſtroyed, and the people of the Jewes 'were diſparkled into all the world. And this abomina- 'tion that Doctours ſayne ſhall be in the great Antichriſtes 'dayes, 1290. Now proveth this Doctour, that a day

And this reaſon put not I as 'to ſhew any certaine time of this coming, ſith I have 'not that knowledge; but to ſhew that he is nye, but 'how nygh I wot never. But take we heede to the fourth 'part of the ſecond viſion of Saint John, put in the Book 'of Revelations, in the which, under the opening of the 'ſeven ſeales, is declared the State of the Church, from the 'time of Chriſt into the end of the world. The opening 'of the foure firſt ſeales ſhew the State of the Church, fro 'the time of Chriſt to the time of Antichriſt and his fore- 'goers, the which is ſhewed in the opening of the other 'three ſeales. The opening of the firſt ſeale telleth the 'State of the Church, in the time of the Preaching of 'Chriſt and of his Apoſtles. For the firſt, that is, the Lyon 'gave his voice, that betokeneth the Preachers of Chriſtes 'Reſurrection and his Aſcenſion. For then yede out a 'white Horſe, and he that ſate upon him had a bow in his 'hand, and he yede out overcoming to overcome. By 'this white-horſe we underſtand the cleane life and con- 'verſation that theſe Preachers haden: and by the bowe, KING Hen. 4. 'their true teaching, pricking ſorrowe in mennes hearts 'for their ſinnes withouted flattering. And they wen- 'ten out of Jewry that they comen of, overcoming ſome 'of the Jewes, and maken them to leave the truſt that 'they hadden in the olde Lawe, and to beleeve in Jeſus 'Chriſt and ſhewen his teaching. And they wenten out 'to overcome the Paynemes, ſhewing to them that their 'Images were no Gods, but mens workes, unmighty 'to ſave themſelve or any other, drawing them to the 'Beliefe of Jeſus Chriſt God and Man. In the open- 'ing of the ſecond ſeale, there cryed the ſecond Beaſt, 'that is, a Calfe, that was a Beaſt wonted to be ſlaine, 'and offered to God in the olde Law. This ſheweth the 'State of the Church in the time of Martyrs, that for 'their ſtedfaſt Preaching of Gods true Law ſhed their bloud, 'that is ſignified by the red horſe that went out at this ſeale 'opening; and this eſtate began at Nero the curſed Expoſitio. Neronis. 'Emperour, and dured unto the time of Conſtantine the Conſtantinus magnus. 'great, that endowed the Church. For in this time ma- 'ny of Chriſts ſervants, and namely the Leaders of Gods 'flocke were ſlaine. For of two and twenty Biſhops of 'Rome that were between Peter and Silveſter the firſt, Silveſter. 'I reade but of foure but that they weren Martyrs for 'the Law of Chriſt. And alſo in the time of Diocle- 'ſian the Emperour, the perſecution of the Chriſten 'men was ſo great, that in thirty dayes were ſlaine 22. 'thouſand Men and Women in divers countries for the 'Law of God.

'The opening of the third ſeale telleth the State of the The 3. ſeale. 'Church in time of Hereticks that beth figured by the black 'Horſe, for falſe underſtanding of holy writ: for then 'cryed the third Beaſt that is a man, for at that time 'was it neede to preache the myſterie of Criſts incarnati- 'on, and his paſſion ayenſt theſe Erretikis that feliden Expoſitio. 'mis of theſe pointis; how Chriſt tooke verreyly mans 'kinde of our Lady, him being God as he was byfore, and 'his moder being mayden byfore and after. The opening The 4. ſeale. 'of the fourth ſeale, telleth the State of the Church in Expoſitio. 'the time of ypocritis, that beth ſignified by the pale 'Horſe, that beth ſignes of penance with outfoorth to 'blinde the people. And he that ſate upon this Horſe 'his name was Death, for they ſhulle ſlee ghoſtly them 'that thay leden, and teacheth to truſt upon other thing 'than God: and helle followeth him, for helle received 'thilke that theſe diſteineth. At that time ſhall it neede, 'that the fourth Beaſt that is the Egle make his cry, that 'flyeth higheſt of foules to reare up Gods Goſpel, and 'to praiſe that Law above other, leſt mens witte and 'their traditions over-gone and treden down the Law of 'God, enforming of theſe ypocrites, and this is the laſt 'ſtate, that is, other ſhall be in the Church, byfore the 'coming of the great Antichriſt. The opening of the The 5. ſeale. 'fifth ſeale telleth the ſtate of the Church that then God 'ſhall follow, and deſire that lovers of Goddis law 'ſhulleth have after the end of this world to be delivered 'of this woe. The opening of the ſixt ſeale telleth the 'State of the Church in time of Antichriſts time, the The 6. ſeale. 'which ſtate ye may know to be in the Church whan 'ye ſeth fulfilled, that Saint John propheſieth to fall in the 'opening of this, where he ſaith thus: After that I ſawe 'foure Angels ſtonding upon four comers of the Earth, 'holding the foure windes of the Earth that they blowen 'nought upon the Earth, ne upon the Sea, ne upon 'eny Tree. Theſe foure Angels beth the number of all 'the Devils Miniſters, that on that time ſhulleth in the 'pleaſaunce of their Lord Antichriſt ſtoppe the four windis, 'that bete the foure Goſpels to be Preached, and ſo let 'the breth of the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt to fall 'upon men mourning for ſinne, and calling them to a- 'mendment, and to other that wolden increaſe in vertues, 'other upon perfit men? What is there after this to fall, The 7. ſeale. 'but that the myſtery of the ſeaventh ſeale be ſhewed, 'that he come in his own perſon. That Jeſus Chriſt 'ſhall ſlee with ſpirit of his mouth, when the Fiend ſhall 'ſhew the utmoſt perſecution, that he and his ſervants 'may doe to Chriſtis limmes, and that ſhall be the third 'warning that the world ſhall have to come to this dread- 'ful dome.

'In all this matter have I nought ſeid of my ſelf, but 'of other Doctors that beth proved, I ſeyd alſo in my 'ſecond principal part, that it were to wete tofore what 'Judge we ſhall reken. Wherefore we ſhulleth wite that 'God himſelfe ſhall heare this reckening, he that ſeeth 'all our dedis, and all our thoughts fro the beginning of 'our life to the end, and he ſhall ſhew their the hid things 'of our hert, opening to all the world the rightfulneſs of 'his dome. So that with the might of God, every 'mans dedis to all the world ſhall be ſhewed, and ſo it 'ſeemeth by the words of S. John, in the Book of Pri-'vities, there he ſeith thus: I ſawe dede men, little and 'great, ſtonding in the ſight of the throne, and bookes 'weren opened; and another booke was opened that was 'of life, and dede men weren judged after the things that 'weren written in the bookes after their worchings. Theſe 'bookes beth mens conſciences that now beth cloſed. 'But then they ſhulleth be opened to all the world to re-'den therein both dedis and thoughts. But the booke of 'life is Chriſts living and doctrine, that is now hid to 'men that ſhulleth be damned through their owne malice, 'that deemeth men to ſerve the world rather than God: 'In the firſt book ſhall be write all that we haveth 'doe, in that other booke ſhall be write that we ſhulden 'have doe, and then ſhulle dede men be demyd of thilke 'thingis that ben written in the Bookis: For if the dedis 'that we haven doe, the which beene written in the bookis, 'of our conſcience, be according to the booke of Chriſts 'teaching and his living, the which is the booke of life 'we ſhulle be ſaved, or elſe we ſhulle be damned, for the 'doome ſhall be given after our workis. Looke therefore 'now what thing is written in the booke of thy conſci-'ence, while thou art here: and if thou findeſt ought 'contrary to Chriſts life, other to his teaching, with the 'knife of penaunce and repentance ſcrape it away and 'write it better, evermore hertly thinking that thou ſhalt 'yelde reckening of thy bayly.

'Alſo I ſaid principally that it were to witen, what re-'ward ſhall be geve on that doome, to wiſe ſervants and 'good, and what to falſe ſervants and wicked. For the 'which it is to wite, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſhall 'come to the doome here into this world, in the ſame body 'that he tooke of our Ladie, having thereon the woundis 'that he ſuffered for our again bieng. And all that ever 'ſhullen be ſaved, taking againe their bodyes clyving to 'their head Chriſt, ſhall be raviſhed metying him in the 'aire, as Paul ſaith: They that ſhall be damned lyen up-'on the earth, as in a tonne of Wine the dreggis dwellen 'byneth, and the Cliere wine hoveth above. Then ſhall 'Chriſt axe reckening of the deedes of mercy, reproving 'falſe Chriſten men for the levying of them, reherſing the 'deedes of the ſame and other truthis by the which his 'true ſervants then followed him, that ſhulle thilke falſe 'ſervants goe with the Devil, whom they have ſerved 'in the Earth, then ſwallowing into the endleſs fire. 'And righteful men ſhullen goe into everlaſting life, then 'ſhall be fulfilled that is written in the booke of Priviries; 'Woe, woe, woe, to hem that dwellen in the Earth. 'Woe to the paynym that gaſe that worſhip to dead 'Images wrought of mans hands, and to other crea-'tures that he ſhould have gone to God that him wrought: 'Woe to the Jew that truſteth ſo muchil in the olde 'Lawe, then ſhall he ſe Maries ſonne deeming the world 'whom he deſpiſed and ſet on the Croſs: Woe to the falſe 'Chriſten man that knew the will of his Lord and fulfill-'led it nought.

'Alſo woe for ſin of thinking to thee, that thou haſt 'ſhyt out the meine of God, that is, minde of his paſſion, 'holy contemplation of his goodneſs, and memory of 'his benefites, fro the chamber of thine hert; and haſt 'made it a houſe of Swyn and a den of Theeves, by un-'cleane thoughtes and delightes. As thou here haſt ſperd 'God out of thine hert, ſo he ſhall ſpere thee out of Heaven: 'Thou haſt herberwid the meine of the Fiend, and with 'them in Hell thou ſhalt ever abide. Woe alſo for ſinne of 'ſpeech, for thou might nought open thy ſoule and ſtink-'ing mouth with the which thou haſt ſpoken unhoneſtly, 'curſing, fraud, deceite, leaſings, forſwearing, ſcorning, 'and backebiting, to praiſe God in the fellowſhip of Saints. 'For loving is not comynlych in mouthes of ſinners. For 'in the which gif thou haddeſt kept thy mouth cleane, thou 'ſhouldeſt have ſonged in fellowſhip of Angels this bleſſed 'ſong; Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, Dominus Deus omnipo-'tens; Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty. Then yel-'ing and weeping thou ſhalt cry in company of Devils;

Væ, Væ, Væ, quantæ ſunt tenebræ?

'Woe, Woe, Woe, How great beth theſe darkneſs? Wo 'alſo for ſinne of deede. Thou haſt bene proud, thy pride 'ſhall be drawne to Hell, as Eſay ſaith, or thou haſt bene 'brent with envie of the Devil. Envie entred into the 'world, and they ſhoulden followen him that ben on his 'ſide, as Salomon ſaith. Or thou haſt beſtirred with wrath, 'and everich man that beareth wrath to his brethren is 'guilty in doome, as Chriſt in the Goſpel ſaith of Mat-'thew. Or thou be ſlow to good deedes, myſſawe ſhall 'come to thee as a wayfaring man, and thy poverty as a 'man armed, as the Book of Proverbes ſaith. Or thou 'haſt haunted lechery, gluttony, or covetiſe. That for-'ſooth were ye, that everich avouterer, or uncleane man, 'that is a glutton, other chynch, ſhall never have Heritage 'in the Realm of Chriſt and of God, as Paul ſaith. But 'Fire, Brimſtone, and the Spirit of Tempeſtes, that is, 'the Fiend of Hell, ſhulen be a partie of their paine, as it 'is written in the Pſaulter, when theſe Damned men be in 'this woe, they ſhulen ſing this rueful Song that is ywrit-'ten in the Book of Mourning: The joy of our heart is a 'go: our quiet is turned into woe, the Crowne of our Note. 'head is fallen us fro. Alas for ſinne that we have do. 'But joy and joy, and joy to them that be ſaved. Joy in 'God, joy in himſelf, joy in other that ben ſaved. Alſo 'joy for their travel is brought to ſo gracious an end. Joy, 'for they ſcape the pain of Hell; Joy, for their bliſs that Concluſion. 'they han in the ſight of God, Cui ſit honor & gloria, in 'ſecula ſeculorum, Amen.

And thus much concerning this worthy and fruitful Sermon, which as by the ancientneſs of the phraſe ſeemeth to be Preached much about the time of John Wickliff; ſo I thought here, by occaſion of William Thorps examinati-on, beſt to place the ſame, for the apt coherence both of the ſpirit, and of the matter. Eſpecially having before our eyes, the publick utility of the Reader, to whom, by the ſtudious reading thereof, might riſe plentiful matter of true Chriſtian information, both of the wholeſome fear-ing of God, and of the right guiding of every Chriſtian mans life.

Which I thought good to annex further in our ſtory, after the examination of William Thorp, and the Martyr-dom of William Sawtrey, and of John Badby thus de-ſcribed (as ye have heard) which was about the year 1409. By the way here is to be conſidered, at leaſt to be admoniſh-ed, that all this while the ſchiſm in the Church of Rome did yet continue, and ſo indured till the Council of Con-ſtance, which was in whole, the ſpace of twenty and Vide ſupra. nine years. The origine whereof (as was ſaid before) firſt began at Urbanus the Fifth; which Urbanus being dead, Urbanus 5. An. 1389. next followed Pope Boniface the Ninth, who Bonifacius 9. ſate fourteen years. He in ſelling his pardons was ſo im-Innocentius 7. pudent and ſo paſt ſhame, that he brought the Keys of Peter (as ſaith Platina) in contempt. After him ſucceed-ed Innocentius the Seventh, and ſate two years: who be-Gregorius 12. ing dead, the Cardinals conſulting together, and ſeeing The Cardi-nals device the foul enormity and inconvenience growing upon this to ceaſe the contentious ſchiſm in their Church of Rome (minding ſchiſm. to provide ſome remedy for the ſame, after the beſt device The vow they could) in their conclave where they were aſſem-and oath of bled for a new election for the Pope, took this order, the Cardi- promiſing among themſelves with ſolemn Vow made to nals made God, to Mary the Bleſſed Virgin, to Peter and Paul, and for the to all the bleſſed company of Saints; That if any of ſchiſm. them, within the College or without the College, ſhould be called to the high place of Apoſtolical Preeminence; he ſhould effectuouſly renounce the juriſdiction and title of his Popedom, if or whenſoever the contrary Pope for the time being would in like many renounce his place and title, and his Cardinals in the like manner condeſcend to the other Cardinals of Rome. So that both theſe two Colleges of Cardinals agreeing together, one chief Bi-ſhop might be choſe and taken out of them both, to be made the true Pope. Provided moreover, that none ſhould ſeek any releaſment or abſolution from the ſaid promiſe, vow and bond, once paſſed among them; Unto all which things furthermore every one ſubſcribed with his hand. Theſe things thus prefixed and ratified upon the ſame, they proceeded to the Election. In which was choſen Gregorius the Twelfth, who the ſame day of his election, in the preſence of all the Cardinals confirmed the Vow, Sacrament, and Promiſe made, ſubſcribing the ſame with his hand in form as followeth, And I Gregory, this day being the laſt of November, in the year of our Lord, 1407. choſen and elected for Biſhop of Rome, do ſwear, vow, and promiſe, and confirm all the premiſſes above contained, &c. This being done, ſhortly after he was crowned, being of the age of 80 years. As the time thus paſſed, the people and Cardinals were in great expectation, waiting when the Pope, according to his Oath, would give over, with the other Pope alſo. And not long after, the matter began indeed between the two Popes to be attempted, by Letters from one to another; aſſigning both day and place, where and when they ſhould meet together; but yet no effect did follow.

The Oath and Vow of Pope Gregory the 12th.

Ex Chron. D. Albani.

This ſo paſſing on, great murmuring was among the Cardinals, to ſee their holy perjured Father ſo to neglect his Oath and Vow aforenamed. Inſomuch that at length, divers of them did forſake the Pope, as being perjured (as no leſs he was) ſending moreover to Kings and Princes of other Lands, for their counſel and aſſiſtance therein, to appeaſe the Schiſm. Amongſt the reſt, Cardinal Biturienſis was ſent to the King of England; who publiſhed divers Propoſitions and Concluſions (remaining in the Regiſters of Thomas Arundel) diſputeth, that the Pope ought to be ſubject to Laws and Councils. Then King Henry (moved to write to Gregory the Pope) directeth his Letter here under enſuing, which was the year of our Lord, 1409. The contents of the Letter be theſe.

The Pope falſly perjured. Cardinals leave the perjured Pope.

The Letter of King Henry the Fourth to Pope Gregory the Twelfth.

King Henry the Fourth to Pope Gregory the Twelfth. Two hundred thouſand ſlain by Schiſm of Rome. Thirty thouſand ſlain in Camp fighting for the Biſhoprick of Leodium.

MOſt bleſſed Father, if the diſcreet Providence of the Apoſtolical See, would call to mind with what great perils the univerſal World hath been damnified hitherto under pretence of this preſent Schiſm; and eſpecially would conſider, what ſlaughter of Chriſtian people to the number of two hundred thouſand (as they ſay) hath been through the occaſion of War raiſed up in divers quarters of the World; and now of late, to the number of thirty thouſand Souldiers, which have been ſlain through the diſſention moved about the Biſhoprick of Leodium between two ſet up, one by the Authority of one Pope, the other by the Authority of the other Pope, fighting in Camp for the Title of that Biſhoprick. Certes ye would lament in ſpirit and be ſore grieved in mind for the ſame. So that with good conſcience ye would relinquiſh rather the honour of the See Apoſtolick, than ſuffer ſuch horrible bloodſhed hereafter to enſue, under the cloke of diſſimulation, following herein the example of the true Mother in the Book of Kings: who pleading before Solomon for the right of her Child, rather would depart from the Child, than the Child ſhould be parted by the Sword. And although it may be vehemently ſuſpected by the new Creation of nine Cardinals, by your laſt made, contrary to your Oath (as other men do ſay) that you do but little heed or care for ceaſing the Schiſm; Yet far be it from the hearing and noting of the World, that your circumſpect Seat ſhould ever be noted and diſtained with ſuch an inconſtancy of mind; whereby the laſt error may be worſe than the firſt. Ex Chron. D. Albani, Part the ſecond.

King Henry the Fourth to the Cardinals.

King Henry the Fourth to the Cardinals.

AND to the Cardinals likewiſe, the ſaid King directeth another Letter with theſe Contents here following: We deſiring to ſhew what Zeal we have had and have, to the reformation of peace of the Church; by the conſent of the States of the Realm, have directed to the Biſhop of Rome our Letters after the tenour of the Copy herewith in theſe preſents incloſed to be executed effectually: wherefore we ſeriouſly beſeech your reverend Colledge, That if it chance the ſaid Gregory to be preſent at the Council of Piſe, and to render up his Popedom, according to your deſire, and his own Oath; you then ſo Ordain for his ſtate totally, that chiefly God may be pleaſed thereby, and that both the ſaid Gregory and alſo we which entirely love his honour and commodity, may have cauſe to give you worthily condign thanks for the ſame. Ibid.

Concilium Piſanum.

This being done in the year of our Lord, 1409. afterward in the year next following, Anno 1410. the Cardinals of both the Popes, to wit, of Gregorius and Benedictus, by common advice aſſembled together at the City of Piſe, for the reformation of Unity and Peace in the Church. To the which Aſſembly, a great multitude of Prelates and Biſhops being convented, a new Pope was choſen, named Alexander the Fifth. But to this Election, neither Gregorius nor Benedictus did fully agree. Whereby there were three Popes together in the Roman Church (that is to underſtand) not three Crowns upon one Popes head, but three Heads in one Popiſh Church together. This Alexander, being newly made Pope, ſcarcely had well warmed his triple-Crown, but ſtraight giveth out full remiſſion, not of a few, but all manner of ſins whatſoever, to all them that conferred any thing to the Monaſtery of S. Bartholomew by Smithfield, reſorting to the ſaid Church any of theſe days following; to wit, on Maundy-Thurſday, Good-Friday, Eaſter even, the Feaſt of the Annunciation, from the firſt Even-ſong to the later. But this Pope, which was ſo liberal in giving remiſſion of many years to other, was not able to give one year of life to himſelf, for within the ſame year he died. In whoſe ſtead ſtept up Pope John 23.

Ex Joan. Gerſon de Hiſtoria Hæreſiarum, lib. 4.

In the time of this Alexander great ſtir began in the Country of Bohemia, by the occaſion of the Books of John Wickliff, which then coming to the hands of John Hus, and of other both men and women, eſpecially of the Lay ſort, and Artificers, began there to do much good. Inſomuch, that divers of them not only men, but women alſo, partly by the reading of their Books tranſlated into their Tongue, partly by the ſetting forward of John Hus, a notable learned man, and a ſingular Preacher at that time in the Univerſity of Prague, were in ſhort time ſo ripe in judgment, and prompt in the Scriptures, that they began to move queſtions, yea and to reaſon with the Prieſts, touching matters of the holy Scriptures.

The Goſpel beginning to take root in Bohemia.

By reaſon whereof, complaint was brought to the ſaid Pope Alexander the Fifth, who cauſed eſtſoons the forenamed John Hus to be cited up to Rome. But when he came not at the Popes citation, then the ſaid Pope Alexander addreſſed his Letters to the Archbiſhop of Swinco. Wherein he ſtraitly charged him to prohibite and forbid, by the Authority Apoſtolical, all manner of Preachings or Sermons to be made to the people, but only in Cathedral Churches or Colledges, or Pariſh-Churches, or in Monaſteries, or elſe in their Church-yards. And that the Articles of Wickliff ſhould in no caſe of any perſon, of what ſtate, condition, or degree ſoever, be ſuffered to be holden, taught, or defended, either privily or apertly. Commanding moreover and charging the ſaid Archbiſhop, that he with four Bachelors of Divinity, and two Doctors of the Canon-Law joyned unto him, would proceed upon the ſame, and ſo provide that no perſon in Churches, Schools, or any other place, ſhould teach, defend, or approve any of the aforeſaid Articles. So that whoſoever ſhould attempt the contrary, ſhould be accounted an Heretick, and unleſs he ſhall revoke ſolemnly and publickly the ſaid Articles, and ſhall for ever abjure the Books wherein the foreſaid Articles be contained, ſo that they may be utterly aboliſhed out from the eyes of the faithful; the ſame ſhould be apprehended and impriſoned, all appellation ſet apart, the help alſo of the ſecular Arm being called thereunto; if need ſhall require, &c. Theſe were the contents of this mighty and fierce Bull of Pope Alexander.

The Letter of Pope Alexander the Fifth to the Archbiſhop of Swinco of Bohemia.

The Popes cruel Bull againſt John Hus.

Againſt the which Bull on the other ſide John Hus, juſtly complaining, excepteth again and objecteth many things, as appeareth in his Book, intituled, De Eccleſia, cap. 18. Where he declareth this Mandate of the Pope to ſtand directly againſt the doings and ſayings both of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles; conſidering how Chriſt himſelf preached to the people, both in the Sea, in the Deſert, in Fields, in Houſes, in Synagogues, in Villages; And the Apoſtles alſo in all places did the ſame, the Lord mightily working with them. He declared moreover, the ſaid Mandate or Bull of the Pope to redound unto the great detriment of the Church

Church, in binding the Word of God, that it might not have his free paſſage. Alſo, the ſame to be prejudicial unto Chappels newly erected for the Word to be preached in them. Wherefore (ſaith he) from this Commandment or Mandate of Pope Alexander, I did appeal unto the ſaid Alexander being better informed and adviſed. And as I was proſecuting my Appeal, the Lord Pope (ſaith John Hus) immediately died.

The notable Judgment of God in ſtriking the Adverſaries of the Goſpel.

Then the Archbiſhop of Swinco aforeſaid, to whom this preſent Bull was directed, when he ſaw the Proceſs, Bulls and Mandates of the Biſhop of Rome to be thus contemned of John Hus and his Fellows, neither having any hope of redreſs in Winceſlaus the King, which ſeemed to neglect the matter, went out of his Country into Hungary, to complain unto Sigiſmund King of Hungary, and Brother to the ſaid Winceſlaus. But this quarrelling Archbiſhop, whether before (as the Bohemians ſay) or after (as Silvius ſaith) that he had ſpoken with Sigiſmund; immediately there (by the juſt Judgment of God) died in Hungary, as the ſtory ſaith, for ſorrow. Whereby a little more liberty and quiet was given by the Lord unto his Goſpel, newly beginning to take root among the Bohemians. Albeit, this tranquility there did not long continue without trouble and perſecution, neither could it in thoſe furious days and Reign of Antichriſt. For after this Alexander ſucceeded Pope John the 23. Who, likewiſe playing his part in this Tragedy, bent all his might and main to diſturb the Bohemians, as more hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in further proceſs of our Hiſtory, coming to the year of our Lord, 1413.

The Goſpel ſeldom times long quiet.

Pope John 23.

Thus the poor Chriſtians (as ye ſee) like to the ſilly Iſraelites under the tyranny of Pharaoh, were infeſted and oppreſſed in every place, but eſpecially here in England, and that ſo much the more here, becauſe that the King, not like to Winceſlaus, went full and whole with the Pope and his Prelates againſt the Goſpellers.

The pride and glory of the Clergy of England in thoſe days.

By reaſon whereof the Kingdom of the Pope and his Members here in this Realm began to be ſo ſtrong, that none durſt ſtir or once mute againſt them. The Biſhops having the King ſo full on their ſide, armed moreover with Laws, Statutes, Puniſhments, Sword, Fire, and Fagot, reigned and ruled as they liſted, as Kings and Princes within themſelves. So ſtrong were they of Power, that no humane Force was able to ſtand againſt them: ſo exalted in Pride, and puft up in Glory, that they thought all things to be ſubject to their reverend Majeſties. Whatſoever they ſet forth or decreed, it muſt of all men be received and obeyed.

And ſuch was their ſuperſtitious blindneſs and curious vanity, that whatſoever toy came once in their fantaſie; it was ſtraightways determined and ſtabliſhed for a Law of all men to be obſerved, were it never ſo frivolous or ſuperſtitious; as well appeareth by Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury and other, who having now a little leiſure from ſlaying and killing the innocent people, Martyrs and Confeſſors of the Lord, and having now brought their Enemies (as they thought) under feet; began to ſet up themſelves, and to invent new cuſtom, as the guiſe is of the Popes Church, ever to intrude into the Church of God ſome ceremony or cuſtom of their own making, whereby the Church of Chriſt hath been hitherto exceedingly peſtred. So likewiſe this Thomas Arundel, thinking the Church yet not ſufficiently ſtuffed with Ceremonies and vain Traditions of men, bringeth in a new-found Gaud, commonly called The tolling of Aves, in honour of our Lady, with certain Aves to be ſaid, and days of pardon to be given for the ſame. For the ratification whereof, under the pretence of the Kings requeſt, he directed his Mandate to the Biſhop of London, well ſtuffed with words of Idolatry, as by the reading thereof may appear, in form of terms as followeth.

Forty days of pardon given by T. Arundel Archbiſhop.

A Mandate of Thomas Arundel, directed to the Biſhop of London, to warn men to ſay certain Prayers at the tolling of the Aves, or ringing of Curphew.

THomas, &c. To the right reverend Brother, the Lord Robert, by the Grace of God Biſhop of London, greeting, &c. While we lift our eyes round about us, and behold attentively with circumſpect conſideration, how the moſt high Word that was in the beginning with God, choſe to him an holy and immaculate Virgin of the Kingly Stock, in whoſe womb he took true fleſh by inſpiral inſpiration, that the merciful goodneſs of the Son of God, that was uncreate, might aboliſh the ſentence of condemnation, which all the Poſterity of Mankind, that was created, had by ſin incurred: Amongſt other Labours in the Vine of the Lord of Sabbath, we ſung to God our Saviour with great joy in him, carefully thinking, that though all the people of the Chriſtian Religion did extol with voices of praiſes ſo worthy a Virgin, by whom we received the beginnings of our Redemption, by whom the holy day firſt ſhined to us, which gave us hope of Salvation; And although all the ſame people were drawn to reverence her, which being a happy Virgin, conceived the Son of God, the King of Heaven, the Redeemer and Saviour of all Nations, miniſtring light to the people that were miſerably drowned in the darkneſs of death: We truly as the Servants of her own Inheritance, and ſuch as are written of, to be of her peculiar Dower, as we are by every mans confeſſion acknowledged to be, we I ſay ought more watchfully than any others to ſhew the endeavours of our devotion in praiſing her. Who being hitherto merciful to us, yea being even Cowards, would that our power, being as it were ſpread abroad every where through all the coaſts of the World, ſhould with a victorious Arm fear all foreign Nations; That our power, being on all ſides ſo defended with the Buckler of her Protection, did ſubdue unto our victorious Standards, and made ſubject unto us, Nations both near at hand and far off.

Ringing of Curphew.

If this be not blaſphemous and derogatory to Chriſt, let the Reader judge.

These men make a Bellone of our Lady.

*Likewiſe our happy eſtate (all the time that we have paſſed ſince the beginning of our lives) may be well attributed only to the help of her Medicine; to whom alſo we may worthily aſcribe now of late in theſe our times, under the mighty Government of our moſt Chriſtian King, our deliverance from the ravening Wolves, and the mouths of cruel Beaſts, which had prepared againſt our Banquets a meſs of meat mingled full of gall, and hated us unjuſtly, ſecretly lying in wait for us, in recompence of the good will that we ſhewed to them. Wherefore, that ſhe being on high ſitting before the Throne of the heavenly Majeſty, the Defendreſs and Patroneſs of us all, being magnified with all mens praiſes, may more plentifully exhibit to us the Sons of Adoption the teats of her * Grace, in all thoſe things that we ſhall have to do; At the requeſt of the ſpecial devotion of our Lord the King himſelf, we command your Brotherhood, ſtraitly enjoyning you, that you command the Subjects of your City and Dioceſs, and of all other Suffragans, to worſhip our Lady* Mary the Mother of God, and our † Patroneſs and Protectreſs, evermore in all adverſity, with ſuch like kind of prayer and accuſtomed manner of ringing, as the devotion of Chriſts faithful people is wont to worſhip her at the ringing of Coure le feu. *And when before day in the morning ye ſhall cauſe them to ring, that with like manner of prayer and ringing ſhe be every where honoured devoutly by the aforeſaid our and your Suffragans, and their Subjects as well religious as ſecular, in your and their Monaſteries and Collegiate-Churches: That we ſo humbly calling upon the mercy of the heavenly Father, the right hand of the heavenly Piety, may mercifully come to the help, the protection and defence of the ſame our Lord the King, who for the happy remedy of quietneſs, and for our ſuccour from tempeſtuous Floods, is ready to apply his hands to work, and his eyes with all his whole deſire to watching. We therefore coveting more earneſtly to ſtir up the minds of all faithful people to ſo devout an exerciſe of God, &c. Heaping up Ceremonies in the Church.

By this frivolous and barbarous Conſtitution, with many other of like ſort heaped into the Church by the Papiſts, appeareth the proper natures and condition of this Catholick Generation. Who being themſelves not greatly exerciſed nor experienced in any ſerious cogitation of ſpiritual matter (as ſeemeth) take upon them to govern the Spiritual Church of Chriſt, whereof indeed they have no ſkill or very little. And therefore according to their unskilful handling, they lead and rule the Church after ſuch outward ſights and ceremonies, ſeemly perhaps to their own groſs affection; but not agreeing (nay rather clean contrary) to the right nature and condition of the Spiritual Houſe and Kingdom of the Lord. And like as in their inventions they ſwerve utterly from the right handling of all Spiritual Government; ſo in their manners and form of life likewiſe they do reſemble little or no part almoſt of ſuch as are and ought to be true Paſtors and Miniſters of the Myſtical Body of Chriſt.

Examples hereof are plenty and plain, in theſe Roman Prelates to be noted; who ſo well conſidering the humble ſtate and lowly ſpirit which ought to be in Paſtoral Leaders of the Church, will compare the ſame with the uſual pomp of theſe glorious Poteſtates.

The pomp of the Popes Church noted.

As for example, what can be more convenient for a true Paſtor Eccleſiaſtical, than humility of heart and ſpirit, according to the example of the Head-Biſhop himſelf? So what greater ſhew of Arrogancy and Pride could there be, than in this, whom I have oft named before, Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury? who, paſſing by the high ſtreet of London, did not only look and wait for the ringing of the Bells, for a triumph of his coming, but took great ſnuff, and did ſuſpend all ſuch Churches in London (not only with the Steeple and Bells, but alſo with the Organs) ſo many as did not receive his coming with the noiſe of Bells, according as out of his own Regiſters may appear; the word whereof annexed to his own Somner, I have hereto annexed in his own form, as followeth.

A Commiſſion directed to the Somner, to ſuſpend certain Churches of London, becauſe they rung not their Bells at the preſence of my Lord the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

THomas by the permiſſion of God, &c. To our well-beloved Thomas Wilton, our Somner ſworn, health, grace, and bleſſing. The comelineſs of our holy Church of Canterbury, over which we bear Rule, deſerveth and requireth, that while we paſs through the Province of the ſame our Church (having our Croſs carried before us) every Pariſh-Church in their turns ought and are bounden, in token of ſpecial reverence that they bear to us, to ring their Bells. Which notwithſtanding, yea on Tueſday laſt paſt, when we, betwixt eight and nine of the Clock before Dinner, paſſed openly on foot as it were through the midſt of the City of London, with our Croſs carried before us; divers Churches, whoſe names are here beneath noted, ſhewed towards us willingly (though they certainly knew of our coming) unreverence rather than reverence, and the duty that they owe to our Church of Canterbury, *ringing not at all at our coming. Wherefore we being willing to revenge this injury, * for the honour of our Spouſe, as we are bounden, command you, that by our authority you put all thoſe Churches under our Inditement, ſuſpending Gods holy Organs and Inſtruments in the ſame. Which we alſo ſuſpend by the tenour of theſe preſents, till the Miniſters of the aforeſaid Churches be able hereafter to attain of us the benefit of more plentiful Grace.* Given, &c.

Churches of London ſuſpended for not ringing at the coming of the Archbiſhop.

* Oh injurious enemies to Chriſt his humility.

What great reaſon was in this, why this Archbiſhop either ſhould thus look for the ringing of the Bells, or why he ſhould be thus diſpleaſed with not ringing, I do not ſee. Be-like his mind in the mean time was greatly occupied with ſome great muſe, as feeling of Gods fear, with repentance and remembrance of his ſins, with zealous care and ſolicitude for his Flock, with the earneſt meditation of the Paſſion and Life of our Saviour, who in this World was ſo deſpiſed: or elſe was ſet upon ſome grave ſtudy, while he ſo waited for the ringing of the Bells, which were wont to be ſo noiſome to all Students. And why were not the Trumpeters alſo ſhent as well, becauſe they did not ſound before his Perſon? But though the Bells did not clatter in the Steeples, and therefore his Thunderbolt ſhould have fallen upon the Steeples which had deſerved; why ſhould the body of the Church therefore be ſuſpended? At leaſt, the poor Organs (me thinketh) had ſome part of wrong to be put to ſilence in the Quire, becauſe the Bells rang not in the Tower.

{ KING } Hen. 4.

Organs ſuſpended in the Church, becauſe the Bells did not ring.

Of the like matter alſo we read in the ſaid Regiſters, falling between the Biſhop of Worceſter, and the Priory of the ſame Town, for not ringing at the Biſhops coming into the Church. Whereupon much ſuit and contention was between them, till at length the Archbiſhop of Canterbury took up the matter, moderating it, as in the ſaid Regiſters, fol. 441. appeareth to be ſeen as followeth:

Ex Regiſtro Tho. Arundeli.

Variance between the Biſhop and Prior of Worceſter for not ringing at the Biſhops coming.

UNiverſis, &c. Thomas, &c. Whereas there happened variance lately between our reverend Brother the Lord Biſhop of Worceſter on the one party, and the religious and diſcreet men the Prior and Covent of the ſame Church on the other party, for not ringing of Bells at the coming of our ſaid Brother to his foreſaid Church, at length the parties (conſidering the great inconvenience that might come thereof) at our inſtance and requeſt did agree on this manner, that as often as it ſhall happen our reverend Brother to go to his aforeſaid Church, either to celebrate Orders, or to viſit his Church in the Head or in the Inferiors, or to make Cream and Oil in the ſame Church; Alſo in the Feaſt of the Aſſumption of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, which is the chiefeſt Feaſt in the Abbey aforeſaid; then the Prior and the Covent, and their Succeſſors for the time being, ſhall ring ſolemnly againſt his coming, or ſhall cauſe to be rung ſolemnly without all contradiction, or any reclaiming hereafter to be made againſt the ſame. Which agreement that it may be more firmely kept, we let you all underſtand by theſe preſents, ſealed with our Seal. Given at our Palace of Canterbury, July 12. the tenth year of our Government.

The like ſtir for Bell-ringing and for Proceſſions, had almoſt happened between the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Succeſſor to this Thomas Arundel, named Henry Chichley on the one party, and the Abbey of S. Albans on the other party, had not the Abbot, in time ſubmitting himſelf to the Archbiſhop, ſo provided, that the ringing of their Bells at his coming might not redound to any derogation of their Liberties. Whereunto the Archbiſhop granted by theſe his Letters as followeth:

Wherefore we, deſiring to keep you from damage, let you underſtand by theſe preſents, that it is not our intent to derogate your exemptions or priviledge whatſoever herein;*

To expreſs moreover and deſcribe the glorious pomp of theſe Prince-like Prelates in theſe blind days of Popiſh Religion reigning then in the Church, I thought to adjoyn hereunto another example not much unlike, neither differing much in time, concerning certain poor men cited up, and injoyned ſtrait penance by William Courtney Predeceſſor of the ſaid Thomas Arundel, for bringing litter to his Horſe, not in Wains as they ſhould do, but in privy ſacks, in a ſecret manner under their Clokes or Coats. For the which ſo hainous and horrible Treſpaſs, the ſaid Archbiſhop ſitting in his Tribunal-Seat, did call and cite before him the ſaid perſons (pro litera, i. e. for litter, after his own Latin) and after their ſubmiſſion injoyned them penance. Which penance what it was, and what were the names of the foreſaid Parties, here followeth out of the ſaid Archbiſhops Regiſters, both by his own words, and by picture of the perſons in the ſame Regiſters annexed and painted, in all reſemblance, as there ſtandeth, and here is alſo to be ſeen.

Mark ye Grammarians, this verb, for litter.

In Engliſh.

IGnorance the mother of Error, ſo much hath blinded and deceived certain perſons, to wit, Hugh Pennie, John Forſtall, John Boy, John Wanderton, William Hayward, and John White, Tenants of the Lord of Wengham, that againſt the coming of the foreſaid Archbiſhop to his Palace of Canterbury on Palmes-Sunday even, the year of our Lord, 1390. where they being warned by the Bayliff, to convey and carry Hay, Straw, and other litter to the aforeſaid Palace, as they were bound by the tenour of their Lands, which they hold of the See of Canterbury; refuſing and diſdaining to do their ſervice, as they were accuſtomed, brought their ſtraw and other litter, not in Carts and Wains openly and ſufficiently, but by piece-meal, and cloſely in bags or ſacks, in contempt of their Lord, and derogation of the Right and Title of the See of Canterbury. Whereupon they being aſcited and preſented before the Archbiſhop, ſitting in Judgment at his Manor of Statewood, yielded and ſubmitted themſelves to his Lordſhips pleaſure, humbly craving pardon of their Treſpaſs. Then the aforeſaid Archbiſhop abſolved the above named Hugh Pennie, &c. they ſwearing to obey the Laws and Ordinances of holy Church, and to do the puniſhment that ſhould be appointed them for their deſerts; that is, that they going leiſurely before the proceſſion, every one of them ſhould carry openly on his ſhoulder his bag ſtuffed with hay and ſtraw; ſo that the ſaid hay and ſtraw ſhould appear hanging out, the mouthes of the Sacks being open.

Ex Regiſt. W. Courtney Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Penance injoyned for bringing ſtraw to my Lords horſe.

Excommunication and abſolution abuſed.

Notes of certain Parliament matters paſſed in this Kings days.

Notes of this Kings Parliament.

TO proceed now further in the Reign of this King, and to intreat alſo ſomething of his Parliaments as we have done of other before. Firſt, we will begin with the Parliament holden in the firſt year of his coming in.

Moreover, forſomuch as our Catholick Papiſts will not believe yet the contrary, but that the Juriſdiction of their Father the Pope hath ever extended throughout all the World, as well here in England, as in other places; Here therefore ſpeaking of the Parliaments holden in this Kings days concerning this matter, I refer them to the Parliament of the ſaid King Henry in his firſt year holden, and to the 27*th* Article of the ſame. Where they may read in the tenth Objection laid againſt King Richard in plain words, how that, foraſmuch as the Crown of this Realm of England, and the Juriſdiction belonging to the ſame; as alſo the whole Realm it ſelf, at all times lately paſt, hath been at ſuch liberty, and injoyed ſuch Prerogative, that neither the Pope, nor any other out of the ſame Kingdom, ought to intrude himſelf nor intermeddle therein; it was therefore objected unto the forenamed King Richard the Second, for procuring the Letters Apoſtolical from the Pope, to the confirming and corroborating of certain Statutes of his, and that his Cenſures might be proſecuted againſt the Breakers thereof. Which ſeemed then to the Parliament to tend againſt the Crown and Regal Dignity, as alſo againſt the Statutes and Liberties of this the ſaid our Realm of England, Act. Parl. An. 1. Reg. Hen. 4. Act. 27.

The Popes Juriſdiction excluded out of this Realm.

Ex an. 1. Reg. Henrici, Act. 27.

Furthermore, in the ſecond year of the ſaid King, this was in the Parliament required, that all ſuch Perſons as ſhall be arreſted by force of the Statute made againſt the Lollards, in the ſecond year of Henry the Fourth, may be bailed, and freely make their purgation; that they be arreſted by none other than by the Sheriffs, or ſuch like Officers, neither that any havock be made of their goods. The King granted to their advice therein.

An. 8. Reg. Henr. 4. Act. 116.

In the eighth year moreover of this Kings Reign, it was likewiſe propounded in the Parliament, that all ſuch perſons as ſhall procure, or ſue in the Court of Rome any Proceſs touching any Benefice, Collation, or Preſentation of the ſame, ſhall incur the pain of the Statute of Proviſors, made in the thirteenth year of Richard the Second, whereunto the King granted, that the Statutes heretofore provided ſhould be obſerved.

An. 8. R. Hen. 4. Act. 114.

Item, in the ſaid Parliament, there it was put up by Petition, that the King might enjoy half the profits of every Parſons Benefice who is not reſident thereon. Thereunto the King anſwered, That the Ordinaries ſhould do their duties therein, or elſe he would provide further remedy to ſtay their Pluralities.

Ibid. Act. 37.

Item, in the ſaid Parliament it was required; that none do ſue to the Court of Rome for any Benefice, but only to the Kings Courts.

¶ In the next year following, which was the ninth of this King, another Petition of the Commons was put in Parliament againſt the Court of Rome, which I thought good here to expreſs, as followeth:

Ex Rotulo Parliamenti, an. 9. Hen. 4.

The Commons do beſeech, that foraſmuch as divers Proviſors of the Benefices of holy Church, dwelling in the Court of Rome, through their ſingular covetouſneſs now newly imagined to deſtroy thoſe that have been long time Incumbents in divers their Benefices of holy Church peaceably, ſome of them by the Title of the King, ſome by Title ordinary, and by the Title of other true Patrons thereof, by colour of Proviſions, Relations, and other Grants made to the ſame Proviſors by the Apoſtoil of the ſaid Benefices, do purſue Proceſſes in the ſaid Court by Citations made beyond the Sea, without any Citations made within the Realm in deed againſt the ſame Incumbents, whereby many of the ſaid Incumbents, through ſuch privy and crafty Proceſſes and Sentences of privation and inhabilitation, have loſt their Benefices, and others put in the places of the ſaid Incumbents, before the publication of the ſame ſentences, they not knowing any thing; and many are in great hazard to loſe their Benefices through ſuch Proceſſes, to their perpetual deſtruction and miſchief; And foraſmuch as this miſchief cannot be holpen without any eſpecial remedy be had by Parliament: Pleaſeth it the King to conſider the great miſchief and danger that may ſo come unto divers his Subjects without their knowledge, through ſuch Citations out of the Realm, and thereupon to ordain by the advice of the Lords of this preſent Parliament, that none preſented be received by any Ordinary unto any Benefice of any ſuch Incumbent for any cauſe of privation or inhabilitation, whereof the Proceſs is not founded upon Citation made within the Realm, and alſo that ſuch Incumbents may remain in all their Benefices, until it be proved by due Inqueſt in the Court of the King, that the Citations whereupon ſuch privations and inhabilitations are granted, were made within the Realm: and that if ſuch Ordinaries, or ſuch preſented, or others, do purſue the contrary, that then they and their Procurators, Fautors, and Counſellors, do incur the pains contained in the Statute made againſt Proviſors in the thirteenth year of the Reign of the late Richard King of England the Second, by Proceſs to be made, as is declared in the Statute made againſt ſuch Proviſors in the 27*th year of the Reign of King* Edward, Predeceſſor to our Lord the King that now is, any Royal Licences or Grants in any manner to the contrary notwithſtanding; and that all other Statutes made againſt Proviſors, and not repealed before this preſent Parliament, be in their full force, and be firmly kept in all points.

The wickedneſs of Popes Proviſors inciting and depriving benefited men in England, their citation being not known in the Realm.

That the Kings Council have Power by Authority of Parliament, in caſe that any man find himſelf grieved in particular, that he may purſue: and that the ſaid Council by the advice of the Juſtices, do right unto the Parties. This to indure until the next Parliament, reſerving always unto the King his Prerogative and Liberty.

KING Hen. 4.

Item, that no Popes Collector thenceforth ſhould levy any money within the Realm for Firſt-fruits of any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, under pain of incurring the Statute of Proviſions.

An. 9. Regis Hen. 4. Act. 42.

Beſides in the ſaid Parliament holden the eleventh year of this King, is to be noted how the Commons of the land put up a Bill unto the King, to take the Temporal Lands out from Spiritual mens hands or poſſeſſion. The effect of which Bill was, that the Temporalties diſordinately waſted by men of the Church, might ſuffice to find to the King 15 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6200 Eſquires, and a 100 houſes of Almoſe, to the relief of the poor people, more than at thoſe days within England. And over all theſe foreſaid charges, the King might put yearly in his Coffers 20000 pound.

Ex Chron. D. Albani. Fabiane, &c. Vitis.

Provided, that every Earl ſhould have of yearly rent three thouſand mark; and every Knight a hundred mark and four plough-lands; every Eſquire forty mark by year, with two plough-lands; and every houſe of Almoſe a hundred mark, with overſight of two true Seculars unto every houſe, and alſo with proviſion, that every Townſhip ſhould keep all poor people of their own dwellers, which might not labour for their living; with condition that if more fell in a Town than the Town might maintain, then the ſaid Almoſe-houſes to relieve ſuch Townſhips.

A computation of Church-goods, to how much they do amount.

And to bear theſe Charges, they alledged by their ſaid Bill, That the Temporalties, being in poſſeſſion of Spiritual men, amounted to 3 C. and 22 M. mark by year. Where of they affirmed to be in the See of Canterbury, with the Abbies of Chriſts Church, of S. Auguſtines, Shrewsbury, Coggeſhale, and S. Oſus, 20 M. mark by year. In the See of York and Abbies there 20 M. mark. In the See of Wincheſter and Abbies there 20 M. mark. In the See of London, with Abbies and other Houſes there 20 M. mark. In the See of Lincoln, with the Abbies of Peterborough, Ramſey, and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Norwich, with the Abbies of Bury, and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Ely, Spalding and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Bathe, with the Abbey of Okinborne and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Worceſter, with the Abbies of Exſham, Abingdon, and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Cheſter, with the Precinct of the ſame, with the Sees of S. David, of Saliſbury, and Exeter, with their precincts, 20 M. mark, The Abbies of Ravens or Revans, of Fountains, of Gernons, and divers other, to the number of five more, 20 M. mark. The Abbies of Leiceſter, Walthan, Gosborne, Merton, Ticeter, Oſney, and other, unto the number of ſix more, 20 M. mark. The Abbies of Dovers, Batil, Lewis, Coventry, Daventre, and Tourney, KING Hen. 5. 30 M. mark. The Abbies of Northampton, Thorton, Briſtow, Killingworth, Winchcomb, Hailes, Parchiſſor, Frideſwide, Notly, and Grimoisby, 20 M. mark.

The which foreſaid Sums amount to the full of 3 C. M. mark. And for the odd of 22 M. mark, they appointed Hartford, Rocheſter, Huntingdon, Swinſhed, Crowland, Malmesbury, Burton, Tewkesbury, Dunſtable, Whirborn, Taunton, and Biland.

And over this, they alledged by the ſaid Bill, that over and above the ſaid ſum of 3 C. and 22 M. mark, divers Houſes of Religion in England poſſeſſed as many Temporalties as might ſuffice to find yearly 15 M. Prieſts and Clerks, every Prieſt to be allowed for his ſtipend 7 mark by the year.

To the which Bill no anſwer was made, but that the King of this matter would take deliberation and adviſement, and with that anſwer ended, ſo that no further labour was made.

Anno 1413. Theſe things thus hitherto diſcourſed, touching ſuch acts and matters as have been incident in the life time of this King, followeth next the thirteenth year of his Reign. In the which year the ſaid King Henry the Fourth after he had ſent a little before a certain company of Captains and Souldiers to aid the Duke of Burgundy in France (among whom was the Lord Cobham) keeping his Chriſtmas at Eltham, fell grievouſly ſick. From thence he was conveyed to London, where he began to call a Parliament, but tarried not the end. In the mean time, the infirmity of the King more and more increaſing, he was taken and brought into a Bed in a fair Chamber at Weſtminſter. And as he lay in his bed, he asked how they called the ſame Chamber; and they anſwered and ſaid, Jeruſalem. And then he ſaid it was his Prophetie, That he ſhould make his end in Jeruſalem. And ſo diſpoſing himſelf toward his end in the foreſaid Chamber, he died; upon what ſickneſs, whether of Leproſie, or of ſome other ſharp Diſeaſe, I have not to affirm. Ex vetuſt. Chron. Anglico, cujus initium: That all men called. The like Propheſie we read of Pope Silveſter the Second, to whom being inquiſitive for the time and place where he ſhould die, it was anſwered, That he ſhould die in Jeruſalem. Who then ſaying Maſs in a Chappel (called likewiſe Jeruſalem) perceived his end there to be near, and died. And thus King Henry the Fourth, Succeſſor to the lawful King Richard the Second, finiſhed his life at Weſtminſter, and was buried at Canterbury by the Tomb of Thomas Becket, &c. Anno 1413.

The King had a Propheſie, that he ſhould die in Jeruſalem. Propheſies deceivable.

Ex vetuſt. Chron. Anglico, cujus initium eſt. That all men called The Propheſie of Pope Silveſter the Second.

King Henry the Fifth.

King Henry the Fifth. AFter this Henry the Fourth reigned Henry the Fifth his Son, which was born at Monmouth in Wales, of whoſe other Vertues, and great Victories gotten in France, I have not greatly to intermeddle; eſpecially ſeeing the memory of his worthy Proweſs, being ſufficiently deſcribed in other Writers in this our time, may both content the Reader, and unburden my labour herein; eſpecially ſeeing theſe later Troubles and Perturbations of the Church offer me ſo much, that unneth any vacant leiſure ſhall be left to intermeddle with matters prophane.

Great tempeſt at the Coronation of the new King. After the Coronation then of this new King; which was the ninth day of April, called then Paſſion-Sunday, which was an exceeding ſtormy-day, and ſo tempeſtuous, that many did wonder at the portent thereof: not long after the ſame, a Parliament began to be called, and to be holden after the Feaſt of Eaſter, at Weſtminſter, Anno 1413. At which time Thomas Arundel the Archbiſhop of Canterbury collected in Pauls Church at London an univerſal Synod of all the Biſhops and Clergy of England. In that Synod, among other weighty matters and ponderous, it was determined; that the day of Saint George, and alſo of Saint Dunſtan, ſhould be double Feaſt, called Duplex Feſtum, in holy Kitchin, in holy Church I would ſay.

A Synod called at London: S. George and S. Dunſtans-day made double Feaſt.

And becauſe the order and manner of thoſe Pope-holy Feaſts either yet is not ſufficiently known to ſome rude and groſs capacities, or may peradventure grow out of uſe, and be ſtrange and unknown to our Poſterity hereafter; therefore to give a little memorandum thereof (by the way for erudition of times hereafter to come) touching this myſtical Science of the Popes deep and ſecret Divinity; here is to be noted, that the Feaſts of the holy Mother Catholick-Church be divided into ſundry members. Like as a plentiful Root in a fruitful Field riſeth up and burgeneth into manifold Arms, and the Arms again do multiply into divers and ſundry Branches, out of the which moreover, although no Fruit do come, yet both Leaves and Flowers do bud and bloſſom in moſt copious wiſe, right beautiful to behold; Even ſo this Feſtum, containing a large matter of great variety of Days and Feaſts, groweth in it ſelf and multiplieth, being thus divided; Firſt, into Feſtum duplex, and into Feſtum ſimplex; that is, into Feaſt-double, and to Feaſt-ſimple. Again, this Feſtum duplex brancheth four-fold-wiſe, to wit, into Feſtum principale duplex, into Majus duplex, into Minus duplex, and Inferius duplex; that is, in principal double, in greater double, in leſſer double, and inferiour or lower double. Unto theſe ſeveral ſorts of Feaſts what days were peculiarly aſſigned, it were too long to recite. For this preſent purpoſe it ſhall ſuffice to underſtand, that as unto the principal double Feaſt only belongeth eight days in the year; ſo the Majus duplex Feſtum had given unto him by this Convocation the day of Saint George and of Saint Dunſtan, as is afore remembred; albeit by conſtitution it was ſo decreed, yet by cuſtom it was not ſo uſed. Item, it is to be noted, that theſe two Feaſts, to wit, Principale duplex, and Majus duplex, did differ and were known from all other by four Notes; by ſervice in the Kitchin, and by ſervice in the Church, which were both double, by ringing in the Steeple, which was with a double peal; by Copes in the Quire, and by thurifying or cenſing the Altars: For in theſe two principal and greater double Feaſts, the ſeventh, eighth, and ninth leſſon muſt be read with ſilken Copes. Alſo at the ſaid Feaſts, in the time of the Leſſons, the Altars in the Church muſt be thurified; that is, ſmoked with Incenſe, &c. And likewiſe the Minus duplex, and Inferius duplex had alſo their peculiar ſervice to them belonging.

The Feaſt of the Popes Church deſcribed and divided.

Feſtum duplex Principale duplex, Majus duplex, Minus duplex, Inferius duplex. Conſtitution againſt Counell. Ex tab. Feſtorum.

Secondly, The Simplex Feſtum, which is the ſecond Arm ſpringing of this diviſion, is thus divided: Either having a triple invitory, or a double, or elſe a ſingle invitory. Of the which moreover, ſome have three Leſſons, ſome have nine, &c.

Simplex Feſtum in the Popes Church.

And thus much by occaſion for Popiſh Feaſts; not that I do ſo much deride them, as I lament, that ſo much and manifeſt Idolatry in them is committed, to the great diſhonour of our Lord God, which is only to be honoured.

The Trouble and Perſecution of the Lord Cobham.

BUt to let this by-matter paſs, again to return to the foreſaid univerſal Synod aſſembled by Thomas Arundel at S. Pauls Church in London, as is before remembred: the chief and principal cauſe of the aſſembling thereof (as reporteth the Chronicle of Saint Albans) was to repreſs the growing and ſpreading of the Goſpel, and eſpecially to withſtand the noble and worthy Lord Cobham, who was then noted to be a principal Favourer, Receiver, and Maintainer of them, whom the Biſhop miſnamed to be Lollards, eſpecially in the Dioceſſes of London, Rocheſter and Hereford, ſetting them up to preach whom the Biſhops had not licenſed, and ſending them about to preach, which was againſt the Conſtitution Provincial, before remembred, holding alſo and teaching Opinions of the Sacraments, of Images, of Pilgrimage, of the Keys and Church of Rome, contrary and repugnant to the received determination of the Romiſh Church, &c.

The trouble of the Lord Cobham. Ex Chron. Mon. Albam.

In the mean time as theſe were in talk amongſt them concerning the good Lord Cobham; reſorted unto them the twelve Inquiſitors of Hereſies (whom they had appointed at Oxford the year afore, to ſearch out Hereticks, with all Wickliffs Books) who brought 246 Concluſions, which they had collected as Hereſies out of the ſaid Books. The Names of the ſaid Inquiſitors were theſe:

Walden in faſciculo zizaniorum Wicklavi.

1. John Whitnam, a Maſter in the new Colledge.
2. John Langedon, Monk of Chriſts Church in Canterbury.
3. William Ufford, Regent of the Carmelites.
4. Thomas Claxton, Regent of the Dominicks.
5. Robert Gilbert.
6. Richard Earthiſdale.
7. John Lucke.
8. Richard Sneditham.
9. Richard Fleming.
10. Thomas Rotorborne.
11. Robert Ronbery.
12. Richard Craſdale.

Theſe things thus done, and the Articles being brought in, further they proceeded in their Communication, concluding among themſelves, that it was not poſſible for them to make whole Chriſts Coat without ſeam (meaning thereby their patched Popiſh Synagogue) unleſs certain great men were brought out of the way, which ſeemed to be the chief Maintainers of the ſaid Diſciples of Wickliff. Among whom this noble Knight Sir John Oldcaſtle, the Lord Cobham, was complained of by the general Proctors to be the chief Principal. Him they accuſed, firſt, for a mighty Maintainer of ſuſpected Preachers in the Dioceſs of London, Rocheſter, and Hereford, contrary to the minds of the Ordinaries. Not only they affirmed him to have ſent thither the ſaid Preachers, but alſo to have aſſiſted them there by force of Arms, notwithſtanding their ſynodal Conſtitution made afore to the contrary. Laſt of all, they accuſed him that he was far otherwiſe in belief of the Sacrament of the Altar, of Penance, of Pilgrimage, of Image-worſhipping, and of the Eccleſiaſtical Power, than the holy Church of Rome had taught many years before.

The Lord Cobham accuſed for his Chriſtian belief.

In the end it was concluded among them, that without any further delay, Proceſs ſhould be awarded out againſt him, as againſt a moſt pernitious Heretick.

Proceſs againſt him.

Some of that Fellowſhip which were of more crafty experience than the other, thought it not beſt to have the matter ſo raſhly handled, but by ſome preparation made thereunto before, conſidering the ſaid Lord Cobham was a man of great birth, and in favour at that time with the King, their counſel was to know firſt the Kings mind to ſave all things upright. This counſel was well accepted, and thereupon the Archbiſhop Thomas Arundel, with his other Biſhops, and a great part of the Clergy, went ſtraitways unto the King then remaining at Kenings-ton, and there laid forth moſt grievous Complaints againſt the ſaid Lord Cobham, to his great infamy and blemiſh, being a man right godly. The King gently heard thoſe blood-thirſty Prelates, and far otherwiſe than became his Princely Dignity: notwithſtanding requiring, and inſtantly deſiring them, that in reſpect of his noble Stock and knighthood, they ſhould yet favourably deal with him. And that they would, if it were poſſible, without all rigor or extreme handling reduce him again to the Churches unity. He promiſed them alſo, that in caſe they were committed to take ſome deliberation, his ſelf would ſeriouſly commune the matter with him.

Anon after, the King ſent for the ſaid Lord Cobham. And as he was come, he called him ſecretly, admoniſhing him betwixt him and him, to ſubmit himſelf to his Mother the holy Church, and as an obedient Child to acknowledge himſelf culpable. Unto whom the Chriſtian Knight made this anſwer: You moſt worthy Prince, ſaith he, I am always prompt and willing to obey, forſomuch as I know you a Chriſtian King, and the appointed Miniſter of God, bearing the Sword to the puniſhment of evil Doers, and for ſafeguard of them that be vertuous. Unto you (next my eternal God) owe I my whole Obedience, and ſubmit thereunto (as I have done ever) all that I have, either of Fortune or Nature, ready at all times to fulfil whatſoever ye ſhall in the Lord command me. But as touching the Pope and his Spirituality, I owe them neither ſuit nor ſervice, forſomuch as I know him by the Scriptures to be the great Antichriſt, the Son of Perdition, the open Adverſary of God, and the Abomination ſtanding in the holy place. When the King had heard this, with ſuch like ſentences more, he would talk no longer with him, but left him ſo utterly.

The Kings admoniſhment to the Lord Cobham.

A moſt Chriſtian obedience.

The Lord Cobham Forſaken of the King.

And as the Archbiſhop reſorted again unto him for an anſwer, he gave him his full authority to cite him, examine him, and puniſh him according to their deviliſh Decree, which they called the Laws of holy Church. Then the ſaid Archbiſhop, by the counſel of his other Biſhops and Clergy, appointed to call before him Sir John Oldcaſtle, the Lord Cobham, and to cauſe him perſonally to appear, to anſwer to ſuch ſuſpect Articles as they ſhould lay againſt him. So he ſent forth his chief Summoner, with a very ſharp citation into the Caſtle of Cowling, where as he at that time dwelt for his ſolace. And as the ſaid Summoner was come thither, he durſt in no caſe enter the Gates of ſo Noble a man without his licence, and therefore he returned home again, his Meſſage not done.

1 KING 1 Hen. 5.

Lord Cobham ſummoned by the Archbiſhop.

Then called the Archbiſhop one John Butler unto him, which was then the Doorkeeper of the Kings Privy-Chamber; and with him he covenanted, through promiſes and rewards, to have this matter craftily brought to paſs under the Kings Name. Whereupon the ſaid John Butler took the Archbiſhops Summoner with him, and went unto the ſaid Lord Cobham, ſhewing him, that it was the Kings pleaſure, that he ſhould obey that citation, and ſo cited him fradulently. Then ſaid he to them in few words, That he in no caſe would conſent to thoſe moſt deviliſh practices of the Prieſts. As they had informed the Archbiſhop of that anſwer, and that it was for no man privately to cite him after that, without peril of life, he decreed by and by to have him cited by publick Proceſs or open Commandment. And in all the haſte poſſible, upon the Wedneſday before the Nativity of our Lady, in September, he commanded Letters citatory to be ſet upon the great Gates of the Cathedral-Church of Rocheſter (which was but three Engliſh miles from thence) charging him to appear perſonally before him at Ledis the eleventh day of the ſame month and year, all excuſes to the contrary ſet apart. Thoſe Letters were taken down anon after by ſuch as bare favour unto the Lord Cobham, and ſo conveyed aſide. After that cauſed the Archbiſhop new Letters to be ſet up on the Nativity-day of our Lady, which alſo were rent down, and utterly conſumed.

John Butler playeth the part.

Citations ſet up againſt the Lord Cobham.

The citations taken down.

Then foraſmuch as he did not appear at the day appointed at Ledis (where he ſate in Conſiſtory, as cruel as ever was Caiphas, with his Court of Hypocrites about him) he judged him, denounced him, and condemned him of moſt deep contumacy. After that, when he had been falſly informed by his hired Spies, and other gloſing Glaverers, that the ſaid Lord Cobham had laughed at him to ſcorn, diſdained all his doings, maintained his old Opinions, contemned the Churches Power, the Dignity of a Biſhop, and the Order of Prieſthood (for all theſe was he then accuſed of) in his moody madneſs without juſt proof did he openly Excommunicate him. Yet was not with all this his fierce tyranny ſatisfied, but he commanded him to be cited afreſh, to appear before him the Saturday before the Feaſt of S. Matthew the Apoſtle, with theſe cruel Threatnings added thereunto, that if he did not obey at the day, he would more extremely handle him. And to make himſelf more ſtrong towards the performance thereof he compelled the Lay-power, by moſt terrible menacings of Curſes and Interdictions, to aſſiſt him againſt that ſeditious Apoſtata, Schiſmatick, and Heretick, the Troubler of the publick Peace, that Enemy of the Realm, and great Adverſary of all holy Church; for all theſe hateful Names did he give him.

Lord Cobham again cited.

This moſt conſtant Servant of the Lord, and worthy Knight Sir John Oldcaſtle, the Lord Cobham, beholding the unpeaceable fury of Antichriſt thus kindled againſt him, perceiving himſelf alſo compaſſed on every ſide with deadly dangers; he took paper and pen in hand, and ſo wrote a Chriſtian confeſſion or reckoning of his Faith (which followeth hereafter) both ſigning and ſealing it with his own hand. Wherein he alſo anſwered to the four chiefeſt Articles that the Archbiſhop laid againſt him. That done, he took the Copy with him, and went therewith to the King, truſting to find mercy and favour at his hand. None other was that confeſſion of his, than the common belief or ſum of the Churches Faith, called The Apoſtles Creed, of all Chriſtian men then uſed, with a brief Declaration upon the ſame, as here enſueth.

The Chriſtian Belief of the Lord Cobham.

The common Creed of Chriſtians.

I Believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth: And in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son our Lord, which was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, born of the Virgin Mary, ſuffered under Pontius Pilate, Crucified, Dead and Buried, went down to Hell, the third day roſe again from Death, Aſcended up to Heaven, ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty; and from thence ſhall come again to judge the Quick and the Dead. I believe in the Holy Ghoſt, the univerſal Holy Church, the Communion of Saints, the forgivneſs of Sins, the upriſing the fleſh, and Everlaſting Life, Amen.

A Declaration of his belief.

And for a more large Declaration (ſaith he) of this my Faith in the Catholick Church, I ſteadfaſtly believe, That there is but one God Almighty; in and of whoſe Godhead are thoſe three perſons, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, and that thoſe three perſons are the ſelf ſame God Almighty. I believe alſo, That the ſecond perſon in this moſt bleſſed Trinity, in moſt convenient time appointed thereunto before, took fleſh and blood of the moſt bleſſed Virgin Mary, for the ſafeguard and redemption of the univerſal kind of Man, which was before loſt in Adams offence.

Joh. 5. Gal. 4. John 1. Luke 2.

Chriſt, is the only head of his Church.

Moreover I believe, That the ſame Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, thus being both God and Man, is the only head of the whole Chriſtian Church, and that all thoſe that have been or ſhall be ſaved, be members of this moſt Holy Church. And this Holy Church I think to be divided into three ſorts of companies.

The Church divided into three parts.

Whereof the firſt ſort be now in Heaven, and they are the Saints from hence departed. Theſe as they were here converſant, conformed always their lives to the moſt holy Laws and pure examples of Chriſt, renouncing Satan, the World, and the fleſh with all their concupiſcence and evils.

Contrary wrote he, ad Parliamentum Ex Waldeno.

The ſecond ſort are in Purgatory (if any ſuch place be in the Scriptures) abiding the mercy of God, and a full deliverance of pain.

The third ſort are here upon the Earth, and be called the Church Militant. For day and night they contend againſt crafty aſſaults of the Devil, the flattering proſperities of this world, and the rebellious filthineſs of the fleſh.

The Church militant divided in three.

This later Congregation by the juſt Ordinance of God is alſo ſevered into three divers eſtates, that is to ſay, into Prieſthood, Knighthood, and the Commons. Among whom the will of God is, That the one ſhould aid the other, but not deſtroy the other. The Prieſts firſt of all, ſecluded from all worldlineſs, ſhould conform their lives utterly to the examples of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Evermore ſhould they be occupied in preaching and teaching the Scriptures purely, and in giving wholeſome examples of good living to the other two degrees of men. More modeſt alſo, more loving, gentle, and lowly in ſpirit ſhould they be, than any other ſorts of people.

What the Prieſts ſhould do.

Knighthood what it ſhould do.

In the Knighthood are all they which bear ſword by Law of Office; Theſe ſhould defend Gods Laws, and ſee that the Goſpel were purely taught, conforming their lives to the ſame, and ſecluding all falſe Preachers; yea thoſe ought rather to hazard their lives, than to ſuffer ſuch wicked Decrees as either bleminſh the Eternal Teſtament of God, or yet let the free paſſage thereof, whereby Hereſies and Schiſms might ſpring in the Church. For of none other ariſe they, as I ſuppoſe, than of erroneous conſtitutions, craftily firſt creeping in under hypocritical lies, for advantage. They ought alſo to preſerve Gods people from oppreſſors, tyrants and thieves, and to ſee the Clergy ſupported ſo long as they teach purely, pray rightly, and miniſter the Sacraments freely. And if they ſee them do otherwiſe, they are bound by the Law or Office to compel them to change their doings; and to ſee all things performed according to Gods preſcript ordinance.

Mark here a moſt chriſtian heart.

What the common people ought to do.

The later fellowſhip of this Church, are the common people; whoſe duty is to bear their good minds and true obedience to the foreſaid miniſters of God, their Kings, Civil Governours and Prieſts. The right Office of theſe, as juſtly to occupy every Man his faculty, be it Merchandiſe, Handicraft, o the Tithe of the ground. And ſo one of them to be as an helper to another, following always in their ſorts the juſt Commandments of the Lord God.

Belief of the Lord Cobham concerning the Sacraments.

Over and beſides all this, I moſt faithfully believe, That the Sacraments of Chriſts Church are neceſſary to all Chriſtian believers; this always ſeen to, that they be truly miniſtred according to Chriſts firſt Inſtitution and Ordinance. And foraſmuch as I am malicioufly and moſt falſly accuſed of a miſ-belief in the Sacrament of the Altar, to the hurtful ſlander of many; I ſignifie here unto all Men, that this is my faith concerning that. I believe in that Sacrament to be contained Chriſts very body and blood under the ſimilitude of bread and wine, yea the ſame body that was conceived of the Holy Ghoſt, born of the Virgin Mary, done on the Croſs, died and was buried, aroſe the third day from the death; and is now glorified in Heaven. I alſo believe the univerſal Law of God to be moſt true and perfect, and they which do not ſo follow it in their faith and works (at one time or another) can never be ſaved. Whereas he that ſeeketh it in faith, accepteth it, learneth it, delighteth therein, and performeth it in love, ſhall taſte for it the felicity of everlaſting innocency.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

Gods Law to be preferred before mans Law.

Finally, this is my faith alſo, that God will ask no more of a Chriſtian believer in this life, but only to obey the precepts of that moſt bleſſed Law. If any Prelates of Church require more, or elſe any other kind of obedience, than this to be uſed; he contemneth Chriſt, exalting himſelf above God, and ſo becometh an open Antichriſt. All the premiſſes I believe particularly, and generally all that God hath left in his Holy Scripture, that I ſhould believe; inſtantly deſiring you my Liege Lord and moſt worthy King, that this confeſſion of mine may be juſtly examined by the moſt godly wiſe, and learned Men of your Realm. And if it be found in all points agreeing to the verity, then let it be ſo allowed; and I thereupon holden for none other than a true Chriſtian. If it be proved otherwiſe, then let it be utterly condemned; provided always, that I be taught a better belief by the word of God; and I ſhall moſt reverently at all times obey thereunto.

A Chriſtian deſire of the Lord Cobham.

This requeſt was lawful.

Obedience unto his King.

This brief confeſſion of his Faith the Lord Cobham wrote (as is mentioned before) and ſo took it with him to the Court, offering it with all meekneſs unto the King to read it over. The King would in no caſe receive it, but commanded it to be delivered unto them that ſhould be his Judges. Then deſired he in the Kings preſence, that an hundred Knights and Eſquires might be ſuffered to come in upon his purgation, which he knew would clear him of all Hereſies. Moreover he offered himſelf after the Law of Arms, to fight for life or death with any Man living, Chriſtian or Heathen, in the quarrel of his Faith, the King and the Lords of his Council excepted. Finally, with all gentleneſs he proteſted before all that were preſent, that he would refuſe no manner of correction that ſhould after the Laws of God be miniſtred unto him, but that he would at all times with all meekneſs obey it. Notwithſtanding all this the King ſuffered him to be ſummoned perſonally in his own Privy Chamber. Then ſaid the Lord Cobham to the King, that he had appealed from the Archbiſhop to the Pope of Rome, and therefore he ought, he ſaid, in no caſe to be his Judge. And having his appeal there at hand ready written, he ſhewed it with all reverence to the King. Wherewith the King was then much more diſpleaſed than afore, and ſaid angerly unto him, that he ſhould not purſue his appeal; but rather he ſhould tarry in hold, till ſuch time as it were of the Pope allowed. And then, would he, or nild he the Archbiſhop ſhould be his Judge. Thus was there nothing allowed that the L. Cobham had lawfully afore required. But forſomuch as he would not be ſworn in all things to ſubmit himſelf to the Church, and ſo take what penance the Archbiſhop would enjoyn him; He was arreſted again at the Kings Commandment, and ſo led forth to the Tower of London, to keep his day (ſo was it then ſpoken) that the Archbiſhop had appointed him afore in the Kings Chamber.

L. Cobham would not obey the beaſt.

Then cauſed he the foreſaid Confeſſion of his Faith to be copied again, and the anſwer alſo (which he had made to the four Articles propounded againſt him) to be written in manner of an Indenture in two ſheets of Paper: That when he ſhould come to his anſwer, he might give the one Copy unto the Archbiſhop, and reſerve the other to himſelf. As the day of examination was come, which was the 23*d* day of September the Saturday before the Feaſt

The firſt Examination of the Lord COBHAM.

Antichriſt was here in full power.

SIR John, in the laſt general Convocation of the Clergy of this our Province, ye were detected of certain Hereſies, and by ſufficient witneſſes found culpable. Whereupon ye were, by form of ſpiritual Law cited, and would in no caſe appear. In concluſion upon your rebellious contumacy, ye were both privately and openly Excommunicated. Notwithſtanding we neither yet ſhewed our ſelves unready to have given you Abſolution (nor yet do to this hour) would ye have meekly asked it. Unto this the Lord Cobham ſhewed, as though he had given no ear, having his mind otherwiſe occupied, and ſo deſired no Abſolution. A ſign of Gods true ſervant. But ſaid he would gladly before him and his Brethren make reherſal of that Faith which he held and intended always to ſtand to, if it would pleaſe them to licenſe him thereunto. And then he took out of his boſom a certain writing intended, concerning the Articles whereof he was accuſed, and ſo openly read it before them, giving it unto the Archbiſhop as he had made thereof an end. Whereof this is the Copy.

The Sacrament of the Lords body.

I John Oldcaſtle Knight, Lord of Cobham, Will that all Chriſtian Men, weet and underſtand, that I clepe Almighty God into witneſs, that it hath been, now is, and ever, with the help of God, ſhall be mine intent and my will, to believe faithfully and fully all the Sacraments that ever God ordained to be done in Holy Church; and moreover do declare me in theſe four points, I believe that the moſt worſhipful Sacrament of the Altar is Chriſts body in form of bread, the ſame body that was born of the bleſſed Virgin our Lady Saint Mary, done on the Croſs, dead and buried, the third day roſe from death to life, the which body is now glorified in Heaven.

Penance.

Alſo as for the Sacrament of Penance I believe, That it is needful to every Man that ſhall be ſaved to forſake ſin, and to do due penance for ſin before done, with true Confeſſion, very Contrition, and due ſatisfaction as Gods Law limiteth and teacheth, and elſe may not be ſaved; which penance I deſire all Men to do.

Images.

And as of Images, I underſtand that they be not of believe, but that they were ordained ſith they believe was zewe of Chriſt, by ſufferance of the Church, to be Calenders to lewd Men, to repreſent and bring to mind the Paſſion of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and Martyrdom and good living of other Saints: And that whoſo it be, that doth the worſhip to dead Images that is due to God, or putteth ſuch hope or truſt in help of them, as he ſhould do to God, or hath affection in one more than in another, he doth in that the greateſt ſin of Maumetry.

Pilgrimage.

Alſo I ſuppoſe this fully, That every Man in this Earth is a Pilgrim toward bliſs, or toward pain; and that he that knoweth not, ne will not know ne keep the holy Commandments of God in his living here (albeit that he go on Pilgrimages to all the world, and he die ſo) he ſhall be damned: he that knoweth the holy Commandments of God, and keepeth them to his end, he ſhall be ſaved though he never in his life go on Pilgrimage, as Men now uſe to Canterbury or to Rome, or to any other place.

The anſwers examined.

This anſwer to his Articles thus ended and read, he delivered it to the Biſhops as is ſaid afore. Then counſelled the Archbiſhop with the other two Biſhops and with divers of the Doctors, what was to be done in this matter; commanding him for the time to ſtand aſide. In concluſion by their aſſent and information he ſaid thus unto him; Quarrel picked where none was given. Come hither, Sir John: In this your writing are many good things contained, and right Catholick alſo, we deny it not: but ye muſt conſider that this day was appointed you to anſwer to other points concerning thoſe Articles, whereof, as yet no mention is made in this your bill. And therefore ye muſt yet declare us your mind more plainly.

KING Hen. 5.

And thus, whether that ye hold, affirm and believe that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Conſecration rightly done by a Prieſt, remaineth material bread, or not? Moreover, whether ye do hold, affirm and believe, that as concerning the Sacrament of Penance (whereas a competent number of Prieſts are) every Chriſtian Man is neceſſarily bound to be confeſſed of his ſins to a Prieſt ordained by the Church or not.

The Wolf was hungry, he muſt needs be fed with blood.

After certain other communication, this was the anſwer of the good Lord Cobham, That none otherwiſe would he declare his mind, nor yet anſwer unto his Articles, than was expreſly in his writing there contained. Then ſaid the Archbiſhop again unto him; Sir John, beware what ye do. For if ye anſwer not clearly to thoſe things that are here objected againſt you (eſpecially at the time appointed you only for that purpoſe) the Law of the Holy Church is, That compelled once by a judge we may openly proclaim you an Heretick. Unto whom he gave this anſwer; Do as ye ſhall think beſt, for I am at a point. Whatſoever he or the other Biſhops did ask him after that, he bad them reſort to his Bill; for thereby would he ſtand to the very death. Other anſwer would he not give that day; wherewith the Biſhops and Prelates were in a manner amazed and wonderfully diſquieted.

A tyranny where he that is not.

His anſwer not to their mind.

At the laſt the Archbiſhop counſelled again with his other Biſhops and Doctors, and in the end thereof declared unto him, what the Holy Church of Rome (following the ſaying of Saint Auguſtine, Saint Hierome, Saint Ambroſe, and of the Holy Doctors) had determined in theſe matters, no manner of mention once made of Chriſt. Which determination (ſaith he) ought all Chriſtian Men both to believe and to follow.

Antichriſt ſetteth men above God

Then ſaid the Lord Cobham unto him, That he would gladly both believe and obſerve whatſoever Holy Church of Chriſts inſtitution had determined, or yet whatſoever God had willed him either to believe to do. But that the Pope of Rome with his Cardinals, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of that Church had lawful power to determine ſuch matter as ſtood not with his word throughly; that would he not (he ſaid) at that time affirm. With this the Archbiſhop bad him to take good adviſement till the Munday next following (which was the 25*th* day of September) and then juſtly to anſwer, ſpecially unto this point; Whether there remained material bread in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration or not? He promiſed him alſo, to ſend unto him in writing thoſe matters clearly determined, that he might then be the more perfect in his anſwer making. And all this was nought elſe, but to blind the multitude with ſomewhat. The next day following, according to his promiſe, the Archbiſhop ſent unto him into the Tower, this fooliſh and blaſphemous writing, made by him and by his unlearned Clergy.

The Lord Cobham refuſeth unto to Chriſt.

The determination of the Archbiſhop and Clergy.

Ex magno proceſſu Thomæ Arundel.

THE Faith and determination of the Holy Church touching the bliſsful Sacrament of the Altar, is this; That after the Sacramental words be once ſpoken by a Prieſt in his Maſs, the material bread, that was before bread, is turned into Chriſts very body. And the material wine that was before wine is turned into Chriſts very blood. And ſo there remaineth in the Sacrament of the Altar, from thenceforth, no material bread, nor material wine, which were there before the Sacramental words were ſpoken; How believe ye this Article? Holy Church hath determined that every Chriſtian Man, living here bodily upon the Earth, ought to be ſhriven to a Prieſt ordained by the Church, if he may come to him. How feel ye this Article?

KING Hen.5. The fourth Article.

Holy Church hath determined, That it is meritorious to a Chriſtian Man, to go on Pilgrimage to holy places: and there ſpecially to worſhip Holy Reliques and Images of Saints, Apoſtles, and Martyrs, Confeſſors, and all other Saints beſide, approved by the Church of Rome. How feel ye this Article?

He ſeeth their ignorance and malice.

And as the Lord Cobham had read over this moſt wretched writing, he marvelled greatly of their mad ignorance. But that he conſidered again, That God had given them over, for their unbeliefs ſake, into moſt deep errors and blindneſs of ſoul. Again, he perceived hereby, that their uttermoſt malice was purpoſed againſt him, howſoever he ſhould anſwer. And therefore he put his life into the hands of God, deſiring his only ſpirit to aſſiſt him in his next anſwer. When the ſaid 25*th* day of September was come (which was alſo the Munday before Michaelmas) in the ſaid year of our Lord 1413. Thomas Arundel the Archbiſhop of Canterbury commanded his judicial ſeat to be removed from the Chapter-Houſe of Pauls to the Dominick Friers within Ludgate at London. And as he was there ſet with Richard Biſhop of London, Henry the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Bennet the Biſhop of Bangor; He called in unto him his Council and his Officers, with divers other Doctors and Friers, of whom theſe are the names here following; Maſter Henry Ware, the Official of Canterbury; Philip Morgan, Doctor of the Laws; Howel Kiffin, Doctor of the Canon Law; John Kempe, Doctor of the Canon Law; William Carleton, Doctor of the Canon Law; John Whitnam, of the New College in Oxford; John Whithead, Doctor in Oxford alſo, Robert Wombewel, Vicar of Saint Lawrence in the Jewry; Thomas Palmer, the Warden of Minors; Robert Chamberlain, Prior of the Dominicks; Richard Dodington, Prior of the Auguſtines; Thomas Walden, Prior of the Carmelites, all Doctors of Divinity. John Stephens alſo, and James Gole, both Notaries, appointed there purpoſely to write all that ſhould be either ſaid or done. All theſe with a great ſort more of Prieſts, Monks, Canons, Friers, Pariſh-Clerks, Bell-ringers, Pardoners, diſdained him with innumerable mocks and ſcorns, reckoning him to be an horrible Heretick, and a Man accurſed afore God.

Anon the Archbiſhop called for a Maſs Book, and cauſed all theſe Prelates and Doctors to Swear thereupon, that every Man ſhould faithfully do his Office and duty that day. And that neither for favour nor fear, love nor hate of the one party nor the other, any thing ſhould there be witneſſed, ſpoken or done, but according to the truth, as they would anſwer before God and all the world at the day of Doom. Then were the two foreſaid Notaries ſworn alſo to write and to witneſs the Proces that there ſhould be uttered on both parties, and to ſay their minds (if they otherwiſe knew) before they ſhould Regiſter it. And all this diſſimulation was but to colour their miſcheifs, before the ignorant multitude.

Lord Cobham cometh again before them.

After that, came out before them Sir Robert Morley Knight, and Lieutenant of the Tower, and he brought with him the good Lord Cobham, there leaving him among them as a Lamb among Wolves, to his examination and anſwer.

Another Examination of the Lord COBHAM.

Ex veriſſo exemplari Londinenſi.

THEN ſaid the Archbiſhop unto him, Lord Cobham ye be adviſed (I am ſure) of the words and Proceſs which we had unto you upon Saturday laſt paſt in the Chapter-houſe of Pauls; which Proceſs were now too long to be rehearſed again. I ſaid unto you then, That you were accurſed for your contumacy and diſobedience to the Holy Church, thinking that ye ſhould with meekneſs have deſired your abſolution.

The curſe of Antichriſt.

Then ſpake the Lord Cobham with a chearful countenance, and ſaid, God ſaid by his holy Prophet, Maledicam benedictionibus veſtris, which is as much to ſay as, I ſhall curſe where you bleſs.

Malac. 2.

The Archbiſhop made then as though he had continued forth his tale and not heard him, ſaying, Sir, At that time I gently profered to have aſſoiled you if you would have asked it. And yet I do the ſame if ye will humbly deſire it in due form and manner as holy Church hath ordained.

A Wolviſh offer of gentleneſs.

Then ſaid the Lord Cobham, Nay forſooth will I not, for I never yet treſpaſſed againſt you, and therefore I will not do it. And with that he kneeled down on the pavement, holding up his hands towards Heaven, and ſaid; I ſhrieve me here unto thee my Eternal Living God, that in my frail youth I offended thee (O Lord) moſt grievouſly in pride, wrath, and gluttony, in covetouſneſs, and in lechery. Many Men have I hurt in mine anger, and done many other horrible ſins; good Lord, I ask thee mercy. And therewith weepingly he ſtood up again and ſaid with a mighty voice; Lo, good people, lo; For the breaking of Gods Law and his great commandments, they never yet curſed me: But for their own Laws and Traditions moſt cruelly do they handle both me and other Men. And therefore, both they and their Laws, by the promiſe of God ſhall utterly be deſtroyed.

Jer. 51.

At this the Archbiſhop and his company were not a little blemiſhed. Notwithſtanding, he took ſtomach unto him again after certain words had, in excuſe of their tyranny, and examined the Lord Cobham of his Chriſtian belief.

Whereunto the Lord Cobham made this godly anſwer, I believe (ſaith he) fully and faithfully in the univerſal Laws of God. I believe that all is true which is contained in the holy ſacred Scriptures of the Bible. Finally, I believe all that my Lord God would I ſhould believe. Then demanded the Archbiſhop an anſwer of that Bill which he and the Clergy had ſent him into the Tower the day afore, in manner of a determination of the Church concerning the four Articles whereof he was accuſed, ſpecially for the Sacrament of the Altar, how he believed therein.

The true Chriſtian belief of the Lord Cobham.

Whereunto the Lord Cobham ſaid, That with that Bill he had nothing to do. But this was his belief (he ſaid) concerning the Sacrament. That his Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, ſitting at his laſt Supper with his moſt dear Diſciples, the night before he ſhould ſuffer took bread in his hand; And giving thanks to his Eternal Father, bleſſed it, brake it, and ſo gave it unto them, ſaying, Take it unto you, and eat thereof all, this is my body which ſhall be betraied for you: Do this hereafter in my remembrance. This do I throughly believe (ſaith he) for this Faith am I taught in the Goſpel of Matthew, in Mark, and in Luke, and alſo in the firſt Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Corinthians Chap. 11.

Matt. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22. 1 Cor. 11

Antichriſt alloweth not this faith.

Then asked the Archbiſhop, If he believed that it were bread after the Conſecration or Sacramental words ſpoken over it.

The Lord Cobham ſaid: I believe that in the Sacrament of the Altar is Chriſts very body in form of bread, the ſame that was born of the Virgin Mary, done on the Croſs, dead, and buried, and that the third day aroſe from death to life, which now is glorified in Heaven.

Then ſaid one of the Doctors of the Law: after the Sacramental words be uttered, there remaineth no bread, but only the body of Chriſt.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

The Lord Cobham ſaid then to one Maſter John Whitehead: You ſaid once unto me in the Caſtle of Cowling, that the ſacred Hoſt was not Chriſts body. But I held then againſt you, and proved that therein was his body, though the Seculars and Friers could not therein agree, but held each one againſt the other in that opinion. Theſe were my words then, if ye remember it.

John Whitehead gone from his opinions. All this would not help.

Then ſhouted a ſort of them together and cryed with great noiſe: We ſay all, That it is Gods body.

A blaſphemous brood

And divers of them asked him in great anger, Whether it were material bread after the Conſecration or not?

Quarel pickers.

Then looked the Lord Cobham earneſtly upon the Archbiſhop, and ſaid; I believe ſurely that it is Chriſts body in form of bread. Sir, believe not you thus?

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, Yes, mary do I.

Then asked him the Doctors, whether it were only Chriſts body after the Conſecration of a Prieſt, and no bread, or not?

The Sacrament of Chriſts body is both the body and bread.

And he ſaid unto them, It is both Chriſts body and bread; I ſhall prove it thus: For like as Chriſts dwelling here upon the earth had in him both Godhead and manhood, and had the inviſible Godhead covered under that manhood, which was only viſible and ſeen in him: So in the Sacrament of the Altar is Chriſts very body and bread alſo, as I believe the bread is the thing that we ſee with our eyes, the body of Chriſt (which is his fleſh and his blood) is thereunder hid, and not ſeen but in Faith.

And moreover to prove, That it is both Chriſts body and alſo bread after the Conſecration, it is by plain words expreſſed by one of your own Doctors writing againſt Eutyches, which ſaith, Like as the ſelf ſame Sacraments do paſs by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt into a divine nature, and yet notwithſtanding keep the property ſtill of their former nature; ſo that principal myſtery declareth to remain one true and perfect Chriſt, &c.

The Popes divinity.

Then ſmiled they each one upon another, that the people ſhould judge him taken in a great Hereſie. And with a great brag divers of them ſaid: It is a foul Hereſie.

Then asked the Archbiſhop what bread it was? And the Doctors alſo inquired of him whether it were material or not?

Material.

The Lord Cobham ſaid unto them; The Scriptures make no mention of this word material, and therefore my Faith hath nothing to do therewith. But this I ſay and believe, that it is Chriſts body and bread. For Chriſt ſaid in the ſixth of John's Goſpel, Ego ſum panis vivus, qui de cælo deſcendi: I which came down from Heaven am the living and not the dead bread. Therefore I ſay now again as I ſaid afore, as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is very God, and very Man, ſo in the moſt bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar is Chriſts very body and bread.

John 6.

An Hereſie after the Papiſts making.

Then ſaid they all with one voice; It is an Hereſie.

One of the Biſhops ſtood up by and by, and ſaid, What? it is an Hereſie manifeſt, to ſay that it is bread after the ſacramental words be once ſpoken, but Chriſts body only.

1 Cor. 10

The Lord Cobham ſaid, S. Paul the Apoſtle was (I am ſure) as wiſe as you be now, and more godly learned, and he called it bread, writing to the Corinthians, The bread that we break, ſaith he, is it not the partaking of the body of Chriſt? Lo he called it bread and not Chriſts body, but a mean whereby we receive Chriſts body.

The Sacrament is called bread.

That ſaid they again, Paul muſt be otherwiſe underſtood. For it is ſure an Hereſie to ſay that it is bread after the Conſecration, but only Chriſts body.

The Lord Cobham asked, How they could make good that ſentence of theirs?

They anſwered him thus: For it is againſt the determination of Holy Church.

The determination of the Church muſt ſtand, whatſoever Paul ſaith.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop unto him: Sir John, we ſent you a writing concerning the faith of this bleſſed Sacrament, clearly determined by the Church of Rome our Mother, and by the holy Doctors.

A moſt Chriſtian anſwer.

Then he ſaid again unto him, I know none holier than is Chriſt and his Apoſtles. And as for that determination, I wote it is none of theirs: for it ſtandeth not with the Scriptures, but manifeſtly againſt them. If it be the Churches, as ye ſay it is, it hath been hers only ſince ſhe received the great poiſon of worldly poſſeſſions, and not afore.

The judgment of the Lord Cobham concerning the determination of the Church.

Then asked they him, to ſtop his mouth therewith: If he believed not in the determination of the Church?

The Doctors confounded in their own queſtion.

And he ſaid unto them, No forſooth, for it is no God. In all our Creed, this word (in) is but thrice mentioned concerning belief: In God the Father, in God the Son, in God the Holy Ghoſt, Three Perſons and One God. The Birth, the Death, the Burial, the Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of Chriſt, hath none (in) for belief, but in him. Neither yet hath the Church, the Sacraments, the forgivneſs of ſin, the later Reſurrection, nor yet the life everlaſting, nor any other (in) than in the Holy Ghoſt.

Then ſaid one of the Lawyers, Tuſh, that was but a word of Office: But what is your belief concerning Holy Church?

The L. Cobham believeth not in the Pope.

The Lord Cobham anſwered: My belief is (as I ſaid afore) that all the Scriptures of the ſacred Bible are true. All this is grounded upon them I believe throughly. For I know it is Gods pleaſure that I ſhould ſo do. But in your lordly Laws and idle determinations have I no belief. For ye be no part of Chriſts holy Church, as your open deeds do ſhew: But ye are very Antichriſts, obſtinately ſet againſt his holy Law and Will. The Laws that ye have made are nothing to his glory, but only for your vain glory and abominable covetouſneſs.

KING Hen. 5.

An Hereſie after the Papiſts.

This, they ſaid, was an exceeding Hereſie (and that in a great fume) not to believe the determination of holy Church.

Then the Archbiſhop asked him, What he thought of holy Church?

Holy Church defined.

He ſaid unto him, my belief is, That the Holy Church is the number of them which ſhall be ſaved, of whom Chriſt is the head. Of this Church one part is in Heaven with Chriſt, another in Purgatory (you ſay) and the third is here in Earth. This later part ſtandeth in three degrees, as I ſaid afore plainly in the confeſſion of my belief.

Conſider him to be then in ſhrewd handling.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop unto him; Can you tell me who is of the Church?

The Lord Cobham anſwered; Yes, truly can I.

Walden contra Wickleviſtas li. 2. c. 3.

Then ſaid Doctor Walden the Prior of the Carmelites; It is doubt unto you who is thereof. For Chriſt ſaith in Matthew, Nolite judicare, preſume to judge no man. If ye be here forbidden the judgment of your neighbour or Brother, much more the judgment of your ſuperior.

How we may judge or not judge by the Scriptures.

The Lord Cobham made him this anſwer, Chriſt ſaith alſo in the ſelf ſame Chapter of Matthew, That like as the evil tree is known by his fruit, ſo is a falſe Prophet by his works, appear they never ſo glorious: But that ye left behind ye. And in John he hath this Text: Operibus credite, Believe ye the outward doings. And in another place of John: Juſtum judicium judicate; when we know the thing to be true, we may ſo judge it and not offend. For David ſaid alſo; Recte judicate filii hominum; Judge rightly always ye Children of Men. And as for your ſuperiority, were ye of Chriſt, ye ſhould be meek Miniſters, and no proud Superiors.

Diverſity of judgments.

Then ſaid Doctor Walden unto him, Ye make here no difference of judgments: Ye put no diverſity between the evil judgments which Chriſt hath forbidden, and the good judgments, which he hath commanded us to have. Raſh judgment and right judgment, all is one with you. So ſwift Judges always are the learned Scholars of Wickliff.

A perfect anſwer.

Unto whom the Lord Cobham thus anſwered: It is well ſophiſtred of you forſooth. Prepoſterous are your judgments evermore. For as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, Ye judge evil good and good evil: and therefore the ſame Prophet concludeth, That your ways are not Gods ways, nor Gods ways your ways. And as for the vertuous Man Wickliff, whoſe judgments ye ſo highly diſdain, I ſhall ſay here of my part, both before God and Man, that before I knew that deſpiſed Doctrine of his, I never abſtained from ſin. But ſince I learned therein to fear my Lord God, it hath otherwiſe I truſt been with me: ſo much grace could I never find in all your glorious inſtructions.

A great adverſary.

Then ſaid Doctor Walden again yet unto him: It were not well with me (ſo many vertuous Men living, and ſo many learned Men teaching the Scripture, being alſo ſo open, and the examples of Fathers ſo plenteous) if I then had no grace to amend my life, till I heard the Divel preach. S. Hierome ſaith, That he which ſeeketh ſuch ſuſpected maſters ſhall not find the mid-day light, but the mid-day Divel.

Hieron. in breviar. in Matth.

The Lord Cobham ſaid, Your Fathers, the old Phariſees, aſcribed Chriſts miracles to Belzebub, and his doctrine to the Divel. And you as their natural Children have ſtill the ſelf ſame judgment concerning his faithful followers. They that rebuke your vicious living muſt needs be Hereticks, and that muſt your Doctors prove, when you have no Scripture to do it. Then ſaid he to them all; to judge you as you be we need go no further than to your own proper acts. Where do you find in all Gods Law, that ye ſhould thus ſit in judgment of any Chriſtian Man, or yet give ſentence upon any other Man unto death, as ye do here daily? no ground have ye in all the Scripture ſo lordly to take it upon you, but in Annas and Caiphas, which ſate thus upon Chriſt, and upon his Apoſtles after his Aſcenſion. Of them only have ye taken it to judge Chriſts members as ye do, and neither of Peter nor John.

Then ſaid ſome of the Lawyers: Yes, forſooth, Sir, for Chriſt judged Judas.

The Lord Cobham ſaid, No, Chriſt judged him not, but he judged himſelf, and thereupon went forth and ſo did hang king himself: but indeed Christ said, Wo unto him, for that covetous act of his, as he doth yet still unto many of you. For since the venime of him was shed into the Church, ye never followed Christ, neither yet have ye stood in the perfection of Gods Law.

Then the Archbishop asked him, what he meant by that venime?

The Lord Cobham said, Your possessions and Lordships, For then cryed an Angel in the Air (as your own Chronicles mention) Wo, wo, wo, this day is venime shed into the Church of God. Before that time all the Bishops of Rome were Martyrs in a manner. And since that time we read of very few. But indeed since that same time, one hath put down another, one hath poisoned another, one hath cursed another, and one hath slain another, and done much more mischief besides, as all the Chronicles tell. And let all Men consider well this, That Christ was meek, and merciful; the Pope is proud, and a tyrant; Christ was poor, and forgave, the Pope is rich and a malitious Man-slayer, as his daily acts do prove him. Rome is the very nest of Antichrist, and out of that nest come all the Disciples of him. Of whom, Prelates, Priests, and Monks, are the body, these pil'd Friers are the tail, which covereth his most filthy part.

26 Bishops of Rome together Martyrs, save only four.

A comparison between the Martyrs and the Popes time.

A comparison between Christ and the Pope.

Rome is Antichrists nest

Then said the Prior of the Friers Augustines, Alack, Sir, why do you say so? that is uncharitably spoken.

And the Lord Cobham said, Not only is it my saying, but also the Prophet Esaias, long afore my time. The Prophet, saith he, which preacheth lies, is the tail behind. For as you Friers and Monks be (like Pharisees) divided in your outward apparel and visages, so make ye division among the people. And thus you with such other, are the very natural members of Antichrist.

Esay 9.

Friers proved sanctified, and yet found no traitors.

Matt. 23.

Then said he unto them all, Christ saith in his Gospel, Wo unto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites; for ye close up the Kingdom of Heaven before Men, neither enter ye in your selves, nor yet suffer any other that would enter into it, but ye stop up the ways thereunto with your own Traditions, and therefore are ye the household of Antichrist; ye will not permit Gods verity to have passage, nor yet to be taught of his true Ministers, fearing to have your wickedness reproved. But by such flatterers as uphold you in your mischiefs, ye suffer the common people most miserably to be seduced.

The Religion of Bishops.

Then said the Archbishop, By our Lady, Sir, there shall none such preach within my Dioceſs (and God will) nor yet in my jurisdiction (if I may know it) as either make division, or yet dissention among the poor Commons.

Note I pray you how those are counted traitors and seditious, that teach or cause Gods truth to be taught

The Lord Cobham said, both Christ and his Apostles were accused of sedition making, yet were they most peaceable Men. But Daniel and Christ Prophecyed, that such a troublous time should come, as hath not been yet since the worlds beginning. And this Prophecy is partly fulfilled in your days and doings; for many have ye slain already, and more will ye slay hereafter, if God fulfil not his promise. Christ saith also, If those days of yours were not shortned, scarcely should any flesh be saved; therefore look for it justly, for God will shorten your days. Moreover, though Priests and Deacons for preaching of Gods word, and for ministring the Sacraments, with provision for the poor, be grounded on Gods Law, yet have these other Sects no manner of ground hereof, so far as I have read.

Matter of Prophecy. Priests. Deacons.

Then a Doctor of Law, called Master John Kemp, plucked out of his bosom a copy of the Bill which they had afore sent him into the Tower by the Archpishops Council, thinking thereby to make shorter work with him. For they were so amazed with his answers (not all unlike to them which disputed with Stephen) that they knew not well how to occupy the time, their wits and sophistry (as God would) so failed them that day.

Mark this working of Satan.

Acts 6.

The first Article.

My Lord Cobham (saith this Doctor) we must briefly know your mind concerning these four points here following. The first of them is this; and then he read upon the Bill. The Faith and determination of holy Church touching the blessed Sacrament of the Altar is this; That after the Sacramental words be once spoken of a Priest in his Mass, the material bread, that was before bread, is turned into Christs very body, and the material wine is turned into Christs blood. And so there remaineth in the Sacrament of the Altar from thenceforth no material bread nor material wine; which were there before the Sacramental words were spoken: Sir, believe you not this?

Transubstantiation of bread into the body.

The Lord Cobham said, This is not my belief. But my Faith is (as I said to ye afore) That in the worshipful Sacrament of the Altar is Christs very body in form of bread.

The Lord Cobhams belief in the Sacrament.

Then said the Archbishop, Sir John, ye must say otherwise.

The Lord Cobham said, Nay, that I will not, if God be upon my side (as I trust he is) but that there is Christs body in form of bread, as the common belief is.

Then read the Doctor again.

The second Article.

The second point is this; Holy Church hath determined, that every Christian Man, living here bodily upon earth, ought to be shriven of a Priest ordained by the Church, if he may come to him. Sir, what say you to this?

The Lord Cobham answered and said, A diseased or sore wounded Man hath need to have a sure wise Chirurgion and a true, knowing both the ground and the danger of the same. Most necessary were it therefore to be first shriven unto God, which only knoweth our diseases, and can help us. I deny not in this the going to a Priest, if he be a Man of good life and learning; for the Laws of God are to be required of the Priest, which is godly learned. But if he be an Idiot, or a Man of vicious living that is my Curate, I ought rather to fly from him than to seek unto him; for sooner might I catch evil of him that is naught, than any goodness towards my souls health.

Confession of sins to God only. Mal. 2.

Then read the Doctor again.

The third Article.

The third point is this; Christ ordained S. Peter the Apostle to be his Vicar here in Earth, whose See is the Church of Rome. And he granted that the same power which he gave unto Peter should succeed unto all Peter's successors, which we call now Popes of Rome. By whose special power in Churches particular be ordained Prelates and Archbishops, Parsons, Curates, and other degrees more, to whom Christian Men ought to obey after the Laws of the Church of Rome. This is the determination of holy Church. Sir, believe ye not this?

Who is next unto Peter.

To this he answered and said, He that followeth Peter most nigheſt in pure living, is next unto him in succession. But your Lordly order esteemeth not greatly the lowly behaviour of poor Peter whatsoever ye prate of him. Neither care ye greatly for the humble manners of them that succeeded him till the time of Silvester, which for the more part were Martyrs, as I told you before. Ye can let all their good conditions go by you, and not hurt your selves with them at all. All the world knoweth this well enough by you, and yet ye can make boast of Peter.

Succession, not of place but of condition, maketh Peters heir.

With that, one of the other Doctors asked him; Then what do ye say of the Pope?

The Lord Cobham answered, As I said before, so I say again; That he and you together make whole the great Antichrist. Of whom he is the great head, you Bishops, Priests, Prelates, and Monks, are the body, and the begging Friers are the tail, for they cover the filthiness of you both with their subtil Sophistry: neither will I in conscience obey any of you all, till I see you with Peter follow Christ in Conversation.

Antichrists head, body, and tail.

Then read the Doctor again.

The fourth Article. Pilgrimage.

The fourth point is this; Holy Church hath determined, That it is meritorious to a Christian Man, to go on Pilgrimage to holy places, and there specially to worship the holy Reliques and Images of Saints, Apostles, Martyrs, Confessors, and all other Saints besides, approved by the Church of Rome. Sir, what say you to this?

What is to be done with images

Whereunto he answered, I owe them no service by any commandment of God, and therefore I mind not to seek them for your covetousness. It were best ye swept them fare from Cobwebs and dust, and so laid them up for catching of scathe, or els to bury them fare in the ground as ye do other aged people which are Gods images.

Saints are become now covetous beggers.

It is a wonderful thing, that Saints now being dead should become so covetous and needy, and thereupon so bitterly beg, which all their life time hated all covetousness and begging. But this I say unto you, and I would all the world should mark it, that with your Shrines and Idols, your fained Absolutions and Pardons, ye draw unto you the substance, wealth and chief pleasures of all Christian Realm.

A whelp of the ſame Haire.

Why Sir (ſaid one of the Clerks) will ye not worſhip good Images?

Images not to be worſhipped.

What worſhip ſhould I give unto them? ſaid the Lord Cobham.

Then ſaid Frier Palmer unto him, Sir, will ye worſhip the Croſs of Chriſt, that he died upon?

Where is it, ſaid the Lord Cobham?

The Frier ſaid, I put you the caſe, Sir, that it were here even now before you.

The Croſs, whether it is to be worſhipped.

The Lord Cobham anſwered, This is a great wiſe Man, to put me an earneſt queſtion of a thing, and yet he himſelf knoweth not where the thing it ſelf is. Yet once again I ask you, What worſhip I ſhould do unto it.

Galat. 6.

A Clerk ſaid unto him, Such worſhip as Paul ſpeaketh of, and that is this; God forbid that I ſhould joy, but only in the Croſs of Jeſus Chriſt.

Then ſaid the L. Cobham, and ſpread his arms abroad; This is the very Croſs, yea, and ſo much better than your Croſs of Wood, in that it was created of God, yet will not I ſeek to have it worſhipped.

The material Croſs is not material to our Faith.

Then ſaid the Biſhop of London, Sir, Ye wot well that he died on a material Croſs.

What it is to rejoyce in the Croſs of Chriſt.

The Lord Cobham ſaid, Yea, and I wot alſo, that our ſalvation came not in by that material Croſs, but alone by him which died thereupon. And well I wot, That Holy Saint Paul rejoyced in none other Croſs, but in Chriſts Paſſion and Death only, and in his own ſufferings of like perſecution with him, for the ſelf ſame verity that he hath ſuffered for afore?

Another Clerk yet asked him, Will ye then do none honour to the Holy Croſs?

He anſwered him, Yes, if it were mine own, I would lay him up honeſtly, and ſee unto him that he ſhould take no more ſcath abroad, nor be robbed of his goods, as he is now adays.

Slandered with the truth.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop unto him, Sir John, Ye have ſpoken here many wonderful words to the ſlanderous rebuke of the whole Spirituality, giving a great evil example unto the common ſort here, to have us in the more diſdain. Much time have we ſpent here about you, and all in vain ſo far as I can ſee. Well we muſt now be at this ſhort point with you, for the day paſſeth away: ye muſt either ſubmit your ſelf to the Ordinance of Holy Church, or elſe throw your ſelf (no remedy) into moſt deep danger. See to it in time, for anon it will be elſe too late.

These men ſeem to ſtand only upon their eſtimation amongſt the people.

The Lord Cobham ſaid, I know not to what purpoſe I ſhould otherwiſe ſubmit me. Much more have you offended me, than ever I offended you, in this troubling me before this multitude.

A Wolviſh offer of gentleneſs.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop again unto him, We once again require you to remember your ſelf well, and to have none other manner of opinion in theſe maters, than the univerſal Faith and belief of the Holy Church of Rome is. And ſo like an obedient Child return again to the unity of your Mother. See to it I ſay in time, for yet ye may have remedy, whereas anon it will be too late.

The Lord Cobham ſaid expreſly before them all; I will none otherwiſe believe in theſe points than that I have told you here afore. Do with me what you will.

Bloody murtherers.

Finally, then the Archbiſhop ſaid; Well, then I ſee none other but that we muſt needs do the Law; we muſt proceed forth to the ſentence definitive, and both judge you and condemn you for an Heretick.

And with that the Archbiſhop ſtood and read there a Bill of his Condemnation, all the Clergy and Laity vailing their Bonets. And this was the tenor thereof.

¶ The Definitive Sentence of his Condemnation.

Suffered of God as a plague.

IN the name of God; So be it, We Thomas by the ſufferance of God, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan and Primate of all England, and Legate from the Apoſtolick See of Rome, will this to be known unto all Men. In a certain cauſe of Hereſie and upon divers Articles, whereupon Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, and Lord Cobham, after a diligent inquiſition made for the ſame, was detected, accuſed and preſented before us in our laſt Convocation of all our Province of Canterbury, holden in the Cathedral Church of Pauls at London, at the lawful denouncement and requeſt of our univerſal Clergy of the ſaid Convocation, we proceeded againſt him according to the Law (God to witneſs) with all the favour poſſible. And following Chriſts example in all that we might, which willeth not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he might be converted and live; we took upon us to correct him, and ſought all other ways poſſible to bring him again to the Churches unity, declaring unto him what the Holy and univerſal Church of Rome hath ſaid, holden, determined, and taught in that behalf. And though we found him in the Catholick Faith far wide, and ſo ſtiff-necked, that he would not confeſs his error, nor purge himſelf, nor yet repent him thereof; We yet pitying him of Fatherly compaſſion, and entirely deſiring the health of his ſoul, appointed him a competent time of deliberation, to ſee if he would repent and ſeek to be reformed: but ſince that time we have found him worſe and worſe. Conſidering therefore, that he is not corrigible, we are driven to the very extremity of the Law, and with great heavineſs of heart we now proceed to the publication of the Sentence definitive, againſt him.

A Copy of this writing ſent Thomas Arundel the Archbiſhop of Canterbury afterward from Maidſtone the tenth day of October, within the ſame year of our Lord, 1413. unto Richard Clifford the Biſhop of London, which thus beginneth, Thomas permiſſione divina, &c.

Richard Clifford.

The ſaid Richard Clifford ſent another Copy thereof incloſed within his own Letters, unto Robert Maſcal a Carmelite Frier, which was then Biſhop of Hereford in Wales, written from Haddam, the 23. of October in the ſame year, the beginning whereof is as followeth: Reverende in Chriſto Pater, &c.

Robert Miſchal.

This Robert Maſchal directed another Copy thereof from London the ſeven and twentieth day of November in the ſame year, incloſed in his own Commiſſion alſo, unto his Archdeacon and Deans in Hereford and Shrewesbury. And this is thereof the beginning, Venerabilibus & diſcretis viris, &c. In like manner did the other Biſhops within their Dioceſs.

Ex utroque exemplari.

After that the Archbiſhop had thus read the Bill of his Condemnation, with moſt extremity before the whole multitude; the Lord Cobham ſaid with a moſt cheerful countenance, Though ye judge my Body, which is but a wretched thing, yet am I certain and ſure, that ye can do no harm to my Soul, no more than could Satan unto the Soul of Job. He that created that, will of his infinite Mercy and Promiſe ſave it. I have therein no manner of doubt. And as concerning theſe Articles before-rehearſed I will ſtand to them even to the very death, by the Grace of my Eternal God.

Mat. 10. Job. 1.

And therewith he turned him unto the people, caſting his hands abroad, and ſaying with a very loud voice, Good Chriſtian people, for Gods Love be well ware of theſe men, for they will elſe beguile you, and lead you blinfold into Hell with themſelves. For Chriſt ſaith plainly unto you, If one blind man leadeth another, they are like both to fall into the ditch.

Mat. 15.

He prayeth for his Enemies.

After this, he fell down there upon his Knees, and thus before them all prayed for his Enemies, holding both his hands and his eyes towards Heaven, and ſaying, Lord God Eternal, I beſeech thee of thy great mercy ſake to forgive my purſuers, If it be thy bleſſed will. And then he was delivered to Sir Robert Morley, and ſo led forth again unto the Tower of London; and thus there was an end of that days work.

Ex vetuſto exemplari Londinenſium.

While the Lord Cobham was thus in the Tower, he ſent out privily unto his Friends: And they at his requeſt wrote this little Bill here following: cauſing it to be ſet up in divers quarters of London, that the people ſhould not believe the ſlanders and lies that his Enemies the Biſhop's ſervants and Prieſts had made on him abroad. And thus was the Letter:

A teſtimonial made by his friends.

FOraſmuch as Sir John Oldcaſtle, Knight, and Lord Cobham, is untruly Convicted and Impriſoned, falſly reported and ſlandered among the common people by his Adverſaries, that he ſhould both otherwiſe think and ſpeak of the Sacraments of the Church, and ſpecially of the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, than was written in the Confeſſion of his belief; which was intended and taken to the Clergy, and ſo ſet up in divers open places of the City of London: Known be it here to all the World, that he (never ſince) varied in any point therefrom, but this is plainly his belief, That all the Sacraments of the Church be profitable and expedient alſo to all them that ſhall be ſaved, taking them after the intent that Chriſt and his true Church hath Ordained. Furthermore he believeth, That the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar is verily and truly Chriſts Body in form of Bread.

To ſtop lying lips. A rehearſal of his belief. In form of Bread, but not without Bread he meaneth.

After this, the Biſhops and Prieſts were in great diſcredit both with the Nobility and Commons; partly for that they had ſo cruelly handled the good Lord Cobham; and partly again, becauſe his Opinion (as they thought at that time) was perfect concerning the Sacrament. The Prelates feared this to grow to further inconvenience towards them both ways, wherefore they drew their heads together, and at the laſt conſented to uſe another practice ſomewhat contrary to that they had done before. They cauſed it by and by to be blown abroad by their feed ſervants, friends, and babling Sir John's, that the ſaid Lord Cobham was become a good man, and had lowly ſubmitted himſelf in all things unto holy Church, utterly changing his Opinion concerning the Sacrament. And thereupon, they counterfeited an Abjuration in his name, that the people ſhould take no hold of his Opinion by any thing they had heard of him before, and ſo to ſtand the more in awe of them, conſidering him ſo great a man, and by them ſubdued.

The Clergy in hate of the people. A practice of falſe Prieſts. These are common feats.

This is the Abjuration, ſay they, of Sir John Oldcaſtle, Knight, ſometime the Lord Cobham.

An Abjuration counterfeited of the Biſhops.

IN Dei nomine, Amen. I John Oldcaſtle denounced, detected and convicted of and upon divers Articles ſavouring both of Hereſie and Error, before the reverend Father in Chriſt and my good Lord, Thomas by the permiſſion of God, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and my lawful and rightful Judge in that behalf, expreſly grant and confeſs, that as concerning the eſtate and power of the moſt holy Father the Pope of Rome, of his Archbiſhops, his Biſhops, and his other Prelates, the degrees of the Church, and the holy Sacraments of the ſame, ſpecially of the Sacraments of the Altar, of Penance, and other obſervances beſides of our Mother holy Church, as Pilgrimages and Pardons; I affirm (I ſay) before the ſaid reverend Father Archbiſhop and elſewhere, that I being evilly ſeduced by divers ſeditious preachers, have grievouſly erred, and heretically perſiſted, blaſphemouſly anſwered, and obſtinately rebelled; and therefore I am by the ſaid reverend Father, before the reverend Fathers in Chriſt alſo, the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, and Bangor, lawfully condemned for an Heretick.

Mark from whence this grace cometh.

Fine workmanſhip I trow.

Neverthleſs, yet I now remembring my ſelf and coveting by this mean to avoid that Temporal pain which I am worthy to ſuffer as an Heretick, at the aſſignation of my moſt excellent Chriſtian Prince and Liege Lord, King Henry the fifth, now by the Grace of God moſt worthy King both of England and of France; minding alſo to prefer the wholſom Determination, Sentence, and Doctrine of the holy univerſal Church of Rome, before the unwholſom Opinions of my ſelf, my teachers, and my followers, I freely, willingly, deliberately, and throughly confeſs, grant, and affirm, That the moſt holy Fathers in Chriſt, St. Peter the Apoſtle, and his ſucceſſors Biſhops of Rome, ſpecially now at this time, my moſt bleſſed Lord Pope John, by the permiſſion of God, the three and twentieth Pope of that name, which now holdeth Peter's ſeat (and each of them in their ſucceſſion) hath full ſtrength and power to be Chriſts Vicar in Earth, and the Head of the Church Militant. And that by the ſtrength of his office (what though he be a great ſinner, and afore-known of God to be damned?) he hath full Authority and power to rule and govern, bind and looſe, ſave and deſtroy, accurſe and abſoil all other Chriſtian men.

Alas good man thou art ſlandered.

And agreeably ſtill unto this I confeſs, grant, and affirm all other Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Prelates in their Provinces, Dioceſs, and Pariſhes (appointed by the ſaid Pope of Rome to aſſiſt him in his doings or buſineſs) by his Decrees, Canons, or vertue of his office, to have had in times paſt, to have now at this time, and that they ought to have in time to come, Authority and power to rule and govern, bind and looſe, accurſe and abſoil the ſubjects or

How prove ye that by the Scriptures?

or people of their foreſaid Provinces, Dioceſs, and Pariſhes, and that their ſaid ſubjects or people ought of right in all things to obey them. Furthermore, I confeſs, grant, and affirm, that the ſaid Spiritual Fathers, as our moſt holy Father the Pope, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Prelates, have had, have now, and ought to have hereafter, authority and power for the ſtate, order and governance of their ſubjects or people, to make Laws, Decrees, Statutes, and Conſtitutions, yea, and to publiſh, command, and compel their ſaid ſubjects and people to the obſervation of them.

No Scripture have they to ſhew.

Moreover, I confeſs, grant, and affirm, that all theſe foreſaid Laws, Decrees, Statutes, and Conſtitutions, made, publiſhed, and commanded, according to the form or ſpiritual Law, all Chriſtian people, and every man in himſelf is ſtraightly bound to obſerve, and meekly to obey, according to the diverſity of the foreſaid Powers, as the Laws, Statutes, Canons and Conſtitutions of our moſt holy Father the Pope, Incorporated in his Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Charts, Reſcripts, Sextiles, and Extravagants over all the World; and as the Provincial Statutes of Archbiſhops in their Provinces, the Synodal acts of Biſhops in their Dioceſs, and the commendable Rules and Cuſtoms of Prelates in their Colleges, and Curates in their Pariſhes, all Chriſtian people are both bound to obſerve, and alſo moſt meekly to obey. Over and beſides all this, I John Oldcaſtle utterly forſaking and renouncing all the foreſaid Errors and Hereſies, and all other Errors and Hereſies like unto them, lay my hand here upon this Book or holy Evangely of God, and Swear, that I ſhall never more from henceforth hold theſe aforeſaid Hereſies, nor yet any other like unto them wittingly. Neither ſhall I give counſel, aid, help, or favour at any time, to them that ſhall hold, teach, affirm and maintain the ſame, as God ſhall help me, and theſe holy Evangeliſts.

Intolerable yokes lay they.

Never made he ſuch an Oath. And this maintain they ſtill. The Popes holy Bible of Papiſts.

And that I ſhall from henceforth Faithfully obey and inviolably obſerve all the holy Laws, Statutes, Canons, and Conſtitutions, of all the Popes of Rome, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Prelates, which are contained and determined in their holy Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Charts, Reſcripts, Sextiles, Sums, Papal Extravagants, Statutes Provincial, Acts Synodal, and other ordinary Regules and Cuſtoms conſtituted by them, or that ſhall chance hereafter directly to be determined or made. To theſe and all ſuch other will I my ſelf with all power poſſible apply. Beſides all this, the Penance which it ſhall pleaſe my ſaid reverend Father the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury hereafter to enjoyn me for my ſins, I will meekly obey and faithfully fulfil. Finally, all my ſeducers and falſe teachers, and all other beſides, whom I ſhall hereafter know ſuſpected of Hereſie or Errors, I ſhall effectually preſent, ſend or cauſe to be preſented unto my ſaid reverend Father Lord Archbiſhop, or to them which have his Authority, ſo ſoon as I can conveniently do it, and ſee that they be corrected to my uttermoſt power.

This charge give they commonly.

¶ This Abjuration never came to the hands of the Lord Cobham, neither was it compiled of them for that purpoſe, but only therewith to blear the eyes of the unlearned multitude for a time. After the which like fetch and ſubtil practice was alſo deviſed the recantation of the Archbiſhop Thomas Cranmer, to ſtop for a time, the peoples mouths. Which ſubtilty in like manner was alſo practiſed, with the falſe recantation of the Biſhop Hooper, and divers other, as in their places hereafter (Chriſt granting), ſhall be ſhewed.

For confirmation of this Hiſtory.

And thus much hitherto concerning the firſt trouble of Sir John Oldcaſtle Lord Cobham, with all the circumſtances of the true time, place, occaſion, cauſes, and order belonging to the ſame, wherein I truſt I have ſufficiently ſatisfied all the parts, requiſite to a faithful Hiſtory, without corruption. For the confirmation whereof, to the intent the mind alſo of the wrangling caviller may be ſatisfied, and to ſtop the mouth of the Adverſary (which I ſee in all places to be ready to bark) I have therefore of purpoſe annexed with all my ground and foundation, taken out of the Archives and Regiſters of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Ex Epiſtola Thom. Arund. ad Rich. Lond. Whereby may appear the manifeſt error both of Polydorus, and of Edward Hall, who, being deceived in the right diſtinction of the times, aſſign this Citation and Examination of the Lord Cobham to be after the Council of Conſtance, when as Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury at the Council of Conſtance was not alive. The Copy and Teſtimony of his own Letter ſhall declare the ſame, being written and ſent to the Biſhop of London in form as followeth:

The Copy of the Epiſtle of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, written to the Biſhop of London, whereon dependeth the ground and certainty of this foreſaid Hiſtory of the Lord Cobham above premiſed.

TO the Reverend Father in Chriſt, and Lord, the Lord Robert, by the grace of God Biſhop of Hereford, Richard by the permiſſion of God, Biſhop of London, health and continual increaſe of ſincere love: We have of late received the Letters of the reverend Father in Chriſt, and Lord, the Lord Thomas by the grace of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, to this effect: Thomas by the permiſſion of God, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, to our reverend Brother the Lord Richard Biſhop of London, health and Brotherly love in the Lord. It was lately concluded before us in the Convocation of Prelates and Clergy of our Province of Canterbury laſt Celebrate in our Church of St. Paul, intreating amongſt other things with the ſaid Prelates and Clergy upon the Union and Reformation of the Church of England, by us and the ſaid Prelates and Clergy; that it was almoſt impoſſible to amend the hole of our Lords Coat which was without ſeam, unleſs firſt of all certain Nobles of the Realm, which are authors, favourers, protectors, defenders, and receivers of theſe Hereticks called Lollards, were ſharply rebuked, and if need were by the cenſures of the Church and the help of the Secular Power, they be revoked from their errors. And afterward having made diligent inquiſition in the Convocation amongſt the Proctors of the Clergy and others which were there in number out of every Dioceſs of our Province; it was found out amongſt others, that Sir John Oldcaſtle, Knight, was and is the principal receiver, favourer, protecter, and defender of them, and that ſpecially in the Dioceſs of London, Rocheſter and Hereford, he had ſent the ſaid Lollards to preach, not being licenſed by the Ordinaries and Biſhops of the Dioceſs or places, contrary to the Provincial Conſtitutions in that behalf made, and hath been preſent at their wicked Sermons, grievouſly puniſhing with threatnings, terrors, and the power of the Secular Sword, ſuch as did withſtand him: alledging and affirming amongſt others, that we and our fellow Brethren, Suffragans of our Provinces, had not, neither have any power to make any ſuch Conſtitutions: Alſo he hath holden and doth hold Opinion, and teach as touching the Sacraments of the Altar, of Penance, of Pilgrimage, and the worſhipping of Saints, and of the Keys, contrary to that which the univerſal Church of Rome doth teach and affirm.

A thing thought right neceſſary that the Lord Cobham ſhould be made out of the way, or elſe not poſſible for Papiſtry to flouriſh.

Wherefore, on the behalf of the ſaid Prelates and Clergy, we were then required that we would vouchſafe to proceed againſt the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle upon the premiſſes. Notwithſtanding for the reverence of our Lord the King, in whoſe favour the ſaid Sir John at that preſent was, and no leſs alſo for honour of his Knighthood; we with our fellow Brethren, and Suffragans then preſent, with a great part of the Clergy of our Province, coming perſonally before the preſence of our Lord the King, being then at his Manner of Kenington, put up againſt the ſaid Sir John a complaint, partly reciting the faults of the ſaid Sir John, but at the requeſt of our Lord the King, we deſiring to reduce the ſaid Sir John to Unity of the Church, without any reproach, we deferred all the execution of the premiſſes for a great time. But at the laſt, foraſmuch as our ſaid Lord the King, and his great travels taken about the converſion of him, did nothing at all profit, as our ſaid Lord the King vouchſafed to certify us by word and writing; we immediately decreed to call forth the ſaid Sir John perſonally to anſwer before us at a certain time already paſſed, in and upon the Premiſſes, and ſent our Meſſengers with theſe our Letters of Citation to the ſaid Sir John, then being at his Caſtle at Cowling. Unto the which Meſſenger we gave commandment, that he ſhould in no caſe go into the Caſtle, except he were Licenſed. But by the mean of one John Butler, Porter to the Kings Chamber, he ſhould require the ſaid Sir John, that he would either Licenſe the ſaid Meſſenger to come into the Caſtle, or that he would cite him, or at the leaſt, that he would ſuffer himſelf to be cited without his Caſtle. The which Sir John openly anſwered unto the ſaid John Butler, declaring the Premiſſes unto him on the behalf of our Lord the King; that he would by no means be Cited, neither in any caſe ſuffer his Citation. Then we being certified of the Premiſſes, lawfully proceeded further.

KING Hen. 5.

Firſt, Having faithful report made unto us, that he could not be apprehended by perſonal Citation, we Decreed to Cite him by an Edict, to be openly ſet up in the Porches of the Cathedral Church of Rocheſter next unto him, little more than three Engliſh Miles diſtant from the ſaid Caſtle of Cowling. As we had thus cauſed him to be Cited, and our Edict aforeſaid to be publickly and openly ſet upon the Porches of the ſaid Church, that he ſhould perſonally appear before us the eleventh day of September laſt paſt, to anſwer unto the Premiſſes, and certain other things concerning Hereſie: The which day being come, and we ſitting in the Tribunal Seat in our great Chappel within the Caſtle of Leeds of our Dioceſs, the which we then inhabited, and whereas we then kept reſidence with our Court, and having taken an Oath, which is requiſite in the Premiſſes, and the Information by us heard and received, as the common report goeth, in the parts whereas the ſaid Sir John dwelleth (fortifying himſelf in his ſaid Caſtle) defending his Opinions manifoldly, contemning the Keys of the Church and the Archbiſhops power; we therfore cauſed the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, Cited as is aforeſaid, to be openly with a loud voice called by the Crier; and ſo being called, long looked for, and by no means appearing, we judged him (as he was no leſs worthy) obſtinate, and for puniſhing of his ſaid obſtinacy we did then and there Excommunicate him. And foraſmuch as by the order of the Premiſſes, and other evident tokens of his doings, we underſtand that the ſaid Sir John for the defence of his errors doth fortify himſelf (as is aforeſaid) againſt the Keys of the Church, by preſence whereof a vehement ſuſpition of Hereſie and Schiſm riſeth againſt him; We have Decreed, if he may be apprehended, again perſonally to Cite him, or elſe, as before, by an Edict, that he ſhould appear before us the Saturday next after the Feaſt of St. Matthew the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt next coming, to ſhew ſome reaſonable cauſe, if he can, why he ſhould not proceed againſt him, to a more grievous puniſhment, as an open Heretick, Schiſmatick, and open Enemy of the univerſal Church. And perſonally to declare why he ſhould not be pronounced ſuch an one, or that the aid of the Secular Power ſhould not be ſolemnly required againſt him. And further to anſwer, do, and receive as touching the Premiſſes, whatſoever Juſtice ſhall require. The which time being come, that is to ſay, the Saturday next after the Feaſt of St. Matthew, being the twenty fourth day of September, Sir Robert Morley Knight, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, appeared perſonally before us, ſitting in the Chapter-houſe of the Church of St. Paul at London, with reverend fellow-brethren and Lords, Richard by the Grace of God Biſhop of London, and Henry Biſhop of Winchester, and brought with him Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, and ſet him before us (for a little before he was taken by the Kings ſervants, and caſt into the Tower:) unto which Sir John Oldcaſtle ſo perſonally preſent we rehearſed all the order of the Proceſs, as it is contained in the Acts of the day before paſſed, with good and modeſt words and gentle means; that is to ſay, how he the ſaid Sir John was detected and accuſed in the Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy of our ſaid Province, as is aforeſaid, upon the Articles before-rehearſed, and how he was Cited, and for his contumacy Excommunicate. And when we were come to that point we offered our ſelves ready to Abſolve him. Notwithſtanding the ſaid Sir John not regarding our offer, ſaid, That he would willingly rehearſe before us, and my ſaid fellow Brethren, the Faith which he held and affirmed. So he having his deſire, and obtaining licenſe, took out of his Boſom a certain Schedule indented, and there openly read the contents of the ſame, and delivered the ſame Schedule unto us, and the Schedule of the Articles whereupon he was examined, which was in form following:

The Keys of the Church falſly wreſted.

The Lord Cobham Excommunicated.

The Lord Cobham caſt into the Tower.

The tears of the Crocodile.

Popiſh Abſolution neglected.

The Catholick Faith and Confeſſion of the Lord Cobham.

I John Oldcaſtle, Knight, Lord of Cobham, deſire to make manifeſt unto all Chriſtians, and God to be taken to witneſs, that I never thought otherwiſe, or would think otherwiſe (by Gods help) than with a ſtedfaſt and undoubted Faith to embrace all thoſe his Sacraments which he had Inſtituted for the uſe of his Church.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

Furthermore, that I may the more plainly declare my mind in theſe 4 points of my Faith; firſt of all I believe the Sacrament of the Altar to be the Body of Chriſt under the form of Bread, the very ſame Body which was born of his Mother Mary, Crucified for us, dead and buried, roſe again the third day, ſitteth on the right hand of his Immortal Father, now being a triumphant partaker with him of his Eternal Glory. Then as touching the Sacrament of Penance, this is my belief, that I do think the correction of a ſinful life to be moſt neceſſary for all ſuch as deſire to be ſaved, and that they ought to take upon them ſuch Repentance of their former life, by true confeſſion, unfeigned contrition, and lawful ſatisfaction as the Word of God doth preſcribe unto us; otherwiſe there will be no hope of Salvation.

Of Penance.

Of Images.

Thirdly, As touching Images, this is my Opinion, That I do judge them no point of Faith, but brought into the World after the Faith of Chriſt by the ſufferance of the Church, and ſo grown in uſe, that they might ſerve for a Kalender for the Lay-people and ignorant; by the beholding whereof they might the better call to remembrance the godly Examples and Martyrdom of Chriſt and other holy men: But if any man do otherwiſe abuſe this repreſentation, and give the reverence unto thoſe Images, which is due unto the holy men whom they repreſent, or rather unto him to whom the holy men themſelves owe all their honour, ſetting all their truſt and hope in them which ought to be refered unto God: or if they be ſo affected toward the dumb Images, that they be in any behalf addict unto them, either be more addicted unto one Saint than another, in my mind they do little differ from Idolatry, grievouſly offending againſt God the Author of all honour.

Laſt of all I am thus perſwaded, That there be no inhabitants here in Earth, but that we ſhall paſs ſtraight either to life or puniſhment: for whoſoever doth ſo order his life that he ſtumbleth at the Commandments of God, which either he knoweth not, or he will not be taught them, it is but in vain for him to look for Salvation, although he run over all the corners of the World. Contrariwiſe, he which obſerveth his Commandments cannot periſh, although in all his life time he walked no Pilgrimage, neither to Rome, Canterbury, nor Compoſtella, or to any other place, whither the common people are accuſtomed to walk.

Of Pilgrimages.

This Schedule, with the Articles therein contained, being read (as is aforeſaid) by the ſaid Sir John, we with our fellow Brethren aforeſaid; and many other Doctors and learned men had conference upon the ſame, and at the laſt by the counſel and conſent of them, we ſpake theſe words following unto the ſaid Sir John there preſent: Behold Sir John, there are many good and Catholick things contained in this Schedule; But you have at this time to anſwer unto other matters which ſavour of Errors and Hereſies: Whereunto (by the conſent of this Schedule) it is not fully anſwered, and therefore you muſt anſwer thereunto, and more plainly expreſs and declare your Faith and Opinions as touching thoſe points in the ſame Bill; that is to ſay, Whether you hold, believe, and affirm, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Conſecration rightly done, there remaineth material Bread or not.

See whether theſe men pick quarrels where they need not.

Item, Whether you hold, believe, and affirm, that it is neceſſary in the Sacrament of Penance for a man to confeſs his ſins unto a Prieſt appointed by the Church.

The which Articles in this manner delivered unto him, amongſt many other things he anſwered plainly, That he would make no other declaration or anſwer thereunto than was contained in the ſaid Schedule. Whereupon we favouring the ſaid Sir John, with benign and gentle means we ſpake unto him in this manner: Sir John take heed, for

for if you do not plainly anſwer to theſe things which are objected againſt you, within a lawful time now granted you by the Judges, we may declare you to be an Heretick: but the ſaid Sir John perſevered as before, and would make no other anſwer. Conſequently notwithſtanding, we together with our ſaid fellow Brethren, and others of our Counſel, took advice, and by their counſel declared unto the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, what the ſaid holy Church of Rome in this matter, (following the ſaying of bleſſed St. Auguſtine, Hierom, Ambroſe, and other holy men) hath determined, the which determinations every Catholick ought to obſerve. Whereupon the ſaid Sir John anſwered, That he would believe and obſerve whatſoever the holy Church determined, and whatſoever God would he ſhould obſerve and believe. But that he would in no caſe affirm, that our Lord the Pope, the Cardinals, Archbiſhops, and Biſhops or other Prelates of the Church, have any power to determin any ſuch matters. Whereunto, we yet favouring him, under hope of better adviſement promiſed the ſaid Sir John, that we would give him in writing certain determinations upon the matter aforeſaid, whereunto he ſhould more plainly anſwer, written in Latin, and for his better underſtanding tranſlated into Engliſh: whereupon we commanded and heartily deſired him, that againſt Monday next following he ſhould give a plain and full anſwer: the which determination we cauſed to be tranſlated the ſame day, and to be delivered unto him the Sunday next following. The tenor of which determinations here follow in this manner:

Here is no mention made of the Word of God.

Wolves cloathed in ſheeps skins

The ſum of the Popiſh belief.

The Faith and Determination of the holy Church upon the holy Sacrament of the Altar is this: That after the Conſecration done in the Maſs by the Prieſt, the material Bread ſhall be changed into the material Body of Chriſt; and the material Wine into the material Blood of Chriſt; therefore after the Conſecration there remaineth no more any ſubſtance of Bread and Wine, which was there before. What do you anſwer to this Article?

Confeſſion.

And the holy Mother-Church hath determined, that every Chriſtian dwelling upon Earth ought to confeſs his ſins unto a Prieſt Ordained by the Church if he may come unto him. How think you by this Article?

The Popes ſupremacy.

Chriſt Ordained St. Peter his Vicar on Earth, whoſe Seat is in the Church of Rome, giving and granting the ſame Authority, which he gave unto Peter, alſo to his ſucceſſors, which are now called Popes of Rome, in whoſe power it is to Ordain and Inſtitute Prelates in particular Churches, as Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Curates, and other Eccleſiaſtical Orders, unto whom the Chriſtian people owe obedience, according to the Tradition of the Church of Rome. This is the determination of the holy Church: What think you by this Article?

Pilgrimage.

Beſides this the holy Church hath determined, That it is neceſſary for every Chriſtian to go on Pilgrimage to holy places, and there ſpecially to worſhip the holy Relicts of the Apoſtles, Martyrs, Confeſſors, and all Saints whomſoever the Church of Rome hath allowed: What think you of this Article?

Upon which Monday being the five and twentieth day of the ſaid Month of September, before us and our fellow Brethren aforeſaid, having alſo taken unto us our reverend Brother Benedict, by the Grace of God, Biſhop of Bangor, and by our Commandment our Counſellers and Miniſters M. Hen. Ware Official of our Court of Canterbury, Philip Morgan Doctor of both Laws, Howel Kiffin Doctor of the Decretals, John Kempe and William Carlton Doctors of Law, John Witnam, Thomas Palmer, Robert Wombwell, John Withe, and Robert Chamberlain, Richard Dotington, and Tho. Walden, profeſſors of Divinity; alſo James Cole, and John Stevens our Notaries appointed on this behalf: They all and every one being Sworn upon the Holy Goſpel of God, laying their hands upon the Book, that they ſhould give their Faithful Counſel in and upon the matter aforeſaid, and in every ſuch cauſe, and to the whole World: By and by appeared Sir Robert Morley Knight, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, and brought with him the foreſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, ſetting him before us. Unto whom we gently and familiarly rehearſed the Acts of the day before paſſed. And as before we told him that he both is and was Excommunicate, requiring and entreating him that he would deſire and receive in due form the abſolution of the Church. Unto whom the ſaid Sir John then and there plainly anſwered, That in this behalf he would require no Abſolution at our hands, but only of God. Then afterward by gentle and ſoft means we deſired and required him to make plain anſwer unto the Articles which were laid againſt him. And firſt of all, as touching the Sacrament of the Altar. To the which Article, beſides other things, he anſwered and ſaid thus: That as Chriſt being here on Earth had in him both Godhead and Manhood; notwithſtanding, the Godhead was covered and inviſible under the humanity; the which was manifeſt and viſible in him: ſo, likewiſe in the Sacrament of the Altar there is the very Body and very Bread, Bread which we do ſee, the Body of Chriſt hidden under the ſame, which we do not ſee. And plainly he denied, that the Faith as touching the ſaid Sacrament determined by the Romiſh Church and holy Doctors, and ſent unto him by us in the ſaid Schedule, was the determination of the holy Church. But if it be the determination of the Church, he ſaid that it was done contrary unto the Scriptures, after the Church was endowed, and after that Poyſon was poured into the Church, and not afore. Alſo, as touching the Sacrament of Penance and Confeſſion, he plainly ſaid and affirmed then and there, that if any Man were in any grievous ſin, out of the which he knew not how to riſe, it were expedient and good for him to go unto ſome holy and diſcreet Prieſt to take counſel of him: But that he ſhould confeſs his ſin to any proper Prieſt or to any other, although he might have the uſe of him, it is not neceſſary to Salvation, foraſmuch as by only contrition ſuch ſin can be wiped away, and the ſinner himſelf purged. As concerning the worſhipping of the Croſs, he ſaid and affirmed, that the only Body of Chriſt which did hang upon the Croſs, is to be worſhipped; foraſmuch as that Body alone was and is the Croſs, which is to be worſhipped.

{KING Hen. 5.}

The Sacrament both Body and Bread in divers reſpects.

How confeſſion is to be allowed.

And being demanded what honour he would do unto the Image of the Croſs, He anſwered by expreſs words, That he would only do it that honour that he would make it clean and lay it up ſafe. As touching the Power and Authority of the Keys, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates, he ſaid, That the Pope is very Antichriſt, that is, the head; that the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates be his members, and that the Friers be his tail. The which Pope, Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, a man ought not to obey, but ſo far forth as they be followers of Chriſt and of Peter, in their life, manners, and converſation, and that he is the ſucceſſor of Peter which is beſt and pureſt in life and manners. Furthermore, the ſaid Sir John, ſpreading his hands, with a loud voice ſaid thus to thoſe which ſtood about him: Theſe Men, which judge and would condemn me, will ſeduce you all and themſelves, and will lead you unto Hell; therefore take heed of them. When he had ſpoken thoſe words, we again, as oftentimes before, with lamentable countenance, ſpake unto the ſaid Sir John, exhorting him with as gentle words as we might, that he would return to the unity of the Church, to believe and hold that which the Church of Rome doth believe and hold. Who expreſly anſwered, That he would not believe or hold otherwiſe than he had before declared. Wherefore, we perceiving, as it appeared by him, that we could not prevail, at the laſt with bitterneſs of heart we proceeded to the pronouncing of a definitive Sentence in this manner:

What honour is to be done to the Croſs.

The Pope is Antichriſt, the Biſhops are his members, and the Friers his tail.

The bold talk of the Lord Cobham.

℣ In the Name of God, Amen. We Thomas by the permiſſion of God, Archbiſhop and humble Miniſter of the holy Church of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, in a certain cauſe or matter of Hereſie upon certain Articles, whereupon Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, Lord Cobham, before us in the laſt Convocation of our Clergy of our Province of Canterbury holden in the Church of St. Paul in London, after diligent inquiſition thereupon made, was detected and accuſed, and by our ſaid Province notoriouſly and openly defamed. At the requeſt of the whole Clergy aforeſaid thereupon made to us in the ſaid Convocation, with all favour poſſible that we might (God we take to witneſs) lawfully proceeding againſt him, following the footſteps and example of Chriſt, which would not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould be converted and live, we have endeavoured by all ways and means we might or could to reform him, him, and rather reduce him to the Unity of the Church, declaring unto him what the holy univerſal Church of Rome doth teach, hold, and determin in this behalf. And albeit that we found him wandring aſtray from the Catholick Faith, and ſo ſtubborn and ſtiff-necked, that he would not confeſs his Error, or clear himſelf thereof, to deteſt the ſame; notwithſtanding we favouring him with a fatherly affection, and heartily wiſhing and deſiring his preſervation, prefixed him a certain competent time to deliberate with himſelf; and, if he would, to repent and reform himſelf. And laſt of all, forſomuch as we perceived him to be unreaſonable, obſerving chiefly thoſe things which by the Law are required in this behalf, with great ſorrow and bitterneſs of heart we proceeded to the pronouncing of the Definitive Sentence in this wiſe.

The universal Church, meaneth by a figure the part for the whole.

The Name of Chriſt being called upon, ſetting him only before our eyes. Foraſmuch as by act enacted, ſigns exhibited, evidences and divers tokens, beſides ſundry kind of proofs, we find the ſaid Sir John to be and have been an Heretick, and a follower of Hereticks in the Faith, and obſervation of the Sacred univerſal Church of Rome, and ſpecially as touching the Sacraments of the Euchariſt and of Penance; and that as the ſon of iniquity and darkneſs he hath ſo hardened his heart, that he will not underſtand the voice of the Shepherd, neither will be allured with his monitions, or converted with any fair ſpeech: having firſt of all ſearched and ſought out, and diligently conſidering the merits of the cauſe aforeſaid, and of the ſaid Sir John, his deſerts and faults aggravated through his damnable obſtinacy; Not willing that he that is wicked ſhould become more wicked, and infect other with his contagion, by the counſel and conſent of the reverend Men of profound wiſdom and diſcretion, our Brethren the Lords Richard Biſhop of London, Henry Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Benedict Biſhop of Bangor, and alſo of many other Doctors of Divinity, the Decretals and Civil Law, and of many other Religious and Learned perſons our aſſiſtants, we have judged and declared ſententially, and definitively condemned the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, Lord Cobham, being convict in, and upon that moſt deteſtable guilt, not willing penitently to return unto the unity of the Church, and in thoſe things which the Sacred univerſal Church of Rome doth hold, teach, determin, and ſhew forth. And eſpecially as one erring in the Articles above-written, leaving him from henceforth as an Heretick unto the Secular judgment.

So did the phariſees deliver Chriſt unto Pilate.

Moreover, we have Excommunicated, and by theſe writings do pronounce and Excommunicate him as an Heretick, and all other which from henceforth, in favour of his error, ſhall receive, defend, or give him counſel, or favour, or help him in this behalf, as favourers, defenders, and receivers of Hereticks. And to the intent that theſe Premiſes may be known unto all faithful Chriſtians, we charge and command you, that by your ſentence definitive you do cauſe the Curates which are under you, with a loud and audible voice in their Churches, when as moſt people is preſent, in their Mother-Tongue, through all your Cities and Dioceſes to publiſh and declare the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, as is before ſaid, to be by us condemned as an Heretick, Schiſmatick, and one erring in the Articles aboveſaid; and all other which from henceforth in favour of his errors ſhall receive or defend him, giving him any counſel, comfort, or favour in this behalf, to be Excommunicate as receivers, favourers, and defenders of Hereticks; as is more effectually contained in the Proceſs. That by ſuch means the erroneous Opinions of the people (which peradventure hath otherwiſe conceived the matter) by thoſe declarations of the truth, how the matter is, may be cut off. The which thing alſo we will and command to be written and ſignified by you, word for word, unto all our fellow Brethren, that they all may manifeſt, publiſh, and declare throughout all their Cities and Dioceſs; the manner and form of this our Proceſs, and alſo the Sentence by us given, and all other ſingular the contents in the ſame. And likewiſe cauſe it to be publiſhed by their Curates which are under them, as touching the day of receipt of theſe Preſents, and what you have done in the Premiſes, how you and they have executed this our Commandment. We will that you and they duly and diſtinctly certify us the buſineſs being done, by your and their Letters Patents, according to this Tenor. Dated in our Manner of Maidſtone, the 10*th* of October, An. 1413, and in the 18*th* year of our tranſlation.

Thus have you here the judicial Proceſs of the Biſhops againſt this moſt noble Chriſtian Knight, deſcribed by their own Letters and ſtyle. After all this, the ſentence of death being given, the Lord Cobham was ſent away, Sir Robert Morley carrying him again unto the Tower, where after he had remained a certain ſpace, in the night ſeaſon, (it is not known by what means) he eſcaped out and fled into Wales, where he continued by the ſpace of four years.

Sir Robert Morley. The Lord Cobham returned again to the Tower.

A defence of the Lord Cobham, againſt Nicholas Harpsfield, ſet out under the name of Alanus Copus.

AS I was entring into this ſtory of the Lord Cobham, after the tractation of all the former Hiſtories hitherto paſſed, having next to ſet upon this preſent matter, luckily, and as God would, in ſuch opportunity of ſeaſon, as God may ſeem to work himſelf for defence of his Saints, cometh to my hands a certain Book of new-found Dialogues, compiled in Latin by Nicholas Harpsfield, ſet out by Alanus Copus, an Engliſh-man, a perſon to me unknown, and obſcure hitherto unto the World, but now to purchaſe himſelf a name with Eroſtratus, or with the Sons of Enachim, cometh out not with his five Eggs, but with his ſix railing Dialogues. In the which Dialogues the ſaid Alanus Copus Anglus (whether he under the armour of other, or other under title of his name, I know not, nor paſs not) uncourteouſly behaving himſelf, intemperately abuſing his Time, Study, and Pen, forgetting himſelf, neglecting all reſpect of honeſty, and mild modeſty, neither dreading the ſtroke of God, nor paſſing for ſhame, neither favouring the living, nor ſparing the dead, who being alive as they never offended him, ſo now cannot anſwer for themſelves being gone; thus provoking both God and man againſt him, after an unſeemly ſort, and with a foul mouth and ſtinking breath, rageth and fareth againſt dead mens aſhes, taking now the ſpoil of their good name, after their Bodies lie ſlain in the field; his Gall and Choler being ſo bitter againſt them, that he cannot abide any memory after them to remain upon Earth. Inſomuch that for the hatred of them he ſpurneth alſo againſt me, and ſlieth in my face, for that in my Acts and Monuments, deſcribing the Hiſtory of the Church, I would ſay any thing in the favour of them, whom the Romiſh Catholicks have ſo unmercifully put to death. The anſwer to whoſe Book although it would require a ſeveral tractation by it ſelf (as if Chriſt grant ſpace and leiſure hereafter it ſhall not be forgotten) yet becauſe ſuch opportunity of the Book is offered to me at this preſent coming now to the matter of the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton and other, with whom he firſt beginneth to quarrel, it ſhall be requiſite a little by the way to cope with this Cope, whatſoever he be, ſo much as truth ſhall give me for their defence to ſay ſomething. And here to cut off all the offals of his railing talk and unhoneſt rebukes, which I leave to ſcolds and men of his profeſſion againſt they lift to brawle, let us briefly and quietly conſider the matter for diſcuſſing of the truth. Wherein firſt I ſhall deſire the Reader with equality and indifferency to hear both the parties to ſpeak, as well what the Martyrs hence gone and ſlain could ſay for themſelves, if they were preſent, as alſo what this man here doth object againſt them now being gone. And ſo according to the ſame to judge both upon them as they deſerve, and of me as they ſhall pleaſe.

Alanus Copus Anglus with his ſix Dialogues. Eroſtratus to get him a fame ſet Dianaes Temple on fire. Alanus Copus Anglus intemperately abuſeth his Pen.

Copus a barker againſt dead men.

Anſwer to Alanus Copus.

Indifferency of the Reader craved.

Now to the ſcope of Maſter Cope's matter, which is this: whether this foreſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle Lord Cobham (firſt to begin with him) is rather to be commended for a Martyr, or to be reproved for a Traitor? And whether that I in writing of him, and of Sir Roger Acton, with other moe in my former Edition, have dealt fraudulently, and corruptly, in commending them in theſe Acts and Monuments, or no? Touching the diſcuſſion whereof, firſt I truſt the gentle M. Cope, my friend, neither will nor well can deny any part of all that hitherto, touching the ſtory of the Lord Cobham, hath been premiſed; who yet all this while was neither Traitor to his Country, nor Rebel to his Prince, as by the courſe of his Hiſtory hitherto the Reader may well underſtand. Firſt, in the time of King Henry the fourth, he was ſent over to France to the Duke of Orleans;

Whether the Lord Cobham be to be judged a Traitor or a Martyr.

The Lord Cobham true and obedient to King Henry the fourth. The Lord Cobham in the beginning favoured of King Henry the 5. The Kings displeasure procured against the Lord Cobham by Popish Prelates. The Lord Cobham obedient to the King. The Lord Cobham constant in his Faith to the sentence of death.

Orleans; he did obey. Afterward, King Henry the fifth coming to the Crown, he was of him likewise well liked and favoured, until the time that Thomas Arundel with his Clergy, complaining to the King, made bate between them. Then the Lord Cobham being Cited by the Archbishop, at his Citation would not appear. But sent for by the King, he obeyed and came. Being come, what lowly subjection he shewed there to the King, the story declareth. After he yielded an obedient confession of his Faith; it would not be received. Then did he appeal to the Bishop of Rome, for the which the King took great displeasure with him, and so was he repealed by the King to the Archbishop, and committed to the Tower; which also he did obey. From thence he was brought to his Examination once or twice: there like a constant Martyr, and witness of the truth, he stood to his Confession, and that unto the very Sentence of death defined against him. If this be not the effect of a true Martyr, let Alanus Copus say what he will, or what he can: This I say, at least I doubt, whether the said Alanus Copus Anglus, put to the like trial himself, would venture so narrow a point of Martyrdom for his Religion, as this Christian Knight did for his. Certes it hath not yet appeared.

To proceed, after this deadly sentence was thus awarded against him, the said Lord Cobham was then returned again unto the Tower; which he with patience and meekness did also obey; from the which Tower if he afterward by the Lords Providence did escape, whether hath Alanus Copus herein more to praise God for offering to him the benefit, or to blame the Man for taking that which was offered? What Catholick in all Loven, having his House over his head on fire, will not be glad to have, if he might, the door set open to fly the peril? or else why did Alanus Copus fly his Country, having so little need, if this man bleeding almost under the Butchers Axe, might not enjoy so great an offer of so lucky deliverance?

Thus hitherto, I trust, the cause of the Lord Cobham standeth firm and strong against all danger of just reprehension. Who being, as ye have heard, so faithful and obedient to God; so submiss to his King; so sound in his Doctrine; so constant in his cause; so afflicted for the truth; so ready and prepared to death, as we have sufficiently declared, not out of uncertain and doubtful Chronicles, but out of the true Originals and Instruments remaining in ancient Records: What lacketh now, or what should let to the contrary, but that he declaring himself such a Martyr, that is, a witness to the verity, (for the which also at last he suffered the fire) may therefore worthily be adorned with the title of Martyr, which is in Greek as much as a witness-bearer?

The Lord Cobham worthy the name of a Martyr. The name of a Martyr what it signifieth.

Calumnia.

But here now steppeth in Dame ἡ διαβολὴ, with her cousin scold Alecto, &c. who neither learning to hold her Tongue, nor yet to speak well, must needs find her a knot in a Rush, and beginning now to quarrel, inferreth thus: But after (saith he) that the Lord Cobham was escaped out of the Tower, his fellows and confederates, convented themselves together seditiously against the King, and against their Country. A great crime no doubt, M. Cope, if it be true; so if it be not true, the greater blame returneth unto your self, so to enter this Action of such slander, unless the ground whereupon ye stand be sure. First, what fellows of the L. Cobham were these you mean of? Sir Roger Acton ye say, Master Brown, and John Beverly, with thirty six other, hanged and burned in the said Field of St. Giles's A marvellous matter, that such a great multitude of twenty Thousand, specified in story, should rise against the King, and yet but three persons only known and named. And then to proceed further, I would ask of Master Cope what was the end of this Conspiracy, to rebel against the King, to destroy their Country, and to subvert the Christian Faith, for so purporteth the story? As like true the one as the other. For even as it is like that they being Turks went about to destroy the Faith of Christ wherein they died, and to subvert their Country wherein they were bred; even so like it is that they went about to destroy the King, whom God and their Conscience taught to obey.

Sir Roger Acton Knight, Master John Brown, Esq; Jo. Beverly, preacher.

Yet further proceeds this furnish promoter in his accusation, and saith moreover, That these foresaid fellows and adherents of the Lord Cobham were in the Field assembled, and there incamped in a great number against the King; and how is this proved? By Robert Fabian. Which appeareth to be as true as that which in the said Robert Fabian followeth in the same place, where he affirmeth, that John Cledon and Richard Turmin were burnt in the same year, being 1413, when indeed by the true Registers they were not burnt before the year of our Lord 1415. But what will Master Cope say, if the Original Copy of the Indictment of these pretensed Conspirators do testify that they were not there assembled or present in the field, as your accusation pretendeth? But they purposed (you will say) and intended to come. The purpose and intent of a mans mind is hard for you and me to judge, whereas no fact appeareth. But give their intent was so to come, yet might they not come to those Thickets near to the Field of St. Giles, having Beverly their preacher with them (as ye say your self) as well to pray and to preach in that worthy place, as to fight? Is this such a strange thing in the Church of Christ in time of persecution, for Christians to resort in desolate Woods and secret Thickets, from the sight of Enemies, when they would assemble in praying and hearing the Word of God? In Queen Mary's time was not the same colour of Treason objected against George Egle, and other moe, for frequenting and using into backsides and fields, who suffered for that whereof he was innocent and guiltless? Did not Adam Damlip die in like case of Treason, for having a French Crown given him at his departure out of Rome by Cardinal Pool? What cannot cankred Calumnia invent, when she is disposed to cavil? It was not the Cardinals Crown that made him a Traitor, but it was the hatred of his preaching that stirred up the accuser.

KING Hen. 5. Rob. Fabian proved with an untruth

An untruth in Al. Cop.

Praying and preaching in back corners a common thing in time of persecution. Ill will taketh all things to worst meaning.

In France what assemblies have there been in late years, of good and innocent Christians congregating together in back fields and coverts in great routs, to hear the preaching of Gods Holy Word, and to pray; yea, and not without their weapon also, for their own safegard, and yet never intended nor minded any Rebellion against their King. Wherefore in cases of Religion it may and doth happen many times that such Congregations may meet without intent of any Treason meant. But howsoever the intent and purpose was of these foresaid Confederates of the Lord Cobham, whither to come, or what to do (seeing this is plain by Records, as is aforesaid, that they were not yet come unto the place) how will M. Cope now justify his words, so confidently affirming, that they were there assembled seditiously together in the Field of St. Giles against the King? And mark here, I beseech thee, gentle Reader, how unlikely and untidely the points of this tale are tied and hanged together (I will not say without all substance of truth, but without all fashion of a cleanly lie;) wherein these accusers in this matter seem to me to lack some part of Sinons art, in conveying their Narration so unartificially. First, say they, The King was come first, with his Garison, unto the Field of St. Giles, and then after the King was there incamped, consequently the fellows of the Lord Cobham, the Captain being away, came and were assembled in the same Field where the King was, against the King, and yet not knowing of the King, to the number of twenty Thousand, and yet never a stroke in that Field given. And furthermore, of all this 20000 aforesaid, never a mans name known but only three, to wit, Sir Roger Acton, Sir John Brown, and John Beverly, a preacher. How this jear is clampered together let the Reader judge, and believe as he seeth cause.

Another untruth Al. Copr.

An unlikely tale.

But give all this to be true, although by no demonstration it can be proved, yet by the Popes dispensation, which in this Earth is almost Omnipotent, be it granted, that after the King had taken the Field of St. Giles before, the Companions of the Lord Cobham afterward coming and assembling in the Thickets near the said Field, to fight seditiously against the King, their Country, and against the Faith of Christ, to the number of Twenty thousand, where no stroke being given, so many were taken, that all the Prisons of London were full, and yet never a mans name known of all this multitude, but only three; all this I say being imagined to be true, then followeth to be demanded of M. Cope, whether the Lord Cobham was here present, with his company in the Field, or not? Not in person (saith Cope) but with his mind and with his counsel he was present, and addeth this reason, saying, And therefore he being brought again after his escape, was convict both of Treason and Heresie, and therefore sustaining a double puniſhment, was both hanged and burnt for the ſame, &c. And how is all this proved? By Robert Fabian he ſaith. Whereunto briefly I anſwer, that Robert Fabian in that place maketh no ſuch mention of the Lord Cobham aſſiſting or conſenting to them either in mind or in counſel. His words be theſe, That certain adherents of Sir John Oldcaſtle aſſembled in the field near to St. Giles, in great number, of whom was Sir Roger Acton, Sir John Brown, and John Beverly. The which with thirty ſix moe in number were after convict of Hereſie and Treaſon, and for the ſame were hanged and burnt within the ſaid field of S. Gyles, &c. Thus much in Fabian touching the commotion and condemnation of theſe men; but that the Lord Cobham was there preſent with them in any part, either of conſent or counſel, as Alanus Copus Anglus pretendeth, that is not found in Fabian, but is added of his liberal cornucopiæ, whereof he is ſo copious and plentiful, that he may keep an open Shop of ſuch unwritten untruths, which he may afford very good cheap, I think, being ſuch a plentiful Artificer.

Alan. Copus taken with another untruth.

But here will be objected againſt me the words of the Statute made the ſecond year of King Henry the 5th. whereupon this adverſary triumphing with no little glory, ὅσπερ τι λαμπρὸν ἀνελόμενος thinketh himſelf to have double vantage againſt me; firſt in proving theſe foreſaid Complices and Adherents of the Lord Cobham to have made inſurrection againſt the King, and ſo to be Traitors. Secondly, in convicting that to be untrue, where in my former Book of Acts and Monuments I do report, how that after the death of Sir Roger Acton, of Brown and Beverley, a Parliament was holden at Leiceſter, where a Statute was made to this effect; That all and ſingular ſuch as were of Wickliffs learning, if they would not give over (as in caſe of felony and other treſpaſſes, loſing all their goods to the King) ſhould ſuffer death in two manner of kinds, that is, they ſhould firſt be hanged for Treaſon againſt the King, and then be burned for Hereſie againſt God.

The former edition of Acts and Monuments page 175.

Whereupon it remaineth now in examining this objection, and anſwering the ſame, that I purge both them of Treaſon, and my ſelf of untruth, ſo far as truth and fidelity in Gods cauſe ſhall aſſiſt me herein. Albeit in beginning firſt my Hiſtory of Eccleſiaſtical matters, wherein I have nothing to do with debatement of cauſes judicial, but only following the ſimple narration of things done and executed; I never ſuſpected that ever any would be ſo captious with me, or ſo nice noſed, as to preſs me with ſuch narrow points of the law, in trying and diſcuſſing every cauſe and matter ſo exactly, and ſtraining, as ye would ſay, the bowels of the Statute law ſo rigorouſly againſt me; yet forſomuch as I am thereunto conſtrained now by this adverſary, I will firſt lay open all the whole Statute made the 2d year of this foreſaid Henry the Fifth, after the death of the foreſaid Sir Roger Acton and his fellows, at the Parliament holden at Leiceſter, Anno 1415. That done, I will note upon the words thereof, ſo as by the circumſtances of the ſame may appear, what is to be concluded, either for the defence of their innocency, or for the accuſation of this adverſary. The tenor and purport of the Statute hereunder enſueth.

And that the aforeſaid Juſtices have full power to enquire of all ſuch eſcapes and breaking of Priſons, and alſo of the Lands, Tenements, Goods and Chattels, of ſuch perſons indicted. Provided, that if any ſuch perſon indicted do not return unto the ſaid Priſon, and dieth (not being convict;) that then it ſhall be lawful for his heirs to enter into the Lands and Tenements of his or their anceſtour, without any other ſute made unto the King for their cauſe. And that all thoſe which have Liberties or Franchiſes Royal in* England, as the County of Cheſter, the County and Liberty of Durham, and other like; And alſo the Lords which have Juriſdictions and Franchiſes Royal in Wales, where the Kings Writs do not run, have like power to execute and put in execution in all points, theſe Articles by them or by their Officers in like manner, as do the Juſtices and other the Kings Officers above declared.

Notes upon the Statute aforeſaid.

Thus having recited the words of the Statute, now let us conſider the reaſons and objections of this adverſary, who, grounding peradventure upon the Preface or Preamble of this foreſaid Statute, will prove thereby the Lord Cobham and Sir Roger Acton, with the reſt of their labetors, to have been Traitors to their King and their Country. Whereunto I anſwer, firſt in general, that although the face or Preface prefixed before the Statute, may ſhew and declare the cauſe and occaſion original why the Statute was made, yet the making of the Statute importeth no neceſſary probation of the Preface always to be true that goeth before; which being but a colour to induce the making thereof, giveth no force material thereunto, nor is any neceſſary part of the body of the ſaid Statute; but only adhereth as a Declaration of the circumſtance thereof, and ſometime is clean omitted, and differeth much from the ſubſtance of the ſame. For as Statutes in Civil Policy moſt commonly do tend to a publick end, and are general; ſo Prefaces before Statutes, which moſt commonly declare the cauſe or beginning thereof, are private; and do ſtand only but upon particular facts; which either of ill will or diſpleaſure may be ſuggeſted, or by colour may be exaggerated, or for fear may be believed, at leaſt ſuſpected, as many ſuſpicions do oft times riſe in Princes heads through falſe ſurmiſes, and malicious complaints of certain evil diſpoſed about them, whereby many cruel Laws, riſing upon a falſe ground, are promulgate to the ruine of much innocent bloud. Example whereof we have not only in this preſent Statute, Anno ſecundo Regis Henrici 5. but alſo in the like Statute, commonly called the Statute Ex officio vel de comburendo, made by this Kings Father and Predeceſſor, Anno ſecundo Henrici quarti, cap. 5. In the Preface of which bloudy Statute is contained another like complaint of the Prelates and Clergy, not only as heinous, but alſo as ſhamefully falſe and untrue, againſt the poor Lollards, as by the words of the complaint may appear, beginning, Excellentiſſimo & Gratioſiſſimo Principi, &c. Wherein moſt falſly they ſlander and miſreport the true ſervants of Chriſt to be Lollards, Hereticks, Subverters of the Commonwealth, deſtroyers of the Chriſtian Faith, enemies to all good Laws, and to the Church of Chriſt. The words of which Statute, proceeding much after the like courſe as doth this preſent Statute, may eaſily bewray the untruth and falſe ſurmiſe thereof, if thou pleaſe (gentle Reader to mark and conſer the words according as they are there to be read and ſeen, as followeth; Conventicu-las & confederationes faciunt, ſcholas tenent & exercent, libros conficiunt atque ſcribunt, populum nequiter inſtruunt & informant, & ad ſeditionem ſeu inſurrectionem excitant, quantum poſſunt, & magnas diſſenſiones in populo faciunt, & alia diverſa enormia auditui horrenda indies perpetrant, in Fidei Catholicæ, & Eccleſiæ ſubverſionem, divinique cultus diminutionem, ac etiam deſtructionem ſtatus, jurium, & libertatum dictæ Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ. And after a few words, Ad omnem juris & rationis ordinem atque regimen, penitus deſtruendum, &c. He that is or ſhall be acquainted with old Hiſtories, and with the uſual practices of Satan the old enemy of Chriſt, from the firſt beginning of the Primitive Church, unto this preſent time, ſhall ſee this to be no news, but a common, and as one would ſay, a Quotidian Fever among Chriſts children, to be vexed with falſe accuſations and cruel ſlanders.

Prefaces before Statutes not to be regarded in trial of truth.

Nemeſion the Egyptian, and true Martyr of Chriſt, was he not firſt accuſed to be a Felon? And when that could not be proved, he was condemned at the ſame judgment for a Chriſtian; and therefore being caſt into bands, was ſcourged, by the commandment of the Preſident, double to the other Felons, and at length was burned with the Thieves, although he never was found Thief nor Felon.

Againſt Cyprian in like ſort it was ſlanderouſly objected by Galenus Maximus Proconſul, Quod diu ſacrilegia mente vixerit, & nefariæ ſibi conſpirationis homines adjunxerit, That he had long continued with a mind full of Sacriledge, and that he had gathered unto him men of wicked conſpiracy.

So Juſtinus Martyr, what falſe and criminous accuſations ſuffered he by Creſcens? Cornelius Biſhop of Rome and Martyr, was accuſed of Decius, Quod ad Cyprianum literas daret contra remp. i.e. That he wrote Letters unto Cyprian againſt the Commonwealth.

To conſider the Laws and Statutes made by Tyrants and Emperors in the firſt Perſecution of the Primitive Church, againſt the innocent ſervants of Chriſt, and to compare the ſame with the Laws and Statutes in this later Perſecution under Antichriſt; a man ſhall find, that as they agree all in like cruelty, ſo was there no great difference in falſe forging of pretended cauſes and crimes deviſed. For as then the Chriſtians were wrongfully accuſed of the Gentiles for Inſurrections and Rebellions againſt the Emperors and Empire, for being enemies to all mankind, for murdering of Infants, for worſhipping the Sun (becauſe they prayed toward the Eaſt) for worſhipping alſo the Head of an Aſs, &c. upon the rumors whereof divers and ſundry Laws and Statutes were enacted, ſome ingraven in braſs, ſome otherwiſe wrote againſt them; ſo in this foreſaid Statute, Anno 2. Hen. 5. cap. 7. Alſo Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. and in ſuch other Statues or Indictments made and conceived againſt the Lollards, the caſe is not ſo ſtrange, but it may credibly be ſuppoſed, that the making thereof did riſe rather upon malice and hatred againſt their Religion conceived, than upon any juſt cauſe miniſtred of their parts, whom they did wrongfully charge and accuſe. Like as in the time of Domitianus, for fear of David's ſtock, all the Nephews of Jude the Lords Brother in the fleſh were accuſed to the Emperor. And alſo the like fear and hatred ſtirred up other Emperors, and the Senate of Rome, to proceed with perſecuting Laws againſt the Chriſtian flock of Chriſt; Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 21. whereupon roſe up thoſe malicious ſlanders, falſe ſurmiſes, infamous lies, and wrongful accuſations againſt the Chriſtians; ſo that what crimes ſoever malice could invent, or raſh ſuſpicion could miniſter, that was imputed againſt them.

Fear and hatred cauſers of perſecution.

Not unlike alſo it may ſeem, that the Pope with his Prelates, fearing and miſdoubting leſt the proceeding of the Goſpel preached by theſe perſons, ſhould overthrow the ſtate of their Majeſty, did therefore by ſiniſter accuſations inflame the hearts of Princes againſt them, and under ſome coloured covert, to ſhadow their cloaked hatred, deviſed theſe and other like crimes which were not true, but which might cleanly ſerve their purpoſe.

The matter debated by Records, whether the Lord Cobham and Sir Roger Acton were Traitors or not.

This hitherto have I ſaid as in a general ſum, anſwering to the Preamble of the foreſaid Statute, for the defence of Sir John Oldcaſtle and Sir Roger Acton, and other, as not defining preciſely what was, or was not (for here I may ſay with Hall, that as I was not preſent at the deed doing, ſo with him, I may alſo leave the ſame at large:) But as one by tracing the foottſteps of the truth, as by all conjectures hunting out in this matter what is moſt like, would but only ſay my mind ſine ſtrepitu (as Lawyers ſay) & ſine figura judicii.

Now conſequently it followeth that we deſcend to the ſpecial points and particulars of the foreſaid Preamble; to conſider what thereof may be collected, or neceſſarily is to be judged, either for proof or diſproof of this foreſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle and his fellows.

(A) Rumors, Congregations, Inſurrections.

(A) And firſt, where the proem of this Statute beginneth with Rumors, Congregations and Inſurrections, &c. As it is not like, that if theſe men had intended any forcible Entries or Rebellion againſt the King, they would have made any rumors thereof before the deed done; ſo is it more credibly to be ſuppoſed, all theſe flouriſhes of words to be but words of courſe, or of office, and to ſavour rather of the rankneſs of the inditers Pen, who diſpoſed either per amplificationem rhetoricam, to ſhew his Copy, or elſe per maliciam papiſticam, to aggravate the crime, and to make mountains of molehills, firſt of Rumors maketh Congregations, and from Congregations riſeth up to Inſurrections; whereas in all theſe Rumors, Congregations and Inſurrections, yet never a blow was given, never a ſtroke was ſtricken, no bloud ſpilt, no furniture nor inſtruments of war, no ſign of Battel, yea no expreſs ſignification either of any rebellious word, or malicious fact deſcribed, neither in Records, nor yet in any Chronicle. Again, if theſe Rumors were words ſpoken againſt the King, as calling him a Tyrant, an Uſurper of the Crown, the Prince of Prieſts, &c. why then be none of theſe words expreſſed in their Indictments, or left in Records? doth Mr. Cope think for a man to be called a Traitor, to be enough to make him a Traitor, unleſs ſome plain and evident proof be brought for him to be ſo indeed, as he is called? Rumors (ſaith he) Congregations and Inſurrections were made. Rumors are uncertain; Congregations have been, and may be among Chriſtian men in dangerous times for good purpoſes, and no Treaſon againſt their Princes meant. The term of Inſurrections may be added ἐκ τοῦ ἀφέλου by practice, or ſurmiſe of the Prelates and Pen-men, who to bring them the more in hatred of the King, might add this rather of their own gentleneſs, than of the others deſerving. Certain it is, and undoubted, that the Prelates in thoſe days, being ſo mightily inflamed againſt theſe Lollards, were not altogether behind for their parts, nor utterly idle in this matter, but practiſed againſt them what they could, firſt to bring them into hatred, and then to death.

Examples of which kind of practice among the Popiſh Clergy have not lacked neither before nor ſince. Moreover, if theſe men had made ſuch a rebellious Inſurrection againſt the King, as is pretended in the Preamble before this Statute, which were a matter of High Treaſon; how chanceth then, that the whole body of the Statute, following after the ſaid Preface or Preamble, runneth in all the parts or branches thereof, both in matter of arreſt, of indictment, information, requeſt, allowance of Officers, cogniſance of Ordinaries, of the foreſact, &c. upon caſes of Hereſie and not of Treaſon, as by particular tractation ſhall be (Chriſt willing) declared.

Inſurrections of the Lollards againſt the King not likely.

And forſomuch as theſe men be ſo grievouſly accuſed of Alanus Copus, for congregating and riſing againſt their King, and the whole Realm, if I had ſo much leiſure to defend, as he hath pleaſure to diffame; here might be demanded of him, to keep him ſome further play (touching this mighty Inſurrection, whereas they came in number twenty thouſand againſt the King) in what order of Battel-ray they marched, what Captains, under-Captains, and petty Captains they had to guide the Wings, and to lead the Army? whether they were Horſemen or Footmen? If they were Horſemen (as is pretended) what meant they then to reſort to the Thickets near to S. Giles's Field, which was no meet place for Horſes to ſtir? If they were Footmen, how ſtandeth that with the Author, which reporteth them to be Horſemen? Moreover, it is to be demanded, what Enſigns or Flaggs, what Shot, what Powder, what Armour, Weapons, and other furniture of War; alſo what Treaſure of Mony to wage ſo many, to the number of 20000, what Trumpets, Drums, and other noiſe neceſſary for the purpoſe they had? All theſe preparations for ſuch an enterpriſe requiſite and neceſſary to be had. And peradventure, if truth were well ſought, it would be found at length, that inſtead of Arms and Weapons, they were coming only with their Books, and with Beverly their Preacher into thoſe Thickets. But as I was not there preſent at the fact (as is before ſaid) ſo have I neither certainty to define upon their caſe, nor yet Maſter Cope, to exclaim againſt them, unleſs peradventure, that he, taking an occaſion of the time, will thus argue againſt them; that becauſe it was the hot Month of January, the ſecond day after the Epiphany, therefore it is like, that Sir John Oldcaſtle, with twenty thouſand Lollards, camped together in the Fields in all the heat of the Weather, to deſtroy the King and all the Nobles, and to make himſelf Regent of England; and why not as well the King, as Regent of England, ſeeing all the Nobles ſhould have been deſtroyed, and he only left alone to reign by himſelf?

(B) Aſlander of the Lord Cobham, that he intended to deſtroy Chriſtian Faith.

It followeth more in the Preamble of the foreſaid Statute, (B) to adnul, deſtroy and ſubvert the Chriſtian Faith, and the Law of God, and Holy Church, &c. He that was the forger and inventer of this report, as it appeareth to proceed from the Prelates, ſeemeth no cunning Dædalus, nor half his Craftſmaſter in lying for the Whetſtone. Better he might have learned of Simon in Virgil, more artificially to have framed and conveyed his narration. Which although in no caſe could ſound like any truth; yet ſome colour of probability ſhould have been ſet upon it, to give it ſome countenance of a like tale: As if he had firſt declared the Lord Cobham to have been before in ſecret confederacy with the great Turk; or if he had made him ſome Termagant or Mahound out of Babylonia, or ſome Herod of Judea, or ſome Antichriſt out of Rome, or ſome Grand-pancht Epicure of this World, and had ſhewed, that he had received Letters from the great Soldan, to fight againſt the Faith of Chriſt, and Law of God; then had it appeared ſomewhat more credible, that the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, with his Sect of Hereſie, went about to adnul, deſtroy and ſubvert the Chriſtian Faith and Law of God, within the Realm of England, &c.

But now, where will either he or Mr. Cope, find men ſo mad to believe, or ſo ingenious, that can imagine this to be true, that the Lord Cobham, being a Chriſtian, and ſo faithful a Chriſtian, would or did ever cogitate in his mind to deſtroy and adnul the Faith of Chriſt in the Realm of England? Whatſoever the report of this purſuant or Preface ſaith, I report me unto the indifferent Reader, how ſtandeth this with any face of truth? That he which before, through the reading of Wickliff's Works, had been ſo earneſtly converted to the law of God, who had alſo approved himſelf ſuch a faithful ſervant of Chriſt, that for the faith of Chriſt he being examined and tried before the Prelates, not only ventured his life, but ſtood conſtant unto the ſentence of death deſtined againſt him; being a condemned and a dead man by law, Et qui quantum ad ejus devotionem pertinet & timorem, paſſus ſit quicquid pati potuit, who had, as much as to devotion and fear appertained, ſuffered already what he might or could ſuffer, as Cyprian ſaid by Cornelius; That he, I ſay, which a little before, in the Month of September, ſtood ſo conſtant in defence of Chriſts faith, would now in the Month of January riſe to deſtroy, adnul, and ſubvert Chriſts faith, and the Law of God, and holy Church within the Realm of England?

How can it be, not likely only, but poſſible to be true, that he which never in all the time of his life denied the faith; which ever confeſſed the faith ſo conſtantly; which was for the ſame faith condemned; yea, and at laſt alſo, burned for the faith, would ever fight againſt the faith and law of God, to adnull and ſubvert it? Let us proceed yet further, and ſee when he ſhould have ſo deſtroyed and adnulled the chriſtian faith and law of God in England, what faith or law then could he, or did he intend to bring into the Realm of England? the Turks faith? or the Jews faith? or the Popes faith? or what faith elſe I pray you? for he that will be an enemy to the faith of Chriſt, and will ſhew himſelf a friend to no other faith beſides, I account him not out of his right faith, but out of his right wits.

(C) The Lord Cobham falſly ſlandered for intending to deſtroy the King.

(C) And therefore, even as it is true, that Sir John Oldcaſtle with his Confederates and Abettors were up in Arms to ſubvert and extinguiſh the faith of Chriſt and law of God in the Realm of England, ſo by the like truth it may be eſteemed, that the ſame perſons roſe alſo to deſtroy their ſovereign Lord the King and his brethren. Firſt, thanks be to God, that neither the King nor any of his brethren had any hurt by him. But his intent, ſaith the Preface, was to deſtroy their ſovereign Lord the King. Whereunto I anſwer with this interrogatory, whether was his intent privily to have deſtroyed him, or by open force of Arms? If privily, what needed then ſuch a great Army of 20000 Men, to atchieve that ſecret feat? rather I would think that he needed more the help of ſuch as were near about the King; as ſome of the Kings privy Chamber, or ſome of his ſecret Council; whereof neither Chronicle nor Record doth inſinuate any mention. If his intent was openly to invade the King; you muſt underſtand, Mr. Cope, that to withſtand a King in his own Realm, many things are required, long time, great preparation, many friends, great aſſiſtance, and aid of Kindred, Mony, Horſe, Men, Armour, and all other things appertaining for the ſame.

How unlike it is that the Lord Cobham did riſe againſt the King.

Examples what an hard matter it is to riſe againſt the King.

Earl Goodwin of Weſtſax, who had married Canutus daughter, being a Man both ambitious, and as falſe a Traitor, for all his ſix Sons, and great Alliance, yet durſt not ſet upon King Edward to invade him in his Realm, although he ſought many occaſions ſo to do, yet never durſt he enterpriſe openly that which his ambition ſo greatly preſumed unto.

The Nobles againſt King Henry 3d.

In the time of King Henry the 3d. Simon Montfort Earl of Gloceſter, Gilbert Clare Earl of Leiceſter, Humfrey Rone Earl of Ferrence, with a great number of Lords and Barons, thought themſelves to have great right on their ſides; yet durſt they not, for all their power, openly aſſail the King in his Realm, before great debatement and talk firſt had between.

The Nobles againſt King Edward 2d.

Likewiſe what murmuring and grudging was in the Realm againſt King Edward, the ſecond, among the Peers and Nobles, and alſo Prelates (only Walter Biſhop of Coventry except) firſt for Gaveſtone, then for the Spencers, at what time Tho. Earl of Lancaſter, Guido Earl of Warwick, with the moſt part of all other Earls and Barons, concordly conſenting together to the diſplacing firſt of Gaveſtone, then of the Spencers, yet neither raſhly, nor without great fear, durſt ſtir up War in the Land, or diſquiet or vex the King, but firſt by all means of moderate counſel, and humble Petition, thought rather to perſwade, than to invade the King.

The Nobles againſt King Richard 2d.

In like manner, and with like grudging minds, in the Reign of King Richard the Second, Tho. Woodſtock Duke of Gloceſter, the Kings Uncle, with the Earls of Arundel, of Warwick, and Darby, with the power almoſt of the whole Commons, ſtood up in Arms againſt the King; and yet notwithſtanding, all their power joyned together being ſo great, and their cauſe ſeeming to them ſo reaſonable, yet were they not ſo hardy, ſtraightways to fly upon the King, but by way of Parliament thought to accompliſh that which their purpoſe had conceived, and ſo did, without any War ſtriking againſt the King.

The Nobles againſt King Henry 4th.

After King Richard the Second was depoſed, and was in Priſon yet living, divers Noblemen were greatly inflamed againſt King Henry the fourth, as Sir John Holland Earl of Huntington, Thomas Spencer Earl of Gloceſter, the Earls likewiſe of Kent and of Saliſbury, with Sir John Cheiney, and other more, whereof divers had been Dukes before, and now depoſed by King Henry the 4th. although they had conceived in their hearts great grudge and malice againſt the ſaid King Henry, yet had they neither heart nor power openly with mans force to aſſail the King, but ſecretly were compelled to atchieve their conceived intent, which notwithſtanding they could not accompliſh. Ex hiſt. D. Alban.

The inſurrection of the Lord Cobham againſt the King, ſlayed by circumſtance.

Thus you may ſee, Maſter Cope, or elſe Maſter Harpsfield, or whatſoever ye be, to gainſtand a King, and with open force to encounter with him in his own Land, and in his own Chamber of London, where he is ſo ſure and ſtrong, what a matter, and of how great chievance it is, wherein ſo many and ſo great difficulties do ly, the attempt ſo dangerous, the chances ſo uncertain, the furniture of ſo many things required, that ſcarce in any Kings days heretofore any Peers or Nobles of the Realm, were they never ſo ſtrongly aſſiſted with power, wit or counſel, yet either were able, or elſe well durſt ever to enterpriſe upon a caſe ſo dangerous, notwithſtanding they were of themſelves, never ſo far from all fear of God, and true obedience. And ſhall we then think, or can we imagine (Mr. Cope) that Sir John Oldcaſtle, a Man ſo well inſtructed in the knowledge of Gods Word, being but a poor Knight by his degree, having none of all the Peers and Nobles in all the World to joyn with him, being Priſoner in the Tower of London a little before in the Month of December, could now in the Month of January, ſo ſuddenly, in ſuch an hot ſeaſon of the year, ſtart up an Army of 20 thouſand fighting Men to invade the King, to kill two Dukes his brethren, to adnul Chriſtian Faith, to deſtroy Gods Law, and to ſubvert holy Church? And why doth not he add moreover, to ſet alſo all London on fire, and to turn all England into a Fiſh-pool? Belike theſe Men, which give out theſe figments of Sir John Oldcaſtle, did think him to be one of Deucalion's ſtock, who by caſting of ſtones over his ſhoulder, could by and by make Men at his pleaſure, or elſe that he had Cadmus Teeth to ſow, to make ſo many Harveſt men to ſtart up at once.

A rebellion to be of 20000, and yet no Country to be known from whence they came, it is not like.

But let us conſider yet further of theſe 20 thouſand Soldiers, ſo ſuddenly without wages, without victual, or other proviſion congregated together, what they were, from whence, out of what Quarter, Country or Countrys they came. In other Kings days, whenſoever any Rebellion was againſt the King, moved by the Commons, as when Jack Straw, and Wat Tiler of Kent, and Eſſex roſe in the time of King Richard the 2d. When William Mandevil of Abington, Jack Cade of Kent, in the time of King Henry the 6th. In the time of King Henry the eighth, when the commotion was of Rebels in Lincolnſhire, then in Yorkſhire. When in King Edward the 6th time, Humphrey Arundel in Devonſhire, Captain Kette in Northfolk made ſtir againſt the King, the Country and parts from whence theſe Rebels did ſpring, were both noted and alſo defamed. In this ſo traiterous commotion therefore, let us now learn what theſe men were, and from what Country or Countrys in all England they came. If they came out of any, let the Chronicles declare what Countrys they were. If they came out of none (as none is named) then let them come out of Eutopia, where, belike, this figment war firſt forged and invented. Wherefore ſeeing neither the Countrys from whence they came, nor yet the names of any of all theſe 20000 do appear what they were, either in Chronicle or in Record, but remain altogether unknown, I leave it (gentle Reader) to thy judgment, to think thereupon, as thy wiſdom ſhall lead thee.

Never was any Rebellion of Commons in England, but the ſpecial Country from whence they came was noted and known.

(D) It

KING Hen. 5.

(D) Another falſe report of Sir John Oldcaſtle, that he intended to kill all manner of eſtates in the Realm.

(D) It followeth more in the foreſaid Preface; And to deſtroy all other manner of eſtates of the ſame Realm of England, as well Spiritual as temporal, &c. By the courſe of this Preamble it appeareth, that the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle was a wonderful cruel Tyrant and Murderer, who being not yet ſatisfied with the bloud of the King, nor of the two Dukes his brethren, would alſo make havock and ſweep-ſtake of all manner of Eſtates in the Realm of England. What and leave no manner of Eſtate alive? No, neither Lord Spiritual nor Temporal, but all together ſhall be deſtroyed. And what had all theſe Eſtates done, thus ſo miſerably to be deſtroyed? Although perchance, the mood of this man might have been incenſed and kindled againſt the King, and the Lords Spiritual, by whom he had been condemned, as is aforeſaid; yet why ſhould all other manner of other Eſtates both ſpiritual and temporal be killed? If none of all the Eſtates in England, neither Duke, Earl, Baron, Lord, Knight, or other Gentleman had been his friend, but all his enemies, how then is it like, that he having all the Eſtates, Peers, Nobles and Gentlemen of the Realm againſt him, and none to ſtand with him, either could or durſt attempt any commotion againſt the whole power of the Land, he being but only Gentleman only, with Sir Roger Acton, and Mr. Brown left alone? At leaſt, good reaſon yet would, that thoſe hundred Knights ſhould have been ſpared out of this bloudy ſlaughter, whom he offered to reduce unto the King, before, for his purgation. And finally, if this was his purpoſe, that all theſe Eſtates both ſpiritual and temporal ſhould have been cut down, what needed then that he ſhould have made himſelf a Regent, when as he might as well have made himſelf a King, or what elſe he would, being left then Prince alone?

(E) An hard matter to deſtroy all policy and laws of a Land.

(E) The Preamble as it began with untruth, and continued in the ſame figure, heaping one untruth upon another; ſo now endeth with another miſreport as untrue as the reſt, ſhewing and declaring that the intent of Sir John Oldcaſtle was alſo, To deſtroy all manner of policy, and finally, the Laws of the Land, &c. We read of William the Conqueror, otherwiſe named William Baſtard, who being a puiſſant Duke in his Country, when that the Crown of England was alotted to him, and he coming over with all his Peers, Nobles and Barons of his whole Land, into this Realm, and had with great difficulty obtained Victory againſt King Harold; yet to alter and deſtroy the policy and the Laws of the Land, it paſſeth his power. Inſomuch that it had not been permitted unto him to have proceeded ſo far as he did, unleſs he had firſt ſworn to the Nobles of this Land, to retain ſtill the laws of King Edward, as he found them. And albeit he afterward forſware himſelf, breaking his Oath in altering and changing many of the foreſaid Laws, yet will he, nill he, he could not ſo deſtroy them all (for the which much war and great commotions endured long after in the Realm) but that he was conſtrained, and alſo contented to allow and admit a great part of the ſaid Laws of King Edward. And if he, being King and Conqueror, with all his ſtrength of Normans and Engliſhmen about him, was too weak and inſufficient to deſtroy all manner of policy and Laws of this Land which he had conquered; how much leſs then is it to be ſuppoſed that Sir John Oldcaſtle being but a private ſubject, and a poor Knight, and a condemned Priſoner, deſtitute and forſaken of all Lords, Earls and Barons, who to ſave his own life had more to do than he could well compaſs, would either take in hand, or conceive in his head any ſuch exploit, after the ſubverſion of Chriſtian Faith, and Law of God; after the ſlaughter of the King and all manner of Eſtates, as well ſpiritual as temporal, in the Realm of England, after the deſolation of holy Church, to deſtroy alſo all manner of policy, and finally, the Laws of the Land? Which monſtrous and incredible figments, how true it may ſeem to Mr. Cope, or to ſome other late Chroniclers of the like credulity, I cannot tell; certainly to me, and as I think, to all indifferent Readers, it appeareth as true as is the Verſe of the Satyr, wherewith it may well be compared;

Nil intra eſt oleam, nil extra eſt in nuce duri.

But here will it be ſaid again perhaps, that the matter of ſuch Preambles and Prefaces being but purſuants of Statutes, and containing but words of courſe, to aggravate and to give a ſhew of a thing which they would have to ſeem more odious to the people, is not ſo preciſely to be ſcanned, or exquiſitely to be ſtood upon, as for the ground of a neceſſary eaſe of truth. Objection.

This is it (Mr. Cope) that I ſaid before, and now do well grant and admit the ſame, that ſuch preambles or forefaces lined with a non ſequitur, containing in them matter but of ſurmiſe, and words of courſe, and rather monſters out of courſe, and many times riſing upon falſe information, are not always in themſelves material, or neceſſary probations in all points to be followed, as appeareth both by this Statute, and alſo by the Statute of this Kings Father, Anno 2. Henr. 4. cap. 15. beginning Excellentiſſimo, &c. And yet notwithſtanding, out of theſe ſame preambles, and forefronts of Statutes, and other Indictments, which, commonly riſing upon matter of information, run only upon words of courſe, of office, and not upon ſimple truth, a great part of our Chroniclers do often take their matter, which they inſert into their ſtories, having no reſpect or examination of circumſtances to be compared, but only following bare rumors, or elſe ſuch words as they ſee in ſuch fabling Prefaces or Indictments expreſſed. Whereby it cometh ſo to paſs, that the younger Chronicler following the elder, as the blind leading the blind, both together fall into the pit of error. And you alſo, Mr. Cope, following the ſteps of the ſame, do ſeem likewiſe to err together with them for good fellowſhip. And thus concerning the face of this Statute hitherto ſufficiently. Answer. Ex orig. ſtat. Hen. 4. c. 15. The reaſon and cauſe how Chroniclers oft times be deceived. Alan. Cope deceived by his Chroniclers.

Now let us conſider and diſcuſs in like manner firſt the coherence, then the particular contents of the ſaid Statute. As touching the which coherence, if it be well examined, a man ſhall find almoſt a Chimera of it, in which neither the head accordeth with the body, nor yet the branches of the Statute well agree with themſelves. Wherein he that was the drawer, or firſt informer thereof, ſeemeth to have forgot his Verſe and Art poetical.

Primum ne medio, medium ne diſcrepet imo.

For whereas the Preface of the Statute ſtandeth only upon matter of Treaſon, conceived by falſe ſuggeſtion and wrong information; the body of the ſaid Statute, which ſhould follow upon the ſame, runneth only upon matter of Hereſie pertaining to the Ordinaries, as by every branch thereof may appear.

(F) The body of the Statute. an. 2. Reg. Hen. 5. ca. 7. examined.

(F) For firſt, Where he ſaith, At the inſtance and requeſt of the Ordinaries or their Commiſſaries, &c. Hereby it appeareth, this to be no cauſe of Treaſon nor Felony. For that every man of duty is bound, and by the Laws of the Realm may arreſt and apprehend a Traitor, or a Felon, if he can; where otherwiſe by this Statute, an Officer is not bound to arreſt him which offendeth in caſe of this Statute, without requeſt made by the Ordinaries or their Commiſſaries; and therefore this offence ſeemeth neither to be Treaſon nor Felony.

(G) Secondly, Where it followeth, that the ſame Ordinaries and Commiſſaries do pay for their coſts, &c. This allowance of the Officers charges in this ſort proveth this offence neither Treaſon nor Felony. (G)

(H) Thirdly, Where the Statute willeth the King to be anſwered of the year, day and waſt, &c. By this alſo is proved the offence not to be Treaſon; for elſe in caſes of Treaſon, the whole inheritance, I trow, Mr. Cope (ſpeaking as no great skilful Lawyer) is forfeit to the Prince. (H)

(I) The Fourth Argument I take out of theſe words of the Statute, Whereas ſuch Lands and Tenements which are holden of the Ordinaries, are willed wholly to remain to the King, as forfeit, &c. Whereby it is manifeſt, that the Prelates (for their matter of Lollardy only) were the occaſioners and procurers of this Statute; and therefore were barred of the benefit of any forfeit riſing thereby, as good reaſon was they ſhould. And thus it is notorious, that the Preface running ſpecially and principally upon Treaſon, and the Statute running altogether upon points of Hereſie, do not well cohere nor joyn together. (I)

(K) (K) Fifthly, In that ſuch perſons indicted ſhall be delivered unto the Ordinaries of the places, &c. it cannot be denied, but that this offence concerneth no manner of Treaſon, forſomuch as Ordinaries cannot be Judges in caſes of Treaſon or Felony, by the laws of our Realm, Bract. in fine 1. lib.

(L) (L) Sixthly, By the Indictments provided not to be taken in evidence, but only for information, before the Judges Spiritual, &c. It is likewiſe to be noted, to what end theſe Indictments were taken; to wit, only to inform the Ordinaries, which cannot be in caſes of Treaſon.

(M) (M) Laſtly, Where it followeth toward the end of the Statute, touching eſcape or breaking of Priſon, &c. By this it my lightly be ſmelt, whereto all the purpoſe of this Statute driveth, that is, to the ſpecial eſcape of the Lord Cobham out of the Tower, to this end, to have his Lands and Poſſeſſions forfeit unto the King. And yet the ſame eſcape of the Lord Cobham, in this Statute conſidered, is taken by Mr. Juſtice Stanford, in libro primo, of the Pleas of the Crown, cap. 33. to be an eſcape of one arreſted for Hereſie, where he ſpeaketh of the caſe of the Lord Cobham.

John Stanf. of the Pleas of the Crown. lib. 1. cap. 33.

Moreover, as touching the parts of this foreſaid Statute, how will you joyn theſe two branches together, whereas in the former part is ſaid, That the Lands of ſuch perſons convict ſhall be forfeit to the King, not before they be dead; and afterward it followeth, That their goods and poſſeſſions ſhall be forfeit at the day of their arreſt to the King? But herein ſtandeth no ſuch great doubt, nor matter to be weighed; This is without all doubt, and notoriouſly, evidently, and moſt manifeſtly may appear, by all the arguments and whole purport of the Statute; That as well the Preamble and Preface thereof, as the whole body of the ſaid Statute, was made, framed and procured only by and through the inſtigation, information, and excitation of the Prelates and the Popiſh Clergy, not ſo much for any Treaſon committed againſt the King; but only for fear and hatred of Lollardy, tending againſt their Law, which they more dreaded and abhorred than ever any Treaſon againſt the Prince. And then to ſet the King and all the States againſt them, whereby the more readily to work their diſpatch, they thought it beſt, and none ſo compendious a policy, as prettily to joyn Treaſon together with their Lollardy; wherein the poor men once intangled, could no ways eſcape deſtruction. Papæ conſilium callidum.

The firſt procurers of this Statute.

Practice of Prelates to couple treaſon with hereſie.

This, Maſter Cope, have I ſaid, and ſay again, not as one abſolutely determining upon the matter. At the doing whereof, as I was not preſent my ſelf, ſo with your own Hall I may and do leave it at large, but as one leading the Readers by all conjectures and arguments of probability and of due circumſtance, to conſider with themſelves what is further to be thought in theſe old accuſtomed practices and proceedings of theſe Prelates. Proteſting moreover (Maſter Cope) in this matter to you, that thoſe Chronicles which you ſo much ground upon, I take them in this matter neither to be as witneſſes ſufficient, nor as judges competent. Who as they were not themſelves preſent at the deed done no more than I, but only following uncertain rumors, and words of courſe and office, bringing with them no certain trial of that which they do affirm, may therein both be deceived themſelves, and alſo deceive you and other which depend upon them.

And hitherto concerning this Statute enough. Out of which Statute you ſee (Mr. Cope) that neither your Chroniclers, nor you can take any great advantage, to prove any Treaſon in the Lord Cobham, or in his fellows, as hath been hitherto abundantly declared in the premiſſes.

Alan Copum pag. 833. l. 4.

It remaineth further, that foraſmuch as you in your ſixth Dialogue, with your Author Edward Hall, do alledge the Records, Et publica judicii Acta, to defame theſe men for Traitors (although what Records they be you bring forth never a word) I therefore in their defence do anſwer for them, which cannot now anſwer for themſelves. And becauſe you, to accuſe them, do mention a certain Record, and yet do not ſhew us what Record it is, and peradventure cannot, if ye would: I have taken the pains therefore, for the love of them whom you ſo hate, to ſearch out ſuch Records, whereby any occaſion can be raiſed againſt them. And firſt I will declare the Commiſſion granted, then the Indictment commenſed againſt them. {KING Hen. 5.}

The which Commiſſion and Indictment, albeit in countenance of words will ſeem to miniſter much ſuſpition againſt them, to the ſimple Reader, before he be better acquainted with theſe ſubtil dealings and practices of Prelates; yet truſting upon the goodneſs of the cauſe, which I ſee here ſo falſly and ſlightly to be handled, I nothing fear nor doubt to produce the ſame out of the Records in Latine as they ſtand; to the intent that when the crafty handling of the adverſaries ſhall be diſcloſed, the true ſimplicity of the innocent, to the true hearted Reader, may the more better appear. The words firſt of the Commiſſion here follow under written; which when thou ſhalt hear, let them not trouble thy mind, gentle Reader, I beſeech thee, before thou underſtand further, what packing and ſubtle conveyance lieth covered and hid under the ſame

By theſe high and tragical words in this Commiſſion ſent down againſt the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton and their fellows, it may peradventure ſeem to the ignorant and ſimple Reader, ſome heinous crime of Treaſon to reſt in them, for conſpiring againſt God, the Church, the King and their Country. But what cannot the fetching practice of the Romiſh Prelates bring about, where they have once conceived a malice? Wherefore marvel not (good Reader) at this, nor judge thou according to the words which thou heareſt, but ſuſpend thy judgment a while till the matter be more opened unto thee. Examples of like handling be not ſo rare, but thou mayſt ſoon judge by other times the like alſo of theſe. George Egle, of whom mention was made before, did but preach in time of Queen Mary, and yet Commiſſion was directed againſt him, as in caſe of raiſing up a commotion againſt the Queen. Adam Damlip in Calis did but preach, and the receiving of one poor Crown two years before at Rome, was enough to make him a Traitor. In time of

Examples of divers falſly accuſed for Treaſon.

King

KING Hen. 5.

King Henry the Eighth, one Cingleton, Chaplain to Queen Anne, the Queens Majesties Mother that now is, did but preach the Gospel, moved by zeal (as I have credible witness of his own Scholar that heard him speak it, being with him) and yet by vertue of a Commission it was objected to him, for raising up commotion against the King, yea, and also for killing of Pakington, and suffered for the same as a Traitor. So here, what matter or marvel is it, if the King incensed, or rather circumvented by the wrong information of the Prelates, whom he believed, gave out his Commission, against things never wrought nor thought?

Wherefore I exhort thee, Christian Reader, as I said before, judge not by and by the truth by the words of the Commission, but judge rather the words of the Commission by the truth. Neither measure thou the line by the stone, but the stone rather by the line. At least, yet defer thy sentence till both the Commission and the Indictment being laid together, thou mayst afterward see and perceive more what is to be judged in the case.

(A) In the mean season mark well these words of the King in this Commission, (A) Cum nos plenius informemur, &c. By the which words it is easie to be understood, that the King himself had no certain knowledge thereof, but only by information of others (of Bishops no doubt and Prelates) and thereupon gave forth his Commission aforesaid. And then how will this stand with our Chroniclers, and other Epitomes and Summaries, whom Master Cope doth alledge? for if it be certain that Robert Fabian saith, That the King himself being in the Field took certain of them, as Sir Roger Acton, Master Brown, and John Beverley; and your own Edward Hall also, and your Epitome agreeth to the same; and, saith moreover, that they were brought before the Kings presence: Thomas Cooper also, whom you alledge, addeth further, and saith, that the King there by strength did take them.

Our English Chronicles examined by the words of the Commission.

I pray you (Master Cope) what needed the King to write this by information, when as he himself was both present at the fact, was the taker of them, and a witness of the deed? The which if it be true that the King heard this but by way of information, how will you then defend your Chronicos and your Epitomas? But herein I will neither greatly stick with you, nor contend with them; desiring the Reader only to bear in mind the date of this present Commission when it was given, (B) which soundeth to be the 10th day of January, and afterward to compare the same with the date of the Indictment hereunder following, which I will (the Lord willing) also hereunto annex, leaving nothing out; yea rather, ministring to the adversary all manner of helps, whatsoever they can seek or require for their most advantage in this matter, to be desired. So sure and confident I am in the innocent cause of these good men, not fearing whatsoever blind malice can cavil against them.

Notis

Notes and Conſiderations upon the Indictment and Commiſſion above prefixed.

(A) Die Mercurii proximo poſt feſtum Epiphaniæ, &c.

(A) The firſt Note concerning the date and day both of the Commiſſion, and of the verdict of Jurors concurring on one day.

Firſt, here is to be noted and conſidered (good Reader) the day and date of giving out the Commiſſion, and then of the verdict preſented by the Jurors which was both in one day, that is, on the Wedneſday next after the Epiphany, in the firſt year of the reign of King Henry the Fifth, which was the tenth day of the month of January (as the date of the Commiſſion ſaith) Anno 1413, after the uſe of England, or after the Romiſh uſe, Anno 1414, ſo that after the uſe ever we count whether it be Anno 1413, or elſe Anno 1414, the Dominical Letter beginning at the firſt day of January to change, muſt needs be G. for the year, and ſo neceſſarily make Wedneſday next after the Epiphany to be the tenth day of the ſaid month of January. Thus then this preſent Wedneſday, which was the tenth day of the month, being well noted and borne in mind, on the which day both the Commiſſion was directed, and alſo the verdict preſented, let us now proceed further in the foreſaid Indictment. It followeth.

(B) Per Sacramentum xii. Juratorum extitit præſentatum, &c.

¶ If there had been true dealing in this, the Jurors ſhould have been named. But it is not like that there was ever any ſuch Indictment found by any Jurors, and therefore they did beſt not to name the Jurors, leſt they would have denied this Indictment to be their act. It followeth more in proceſs of the Indictment.

(C) The third argument, by making a Regent, the King being not yet gone over.

(C) Et dictum Joan. Oldcaſtle, Regentem ejuſdem regni conſtituere, &c.

¶ If there were no other argument this were ſufficient to prove the manifeſt untruth of this ſurmiſed Indictment, when as the King was not yet gone to France, nor determined to go, how could they conſpire then to make a Regent? For the King went in July following, viz. the ſecond year of his reign, leaving behind him the Queen his Mother-in-law for Regent, whereby it may be gathered, that this matter was untruly entred and ſtollen into the records with an antedate, or elſe at the leaſt there appeareth manifeſt untruth, that they ſhould conſpire to make a Regent, when a Regent was not thought upon, unleſs it were already run into the heads of the Clergy, who ſhortly after fearing their Temporalties, as Caxton ſaith, perſwaded the King to make Wars in France. This word Regent therefore proceedeth of the ſecret ſpirit of the Clergy, and maketh the whole matter very ſuſpitious to be grounded altogether upon the malice of the Clergy, and their untrue ſurmiſes. It followeth moreover.

(D) The fifth argument by contrariety.

(D) Quaſi gens ſine capite in finalem deſtructionem, &c.

¶ How doth this ſtand with that which goeth before, that they conſpired to make a Regent, except you will ſay, that to make a Regent is to be a people without an head? It followeth.

(E) The ſixth argument by the perſons unknown.

(E) Cum quamplurimis rebellibus dicti regis ignotis ad numerum viginti millium hominum, &c. ¶ A ſtrange matter, that they ſhould know of the conſpiracy of twenty thouſand, and yet know of no more names of the rebels but the Lord Cobham only, or one or two mo, and all the reſt were ignoti.

(F) The ſeventh argument by the unskilful penning.

(F) Privatim inſurgentes, &c. ¶ This ſmelleth of the Clergies own penning, without any great advice of learned Counſel; for otherwiſe ſuch as had been herein skilful would never have put in privatim inſurgentes.

(G) The eighth argument by the date and time.

(G) Die Mercurii proximo poſt feſtum Epiph. D. An. R. R. prædict. &c. ¶ This Wedneſday next after the Epiphany was the tenth day of the month of January, and the ſame day when both the conſpiracy was put in execution, and the ſame day when the Commiſſion was given out to enquire, alſo when the fact was by inquiry preſented. Whereby it may ſeem a ſtrange thing that ſo great a conſpiracy known before hand, was not ſuppreſſed nor inquired of by any Commiſſion, but only by a Commiſſion bearing date of the ſame day, upon which day, by the purport of the Indictment, the conſpiracy ſhould have been put in execution by open rebellion, as it is aforeſaid.

(H) Prædict. D. noſtrum regem, fratres ſuos, viz. Thom. Ducem Clarentiæ, Jo. de Lancaſtre, & Humfr. de Lancaſtre, &c. ¶ If the Kings learned Counſel had dealt in this Indictment, as in caſe of Treaſon they ſhould have done, if it had been a matter of truth they would never have handled it ſo ſlenderly, and wrongly, as to name the Dukes of Bedford and of Glocester, Joh. of Lancaſter, and Humfry of Lancaſter, who were made Dukes in the thirteenth year of the reign of King Henry the Fourth their Father, as appeareth by Caxtons Chronicle. (H) The ninth argument, by error and wrong naming the Dukes. KING Hen. 5.

(I) The tenth note or argument by the abſence of the party.

(I) Et ibidem verſus campum prædictum, modo guerrino arrayati proditorie, modo inſurrectiones, contra ligeantias ſuas equitaverunt ad debellandum dictum D. noſtrum regem, &c.

¶ This is falſified by plain evidence of Hiſtories, and Cope himſelf confeſſeth no leſs. For ſo he ſaith and confeſſeth, pag. 833. lin. 12. That Sir John Oldcaſtle was not there in perſon, but only that his conſent and good will was there.

The 11th note or argument.

Again, ſeeing this equitation or riding toward St. Giles field was upon the Wedneſday next after the Feaſt of Epiphany, as in this Indictment and proceſs of Outlawry is above teſtified, which was the tenth day of January, and Commiſſion alſo the ſame day was charged, and the Jury alſo impannelled the ſame day, and yet no Juror named; Item, the verdict the ſame day preſented; how all theſe can concur together, and all in one day, let the Reader after he have well conſidered the matter, uſe his judgment therein, not only whether it be like, but alſo whether it be poſſible.

The twelfth note or argument. The L. Cobham, Sir R. Acton, &c. proved no Traytors.

Over and beſide all this it is to be noted, that if this matter had been truly and duly handled, as touching the Treaſon, then had it not been needful to have brought Sir Jo. Oldcaſtle into the Parliament-Houſe before the Lords to be judged; for by his Outlawry (if it had been true) he was attainted, and without any more ado ſhould have had judgment in the Kings-Bench as a Traytor. But the chief Juſtice knowing the handling of the matter, durſt not belike enterpriſe ſo far. Wherefore it was deviſed that he ſhould certifie the record into the Parliament, which he did, together with the Biſhops ſentence filed to the record, which was very ſtrange.

And thereupon the Lords gave ſuch a judgment as was not due for a Traytor. For that they gave no judgment, that he ſhould be drawn, hanged, and let down alive, and then Bowelled and Quartered, which is the judgment of a Traytor. And albeit the Parliament might have attainted him without any more ado, and by the ſame Act of Attainder have ordained a ſpecial judgment, as they ſhould think good; yet when he was before attainted by the Outlawry, they could not lawfully vary from the common judgment of Treaſon. At leaſt how could or ſhould the judgment of Sir Roger Acton, Maſter Brown, and John Beverly, who were judged in the Guildhall before, and without the Parliament, vary from the ſaid common judgment of Traytors, if they had truly committed and been convicted of ſuch High Treaſon?

The 13th note or argument.

Add this moreover to the foreſaid notes; that if Sir John Oldcaſtle after his eſcape out of priſon, had been culpable, and ſo attainted of that High Treaſon, whereby his lands had been immediately forfeit unto the King by the proceſs of his Outlawry; what needed the King then in the ſecond year of his reign, in the Parliament after holden at Leiceſter, have made that proviſo to have his land forfeit to him by vertue of Parliament, upon his eſcape on the day of his arreſt, when as the lands and cattel of his had been forfeit before, by the proceſs of the Outlawry, as is before ſpecified?

Thus you ſee, M. Cope, how little vantage you can wreſt out of this Commiſſion and Indictment againſt the L. Cobham and his fellows, to prove them Traytors. And admit the ſaid L. Cobham was attainted of Treaſon by the Act, and that the King, the Lords, and the Commons aſſented to the Act; yet it bindeth not in ſuch ſort, as if indeed he were no Traytor, that any may not by ſearch of the truth utter and ſet forth ſincerely and juſtly the very true cauſe of his death.

Anſwer to the Allegations of Fab. Pa. Vin. Gil. and Hall, &c.

Thus then having ſufficiently cleared the L. Cobham and his partners, from all that you can object unto them out of records and ſtatutes; let us now come to your Engliſh Chronicles wherewith you ſeem to preſs me, and to oppreſs them, whom KING Hen. 5. whom ye name to be Rob. Fabian, Ed. Hall, Pol. Virgil, Tho. Cooper, Richa Grafton, with other brief Epitomes and Summaries, &c. Concerning which Authors as I have nothing to ſay, but to their commendations, in this place: ſo if that you had avouched the ſame to the commendation rather than to the reproof of other, I would better have commended your nature, and believed your cauſe. But now like a ſpider-catcher ſucking out of every one what is the worſt, to make up your leyſtall, you heap up a dunghill of durty Dialogues, containing nothing in them but malicious railing, virulent ſlanders, manifeſt untruths, opprobrious contumelies, and ſtinking blaſphemy, able almoſt to corrupt and infect the air. Such is the malady and cacoethes of your pen, that it beginneth to bark, before it hath learned well to write. Which of yours nevertheleſs I do not here reproach or contemn, as neither do I greatly fear the ſame. God of his mercy keep the ſword out of the Papiſts hand, it is not the pen of the Papiſts I greatly paſs upon, though twenty Copes and ſo many Surpleſſes were ſet againſt the Book of Monuments, were I ſo diſpoſed (M. Cope) to dally, or as the Greeks do ſay, ἀντιπαίξω, and to repay again as I am provoked. But in deſpiteful railing, and in this ſatyrical ſort of barking I give you over, and ſuffer you therein to paſs not only your ſelf, but alſo Cerberus himſelf, if ye will, the great bandog of Pluto.

Modeſty commended in Writers. Mildneſs and humanity rather beſeems and is the grace of the Latin phraſe. If ye could hit upon the vain thereof, it would win you much more honeſty with all honeſt men. But the Lord hereafter may call you, which I beſeech him to do, and to forgive you that you have done.

In the mean time ſeeing this your pratling pen muſt needs be walking, yet this you might have learned of theſe your own Authors whom you alledg, more civilly to have tempered your fume in exclaiming againſt them whoſe cauſe is to you not perfectly known. And now briefly to anſwer to theſe your foreſaid writers, as witneſſes produced againſt theſe men: there be two things (as I take it) in

Two things to be obſerved in ſtory Writers. Chronicle-writers to be conſidered; firſt the grounds which they follow: ſecondly, in what place they ſerve.

The ground of Hiſtories to be conſidered. As touching the order and ground of writing among theſe Chroniclers, ye muſt conſider, and cannot be ignorant, that as none of all theſe by you forenamed was preſent at the deed, nor witneſs of the fact, ſo have they nothing of themſelves herein certainly to affirm, but either muſt follow publick rumor and hear-ſay for their Author, or elſe one of them muſt borrow of another. Whereof neither ſeemeth to me ſufficient. For as publick rumor is never certain; ſo one Author may ſoon deceive another.

By reaſon whereof it cometh oft to paſs, that as theſe ſtory-writers hit many times the truth, ſo again all is not in the Goſpel that they do write: wherefore great reſpect is here to be had, either not to credit raſhly every one that writeth Stories, or elſe to ſee what grounds they have whom we do follow.

All things not true that be found in ſtories. Now to demand (M. Cope) of you, what authority or foundation hath your R. Fabian, hath Polyd. Virgil, Ed. Hall, and other of your Authors, to prove theſe men to be Traytors? What authority do they avouch? what Acts, what Regiſters, what Records, or out of what Court do they ſhew, or what demonſtration do they make? And do you think it ſufficient, becauſe theſe men do only affirm it, without further probation, with your ἔφησε ἴφυ, therefore we are bound to believe it? Take me not ſo M. Cope, that I do here diminiſh any thing, or derogate from the credit of thoſe writers you alledg, whoſe labours have deſerved well, and ſerve to great utility: but coming now to trial of a matter lying in controverſie between us, we are now forced to ſeek out the fountain and bottom of the truth, where it is not enough to ſay, ſo it is, but the cauſe is to be ſhewed why it is ſo affirmed. And what though Robert Fabian, Polydore Virgil, and Edward Hall ſhould altogether (as they do not) agree in the Treaſon of Sir John Oldcaſtle, and of the reſt? yet neither is this any ſufficient ſurety to prove them Traytors; conſidering that Writers of Stories for the moſt part following either blind report, or elſe one taking of another, uſe commonly all to ſound together after one tune, tanquam Dodonæi lebetes, ſo that as one ſaith, all ſay, and if one err, all do err. Wherefore you ſee Maſter Cope, how it is not ſufficient nor ſure to ſtick only to the names and authorities of Chronographers, unleſs the ground be found ſubſtantial whereupon they ſtand themſelves. Which yet in none of theſe whom you have produced doth appear.

Words without probation, are not ſufficient in ſtory matters.

Chroniclers how far, and to what effect they ſerve. Secondly, In alledging and writing of Chronicles, it is to be conſidered to what place and effect they ſerve. If ye would ſhew out of them the order and courſe of times, what years were of dearth and of plenty, where Kings kept their Chriſtmaſs, what Conduits were made, what Mayors and Sheriffs were in London, what Battels were fought, what Triumphs and great Feaſts were holden, when Kings began their reign, and when they ended, &c. In ſuch vulgar and popular affairs the narration of the Chronicler ſerveth to good purpoſe, and may have his credit, wherein the matter forceth not much whether it be true or falſe, or whether any liſteth to believe them. But whereas a thing is denied, and in caſes of judgment, and in controverſies doubtful, which are to be decided and boulted out by evidence of juſt demonſtration: I take them neither for Judges of the Bench, nor for arbiters of the cauſe, nor as witneſſes of themſelves ſufficient neceſſarily to be ſticked unto: albeit I deny not but Hiſtories are taken many times, and ſo termed for witneſſes of times, and glaſſes of antiquity, &c. yet not ſuch witneſſes as whoſe teſtimony beareth always a neceſſary truth, and bindeth belief.

Hiſtories not raſhly to be believed. The Two witneſſes which came againſt Suſanna being Senators, both of ancient years, bare a great countenance of a moſt evident teſtimony, whereby they almoſt both deceived the people, and oppreſſed the innocent, had not young Daniel by the holy ſpirit of God, taken them aſide, and ſeverally examining them one from the other, found them to be falſe lyers both; leaving to us thereby a leſſon of wholſome circumſpection, not raſhly to believe all that cometh, and alſo teaching us how to try them out. Wherefore (M. Cope) following here the like example of Daniel in trying theſe your records which ye infer againſt theſe men, we will in like manner examine them ſeverally one from another, and ſee how their teſtimony agreeth: firſt beginning with your R. Fabian. Which R. Fab. being neither in the ſame age, nor at the deed doing, can of himſelf give no credit herein, without due proof and evidence convenient.

The teſtimony of Fabian againſt the Lord Cobham examined. How then doth R. Fabian prove this matter of Treaſon to be true? what probation doth he bring? what authority doth he alledg? And doth R. Fabian think if he were not diſpoſed to conceive of the L. Cobham, and thoſe men, a better opinion but to be Traytors, that men are bound to believe him only at his word, without any ground or cauſe declared, why they ſhould ſo do, but only becauſe he ſo ſaith, and it pleaſed him ſo to write? And if ye think (M. Cope) the word only of this witneſs ſufficient to make authority, ſpeaking againſt the L. Cobham, and proving nothing which followed ſo many years after him; why may not I as well and much rather take the word and teſtimony of Richard Belward a Norfolk man of the Town of Criſam, who living both in his time, and poſſibly knowing the party, and puniſhed alſo for the like truth, is not reported, but recorded alſo in the Regiſters of the Church of Norwich, to give this teſtimony among other his articles, for the foreſaid L. Cobham, viz. that Sir John Oldcaſtle was a true Catholick man, and falſly condemned, and put to death without a reaſonable cauſe, &c. Ex regiſt. Norvic.

The teſtimony of Richard Belward for the Lord Cobham.

Ex Regiſt. Epiſc. Norv.

Againſt this man if you take exception, and ſay, that one Heretick will hold with another; why may not I with the like exception reply to you again, and ſay as well, one Papiſt will hold with another, and both conjure together, to make and ſay the worſt againſt a true Proteſtant?

Further, yet to examine this foreſaid Fabian, witneſs againſt Sir J. Oldcaſtle, as Daniel examined the witneſſes againſt Suſanna: I will not here ask under what Tree theſe Adherents of Sir J. Oldcaſtle conſpired againſt the King, and ſubverſion of the Land, but in what time, in what year and month this Conſpiracy was wrought? Fabian witneſſeth, that it was in the Month of January. Contrariwiſe, Ed. Hall, and other our abridgmenters following him, do affirm that they were condemned in the Guild-Hall the 12*th* of December, and that their execution upon the ſame was in January following, ſo that by their ſentence the fact was done either in the Month of December, or elſe before, and ſo Fabianus mentitus eſt in caput ſuum, ſet cum Daniele dicam, or if it were in the Month of January, as Fabian ſaith, then is Hall and his followers deceived, teſtifying the fact to be done in the Month of December.

Witneſſes againſt the Lord Cobham agree not together.

And

Fabian convict of a manifeſt untruth in his ſtory of the L. Cobham. Fab. part. 7 in vita Hen. 5. pag. 590.

And yet to object moreover againſt the ſaid Fabian, forſomuch as he is ſuch a raſh witneſs againſt theſe burned perſons, whom he called Traytors: it would be demanded further of him, or in his abſence of Mr. Cope, in what year this Treaſon was conſpired? If it were in the ſame year (as he confeſſeth himſelf) in which year John Cleidon the Skinner, and Rich. Tarmine Baker were burned, then was it neither in the month of January, nor in the firſt year of King Henry the Fifth; for in the Regiſter of Canterbury it appeareth plain, that John Cleidon was condemned neither in the time of Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop, nor yet in the firſt nor ſecond year of King Henry the Fifth, but was condemned in the ſecond year of the Tranſlation of Henry Chicheſly, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the 17 day of Auguſt, which was the year of our Lord 1415. So that if this conſpiracy was in the ſame year (after the witneſs of Fabian) in which year John Cleidon was burned, then doth the teſtimony of Fabian neither accord with other witneſſes, nor with himſelf, nor yet with truth. And thus much concerning the witneſs of R. Fabian.

Ex Regiſt. Archiep. Cant.

The teſtimony of Polydore examined.

Let us next proceed to Polydore Virgil, whoſe partial and untrue handling of our Hiſtory, in other places of his Books, doth offer to us ſufficient exception not to admit his credit in this: And yet becauſe we will rather examine him, than exclude him, let us hear a little what he ſaith, and how he faileth, and in how many points, numbring the ſame upon my five fingers.

Five untruths of Polydore noted in our ſtory.

First untruth.

First, ending with the life of King Henry the Fourth, he ſaith that he reigned fourteen years and ſix months, and two days, Angliæ Hiſtoriæ, Lib. 21. which is an untruth worthy to be puniſhed with a whole years baniſhment (to ſpeak after the manner of Apuleius) when as truth is, he reigned by the teſtimony of the ſtory of St. Albanes, of Fabian, of Hall, of our old Engliſh Chronicle, and of Scala Mundi, but thirteen and ſix months, lacking, as ſome ſay, five days; Hall ſaith he raigned but twelve years.

2. Untruth.

The ſecond untruth of Polydore is this, whereas he, ſpeaking of this ſedition of Sir John Oldcaſtle and his adherents, affirmeth the ſame to be done after the burning of John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, which was (ſaith he) Anno 1415, in which year (ſaith he) Thomas Arundel died. His words be theſe, In eodem concilio damnata eſt Johan. Wicliff. Hæreſis, ac Johan. Hus, & Hieronimus Pragenſis in ea urbe combuſti ſunt. Quod ubi reliquis conſociis, qui etiam tunc in Anglia erant, pateſit, tanquam furiis agitati primum conjurationes in omnes ſacerdotes, deinde in regem, &c. In which words he not only erreth, falſly aſſigning the cauſe and occaſion of this ſedition to the death of John Hus, and of Hierome, but alſo miſſeth as much in the order and computation of the years. For neither was Sir Roger Acton with his foreſaid fellows alive at the time of the Council; neither doth he agree therein with any of our Engliſh writers, except only with Hall, who alſo erreth therein as wide as he.

3,4. Untruth.

For the third and fourth untruth I note this, where he addeth and ſaith, that after this rebellion raiſed againſt the King, the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, being there preſent himſelf, was taken and priſoned in the Tower, and afterward eſcaped out of the ſaid Tower by night; wherein is contained a double untruth. For neither was Sir John Oldcaſtle there preſent himſelf, if we believe Fabian and Cope, Dial. 6. pag. 833. lin. 11. neither yet did he ever eſcape out of the Tower after that conſpiracy, if ever any ſuch conſpiracy was.

Copus pag. 833. lin. 11.

5. Untruth.

His fifth, but not the laſt untruth in Polydore, is this, that he ſaith, Tho. Arundel to have died in the ſame year, noting the year to be Anno 1415, whereas by the true Regiſters he died Anno 1414.

Another untruth in Polydore noted

To this untruth another may be joyned, where he erring in the computation of the years of the ſaid Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, reporteth him to ſit twenty two years. Who was there Archbiſhop but only eighteen years, as is to be ſeen in the Records of Canterbury. The words of Polydore be theſe, Thomas Arundelius Cantuarienſis antiſtes annum jam tunc ſedens ſextum & vigeſimum e vita exceſſit, lib. 22. Aug. Hiſt. Albeit in this I do not greatly contend with Polydore, and peradventure the adverſary will find ſome eaſie ſhift for this matter.

But let us now paſs from Polydore, not (as they ſay) out of the Hall into the Kitchin, but out of the Kitchin into the Hall, examining and perpending what ſaith Edward Hall another witneſs in this matter; upon whom Mr. Cope bindeth ſo faſt, that he ſuppoſeth his knot is never able to be looſed. And moreover he ſo treadeth me down under his feet in the dirt (as a man would think him ſome dirt-daubers ſon) ſo that the ſpots thereof, he ſaith, will never be gotten out while the world ſtandeth, and a day longer. Nothwithſtanding I truſt, Maſter Cope, that your dirty pen with your cockiſh brags hath not ſo debauded and beſpotted me, nor yet convicted me to be ſuch a depraver of Hiſtories. But I hope to ſponge it out. At leaſt way, with a little aſperges of the Popes holy water, I truſt to come to a Dealbabor well enough.

The teſtimony of Hall againſt the L. Cobh. examined.

But certes Mr. Cope, your Maſterſhip muſt firſt underſtand, that if ye think ſo to depreſs and diſprove me of untruth in my Hiſtory, you muſt go more groundly to work, and bring againſt me other Authors than Edward Hall. You muſt conſider Mr. Cope, if you be a controller of ſtory-matters, it is not enough for you to bring a railing ſpirit, or a mind diſpoſed to carp and cavil where any matter may be picked: diligence is required, and great ſearching out of Books and Authors, not only of our time, but of all ages. And eſpecially where matters of Religion are touched pertaining to the Church, it is not ſufficient to ſee what Fabian or what Hall ſaith; but the Records muſt be ſought, the Regiſters muſt be turned over, Letters alſo and ancient Inſtruments ought to be peruſed, and Authors with the ſame compared; finally, the Writers amongſt themſelves one to be conferred with another. And ſo with judgment matters are to be weighed, with diligence to be laboured, and with ſimplicity pure from all addition and partiality to be uttered.

Cope a carter of ſtories where of he hath no ſkill.

Thus did Aventinus, thus did Sleidanus, write. Theſe helps alſo the eldeſt and beſt Hiſtorians ſeemed to have, both Titus Livius, Saluſtius, Quintus Curtius, and ſuch like, as by their Letters and Records inſerted may well appear. The ſame helps likewiſe both in your Fabian and in your Edward Hall were to be required, but eſpecially in you (Mr. Cope) your ſelf, which take upon you ſo cockiſhly (rather than wiſely) to be a controller and maſter Moderator of other mens matters. In which matters (to ſay the truth) you have no great skill, and leſs experience, neither have you ſuch plenty of Authors meet for that purpoſe, nor yet ever travelled to ſearch out the origines and grounds of that whereof ye write. But only contented with ſuch as cometh next to hand, or peradventure, receiving ſuch Alms as ſome of your poor friends beſtow upon you, you think it ſufficient if you can alledge Fabian and Hall for your purpoſe.

Now what purpoſe and affection herein doth lead you, or rather doth drive you to the carping and barking againſt the Hiſtory of theſe good men, that be hence gone and had their puniſhment, all men may ſee it to be no ſimple ſincerity of a mind indifferent, but the zeal only of your Sect of Popery, or rather of fury, which ſetteth your railing ſpirit on fire. But now out of the fiery Kitchin to come to the Hall again, let us ſee what matter lieth in the teſtimony of Edward Hall, to prove theſe men to be Traitors. And here forſomuch (M. Cope) as you ſeem neither ſufficiently acquainted with this your own Maſter and Author Maſter Hall, nor yet well experienced in the ſearching out of Hiſtories, I will take a little pains for you, in this behalf, to certifie you, concerning the ſtory of this Author, whereof peraſe you your ſelf are ignorant.

Anſwer to Ed. Hall.

The truth whereof is this, that as the ſaid Edward Hall, your great Maſter and Teſtis, was about the compiling of his ſtory, certain there were which reſorted to him, of whom ſome were drawers of his Pedigree and Vineat, ſome were Gravers, the names of whom were John Betts, and Tyral, which be now both dead. And other there were of the ſame ſodality, who be yet alive, and were then in the houſe of Richard Grafton both the Printer of the ſaid Book, and alſo (as is thought) a great helper of the penning of the ſame. It ſo befel, that as Hall was entring into the ſtory of Sir John Oldcaſtle, of Sir Roger Acton and their fellows, the Book of John Bale, touching the ſtory of the Lord Cobham, was the ſame time newly come over. Which Book was privily conveyed by one of his ſervants into the Study of Hall, ſo that in turning over his Books it muſt needs come to his hands. At the ſight where-{KING} Hen. 5. whereof, when he ſaw the ground and reaſons in that Book contained, he turned to the Authors in the foreſaid Book alledged, whereupon within two nights after, moved by what cauſe, I know not, but ſo it was, that he taking his pen, raced and cancelled all that he had written before againſt Sir John Oldcaſtle and his fellows; and was now ready to go to the print, containing near to the quantity of three Pages. And leſt (M. Cope) you, or any other ſhould think me to ſpeak beſide my Book, be it therefore known both to you, and to all other, by theſe preſents, that the very ſelf ſame firſt Copy of Hall, raced and croſſed with his own pen, remaineth in my hands to be ſhewed and ſeen, as need ſhall require. The matter which he cancelled out, came to this effect. Wherein he following the Narration of Polydore, began with like words to declare how the Sacramentaries here in England, after the death of Jo. Huſſe, and Hierome of Prague, being pricked, as he ſaith, with a Demoniacal ſting, fell conſpired againſt the Prieſts, and after againſt the King, having to their Captains Sir John Oldcaſtle the Lord Cobham, and Sir Roger Acton Knight, with many moe words to the like purpoſe and effect, as Polydore, and other ſuch like Chronicles do write againſt him. All which matter notwithſtanding the ſaid Hall with his pen at the ſight of John Bales Book, did utterly extinguiſh and aboliſh; adding in the place thereof the words of Maſter Bales Book, touching the accuſation and condemnation of the ſaid Lord Cobham before Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, taken out of the Letter of the ſaid Archbiſhop, as is in his own Story to be ſeen: In vita Hen. 5. Pag. 2. lin. 30.

Hal. in vita Hen. 5. pag. 2. lin. 30.

And thus Ed. Hall your Author, revoking and calling back all that he had deviſed before againſt the L. Cobham (whereof I have his own hand to ſhew, and witneſs ſubſtantial upon the ſame) in his printed Book recordeth of him no more, but only ſheweth the proceſs between the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and him for matters of Religion. And ſo ending with Sir John Oldcaſtle, he proceedeth further to the aſſembly of Sir Roger Acton (whom he falſly calleth Robert Acton) Jo. Browne, and Beverly, the Narration whereof he handleth in ſuch ſort, that he neither agreeth with the record of other writers, nor yet with the truth it ſelf. For where he excludeth the L. Cobham out of that aſſembly, he diſcordeth therein from Polydore and other; and where he affirmeth the fact of that conſpiracy to be wrought before, or at the twelfth day of December; that is manifeſtly falſe, if the records before alledged be true. And where he reporteth this aſſembly to be after the burning of John Huſſe, and of Jerome of Prague, therein he accordeth with Polydore, but not with the truth. Moreover ſo doubtful he is and ambiguous in declaration of his ſtory, that no great certainty can be gathered of him.

Hall in the ſtory of the Lord Cobham, and Sir Roger Acton, agreeth not with other ſtories.

Untruth in Hall noted.

Hall doubtful in the ſtory of Sir R. Acton, &c.

Firſt, as touching the confeſſion of them, he confeſſeth himſelf that he ſaw it not, and therefore leaveth it at large. And as concerning the cauſes of their death, he leaveth the matter in doubt, not daring (as doth M. Cope) to define or pronounce any thing thereof, but only recite the ſurmiſes and minds of divers men diverſly, ſome thinking it was of conveying the L. Cobham out of the Tower, ſome that it was for Treaſon and Hereſie; and here cometh in the mention only of a record, but what record it is neither doth he utter it, nor doth he examine it; otherwiſe again affirming (as he ſaith) that it was for fained cauſes furniſed by the Spiritualty, more of diſpleaſure than truth. And thus your Author Hall, having recited the variety of mens opinions, determineth himſelf no certain thing thereof, but as one indifferent, neither bound to the conjectures of all men, nor to the witneſſes of all men, referreth the whole judgment of the matter free unto the Reader. And ſo concluding his Narration, forſomuch as he was neither a witneſs of the fact, nor preſent at the deed, he overpaſſeth the ſtory thereof.

Hall no witneſs in Sir Roger Acton's caſe.

And what witneſs then will you, or can you (Maſter Cope) take of Edw. Hall, which denieth himſelf to be a witneſs? Will you compell him to ſay that he ſaw not? and to witneſs that he cannot? Wherefore like as Suſanna in the ſtory of Daniel, was quit by right judgment in the caſe of adultery, becauſe her accuſers and Teſtes being examined aſunder were found to vary and halt in their tale, and not to agree in the two trees; ſo why may not in like caſe of Treaſon, Sir Roger Acton, Sir John Oldcaſtle, Brown with the reſt, claim the ſame privileg? ſeeing among the Teſtes and witneſſes produced againſt them ſuch diſcord is found, and ſuch halting among them, that neither do they agree in place, perſon, year, day, nor month.

1. For firſt, where Fabian and his fellows ſay, that they were aſſembled together in a great company in the field near to Saint Giles, the forged Indictment above alledged, ſaith, they were but riding toward the field. 1 Repugnance in the place.

2. Secondly, where the foreſaid Indictment and Polydore give the L. Cobham to be preſent perſonally in that aſſembly, Hall, and Alanus Copus Anglus, do exclude his perſonal preſence from thence; and ſo doth Fabian alſo ſeem to agree, ſpeaking only of the adherents of Sir John Oldcaſtle. 2 Repugnance in the perſon. Alanus Copus, p. 833. lin. 12.

3. Where Hall and Polydore report this aſſembly to be after the burning of John Hus, and of Jerome at the Council of Conſtance, which was Ann. 1415, that cannot be, but if there were any ſuch conſpiracy in the firſt year of Hen. V. it muſt needs be in Ann. 1413. And here by the way, why do certain of your Epitom-writers, ſpeaking of the L. Cobham, committed firſt to the Tower for Hereſie, refer the ſaid impriſonment to the year 1412, whereas by their own count reckoning the year from the Annunciation, it muſt needs be Ann. 1413, being done in harveſt time. 3 Repugnance in the year.

4. Fourthly, where Hall with his followers affirm that Sir Roger Acton, Brown and Beverly were condemned the twelfth day of December, the record is evident againſt it, which holdeth the fact to be in working the tenth day of January. 4 Repugnance in the month.

5. Fifthly, whereas the foreſaid Record of the Indictment giveth the Wedneſday next after the Epiphany, which was the tenth day of January that preſent year, both the fact to be committed the ſame day, the Commiſſion alſo to be granted and delivered to the Commiſſioners the ſame day, the ſaid Commiſſioners to ſit in Commiſſion the ſame day, the Sheriffs of Middleſex to return a Jury out of the body of Middleſex the ſame day, and the Jurors to find the Indictment of the ſame day, and yet no Juror in the Indictment named the ſame day. 5 Repugnance in the day.

Item, the Lord Cobham the ſame day to be found conſpiring to make himſelf Regent, when as the King, that day and year was not yet paſſed into France; how all theſe can concur and hang together, and all in one day; I ſuppoſe it will coſt you two days before you with all your learned Council will ſtudy it out. And when you in your unlawful aſſemblies have conſpired and conferred together all ye can, yet will ye make it (as I think) three days, before you honeſtly diſpatch your hands of the matter.

And where ye think that ye have impreſſed in me ſuch a foul note of lying, never to be clawed off while the world ſtandeth, yet ſhall the poſterity to come judg between you and me, whether ſhall appear more honeſt and true, my defence for that worthy Lord, or your uncourteous and viperous wrangling againſt him, moved with no other cauſe but only with the peeviſh ſpirit of Popery, which can abide nothing but that favoureth of your own Sect. For elſe how many loud lying Legends, yea what Legions of lyes are daily uſed and received in the Popiſh Church? What doltiſh dreams? what fained miracles? what blaſphemous tales and Friarly fables, and idle inventions, fighting againſt the ſincere Religion, Doctrine and Croſs of Chriſt? And could you hold your pen from all theſe and find nothing elſe to ſet your idleneſs on work, but only to write againſt the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton, Brown, Onley, Cowbridge, with a few other, whom with much ado at length you have ſought out, not ſo much for any true zeal to rebuke iniquity, as craftily ſeeking matter by theſe to deface and blemiſh the Book of Acts and Monuments? Which ſeemeth belike to make you ſcratch there where it itcheth not. And if I ſhould after the like dealing take in hand your Popiſh portues, and with the like diligence excuſe every Popiſh Martyr and Saint there Canonized; think you Maſter Cope, I could not make you out half a dozen as rank Traytors and Rebels to their Kings and Princes, as ever were any of theſe of your picking out? What Pope almoſt hath there been theſe laſt five hundred years, which hath not been a Traytor to his Emperour and Prince, and to his Country? Either openly rebelling againſt them, or privily conſpiring their deſtruction, or proudly proudly ſetting their feet upon their necks, or ſpurning their Crowns off from their heads, or making the Son to fight againſt the Father? how many have they depoſed, and ſet up other in their ſeats? how many Emperors and Kings have they wrongfully curſed? What Conſuls of Rome have they reſiſted, depoſed and put to death? What Wars have they raiſed up againſt their own Country of Rome? Yea, the continual holding of the City of Rome from his lawful Emperor, what is it but a continual point of Treaſon?

Papiſts can not ſee great beams in their own eyes, which ſpie ſmall motes in other.

Popes Traytors to their Emperors and Princes.

What will you anſwer me (Mr. Cope) to the Pope, which conſpired to let fall down a ſtone upon the Emperors head, kneeling at his prayers?

The Popes Saints and Confeſſors many were Traytors.

And though this Treachery, being as big as a Millſtone, ſeemed but a ſmall mote in your eye, that it could not be eſpied; yet what will ye ſay by the Monk of Swinſtead, that poiſoned King John, who was both abſolved by his Abbot before his Treaſon committed, and after his Treaſon, had a perpetual Maſs ſung for him, to help him out of Purgatory? And what think ye in your Conſcience is to be ſaid of Thomas Becket, who did enough, and more than became him, to ſet the French King, and the King of England together by the ears? Of Anſelm likewiſe, and of Stephen Langton, who departed both out of the Realm to complain of their Princes and Sovereigns? The like may be ſaid alſo of Jo. Peckham, John Stratford Archbiſhop of the ſame See, notoriouſly reſiſted the Kings commandment, being ſent for by King Edward the Third, to come to the Parliament at York; through the default of whoſe coming, the preſent opportunity of getting of Scotland was the ſame time loſt.

Rich. Scrope Archbiſhop of York, Traytor, and yet counted a holy man.

Richard Scrope Archbiſhop of York was openly in Arms to rebel and fight againſt King Henry the Fourth, for the which he was condemned and put to death: and yet notwithſtanding, Commiſſion was ſent down from the Pope ſhortly after, to excommunicate them which put him to death, his Treaſon notwithſtanding. Read the ſtory ſincerely of Pope Benedict the 12th. and of Pope Clement the 6th. And ſee how the traiterous Rebellion of theſe two Popes againſt Ludovicus their rightful Emperor can be defended; which Emperor at laſt was alſo impoiſoned, and not without the practice of Pope Clement, as doth Hieronimus Marius credibly witneſs.

Popes commonly Traytors.

Tho. Lancaſter a Traytor, and yet made a Saint by the Pope.

In the Reign of King Edward the Second, mention was made before of Thomas Earl of Lancaſter. Who, with a great number of other Nobles and Barons of the Realm, roſe in armour againſt their Prince, and therefore at length were put to death as Traitors. And yet notwithſtanding this Treaſon committed (Maſter Cope) if you be ſo ignorant in our ſtories that you know it not, ſet your ſetters on to ſearch, and you ſhall find it true, that certain Noblemen went up to Rome, for the Canonizing of the ſaid Thomas of Lancaſter, to be made a Saint, and obtained the ſame. Inſomuch that in a certain old Kalendar, the name of the ſaid St. Thomas of Lancaſter, is yet extant to be ſeen.

Edmund Archbiſhop of Canterbury rebelled againſt his Prince, and yet made a Saint by the Pope.

In the former Book of the Acts and Monuments above, about the page 353, or 354. mention was made of Edmund Abbenden Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whom although I do not diſprove, but rather commend in my Hiſtory, for his bold and ſage counſel given unto King Henry the 3d. and alſo for offering the cenſure of Excommunication againſt the King in ſo neceſſary a cauſe; yet notwithſtanding the ſame Edmund afterward, about his later end, went up with a rebelling mind to complain of his King unto the Pope, and in his journey died, before his return; who afterward for the ſame was Canonized by the Pope, and now ſhineth among the Saints in the Popes Kalendar.

Tho. Arundel a rank Traytor againſt his King, and yet a great pillar counted in the Popes Church.

Let us come more near to theſe days and times, and conſider the doings of Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who being firſt depoſed and exiled for his contemptuous deſerts againſt the King, and afterward coming in with Henry Bolinbrook, Duke of Hereford, in open Arms, and with main force, roſe againſt his natural and lawful King, Think you, Mr. Cope, this is not as great a point of Treaſon, as that which was done in Thickets Fields? and though he be not placed among the portuous Saints, yet I think nothing contrary, but in your heart you will not greatly ſtick to ſay, Sancte Thoma ora pro nobis.

All theſe things well conſidered, tell me (Mr. Cope) I pray you, is Treaſon ſuch a ſtrange and uncouth thing in your Pope-Catholick Church, that your burning zeal of obedience to Kings and Princes cannot read the ſtory of the Lord Cobham and Sir Roger Acton, but your Pen muſt needs be inflamed to write againſt them, and yet ſo many Traitors in your own Kalendars neither ſeen, nor once ſpoken of? And if the Traiterous Conſpiracy and Rebellion of ſo many your Kalendar Saints, committed againſt Emperors, Kings and Princes, cannot ſtir your zeal, nor move your Pen; nor if the Treaſon of Pope Gregory the Ninth, raiſing War againſt his own City of Rome, and cauſing thirty thouſand Citizens in one Battel to be ſlain, deſerveth not to be eſpied, and accuſed as much as this Treaſon of the Lord Cobham; yet what will you, or can you anſwer to me (Maſter Cope) as touching the horrible Treaſon of Pope Gregory the Seventh, committed not againſt Emperor nor King, nor any mortal man, but againſt the Lord himſelf, even againſt your God of your own making, being therein as you ſay, no ſubſtance of bread, but the very perſonal body, fleſh, bloud, and bone of Chriſt himſelf; which body notwithſtanding the foreſaid Pope Gregory the 7th. took and caſt with his own hands into the burning fire, becauſe he would not anſwer him to a certain doubt or demand? Ben. Card. Southly, if Sir John Oldcaſtle had taken the body of King Henry the Fifth, and thrown him into the fire, the fact being ſo notoriouſly certain as this is, I would never have beſtowed any word in his defence. And could this and ſo many other heinous Treaſons paſs through your fingers, Mr. Cope, and no other to ſtick in your Pen but the Lord Cobham?

Pope Greg. 7. a Traytor againſt the Lords own body. Vide ſupra.

Finally and ſimply to conclude with you (Maſter Cope) and not to flatter you, what is the whole working, the proceedings, actions and practices of your Religion, or hath been almoſt theſe five hundred years, but a certain perpetual kind of Treaſon, to thruſt down your Princes and Magiſtrates, to derogate from their Right and Juriſdiction, and to advance your own Majeſties and Dominations, as hath been ſufficiently above proved, and laid before your faces in a Parliament holden in France by the Lord Peter de Cugnerijs? Wherefore if the aſſembly of theſe forenamed perſons, either within or without Saint Giles's Field, be ſuch a great Mote of Treaſon in your eyes, firſt look upon the great Blocks and Millſtones of your own Traitors at home, and when you have well diſcuſſed the ſame, then after pour out your Wallet of your trifling Dialogues, or Trialogues, if ye liſt againſt us, and ſpare us not. Not that I ſo think this to be ſufficient excuſe to purge the Treaſon of theſe Men, if your Popiſh Kalendars and Legends be found full of Traitors. Multitudo enim peccatorum non parit errori patrocinium: but this, I ſhink, That the ſame cauſe which made them to ſuffer as Traitors, hath made you alſo to rail againſt them for Traitors, that is, meer hatred only againſt their Religion, rather than any true affection you have to your Princes and Governors. Who, if they had been as fervent in your Popery, and had ſuffered ſo much for the holy Father of Rome, or for the liberties of the holy Mother Church of Rome, I doubt not but they, as holy Children of Rome, had been rung into your Romiſh Kalendar with a Feſtum duplex, or at leaſt with Feſtum ſimſimplex, of nine Leſſons, alſo with a Vigil peradventure before them.

Religion commonly maketh Treaſon among the Papiſts.

Now becauſe they were of the contrary profeſſion, and enemies to you Magna Diana Epheſiorum, you play with them as the Epheſian Carvers did with Saint Paul, and worſe. Ye thruſt them out as ſeditious Rebels, not only out of life and body, but alſo, cannot abide them to have any poor harborer in their own friends houſes, among our Acts and Monuments to be remembred. In the which Acts and Monuments, if gentle Maſter Ireneus, with his fellow Critobulus in your Clerkly Dialogues, will not ſuffer them to be numbred for Martyrs; yet ſpeak a good word for them (Maſter Cope) they may ſtand for Teſtes or Witneſs-bearers of the truth. And thus much for defence of them.

Now

KING Hen. 5.

Anſwer to the ſecond part of Cope's accuſation concerning his untrue charging of the Book of Acts and Monuments.

Now to the other part of his accuſation; wherein this Alanus Copus Anglus in his ἑξαπλᾶ or ſix fold Dialogues contendeth and chafeth againſt my former edition, to prove me in my Hiſtory to be a lier, forger, impudent, a miſreporter of truth, a depraver of ſtories, a ſeducer of the world, and what elſe not? Whoſe virulent words and contumelious terms, how well they become his Popiſh perſon, I know not. Certes for my part I never deſerved this at his hands wittingly, that I do know. M. Cope is a man whom yet I never ſaw, and leſs offended, nor ever heard of him before. And if he had not in the front of his Book intituled himſelf to be an Engliſhman, by his writing I would have judged him rather ſome wild Iriſh man, lately crept out of Saint Patricks purgatory, ſo wildly he writeth, ſo famiſhly he fareth.

But I ceaſe here, and temper my ſelf, conſidering not what M. Cope deſerveth to be ſaid unto, nor how far the peſt here could run if it had his ſcope, but conſidering what the tractation rather of ſuch a ſerious cauſe requireth. And therefore ſeriouſly to ſay unto you (M. Cope) in this matter, where you charge my Hiſtory of Acts and Monuments ſo cruelly, to be full of untruths, falſe lies, impudent forgeries, depravations, fraudulent corruptions, and fained fables; briefly and in one word to anſwer you, not as the Lacones anſwered to the Letters of their adverſary, with ſi, but with o ſi; would God (M. Cope) that in all the whole Book of Acts and Monuments, from the beginning to the later end of the ſame, were never a true ſtory, but that all were falſe, all were lies, and all were fables. Would God the cruelty of your Catholicks had ſuffered all them to live, of whoſe death ye ſay now that I do lie. Although I deny not but in that Book of Acts and Monuments, containing ſuch diverſity of matter, ſomething might overſcape; yet I have beſtowed my poor diligence. My intent was to profit all men, to hurt none.

The Book of Acts and Monuments too true if it had pleaſed God otherwiſe.

If you M. Cope, or any other can better my rude doings and find things out more finely and truly, with all my heart I ſhall rejoyce with you and the Common-wealth, taking profit by you. In perfection of writing, of wit, cunning, dexterity, fineneſs, or other induments required in a perfect writer, I contend neither with you nor any other. I grant that is a laboured Story, ſuch as you ſeem to require, containing ſuch infinite variety of matter, as this doth, much more time would be required: But ſuch time, as I had, that I did beſtow, if not ſo laboriouſly as others could, yet as diligently as I might.

But here partly I hear what you will ſay; I ſhould have taken more leaſure and done it better. I grant and confeſs my fault, ſuch is my vice, I cannot ſit all the day (M. Cope) fining and mincing my letters, and combing my head, and ſmoothing my ſelf all the day at Glaſs of Cicero, yet not withſtanding doing what I can, and doing my good will, me thinks I ſhould not be reprehended, at leaſt not ſo much be railed on at Maſter Copes hand. Who if he be ſo pregnant in finding fault with other mens labours (which is an eaſie thing to do) it were to be wiſhed, that he had enterpriſed himſelf upon the matter, and ſo ſhould have proved what faults might have been found in him. Not that I herein do utterly excuſe my ſelf, yea rather am ready to accuſe my ſelf, but yet notwithſtanding think my ſelf ungently dealt withal at Maſters Copes hand. Who being mine own Country-man, an Engliſhman as he ſaith, alſo of the ſame Univerſity, yea, College and School that I was of; knowing that the firſt edition of theſe Acts and Monuments was begun in the far parts of Germany, where few friends, no conference, ſmall information could be had; and the ſame edition afterward tranſlated out of Latin into Engliſh by others, whileſt I in the mean time was occupied about other Regiſters; and now the ſaid Cope hearing moreover and knowing that I was about a new Edition of the ſame Acts and Monuments, at this preſent time to be ſet forth, for the amending of divers things therein to be reformed; if he had known any fault needful to be corrected, he might gently by letters have admoniſhed me thereof; gentleneſs would ſo have required it, time would well have ſuffered it. Neither was he ſo far off, but he might ſooner have written a letter to me, than a Book againſt me. Neither was I ſo ingrateful and inhuman, but I would have thanked him for his monition; neither yet ſo obſtinate, but being admoniſhed, I would have corrected willingly where any fault had been committed.

Ungentleneſs noted in Cope.

But herein your nature (Maſter Cope) doth right well appear. Firſt in the ſaid Book of Acts and Monuments, where many other good things be contained, not unfruitful nor unprofitable peradventure for the inſtruction of your conſcience, and wherein my labours perhaps might have deſerved your thanks, all that you diſſemble and paſs over, only excepting thoſe matters which make for cavillation. Thus the black Spider out of pleaſant flowers ſucketh his poiſon. And what Book is ſo pleaſant and fruitful, though it were the Popes own Portues, yea, his own Decretals, yea, his own very Maſs Book, to the reading whereof if I brought the like mind ſo diſpoſed to cavil, as you bring to the reading of my Hiſtory, but I could find out twice as many mendacia, maculas, impudentias, dolos malos, fabulas, fucos, as you have done in theſe Acts and Monuments? And yet you have done pretily well.

The nature of the ſpider.

Beſides all this, yet better to mark the goodneſs of your gentle nature: Be it ſo that I had been in ſome piece of my Story deceived, as I do not juſtifie my ſelf in all points therein, yet you, underſtanding that I was about the correction of my Book again, might either have taken the beſt, and left the worſt, or elſe have gently taken the pains to have advertiſed me of ſuch Notes as you had, without further exclamation, or at leaſt might have deferred your Dialogues for a time, till the coming out of my Book, to ſee firſt what would in the later Edition be altered. But belike your Gall was full, your haſte could not tarry, your venim muſt needs burſt out.

Et ſi non aliqua nocuiſſes, mortuus eſſes.

Seeing therefore the order of your doings to be ſuch, and diſpoſition of your nature ſo far from all humanity, dealing with me ſo extreamly, if I thus provoked with your extremity again, ſhould now after this your curriſh nature ſhape you a name accordingly, and in ſtead of Cope, Godfather you to be a perpetual ſycophant, could you much blame me? and doth not your ſycophantical Book well deſerve it? Or think you I could not repay you again with like extremity as you bring, and dreſs your drowſie or rather louſie Dialogues in their right colors, if I were ſo diſpoſed? But my purpoſe is with patience to ſpare you, and rather to pray for you; God make you a good man. Peradventure he may hereafter call you. And rather had I to win you, than to ſting you. Leaving therefore the conſideration of your ingrateful doings, I will now conſider only the points wherein you charge me in your Book, anſwering briefly unto the ſame. Briefly, I ſay, becauſe the greatneſs of this Volume, and abundance of other more fruitful matter, giveth me little leaſure at this preſent to ſtand about brawling words.

Copus Sycophanta.

The Calendar of the Acts and Monuments, defended.

Firſt he ſeemeth to be highly grieved with me for my Calendar prefixed before the Book of Monuments. Wherein he hath no cauſe either to be offended with me, or to chafe with himſelf. As touching which Calendar I have ſufficiently and expreſly declared before ſo much, as might quickly ſatisfie this ſcruple of M. Cope, if he either would have taken the pains, or elſe had leaſure to read the words contained in the Latin Preface before the Book prefixed, which are thus, Quanquam a me quidem non aliter Calendarium hoc inſtitutum eſt, niſi ut pro indice duntaxat ſuum cujuſque Martyris menſem & annum deſignante, ad privatum lectoris ſerviret uſum, &c. In which words preventing before the cavilling objection of the adverſary, I forewarned the Reader aforehand touching the Calendar, wherefore it was ordained and prefixed, for no other purpoſe, but to ſerve the uſe only of the Reader, inſtead of a Table, ſhewing the year and month of every Martyr, what time he ſuffered, &c. What hurt I pray you is in this Calendar prefixed before the Book of Monuments, more than in the Table of M. Copes Book, ſet after his Dialogues? But M. Cope had no leaſure to perſue this place; it made not for his humor.

Ex præmio ad lectorem.

Objection for Martyrs in the Calendar.

But this grieveth him in the Calendar, and that very ſore: for that I place in this Calendar, Sir John Oldcaſtle, Sir Roger Acton, Brown, Beverly, and other for Martyrs, and diſplace for them other Holy, ancient Martyrs and Saints, as Anatholius, Sother, Dorothea, Clarus, Lucianus, Severinus, &c.

Anſwer.

Anſwer. If M. Cope cannot abide the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton, Brown, and Beverly, which were hanged (as he ſaith for Treaſon) to have the name of Martyrs, then let them bear the name of witneſs bearers, or Teſtes of the truth, becauſe they were alſo burned for the Teſtimony of their faith. Seeing there is no difference in the ſaid names, all is one to me, by which they are called.

Untruth noted in Al. Cope.

And where he chargeth me for thruſting and ſhouldring out the old and ancient holy Saints aforenamed out of this Caldendar, and placing other newcome Saints in their rooms: this is not the firſt untruth that M. Cope hath made in his Dialogues, nor yet the leaſt. Unto whom I might therefore fitly anſwer again with his own familiar phraſe, or rather the phraſe of Cicero, which he doth ſo much affectate: Quod nimirum hic ipſe Alan. Copus Anglus unde me mendacii coarguit, inde ſibi ipſi ſempiternam ac indelebilem turpiſſimi mendacii ac ſingularis impudentiæ notam inurat. For why have not I as juſt cauſe to ſay this to him, as he to me? Forſomuch as in the firſt beginning and Preface of the ſaid Book of Acts and Monuments, I ſo diligently and expreſly do warn all men before, firſt that I make here no Calendar purpoſely of any Saints, but a Table of good and godly men that ſuffered for the truth, to ſhew the day and month of their ſuffering. My words be extant and evident, which are theſe: Neque vero ideo inter divos a me referuntur iſti, quod inferuntur in Calendarium, &c. And declaring afterward how the ſaid Calendar doth ſtand but inſtead of a Table, my words do follow thus: Haud aliter calendarium hoc inſtitutum eſt, niſi ut pro indice duntaxat ſuum cujuſque Martyris menſem & annum deſignante, Lectori ad uſum atque ad manum ſerviat, &c.

Copus p. 130 lin. 18.

In præfat. ad lect. lector. ii. Acts and Monuments.

Again, neither did I receive theſe men into that Calendar, that holy Anatholius, Sother, Dorothea, with other ancient Holy Saints ſhould be removed out, as you do falſly and untruly affirm, but becauſe the courſe of that ſtory, reaching but 500. years, did but comprehend thoſe former times of ſuch ancient Martyrs, but only of ſuch as ſuffered in theſe later days, therefore requiſite it was that in the Table ſuch ſhould be placed chiefly, of whom the whole Book did then principally and only intreat, to demonſtrate thereby the time and day of their Martyrdom. Neither yet were the other excluded out of this new Calendar, which were never inſerted in the ſame before, but only becauſe both together could not there have ſtanding, neceſſity ſo there required theſe in no caſe to be omitted, and yet no injury meant to the other to be excluded out of their own Calendars; whereto properly they did pertain. As for this Calendar or this Table, becauſe they were not pertinent unto it, they could not therein, neither was it neceſſary they ſhould be included. And yet neither did I (M. Cope) without due and ſolemn proteſtation omit the ſame in my foreſaid Catalogue to prevent and ſtop all cavilling mouths; As by ſpecial words in the ſaid proem of my Book unto the Reader doth appear, following in this wiſe; Interim nullius ego boni ſanctique viri (modo qui vere ſanctus ſit) cauſam lædo, nec memoriam extinguo, nec gloriam minuo. Et ſi cui hoc diſpliceat calendarium, mimineret, non in templis a me collocari, ſed domeſticæ tantum lectioni præparari, &c. And where is now (Maſter Cope) this your rejecting, expelling, removing, expulſing, exempting, deturbating and thruſting out of Anatholius, Sother, Dorothea, and other holy Saints out of Catalogues, Faſts, and Calendars? Or what man is that, or where dwelleth he, Qui veros Chriſti Martyres e cœlo ad tartara deturbat? That is, Which tumbleth down true Martyrs from Heaven into Hell? Which if ye mean by me, In one word I anſwer, ye falſly bely me, Maſter Copus, I had almoſt called you Maſter Capus, ſo like a Capon you ſpeak. Neither have you nor any other ever heard me ſo ſay. Neither have I ever heard of any ſo mad to play ſo the Giants with their Mountains to to climb the Heavens, to tumble down Gods true and Holy Martyrs out of Heaven into Hell, unleſs it were your ſelf (as yet ye are, ye may be better) and ſuch other of your gilden and Popiſh fraternity, which make of Gods true Saints ſtinking dunghils, (for ſo ye term them in your Books) and not only thruſt into Heaven your Pſeudoſanctos, Saints of your own making, whom God by his word doth not allow; but alſo depulſe down from Heaven, and make dunghils of Gods welbeloved ſervants, his faithful people, and bleſſed Martyrs; which have died for the word of God. And what marvel then, if in your blaſphemous Books ye caſt down from Heaven to Hell the poor Saints of Chriſt, when in effect you deject alſo the Blood and Croſs of the Son of God, Chriſt Jeſus himſelf, ſetting up in his office and place, tu per Thomæ ſanguinem, quem pro te impendit, fac nos Chriſte aſcendere, quo Thomas aſcendit. Say, Maſter Cope your conſcience indifferently; ſet all Popiſh partiality apart, whereas the Scripture teacheth us ſimply, Quod citra ſanguinem nulla fit remiſſio. i. Without blood there is no remiſſion; whether ye think, by this blood of the New Teſtament is meant the Blood of Chriſt alone, or the Blood of other moe beſides? If the Blood of one muſt ſtand alone, why do ye then with the Giants build up your Mountains, and make a ladder of Beckets Popiſh Blood, for men to ſcale the Heavens? Or in ſo doing, how can you, but either with the Proteſtants wipe out of your Calendar Thomæ Sanguinem, or elſe demoliſh from Heaven Sanguinem Chriſti, with the Papiſts?

Copus al-moſt called Capus.

KING 1 Hen. 5. The Papiſts would thruſt down Gods true ſaints out of Heaven to Hell.

Becket's blood ſet up, to the injury of Chriſts blood.

And here by the way, I cannot but muſe, why you are ſo devout in ſetting up the Croſs of Chriſt in your Church, which are ſuch enemies to the true Croſs of Chriſt to ſtand in Heaven. Look upon this (M. Cope) and tell me, utra pars verius veros Chriſti martyres e Cœlo in tartara detrudat? And therefore as you falſly belie me in this, for detruding and tumbling out of Heaven, Anatholius, Julianus, Clarus, Lucianus, Agatha, Dorothea, and other againſt whom I never yet ſpake any reproaching word, but rather in this my Volume have ſet forth their commendation: ſo it is untrue likewiſe, where you affirm, that in this my Calendar I make an ἀποθεωσιν, or Canonization of falſe Martyrs. I told you before when ye were in England, I tell you again, being now in your tranſmigration, in words as plain as I could: Hanc ego Apotheoſin mihi nunquam ſumpſi, quam ſibi tam confidenter ſumpſit Gregorius nonus. Were not theſe words of my proteſtation manifeſt enough? Were they not ſufficient to ſatisfie a reaſonable Momus? And to make the matter more plain, did I not adde moreover as followeth? Porro neque eo ſpectat hoc calendarium, ut novam aliquam feſtorum dierum legem præſcribam Eccleſiæ, &c. And not contented with this, foreſeeing before ſuch wrangling Spirits to come, as now I ſee in you; I ſhewed alſo the cauſe why I needed not ſo to do. My words were theſe: Feſtorum dierum jam plus ſatis erat in mundo, &c. And yet further becauſe no cavillar ſhould take hold here of any injury done to the holy Saints, either old or new in the Church: therefore in expreſs words I removed away all ſuſpition of any injury, preventing the objection of the adverſary in theſe words: Habeat & Eccleſia ſuos ſanctos, tum recentes tum veteranos, modo probatos, modo interim iidem ne odorentur, modo quam ſint vetuſti, tum etiam vere ſancti ſint, &c.

Papiſts devout to ſet up Chriſts Croſs in Earth: but enemies to Chriſts Croſs in Heaven.

Copus mo-mus. Copus p. 820.

Theſe places of my Book, if ye did ſee; why do you diſſemble them? If ye had not ſo much leaſure to read them; how had you ſo much leaſure to write againſt any mans Book, not knowing what is in the Book contained? And how ſtands it then with truth, that ſo like a Momus ye cry out ſo in your Book againſt theſe new made Martyrs, qui non poſſunt niſi per aliorum injuriam creſcere, &c. Alſo again, where you exclaim againſt me, and ſay that I thruſt out the ancient Martyrs from their ſeat and poſſeſſion, and place new in their rooms, &c.

Untruth in Cope.

Alſo where you continuing yet ſtill in your common place of lying (out of which you cannot digreſs) do charge me further, that I do appoint out holy days and working days by colours of red and black, in my foreſaid Calendar to be obſerved; theſe lewd notes of yours, if they had been picked out of my Calendar by you, without mine own ſpecial declaration before made to the contrary, they might ſeem to have ſome bluſh of credit. Now what will the Reader ſay, or what may he judge, conſidering and conferring this your cavilling with the matter of my premonition made before, but that you are altogether ſet to play the perpetual Syc. I had almoſt called you by your right

KING Hen. 5. right name Maſter Cope. But God make you (as I ſaid) a good man. Reading further in your Book, I could not but ſmile and laugh at this your ridiculous and moſt loud lying Hyperboliſm; where you comparing my making of Saints with the Popes making, can find (as ye ſay) in the Pope no ſuch impudent arrogancy in preſuming as ye find in me, &c. If the Pope had not abuſed his arrogant juriſdiction in canoniſing and deifying his Sanits, more than I have done; the year ſhould not be cumbred with ſo many idle Holy days, not the Calendars with ſo many Raskal Saints, ſome of them as good, as ever were they that put Chriſt to death.

But where will you find (Maſter Cope) any man to believe this your Hyperbolical compariſon to be true, which ſeeth and knoweth the infinite and unmeaſurable exceſs of the Popes arrogancy, not only in ſhrining ſuch a rabble of blind Saints of his own creating; but alſo in preſcribing the ſame to be received univerſally in the whole world; and not to be received only, but alſo to be invocated for gifts and graces; alſo to be worſhipped for advocates and mediators? Wherein riſeth a double abomination of the Pope, the one for his Idolatrous making and worſhipping of Saints; the other for his Blaſphemous injury and derogation to Chriſt in repulſing him out of his office of mediation, and placing other Mediators of his own making. And now to conſider what Saints theſe were, or what were the cauſes of their Sanctings; what Saint almoſt among all the Popes Saints ſhall you find (Maſter Cope) made within theſe five hundred years, but commonly he was either ſome Pope, or ſome rich Biſhop and Prelate, or ſome fat Abbot, or ſome blind Frier, ſome Monk, or Nun, ſome ſuperſtitious regular, or ſome builder of Monaſteries, or ſome Giver and Benefactor to the Popiſh Clergy, or maintainer agoniſing for the Dignities and Liberties of the Popiſh Church? What poor Lay-man or Lay-woman, were their lives never ſo Chriſtian, their Faith and Confeſſion never ſo pure, their death never ſo agoniſing for the witneſs of Chriſt, and truth of his word, ſhall find any place of favour in all the Popes πανσέληνος, that is, in the Popes Calendar, either in red colour, or elſe in black?

Double abomination in the Popes Calendar.

The great Saint-maker of Rome, and who be his Saints.

But here (Maſter Cope) if ye had the wit, ſo much to defend as ye have to overthwart, you might take me with the manner, and reply again for the defence of your great Saint-maker, or rather God-maker of Rome; that he maketh mo Martyrs and Saints of theſe foreſaid poor Lay-men, and Lay-women, than ever he did of any other. For he burneth them, he hangeth them, he drowneth them, impriſoneth and famiſheth them, and ſo maketh truer Martyrs of Chriſt, than any other of his new ſhrined Saints, whom he hath ſo dignified in his Calendar. For the one he doth Rubricate only with his red Letters; the other doth he Rubricate with their own Blood. And therefore to anſwer you (M. Cope) to your compariſon made between the Pope and me, for making of holy Martyrs and Saints: Briefly I ſay and report me to all the world, that therein is no compariſon. For if ye ſpeak of true Martyrs, who doth make them, but the Pope? If ye ſpeak of falſe Martyrs, who doth make them, but the Pope? And furthermore to compare together the cauſes of theſe Martyred Saints in my Calendar with them which ſhine ſhrined in the Popes Calendar (taking the ſame proportion of time as I do, within theſe laſt 500. years) why may not I have as good cauſe to celebrate theſe in my Calendar, which loſt their lives and were ſlain, principally for the cauſe of Chriſt and of his word, as the Pope hath to celebrate his double and ſimple feaſted Saints in his Calendar; who in their doings, doctrine and life, as they ſeemed rather to ſerve the Pope, than Chriſt the Lord; ſo in their death appeared no ſuch cauſe, why they ſhould be ſanctified in the Church beyond all other? Let not the Church of Chriſt (M. Cope) be deluded with Hypocritical names, nor fained apparitions, and fabulous miracles, neither be you deceived your ſelf, but let us reſort ſincerely to the Word of God. What was in S. Francis (look upon his ſuperſtitious life, and preſumptuous Teſtament, wrought no doubt by Satan to diminiſh and obſcure the Teſtament of Jeſus Chriſt) why he ſhould be made a Saint, and not an Enemy rather of Chriſt.

The great God maker of Rome.

No cauſe why the Popes new Saints ſhould be put in the Calendar.

What was likewiſe in Frier Dominick, who before Francis ten years together perſecuted the poor Waldenſes to death and deſtruction? Why ſhould he ſtand a Saint and a Pillar of the Church? I pray you what ſee you in Thomas Becket, but that he died for the ambitious liberties of the Popiſh Church? What in Aldelmus, and in Anſelmus, but only that they chaſed away married Prieſts from the Churches, and planted in idle Monks in their ſtead? The like alſo did Dunſtanus, who was rubricated with a duplex feſtum. Elizabeth who was the Wife of the Marqueſs of Thuring, when ſhe had with much perſwaſions got out her Husband to fight againſt the Turks, and was there ſlain, ſhe afterward encloyſtered her ſelf, and was made a Nun. And do ye think theſe cauſes to be ſufficient why they ſhould be made Saints, worſhipped in Churches, and ſet in Calendars? Long it were to make rehearſal of all this riffraff, and almoſt infinite. One example may ſuffice for many. S. Gilbert of Sempringham was the Son of Jocelin a Knight, who for his deformity of his body was ſet to learning, and afterward made Canon, and was Author of the Gilbertines in the time of King John.

Tho. Becket. Aldelmus. Anſelmus.

Dunſtanus. Elizabeth.

The canonization of S. Gilbert of Sempringham.

This Gilbert after he had erected thirteen Monaſteries of his Order of Sempringham, was afterward laboured for unto the Pope to be made made a Saint. Who hearing of his Miracles, wrote his Letters to Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the behalf of the foreſaid Gilbert willing and commanding per Apoſtolica ſcripta, that the Feaſt of the ſaid Gilbert ſhould be ſolemnized through all the province of Canterb. Ut meritis nimirum ejus & precibus apud miſericordiſſimum judicem miſericordiam conſequamur, &c.

Ex lib. de vita Gilberti confeſſoris.

Whereupon Hubert the Archbiſhop directeth down his writings to all the Biſhops within his Provine, the Contents of which his writings do follow, Hubertus Dei gratia Canterb. Archiepiſcop. totius Angliæ primas, dilectis in Chriſto frat. Epiſcop. per provinciam Canterb. Sal. grat. & benedictionem. D. Papa, ſicut ex literis ipſius manifeſte perpenditur, de converſatione, meritis, & moribus b. Gilberti magiſtri ordinis de Sempringham, & miraculis a Deo per eum factis per teſtes & teſtimonia ſufficienter inſtructus, de concilio fratrum Cardin. ipſum mag. Catalogo ſanctorum decrevit aſcribi, ſolennitatem ejus conſtituit & mandavit per Canterb. provinciam ſolenniter celebrari. Inſuper & corpus ejus cum requiſiti fuerimus præcepit ad honorem Dei & gloriam elevari. Veſtra igitur Univerſitas huic mandato cum devotione congaudeat, & ſecundum formam in ipſo mandato præſcriptam, prædicti confeſſoris domini depoſitionem annuam faciatis cum reverentia & ſolenniter obſervari; ut apud dominum & ab illo veſtra debeat & poſſit devotio commendari. necnon & ipſius ſancti ſupplex interceſſio vobis proficiat ad ſalutem. Valete.

The Popes letter and the Archbiſhops for the canonizing of St. Gilbert.

The ſumm of the which writing of the Archbiſhop tendeth to this effect: That forſomuch as the Pope hearing of the life and miracles of Gilbert, Maſter of the Order of Sempringham, by ſufficient witneſs and teſtimonies, hath in his Letters commanded him by the advice of his Cardinals, that the ſaid Gilbert, ſhould be Canonized and aſcribed in the Catalogue of Saints, and that his ſolemnity ſhould be celebrated ſolemnly throughout all the Province of Canterbury: And alſo his body to be taken up and ſhrined to the Honour and Glory of God: He therefore, at the Popes commandment writing unto them, willeth all the Suffragans within his Province of Canterbury, yearly to ſolemnize and cauſe to be ſolemnized reverently the deſpoſition of the ſaid S. Gilbert Confeſſor; to the intent that their devotion may be commended of the Lord, and of him. And alſo that the humble interceſſion of the ſaid Saint, may profit them to their ſalvation.

Is this good doctrine M. Cope in the Pope's canonization?

Furthermore, for the more full Canoniſing (canviſing I had almoſt ſaid) of this new made Saint, the Saint Pope Innocent writing to Hubert aforeſaid, adjoyneth withal a Collect of his own making, which is this, Plenam in nobis æterne ſalvator tuæ virtutis operare medelam, ut qui præclara beati Gilberti confeſſoris tui merita veneramur, ipſius adjuti ſuffragiis a cunctis animarum noſtrarum languoribus liberemur: Qui vivis & regnas, &c. That is, Work in us O eternal Saviour full redemy of thy vertue, that we which worſhip the worthy merits of bleſſed Gilbert thy Confeſſor, being ſuccoured by his Suffrages, may be delivered from all languors and diſeaſes of our ſouls; who liveſt and reigneſt, &c.

The conſecration of this one Saint (who perhaps was not the worſt) I thought here to commemorate to the intent that the Reader, meaſuring by this one the Canoniſation of all the reſt, may judge the better upon this compariſon of Maſter Cope, whether of us, doth vindicate more impudent authority, the Pope in his Calendar, or I in mine: or to make the compariſon more fit, whether is more impudent, the Pope in his Calendar, or elſe Maſter Cope in his Dialogues more doltiſh.

But briefly to make an end of this matter with you; to Canoniſe or to Authoriſe any Saints, for Man it is preſumptuous; to preſcribe any thing here to be worſhipped, beſide God alone, it is Idolatrous; to ſet up any Mediators but Chriſt only, it is blaſphemous. And whatſoever the Pope doth or hath done in his Calendar, my purpoſe in my Calendar, was neither to deface any old Saint, or to Solemnize any new. In my Book of Acts and Mounuments entreating of matters paſſed in the Church, theſe later five hundred years, I did regulate out a Calendar, not for any Canon to conſtitute Saints, but only for a Table of them which within the ſame time did ſuffer for the Teſtimony of the word, whom I did, and do take to be good and godly Men. If any have other judgment of them, I bind no man to my opinion, as the Pope doth to his. The day will come which ſhall Judge both them and you. In the mean ſeaſon it ſhall be beſt for you (Maſter Cope) in my judgment to keep a good Tongue in your Head, and to quiet your railing mood. A hard thing it is to judge before the Lord. Mans judgment may fail and is uncertain, the judgment of God is always ſure. Beſt it is therefore either to be ſure by the word and judgment of God before, what you do ſay, or elſe to ſay the beſt. Of ſuch ſlandrous and intemperate railing can come no good, neither to them whom ye rail upon; nor to your ſelf which raileth; nor to the Church of God that heareth you rail. For them you cannot hurt, they are gone. To your ſelf though your matters be true, yet little honeſty it will bring to be counted a railer; and if it be uncertain, your ſtate is dangerous, and if it be falſe moſt miſerable: And as to the Church what great edification can proceed of ſuch contentious brawling and barking one againſt another, I do not greatly ſee. And if the zeal of the Biſhops of Romes Church have ſo much ſwallowed you up, that you cannot but ſtamp and ſtare at Traitors when ye ſee them put in Calendars: firſt (Maſter Cope) be ye ſure that they be Traitors (wiſdom would) whom you call Traitors. And if ye can ſo prove them (as ye have not yet) then let your Irenæus, or Critobulus, tell me, why doth not this flagrant zeal of yours as hot as Purgatory burn out, and flame as well againſt your own Traitors, having ſo many in your own Calendar and Church at home?

Cope counſelled to ceaſe his railing.

No good cometh of railing.

The zeal of M. Cope expended.

And if there be ſuch a Catholick zeal in you, that hath ſet your gentle breſt on ſuch a pelting chaſe, why then is not this your Catholick zeal equally indifferent? Why take ye on ſo fell on the one ſide againſt Sir John Oldcaſtle, Sir Roger Acton, M. Brown, &c. A man would think you played Hercules furens in Orcheſtra. On the one ſide again, ye are Oleo tranquillior. What difference (Maſter Cope) call you this? Or what zeal make you this to be? Albeit, your zeal I judge not, as I know it not. Swift judgment ſhall not become me, which go about to correct the ſame in you. But this I exhort you to beware (Maſter Cope) that by your own fruits and doings evident, ye do not bewray this zeal in you to be Non ſecundum ſcientiam, nor ſuch a zeal as fighteth Pro domo Dei, ſed pro domo Pontificis. As I ſaid, I judge you not. You have your judge to whom ye ſtand or fall. My counſel is that you do not ſo zeal the Biſhop of Rome, that for his ſake ye loſe your own ſoul. Ye remember the old vulgar voice, it is not good Ludere cum ſanctis; worſe it is Illudere; worſt of all it is Debacchari in immerentes; Becauſe that Deus ipſe ultionum Dominus many times taketh their cauſe in hand, according as it is written. Opprobria opprobriantium tibi ceciderunt in me, i. e. The rebukes of thy rebukers fell upon me. And ſeldom have I ſeen any ſuch blaſphemous railers againſt the end or puniſhment of Gods Saints and Servants, without great repentance, to come to any good end themſelves.

And admit this (as granted unto you Maſter Cope) that theſe men had been Traitors, which ye are not able to prove: Well, they had their puniſhment therefore, the world can go no further, and what would you have more? who if they repented, why may they not have as good part in Chriſts Kingdom as your ſelf? Now forſomuch as the ſaid perſons alſo ſuffering a double puniſhment were ſo conſtant in the way of truth, and moſt principally for the ſame were perſecuted, and chiefly therefore brought to their death: that part of example, becauſe I ſaw it pertain to the profit of the Church, why might I not inſert it, with other Church ſtories in my Book? Let the Church take that which belongeth to the Church. Let the world take that which is to the world pertaineth, and go no further. And if ye think it much, that I would exemplifie theſe whom ye call Traitors in the Book of Martyrs; Firſt, ye muſt underſtand, that I wrote no ſuch Book bearing the Title of the Book of Martyrs; I wrote a Book called the Acts and Monuments of things paſſed in the Church, &c. Wherein many other matters be contained beſide the Martyrs of Chriſt. But this peradventure moveth your choler, that in the Calendar I name them for Martyrs. And why may I not in my Calendar call them by the name of Martyrs, which were faithful witneſſes of Chriſts truth and Teſtament, for the which they were alſo chiefly brought unto that end? Or why may I not call them Holy Saints, whom Chriſt hath ſanctified with his bleſſed Blood? And what if I ſhould, alſo call the thief and murderer, hanging on the right ſide of the Lord, by the name of a Holy Saint and Confeſſor, for his witneſſing of the Lord, what can Maſter Cope ſay againſt it?

{KING Hen. 5.}

The noble of Martyrs in the Calendar defended.

What is a Martyr.

Holy Saints of Chriſt.

And as for colouring the names of certain Martyrs in the ſaid Calendar in red or ſcarlet Letters (although that pertaineth nothing to me, which was as pleaſed the Painter or Printer) yet if that be it that ſo much breaketh patience, why rather doth he not expoſtulate in this behalf with the great Saint-maker of Rome, who hath redded them much more than ever did I? For he did red and die them with their own Blood, whereas I did but only colour them with red Letters. And thus for matter of my Calendar enough.

Martyrs in the Calendar coloured with red.

The Painter coloureth with red.

The Pope colougeth with blood.

* Proceeding now out of the Calendar unto the Book wherein he chargeth me with ſo many lies, impudencies, vanities, depravations, and untruths, it remaineth likewiſe I clear my ſelf, anſwering firſt to thoſe lies and untruths, which to the Story of Sir Roger Acton, and Sir John Oldcaſtle do appertain. And after to other particulars, as in order of my Book do follow. And firſt, where he layeth againſt me whole heaps, and Cartloads, I cannot tell how many lies and falſities; I here briefly anſwer Maſter Cope again (or what Engliſh Harpesfield elſe ſoever lyeth covered under this Engliſh Cope) that if a lie be (after the definition of S. Auſtine) whatſoever thing is pronounced with the intent to deceive another; then I proteſt to you Maſter Cope, and to all the world, there is never a lie in all my Book. What the intent and cuſtom is of the Papiſts to do, I cannot tell: for mine own part I will ſay, although many other vices I have, yet from this one I have always of nature abhorred, wittingly to deceive any Man or Child, ſo near as I could, much leſs the Church of God, whom I with all my heart do reverence, and with fear obey. And therefore among divers cauſes, that have withdrawn my mind from the Papiſts faction, almoſt there is none greater than this, becauſe I ſee them ſo little given to truth, ſo far from all ſerious feeling and care of ſincere Religion, ſo full of falſe pretenſed hypocriſie and diſſimulation, ſo little regarding the Church of Chriſt in their inward hearts, which they ſo much have in their mouths, ſo as under the title thereof they may hold up their own eſtate. Otherwiſe ſo little reverence they yield to the true and honourable Church of Jeſus the Son of God, that what unworthy and raſcal Miniſters they take into it they paſs not, what fictions, what lies and Fables, what falſe Miracles and abſurd forgeries they invent to delude it, they care not. I ſpeak not of all.

The author cleareth himſelf of lies and untruths laid againſt him.

Some there be of that Sect unſtained in conſcience, and more religious, and better diſpoſed natures, only of ſimple ingnorance deceived. But ſuch commonly have been and be the chief guides and leaders of the Papiſts Church, that little true care and ſmall zeal hath appeared in them toward the Church of Chriſt, not much regarding what corruption increaſed therein, ſo that their {KING} Hen.5. The lies and fictions innumerable in the Popes Church.

Commodity might not decreaſe. Thus out of this Fountain have guſhed out ſo many Prodigious lies in Church Legends, in Saints lives, in Monkiſh fictions, in fabulous Miracles, in falſe and forged Reliques, as in pieces of the Holy Croſs, in the Blood of Hales, in our Ladies milk, in the Nails of Chriſt, which they make to a great number. Likewiſe in their falſe and blind Errors, corrupt Doctrines, abſurd Inventions, repugnant to the truth of the word. Item, In their Baſtard Books, forged Epiſtles, their Apocrypha, and Pſeudopigrapha. Here come in their forged Canons, their foiſting and cogging in ancient Councils and Decrees, as in ὃς ἀπὸ ἕμας πέτρας, in Canons of the Apoſtles (if thoſe Canons were the Apoſtles) Excepta Romana ſede, foiſted into the decrees by Gratianus, alſo the cogging in a falſe Canon to the Council of Nice for the maintenance of the See of Rome, as appeareth in the ſixth Synod of Carthage.

Untruth in the Popiſh Epiſtle Decretal.

Here come in alſo the Epiſtles of Clement, and other ſundry Epiſtles Decretal, which as they are no doubt falſly inſerted by other, ſo are they the well-head of many ſuperſtitious Traditions, oppreſſing this day the Church of Chriſt. To ſpeak moreover of the Liturgies of Saint James, of Chryſoſtome and other, of the firſt Maſs ſaid by Saint Peter at Rome, and that Saint Peter ſate 25. years Biſhop of Rome. To ſpeak alſo of the works of Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Hierome, and Gregory, what Doctor or famous writer hath there been in the Church, under whoſe name ſome counterfeited Books have not falſly been fathered, and yet ſtand ſtill authoriſed under their patronage, to the great detriment of the Church? What ſhould I ſpeak of Abdias; Amphilochius, Dionyſius Areopagita: The Dialogues of Gregory, which falſly to this day have been aſcribed to Gregory the Firſt, where indeed they were firſt written in Greek by Gregory the Third, and afterward Tranſlated out of Greek into Latin by Pope Zacharie, vide ſupra. Likewiſe that worthy and Imperial Sermon intituled, Euſebii Pamphili Sermo ad Conventum Sanctorum, hath to this day wrongfully born the name of Euſebius. Whereas in very truth it was made by the good Emperor Conſtantinus himſelf, in his own Heroical ſtyle in Latin, and afterward Tranſlated out of Latin into Greek by Euſebius, as he himſelf confeſſeth in his work. De vita Conſtant. lib. 4. But as touching this Sermon, although the name be changed, ſo godly and fruitful it is that it mattereth not much under whoſe name it be read, yet worthy to be read under the name of none ſo much as of the Emperor Conſtantine himſelf, who was the true Author and owner thereof.

Sermo ad conventum ſanctorum, in ſint Euſebii, made by Conſtantine the Emperor.

Briefly, except it be the Books only of the New Teſtament, and of the Old; what is almoſt in the Popes Church, but either it is mingled or depraved, or altered, or corrupted, either by ſome additions interlaced, or by ſome dimunition mangled and gelded, or by ſome gloſs adulterate, or with manifeſt lies contaminate? So that in their Doctrines ſtandeth little truth; In their Legends, Portues, and Maſs Book, leſs truth; In their Miracles and Reliques leaſt truth of all. Neither yet do their Sacraments remain clear and void of manifeſt lies and corruption. And ſpecially here cometh in the maſter Bee, which bringeth in much ſweet Honey into Popes Hives, the Maſter lie I mean of all lies, where the Pope leaveth not one crum of Bread, nor drop of Wine in the reverend Communion; untruly and idolatrouſly taketh away all ſubſtance of Bread from it, turning the whole ſubſtance of Bread, into the ſubſtance of Chriſts own Body; which ſubſtance of Bread if the Pope take from the Sacrament, then muſt he alſo take the breaking from it; for breaking and the Body of Chriſt can in no wiſe ſtand literally together by the Scripture. Thus then as this is proved by the Word of God to be a manifeſt lie; ſo think not much (good Reader hereat) as though I paſſed the bounds of modeſty in calling it the arch lie, or maſter lie of all lies. Becauſe upon this one an infinite number of other lies and errors in the Popes Church, as Handmaids do waite and depend.

Untruth in the Popes doctrine.

Untruth in the Popes Legend and Maſs Books.

Untruth in the Popes miracles and reliques.

Untruth in the Popes Sacraments.

A maſter lie.

But forſomuch as I ſtand here not to charge other men ſo much, as to defend my ſelf, ceaſing therefore, or rather deferring for a time to ſtir this ſtinking puddle of theſe wilful and intended lies and untruths, which in the Popes Religion and in Papiſts Books be innumerable, I will now return to thoſe untruths and impudent lies which Maſter Cope hath hunted out in my Hiſtory of Acts and Mounments, firſt beginning with thoſe untruths which he carpeth in the Story of the foreſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, and Sir Roger Acton, Brown and the reſt.

And firſt where he layeth to my charge, that I call them Martyrs, which were Traitors and ſeditious Rebels againſt the King, and their Country; to this I have anſwered ſufficiently before.

Now here then muſt the Reader needs ſtay a little, at M. Copes requeſt, to ſee my vanity and impudence yet more fully and amply repreſſed in refuting a certain place in my Latin Story, concerning the Kings Statute made at Leiceſter, which place and words by him alledged, be theſe, Pag. 107. Quocirca Rex indicto Leiceſtriæ concilio (quod fortaſſis Londini ob Cobhami fautores non erat tutum) propoſito edicto immanem denunciat pœnam his quicunque deinceps hoc doctrinæ genus ſectarentur, uſque adeo in eos ſeverus, ut non modo hæreticos, ſed perduelliones etiam haberi, ac proinde gemino eos ſupplicio, ſuſpendio ſimul & incendio, afficiendos ſtatuerit, &c. Et mox; Adeo ille vires, rationeſque intendebat omnes adverſus Wickelevianos. Wickleviani id temporis dicebantur, quicunque Scripturas Dei ſua lingua lectitarent, &c.

3. Points. 1. Objection.

Upon theſe words out of my foreſaid Latin Book alledged, Maſter Cope perſwadeth himſelf to have great advantage againſt me, to prove me a notorious lier, in three ſundry points. Firſt, in that whereas I ſay, that the King did hold his Parliament at Leiceſter, adding this by the way of parentheſis (quod fortaſſis Londini ob Cobhami fautores non erat tutum, &c.) Here he concludeth thereby, ſimpliciter and preciſely, that the Lord Cobham and Sir Roger Acton with his Fellows, were Traitors, &c. Whereby a man may ſoon ſhape a caviller, by the ſhadow of Maſter Cope. For whereas my Dialyſis out of the text ſpeaketh doubtfully and uncertainly, by this word (fortaſſis) meaning indeed the King to be in fear of the Goſpellers, that he durſt not hold his Parliament at London, but went to Leiceſter; he argueth preciſely therefore, that the Lord Cobham, Sir Richard Acton, and his fellows went about to kill the King. Secondly, Where I affirm that the King in that Parliament made a grievous Law againſt all ſuch as did hold the Doctrine of Wickliff, that they ſhould be taken hereafter, not for Hereticks, but alſo for Felons, or Rebels, or Traitors, and therefore ſhould ſuſtain a double puniſhment, both to be hanged, and alſo to be burned, &c. Here cometh in Maſter Momus, with his Cope on his back, and proving me to be a lier, denieth plainly that the King made any ſuch Statute; vide Pag. 853. line 6. where his words be theſe: Atqui quod hæretici pro perduellionibus, & deinceps geminatas pœnas ſuſpendii & incendii luerant, ut nugatur Foxus, nullo modo illic traditur, &c.

Cope cavilleth without cauſe.

Stat. an. 2. Hen. 5 cap. 7.

2. Objection.

3. Objection.

Firſt, Here would be asked of Maſter Cope, what he calleth Patriæ Hoſtes, & proditores? If he call theſe Traytors, then let us ſee whether they that followed the Sect of Wickliff were made Traytors and Hereticks by the Kings Law, or not. And firſt let us hear what ſaith Polydore Virgil, his own witneſs in this behalf, whoſe words in his twenty ſecond Book, pag. 441. be theſe, Quare publice edixit, ut ſi uſpiam deinceps reperientur qui eam ſequerentur Sectam, patriæ hoſtes haberentur, quo ſine omni lenitate ſeverius ac ocius de illis ſupplicium ſumeretur, &c. That is, wherefore it was by publick Statute decreed, That whoſoever were found hereafter to follow the Sect of Wickliff, ſhould be accounted for Traytors, whereby, without all lenity they ſhould be puniſhed more ſeverely and quickly, &c.

The Sect of Wickliff made Here ſie and Treaſon by King Henry the fifth. Polyd. Virg. lib. 22.

Thus have you (Maſter Cope) the plain teſtimony of Polydore with me. And becauſe ye ſhall further ſee your ſelf more impudent in carping, than I am in depraving of Hiſtories, you ſhall underſtand moreover and hear, what Thomas Walden one of your own Catholick brotherhood, and who was alſo himſelf alive, and a doer in the ſame Parliament, being the Provincial of the Carmelites, ſaith in this matter, writing to Pope Martin, whoſe very words in Latin here follow, written in his Prologue to the ſaid Martin, in this wiſe, Nec mora longa proceſſit, quin Statutum publicum per omne Regni concilium in publico emanavit edicto, quod omnes Wicleviſtæ, ſicut Dei proditores eſſent, ſic proditores Regis, proſcriptis bonis, cenſerentur & Regni, duplici pœnæ dandi, incendio propter Deum, ſuſpendio propter Regem, &c. That is, And it was not long after, but a publick Law and Statute came out, by the common aſſent of the general Parliament of the whole Realm, That all Wickleviſts, as they are Traytors to God, ſo alſo ſhould be counted Traytors to the King and to the Realm, having their Goods loſt and confiſcate to the King. And therefore ſhould ſuffer double puniſhment, as to be burnt for God, and to be hanged for the King, &c. And thus have you (M. Cope) not only my Sentence, but alſo the very words of my ſtory confirmed by this Author; becauſe ye ſhall not think me to ſpeak ſo lightly or impudently without my Book. And moreover to confirm the Sentence of Thomas Walden, it followeth alſo in another place of the foreſaid Author, Tom. 1. lib. 2. De Doctrinali fidei Eccleſiæ Cathol. cap. 46. where he writeth in theſe words, Et tamen jam cum regnare cœpiſſet illuſtris Rex Henricus 5. qui adhuc agit in ſceptris, & de eorum perfidia per Catholicos hene doctos legem Statui fecit, ut ubique per Regnum Wickleviſta probatus, ut reus puniretur de crimine læſæ Majeſtatis, &c. That is, and yet when the Noble King Henry the Fifth, who as yet doth live and reign, began firſt to reign, he began to ſet forth a Law, by his learned Catholicks which were about him, againſt the falſeneſs of theſe men, ſo that whoſoever was proved to be a Wickleviſt, through the whole Realm, ſhould be puniſhed for a Traytor, &c. What words can you have Maſter Cope, more plain than theſe? or what Authority can you require of more credit, which lived in the ſame time, and both did ſee and hear of the ſame things done? Who alſo writing to Pope Martin, was by the ſaid Pope Martin allowed, approved and ſolemnly commended, as appeareth by the Popes Epiſtle to him, wherein the Pope declareth, how he cauſed his Books, Per ſolennes viros videri, & examinari; That is, by ſolemn perſons to be ſeen and examined, &c. So that you muſt needs grant either this to be true that Walden writeth, or elſe that the Pope (tanquam Papa) in allowing his writings, may err and be deceived. Chooſe ye (Maſter Cope) of theſe two Opinions whether you will take.

Walden. tome 1. De Doctrinali Eccleſiæ, c. 46. lib. 2.

Either Walden writeth true, or elſe the Pope erreth.

And if ye think this my aſſertion yet not ſufficiently reſcued with theſe Authorities aforeſaid, I will alſo hereunto adjoyn the teſtimony of another Writer named Roger Wall, who writing De Geſtis Henric. 5. and ſpeaking of the ſaid Statute of this Parliament ſomething more plainly than the reſt, hath theſe words, In hoc etiam Parliamento nobilitas Regia hoſtes Chriſti ſibi reputans proditores, volens dare intelligere univerſis, quod ipſe abſque cujuſcunque fluctuationis dubio, quamdiu auras hauriret vitales, verus & perfectus Chriſtianæ fidei æmulator exiſteret; ſtatuit & decrevit, ut quotquot ipſius Sectæ, quæ dicitur Lollardorum, inveniretur æmuli & Fautores, eo facto rei proditorii criminis in Majeſtatem Regiam haberentur, &c. In Engliſh, Alſo in this Parliament the noble King reputing Chriſt Enemies to be Traytors to himſelf, to the intent that all men ſhould know without all doubt that ſo long as he lived, he would be a true and perfect Follower of Chriſtian Faith; did enact and decree, that whoſoever ſhould be found Followers and Maintainers of this Sect, which is called The Lollards Sect, Ipſo facto, ſhould be counted and reputed guilty of Treaſon againſt the Kings Majeſty, &c.

Rog. Wallus lib. de geſtis Hen. 5 f. 10.

By theſe hitherto alledged, if M. Cope will not be ſatisfied, yet let the Reader indifferently judge; Utrum in hac re magis nugatur Foxus, an Copus calumniatur. And yet moreover to make the matter more certain, mark the clamation of the ſaid Roger Wall added to the end of thoſe words above recited, whereby we have to underſtand more clearly both what were the proceedings of the King in the ſaid Parliament, and alſo what was the blind affection of Monks and Prieſts at that time toward their King and Prince (which was then called Princeps Sacerdotum) in condemning and deſtroying the poor Lollards. The words of the Monk be theſe, O verus amicus, qui amico illatam injuriam ſibi inferri conſimiliter arbitratur, præjudicium illi intentum reputat eſſe ſuum, & ad ejus onera conferenda, auxiliationis humeros ſupponere non veretur, &c. That is, O true friend, who taketh and reckoneth that injury no leſs done to his friend; and that prejudice which is intended againſt him, reputeth to be as his own; and to bear together the burthens of his friend, ſticketh not to lay to his own ſhoulders, for the eaſing and helping of him, &c.

King Henry the Fifth called Princeps Sacerdotum. Rog. Wallus, ibid.

How can it now be denied (Maſter Cope) in reading theſe Authors, and ſeeing their Teſtimonies, but that Lollardy in the Parliament was made both Treaſon and Hereſie, and had therefore a double judgment of puniſhment annexed, to be hanged for the one, and to be burned for the other, according as in my former Latin ſtory I recorded, and yet I trifled not?

KING Hen. 5.

Copus, pag. 839. line 8. Objection.

2. But you will ſay again (as ye do) that there is no mention made for Hereſie to be made Treaſon, nor of any double puniſhment to be inflicted for the ſame. In the body of the Statute (I grant) there is no expreſs mention in words of Hereſie to be made Treaſon, expreſly ſignified in rigour of words; but incluſively it is ſo inferred, that it cannot be denied. For firſt, where Lands, Goods and Cattel of the ſaid Lollards were loſt and forfeit to the King, what doth this import elſe, but Treaſon or Felony?

Anſwer.

Stat. An. 2. Hen. 5. cap. 7.

And where the Lord Cobham (for whoſe cauſe ſpecially this Statute ſeemed to be made) did ſuſtain afterward both hanging and burning by the vigor of the ſame Statute, what is here contained, but a double penalty? Again, where in the beginning of the Statute mention is made of rumors and congregations, and after upon the ſame followeth the ſervices of the King, whereunto the Officers be firſt ſworn ſhould be firſt preferred for Liberty of Holy Church, and puniſhment of Hereticks, made before theſe days and now repealed, ut ſupra. What meaneth this; but to make theſe Congrations of the Lollards to be forceable entries, riots, great ridings, unlawful aſſemblies, affraiers of the people, armor, riots, and inſurrections, and ſo ſendeth them to the former Statutes not repealed, that is, to the Statute, Anno 13. Hen. 4. Chap. 7. where the puniſhment is left to the diſcretion of the King. Or elſe to the Statute, Anno 15. Rich. 2 Chap. 2. where the penalty is made fine and ranſome. Or elſe to the Statute, Anno 5. Rich. 2. Chap. 6. where ſuch aſſemblies be made plain Treaſon, in fine ſtatuti.

Vid. Stat. An. 13 H. 4. cap. 7. Vid. Stat. An. 15 R. 2. cap. 2. Vid. Stat. An. 5 R. 2. cap. 6.

And as here is matter of Treaſon ſufficiently contained, ſo for Hereſie likewiſe the ſame Statute referreth them to the Ordinaries, and to the Laws properly to Hereſie appertaining, and to the Statute, Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. where the penalty is burning. Alſo to the Statute, Anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5.

Vid. Stat. An. 2 Hen. 4 cap. 15. Vid. Stat. An. 5 Ric. 2. cap. 5, 6.

So that in this preſent Statute here mention is contained, as ye ſee, although not in expreſs words, yet incluſively (by referring to other Statutes not repealed) both Lollardy which is puniſhed with burning, and forcible Entries which are puniſhed at the Kings pleaſure. And thus much concerning the ſecond untruth, which Maſter Cope untruly noted in me.

Third Objection:

3. The third untruth which he noteth in me concerning this matter is this, wherein he reporteth me, that I ſay, there was no other cauſe of deviſing this ſharp Law and puniſhment againſt theſe men, but only for having the Scripture-Books. And therefore here is to be noted in the margent Foxi dolus malus, but let Maſter Cope take heed he deceive not himſelf and other. For my part I remember no ſuch place in this my Latin ſtory where I ſo ſay. Only my words be theſe, added in the later end of the place above recited, Wicleviani verò dicebantur quicunque id temporis Scripturas Dei ſua lingua lectitarent, &c. That is, They were called Wickleviſts, whoſoever at that time read the Scripture in Engliſh, or vulgar Tongue, &c. I ſay not, that for the Scriptures being read in the Engliſh-Tongue, therefore the Law was enacted, but ſo is Maſter Cope diſpoſed to conſtrue it. What Law and Statutes were made againſt writing or reading of any Book in Engliſh, or any other Tongue contrary to the Catholick (that is, the Romiſh-Faith) or to the determination of the holy Church (that is, of Rome) read I beſeech thee the bloody Statute made Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. above ſpecified. Alſo read the Conſtitution Provincial of Thomas Arundel above mentioned: Where it was decreed, That the Text of holy Scripture ſhould not be had, or read in the vulgar-Tongue, from the time of Maſter John Wicklick for ever after, unleſs the Reading of Scripture-Books contrary to the Romiſh faith made Hereſie. Stat. An. 1 H. 4. c. 1. Vid. ſup.

The Text of the Scripture not to be tranſlated into the Vulgar-Tongue under pain of Hereſie. Conſt. provinc. Thom. Arund. Vide ſupra.

KING Rich. 2. the ſaid tranſlation be approved firſt by the Ordinary, or by Provincial Council, under pain and puniſhment of Hereſie. Now let the Reader judge whether the reading of Scripture-Books in the Engliſh-Tongue, by the making or tranſlating of Wickliff, or from the time of Wickliff downward, be counted Hereſie, or not. As for the approving of the Ordinary, or of the Provincial Council added in the end of the ſaid Conſtitution, it maketh more for a ſhew, or pretence, than for any juſt exception, or any true intention. For what man, having thoſe Scriptures tranſlated in Engliſh, would either preſent them to their Ordinaries being ſo ſet againſt the reading of ſuch Books? Or what Ordinary would or did ever yet ſince Arundels time approve any ſuch tranſlation, preſented unto them? Or elſe why did the good Martyrs of Amerſam ſuffer death, in the beginning of King Henry the Eighth, for having and reading certain Books of Scripture, which were (as is ſaid) only four Epiſtles of Saint Paul, with certain other Prayers? And the other which heard them but only read, did bear Faggots; and the ſame time, the Children were compelled to ſet Faggots unto their Fathers; at which time Longland being then Biſhop of Lincoln, and preaching to them at the ſtake, ſaid, That whatſoever they were that did but move their lips in reading thoſe Chapters were damned for ever; as when we come to that time, by the Grace of Chriſt, ſhall hereafter more amply and notoriouſly appear. And where then is this Dolus malus Foxi, margined againſt me, for crafty dealing in my ſtory?

Moreover, where Maſter Cope proceeding farther in this matter, asketh me, How was the Lord Cobham obedient to the King, when as for the fear of him the King durſt not then keep his Parliament at London? To whom I anſwer again, asking likewiſe of Maſter Cope, How was the King then afraid to hold his Parliament at London for the Lord Cobham, when the Lord Cobham at that time was in Wales? And here Maſter Cope thinking to have me at a narrow ſtrait, and to hold me faſt, biddeth me tell him how it could be otherwiſe, but the Lord Cobham muſt needs have Fautors? And who ſhould theſe Fautors be (ſaith he) but Sir Roger Acton, Brown, and their Fellows? The which mighty queſtion of Maſter Cope I anſwer again; How could Sir Roger Acton, Brown, and their Fellows be then Fautors of the Lord Cobham, for whom the King durſt not hold the Parliament at London, when as the ſaid Roger Acton, Brown, and the reſt were put to death, a whole year almoſt before the Parliament at Leiceſter began?

Cop. pp. 835. line 13.

And now as I have hitherto briefly, and truly anſwered your askings (Maſter Cope) let me be ſo bold with you again, to propound to you likewiſe another queſtion, forſomuch as you have put me to the ſearching of the Statutes in this matter, wherewith before I was not much acquainted. Now out of the ſame Statutes riſeth a double ſcruple, or queſtion, worthy to be ſolved. The caſe is this, That foraſmuch as ſo many good Martyrs and Saints of God hitherto, in this Realm of England, haven been burned from the time of King Henry the Fourth, Henry the Fifth, Henry the Sixth, Henry the Eighth, to the time, and in the time of Queen Mary; my queſtion is, That you with all your learned Council about you will tell me, by what Law or Statute of the Realm were theſe men brent? I know the ancient cuſtom hath been, that Hereticks convicted by a Provincial Council were wont to be left to the ſecular power. But how will ye prove me, theſe Hereticks were either convict by ſuch Provincial Council, or that theſe ſecular men ought to be your Butchers in burning them, whom ye have committed to them? If ye alledge the ſix Articles made in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, thoſe Articles neither did ſerve before the time of King Henry the Eighth, neither yet were they revived after his time. If ye alledge the Statute made Anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. In that Statute (I anſwer) is contained no matter of burning, but only of arreſt to be done at the Certifications of the Prelates, without any further puniſhment there mentioned. To conclude, if ye alledge the Statute made Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. and revived in the Reign of Queen Mary, mentioned before. To that Statute I anſwer, that although the pretenſed Statute appeareth in form of words in the printed Book to give unto the Temporal Officers authority to bring them to the Stake, and to burn them whom the Biſhop delivereth, yet is it not to be proved, either by you or any other, that Statute to be Law, or warrant ſufficient to burn any perſon or perſons committed to the ſecular power by the Clergy. And that I prove thus; for although the ſame Statute of King Henry the Fourth in the Books printed appear to have Law and Authority ſufficient, by the full aſſent both of the King, of the Lords, and of the Commons; yet being occalioned by Maſter Cope to ſearch further in the Statutes, I have found that in the Rolls and firſt Originals of that Parliament, there is no ſuch mention either of any Petition, or elſe of any aſſent of the Commons annexed, or contained in that Statute, according as in the printed Books uſual in the Lawyers hands too craftily and falſly is foiſted in, as by the plain words thereof may well appear.

Statute of the ſix Articles in the time of King Hen. 8. Stat. An. 5. Ric. 2. cap. 5. Stat. de comburendo, An. 2. H. 4. c. 15. Vide ſupr. Hen. 4. de comburendo, proved not ſufficient to burn any man.

For where the ſaid Statute, Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. being thus intituled in the Rolls, Petitio Cleri contra hæreticos, and aſſented unto in this form, hath theſe words.

Stat. Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. Intituled in the Roll thus, Petitio Cleri contra hæreticos; and aſſented unto in this form.

QUas quidem petitiones prælatorum & cleri ſuperius expreſſatas do. noſter Rex, de conſenſu magnatum & aliorum procerum Regni ſui, in præſenti Parliamento exiſtentium conceſſit, & in omnibus & ſingulis juxta formam & effectum eorundem Ordinavit & Statuit de cetero firmiter obſervari, and ſo forth, according to the Petition: and more words are there not in the Statute-Roll. Wherefore, whereas the Statute-Book printed hath thus: Super quibus quidem novitatibus & exceſſibus ſuperius recitatis (videlicet, in the Petition of the Prelates and Clergy) Prælati & Clerus ſupradicti ac etiam Communitates dicti Regni in eodem Parliamento exiſten. dict. Domino Regi ſupplicarunt, &c. Qui quidem Dominus Rex, &c. ex aſſenſu magnatum & aliorum proceruh ejuſdem Regni, &c. conceſſit, ordinavit, &c. Theſe words, &c. Etiam Communitates dicti Regni, &c. are put in further than the Roll doth warrant, and ſeemeth to be the practice of the Clergy, to make that as an Act of Parliament, and to ſeem to have the force of a Law, which was never aſſented unto by Commons.

The printed Statute, An. 2 H. 4. c. 15. falſly corrupted.

And thus you ſee how this foreſaid Statute, printed both in Engliſh and in Latin among the Provincial Councils of Oxford (by the vertue whereof ſo many good men have been burned ſo long in England) doth utterly overthrow it ſelf, for that it ſwarveth from the Record both in form and in matter, and lacketh the aſſent of the Commons. Which doubt I thought at this preſent to propound unto you (Maſter Cope) for that you have ſo urged me to the ſearching out of the Statutes, by your declaiming againſt the Lord Cobham.

Ex conſtitutionibus provincialibus Oxoniæ celebratis. Joan. Antho.

Moreover unto this Statute aforeſaid, joyn alſo withall another Memorandum of like practice done Anno 5. Rich. 2. In the which year, whereas a Statute was concluded in the Parliament, Anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. againſt certain Preachers ſpecified in the ſame Statute, which going about in certain habits from place to place, did draw the people to Sermons; and Commiſſions were made and directed in the ſaid Parliament to the Sheriffs, to arreſt all ſuch Preachers, and to impriſon the ſame, at the Certifications of the Prelates. Here is then to be noted, that the ſame Statute, Anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. was revoked by the King in the Parliament, Anno 6. Rich. 2. upon the words of the Commons being theſe, videl. Foraſmuch as the ſame Statute was never aſſented, ne granted by the Commons, but that which therein was done, was done without their aſſent, and now ought to be undone, for that it was never their meaning to be juſtified, and to bind themſelves and their Succeſſors to the Prelates no more, than their Anceſtors had done before them. Ex Rotul. And yet this foreſaid revocation notwithſtanding, in Queen Maries time, they inquired upon that Statute.

Vide Stat. An. 5. Ric. 2. cap. 5.

Ex Rot. Parl.

In

In ſearching of theſe Statutes, as you have occaſioned me to find out theſe ſcruples; ſo being found out, I thought here not to diſſemble them, forſomuch as I ſee and hear many now adays ſo boldly to bear themſelves upon this Statute, and thinking ſo to excuſe themſelves, do ſay, that they have done nothing but the Law, the Law; to the intent that theſe men ſeeing now how inexcuſable they be both before God and man, having no Law to bear them out, may the ſooner repent their bloody and unlawful tyranny, exerciſed ſo long againſt Gods true Servants, yet in time before that the juſt Law of God ſhall find out their unjuſt dealings, which partly he beginneth already to do, and more no doubt will do hereafter.

The perſecutors in burning Gods people have done againſt the Law.

In the mean time, this my Petition I put up to the Commons, and to all other which ſhall hereafter put up any Petition to the Parliament: that they, being admoniſhed by this abuſe, will ſhew themſelves hereafter more wiſe and circumſpect, both what they agree unto in Parliaments, and alſo what cometh out in their name. And as theſe good Commons in this time of King Henry the Fourth, would not conſent nor agree to this bloody Statute, nor to any other like; For ſo we read that the Commons in that bloody-time of King Henry the Fourth, when another like cruel Bill was put up by the Prelates in Anno 8. Henry the Fourth againſt the Lollards, they neither conſented to this, and alſo overthrew the other: ſo in like manner it is to be wiſhed, that the Commons in this our time, or ſuch other that ſhall have to do in Parliaments hereafter, following the ſteps of theſe former times, will take vigilant heed to ſuch cruel Bills of the Popes Prelacy, being put up, that neither their conſent do paſs raſhly, nor that their names in any condition be ſo abuſed; Conſidering with themſelves that a thing once being paſſed in the Parliament cannot afterward be called back; And a little inconvenience once admitted, may grow afterward to miſchiefs that cannot be ſtopped. And ſometime it may ſo happen, that through raſh conſent of Voices, the end of things being not well adviſed, ſuch a thing may be granted in one day, that afterward many days may cauſe the whole Realm to rue. But I truſt men are bitten enough with ſuch black Parliaments, to beware of After-claps. The Lord Jeſus only Protector of his Church, ſtop all crafty devices of ſubtil Enemies, and with his Wiſdom direct our Parliaments, as may be moſt to the advantage of his Word, and comfort of his people. Amen, Amen.

A neceſſary Admonition to the Commons of England.

And thus much having ſaid for the defence of the Lord Cobham, of Sir Roger Acton Knight, John Brown Eſquire, John Beverly Preacher, and of other their Fellows againſt Alanus Copus Anglus, here I make an end with this preſent Interim, till further leiſure ſerve me hereafter (Chriſt willing) to pay him the whole intereſt which I owe unto him. Adding this in the mean time, and by the way; that if Maſter Cope had been a Momus any thing reaſonable, he had no great cauſe ſo to wrangle with me in this matter, who as I did commend the Lord Cobham, and that worthily, for his valiant ſtanding by the truth of his Doctrine before Thomas Arundel the Archbiſhop; ſo touching the matter of this Conſpiracy, I did not affirm or define any thing thereof in my former Hiſtory ſo preciſely, that he could well take any vantage thereof againſt me, who in writing of this Conſpiracy laid againſt Sir Roger Acton, and Sir John Oldcaſtle, do but disjunctively or doubtfully ſpeak thereof, not concluding certainly this Conſpiracy either to be true, or not true, but only proving the ſame not to be true at that time, as Polydore Virgil, and Edward Hall in their Hiſtories do affirm; which ſay, that this Conſpiracy began after the burning of John Hus and Hierome of Prague, which could not be. And therein tendeth my Aſſertion. My words are plain, and are theſe; Wherefore it is evident that there was either no Conſpiracy at all againſt the King, or elſe that it was at ſome other time, or done by ſome other Captains, &c.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Propoſition disjunctive.

Lib. Act. Mon. 174.

Theſe be my words with other more: In the which Propoſition disjunctive, if either part be true, it is enough for me. His part it was to refel both; which he hath not done. But only ſtanding faſt upon the one part diſſimuleth the other. And this is Alanus Copus Anglus, who ſay that time he ſhall come from Rome (whither he is now gone, as I hear ſay) I truſt he will return a better Logician home again in ſuam Angliam.

But to the truth of the matter; as I ſaid before, ſo I ſay again, whatſoever this worthy, noble, vertuous Knight, Sir Roger Acton was otherwiſe; this is certain, that he was always of contrary mind and opinion to the Biſhop of Rome, and to that kind of people, for the which cauſe he had great envy and hatred at their hands, and could as little bear it: neither do I greatly diſſent from them, which do ſuſpect or judge that the Lord Cobham, by his friendly help eſcaped out of the Tower, and that peradventure was the cauſe why he was apprehended and brought to trouble, and in the end came to his death. Other cauſes alſo there might be, that theſe good men percaſe did frequent among themſelves ſome Conventicles, (which Conventicles were made Treaſon by the Statute aforeſaid) either in thoſe Thickets, or in ſome place elſe, for the hearing of Gods Word, and for publick Prayer; and therefore had they this Beverley their Preacher with them.

Sir Roger Acton contrary to the Biſhop of Rome.

Cauſes conjectural why Sir Roger Acton with the reſt, were put to death for Traytors and Lollards.

But to conclude, whatſoever this Sir Roger Acton was, this is the truth, which I may boldly record, as one writing the Acts and things done in the Church, that he was at length apprehended, condemned, and put to death or Martrydom three years and more before the Lord Cobham died. Likewiſe Maſter John Brown, and John Beverley the Preacher, ſuffered with him the ſame kind of death (as ſome ſay) in the Field of Saint Giles, with other more, to the number of 36, if the ſtory be true. Which was in the month of January, Anno 1413. after the computation of our Engliſh ſtories, counting the year from the Annunciation, but after the Latin Writers, counting from Chriſts Nativity, Anno 1414. according as in this Picture is ſpecified.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Divers Perſons counted for Lollards hanged and burned in the firſt year of the Reign of King Henry the V.

{Anno 1414.}

Theſe men, as is ſaid, ſuffered before the Lord Cobham about three years, of whoſe death divers do write diverſly. Some ſay they were hanged and burnt in S. Giles Field; of whom is Fabian, with ſuch as follow him. Other there be which ſay, that ſome of them were hanged and burnt. Polydorus ſpeaking only of their burning, maketh no mention of hanging. Another certain Engliſh Chronicle I have in my hands borrowed of one M. Bowyer, who ſomewhat differing from the reſt, recordeth thus of Sir Roger Acton, that his Judgment before the Juſtice was thus, to be drawn through London to Tyburne, and there to be hanged, and ſo he was naked, ſave certain parts of him covered with a Cloth, &c. And when certain days were paſt (ſaith the Author) a Trumpeter of the Kings called Thomas Cliff, got Grant of the King to take him down, and to bury him, and ſo he did, &c. And thus have you the ſtory of Sir Roger Acton, and his fellow Brethren. As touching their cauſe, whether it were true, or elſe by error miſtaken of the King, or by the fetch of the Biſhops ſurmiſed, I refer it to the judgment of him which ſhall Judge both the quick and the dead, & ſeculum per ignem. To whom alſo I commit you M. Cope; God ſpeed your Journey well to Rome, whither I hear ſay you are going, and make you a good man.

After the deceaſe or martyrdom of theſe above mentioned, who were executed in the month of January, Anno 1414. in the next month following, and in the ſame year, the twentieth day of February, God took away the great Enemy of his Word, and Rebel to his King, Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury: Whoſe death following after the execution of theſe good men above recited, by the marvelous ſtroke of God ſo ſuddenly, may ſeem ſomewhat to declare their innocency, and that he was alſo ſome great procurer of their death, in that God would not ſuffer him longer to live, ſtriking him with death incontinently upon the ſame. But as I did the other before, ſo this alſo I do refer to the ſecret Judgment of the Lord, who once ſhall Judge all ſecrets openly.

The death of Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Ex hiſt. S. Alban. Gods works and puniſhment to be noted.

In the mean time this may ſeem ſtrange, that the ſame Thomas Arundel, who a little before ſate in Judgment againſt the Lord Cobham, and pronounced Sentence of death upon him, did himſelf feel the ſtroke of death, and the Sentence of God executed upon him before the other. Who would have thought but that the Lord Cobham, being ſo caſt and condemned definitively by the Archbiſhops Sentence, ſhould have died long before the Archbiſhop? But ſuch be the works of Gods Almighty Hand, who ſo turned the wheel, that this condemned Lord ſurvived his Condemner three or four years.

Thomas Arundel giveth ſentence againſt the Lord Cobham, and God giveth ſentence againſt Tho. Arundel. The condemned man overliveth his condemner.

In the death of this Archbiſhop, firſt Polydore Virgil is deceived, who in his twenty ſecond Book, page 441. affirmed his death to be Anno 1415. in the ſecond year of King Henry the Fifth, alſo after the beginning of the Council of Conſtance, who indeed never reached the beginning thereof, nor ever ſaw the ſecond year of that King (unleſs ye count the firſt day for a year) but died before, Anno 1414. February 20. Ex Hiſt. S. Albani & multis. Furthermore, concerning the death of this Arundel, and the manner thereof, who had been ſo heavy a Troubler of Chriſts Saints in his time, becauſe the thing ſeemeth worthy of noting, to behold the puniſhment of God upon his Enemies, this is the report, as I have found it alledged out of Thomas Gaſcoin in Dictionario Theologico, Whoſe plain words be theſe, Anno 1414. Tho. Arundel. Cant. Archiepiſcop. ſic lingua percuſſus erat, ut nec deglutire, nec loqui per aliquot dies ante mortem ſuam potuerit, divitis epulonis exemplo, & ſic tandem obiit. Atque multi tunc fieri putabant, quia verbum alligaſſet, ne ſuo tempore prædicaretur. That is, Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury was ſo ſtricken in his Tongue, that he could neither ſwallow nor ſpeak for a certain ſpace before his death, much like after the example of the rich Glutton, and ſo died upon the ſame. And this was thought of many to come upon him, for that he ſo bound the Word of the Lord, that it ſhould not be preached in his days, &c. Which if it be true, as it doth well here appear, theſe and ſuch other horrible Examples of Gods wrath may be terrible Spectacles for ſuch as occupy their Tongues and Brains ſo buſily to ſtop the courſe of Gods Word, ſtriving but againſt the ſtream, againſt the force whereof, neither are they able to reſiſt, and many times in reſiſting are overturned themſelves, and drowned therein. And thus much for the death of Thomas Arundel, who continued Archbiſhop in the See of Canterbury the ſpace of 18 years.

Of whom hereafter Chriſt willing particularly in order of their times we will intreat.

As true Piety and ſincere preaching of Chriſts Word began at this time to decay; So idle Monkry and vain Superſtition in place thereof began to increaſe. For about the ſame year the King began the foundation of two Monaſteries, one of the one ſide of Thames, of Friers Obſervants, the other on the other ſide of Thames called Shene and Zion, dedicated to Charter-houſe-Monks, with certain Bridgit-Nuns or Recluſes, to the number of ſixty, dwelling within the ſame Precinct; ſo that the whole number of theſe with Prieſts, Monks, Deacons, and Nuns, ſhould equal the number of twelve Apoſtles, and ſeventy two Diſciples. The Order of theſe was according to the deſcription of S. Paul the Apoſtle, Col. 1. Eat not, taſte not, touch not, &c. to eat no Fleſh, to wear no Linnen, to touch no Money, &c.

Sion and Bethlem builded.

About Michaelmas, the ſame year the King began his Parliament at Leiceſter, above mentioned. In the which Parliament the Commons put up their Bill again, which they had put up before, Anno 11. Hen. 4. that Temporalties, diſorderly waſted by men of the Church, might be converted and imployed to the uſe of the King, of his Earls and Knights, and to the relief of the poor people, as is before recited. In fear of which Bill, leſt the King would give thereunto any comfortable audience (as teſtifieth Robert Fabian and other Writers) certain of the Prelates and other head-men of the Church put the King in mind to claim his Right in France. Whereupon Henry Chicheſly Archbiſhop of Canterbury made a long and ſolemn Oration before the King to perſwade him to the ſame, offering to the King in the behalf of the Clergy great and noble ſums. By reaſon whereof (ſaith Fabian) the Bill was again put off, and the King ſet his mind for the recovery of the ſame; ſo that ſoon after he ſent his Letters and Meſſengers to the French King concerning that matter, and received from him again anſwer of deriſion, with a Pipe of Tennis-Balls (as ſome record) ſent from the Dolphin, for him to play with at home. Whereby the Kings mind was incenſed the more toward that Voyage. Who when furniſhing himſelf with Strength and Armor, with Powder and Shot, and Gun-ſtones to play with in France, and with other Artillery for that purpoſe convenient, ſo ſet over into France, where he got Hareflew with divers other Towns and Caſtles in Normandy and Picardy, and at Agencourt had a great Victory over the French Army, they being counted but ſeven thouſand, by pricking ſharp ſtakes before them, &c. After that he wan Cane, Towke, Rowan, with other Towns more, as Meldune, or Melione, and married with Katharine the French Kings Daughter. And yet notwithſtanding the third time he made his Voyage again into France, where at length at Bloyes he fell ſick and died: concerning all which Voyages, becauſe they are ſufficiently diſcourſed in Fabian, Hall, and other Chronographers, referring therefore the Reader unto them, I will return my ſtory to other matters of the Church more effectual.

I Declared a little before how by the occaſion of Queen Anne, which was a Bohemian, and married to King Richard the Second, the Bohemians coming thereby to the knowledge of Wickliffs Books here in England, began firſt to taſte and ſavour Chriſts Goſpel, till at length by the preaching of John Hus they increaſed more and more in knowledge. Inſomuch that Pope Alexander the Fifth hearing thereof, began at laſt to ſtir coals, and directeth his Bull to the Archbiſhop of Swinco, requiring him to look to the matter, and to provide that no perſon in Churches, Schools, or other places, ſhould maintain that Doctrine, citing alſo John Hus to appear before him. To whom the ſaid John anſwering again, declared that Mandate or Bull of the Pope utterly to repugne againſt the manifeſt examples and doings both of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles, and to be prejudicial to the liberty of the Goſpel, in binding the Word of God not to have free recourſe. And therefore from this Mandate of the Pope he appealed to the ſame Pope better adviſed. But while he was proſecuting his Appeal, Pope Alexander died, as is aforeſaid. *Ex Cochlæo in hiſt. Pope John 23.

After whom ſucceeded Pope John the Three and twentieth, who alſo, playing his part here in this matter like a Pope, ſought by all means poſſible how to repreſs and keep under the Bohemians, firſt beginning to work his malice upon the foreſaid John Hus their Preacher, who at the ſame time preaching at Prague in the Temple of Bethlehem, becauſe he ſeemed rather willing to teach the Goſpel of Chriſt, than the Traditions of Biſhops, was therefore accuſed of certain to the forenamed Pope John the Three and twentieth for an Heretick. The Biſhop committed the whole matter unto Cardinal de Columna; who when he had heard the Accuſation, he appointed a day to John Hus, that he ſhould appear in the Court of Rome: which thing once done, Wenceſlaus King of the Romans, and of Boheme, at the requeſt ſpecially of his wife Sophia, and of the whole Nobility of Boheme, as alſo at the earneſt ſuit and deſire of the Town and Univerſity of Prague, ſent his Ambaſſadors to Rome, to deſire the Biſhop to quit and clearly deliver John Hus from that Sentence and Judgment: and that if the Biſhop did ſuſpect the Kingdom of Boheme to be infected with any heretical or falſe Doctrine, he ſhould ſend his Embaſſadors thither which might correct and amend the ſame, if there be any error or fault in them. And that all this ſhould be done at the only coſt and charges of the King of Boheme; and to promiſe in his name that he would aid and aſſiſt the Biſhops Legates with all his Power and Authority, to puniſh all ſuch as ſhould be taken or found in any erroneous Doctrine. In the mean ſeaſon alſo John Hus, before his day appointed, ſent his lawful and meek Procurators unto the Court of Rome, and with moſt firm and ſtrong Reaſons did prove his Innocency; whereupon he truſted ſo, that he thought he ſhould have eaſily obtained that he ſhould not have been compelled, by reaſon of the great danger, to appear the day appointed. But when as the Cardinal de Columna, (unto whoſe will and judgment the whole matter was committed) would not admit any defence or excuſe, John Hus his Procurators appealed unto the high Biſhop: yet notwithſtanding this laſt refuge did not ſo much prevail with Cardinal de Columna, but that he would openly excommunicate John Hus as an obſtinate Heretick, becauſe he came not at his day appointed unto Rome.

John Hus accuſed to Pope John.

John Hus excommunicate by Cardinal de Columna.

Notwithſtanding, forſomuch as his Procurators had appealed unto the high Biſhop, they had other Judges appointed unto them, as Cardinal Aquileianus and Cardinal Venetus, with certain others. The which Judges, after they had prolonged and deferred the matter by the ſpace of one year and a half, at laſt they return'd to the Sentence and Judgment of Cardinal de Columna, and confirming the ſame, commanded John Hus his Procurators that they ſhould leave off to defend him any more, for they would ſuffer it no longer. Whereupon when his Procurators would not ceaſe their inſtant ſuit, certain of them were caſt into priſon, and grievouſly puniſhed, the other leaving their buſineſs undone, returned into Boheme.

The Bohemians notwithſtanding little cared for all this, but continuing ſtill, as they grew more in knowledge, ſo the leſs they regarded the Pope, complaining daily againſt him and the Archbiſhop for ſtopping the Word of God, and the Goſpel of Chriſt to be preached, ſaying, That by their Indulgences and other practices of the Court of Rome, and of the Biſhops Conſiſtory, they ſought their own profit, and not the Glory of Jeſus Chriſt; that they pluckt from the Sheep of Chriſt the Wool and Milk, and did not feed them, either with the Word of God, or with good examples. Teaching moreover and affirming, that the Commandments of the Pope and Prelates are not to be obeyed, but ſo far as they follow the Doctrine and life of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles; and that Lay-men ought to judge the works of Prelates, as Paul judged the works of Peter in correcting him, Gal. 2. Furthermore, they had amongſt them certain Notes and Obſervations, whereby they might diſcern how far and wherein they might obey their Prelates; they derided alſo and ſcorned the Popes Juriſdiction, becauſe of the Schiſm that was then in the Church, when there were three Popes together, one ſtriving againſt another for the Papacy.

Three doubts of John Hus propounded.

Over and besides this, at the same time John Hus did propound publickly, and by the Notaries caused to be written three doubtful questions, the tenour whereof followeth here word for word, and is this; Forasmuch, saith he, as it is good for men being in doubt to ask counsel, whereby all dubitation is removed, they may be able more firmly to adhere to the Truth; three doubts arise here to be resolved: The first doubt is, Whether we ought to believe in the Pope? The second, Whether it be possible for any man to be saved, which confesseth not with his mouth unto a mortal Priest? The third doubt is, Whether any of the Doctors do hold or say, that some of Pharaohs Host being drowned in the Red-Sea, and of the Sodomites being subverted, be saved?

Credere in Deum. Credere Deo. Credere Deum. Pet. Lumb. lib. 4. dist. 17. cap. 11. Against avarice confession.

As concerning the first, he did hold negatively, alledging the saying of Bede upon this place of the Apostle (To him that believeth upon him which justifieth the wicked, his faith is imputed to righteousness, Rom. 4.) Upon this place saith Bede, Aliud est credere in Deum, aliud credere Deo, aliud credere Deum, &c. The second doubt saith he, the Master of the Sentences doth answer, lib. 4. dist. 17. cap. 11. in these words, What is then to be holden or said herein? Certes, that without the confession of the mouth, and assoiling of the outward pain, sins be forgiven through contrition and humility of the heart, &c. For the third doubt he brought in the words of S. Hier. upon the Prophet Nahum, speaking of the Egyptians destroyed in the Sea, and of the Sodomites destroyed with fire, and of the Israelites destroyed in the Desert. Know you (saith Hierome) that God therefore punished them for their sins here temporally, because they should not be punished hereafter perpetually, and therefore because they were here punished, they should not be punished hereafter, for else the Scripture should lye, which is not to be granted. These three questions be-like John Hus did bring in to declare how the Doctors do not agree in all things, neither with the Church of Rome, neither are to be followed in all points of all men.

Counsel of the Prelates of Prague against the Gospellers.

It followeth moreover after the death of the Archbishop Swinco above mentioned, that one named Conradus was placed by the Pope there to be chief General, which Conradus conferring with the Divines and Doctors of the University of Prague, required their advices and counsels, what way they might best take to assuage the dissention and discords between the Clergy and the people. Whereupon a certain Council was devised to be holden after this sort and manner as followeth:

1. First, That all Doctors and Masters of the University of Prague should be assembled in the Court of the Archbishop, and in his presence, that every Doctor and Master should swear, not to hold or maintain any of the 45 Articles of John Wickliff before condemned.

2. Item, Concerning the seven Sacraments of the Church, the Keys and Censures of the Church, the Manners, Rites, Ceremonies, Customs, and Liberties of the Church, concerning also the worshipping of Reliques and Indulgences, the Orders and Religions of the Church, that every one shall swear that he doth hold, believe and maintain, and will maintain, as doth the Church of Rome, and no otherwise, of the which Church of Rome the Pope is the Head, and the College of Cardinals is the Body: who are the true and manifest Successors of blessed Saint Peter Prince of the Apostles, and of the College of the other Apostles of Christ.

Purum bonum, Purum malum, Medium.

3. Item, That every one shall swear, that in every Catholick matter, belonging to the Church, he will stand to the determination of the Apostolical See, and that he will obey the Prelates in all manner of things, whersoever the thing, which is pure good, is not forbidden; or that which is meer ill, is not commanded; but is mean and indifferent between both. Which mean or indifferent thing, yet notwithstanding by circumstances of time, place or person, may be either good or evil.

4. Item, That every one shall swear and confess by his Oath, that the Opinions of Wickliff and others, touching the seven Sacraments of the Church, and other things above notified, being contrary to the said Church of Rome, be false.

5. Item, That an Oath be required of them all, that none of them shall hold, defend or maintain any of the 45 Articles of John Wickliff aforesaid, or in any other matter Catholick, and especially of the seven Sacraments and other Aricles above specified, but only as doth the Church of Rome, and no otherwise.

6. Item, That every Ordinary in his Dioces shall cause the said Premisses, contained in the first, second, third, and fourth Articles aforesaid, to be published in his Synods, and by his Preachers to be declared to the people in the Kingdom of Boheme.

7. Item, If any Clerk, Student, or Lay-man shall withstand any of the premisses, that the Ordinary have authority, if he be convicted thereof, to correct him according to the old Laws and Canons, and that no man shall defend such a one by any means; for none but the Ordinary hath Power to correct such a man, because the Archbishop is Chancellor both of the Kingdom and University of Prague.

8. Item, That the Songs lately forbidden, being odious, slanderous, and offensive to others fame, be not sung either in Streets, Taverns, or any other place.

9. Item, That Master John Hus shall not preach so long as he shall have no absolution of the Court, neither shall hinder the preaching in Prague by his presence; that by this, his Obedience to the Apostolical See may be known.

10. Item, That this Council doth appear to be good and reasonable for the putting away of ill report and dissension that is in the Kingdom of Boheme.

11. Item, If Master John Hus with his complices will perform this, which is contained in the four former Articles, then we will be ready to say as they would wish us and have us, whensoever need shall require, that we do agree with them in matter of Faith: otherwise if they will not so do, we in giving this testimony, should lye greatly unto our Lord the King and the whole World. And moreover, we will be content to write for them to the Court of Rome, and do the best we can for them, our honours saved. This counsel and devise being considered amongst the Heads of the University of Prague, the foresaid Administrator named Conradus, presented unto the King and to the Barons of the Realm, and also to the Senate of Prague. Whereof as soon as word came to John Hus and his Adherents, they likewise drew out other Articles in manner and form of a Council as followeth:

For the honour of God and the true preaching of his Gospel, for the health of the people, and to avoid the sinister and false infamy of the Kingdom of Boheme, and of the Marquisship of Moravia, and of the City and University of Prague, and for the reforming of peace and unity between the Clergy and the Scholars of the University.

1. First, Let the right and just decreement of the Princes, and of the Kings Council, be holden and stand in force, which between the Lord Archbishop Swinco on the one party, and between the Rector and Master John Hus on the other party, was made, proclaimed, sealed, and solemnly on both parts received and allowed in the Court of our Sovereign Lord the King.

2. Item, That the Kingdom of Boheme remain in his former Rites, Liberties, and common Customs, so as other Kingdoms and Lands do enjoy; that is, in all approbations, condemnations, and other acts concerning the holy Mother universal Church.

3. Item, That Master John Hus (against whom the foresaid Lord Swinco could object no Crime before the Council) may be present in the Congregation of the Clergy, and there whosoever will object to him either Heresie or Error, let him object, binding himself to suffer the like pain, if he do not prove it.

4. Item, If no man will set himself on the contrary part against him, then let the Commandment be made by our Soveraign Lord the King through all his Cities, and likewise let it be ordained and proclaimed through all Villages and Towns, That Master John Hus is ready to render account of his Faith, and therefore if any will object unto him any Heresie or Error, let him write his name in the Chancery of the Lord Archbishop, and bring forth his Probations openly before both the Parties.

5. Item, If none such shall be found to object, or which will write his name, then let them be called for, which caused to be noised and rumored in the Popes Court, that in the Kingdom of Boheme, in the City of Prague, and in the the Marquiſsdom of Moravia, many there be whoſe hearts be infected with Hereſie and Error, that they may prove who they be; and if they be not able to prove it, let them be puniſhed.

6. Item, That commandment be directed to Doctors of Divinity and of the Canon-Law, and to the Chapter of Cathedral-Churches, and that it be required of them all and of every one particularly, that they will bring forth his name, if they know any ſuch to be an Heretick or Erroneous, and if they deny to know any ſuch, then let them make recognition thereof, before the publick Notary, confirming the ſame with their Seals.

7. Item, Theſe things thus done and premiſed, then that our Soveraign Lord the King, and alſo that the Archbiſhop will give commandment under pain, that no man ſhall call one another Heretick or Erroneous, unleſs he will ſtand to the probation of that Hereſie or Error, as it becometh him.

8. Item, After theſe things obtained, that our Soveraign Lord the King, with the conſent of his Barons, will then levy a Subſidy, or collect of the Clergy, and direct an honeſt Ambaſſy to the Popes Court, with the which Ambaſſadors let them alſo go upon their own proper charges or expences for their purgation, which have cauſed this Kingdom falſly and grievouſly to be infamed in the Apoſtolick Court.

9. Item, In the mean ſeaſon for the preſence of Maſter John Hus, no Interdict ought to be made, as it was made of late contrary to the order and determination of our holy Mother-Church, &c.

The Pope maketh war.

As this matter was thus in altercation between the two parts, the one objecting, the other anſwering in Articles as is aforeſaid: In the mean time it happened by the occaſion of Ladiſlaus King of Naples, who had beſieged the Popes Towns and Territories, that Pope John raiſing up War againſt the ſaid Ladiſlaus, gave full remiſſion of ſins to all them which would War of his ſide to defend the Church. When this Bull of the Popes Indulgence was come to Prague, and there publiſhed, the King Wenceſlaus, who then favoured that Pope, gave commandment that no man ſhould attempt any thing againſt the ſaid Popes Indulgences. But Hus with his Followers, not able to abide the impiety of thoſe Pardons, began manifeſtly to ſpeak againſt them; of the which company were three certain Artificers; who hearing the Prieſt preaching of theſe Indulgences, did openly ſpeak againſt them, and called the Pope Antichriſt, which would ſet up the Croſs to fight againſt his evenchriſtened. Wherefore they were brought before the Senate, and committed to Ward. But the people joyning themſelves together in Arms, came to the Magiſtrates, requiring them to be let looſe. The Magiſtrates with gentle words and fair promiſes ſatisfied the people, ſo that every man returning home to his own houſe, the tumult was aſſwaged. But the Captains being in priſon, were notwithſtanding there beheaded, whoſe names were John, Martine, and Staſcon. The death and Martyrdom of theſe three being known unto the people, they took the bodies of them that were ſlain, and with great ſolemnity brought them unto the Church of Bethlem. At whoſe Funeral divers Prieſts favouring that ſide, did ſing on this wiſe; Theſe be the Saints which for the Teſtament of God gave their Bodies, &c. And ſo their Bodies were ſumptuouſly interred in the Church of Bethlem, John Hus preaching at the ſame Funeral, much commending them for their conſtancy, and bleſſing God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which had hid the way of his verity ſo from the prudent of this World, and had revealed it to the ſimple Lay-people and inferior Prieſts, which choſe rather to pleaſe God than men.

John, Martine, Staſcon, Martyrs.

Thus the City of Prague was divided. The Prelates with the greateſt part of the Clergy, and moſt of the Barons, which had any thing to loſe, did hold with the Pope, eſpecially Steven Paletz, being the chieſeſt doer on that ſide. On the contrary part the Commons with part of the Clergy and Students of the Univerſity, went with John Hus, Wenceſlaus the King, fearing leſt this would grow to a tumult, being moved by the Doctors and Prelates and Council of his Barons, thought beſt to remove John Hus out of the City, who had been excommunicated before by the Pope. And further to ceaſe this diſſention riſen in the Church; he committed the matter to the diſpoſition of the Doctors and the Clergy. They, conſulting together among themſelves 5 did ſet forth a Decree, ratified and confirmed by the Sentence of the King, containing the ſum of 18 Articles for the maintenance of the Pope and of the See of Rome, againſt the Doctrine of Wickliff and John Hus. The names of the Doctors of Divinity were theſe, Steven Paletz, Staniſlaus de Znoyma, Petrus de Ikoyma, Joannes Heliæ, Andreas Broda, Johannes Hildeſen, Mattheus Monachus, Hermanus Heremita, Georgius Bota, Simon Wenda, &c. John Hus, thus departing out of Prague, went to his Country, where he, being protected by the Lord of the ſoil, continued there preaching, to whom reſorted a great concourſe of people, neither yet was he ſo expelled out of Pregue, but that ſometimes he reſorted to his Church at Bethlem, and there alſo preached unto the people.

{RING Hen. 5.}

Moreover, againſt the ſaid Decree of the Doctors, John Hus with his company replied again, and anſwered to their Articles, with contrary Articles again as followeth.

The Objections of John Hus and of his part againſt the Decree of the Doctors.

FIrſt, The foundation of the Doctors whereupon they found all their writings and counſels, is falſe, which foundation is this, whereas they ſay that part of the Clergy in the Kingdom of Boheme is peſtilent and erroneous, and holdeth falſly of the Sacraments.

2. The Doctors hereby do defame the Kingdom of Boheme, and do raiſe up new Diſcords.

3. Let them ſhew therefore thoſe perſons of the Clergy, whom they call peſtilent, and ſo let them verifie their report, binding themſelves to ſuffer the like pain, if they be not able to prove it.

4. Falſe it is that they ſay the Pope and his Cardinals to be the true and manifeſt Succeſſors of Peter and of the Apoſtles, and that no other Succeſſors of Peter and of the Apoſtles, can be found upon the Earth beſides them. When as no man knoweth whether he be worthy of hatred or of favour. And all Biſhops and Prieſts be Succeſſors of Peter and of the Apoſtles.

5. Not the Pope, but Chriſt only is the Head; and not the Cardinals, but all Chriſts faithful people be the Body of the Catholick Church, as all holy Scripture and Decrees of the holy Fathers do teſtifie and affirm.

6. And as touching the Pope, if he be a Reprobate, it is plain that he is no Head, no nor Member alſo of the holy Church of God, but of the Devil, and of his Synagogue.

7. The Clergy of the Goſpellers agreeing with the ſaying of Saint Auſtin which they alledge, and according to the Sanctions of the Fathers, and determinations of the holy Mother-Church, do ſay and affirm laudably, that the condemnation and prohibition of the 45 Articles is unlawful, and unjuſt, and raſhly done: and that not only beeauſe the Doctors, but alſo all Biſhops and Archbiſhops, in ſuch great Cauſes, namely touching Faith (as theſe Articles do) have no authority at all, as appeareth. De baptiſmo & ejus effectu cap. Majores. Et in Can. 17. diſt. cap. Hinc ſedi, &c.

8. The ſecond cauſe of the diſcord which they alledge alſo is moſt falſe; ſeeing the Faith of whole Chriſtendom, concerning the Church of Rome, is divided in three parts by reaſon of three Popes, which now together do Reign: and the fourth part is neutral. Neither is it true, that we ought to ſtand in all things to the determination of the Pope, and of the Cardinals, but ſo far forth as they do agree with the holy Scripture of the Old and New Teſtament, from whence the Sanctions of the Fathers did firſt ſpring, as is evident. De accuſationibus cap. Qualiter, &c.

9. In the fourth Article they braſt out into a certain dotage, and are contrary to themſelves. By reaſon that they doltiſhly have reprehended the Goſpellers, who in all their doings receive the holy Scripture (which is the Law of God, the way of truth and life) for their judge and meaſure: and afterward they themſelves do alledge the Scripture, Deut. 17. where all Judges both Popes and Cardinals are taught to judge and diſcern between Leper and Leper, and in every Eccleſiaſtical Cauſe, only after the the rule of Gods Law. And ſo are they contrary unto their ſecond Article, wherein they ſay, That in every Catholick matter we muſt run to the Pope; which is contrary to the foolish condemnation of the Articles aforeſaid.

10. Conſequently, like Idiots they do moſt falſely alledge for their purpoſe the Canon, under the name and authority of Hierome, written 24. q. 1. Hæc eſt fides Papa, &c. where they do apply the words of Hierome moſt impertinently to the Pope of Rome, which he writeth to S. Auſtin, calling him a moſt bleſſed Pope.

24. 2. 1. Hæc eſt fides.

11. By the which place of Hierome it is manifeſt that the firſt Article of thoſe Doctors is falſe. Foraſmuch as by theſe words appeareth that other betides the Biſhop of Rome and his Cardinals are called bleſſed Popes, holding the Faith and ſeat of Peter, and are ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, as was Auſtin and other Holy Biſhops moe.

12. Whereof it followeth moreover, That the Church of Rome is not that place, where the Lord did appoint the principal See of his whole Church. For Chriſt, which was the head Prieſt of all, did firſt ſit in Jeruſalem, and Peter did ſit firſt in Antioch, and afterward in Rome. Alſo other Popes did ſit ſome in Bonony, ſome at Peruſium, ſome at Avinion.

Auſtin called Pope.

13. Item, the foreſaid Prelates are falſifiers of the Holy Scriptures and Canons, and therefore are worthy to be puniſhed: Which affirm and ſay, That we muſt obey the Pope in all things. For why, it is known that many Popes have erred, and one Pope was alſo a Woman. To whom not only it was not lawful to give obedience, but alſo unlawful to Communicate with them. As all Rubricks, and infinite Canons do declare.

14. Item, Their, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Articles do ſtand and are grounded upon untrue and falſe perſwaſions. And therefore are to be rejected and deteſted like the other before: Seeing they do induce not to peace and verity, but to diſſention and fallity.

15. It is manifeſt alſo to the Laity, that this diſſention among the Clergy riſeth for no other cauſe, but only for the preaching of the Goſpel, which reprehendeth ſuch Simoniacks, and ſuch Hereticks in the Church of God, as namely haunt the Court of Rome ſpreading out their branches abroad into all the World. Who deſerve to be removed and extirpate, not only of the Clergy Goſpellers, but alſo of the Secular Power. And ſo theſe three vices, to wit, Symony, Luxury, and Avarice (which is Idol-worſhip) be the cauſes of all this Diſſention among the Clergy in the Kingdom of Bohemia, and not the other, which they falſly aſcribe to the Goſpellers of Prague. Theſe three vices being removed, Peace and Unity would ſoon be reſtored in the Clergy.

Pope Joan a Woman. Symony, Luxury, Avarice, three cauſes of diſſention in the Clergy.

16. Moreover, their laſt Article is too groſs, and not only is without all Law, but alſo without all colour of Law: whereas they fondly and childiſhly do argue thus, That the Proceſſes made againſt Mr. John Hus ought to be obeyed, becauſe forſooth the common ſort of the Clergy of Prague, hath received them. By the ſame reaſon they may argue alſo, That we muſt obey the Divel, for our firſt Parents Adam and Eve obeyed him. Alſo our fore-anceſtors before us were Pagans, wherefore we muſt obey them, and play alſo the Pagans.

17. But let this frivolous Opinion go, this is certain truth, That the ſaid Proceſſes, made againſt Mr. John Hus, by Law are none. Foraſmuch as they were obtained, drawn, wrought, and executed contrary to the Commiſſion of the Pope, againſt the determination of the holy Mother-Church, as appeareth Cap. Sacro de Sententia excom. and a Thouſand other Laws beſides.

18. Finally, whoſoever wittingly and obſtinately do defend and execute (the ſaid Proceſs made) or conſenteth unto them, are all to be counted as Blaſphemers, Excommunicate, and Hereticks, as hath been afore written and exhibited to the Lord General Biſhop Olomucenſe. And more ſhall be declared and proved, if audience may be given openly before all the Doctors. Ex Æneæa Sylvi. & Cochlæo.

¶ Unto theſe Objections of John Hus and his part, the Catholick Doctors again did anſwer in a long tedious Proceſs; The ſcope whereof principally tended to defend the principality of the Pope, and to maintain his obedience above all other Potentates in the World; affirming and contending, that although Chriſt is the head alone of the whole multitude of them that are ſleeping in Purgatory, and which are labouring in the Church Militant, and which are reſting in Heaven, yet this letteth not, but the Pope is Head of the Church here Militant, that is, of all the faithful, which here in this World live under his office. Like as Chriſt is King of all kings, and yet Charles may be King of France: ſo ſay they. Chriſt may be the Univerſal Head, and yet the Pope may be Head under Him of the whole Church; And thus concluded they that the Pope is the Head, and that the College of Cardinals is the Body of the Romiſh Church, which Church of Rome is placed in the Eccleſiaſtical Office here over the Earth, to know and define upon every Eccleſiaſtical and Catholick matter; to correct errors and to purge them, and to have care upon all ſuch Univerſal matters, and care upon all Univerſal Churches, and upon the Univerſal flock of faithful Chriſtians. Foraſmuch as in the Regiment of the Church through the Univerſal World, there muſt needs remain in ſuch Office always ſome ſuch manifeſt and true ſucceſſors of Peter, Prince of the Apoſtles and of the College of the other Apoſtles of Chriſt; neither can there be found or given upon Earth any other ſucceſſors, but only the Pope which is the Head, and the College of Cardinals, which is the body of the foreſaid Church of Rome. And although the whole Univerſal multitude of the faithful do make the Body of Chriſt, yet the ſame Body of Chriſt is not placed here in Office to exerciſe ſuch Authority upon Earth. Becauſe that Univerſal multitude was never yet, nor ever can be congregate together.

As Charles may be King of France; ſo alſo we grant, the Pope may be Biſhop of Italy, and ſo it is a good conſequence. He may ſo be if God had ſo appointed him, but where doth he ſo appoint?

Ex Cochlæo in Hiſt. Huſſit. Catholick, that is, Univerſal.

And therefore neceſſary it is, That ſome ſuch true and manifeſt Succeſſors and Judges be appointed, to whom recourſe muſt be had in all ſuch Catholick and Eccleſiaſtical matters determinable. For like as in Earthly Regiments every cauſe of diſcord is brought before his Judge, and hath his place aſſigned where to be decided: ſo like reaſon would require, that in principal matters and controverſies of Faith, ſome ſuch preſidents and places be limited for the purpoſe to have ſuch doubts reſolved. And this being granted, then the Doctors proceed, and here muſt needs conclude (ſay they) that there cannot be given in all the World any other place, but only the Church of Rome; the Head whereof is the Pope, and the Body is the College of Cardinals. For like as Chriſt, departing out of this World in his Corporal preſence, left his Body here with us under the Sacrament in an other form, whereby he remaineth with us (according to his Promiſe, Mat. ult.) unto the conſummation of the World: even ſo Chriſt walkt here on Earth in his Bodily preſence, he was Pope himſelf and Chief Biſhop, and ſo Head of the Church here Militant in Earth, corporally conjoyned with the ſame, as the Head is to his Body. But after that he departed out of the World, becauſe his Body which is the Church Militant upon the Earth, ſhould not be headleſs, therefore he left Peter and his Succeſſors to his Church, for an Head in his place, unto the conſummation of the World, ſaying to him, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, &c. Matth. 16. And again he ſaith, Feed my ſheep, Joan. ult. That is to ſay, Be thou Peter the Head over thy Brethren.

If ye go to human policy, what ever ſay any private caſe of England, brought to the Emperors Court to be decided? If ye go to Gods policy, then ſhew Gods Word for it.

The promiſe of Chriſt Doctorly applied.

O deep Divinity of theſe Doctors.

Tedious it were, to recite all the bibble babble of theſe Doctors in this their long reſponſal. Who ſo liſteth to ſee the bottom of their profound writing and knowledge, may reſort either to the Hiſtory of Silvius, or elſe to Maſter Cochleus, in his firſt Book, De Hiſt. Huſſit.

Vide Æneam Silv. & Cochlæum. De Hiſt. Huſſit. lib. 1.

Thus then Maſter John Hus being driven out of Prague (as is afore touched) by the motion of theſe Doctors, and moreover being ſo Excommunicate, that no Maſs nor other muſt be ſaid there where he was preſent: the people began mightily to grudge and to cry out againſt the Prelates and other Popiſh Prieſts, which were the workers thereof, accuſing them to be Symoniacks, Covetous, Whoremaſters, Adulterers, Proud, ſparing not to lay open their vices to their great ignomy and ſhame: And much craving Reformation to be had of the Clergy.

The King ſeeing the inclination of the people, being alſo not ignorant of the wickedneſs of the Clergy, under pretence to reform the Church, began to require greater exactions upon ſuch Prieſts and Men of the Clergy, as were known and accuſed to be wicked livers. Whereupon they on the other part that favoured John Hus, taking that occasion present, complained of all, accused many, and spared none, whomsoever they knew to be of the Catholick Faction, or enemies to John Hus. By reason whereof the Priests of the Popish Clergy were brought, such as were faulty, into great distress, and such as were not faulty, into great fear. Insomuch that they were glad to fall in, at least not to fall out with the Protestants, being afraid to displease them. By this means M. Hus began to take some more liberty unto him, and to preach in his Church at Bethlehem, and none did control him: by the same means the people also received some comfort, and the King much gain and Money by that reason.

The Priests of Bohemia displayed and taxed for their ill life.

And thus the Popish Clergy, while they went about to persecute John Hus, were inwrapped themselves in great tribulation, and afflicted on every side, as well of Laymen, as of learned Men of the Clergy. Insomuch that Women also and Children were against them. And by the same reason, wherewith they thought to intangle him, they were overthrown themselves. For the Doctors which before condemned this Doctrine in John Hus for intolerable Heresie, and cried out so much against him, for teaching that Temporal Lords might take away Temporal Livings from the Clergy sinning habitualiter, that is, Lying and continuing still in the custom of iniquity; now when the King and the Lords Temporal began to mearse them and bereave them of their Temporalties for their transgressions, the said Doctors did keep silence and durst speak never a word. Again, where the foresaid Doctors before could not abide in John Hus, that Tithes were to be counted for pure Alms, now coming to the Guid-Hall, they were fain to intreat for their Temporal Goods not to be taken from them; pleading the same Temporalites to be meer Alms and Devotion of good Men, given unto the Church. Ex Cochlæo.

The Popish Doctors and Priests overthrown in their own reason.

And thus now did they themselves grant the thing, which before they did condemn. The more that the Popes Clergy was pinched, the more grudge and hatred redounded to John Hus, although he was in no cause thereof, but only their own wicked deservings, for the which cause Stephen Paletz, and Andræas de Broda, being the chief Champions of that Faction, though they would not remedy the cause, yet to ease their minds, wrote sharp and cruel Letters to Master Hus. And to help the matter forward, the People also here must help at a pinch, who likewise writeth his Letters to Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, which was Brother to Sigismund Emperor, for the suppressing of John Hus and of his Doctrine. Which was in the fifth and last year of his Popedom, Anno. 1414. The tenor of whose Letters to King Wenceslaus in this wise proceedeth.

Stephen Paletz, Andrew Broda, writ against John Hus.

The Letter of Pope John to King Wenceslaus.

The Letter of Pope John to King Wenceslaus.

JOHN Bishop, Servant of Gods Servants, to his well-beloved Son in Christ, Wenceslaus, King of Romans and of Bohemia, greeting and Apostolical Benediction. Among other desires and delights of our heart, who, although unworthy, represent the room of Christ here in Earth: this doth chiefly redound to our singular comfort, so often as we do hear of the brotherly entreaty of peace and concord (by which concord Kingdoms do increase, as contrary by discord they are diminished) which is between your honour and our wel-beloved Son in the Lord, Sigismund your Brother Germain and Cousin, for the noble King of the Romans, &c. And furthermore it followeth in these words; And as we have cause to joy at the premisses; so likewise again the heavy rumors which are here, do trouble and damp our minds. For we hear that in divers places under our dominion, there be certain which do follow and lean to the errors of that Arch-Heretick Wickliff, whose Books have been long since condemned in the general Roman Council, to be Erroneous, Heretical, and swerving from the Catholick Faith. And furthermore, which is worst of all, the said persons cleaving to the opinions of the Hereticks (lest they should be corrected of their superior powers for their excess, to cover their haughtiness and stubbornness in despising the commadments of the Apostolical Seat) do openly teach disobedience and contempt of the Keys and Ecclesiastical censure, to the subversion of the Apostolical Dignity, setting at naught the Decrees of the Holy Fathers and Canons. Wherefore we exhort your worship for the mercy of our God, as heartily as we may or can, that it would please you, as we desire and hope you will (so effectually) to shew forth your Regal power, both for the glory of God, and defence of the Catholick Faith (which you go about to defend) and for the conservation of your Kingly Name, state and honour, for the prosperous and safe government of your Kingdom and Dominions, as it becometh a Catholick Prince, whereby this blot of Heresie (which doth so lamentably and miserably spring and creep in those parts, and doth so infect the minds of mortal Men, to the destruction of their souls, and doth sequester them from the Congregation of the pure and Catholick Faith and Truth) may be rooted out, &c.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Given at Boncnia in the Ides of June, in the fifth year of our Popedom, &c.

In this Epistle of Pope John above prefixed, forsomuch as mention is made of a certain Council before holden at Rome (which was four years before) against the Articles and Books of John Wickliff, it shall not be impertinent nor out of purpose to repeat a certain merry History and worthy otherwise to be noted, written by Nicholas Clemangis of a certain Spirit, which ruled the Popish Councils; his words are these.

The story of an Owl appearing at the Council of Pope John. Ex Nic. Clemangis.

The same Pope called a Council at Rome about four years before, at the earnest sute of diverse men. And a Mass of the Holy Ghost being said at the entrance into the said Council, (according to the accustomed manner) the Council being set, and the said John sitting highest in a Chair prepared for him for that purpose: Behold, an ugly and dreadful Owl, or as the common Proverb is, the evil sign of some mischance of death to follow, coming out of the back half of him, flew to and fro, with her evil favoured voice, and standing upon the middle beam of the Church, cast her staring eyes upon the Pope sitting. The whole company began to marvel, to see the Night-Crow, which is wont to abide no light, how she should in the mid-day come in the face of such a multitude, and judged (not without cause) that it was an ilfavored token. For behold, said they (whispering one in another ear) the Spirit appeareth in the shape of an Owl. And as they stood beholding one another, and adviling the Pope, scarcely could they keep their contenance from laughter. John himself, upon whom the Owl stedfastly looked, blushing at the matter, began to sweat and to fret and fume with himself, and not finding by what other means he might salve the matter, being so confused, dissolving the Council, rose up and departed. After that there followed another Session: In the which Owl again after the manner aforesaid, although, as I believe, not called, was present, looking sted fastly upon the Bishop; whom he beholding to be come again, was more ashamed than he was before (and justly;) saying, he could no longer abide the sight of her, and commanded that she should be driven away with battes and shoutings: But she being afraid neither with their noise, neither with any thing else, would not away, until that with the strokes of the sticks, which were thrown down at her, she fell down dead before them all. This I learned of a faithful Friend, who at the same time came to Rome: the which thing I scarcly crediting for the rareness of the matter, he affirmed by his Oath, that it was most certain and true: adding moreover, that all there present were much offended, and did greatly deride that Council called for such a purpose, and by little and little the Council was dissolved, nothing done there, as he saith. Although it hath not been always seen that such spiritual Doves have been present with Popes and their Councils, and governed them; yet their evil Doctrine declareth no less. Read gentle Reader, the Book of Clemangis, and thou shalt not think thy labor evil bestowed. For he hath both learnedly, truly, freely, and godly bewrayed the filthiness of Antichrist, and his Ministers, their wickedness, impiety, and cruelty, and the miserable state and face of the Church, &c. And thus much for Pope John.

KING Hen. 5.

The deſcription of the Popes Councell holden at Rome, in which appeared monſtrous Owle, to the utter defacing of the Pope, and all his clergie.

The Council of Conſtance.

The Council of Conſtance.

HERE by the way is to be noted and underſtood, that during all this time of Pope John, there were three Popes Reigning together, neither was yet the Schiſm ceaſed, which ſo long time had continued, the ſpace (as I ſaid) of 29 years. By reaſon whereof a general Council was ordained and holden at Conſtance in the ſame year, Anno. 1414. being called by Sigiſmund the Emperor, and Pope John the three and twentieth, for the pacifying of the foreſaid Scniſm, which was then between three Popes, ſtriving for the Popedom. The firſt whereof was John, whom the Italians ſet up. The ſecond was Gregory, whom the French-men ſet up. The third was Benedict, whom the Spaniards placed. In this Schiſmatical ambitious conflict, every one defended his Pope, to the great diſturbance of Chriſtian Nations. This Council endureth four years long, wherein all their matters were decided moſt by four Nations, to ſay, the Engliſh, Germain, French, and Italian Nation. Out of which four Nations were appointed and choſen four Preſidents to judge and determine the matters of the Council. The names of which Preſidents were theſe; John the Patriarch of Antioch for France, Anthony Archbiſhop of Rigen for Italy, Nicholas Archbiſhop of Cenefuenſis for Germany, and Nicholas Biſhop of Bath for England; by whom many great and profitable things to the glory of God, and publick profit, might have been concluded, if the rotten fleſh of Churchmen could have biden the ſalt of the Goſpel, and if they had loved the truth. But as Gregorius Nazianzenus writeth, there lightly come few general Councils, but they end more with diſturbance, than tranquility: ſo it happened in this Council. For whereas John the 23*th.* in the firſt Seſſion exhorteth them by theſe words taken out of the eighth of Zachary, Veritatem diligite, that is to ſay, Love the truth, further moniſhing them, and ſpecially the Divines, every Man to do his endeavour for the unity of the Church, and to ſpeak their mind freely; how ſoon this his exhortation was forgotten, it appeared ſhortly after by the deſpiſing of the Prophets, and perſecuting of Chriſt in his members, as by the grace of Chriſt ſhall appear hereafter in the proceſs of this ſtory. Firſt this John did reſign his Papacy, the Emperor giving him thanks kiſſed his feet.

Three Popes togeather ſtriving for the Popedom.

The Prelates aſſembled in this Council were numbred togeather with their deputies, 1940. Philip and Cheney, &c. Gregorius in Epiſtola quadam.

Afterward the ſaid John repenting him that he had ſo done; ſought means to flee, whereunto Frederick Duke of Auſtrich did aſſiſt him; for he changing his Garments fled by night with a ſmall company. And when he was now come unto Schaff-Houſe to go into Italy, the Emperor purſuing, took him, and proclaimed Frederick Traitor, and for that cauſe took away certain Cities from him. At the laſt the matter was appeaſed under this condition, that Frederick ſhould require grace of the Emperor, and reſign all his poſſeſſions unto him. Whereupon the Emperor received him again into favor, and reſtored him to his Dukedom: This Pope, being thus depoſed, was committed unto the County Palatine, and by him carried to the Caſtle of Manheim, where he was kept priſoner by the ſpace of three years. Afterward he was again by Pope Martin admitted to the number of Cardinals.

Duke Frederick of Auſtrich proclaimed a Traitor.

Pope John taken and caſt into priſon.

This Pope John was depoſed by the decree of the Council, more than three and forty moſt grievous and hainous crimes being objected and proved againſt him; as that he had hired Marcilus Permenſis a Phyſitian to poiſon Alexander his predeceſſor. Further, that he was an Heretick, a Simoniak, a Liar, an Hypocrite, a Murtherer, an Inchanter, a Dice-player, an Adulterer, and a Sodomite, and finally, what crime is it that he was not infected withal?

Mark the good qualities of Pope John.

And now to return unto the Council, firſt we will declare the order of their Seſſions, with things therein concluded, in general; then we will (Chriſt willing) adjoyn the ſpecial tractation of ſuch matters, as pertain to the ſtory of the Bohemians, and John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, who in the ſame ungodly Council were condemned and burned.

This Council therefore of Conſtance, which was ſummoned by the Emperor Sigiſmund, and Pope John the 23d. about the Nativity of our Lord Jeſus, An. 1414. began the ſame year to be aſſembled about the later end of the year. Which firſt beginning, as the manner is, with a Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt, as they were ſinging according to their cuſtom their Hymn, Veni ſancte ſpiritus, there was at the ſame time a certain Bill ſet up in the Church by ſome well diſpoſed man, as it ſeemed, wherein were contained theſe words following; Aliis rebus occupati nunc adeſſe vobis non poſſumus, that is to ſay, We are otherwiſe occupied at this time, we cannot intend to come to you. Here is alſo to be remembered the worthy ſaying of the Emperor Sigiſmund, when talk was miniſtred as touching the reformation of ſpirituality, and ſome ſaid, quod oporteat incipere a Minoritis, that is, the reformation ought firſt to begin at the Minorites; the Emperor anſwering again,

A writing ſet up how the Holy Ghoſt had no leaſure to come to the Council of Conſtance.

The worthy anſwer of the Emperor touching the order of reformation.

Non a Minoritis, ſed a Majoritis; that is, Not with the Minorites, ſaith he, but with the Majorites: Meaning the Reformation ought firſt to begin with the Pope, Cardinals and Biſhops, and other ſuperior ſtates of the Church; and ſo to deſcend after to the inferiours. Thus much by the way, and now to the purpoſe and order of the Seſſions as we promiſed. The which Council continued, as is aforeſaid, by the ſpace of four years, and had in it five and forty Seſſions, wherein many things were concluded, the which altogether were too long to be recited in this place; as the depoſition of three ſeveral Popes, which were before ſpoken of, and the hearing of certain Legates. Yet I mind to make ſome brief recapitulation of the moſt principal matters there done in the Seſſions orderly enſuing.

1. In the firſt Seſſion chiefly was concluded, Firſt, That this Council was lawfully Congregate.

2. 2d. Item, That the going away of the Pope ſhould be no let or ſtay, but the Council might proceed.

Note by this example, the authority of Councils preferred before the Pope.

¶ Wherein note (gentle Reader) that the authority of the General Council is above the Pope, contrary to their own Doctrine.

3d. Item, This Council ſhould not be diſſolved before the Church were reformed, as well in the ſuperiors as inferiors.

3. 4. In the 4th. Seſſion amongſt other things, this was firſt concluded; That a Synod Congregate in the Holy Ghoſt, making a General Council, repreſenting the whole Catholick Church here Militant, hath power of Chriſt immediately, to the which power every perſon, of what ſtate or dignity ſoever he be, yea, being the Pope himſelf, ought {Anno 1415.} to be obedient in all ſuch things as concern the general reformation of the Church, as well in the heads, as in the ſubjects.

Item, The ſaid Pope ſhould not tranſlate the Court of Rome, and the Officers of the ſame Court, from the City of Conſtance. And that all his cenſures, doings and workings after the time of his departure, whatſoever he ſhould enterpriſe to do to the prejudice of this Council, ſhould be no effect.

5. In the 5th. Seſſion the ſame Articles were repeated and concluded again.

6. In the 6th. Seſſion procuration and citation was ſent out againſt the Pope.

Commiſſioners appointed to hear John Hus.

Item, Commiſſioners were appointed out of the four Nations for the hearing of John Hus, which ſhall be hereafter mentioned in his ſtory following.

Item, The memory of John Wickliff was condemned, and the ſentence, given in the Council holden at Rome upon the condemnation and burning of Wickliff's Books, was there confirmed.

Citation granted againſt Hierome of Prague.

Item, In the ſame Seſſion, Citation was ſent out againſt Hierome of Prague, the tenor whereof followeth after in the ſtory of the ſaid Hierome.

Item, In this Seſſion was Decreed againſt Libels of infamy.

7. In the 7th. Seſſion, nothing was handled, but that tenor of the Citation againſt Pope John was recited.

8. Sentence given for the burning of Wickliff's bones.

In the 8th. Seſſion, the Sentence and Condemnation of John Wickliff, and his 45. Articles was recited, and ſentence given againſt his memory, and bones to be burned. The tenor whereof is rehearſed in the Hiſtory of John Wickliff before paſſed.

9. In the 9th. Seſſion, the matter and cauſe of Pope John was again intreated, and Commiſſioners appointed to enquire upon his cauſe, and Judges for the ſame.

10. In the 10th. Seſſion, ſuſpenſion was given out and read againſt the ſaid Pope.

11, 12. In the 11th. and 12th. Seſſions, Notaries were aſſigned and definitive ſentence given againſt the ſaid Pope: where alſo it was decreed that none of them, that intended before for the Papacy, ſhould be choſen Pope.

13. The people of Chriſt Excommunicated from the Communion of the Holy Cup.

In the 13th. Seſſion was Decreed, Quod nullus Presbyter ſub pœna Excommunicationis Communicet populo ſub utraque ſpecie panis & vini; That is, That no Prieſt under pain of Excommunication ſhall Communicate unto the people under both kinds of bread and wine.

14. In the 14th. Seſſion came in the reſignation of Pope Gregory the 12th. which was one of the three before mentioned, ſtriving for the Papacy, with certain other Articles concerning the Election of the Biſhop of Rome, and the ratification of their reſigning, which gave other the Papacy. {KING Hen. 5.}

15. The ſolemn publiſhing of the ſentence of condemnation againſt John Hus.

Then enſueth the 15th. Seſſion, in the which Licence was commanded on all parts under pain of Excommunication and the great curſe, that no perſon or perſons high or low, of what eſtate or degree ſoever he were, Emperor, King, Cardinal or other, ſhould diſturb the ſaid Seſſion with any manner of noiſe, either by hand, foot, or voice. This being done, the ſentence and condemnation againſt John Hus was read and publiſhed, which after in the ſtory of John Hus followeth to be ſeen more at large.

16. In the 16th. Seſſion, Ambaſſadors were aſſigned by the Council to go into Aragon to Benedictus the 13th. to treat with him for the reſignation of his Papacy, as the other two had done before.

Item, Power was given to Judges to cite under pain of deprivation, all ſuch as privily departed away from the Council; in the which Seſſion alſo the ſentence againſt John Hus was confirmed and ratified.

17. The Emperors journey into Aragon.

In the 17th. Seſſion, the Emperor took upon him a journey to the King of Aragon, to treat with Pope Benedictus. An Excommunication denounced againſt all ſuch as ſhould go about to impeach the Emperors journey, about that matter, &c.

Item, Prayers and Proceſſions were determined to be made by the Council every Sunday for the ſame cauſe, with an hundred days of pardon given to them that would be preſent thereat; and that all Prelates ſhould [illegible], at every of theſe ſaid Maſſes and Proceſſions in their Pontificalibus. Granting beſides to every Prieſt that ſaid one Maſs, for the ſame a hundred days of pardon: And to all other that once a day ſhould ſay one Pater noſter, and one Ave, for the ſafety of the Emperor, forty days of pardon.

Pardons were here dog cheap.

18. In the 18th. Seſſion certain Judges were aſſigned for the hearing of matters, which the Council had no leaſure to hear.

It was there alſo decreed, That ſuch Letters and Bulls, as were written in the name of that Council, ſhould be received with no leſs credit and authority than the Bulls proceeding from the See Apoſtolical, and that the falſifiers of the ſame ſhould incur no leſs penalty, than the falſifiers of the other. Legates alſo and Ambaſſadors were ſent into Italy.

19. In the 19th. Seſſion, which was the ſame year in the month of September, Hierome of Prague, who was cited as is beforeſaid, was accuſed of Hereſie, and caſt into priſon by the ſaid Council, and conſtrained to abjure. The which his abjuration hereafter followeth to be ſeen in his Hiſtory.

Conſilium ſadiſragine.

Item, It was decreed, Quod non obſtantibus ſalvis conductibus Imperatoris, Regum, &c. poſſit per judicem competentem de hæretica pravitate inquiri, &c. That is, Notwithſtanding the ſafe conduct given by the Emperor and Kings, &c. Inquiry may be made againſt any Man for Hereſie by a ſufficient Judge, and Proceſs to be made according to the Law.

The cauſes of Hereſies were committed to certain Judges and Deputies.

And how chanceth it that the Chart of Conſtantine his donation, is not here mentioned?

Item, The Chart called Carolina, and divers other Charts and conſtitutions concerning the Liberties of the Church of Rome, being brought forth were approved and confirmed.

20. Provide that the Churchmen loſe nothing in no caſe.

In the 20th. Seſſion, Letters and Inſtruments were made and ſet upon Church doors, to require and admoniſh Duke Frederick to reſtore again unto George Biſhop of Auſtrick, ſuch lands, rents, and revenues as he detained and withheld, under pain of Interditement, Suſpending and Excommunicating.

During the time of this Seſſion, the Ambaſſadors returned out of Aragon from Pope Benedict, and were heard with great audience; whereas certain Articles and conditions between the Pope and the Council were brought forth and agreed upon to the number of twelve.

21. {Ann. 1416.}

In the year of our Lord 1416. was the 21th. Seſſion, beginning after their manner with a Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt, with Proceſſion and ſuch other Rites, in the time of which Maſs, James Biſhop of Lody made a Sermon, taking for his Theam theſe words; Exprobravit Deus incredulitatem eorum & duritiam: That is, The Lord rebuked their misbelief and hardneſs, &c. This Sermon being ended, ended, Jerom of Prague which had Abjured as is ſaid the years before, being preſent thereat, ſtood up upon a certain Bench or form, replying againſt the foreſaid James and his Sermon, alledging and preaching divers and ſundry things, whereupon the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, one of the Commiſſioners proceeded againſt him, pronouncing the ſentence definitive, which he had in writing againſt the ſaid Jerom; which ſentence being read and approved by the Council (the tenor whereof enſueth in his Hiſtory) the ſaid Jerom was delivered unto the Secular Power, and burned.

ANNO 1 Hen. 5. Jerome of Prague replied againſt the Sermon of the Biſhop of Londy.

22 & 23. The 22d and 23d Seſſions contain no worthy matter, but only the placing of the Ambaſſadors of Alphonſus King of Arragon, and granting them voices in the Council.

In the 24th Seſſion, Citation was given out againſt Benedict, keeping with Alphonſus King of Arragon.

The 25th Seſſion containeth nothing but a certain Commendam given to the Church of Olemucenſis.

In the 26th Seſſion there was nothing elſe handled, but the Uniting and Incorporating of the Ambaſſadors of the King of Navar into the Council, and alſo concerning the derogation of the priority of voices.

27,28. Ann. 1417. After this followed the 27th and 28th Seſſions, which were in the year 1417. Wherein was treated the relation and declaration concerning the cauſe betwixt Duke Frederick and the Biſhop of Trident, and Proceſs given out againſt the ſaid Duke, accuſing him of Sacriledge; and alſo Excommunicating him for not obeying the Admonition of the Council; concerning the uſurpation and detaining of the City of Trident, and other Poſſeſſions from Biſhop George, as is before ſpecified.

29,30. In the 29th and 30th Seſſions, Protectors and Notaries were given out in the cauſe againſt Pope Benedict, and Order Decreed upon his obſtinacy; wherein alſo the withdrawing of the King of Arragon from the ſame Pope was recited, and approved by the Council.

31. In the 31ſt Seſſion, certain Inſtruments and ſpecial Letters Monitory were directed from the Council to a certain Earl of Italy, named Comes Virtutum, for laying violent hands upon Albert Biſhop of Aſce, and for bringing him to Priſon; requiring the ſaid Earl, under pain of Interdiction and Excommunication, to ſet the ſaid Biſhop at liberty. Alſo another Decree was ſet forth for reſtoring again the liberties of the Church of Baron.

32,33. Pope Benedict accuſed. In the 32d and 33d Seſſions, the accuſation of Pope Benedict was renewed, and his obſtinacy accuſed, and witneſs brought in; at which thing doing the Emperor Sigiſmund was preſent.

34. In the 34th Seſſion, the cauſe of the foreſaid Pope was heard, and Proceſs given out againſt him.

35. In the 35th Seſſion, the Ambaſſadors of the King of Caſtile were brought in, and united to the Council, and Inſtruments thereof made and read. Alſo, that notwithſtanding the Oaths made to the foreſaid Pope, Men might lawfully forſake his obedience.

36. The Pope curſeth the Council. In the 36th Seſſion, a certain Citation was made and read againſt the Pope, containing his deprivation, and the ſentence againſt him, and Inſtruments made upon the ſame. And whereas this Pope had thundred out his Curſes, Deprivations and Excommunications againſt them; the ſaid Synod did adnihilate all his doings.

37. The 37th Seſſion did renew again the accuſation of the foreſaid Pope, and the ſentence definitive againſt him was publiſhed.

38. In the 38th Seſſion certain Decrees were made touching the adnihilating of the penalties of the Ambaſſadors of King Henry, Son of Alphonſus King of Arragon. Alſo, another Decree was made touching the revocation of the voices granted to the Ambaſſadors of the King of Arragon.

Thus Pope Benedict being Depoſed and Excommunicated, as is aforeſaid, in the next Seſſions following they addreſſed themſelves to the Election of a new Pope, beginning firſt in the 39th Seſſion, to give out Decrees concerning General Councils, and proviſion for the avoiding of ſuch like Schiſms hereafter. Decreeing every tenth year to have a General Council, after the two Councils that ſhould follow immediately after this; of the which, the one ſhould be kept within five years then next following, and the ſecond within ſeven years after that.

39. Decrees for General Councils.

Item, In the ſame Seſſion was drawn out a form touching ſuch things as the Pope ſhould profeſs and bind himſelf to obſerve at the time of his Election, of the which Form the Order and Tenor is this:

The Profeſſion which the Pope is bound to. J. N. Elected for Pope, profeſs with heart and mouth unto Almighty God, whoſe Church I take upon me to govern by his help, and to bleſſed St. Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles, ſo long as I ſhall endure in this frail and brittle life, firmly to believe and hold the holy Catholick Faith after the traditions of the Apoſtles, of General Councils, and of other holy Fathers, and namely of the eight General Councils: Nicene the firſt, the ſecond of Conſtantinople, Epheſine the third, Chalcedon the fourth, the fifth and ſixth of them in Conſtantinople, the ſeventh of Nice, the eighth of Conſtantinople. And alſo of the General Councils of Lateran, Lions, and Vienna, willing to obſerve the ſame Faith unviolate even to the uttermoſt, and to preach and defend the ſame, even to the ſpending of my life and blood; and alſo by all means poſſible to proſecute and obſerve the Rite of the Sacraments Canonically delivered to the Catholick Church. And this my Profeſſion and Confeſſion, by my commandment being written out by the Notary of the Arches of the holy Church of Rome, I have ſubſcribed with mine own hand, and ſincerely with a pure mind and devout conſcience I offer it unto the Almighty God upon ſuch an Altar, &c. In the preſence of ſuch witneſs, &c. Yeven, &c.

It was alſo Decided in this Seſſion, That no Prelates ſhould be tranſlated againſt their wills.

40. The third of the ſame month and the ſame year, followed the 40th Seſſion, wherein certain Decrees were conſtitute and read, as touching Reformations to be made through the whole Church by the Pope that next ſhould be, with the Council, before this Synod ſhould break up.

Item, That they ſhould ſo proceed to the Election of the Biſhop of Rome, notwithſtanding the abſence of thoſe Cardinals which were with Pope Benedict in Spain. This done, the order and manner was Decreed for the Election of the Pope.

41. After theſe things thus Decreed; in the next Seſſion, which was 41, the Conſtitution of Clement the ſixth was read, concerning the order and diet of the Cardinals being then in the Conclave about the chuſing of the Pope; and upon the ſame, Oaths were Miniſtred unto the Cardinals and other Electors, binding them to obſerve and keep all ſuch things as they ſhould be bound to, during the time of the Election.

The order and manner of the Conclave in chuſing the Pope. Firſt, That they ſhould enter into the Conclave within ten days after the fortieth Seſſion, which was this preſent day after ſun-ſet.

Secondly, That every Cardinal ſhould have but two ſervitors attending upon him at the moſt, either of the Laity or Clergy, as they would themſelves.

Thirdly, That they ſhould remain together in the ſaid Conclave, without any Wall betwixt them, or any other cover, ſave only bare Curtains, if any were diſpoſed to ſleep.

Fourthly, That the Conclave ſhould ſo be ſhut up, and the entry to the Privy-Chamber be kept ſo ſtraightly, that none of them ſhould come in or out, nor any have recourſe unto them to talk with them privily or apertly, nor they to admit any Man to come to them, except by the conſent of them all certain ſhould be called about matters concerning the Election.

Fifthly, That no Man ſhould ſend to them either Meſſenger or Writings.

Sixthly, That a competent Window ſhould be aſſigned unto them to receive in their Victuals, but that no perſon might come in thereat.

Seventhly, That no day after their firſt ingreſs into the Conclave, beſide Bread, Wine, and Water, they ſhould have any more Diſhes but one of one only kind, either of Fleſh or Fiſh, Eggs, Pottage, made of Fiſh or Fleſh, not after the daintieſt ſort, beſide Sallets, Cheeſe, Fruit, and Conſerves, whereof there ſhall be no principal Meſs made but for ſauce and taſte.

Eightbly, That not one ſhould be compelled to go into the Conclave; but if they did all refuſe to go in, then they ſhould be compelled thereunto.

Ninthly,

Ninthly, That ſuch as would go out, might; but if they would all go out before the Pope were Elect, they ſhould be compelled to go in again, except ſuch whom infirmity did excuſe; but without the excuſe of infirmity, if any went out, he ſhould no more be admitted, except they went all out together.

Tenthly, That ſuch as went out by reaſon of infirmity, to be abſent, and return before the Election be determined, may be admitted again into the Conclave in the ſame ſtate wherein they ſhall find the Election to ſtand,

Further and beſides, the Keepers of the Conclave ſhould alſo be Sworn to ſee all theſe Premiſes obſerved and kept without fraud or guile, and that they ſhould not ſtraiten the Cardinals and other Electors above the order here taken.

And if the King be there himſelf, ſitting in his Throne of Eſtate; he ſhould receive the ſame Oath of the Cardinals.

Upon this, ſuch as ſhould be Electors, beſide the Cardinals were choſen.

These were wiſe Cardinals, they would not go into the Conclave, but they would be ſure to have their Goods ſafe and unſpoiled.

Furthermore, foraſmuch as the Goods and ſubſtance of ſuch as were Elect, were accuſtomed to be given and granted unto ſuch as could catch them: whereupon under the pretence of the ſame, many did invade the Goods of the Cardinals, and others which were in the Conclave, falſly faining them to be Elected which were not to be Elected. To ſtop the greedy ravening of ſuch, a Decree alſo was publiſhed in the ſame Seſſion.

Theſe things thus prepared and ſet in order, the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, with the Cardinals and other Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Deans, Archdeacons, Doctors, with other Electors, entring into the Conclave upon Monday, on Thurſday after they had hatched out a Pope, being St. Martins even, whereupon they named him Martin. This Martin thus being Elected, was ſtraightway brought in by the Emperor and the Council into the Church of Conſtance, and there inthronized for Pope, not without great Solemnity and Triumph. The twenty firſt day of the ſaid Month, this foreſaid Martin, according to their accuſtomed Pomp, was honourably brought in to be Crowned with ſumptuous Proceſſion from the high Church of Conſtance, unto the Monaſtry of St. Auſtin: the Emperor on Foot leading his Horſe by the Bridle on the right hand, and the Marquiſs of Brandenburgh Prince Elector likewiſe leading his Horſe on the left hand, the Pope himſelf riding in the midſt upon his Palfrey.

Pope Martin hatched.

The Emperor leadeth the Pope's Horſe by the Bridle on the right hand. The Prince Elector leadeth the Popes Horſe on the left hand.

And thus being brought into the Monaſtry aforeſaid, and ſo reduced round about again from thence to the high Church of Conſtance, he was there Crowned with all Magnificence.

Notwithſtanding all this, yet all the trifling and fond vanity of this Council, more great than wiſe, did not end thus: for in the next Seſſion, which was the forty ſecond, came out a Decree in the name of the Pope and the Council, diſcharging the bond of the Emperor and the County Palatine, touching the ſafe cuſtody of Pope John, who was by Bond committed unto them to be kept in ſafety. 42.

In the 43d Seſſion, certain other Decrees and Statutes were made by Pope Martin in the ſaid Synod, annullating and reproving all the Acts and proceedings of the other Popes before, during the time of the Schiſm from the time of Gregory the eleventh. As in matters concerning Exemptions, Unions, Fruits and Profits of the Church, Benefices, Symony, Diſpenſations, Tithes, and other burthens of the Church. Alſo concerning the Apparel of the Clergy, and ſuch other things. 43. Apparel of the Clergy.

In the 44th Seſſion, the ſage Fathers of this Council were occupied about the determining what place the next Council ſhould be kept in. The forty fifth Seſſion brake up and diſſolved this Synod. 44.

Now to finiſh our tedious rehearſal of this Synod, The Cardinal Umbald, by the commandment of the Pope and the Council, with a high and loud voice pronounced theſe words: Domini ite in pace; which is, Lords depart in peace; whereunto the Standers by anſwered, Amen. 45.

Thus the Council being diſſolved, Frier John Biſhop of Catthan, by the conſent and commandment of the Pope and the Council, went up into the Pulpit to make a Sermon, taking for his Theme, Vos autem triſtitiam habetis; iterum autem videbo vos, & gaudebit cor veſtrum, You are now in ſadneſs, I will ſee you again, and then your hearts ſhall rejoyce. The which Collation being ended, another Cardinal named Anthony was ſent up by the Pope and the Council, with his Proclamation; Firſt, to diſmiſs the Synod, and to give every man leave to depart home. Alſo to declare the Popes Indulgence unto them, who by the Authority of God Almighty, had granted to them all and every one preſent at that Council, full Abſolution once in their life: ſo that every one, within two months after the hearing of this Indulgence, ſhould procure the ſame in form of writing. Alſo, another Indulgence was granted in like manner of Plenary remiſſion at the hour of death, and that was underſtood as well of the Houſhold, as of the Maſters themſelves. But under this condition, that from the time of notification of the ſame, they ſhould faſt by the ſpace of one whole year every Friday, for the Abſolution in their life time: And for the Abſolution at the hour of death, to faſt the ſame Friday another year, except they had ſome lawful impediment to the contrary, ſo that after the ſecond year, they ſhould faſt unto their lives end, or elſe do ſome other good work. The which being in this manner proclaimed, the Synod brake up, and every man departed home. { Hen. 5. } Ex Paralipomenis Abbatis Urſp.

The number of the Foreigners reſorting to this Council, both Spiritual and Temporal, was 80500, whereof the number of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, was 346.

Abbots and Doctors, 564.

Secular Men { Princes, Dukes, Earls, Knights, Eſquires, } 16000.

The number of Prelates in the Council of Conſtance.

Beſides common Women belonging to the ſame Council, 450.

Barbars, 600. Minſtrels, Cooks, and Jeſters 320.

Common Women in the Council of Conſtance.

So that the whole multitude which were viewed to be in the Town of Conſtance, between Eaſter and Whitſontide, were numbred to be 60500 ſtrangers and foreigners, at that Council. 60500 ſtrangers at the Council of Conſtance.

Here is to be noted that in this Council of Conſtance nothing was Decreed or Enacted worthy of memory, but this only, that the Popes Authority is under the Council, and that the Council ought to judge the Pope. The general Council above the Pope.

And as touching the Communion in both kinds, although the Council did not deny, but that it was uſed by Chriſt and his Apoſtles; yet notwithſtanding by the ſame Council it was Decreed to the contrary. Communion in both kinds denied by this Council.

Hitherto we have comprehended the Order and Diſcourſe of this Council, with the Acts and Seſſions concerning the ſame; which Council, although it was principally thought to be aſſembled, for quieting of the Schiſm between the three Popes, yet notwithſtanding a great part thereof was for the cauſe of the Bohemians, and eſpecially for John Hus, as appeared by their preparation before the Council. For before the Council began, the Emperor Sigiſmund aforeſaid ſent certain Gentlemen Bohemians which were of his own Houſhold, giving them in charge to bring John Hus Bachelor of Divinity, unto the ſaid Council, and that under his ſafe conduct. The meaning and intent thereof was, That John Hus ſhould purge and clear himſelf of the blame which they had laid againſt him: and for the more better aſſurance, the Emperor did not only promiſe him ſafe conduct, that he might come freely unto Conſtance, but alſo that he ſhould return again into Bohemia, without fraud or interruption; he promiſed alſo to receive him under his protection, and under ſafeguard of the whole Empire. For the ſame only cauſe the Emperor ſent him afterwards the ſaid ſafe conducts double written, both in Latin and Almain; the form whereof doth hereafter enſue.

¶ Sigiſmund, by the Grace of God King of the Romans, of Hungary and Denmark, Croatia, &c. To all Princes as well Eccleſiaſtical as Secular, Dukes, Marqueſſes, and Earls, Barons, Captains, Borough-maſters, Judges, and Governors, Officers of Towns, Burgeſſes and Villages, and unto all Rulers of the Commonalty, and generally to all the Subjects of our Empire, to whom theſe Letters ſhall come, grace and all goodneſs.

We

KING Hen. 5. The ſafe conduct given to Maſter John Hus.

We charge and command you all, That you have reſpect unto John Hus the which is departed out of Bohemia, to come unto the General Council; the which ſhall be celebrate and holden very ſhortly at the Town of Conſtance. The which John Hus we have received under our protection and ſafeguard of the whole Empire, deſiring you that you will chearfully receive him when he ſhall come towards you, and that you intreat and handle him gently, ſhewing him favour and good will, and ſhew him pleaſure in all things, as touching the forwardneſs, eaſe, and aſſurance of his journey, as well by Land as by Water.

Moreover, we Will, That he and all his company, with his carriage and neceſſaries, ſhall paſs throughout all Places, Paſſages, Ports, Bridges, Lands, Governances, Lordſhips, Liberties, Cities, Towns, Bourgages, Caſtles and Villages, and all other your Dominions, without paying of any manner of impoſition or Dane-money, Peage, Tribute, or any other manner of Toll whatſoever it be. We Will alſo, That you ſuffer to paſs, reſt, tarry, and to ſojourn at liberty, without doing unto him any manner of impeachment, or vexation, or trouble; and that if need ſhall ſo require, you do provide a faithful company to conduct him withal, for the honour and reverence which you owe unto our Imperial Majeſty. Yeven at Spire the 18th of October, in the year of our Lord God 1414.

By this it may appear, That this ſafe conduct was granted not in the time of the Council by the Biſhop, but before the Council by the Emperor: who was or ought to be the Principal Ordainer and Director of the Council under God. Now whether the Biſhops did well in breaking and adnulling this promiſe of the Emperor, againſt the Emperors mind, becauſe the diſcuſſion thereof belongeth Ad materiam juris, non facti, being a matter rather of Law than of Story, I will defer to reaſon this caſe with Mr. Cope, to ſuch time as may be more convenient to the full tractation thereof. Al. Copus. P. 929.

Notwithſtanding briefly to touch and paſs, let us conſider part of the reaſons of the ſaid Cope, how frivolous and falſe they be and eaſie to be refelled. What (ſaith he) if he preached by the way coming up? Firſt, That it is falſe, vide infra. What (ſaith he) if he ſtood obſtinate in his Hereſie? What if he ſought to eſcape away after his coming up? To this the Lords of Bohemia do anſwer, That this ſafe conduct was broken, and he Impriſoned not only before he attempted to eſcape, or before he was condemned for an Heretick, but alſo before he was heard of the Council what he was. Vide infra. Anſwer to Al. Copus.

Further, where Cope ſaith, that the General Council was above the Emperor, and hath power in caſe of Hereſie to break publick Leagues and Grants; To that I ſay, That this ſafe conduct ſtood not only upon the Emperor, but alſo upon the conſent of the Pope himſelf. Vide infra.

And admit that to be true, That the Council had power to make this Decree, to break promiſe with Hereticks; yet this cannot be denied, but that John Hus was condemned and judged before that Decree in the nineteenth Seſſion was made. Finally when Cope hath proved by what Scripture the Councils have power to defeat the Authority of their Emperors in ſuch Secular Cauſes touching ſafe conducts, and outward ſafety, then will I anſwer him more fully herein. But to the purpoſe again of the ſtory.

John Hus taketh the Emperors ſafe conduct.

John Hus ſeeing ſo many fair promiſes, and the aſſurance which the Emperor had given unto him, ſent anſwer unto the Emperor, that he would come unto the Council. But before he departed out of the Realm of Bohemia, and ſpecially out of the Town of Prague; he did write certain Bills long enough afore, as well in Latin as in the Bohemian Language, and Almain, and cauſed them to be ſet and faſtned upon the Gates of the Cathedral Churches and Pariſh Churches, Cloiſters and Abbies, ſignifying unto them all, that he would go to the General Counſel at Conſtance, wherefore if any man have any ſuſpition of his Doctrine, that he ſhould declare it before the Lord Conrade, or Biſhop of Prague, or if he had rather, at the General Council, for there he would render and give up unto every one, and before them all, an account and reaſon of his Faith. The example of his Letters and Intimations ſet up, were theſe; the Copy whereof here followeth:

The Letters of John Hus ſet up in common places of the City of Prague.

Letters of John Hus ſet up.

After John Hus, Bachelor of Divinity, will appear before the moſt reverend Father the Lord Conrade, Archbiſhop of Prague, and Legate of the Apoſtolick Seat, in their next Convocation of all their Prelates and Clergy of the Kingdom of Bohemia, being ready always to ſatisfy all Men which ſhall require him to give a reaſon of his Faith and Hope that he holdeth, and to hear and ſee all ſuch as will lay unto his charge, either any ſtubbornneſs of Error or Hereſie, that they ſhould write in their names there, as is required both by Gods Law and Mans. And if ſo be that they could not lawfully prove any ſtubbornneſs of Error or Hereſie againſt him, that then they ſhould ſuffer the like puniſhment that he ſhould have had; unto whom all together he will anſwer the next General Council at Conſtance, before the Archbiſhop and the Prelates, and according to the Decrees and Canons of the Holy Fathers, ſhew forth his innocency in the Name of Chriſt. Dated the Sunday next after the Feaſt of St. Bartholomew.

The intimations following, were drawn out of the Bohemian Tongue.

Another intimation of John Hus ſet up for his going to Conſtance.

I Maſter John Huſnetz, do ſignify unto all Men, That I am ready to come and ſtand before the face of my Lord the Archbiſhop, and to anſwer to all things whereof I am falſly accuſed in the next Convocation of Bachelors; and chiefly to this point, That in many places they do report me to be an Heretick, not having reſpect unto Juſtice or Law, neither yet to my merits or deſerts. Therefore ſince that you, which do never ceaſe to ſlander and backbite me with your words, do underſtand and know theſe things, come forth openly before the face and preſence of the Lord Archbiſhop, and with an open mouth declare and ſhew forth what falſe Doctrine or other things ye have heard me teach, contrary to the Catholick Faith; and if that I ſhall be found faulty in never ſo ſmall a matter, contrary or againſt the Faith of Chriſt, or in any falſe Doctrine, and that I do chuſe that or other things contrary to the Faith of Chriſt, then I will hold my peace and ſuffer puniſhment as an Heretick. And if there be no Man that will reſiſt againſt me, or accuſe me in this point, once again I ſay unto you, That I am ready to appear at Conſtance in the famous Congregation, to the end that I may ſtand in the company of the Divines, even before the face of the Pope. Therefore whoſoever knoweth any falſe Doctrine contrary to the Faith of Chriſt in me, let him come thither and ſhew it forth boldly, if he have any thing to lay againſt me, and for my part I will not be ſlack, if I may underſtand or know it, to anſwer as well to ſmall as great, as touching the truth which I have received of God, and deſire to be defended. All you good Men therefore which love the truth, ſay now whether by theſe my words I do think or go about any thing, either contrary to the Law of God or Man. If I be not admitted then to be heard, be it known and manifeſt unto all men, that it hapneth not through my fault the ſame day. The offer of John Hus to his Enemies.

This Epiſtle which followeth was ſet upon the Gates of the Kings Palace, Tranſlated into Latin, out of the Bohemian Tongue.

A writing of John Hus at the Kings Gates.

UNto the Kings Majeſty, the Queen, and to all ſuch as are of his Council, and to all other Rulers and Magiſtrates, which now are in the Kings Court, I John Hus do ſignify and publiſh, That I have underſtood, not by any vain rumour or tale, that there be Letters brought from the Pope to the Kings Majeſty; the Contents whereof is this: That the Kings Majeſty ſhould bring to paſs, that the Hereticks which were now lately ſprung up in his Kingdom and Dominions, ſhould not take any fine or ſtrong root. Forſomuch as without any deſert, as I truſt by Gods Grace the fame or noiſe is ſtrung and blown abroad; it ſhall be

our

our part to foreſee and take heed, that neither the Kings Majeſty, neither the noble Kingdom of Bohemia, ſhould be driven to bear or ſuffer any reproach or ſlander for me. Wherefore now of late I have ſent my Letters to and fro, which I have with great labour and diligence cauſed to be openly ſet up to this intent, that I might thereby cauſe the Archbiſhop to be careful and diligent about the matter, ſignifying openly, that if there were any Man in all Bohemia, which did know me to be a follower of any falſe or corrupt Doctrine, he ſhould profeſs his name in the Archbiſhops Court, and there ſhew forth and declare what he thought. And foraſmuch as there would none be found or come forth, which would accuſe me, the Archbiſhop commanded me and my procurers to depart in peace. Wherefore I require and deſire the Kings Majeſty, which is the defender of the truth, alſo the Queen and their Counſellors, and all other Rulers and Magiſtrates, that they would give me a faithful Teſtimonial of this matter; forſomuch as I have oftentime willed and attempted this, and no Man hath either accuſed me or troubled me. I do it moreover to be known unto all Bohemia, and to all Nations, That I will be preſent even at the firſt time before the Council of Conſtance, in the moſt famous place, in the preſence of the Pope, the Pope being Preſident; and finally, in the preſence of all others which will come to that moſt famous place; and that whoſoever hath any ſuſpition of me, that I have either taught or defended any thing contrary unto the Faith of Chriſt, let him come hither alſo, let him declare there before or in the preſence of the Pope, and all the Doctors of Divinity, what erroneous and falſe Doctrine I have at any time followed or holden. More, if he ſhall convince me of any error, or prove that I have taught any thing contrary unto the Chriſtian Faith, I will not refuſe to ſuffer whatſoever puniſhment ſhall be due for an Heretick. But I hope and truſt even from the bottom of my heart, that God will not give the victory to unfaithful and unbelieving Men, the which do willingly kick and ſpurn againſt the truth.

The ſame time John Hus ſent his procurers to the Lord Biſhop of Nazareth, Ordained by the Apoſtolick See, Inquiſitor of Hereſie of the City and Dioceſs of Prague, requiring him, That if he had found any error in him, he would declare it openly. But the ſaid Biſhop before the ſaid procurer, and the publick Notary, with many other credible Witneſſes, anſwered, That he had often talked with John Hus, and that he never knew any thing in him, but as becometh a goodly and faithful Man; and this his Teſtimony of John Hus, he approved by his Letters, the Copy whereof is here under written.

¶ The Biſhop of Nazareth his Teſtimonial.

The Teſtimony of the good Biſhop of Nazareth.

WE Nicholas by the Grace of God Biſhop of Nazareth, and Inquiſitor, ſpecially deputed by the Apoſtolical Seat, for Hereſies both of the City and Dioceſs of Prague, by theſe Preſents do it to be known unto all Men, that we in times paſt have often commanded and talked with that honourable Man Maſter John Hus, Bachelor of Divinity, of the famous Univerſity of Prague, and have had divers and ſundry conferences with him, both of the Scriptures and divers other matters, and in all his ſayings, doings, and behaviour, we have proved and found him to be a Faithful and a Catholick Man, finding no manner of evil, ſiniſter, or by any means erroneous doings in him unto this preſent. We do witneſs and proteſt moreover, how the ſaid John Hus, of late, in the Cathedral Church of Prague, and in other both Collegiate and Pariſh-Churches, and in the Colleges of the Univerſity of Prague, and in the Gates and Porches of the moſt Noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Wenceſlaus King of Romans and of Bohemia; alſo in the Gates of the reverend Father the Lord Conrade Archbiſhop of Prague, Legate of the Apoſtolick See, and Chancellor of the Univerſity of Prague, and of other Princes and Barons, then being in the City of Prague, hath ſet up his Letters written both in Latin, and in the Bohemian Tongue, containing ſententially in effect, how the foreſaid Maſter John Hus would appear before the reverend Father the Lord Conrade, the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Prague, and all the Prelates and Clergy of the Kingdom of Bohemia, that ſhall be congregated and called together by the ſaid Archbiſhop, at the day appointed in the ſaid City of Prague, ready always to ſatisfy every Man that ſhall deſire and require him to ſhew a reaſon of his Faith and Hope that he holdeth, and to ſee and hear all and every one which could prove any obſtinacy of Error or Hereſie lawfully againſt him, under the pain to receive the like puniſhment: unto whom all together he would, by Gods help, anſwer in the Counſil of Conſtance, which was now at hand, before the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop and us, with all other Prelates, and there in Chriſts Name, according to the Decrees and Canons of the holy Fathers, to declare and ſhew forth his Innocency. After the which Letters, as is aforeſaid by the ſaid Maſter John Hus openly ſet up, there did no Man appear before us, the which would accuſe the ſaid Maſter John Hus of any Error, either of any Hereſie. For the evident witneſs of all which things we have commanded theſe preſent Leters to be made, and confirmed the ſame with the ſetting to of our Seal. Dated in Prague the thirtieth of Auguſt, Anno 1414.

The Biſhop of Nazareth witneſſeth with John Hus.

Upon which matter alſo, a publick Inſtrument was drawn, teſtified with the Hand and Seal of the publick Notary, named Michael Pruthatietz. The Copy of which Inſtrument here under followeth:

¶ An Inſtrument of Recognition, or Proteſtation of the Lord Inquiſitor of Hereſies.

IN the Name of God, Amen. In the year of his Nativity, one thouſand four hundred and fourteen, the thirtieth of Auguſt, in the fifth year of the Biſhoprick of the moſt holy Father in Chriſt, John by the Grace of God Pope, the three and twentieth of that name, in the uppermoſt Parlor of the Houſe of the moſt famous Man the Lord Peter of Zwogſta, called Zuirglits, Maſter of the Mint of the moſt famous Prince and Lord, the Lord Wenceſlaus, King of the Romans and of Bohemia, in the greater City of Prague, about the Abbey of St. James the Apoſtle, in the preſence of me the publick Notary here under written, and certain witneſſes here within written, ſpecially called for that purpoſe.

There was perſonally preſent Maſter John Jeſſenitz, Maſter of Art, procurer in the name of the Honourable Man, Maſter John Hus, Bachelor, formed in Divinity of the Univerſity of Prague. He moſt humbly and earneſtly required of the reverend Father in Chriſt and Lord, Nicholas Biſhop of Nazareth, Inquiſitor of Hereſies for the City and Dioceſs of Prague, ſpecially appointed by the Apoſtolick See, being there alſo preſent, ſaying, Reverend Father, do you know any Hereſie or Error in Maſter John Huſnetz, otherwiſe called Hus? The which ſaid Lord Nicholas, not compelled or conſtrained, but of his own will and accord freely and openly did there Recogniſe, ſaying theſe or the like words, in the Bohemian Tongue.

I have often and many times been converſant with Maſter John Hus, and have eaten and drunk with him: alſo I have been often preſent at his Sermons, and diver of his Collations which he hath made upon divers places of the Scripture, and I never found or perceived in him any Error or Hereſie, but in all his words and deeds I have found him always a true and a Catholick Man, neither have I found any thing that doth ſavour of any Error or Hereſie.

Again, the ſaid Maſter John his procurer in the behalf as above, required and asked the ſaid Lord Nicholas, Biſhop and Inquiſitor, whether any Man have accuſed the ſaid Maſter John Hus of any Hereſie before him, being Inquiſitor for Hereſie, and hath convicted him of Hereſie. He anſwered, That ſince the time he knew John Hus, and that he was made Inquiſitor for Hereſie in the City and Dioceſs of Prague (as is aforeſaid) never any Man accuſed, either convinced the ſaid Maſter John Hus of any Hereſie before him unto this preſent time. Adding moreover, That he the ſaid Maſter John Hus did openly ſet up his Letters Patents this preſent year aforeſaid, in the ſaid Month of Auguſt, upon the Porches of the Cathedral

KIP. Lieg. 5.

Church of Prague, and other Collegiate and Pariſh-Churches of the City of Prague, and upon the Gates of our ſaid Lord, our Lord the King, and the Archbiſhop of Prague, containing in them this effect; how that he would appear before Conrade Archbiſhop of Prague, and all the Prelates and Clergy of the Kingdom of Bohemia, which ſhould be congregated and called together at a certain day of the month aforeſaid, ready always to ſatisfie all Men as touching the Faith and Hope which he held, and to ſee and hear all or ſingular that would lay any obſtinacy of error and hereſie unto him, that they ſhould determine themſelves there to ſuffer the like puniſhment, according to the extremity both of Gods Law and Mans Law, unto whom altogether he would anſwer in his own right before the ſaid Archbiſhop of Prague, and the ſaid Lord Nicholas, Biſhop and Inquiſitor aforeſaid, and the Prelates even in the next General Council of Conſtance, and there according unto the Canons and Decrees of the holy Fathers, declare and ſhew forth his uprightneſs and innocency, upon all and ſingulars of which proceedings, Maſter John de Jeſenitz procurer, and in the procurers name or behalf as afore, required and deſired that he might have one or many publick Inſtruments made unto him by me the publick Notary here under-written. Theſe things were done the Year, Indiction, Day, Month, Hour, Place, and Biſhoprick, as is aforeſaid, in the preſence of theſe noble and famous Men, the Lord William de Zwingelitz, Baron of the Kingdom of Bohemia, Peter his Son, the Lord Hlawaczion, de Renow likewiſe Baron Wenceſlaus de Lunarx, Vaſſone de Miekonitz, Burgrave of the Caſtle of Lichtenburg, Czitborius de Bodanetz Eſquire, and William de Dupoer, Knight of the ſaid Dioceſs of Prague, with many other worthy and credible witneſſes, which were ſpecially deſired and required unto the Premiſes. And I Michael, ſometimes of the Son of Nicholas de Prachatitz of the Dioceſs of Prague, and by the Imperial Authority, publick Notary, was preſent with the witneſſes fore-named, at the affairs aforeſaid, at the requeſt, demand, anſwer, and petition, and all and ſingular the doings within written, and did ſee and hear all theſe things to be done in the foreſaid manner and form. But being buſied with other matters, I have cauſed this to be faithfully drawn and written, and ſubſcribing the ſame with mine own hand, have publiſhed and reduced it into this form, and have ſigned it with my Seal and name accuſtomed, being called and required to bear witneſs of all and ſingular the Premiſes.

After this was all the Barons of Bohemia were aſſembled in the Abbey of St. James, about the affairs of the Realm, whereas the Archbiſhop of Prague was alſo preſent: There the ſaid John Hus preſented ſupplications, by the which he moſt humbly deſired the Barons, that they would ſhew him that favour towards the ſaid Archbiſhop, that if the ſaid Archbiſhop did ſuſpect him of any Error or Hereſie, that he would declare it openly, and that he was ready to endure and ſuffer correction for the ſame at his hands. And if that he had found or perceived no ſuch thing in him, that he would then give him a teſtimonial thereof; through the which he being as it were armed, he might the more freely go unto Conſtance. The ſaid Archbiſhop confeſſed openly before all the Aſſembly of Barons, That he knew not that the ſaid John Hus was culpable or faulty in any crime or offence, and this was his only counſel; that the ſaid John Hus ſhould purge himſelf of the Excommunication he had incurred. This report, which the Archbiſhop had given of John Hus, doth appear by the Letters which the Barons of Bohemia ſent unto the Emperor Sigiſmund by the ſaid Hus, in the Town of Conſtance.

Conrade the Archbiſhop cleareth John Hus.

Finally, all the Prelates and Clergy aſſembled together in the Town of Prague, in the Archbiſhop his Court, where appeared perſonally the worſhipful Maſter John Jeſenitz, Doctor of Decretals and Procurer, in the name and behalf of the honourable Man Maſter John Hus, requiring that either the ſaid Maſter John Hus, or that he in the name and behalf of him might be ſuffered to come into the Archbiſhops Court, to the preſence of the Archbiſhop, and the Prelates which were there congregated together, foraſmuch as Maſter John Hus is ready to ſatisfie all Men which ſhall require him to ſhew any reaſon of his Faith or Hope which he holdeth, and to ſee and hear all and ſingular which were there gathered together, that is to ſay, the Lord Archbiſhop and Prelates, or any of them which would lay any manner of obſtinacy, or error, or hereſie unto him, that they ſhould there write in their names, and according both unto Gods Law and Mans, and the Canon Law, prepare themſelves to ſuffer like punithment, if they could not lawfully prove any obſtinacy of error or hereſie againſt him: unto whom altogether he would, by Gods help, anſwer before the ſaid Archbiſhop and the Prelates in the next General Council holden at Conſtance, and ſtand unto the Law, and according to the Canons and Decretals of the holy Fathers, ſhew forth and declare his innocency in the Name of Chriſt. Unto the which, Maſter John of Jeſenitz Doctor, one called Ulricus Swabe of Swabenitz, Marſhal of the ſaid Archbiſhop, coming forth of the ſaid Court, did utterly deny unto the ſaid Maſter Doctor and his party, all manner of ingreſs and entrance into the Court, and to the preſence of the Archbiſhop aforeſaid, and of the Prelates there gathered together. Pretending that the Archbiſhop, with the Prelates aforeſaid, were occupied about the Kings Affairs, requiring the ſaid Maſter Doctor, that he would tarry in ſome place without the ſaid Court, that when the Archbiſhop, and the Prelates had finiſhed the Kings Affairs, he might then return, and have liberty to come into the Court there. The ſaid Maſter John Hus, and the Doctor of Law tarried a while, intreating to be admitted into the Archbiſhops Court: but ſeeing he could prevail nothing, he made there a ſolemn proteſtation of his requeſt, that both he, and alſo Maſter John Hus and his part, could not be ſuffered to come into the Archbiſhops Court, to the preſence of the Archbiſhop and the Prelates. Requiring of the foreſaid Notary publick Inſtruments to be made of the ſame, which alſo was done.

John Hus requires to have teſtimony of his Faith, and could not be admitted.

And theſe were the things which were done before John Hus took his journy to the General Council of Conſtance, the which I minded briefly to rehearſe, whereunto I will alſo annex ſomewhat as touching his journy thitherwards.

About the Ides of October, 1414. John Hus being accompanied with two Noble Gentlemen, that is to wit, Wancelat of Duba, and John of Clum, he parted from Prague, and took his journey towards Conſtance. And in every place as he paſſed, he notified his preſence by his Letters which he ſent abroad, and eſpecially in every good Town or City of Name, the Tenor whereof enſueth:

John Hus taketh his journey to Conſtance.

The Copy of the Letters which John Hus ſet up in the common places of the Cities which he paſſed through, going to the Council.

Maſter John Hus goeth now unto Conſtance, there to declare his Faith which he hath hitherto holden, and even at this preſent doth hold, and by Gods help will defend and keep even unto death. Therefore even as he hath manifeſted throughout all the Kingdom of Bohemia by his Letters and Intimations, willing before his departure to have ſatisfied and given an account of his Faith unto every Man, which ſhould object or lay any thing againſt him in the General Convocation holden in the Archbiſhop of Pragues Court: So likewiſe he doth manifeſt and ſignifie, that if there be any Man in this Noble and Imperial City, the which will impute or lay any error or hereſie unto him, that he ſhould prepare himſelf to come unto the Council, foraſmuch as the ſaid Maſter John Hus is ready to ſatisfie every man at the ſaid Council, which ſhall lay any thing unto his charge as touching his Faith.

The Letters which John Hus ſet up in Cities as he paſſed to Conſtance.

In all Cities as he paſſed by, and principally when he was departed out of Bohemia, and entred into Almain, a great number of people did come unto him, and he was very gently received and entertained of his Hoſts through all the Towns of Germany, and eſpecially of the Citizens and Burgeſſes, and oftentimes of the Curates. Inſomuch that the ſaid Hus did confeſs in a certain Epiſtle, that he found in no place ſo great Enemies as in Bohemia. And if it hapned that there were any brute or noiſe before of his coming, the ſtreets were always full of people which were deſirous to ſee John Hus and gratifie him; and amongſt all other, eſpecially at Noremberg, whereas certain Merchants, which went before, certified the Citizens of his coming. In the ſame City there were many Curates which came unto him, deſiring him that they might talk with him ſecretly apart: unto whom he anſwered, That he loved much rather to pronounce and ſhew forth his Mind and Opinion openly before all Men, than in hugger mugger, for he would keep nothing cloſe nor hidden. So after dinner, until it was night he ſpake before the Prieſts and Senators, and divers other Citizens, inſomuch that they all had him in great eſtimation and reverence, one only Doctor except, which was a Charter-houſe Monk, and the Curate of St. Sebauld, which did improve all that he had ſaid.

A Charter-houſe Monk againſt John Hus.

The twentieth day after that he departed out of the Town of Prague, which was the third day of November, he came unto Conſtance, and lodges at an honeſt Matrons Houſe, being a Widow named Faith, in St. Galles-ſtreet.

John Huſſes hoſt, ſi named Faith.

The morrow after, the Gentleman Maſter John de Clum, and Maſter Henry Latzemboge, went to ſpeak with the Pope, and certified him that John Hus was come, whom they had brought to Conſtance to the General Council, under the Emperor his ſafe conduct; deſiring him alſo that he on his part would grant the ſaid John Hus liberty to remain in Conſtance, without any trouble, vexation, or interruption. Unto whom the Pope anſwered, That albeit that John Hus had killed his Brother, yet would he go about, as much as in him lay, that no outrage or hurt ſhould be done unto him during his abode in the Town of Conſtance.

The Pope conſenteth to the ſafe-conduct of John Hus.

Staniſlaus Znoma, Huſſes enemy, going to Conſtance, died by the way.

In this mean time, the greateſt adverſary that John Hus had, named Maſter Steven Paletz, the which was alſo a Bohemian born, was come unto Conſtance. But his companion Maſter Staniſlaus Znoma was not yet paſſed the Borders of Bohemia when he was ſtricken with an Impoſtume, whereof he died. As ſoon as the ſaid Paletz was come to Conſtance, he did aſſociate unto him one Michael de Cauſis, the which had before falſly accuſed and blamed the ſame John Hus. And this may not be forgotten, that the ſaid Paletz had been familiarly converſant and acquainted with the ſaid John Hus from his youth upward; but after that there was a Bull brought unto Prague, from Pope John the 23d, againſt the King of Apulia, named Ladiſlaus, the ſaid John Hus withſtood it openly, forſomuch as he ſaw that it was wicked and naught.

A Bull againſt Ladiſlaus King of Apulia.

And as touching the ſaid Paletz, albeit that he had confeſſed at a certain Banquet in the preſence of the ſaid John Hus, that the ſaid Bull was contrary to all equity and right; yet notwithſtanding forſomuch as he was obliged and bound unto the Pope, by means of certain Benefices received at his hand, he maintained and defended the ſaid Bull againſt John Hus. And this was the cauſe of the diſcord and falling out between them. As for Michael de Cauſis, the companion of Maſter Paletz, he was ſometime the Curate of New Prague; but he not being content therewith, but ſeeking after a further prey, dreamed and imagined out a new device how to attain unto it, for he made a ſemblance that he had found out a new invention or mean, whereby the Mines of Gold in Gilory, which were periſhed and loſt, might be renewed and ſet on work again. By this means he did ſo much with the King Winceſlaus, that he did put a great ſum of mony into his hands, to do that withal which he had promiſed.

Michael de Cauſis.

This honeſt man, after he had laboured and travelled certain days about it, and perceiving that he brought nothing to paſs, and that by that means he was utterly in deſpair of his purpoſe, he conveyed himſelf privily out of the Realm of Bohemia with the reſt of the money, and withdrew himſelf, as a worthy Bird for ſuch a Neſt, into the Court of Rome. Such a Man of ſuch conditions was eaſily corrupt with mony, and that by the adverſaries of the ſaid Hus, and promiſed them to do what he could for them, the which he did ſhortly after. Theſe two jolly roiſters, Steven Paletz and Michael de Cauſis, drew out certain Articles againſt the ſaid Hus, ſaying, That they had gathered them out of his own writings, and ſpecially out of his Treatiſe which he had written of the Church. They trotted up and down, hither and thither, taking great pains to ſhew the ſaid Articles unto the ſaid Cardinals, Biſhops, and Monks, and ſuch other of that ſort, doing them alſo to underſtand, that there were other matters of greater importance, which the ſaid John Hus had committed and done againſt the holy Conſtitutions, and other Ordinances of the Pope and the Church; which if need were, they ſaid they would propound before the Council. Through the kindling of this their fire, they did ſo incenſe the Cardinals, and all the Prieſts, that all they with one mind and conſent thought to cauſe the good Man to be taken and laid hands on.

The wicked life of Michael de Cauſis, Huſſes enemy deſcribed.

The enemies of Hus practice againſt him.

The 26th day after the ſaid Hus was come to Conſtance, during all which time he was occupied in reading, writing, and familiar talk with his Friends; the Cardinals, through the inſtigation and motion of Paletz and Michael de Cauſis, ſent two Biſhops; to wit, the Biſhop of Auguſta, and of Trident, and with them the Burrough-maſter of the Town of Conſtance, and a certain Knight, to the place where John Hus lodged, about dinner-time, which ſhould make report unto him that they were ſent by the Pope and his Cardinals, to advertiſe him that he ſhould come to render ſome knowledge or witneſs of his Doctrine before them, as he had oftentimes deſired, and that they were ready to hear him.

John Hus deſired to declared his cauſe before the whole Council.

Unto whom John Hus anſwered, I am not come for any ſuch intent, as to defend my cauſe particularly before the Pope and his Cardinals, proteſting that I never deſired any ſuch thing, but that I would willingly appear before the whole Aſſembly of the Council, and there anſwer for my defence openly, without any fear or doubt, unto all ſuch things as ſhall be demanded or required of me. Notwithſtanding, ſaid he, foraſmuch as you require me ſo to do, I will not refuſe to go with you before the Cardinals. And if it happen that they evil intreat or handle me; yet nevertheleſs I truſt in my Lord Jeſus, that he will ſo comfort and ſtrengthen me, that I ſhall deſire much rather to die for his Glory ſake, than to deny the verity and truth which I have learned by his Holy Scriptures. Wherefore it came to paſs, that the Biſhops being inſtant upon him, and not ſhewing any outward ſemblance that they bare any malice or hatred againſt him in their hearts, albeit they had privily laid Gariſons both in the Houſe where they were aſſembled, and alſo in other Houſes; John Hus took his Horſe which he had at his lodging, and went unto the Court of the Pope and the Cardinals.

John Hus is come before the Pope and the Cardinals. The words of the Pope and the Cardinals to John Hus.

When he was come thither, and had ſaluted the Cardinals, they began to ſpeak to him in this ſort: We have heard many reports of you, the which, if they be true, are in no caſe to be ſuffered: For Men ſay, that you have taught great and manifeſt Errors, and contrary and againſt the Doctrine of the True Church; and that you have ſowed your Errors abroad through all the Realm of Bohemia, by a long ſpace or time; wherefore we have cauſed you to be called hither before us, that we might underſtand and know how the matter ſtandeth.

The anſwer of John Hus to the Pope and the Cardinals.

Unto whom John Hus anſwered in few words, Reverend Fathers, you ſhall underſtand that I am thus minded and affectioned, that I ſhould rather chuſe to die, than I ſhould be found culpable of one only error, much leſs of many and great errors. For this cauſe I am the more willingly come unto the General Council, which is here appointed to ſhew my ſelf ready even with all my heart to receive correction, if any man can prove any errors in me. The Cardinals anſwered him again, That his ſayings pleaſed them very well, and upon that they went away, leaving the ſaid John Hus, with Maſter John de Clum, under the guard and keeping of the Armed Men.

Dolus malus Cardinalium.

In the mean ſeaſon, they did ſuborn and furniſh out a certain Divine, a Frier Franciſcan, a ſubtil and crafty Man, and a malicious hypocrite, to queſtion with the ſaid John Hus, which was compaſſed round about with Armed Men. This Man drawing near in his Monkiſh geſture, ſaid, Reverend Maſter, I a ſimple and rude Idiot, am come unto you to learn; for I have heard many ſtrange and contrary things againſt the Catholick Faith to be aſcribed unto you, the which do diverſly move my mind being wholly inclined to the truth. Wherefore I do deſire you, even for the love which you bear unto the truth, and to all good and godly Men, that you would teach me moſt ſimple and miſerable Man, ſome certainty and truth. And firſt. Men ſay, That you hold opinion that after the conſecration and Pronunciation of the words in the Sacrament of the Altar, there remaineth only material Bread. John Hus anſwered, That it was falſly attributed and imputed unto him. Then ſaid he, I pray you, Is not this your Opinion? No verily, ſaid John Hus, I do not ſo think of it. When the Monk asked this queſtion the third time, Maſter J. de Clum being moved ſomewhat with him, ſaid, Why art thou ſo importunate upon him? Verily, if any Man had affirmed or denied any thing unto me but once, I would have believed him. And thou albeit he hath ſhewed thee his mind ſo often, yet ceaſeſt not to trouble him. Then ſaid the Monk, Gentle Maſter, I pray you pardon me a poor Idiot and ſimple Frier; ſurely I did it of a good mind and intent, being willing and deſirous to learn. This Frier put forth another queſtion unto him, proteſting his ſimplicity and ignorance, What manner of Unity of the Godhead and Manhood was in the Perſon of Chriſt? When John Hus had heard this queſtion, he turning himſelf unto Maſter John de Clum, in the Bohemian Language ſaid, Truly this Frier is not ſimple as he doth pretend, for he hath propounded unto me a very hard queſtion. And afterward turning himſelf to the Frier, he ſaid unto him, Brother, you ſay that you are ſimple, but as I have heard of you, I perceive very well that you are double and craftie, and not ſimple. It is not ſo verily, ſaid the Frier. Well ſaid John Hus, I will cauſe you well to underſtand that it is ſo. For as touching the ſimplicity of a Man it is required in things that concern civility and manners; that the ſpirit, the underſtanding, the heart, the words and the mouth ſhould agree together: and I do not perceive that this is in you. There is in your mouth a certain ſemblance of ſimplicity, the which would very well declare you to be an Idiot and ſimple, but your deeds ſhew plainly and evidently a great ſubtilty and craft in you, with a great quickneſs and livelineſs of wit, in that you have propoſed unto me ſo hard and difficult a queſtion.

A Frierly Jeſter.

Maſter John de Clum ſpeaketh for John Hus.

A Wolf in a Lambs skin.

Notwithſtanding, I will not fear to ſhew you my mind in this queſtion. And when he had made an end, the Monk gave him great thanks for his gentleneſs, and ſo departed. After that, the Popes Gariſon which were about the ſaid John Hus, told him, That this Frier was called Maſter Didace, who was eſteemed and counted the greateſt and moſt ſubtil Divine in all Lumbardy. Oh, ſaid John Hus, that I had known that afore, I would have handled him after another ſort and faſhion; but I would to God they were all ſuch, then through the help and aid of the Holy Scriptures I would fear none of them. In this manner the ſaid Hus, and Maſter John de Clum, were left under the keeping of theſe Men of Arms, until four of the Clock at Afternoon. After which time the Cardinals aſſembled again in the Popes Court, to deviſe and take counſel what they ſhould do with John Hus. Then Stephen Paletz, and Michael de Cauſis, with divers other of their adherents, made earneſt ſuit that he ſhould not be let go at liberty again, and having the favour of the Judges on their part, they brag'd up and down in a manner, as they had been mad Men, and mocked the ſaid John Hus, ſaying, Now we will hold thee well enough, thou art under our power and juriſdiction, and ſhalt not depart until ſuch time as thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing.

Didace a crafty Frier.

Many a man beguiled under a cloke of ſimplicity.

John Huſſes accuſers triumph over him when he was taken.

A little afore night, they ſent the Proveſt of the Roman Court unto Maſter John de Clum, to ſhew him that he might return to his Lodging; but as for John Hus, they had otherwiſe provided for him. When Maſter John de Clum heard theſe news, he was wonderfully diſpleaſed, forſomuch as through their crafts, ſubtilties, and gloſſing words, they had ſo trained this good man into their ſnares, whereupon he went unto the Pope, declaring unto him all that was done; moſt humbly beſeeching him, that he would call to remembrance the promiſe which he had made unto him and Maſter Henry Latzembog, and that he would not ſo lightly falſify and break his Faith and Promiſe. The Pope anſwered, That all theſe things were done without his conſent or commandment, and ſaid further to Maſter Clum apart, What reaſon is it that you ſhould impute this deed unto me, ſeeing that you know well enough that I my ſelf am in the hands of theſe Cardinals and Biſhops?

The Pope breaketh Promiſe.

In mine Opinion, foraſmuch as Pope John feared that which indeed did after follow, that he ſhould be deprived of his Dignity, he thought to win the favour of theſe Herodian Cardinals and Biſhops, by betraying this good man unto them. So the ſaid Maſter Clum returned very penſiveful ſorry; he complained very ſore, both privily and openly, of the injury and outrage that the Pope had done, but all profited nothing. After this, the ſaid John Hus was led by the Officers to the Chapter-houſe of the great Church of Conſtance, where he was kept Priſoner by the ſpace of Eight days; from thence he was carried unto the Jacobines, hard by the River of Rhine, and was ſhut up in the Priſon of the Abby, the which was hard by the Bogards.

The Pope to pleaſe the Council was againſt John Hus.

After he had been incloſed there a certain time he fell ſore ſick of an Ague, by means of the ſtench of the place, and became ſo weak, that they deſpaired of his life. And for fear leſt this good man ſhould die in Priſon, as others are wont to do, the Pope ſent unto him certain of his Phyſitians to cure and help him. In the midſt of his ſickneſs his accuſers made importunate ſuit to the principals of the Council, that the ſaid John Hus might be condemned, and preſented unto the Pope theſe Articles here under-written:

The imprisonment and ſickneſs of John Hus.

¶ Articles preſented againſt John Hus.

Articles againſt John Hus.

Firſt, He doth err about the Sacraments of the Church, and ſpecially about the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt, forſomuch as he hath openly preached, that it ought to be Miniſtered openly unto the people under both kinds, that is to ſay, the Body and Blood. This Article is evident, forſomuch as his Diſciples at this inſtant in Prague do Miniſter the ſame in both kinds. Moreover, it is affirmed by divers, that he hath taught both in the Schools and in the Church, or at the leaſt that he doth hold this Opinion, that after the words of Conſecration pronounced upon the Altar, there remaineth ſtill material Bread in the Sacrament. This Article ſhall be known by his Examination.

The Suppet of the Lord.

Secondly, He doth err as touching the Miniſters of the Church, forſomuch as he ſaith, That they cannot Conſecrate or Miniſter the Sacraments when they are in mortal ſin. This Article ſhall likewiſe be known by his Examination. Notwithſtanding, all that which is here contained may be gathered by his writings De Eccleſia; the which if he deny, let there then be ſome Divines and others appointed, to peruſe and look over his ſaid writings of the Church. Moreover he ſaith, That other men beſide Prieſts may Miniſter the Sacrament. This Article is evident forſomuch as his Diſciples do the ſame at Prague, the which of themſelves do violently take the Sacrament out of the Treaſury, and Communicate among themſelves, when the Holy Communion is denied unto them. By this and other things alſo it is ſufficiently evident, that he hath taught that every man, being without mortal ſin, hath the power of Orders or Prieſthood, forſomuch as ſuch only as have taken Orders ought to Miniſter the Sacrament unto themſelves. And becauſe he proceedeth from ſmall matters unto great and weightier, it doth conſequently appear and follow, that thoſe which be in the ſtate of Grace can bind and looſe.

Of the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments.

Thirdly, He doth err as touching the Church, and ſpecially for that he doth not allow and admit that the Church ſignifieth the Pope, Cardinals, Archbiſhops, and the Clergy underneath them; but ſaith, that this ſignification was drawn out from the School-men, and is in no caſe to be holden or allowed. This Article is manifeſt by his ſaid Treatiſe upon the Church.

Of the Church.

Moreover, he doth err concerning the Church, in that he ſaith, That the Church ought not to have any Temporal Poſſeſſions. And that the Temporal Lords may take them away from the Church and the Clergy without any offence. This error is evident, forſomuch as through his Doctrine and Inticements many Churches in the Kingdom of Bohemia, and in the City of Prague, are already ſpoiled and robbed of a great part of their Temporalties and goods. He ſaith alſo, that Conſtantinus and other Secular Princes erred by inriching and indowing Churches and Monaſteries. This Article is manifeſt by that which goeth next before Eccleſiaſtical Revenews.

Fourthly,

The Biſhops power.

Fourthly, He erreth as touching the Church, in that he ſaith, That all Prieſts are of like power, and therefore affirmeth, that the reſervations of the Popes caſualties, the ordering of Biſhops, and the Conſecration of the Prieſts, were invented only for covetouſneſs. This Article doth ſomewhat appear by thoſe aforegoing, but by his Examination ſhall be more evident.

The power of the Keys of the Church.

Fifthly, He erreth concerning the Church, in that he ſaith, That the Church being in ſin, hath no power of the Keys, when as the Pope, Cardinals, and all other of the Prieſts and Clergy are in deadly ſin; the which he ſaith is poſſible enough. This alſo doth appear in his Treatiſe upon the Church in his firſt error as touching the Miniſters of the Church.

Excommunication.

Sixthly, He erreth touching the Church, foraſmuch as through contempt he doth not fear Excommunication. This doth notoriouſly appear by his own doings, that he did contemn and deſpiſe the Apoſtolick and Ordinary cenſure, and in all the Apoſtolick Excommunications and Injunctions he hath born himſelf upon the Divine Commandments, and in contempt of the Keys, to the ſetting out of his Hypocriſie, he hath ſaid Maſs all the ways between this and the City of Prague, and thereby hath prophaned the Proceſs and Authority of the Church.

Inveſtitures

Seventhly, He erreth again as touching the Church, becauſe he keepeth not the Inſtitutions and Inveſtitures thereof, but holdeth Opinion that every man hath Authority to inveſt and appoint any man to the cure of Souls. This is evident by his own doings, forſomuch as many in the Kingdom of Bohemia, by their defenders and favourers, or rather by himſelf, were appointed and put into Parith-Churches, the which they have long ruled and kept, not being appointed by the Apoſtolick See, neither yet by the Ordinary of the City of Prague.

The Office of preaching.

Eighthly, He erreth as touching the Church, in that he holdeth Opinion, That a man, being once Ordained a Prieſt or Deacon, cannot be forbidden or kept back from the Office of preaching. This is likewiſe manifeſt by his own doings, foraſmuch as he himſelf could never be letted from preaching, neither by the Apoſtolick See, neither yet by the Archbiſhop of Prague.

Lupus agnum accuſat quod turbavit fontem.

A heaping together of many grievous crimes.

And to the intent that the ſaid John Hus, who is clothed in Sheeps clothing, and inwardly a ravening Woolf, may be the better known by his fruits, for the better information of you moſt reverend Fathers; I ſay, that from the firſt time that he took in hand, or went about to ſow ſuch Errors and Hereſies, the which afterward he did indeed, he underſtanding and perceiving himſelf to be withſtanded and gainſayed by the Germans, which were in the Univerſity of Prague, forſomuch as he could conclude nothing, becauſe they had three Voices, and he on his part had but one only Voice: he went about and brought to paſs, and that by the Secular Power, that the Germans ſhould have but one Voice, and he and his parts three Voices: the which thing when the Germans once perceived, rather than they would loſe or forſake any part of their right which they had in Voices, or be in danger in their perſons, the which would then have enſued upon it, to ſave themſelves, they wholly with one conſent agreed together to depart out of Prague; and by this means this ſolemn and famous Univerſity of Prague was made deſolate, that had brought forth ſo many notable men in divers Sciences. Behold this his firſt fruits which divided that ſo famous Univerſity, forſomuch as Grapes are not gathered of Thorns, neither figs of Brambles.

The departure of the Germans from the Univerſity of Prague.

The 45 Articles of Wickliff.

Moreover, when there were queſtions moved amongſt the Divines of the Univerſity of Prague upon the 45 Articles of John Wickliff, and that they had called a Convocation, and all the Divines of Bohemia, (for the Germans were already departed) they concluded that every one of thoſe Articles were either Heretical, Seditious, or Erroneous. He alone held the contrary Opinion, that none of thoſe Articles were either Heretical, Seditious, or Erroneous, as afterward he did diſpute, hold, and teach, in the common Schools of Prague, whereby it is evidently enough fore-ſeen, that he doth affirm thoſe Articles of Wickliff, the which are not only condemned in England, but alſo by the whole Church, becauſe they were firſt invented and ſet forth by the members of Antichriſt.

Moreover, he being complained of to the Archbiſhop of Prague, that he preached and ſet forth certain Articles which were Heretical, Falſe, and Seditious, he was forbidden by the ſaid Archbiſhop to preach any more, who proceeded againſt him, according to the Canonical Sanctions, the which proceſs is confirmed by the Apoſtolick See, and publiſhed as well in the Court of Rome, as without; the which John Hus and his adherents have divers and manifold ways violated and prophanated. And whoſoever did ſpeak againſt him, they were deprived of their Benefices, and others placed in, which have ruled and yet do rule the ſaid Churches, and the flocks pertaining to the ſame, not having any cure or charge of the Souls committed unto them, neither by the Apoſtolick See, neither yet by the Ordinary of the place.

The Office of preaching forbidden by the Archbiſhop.

Inſurrection feared in Bohemia againſt the Clergy.

Alſo as many, as well Prieſts as Lay-men in the City of Prague and Kingdom of Bohemia, which have ſpoken againſt the Doctrine of Hus, and the prophanation of the Proceſs aforeſaid, or at the leaſt not allowed the ſame, have ſuffered moſt mortal hatred and perſecutions, and yet to this day do ſuffer. But that at this preſent it is diſſimuled until the end of the Proceſs againſt John Hus. Wherefore if he be now let go again, without doubt they ſhall ſuffer great perſecution both in Body and Goods and throughout all the Realm of Bohemia, Houſe ſhall be againſt Houſe, and this miſchief will creep, yea ſuddenly ſpring up throughout all Germany, and innumerable Souls ſhall be infected, ſo that there ſhall be ſuch peſecution of the Clergy and Faithful, as hath not been ſince the time of the Emperor Conſtantine to this preſent day; for he ceaſeth not to move and ſtir up the Laity againſt the Clergy and faithful Chriſtians. And when any of the Clergy would draw him away, or call him from his Hereſie, and for that cauſe doth forbid him to preach, that he doth not teach any Hereſies: then ſaith he, and teacheth, that the Clergy doth that of envy and malice, becauſe he rebuketh their vices and faults; that is to ſay, their Symony, and Pride, and Covetouſneſs.

Moreover, he ſtirreth up the Secular Princes againſt the Prelates of Churches, Monaſteries, and Univerſities, and generally againſt the whole Clergy. Going about by this means, he preacheth and teacheth that Prelates and other Men of the Church ought not to have any Temporal Goods or Poſſeſſions, but only to live upon Alms. And by this means he hath done already very much hurt, and annoied divers and many Prelates, Clerks, and Churches in the Kingdom of Bohemia, and City of Prague, forſomuch as thereby they are already ſpoiled and robbed of their Poſſeſſions. Yea, he teacheth alſo that it is Lawful for the Lay people without ſin to withhold and keep back the Tithes and Oblations, or to give the Church Goods to any other Miniſter; all the Secular Princes are greatly inclined hereunto, but ſpecially the Laity, who follow every Man his own will.

Caiphas prophecied.

He hath generally to lay for himſelf all thoſe Hereticks which do but very ſmally regard the Eccleſiaſtical cenſures, and hate the Authority of the Roman Church, yea do utterly deteſt and abhor the ſame; the which thing will more and more encreaſe, except it be effectually and manfully withſtood; and if he do by any means eſcape from the Council, he and his favourers will ſay that his Doctrine is juſt and true, and that it is allowed by the Authority of the univerſal Sacred Council, and that all his adverſaries are wicked and naughty men, ſo that he would do more miſchief, than ever any Heretick did ſince the time of Conſtantinus Magnus.

Maſter Peirz Heth, for the ſame by Ghoſt had no leiſure to come to that Counſil.

Wherefore moſt holy Fathers, provide and take heed to your ſelves, and to the whole flock amongſt whom the Holy Ghoſt hath placed you, to rule the Church of Chriſt, the which he hath purchaſed with his own Blood; and whilſt the Diſeaſe is new and freſh, help and remedy it, as well touching him which doth ſo infect and trouble the Church of God, as alſo concerning the occaſions, through the which he hath preſumed, and might do the ſame, becauſe the Prelates do abuſe the Eccleſiaſtical cenſures, and as well the Prelates as thoſe that are under them, do not keep and obſerve the Order of the Church which is appointed them by God, whereby it cometh to paſs, that whilſt they themſelves do walk the broken and unknown Paths, their flock falleth headlong into the Ditch.

Wherefore

KING Hen. 5.

Wherefore let our Sovereign Lord the Pope, and this moſt ſacred Counſel ordain and depute Commiſſioners, the which may examine the ſaid John Hus upon all aforewritten, and other things in the preſence of them which know the matter. Let there be alſo certain Doctors and Maſters appointed to read over and peruſe his Books which he hath written, whereof ſome are here preſent, that the Church may be ſpeedily purged and cleanſed from theſe errors.

Upon this his accuſation, they ordained and appointed three Commiſſioners or Judges, that is to ſay, the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and the Biſhop of Caſtile, and the Biſhop of Lybuſs. The which Prelates being thus deputed, heard the accuſation and the witneſs which was brought in by certain babling Prieſts of Prague, confirmed by their Oaths, and afterward recited the ſaid accuſation unto the ſaid Hus in the Priſon at ſuch time as his Ague was fervent and extreamly upon him.

John Hus ſick of an Ague in Priſon.

Upon this, John Hus required to have an Advocate to anſwer for him; the which was plainly and uttterly denied him. And the reaſons that the Maſters and Commiſſioners brought againſt it was this, that the plain Canon doth forbid that any man ſhould be a defender of any cauſe of his, which is ſuſpect of any kind of Hereſie. The vanity and folly of the witneſſes was ſuch, that if in caſe they had not been both the accuſers and judges themſelves, there ſhould have needed no diſtinct confutation. I would have rehearſed the teſtimonies in this place, but that I knew them to be ſuch, as the prudent and wiſe Reader could not have read without great tediouſneſs. Howbeit, ſome of them ſhall be declared, when we come to the proceſs of his judgment.

Hus denied of an advocate.

Afterward, when John Hus had recovered a little ſtrength or health, by the commandment of the three Commiſſioners, there were preſented unto him certain Articles, many in number, which they ſaid, they had gathered out of his Book which he made of the Church; of which Articles ſome were forged and invented by Maſter Paletz, and other ſome were gathered only by halves, as ſhall be more plainly declared hereafter, when we come to ſpeak of the judgment pronounced and given againſt the ſaid Hus.

Thus John Hus remained in the Priſon of the Covent of the Franciſcans, until the Wedneſday before Palm Sunday, and certain appointed to keep him; and in the mean ſeaſon to imploy and ſpend his time withal, he wrote certain Books, that is to ſay, of the Ten Commandments, of the love and knowledge of God, of Matrimony, of Penance, of the three enemies of Mankind, of the Prayer of our Lord, and of the Supper of our Lord.

The Books which John Hus wrote in Priſon.

The ſame day Pope John the 23d, changed his Apparel, and conveyed himſelf ſecretly out of Conſtance, fearing the judgment by the which afterward he was deprived of his Papal Dignity, by means of moſt execrable and abominable forfeits and doings. This was the cauſe that John Hus was tranſported and carried unto another Priſon: for the Popes ſervants, which had the charge and keeping of John Hus, underſtanding that their Maſter was fled and gone, delivered up the Keyes of the Priſon unto the Emperor Sigiſmund, and to the Cardinals, and followed their Maſter the Pope. Then by the whole conſent of the Council, the ſaid John Hus was put into the hands of the Biſhop of Conſtance, who ſent him to a Caſtle on the other ſide of the River of Rhine, not very far from Conſtance, where he was ſhut up in a Tower with Fetters on his Legs, that he could ſcarce walk in the day time, and at night he was faſtned up to a Rack againſt the Wall hard by his Bed.

Pope John fled out of Conſtance.

In the mean ſeaſon, certain Noblemen and Gentlemen of Pole and Boheme did all their endeavour to purchaſe his deliverance, having reſpect to the good renown of all the Realm, the which was wonderfully defamed and ſlandered by certain naughty perſons. The matter was grown unto this point, that all they which were in the Town of Conſtance, that ſeemed to bear any favour unto John Hus, were made as mocking ſtocks, and derided of all men, yea, even of the ſlaves and baſe people. Wherefore they took counſel and concluded together to preſent their requeſt in writing unto the whole Council, or at the leaſt unto the four Nations of Almain, Italy, France and England; this requeſt was preſented the 14*th* day of May, Anno 1415 the tenor here enſueth.

Noblemen of Boheme labour for Hus.

¶ The firſt Schedule or Bill, which the Nobles of Boheme delivered up to the Council for the deliverance of John Hus, the fourteenth day of May, Anno 1415.

MOST Reverend Fathers and Lords, the Nobles and Lords of Boheme and Pole here preſent, by this their preſent writing do ſhew and declare unto your Fatherly Reverences, how that the moſt noble King and Lord, the Lord Sigiſmund, King of the Romans, always Auguſtus, King of Hungary, Croatia, Dalmatia, &c. hearing of the great diſſention that was in the Kingdom of Boheme, as Heir, King and Lord Succeſſor, willing to foreſee and provide for his own honour, ſent theſe Noblemen, Maſter Wenceſlate de Duba, and John de Clum here preſent, that they would bring and aſſure Maſter John Hus under the King his name and ſafe conduct. So that he would come to the ſacred general Council of Conſtance, under the ſafe conduct of the ſaid King, and the protection of the ſacred Empire, openly given and granted unto the ſaid Maſter John Hus, that he might purge himſelf and the Kingdom of Boheme, from the ſlander that was raiſed upon them, and there to make an open declaration of his Faith to every man that would lay any thing to his charge. The which the ſaid Nobles, with the fornamed Maſter John Hus, have performed and done, according to the Kings Commandment.

The ſafe conduct of the Emperor challenged.

When as the ſaid Maſter John Hus was freely of his own accord come unto Conſtance, under the ſaid ſafe conduct, he was grievouſly impriſoned before he was heard, and at this preſent is tormented both with Fetters, and alſo with hunger and thirſt. Albeit that in times paſt at the Council holden at Payſan, 1410. In the year of our Lord, the Hereticks which were condemned, were ſuffered to remain there at liberty, and to depart home freely; notwithſtanding this, Maſter John Hus, neither being convicted nor condemned, no not ſo much as once heard, is taken and impriſoned, when as neither King nor any Prince Elector, neither any Embaſſador of any Univerſity was yet come or preſent. And albeit the Lord the King, together with the Nobles and Lords here preſent, moſt inſtantly required and deſired, that as touching his ſafe conduct they would foreſee and have reſpect unto his honour, and that the ſaid Maſter John Hus might be openly heard, forſomuch as he would render and ſhew a reaſon of his Faith; and if he were found and convicted obſtinately to affirm or maintain any thing againſt the truth of holy Scripture, that then he ought to correct and amend the ſame, according to the inſtruction and determination of the Council; yet could he never obtain this. But the ſaid Maſter John Hus, notwithſtanding all this, is moſt grievouſly oppreſſed with Fetters and Irons, and ſo weakned with thin and ſlender diet, that it is to be feared, leſt that, his power and ſtrength being hereby conſumed and waſted, he ſhould be put in danger of his wit or reaſon.

The extremities John Hus ſuffered in priſon.

And although the Lords of Boheme here preſent are greatly ſlandered, becauſe they ſeeing the ſaid Maſter John Hus ſo to be tormented and troubled, contrary to the Kings ſafe conduct, have not by their Letters put the King in mind of his ſaid ſafe conduct, that the ſaid Lord and King ſhould not any more ſuffer any ſuch matters, forſomuch as they tend to the contempt and diſregard of the Kingdom of Boheme, which from the firſt original and beginning, ſince it received the Catholick Faith, never departed or went away from the obedience of the holy Church of Rome; yet notwithſtanding they have ſuffered and born all theſe things patiently hitherto, leſt by any means, occaſion of trouble or vexation of this ſacred Council might ariſe or ſpring thereof.

Wherefore moſt Reverend Fathers and Lords, the Nobles and Lords before named, do wholly and moſt earneſtly deſire and require your Reverences here preſent, that both for the honour of the ſafe conduct of our ſaid Lord the King, and alſo for the preſervation and increaſe of the worthy fame and renown, both of the foreſaid Kingdome of Boheme, and your own alſo, you will make a ſhort end about the affairs of Maſter John Hus; forſomuch as by the means of his ſtrait handling he is in great danger by any longer delay; even as they do moſt ſpecially truſt upon the moſt upright conſciences and judgments of your Fatherly Reverences. But foraſmuch as, moſt Reverend Fathers and Lords, it is now come to the knowledge and underſtanding of the Nobles and Lords of Boheme here preſent, how that certain backbiters and ſlanderers of the moſt famous Kingdom of Boheme aforeſaid, have declared and told unto your Reverences, how that the Sacrament of the moſt precious bloud of our Lord is carried up and down through Boheme in Veſſels not conſecrate or hallowed, and that Coblers do now hear Confeſſions, and miniſter the moſt bleſſed body of our Lord unto others. The Nobles therefore of Boheme here preſent, require and deſire you, that you will give no credit unto falſe promoters and tale tellers, for that, as moſt wicked and naughty ſlanderers and backbiters of that Kingdom aforeſaid, they do report and tell untruths; requiring alſo your Reverences, that ſuch ſlanderous perſons of the Kingdom aforeſaid may be named and known. And the Lord the King, together with your Reverences, ſhall well perceive and ſee that the Lords of Boheme will go about in ſuch manner to refel and put away the falſe and frivolous ſlanders of theſe naughty perſons, that they ſhall be aſhamed to appear hereafter before the Lord the King and your Reverences.

The confutation of certain ſlanders.

The Biſhop of Luthonis.

As ſoon as this their ſupplication was read, the Biſhop of Luthonis riſing up, ſaid Moſt Reverend Fathers, I well perceive and underſtand, that the laſt part of this writing doth touch me, my familiars and friends, as though the Kingd m of Boheme were ſlandered by us. Wherefore I deſire to have time and ſpace of deliberation, that I may purge my ſelf from this crime that is laid againſt me. The Principal of the Council appointed him the 17th day of May, at the which day the Lords of Boheme ſhould be preſent again, to hear both the anſwer of the Council, and alſo the excuſe of the Biſhop of Luthonis; the which thing indeed was afterward performed: for the ſeventeenth day of May, which was the fourth day before Whitſontide, they met there again; where firſt of all a certain Biſhop, in the name of the whole Council, anſwered by word to the Nobles of Boheme; the contents of whoſe anſwer may eaſily be known by the ſecond ſupplication, which the Bohemians put up to the Council. But firſt I ſhall here in theſe few words following, ſhew how the Biſhop of Luthonis defended himſelf againſt that which is before written.

¶ The Anſwer of the Biſhop of Luthonis, to the laſt part of the ſupplication, which the Nobles of Boheme preſented unto the Council.

The anſwer and accuſation of the Biſhop of Luthonis againſt John Hus.

MOſt Reverend Fathers and Noble Lords, as Peter de Mladoneywitz Bachelor of Art, in the name of certain of the Nobles of the Kingdom of Boheme, in his writings, amongſt other things did propound how that certain ſlanderers and backbiters of the ſaid Kingdom, have brought to the ears of your Reverences, that the moſt precious bloud of Chriſt is carried up and down in Boheme in Bottles, and that Coblers do hear Confeſſions, and miniſter the Body of Chriſt unto others; whereupon moſt Reverend Fathers and Lords, albeit that I together with the other Prelates, Doctors, Maſters, and other innumerable Catholicks of the ſaid Kingdom, the which do deſire as much as in them lieth, to defend the faith of Chriſt, have laboured for the extirpation and rooting out of that moſt wicked and deteſtable Sect of Wickliffs, which now (alas for ſorrow) beginneth to ſpring and riſe in the ſaid Kingdom, as it is well known: Notwithſtanding, here in this my Oration, not for any ſhame or reproof, but for the honour of the Kingdom aforeſaid, I have propounded and declared a certain new Sect, which is now lately ſprung up in the ſaid Kingdom, the followers whereof do miniſter and communicate the Sacraments in many Cities, Towns and Places of the ſaid Kingdom, under both kinds both of Bread and Wine, and do conſtantly teach the common people, both Men and Women, that it is ſo to be communicated. obſtinately affirming the ſame, and that the Clergy which do repugn or ſay nay unto it, are to be counted Church robbers, as by the writings of their aſſertions, being directed and preſented hereafter ſhall openly appear.

{ KING Hen. 5. }

Moreover, by the report and fame which goeth here abroad, and by the Writings which were ſent over unto me, I have propounded that it came to my knowledge, that the Bloud of Chriſt is carried about in Veſſels not conſecrated, approving the foreſaid erroneous aſſertion of the Wickleviſts, that affirm it neceſſary for ſalvation, that the people ſhould communicate under both kinds of Bread and Wine; and that it is neceſſary, as the Body of Chriſt is carried in the Pix or Box, ſo the Bloud of Chriſt ſhould be carried in Bottles, or other neceſſary Veſſels from place to place, and eſpecially about the miniſtration of the ſick. Alſo I declared not of my ſelf, but I heard it to be declared by others, both great and credible perſons, that there was a certain Woman a follower of that Sect, the which taking by violence the Body of Chriſt out of a Prieſts hands, did communicate unto her ſelf, and affirmed that all men ought to do ſo, if the Prieſts ſhould deny them the Communion. And the ſame Woman amongſt many other errors, of the which ſhe was convicted, did affirm that a good Lay-woman might better conſecrate and give Abſolution, than an evil Prieſt; affirming that an evil Prieſt can neither conſecrate nor abſolve. But I know that neither I, neither any of my aſſiſtants in this matter, have brought this at any time unto your ears, that Coblers in the ſaid Kingdom do hear Confeſſion, or miniſter the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt, as is alledged by the ſaid Peter, in the behalf of the ſaid ſupplicants. Notwithſtanding that, we did fear, if means were not found to recounter or ſtop the offences before named, that this would immediately follow upon it. Wherefore moſt Reverend Fathers, leſt that the Kingdom might be defamed any more by ſuch peſtiferous Sects, and that the Chriſtian Faith might happen to be indangered; with all Reverence and Charity I do deſire you, even by the bowels of mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that this moſt ſacred Council would provide ſome ſpeedy remedy for this Kingdom, as touching the premiſſes.

Moreover, whether be they backbiters and ſlanderers, or wicked and falſe enviers of the Kingdom of Boheme, the which do let the errors aforeſaid, and many others more, which are ſown by the Wickleviſts in the ſaid Kingdom, and alſo elſewhere, which alſo both do labour and have laboured for the extirpation and rooting out of thoſe errors out of the Kingdom aforeſaid, and as Catholick Men, for the zeal of their Faith have manifeſtly put forth themſelves againſt the maintainers of the ſaid errors, or ſuch as do maintain and defend the teachers of thoſe errors; this anſwer I have here preſented before your Reverences, always wholly ſubmitting my ſelf and aſſiſtance unto your judgment, and to the definition of this moſt ſacred Council of Conſtance.

¶ The Anſwer of the Nobles of Boheme.

The Biſhop of Luthonis anſwer confuted.

THe day before Whitſontide, the Nobles of Boheme did confute this their anſwer made two days before in the Council to their former writing, as here followeth: Moſt Reverend Fathers and Lords, forſomuch as upon Thurſday it was anſwered in the behalf of your Reverences, to the requeſts of the Nobles and Lords of Boheme, that the ſaid Lords were miſinformed of divers points contained in the declaration of their ſaid Bill: therefore the foreſaid Lords have now determined and decreed to declare their former propounded requeſts more at large unto your Reverences, not minding hereby to argue or reprove your Fatherly wiſdoms and circumſpections, but that your Reverences (their deſires being partly on this behalf fulfilled) might the more effectuouſly and diſtinctly diſcern and judge as touching this matter.

The Biſhops do quarrel about the ſafe conduct of J. Hus.

And firſt of all, whereas the Lords alledged and ſaid, how that Maſter John Hus was come hither unto Conſtance, freely of his own good will, under the ſafe conduct of the Lord the King, and the proceſſion of the ſacred Empire; it is anſwered on the behalf of your Reverences, how that the ſaid Lords are miſinformed as touching the ſafe conduct, and that you have underſtood by ſuch as are worthy credit, credit, that the friends and favourers of the ſaid Maſter John Hus, did firſt procure and get his ſafe conduct, fifteen days after his impriſonment.

KING 1 Hen. 5.

The ſafe conduct of J. Hus obtained and ſhewed, before the impriſonment of J. Hus.

The Lords of Boheme, and eſpecially the Lord John de Clum here preſent, whom this matter doth chiefly touch, doth anſwer, that not only the fifteenth day after, but even the very ſame day that John Hus was apprehended and taken, when as our reverend Father the Pope, in the preſence of all his Cardinals, demanded of Maſter John de Clums, whether Maſter John Hus had any ſafe conduct from the King his Son: he anſwered, Moſt holy father and Cardinals, know ye that he hath a ſafe conduct; and when he was asked the queſtion again the ſecond time, he anſwered in like manner.

Yet notwithſtanding none of them required to have the ſafe conduct ſhewed unto them: and again, the third day following, the Lord John de Clum complained unto our Lord the Pope; how notwithſtanding the ſafe conduct of our Soveraign Lord the King, he detained and kept Mr. John Hus as Priſoner, ſhewing the ſafe conduct unto many. And for the further truth herein, he referreth himſelf unto the teſtimonies and witneſſes of divers Earls, Biſhops, Knights, Gentlemen, and famous Citizens of the City of Conſtance, the which all together at this preſent did ſee the ſaid ſafe conduct, and heard it read; whereupon the ſaid John de Clum is ready to bind himſelf under what penalty ſhall be required, evidently to prove and confirm that which he hath promiſed, whoſoever ſay to the contrary.

Moreover, the Lords of Boheme refer themſelves unto the knowledge of certain Princes Electors, and other Princes, Biſhops, and many other Noblemen, which were preſent before the Kings Majeſty, where and when as the ſaid ſafe-conduct was granted and given out by the ſpecial commandment of our ſaid Lord the King.

The Biſhops of the Council falſly informed touching the ſafe conduct of John Hus.

Hereby your Fatherly Reverences may underſtand and perceive that the ſaid Lords of Boheme are not evil informed as touching the ſaid ſafe conduct; but rather they which by ſuch reports have falſly and untruly informed your Reverences. And firſt of all, they have offended againſt the Lord our King and his Chancellors. Secondarily, againſt the Lords and Nobles of Boheme, as though we had privily and by ſtealth, purchaſed the ſaid ſafe conduct. Wherefore the Lords aforeſaid, moſt humbly require and deſire your Reverences, that you will not ſo lightly believe ſuch as be not worthy of credit, but rather hearing the contrary part, to labour and diſcuſs that the truth may the more evidently appear.

John Hus impriſoned before he was either condemned or heard.

Secondly, Whereas the Lords aforeſaid, alledging how Maſter John Hus coming unto Conſtance of his own free will, being neither condemned nor heard, was impriſoned, your Reverences have made anſwers thereunto, that he the ſaid Mr. John Hus in the time of Alexander the 5th, was infamed and ſlandered upon certain Hereſies, and thereupon cited perſonally to appear in the Court of Rome, and there was heard by his procurers.

And forſomuch as he refuſed obſtinately to appear, he was excommunicated, in the which Excommunication he continued (as you affirm) by the ſpace of five years, for the which he was judged, and counted not only a ſimple and plain Heretick, but an Hereſiarch, that is to ſay, an inventer and ſower of new and ſtrange Hereſies, and that he, coming toward Conſtance, did preach by the way openly. To this the Lords aforeſaid do anſwer, that as touching his ſlander and citation, they can affirm nothing, but by report. But as touching that he did not perſonally appear, that ſay they have heard both himſelf and divers other credible perſons ſay, yea even the moſt famous Prince Wenceſlaus King of Boheme, and almoſt all the whole Nobility is witneſs, that he would willingly have appeared at Rome, or elſewhere, if he might ſafely have come thither, and that deadly enmity had not letted; and moreover, his procurers which he ſent unto the Court of Rome, alledging reaſonable cauſes for his non-appearance, ſome of them were caſt into Priſon, and others were evil intreated.

Alexander the fifth. The anſwer touching the citation of J. Hus to the Court of Rome.

J. Hus his procurers evil intreated at Rome.

As for the Excommunication which he hath ſo long ſuſtained, they have heard him often ſay, that he hath not reſiſted againſt the ſame by contumacy, or ſtubbornneſs, but under evident appellation, and thereupon referreth himſelf unto the acts of his cauſes which were pleaded in the Court of Rome, wherein all this is more largely contained, the which your Reverences may evidently perceive and ſee in this our preſent publick tranſumpt, which we have offered unto you upon certain points aforeſaid.

As concerning his preaching, wherewithal his enemies do report and charge, that Maſter John Hus did preach openly in the City of Conſtance; the Lords aforeſaid, and eſpecially the Lord John de Clum here preſent, do anſwer, that he hath continually lodged with the ſaid Maſter John Hus here in Conſtance; and that whoſoever they be, that have been ſo bold, or dare be ſo bold to ſay and affirm that Maſter John Hus had preached (as is premiſed) or that which is leſs, ſince the time of his coming unto this City, even unto the very day and time of his captivity and impriſonment, that he went but one ſtep out of the houſe of his lodging, that the ſaid Lord John de Clum will and is content to bind himſelf, with any ſuch as ſhall affirm the ſame, under what penalty ſoever it be, of mony or otherwiſe, that that which he hath falſly reported unto your Reverences, he ſhall never be able juſtly and truly to affirm and prove.

J. Hus falſly reported to preach openly at Conſtance.

J. Hus falſly charged to preach coming to the Council.

Thirdly, Whereas your Reverences do ſay, that you do not underſtand or know, what the Lords do mean, by the Hereticks condemned at the Council holden at Piſa, whether the mocking or deriding of the Pope, whoſe Embaſſadors came thither for unity or concord, the which were ſuffered, and gently treated, as their Lords were moſt inclined unto unity and peace; or elſe that they did underſtand or mean the particular Hereticks, which were there condemned; adjoyning thereunto, that the Hereticks alſo coming unto the Council under the pretence of that unity, ſhould be gently handled and entreated, &c. Reverend Fathers and Lords, whether they be counted the firſt, or that they be thought the ſecond or laſt, the Lords aforeſaid require none other thing, but that the ſaid Maſter John Hus may uſe ſuch liberty as they uſed, forſomuch as he came willingly unto this moſt ſacred Council, not for any other purpoſe, but only publickly to recogniſe his faith. And in what point ſoever he ſhall ſeem to vary from the Word of God, and the union of the holy Mother the Church, in that point he will willingly be united and reconciled again thereunto, and not only himſelf, but alſo his favourers and adherents he would move and provoke thereunto, of whom the greater number are in the Kingdom of Boheme. Alſo he is come hither, that he might purge and clear the noble Kingdom of Boheme from the ſiniſter and evil ſlander which was raiſed upon it.

J. Hus had many ewell-willers in Bohemia.

Laſt of all moſt reverend Fathers and Lords, forſomuch as your reverences have moſt favourably anſwered unto the principal requeſt made by the Lords aforeſaid, that the Proceſs of Maſter John Hus, through Gods help, ſhould be determined and ended with all expedition and gentleneſs; the Lords aforeſaid do render moſt hearty thanks unto your Reverences, and whenſoever their deſire by Gods help ſhall come to the end or effect long wiſhed or looked for, they will not only here, but alſo before the whole Kingdom of Boheme, and in all other places whereſoever they come, render moſt immortal thanks unto your Reverences for ever.

℣ This Declaration of the Nobles of Boheme above prefixed, may ſerve not only to the confutation of the Biſhop Luthonis this Bohemian, but alſo againſt the cavillations of Alanus Copus Anglus, Dial. 6. page 929. touching the ſafe conduct of John Hus, whereof ſufficiently before hath been ſaid.

When as the Noblemen of Boheme by long time could receive no anſwer of thoſe ſupplications which they had already put up, they determined the laſt day of May following, by another ſupplication being put up unto the principals of the Council, to intreat that John Hus might be delivered out of Priſon, and defend his own cauſe openly: they alſo put up the teſtimonial of the Biſhop of Nazareth, as touching John Hus. The Copy whereof is expreſſed in the beginning of this Hiſtory, word by word.

Vide ſupra.

Another ſupplication of the Nobles of Boheme.

Another ſupplication of the Bohemians for J. Huſs.

MOſt Reverend Fathers and Lords in Chriſt, of late there was a ſupplication put up unto your Reverences on the behalf of the Lords and Nobles of Boheme, and the Nation of Pole, wherein they moſt humbly deſired your Reverences to conſider how the informations which were put up unto your Reverences, by the enemies of Maſter John Hus, were inſufficient; and with reverence be it ſpoken, in many points untrue, as in the ſafe conduct granted by the Kings Majeſty, and alſo in other Articles, as more plainly appeareth in the Schedule, which was then offered unto you; upon the which ſaid Schedule and other things at that preſent, being put up, they could not as yet receive any anſwer. Wherefore the Lords aforeſaid, moſt humbly require your Fatherly Reverences, that it would pleaſe you to conſider the ſaid ſupplication, and to give ſome anſwer to the Lords aforeſaid thereupon, and ſpecially having reſpect unto the great injuries and griefs which are done unto the ſaid Maſter John Hus, the which may be underſtood and known by the Schedule aforeſaid, that you will mercifully conſider and foreſee, that all thoſe griefs and evils, ſo far different from all brotherly love and charity, are done unto him by his enemies even for very malice and hatred.

The Lords could have no anſwer of their ſupplication.

To the intent therefore that the rancour and malice may be confounded and overthrown, and the plain and evident truth appear, it may pleaſe your Fatherly Reverences to underſtand that it is notified and known unto the Barons, Nobles and Citizens, Clergy and Laity of the Kingdom of Boheme, that Maſter John Hus in all his acts and doings, as well Scholaſtical as Eccleſiaſtical, and eſpecially in all his publick and open Sermons, hath made and hath accuſtomed to make theſe manner of proteſtations, and which without any thing to the contrary, he hath always endeavoured to have them ſtrong and firm, as by this his proteſtation here following, which he made about the determination of a certain queſtion, it may moſt evidently and plainly appear unto every man which would behold and look upon the ſame; the form and tenor whereof here followeth, and is ſuch.

¶ The Proteſtation of John Hus.

The Proteſtation of J. Hus.

FOrſomuch as above all things I do deſire the honour of God, the profit of the holy Church, and that I my ſelf may be a faithful member of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which is the Head and Husband of the holy Church which he hath redeemed; therefore, as heretofore oftentimes I have done, even ſo now again, I make this Proteſtation, That I never obſtinately ſaid, or hereafter will ſay any thing that ſhall be contrary unto the truth and verity; and moreover, that I have always holden, do hold, and firmly deſire to hold the very true and infallible truth and verity; ſo that before that I would defend and maintain any error contrary thereunto, I would rather chooſe by the hope and help of the Lord Vid. in prim. edit. p. 207. to ſuffer extream puniſhment, even unto death: yea, and through the help of God, I am ready to offer this my miſerable life unto death for the Law of Chriſt, the which I do believe every part and parcel thereof, to be given and promulgate for the ſalvation of Mankind, by the counſel and determination of the moſt holy Trinity and the Saints of God, &c.

By the which his Proteſtation, and alſo other Proteſtations by the ſaid Maſter John Hus, being well obſerved and noted, it may be eaſily gathered and known, that his whole intent and purpoſe was and is, that he neither would nor will have ſpoken or written any thing in his Books, Treatiſes, Doctrines or publick Sermons; or elſe to have affirmed any Articles, the which willingly and wittingly he did underſtand or know to be erroneous, offenſive, ſeditious, heretical, or offending the godly ear; albeit that theſe and ſuch like things are falſly imputed unto him by his enemies. But it hath always been his chief intent and purpoſe, and ſo is, that every Point, Concluſion or Article contained in his Books or Articles, to have put and affirmed them to this end, according to the truth of the Goſpel, the holy Doctors and Writers upon the holy Scriptures, and to that end and purpoſe, as is before expreſſed in his Proteſtations; and if in any point he ſhould be found to vary or go aſtray, or that he were not well underſtood of others, by like information to be informed, underſtood, corrected and amended, and that he will by no means ſuſtain or defend any manner of Article againſt the holy Church of Rome, or the Catholick Faith.

Wherefore, moſt Reverend Fathers, the premiſſes notwithſtanding, his enemies, through the extream hatred which they bear unto him, have picked and taken out by peicemeal, certain Articles out of the Books of Maſter John Hus, rejecting and not looking upon the allegations and reaſons, neither having any relation unto the diſtinction of their equivocations, have compounded and made thereof certain falſe and feigned Articles againſt him to this end, that all charity and love being ſet apart, they might the better overthrow him, and bring him unto death, contrary unto the ſafe conduct upon good and juſt occaſion openly aſſigned, and given unto the ſaid Maſter John Hus, by the moſt noble Prince the Lord Sigiſmund, King of the Romans and of Hungary, for his juſt defence againſt all the frivolous accuſations and aſſaults of the enemies, not only of the ſaid Maſter John Hus, but alſo of the famous Kingdom of Boheme, and for the quiet appeaſing of all ſuch tumults and rumors riſing and ſpringing in the ſaid Kingdom of Boheme, or elſewhere; the avoiding of which moſt perilous uproars, the ſaid King of Romans, doth greatly deſire and wiſh, as the right heir and ſucceſſor of the ſaid Kingdom.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Whereupon the Barons and Nobles aforeſaid, moſt humbly deſire and require, the premiſſes being conſidered, and reſpect had unto the great infamy and ſlander which may happen by the premiſſes unto the ſaid Kingdom and Inhabitants thereof, that you will put to your hands and take ſome order and mean, that Maſter John Hus may herein directly heard by ſome famous men, Divines already deputed, or otherwiſe to be appointed, upon all and ſingular ſuch Articles as ſhall be laid unto him, to declare his own mind and intent, and alſo the mind of the Doctors alledged for this purpoſe, with the manifold diſtinctions and equivocations; in the which the drawers out of the moſt part of his Articles have alſo made equivocations, that ſo according unto the diſpoſition of the witneſſes, of the which a great number of them are and have a long time been his mortal enemies, that at the frivolous inſtigation of his enemies, when he was miſerably detained Priſoner, that he ſhould not be condemned unheard. Forſomuch as by the ſaid declarations, your Fatherly Reverences might be the more better informed of the truth, he himſelf is ready always to ſubmit himſelf under the determination of this moſt ſacred Council. For your Reverences, by the crafty and feigned perſwaſions of his enemies, are thus informed, that Maſter John Hus hath been incurably obſtinate by a long time, in moſt perilous Articles, the which your Reverences may now plainly perceive to be untrue: and for the more evidence herein to be ſhewed, there is preſented unto your Reverences an inſtrument of publick recognition of the moſt Reverend Father in Chriſt the Lord Nicholas Biſhop of Nazareth, an Inquiſitor of Hereſies, eſpecially appointed by the Apoſtolick See in the Dioceſs of Prague, the which by your Reverences is more diligently to be hearkned unto.

Articles foiſted out of Hus's Books by his enemies.

The Council evil informed againſt John Hus.

Wherefore it may pleaſe your Fatherly Reverences to command the ſaid Maſter John Hus, neither convicted nor condemned, to be taken and brought out of his bonds and chains, in the which he is now moſt grievouſly detained and kept, and to put him into the hands of ſome Reverend Lord Biſhops, or Commiſſioners, appointed or to be appointed by his preſent Council; that the ſaid Maſter John Hus may ſomewhat be relieved, and recover again his health, and be the more diligently and commodiouſly examined by the Commiſſioners. And for the more aſſurance, the Barons and Nobles aforeſaid of the Kingdom of Boheme, will provide moſt ſure and good ſureties, the which will not break their fidelity and faith for any thing in the World. Which alſo ſhall promiſe in this behalf, that he ſhall not flee or depart out of their hands, until ſuch time as the matter be fully determined by the ſaid Commiſſioners. In the execution of the which premiſſes, we have determined to provide and foreſee unto the fame and honour of the ſaid Kingdom of Boheme, and alſo to the ſafe conduct of the moſt worthy Prince, the King of Romans, leſt that the enemies and detractors of the honour and fame of the Kingdom aforeſaid, might not a litte ſlander and reprove the ſaid Lords, pretending and ſhewing forth hereafter, that they had made unreaſonable or unlawful requeſts; for the withſtanding of which miſchief, we require your Fatherly Reverences, that you will decree, and moſt graciouſly conſent, that this our petition and ſupplication may be drawn out again by your Notary, and reduced into a publick form and order.

The Nobles required that J. Hus not being convict nor condemned, ſhould be delivered out of Priſon.

A petition for Mr. John Hus's deliverance out of Priſon.

After

KING Hen. 5.

The anſwer of the Council to the ſupplication.

After this ſupplication was read before the Deputies of the four Nations, the Patriarch of Antioch anſwered in the name of them all unto every Article of the ſaid ſupplication; but it was done in few words.

First, as touching the proteſtation of John Hus, whether it be true or falſe, it ſhall be made evident in the proceſs of his cauſe. Moreover, whereas they ſay that the adverſaries of John Hus have perverſly drawn certain things out of his Books, that alſo the matter it ſelf ſhall declare in the end. Whereas if it ſhall be found and decreed that John Hus is unjuſtly and untruly accuſed, that then it ſhall come to paſs that his adverſaries ſhall incur perpetual ignominy and ſlander. But as touching ſureties, albeit there might be a thouſand put in or bound, yet can it not by any means be, that the Deputies of the Council with a ſafe conſcience may receive, or take them in this mans cauſe, unto whom there is no faith or credit to be given. Howbeit thus much they will do, upon the fifth day of June next. John Hus ſhall be brought again unto Conſtance, and there have free liberty to ſpeak his mind before the Council, and he promiſed that they would lovingly and gently hear him; but the matter in the end fell out far contrary to this promiſe.

In no caſe muſt be bailed.

No credit to be kept with an Heretick.

The ſame day the ſaid Barons and Lords preſented a ſupplication of this tenor unto the Emperor:

Supplication to the Emperor Sigiſmund.

Unto the moſt high and mighty Prince, the Lord Sigiſmund King of the Romans, always Auguſtus, King of Hungary, Croatia and Dalmatia, our moſt gracious Lord, faithful and true ſervice in all things, and at all times. Moſt noble Prince, and gracious Lord, we ſignifie unto your worthineſs, that we all together with one mind, conſent and accord, have delivered up unto the reverend Fathers and Lords, the Deputies of the four Nations, and to the whole ſacred Council of Conſtance, this our ſupplication hereunder written, as reaſonable, juſt, and worthy of conſideration, the tenor whereof here followeth word by word, and is this.

¶ The Copy of the ſupplication, which was preſented unto the Deputies of the Council, is before written, whereunto this which followeth was annexed.

The Barons ſupplication to the King for John Hus.

WHerefore we moſt humbly require and deſire your Princely Majeſty, that both for the love of juſtice, and alſo of the fame and renown of that moſt famous Kingdom of Boheme, whereof we acknowledge you undoubtedly, the true Lord, Heir and Succeſſor; and alſo foreſeeing unto the liberty of your ſafe conduct, that you will with your favourable countenance, beholding theſe moſt reaſonable and juſt ſupplications which we have put up to the Lords aforeſaid, put to your helping hand toward the ſaid moſt reverend Fathers and Lords, that they will effectually hear us, in this our moſt juſt petition, which we have offered up to them, as is aforeſaid; leſt that the enemies of the renown and honour of the famous Kingdom of Boheme, and ſuch be our ſlanderers alſo, hereafter may detract and ſlander us, that we ſhould make unreaſonable and unlawful requeſts unto the ſaid reverend Fathers and Lords: and therefore we required and deſired of them, that it would pleaſe them to decree by ſetting to their publick Hand and Seal, to authoriſe our ſaid publication. Likewiſe, we do moſt heartily require your Highneſs, that you would vouchſafe in like manner, to give us your teſtimony of the premiſſes.

But what anſwer the Emperor made hereunto, we could never underſtand or know; but by the proceſs of the matter a man may eaſily judge, that this good Emperor was brought and led even unto this point, through the obſtinate miſchief of the Cardinals and Biſhops, to break and falſifie his promiſe and faith which he had made and promiſed; and this was their reaſon whereby he was driven thereunto, that no defence could or might be given either by ſafe conduct, or by any other mean unto him, which was ſuſpected or judged to be an Heretick. But by the Epiſtles and Letters of John Hus, a man may eaſily judge what the Kings mind was. Now we will proceed in the Hiſtory.

The King forced by the importunity of the Cardinals to break promiſe.

The miſchievous counſel of the Popiſh band.

The fifth day of June, the Cardinals, Biſhops, and the reſt of the Prieſts, all that were almoſt in Conſtance, aſſembled at a great number, at the Covent of the Franciſcans in Conſtance, and there it was commanded, that before J. Hus ſhould be brought forth, in his abſence they ſhould rehearſe the Witneſſes and Articles which they had ſlanderouſly gathered out of his Books: the which Articles, with John Huſs's anſwer, we will hereafter repeat. By chance there was then preſent a certain Notary, named Mladoniewitz, the which bare great love and amity unto the ſaid Hus, who as ſoon as he perceived that the Biſhops and Cardinals were already determined and appointed to condemn the ſaid Articles in the abſence of John Hus, he went with all ſpeed unto Maſter Wencelate de Duba, and John of Clum, and told them all the matter, who incontinent made report thereof to the Emperor. Who underſtanding their intent, ſent Lewis the County Palatine of Heydelburgh, and the Lord Frederick, Burgrave of Nuremberg, to ſignifie unto them which ruled the Council, that nothing ſhould be reſolved or done in the caſe of John Hus, before that it were firſt heard with equity, and that they ſhould ſend him all ſuch Articles as were laid againſt the ſaid Hus, which were either falſe or heretical, and he would do ſo much, that the ſaid Articles ſhould be examined by good and learned men. Then according to the Emperors will, the judgment of the principals of the Council was ſuſpended, until ſuch time as John Hus were preſent.

The crafty counſel of the Papiſts ſtopped by the Emperor.

In the mean ſeaſon, theſe Gentlemen, Maſter of Duba and of Clum, did give unto the two Princes, which the Emperor had ſent, certain ſmall Treatiſes which the ſaid John Hus had made, out of the which they had drawn certain Articles to preſent unto them which rule the Council, under this condition, that they ſhould render them again, when they ſhould demand them. The intent and meaning of theſe Barons was, that by this means the adverſaries of John Hus might the more eaſily be reproved, the which of a naughty and corrupt conſcience had picked out corrupt ſentences out of the ſaid Books of John Hus. The Books were delivered unto the Cardinals and Biſhops; and that done John Hus was brought forth, and the Princes which were ſent by the Emperor, departed back again. After they ſhewed the Books unto John Hus, and he confeſſed openly before the whole Aſſembly that he had made them, and that he was ready, if there were any fault in them, to amend the ſame.

Now hearken a little to the holy proceedings of theſe reverend Fathers, for here happened a ſtrange and ſhameful matter. With much ado they had ſcarcely read one Article, and brought forth a few Witneſſes upon the ſame againſt him, but as he was about to open his mouth to anſwer, all this mad Herd or Flock began ſo to cry out upon him, that he had not leiſure to ſpeak one only word. The noiſe and trouble was ſo great and ſo vehement, that a man might well have called it a brute or noiſe of wild Beaſts, and not of Men; much leſs was it to be judged a congregation of Men gathered together, to judge and determine ſo grave and weighty matters. And if it happened that the noiſe and cry did never ſo little ceaſe, that he might anſwer any thing at all, out of the holy Scriptures or Eccleſiaſtical Doctors, by and by he ſhould hear theſe goodly replies upon him, that maketh nothing to the purpoſe.

J. Hus forced to keep ſilence by outrage of the Biſhops and Prieſts.

The like practice in theſe later days was uſed at Oxford againſt the godly fathers.

Beſides all this, ſome did outrage in words againſt him, and otherſome ſpitefully mocked him; ſo that he ſeeing himſelf overwhelmed with theſe rude and barbarous noiſes and crys, and that it profited nothing to ſpeak, he determined finally with himſelf to hold his peace and keep ſilence. From that time forward, all the whole rout of his adverſaries thought that they had won the Battel of him, and cried out all together, Now he is dumb, now he is dumb: This is a certain ſign and token, that he doth conſent and agree unto theſe his errors. Finally, the matter came to this point, that certain of the moſt moderate and honeſt among them, ſeeing this diſorder, determined to proceed no further, but that all ſhould be deferred and put off until another time. Through their advice, the Prelates and others departed from the Council for that preſent, and appointed to meet there again the morrow after to proceed in judgment.

An outragious Council.

The next day, which was the ſeventh of June, on which day the Sun was almoſt wholly eclipſed, ſomewhat after, about ſeven of the Clock, this ſame Flock aſſembled again in the Cloyſter of the Friers Minors, and by their appointment John Hus was brought before them, accompanied with a great number of armed men. Thither went alſo the Emperour, whom the Gentlemen, Maſter of Duba, and Clum, and the Notary named Peter, which were great friends of the ſaid Hus, did follow to ſee what the end would be. When they were come thither, they heard that in the accuſation of Michael de Cauſis, they read theſe words following: John Hus hath taught the people divers and many errors both in the Chappel of Bethleem, and alſo in many other places of the City of Prague, of the which errors ſome of them he hath drawn out of Wickliffs Books, and the reſt he hath forged and invented of his own head, and doth maintain the ſame very obſtinately and ſtiffly.

They went forth with ſwords and ſtaves as it had been to take a thief.

Peter and John follow Chriſt into the Biſhops houſe.

Firſt, that after the conſecration and pronouncjation of the words in the Supper of the Lord, there remaineth material Bread; and this is proved by the witneſs of John Protiwaie, Pariſh-Prieſt of Saint Clements in Prague, John Pecklow Preacher at St. Giles in Prague, Beniſe Preacher in the Caſtle of Prague, Andrew Brode, Canon of Prague, and divers other Prieſts. Unto this John Hus taking a ſolemn Oath, anſwered that he never ſpake any ſuch word; but thus much he did grant, that at what time the Archbiſhop of Prague forbad him to uſe any more that term or word Bread, he could not allow the Biſhops commandment; foraſmuch as Chriſt in the ſixth Chapter of John doth oftentimes name himſelf the bread of Angels, which came down from Heaven, to give life unto the whole world. But as touching material bread, he never ſpake any thing at all. Then the Cardinal of Cambray taking a certain bill in his hand, which he ſaid he received the day before, ſaid unto John Hus, Will you put any Univerſalities a parte rei, i.e. as touching the thing? When John Hus anſwered, that he would, becauſe St. Anſelm and divers others had ſo done, the Cardinal did proceed to gather his argument in this manner.

Matter made againſt John Hus.

Falſe witneſs againſt John Hus.

The anſwer of J. Hus.

Naming of bread forbidden by the Archbiſhops.

It followeth then, ſaid he, that after the conſecration is made, there remaineth the ſubſtance of material bread; and that I do thus prove: That the conſecration being done, whiles the bread is changed and tranſubſtantiated into the body of Chriſt, as you ſay, either there doth remain the common ſubſtance of material bread, or contrariwiſe. If the ſubſtance do remain, then is our purpoſe at an end. If contrariwiſe, then it doth follow, that by the deciſion of the ſingularity, the univerſal ceaſeth any more to be: John Hus anſwered, Truly it ceaſeth to be in this ſingular material Bread, by means of this Tranſubſtantiation, when as it is changed and Tranſubſtantiated into the Body of Chriſt; but notwithſtanding in other ſingularities it is made ſubject.

The Cardinal ſophiſticateth with J. Hus.

Then a certain Engliſhman by that argument would prove out of the firſt Poſition, that there remained material Bread. Then ſaid John Hus, that is a childiſh argument, which every Boy in Schools knoweth, and thereupon gave a ſolution. Then another Engliſhman would prove, that there remained material Bread in the Sacrament, becauſe the Bread after the conſecration was not annihilate. Unto whom John Hus anſwered, Although ſaid he, that the Bread be not annihilate or conſumed, yet ſingularly it ceaſeth there to be by means of the alteration of his ſubſtance into the Body of Chriſt. Here another Engliſhman ſtepping forth, ſaid, John Hus ſeemeth unto me to uſe the ſame kind of crafty ſpeech which Wickliff uſed, for he granted all theſe things which this man hath done, and yet in very deed was fully perſwaded that material Bread remained in the Sacrament after the conſecration. The which when John Hus had denied, ſaying, that he ſpake nothing but only ſincerely and uprightly, according to his conſcience; the Engliſhman proceeded to demand of him again, whether the body of Chriſt be totally and really in the Sacrament of the Altar. Whereunto John Hus anſwered, Verily, I do think that the body of Chriſt is really and totally in the Sacrament of the Altar, even that body which was born of the Virgin Mary, ſuffered, died, and roſe again, and ſitteth on the Right Hand of God the Father Almighty. When they had diſputed a good while to and fro, as touching univerſalities, the Engliſhman which before would prove that material bread remained in the Sacrament, becauſe that the bread was not annihilate, interrupting and breaking their talk, ſaid, to what purpoſe is this Diſputation upon univerſalities, the which maketh nothing to the purpoſe, as touching faith? For as far as I can perceive or hear, this man holdeth a good opinion as touching the Sacrament of the Altar.

The diſputation of the Engliſhmen.

An Engliſhman.

J. Hus agreeth with that blind time in the Sacrament.

Then another Engliſhman, named Stokes, ſaid I have ſeen at Prague (ſaith he) a certain Treatiſe, the which was aſcribed unto this man John Hus, wherein it was plainly ſet forth, that after the Conſecration there remained material bread in the Sacrament. Verily, ſaid John Hus, ſaving your reverence, that is not true.

Stokes an Engliſhman.

Then they returned again unto the witneſſes of them which were ſpoken of a little before, who every man for himſelf affirmed with an Oath that which he had ſaid. Amongſt whom John Protyway, Pariſh Prieſt of S. Clements in Prague, when he ſhould come to confirm his teſtimony added more, that John Hus ſhould ſay, that St. Gregory was but a rimer, when he did alledge his authority againſt him. Unto whom John Hus anſwered, that in this point they did him great injury, forſomuch as he always eſteemed and reputed S. Gregory for a moſt holy Doctor of the Church.

John Hus falſly accuſed, for calling S. Gregory a rimer.

The Cardinal of Florence.

Theſe contentions and Diſputations being ſomewhat appeaſed, the Cardinal of Florence turned himſelf toward John Hus, and ſaid, Maſter, you know well enough that it is written that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all witneſs is firm and ſtable; and here you ſee now almoſt twenty witneſſes againſt you, men of authority and worthy of credit, amongſt the which ſome have heard you teach theſe things themſelves, the other by report and common brute or voice do teſtifie of your Doctrine, and all together generally bring firm reaſons and proofs of their witneſs, unto the which we are forced and conſtrained to give credit; and for my part, I ſee not how you can maintain and defend your cauſe againſt ſo many notable and well learned men. Unto whom John Hus anſwered in this manner, I take God and my Conſcience to witneſs, that I never taught any thing, neither was it ever in my mind or fancy to teach in ſuch ſort or manner, as theſe men here have not feared to witneſs againſt me that which they never heard. And albeit, they were as many more in number as they are, for all that, I do much more eſteem, yea and without compariſon, regard the witneſs of my Lord God, before the witneſs and judgment of all mine adverſaries upon whom I do in no point ſtay my ſelf. Then ſaid the Cardinal again unto him, it is not lawful for us to judge according to your conſcience; for we cannot chooſe, but that we muſt needs ſtay our ſelves upon the firm and evident witneſs of theſe men here. For it is not for any diſpleaſure or hatred, that theſe men do witneſs this againſt you (as you do alledge:) for they alledge and bring forth ſuch reaſons of their witneſs, that there is no man that can perceive any hatred in them, or that we can in any caſe be in doubt thereof. And as touching Maſter Stephen Paletz, whereas you ſay, you do ſuſpect him that he hath craftily and deceitfully drawn out certain Points or Articles, out of your Books to betray them afterward; it ſeemeth that in this point you do him great wrong, for in mine advice he hath uſed and ſhewed a great fidelity and amity toward you, in that he hath alleviated and moderated many of your Articles much more than they are in your own Books. I underſtand alſo that you have like opinion of divers other notable men, and ſpecially you have ſaid, that you do ſuſpect M. Chancellor of Paris, than whom there is no more excellent and Chriſtian man in all the whole world.

Tvventy witneſſes prevailed againſt J. Hus, but the teſtimony of all Boheme could not ſerve on his part.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

He meaneth Gerſon.

Then was there read a certain Article of accuſation, in the which it was alledged, That John Hus had taught and obſtinately defended certain erroneous Articles of Wickliff's in Boheme. Whereunto Hus anſwered, that he never taught any errors of John Wickliff's, or of any other mans. Wherefore if it be ſo that Wickliff hath ſowed any errors in England, let the Engliſhmen look to that themſelves. But to confirm their Article, there was alledged, that John Hus did withſtand the condemnation of Wickliff's Articles, the which were firſt condemned at Rome; and afterward alſo, when the Archbiſhop of Swinco, with other learned men, held a Convocation at Prague for the ſame matter, when as they would have there been condemned for this cauſe, that none of them were agreeing to the Catholick Faith or Doctrine, but were either heretical, erroneous or offenſive: he anſwered, that he durſt not agree thereunto, for offending his conſcience, and and eſpecially for theſe Articles, that Silveſter the Pope and Conſtantine did err in beſtowing thoſe great gifts and rewards upon the Church. Alſo, that the Pope or Prieſt, being in mortal ſin, cannot conſecrate nor baptiſe. This Article, ſaid he, I have thus determined, as if I ſhould ſay, that he doth unworthily conſecrate or baptiſe, when as he is in deadly ſin, and that he is an unworthy Miniſter of the Sacraments of God. Here his accuſers with their witneſſes, were earneſt and inſtant that the Article of Wickliff was written by the very ſame words of the Treatiſe which John Hus made againſt Stephen Paletz. Verily ſaid John Hus, I fear not to ſubmit my ſelf, even under the danger of death, if you ſhall not find it ſo as I have ſaid. When the Book was brought forth, they found it written as John Hus had ſaid. He added alſo moreover, that he durſt not agree unto them which had condemned Wickliff's Articles, for this Article, The tenths were pure alms.

A Treatiſe againſt Stephen Paletz.

Whether tenths be pure alms.

Here the Cardinal of Florence objected unto him this Argument, as touching the Alms: It is required that it ſhould be given freely without bond or duty. But Tenths are not given freely without bond or duty; therefore they are no alms. John Hus denying the Major of this Syllogiſme brought this reaſon againſt him. Forſomuch as rich men are bounden under the pain of eternal damnation, unto the fulfilling of the ſix works or mercy, which Chriſt repeateth in the 25*th* Chapter of Matthew, and theſe works are pure alms: Ergo, alms is alſo given by bond and duty. Then an Archbiſhop of England, ſtepping up, ſaid, if we all be bound unto thoſe ſix works of mercy, it doth follow that poor men, which have nothing at all to give, ſhould be damned. I anſwer, ſaid Hus, unto your antecedent, that I ſpake diſtinctly of rich men, and of thoſe which had wherewithal to do thoſe works: They, I ſay, were bound to give alms under pain of damnation.

Alms ſtand of duty.

He anſwered moreover, unto the Minor of the firſt Argument, That Tenths were at firſt given freely, and afterward made a bond and duty; and when as he would have declared it more at large, he could not be ſuffered. He declared alſo divers other cauſes why he could not with ſafe Conſcience conſent unto the condemnation of Wickliff's Articles. But howſoever the matter went, he did affirm and ſay, that he did never obſtinately confirm any Articles of Wickliff's, but only that he did not allow and conſent that Wickliff's Articles ſhould be condemned before that ſufficient reaſons were alledged out of the holy Scripture for their condemnation; and of the ſame mind, ſaith John Hus, are a great many other Doctors and Maſters of the Univerſity of Prague. For when as Swinco the Archbiſhop commanded all Wickliff's Books to be gathered together in the whole City of Prague, and to be brought unto him, I my ſelf brought alſo certain Books of Wickliff's which I gave unto the Archbiſhop, deſiring him, that if he found any error or Hereſie in them, he would note and mark them, and I my ſelf would publiſh them openly. But the Archbiſhop, albeit that he ſhewed me no error nor Hereſie in them, burned my Books, together with thoſe that were brought unto him, notwithſtanding that he had no ſuch commandment from Pope Alexander the fifth of that name. But notwithſtanding by a certain policy, he obtained a Bull from the ſaid Pope by means of Jaroſlaus Biſhop of Sarepte, of the Order of Franciſcans, that all Wickliff's Books, for the manifold errors contained in them (whereof there was none named) ſhould be taken out of all mens hands.

J. Hus his mind touching the condemnation of Wickliff's Articles.

Wickliff's Books burned in Prague by the Archbiſhop Swinco.

A narration touching Wickliff's Books.

The Univerſity of Prague maketh ſupplication to the King for ſaving of Wickliff's Books.

The Archbiſhop, uſing the authority of this Bull, thought he ſhould bring to paſs, that the King of Boheme and the Nobles ſhould conſent to the condemnation of Wickliff's Books; but therein he was deceived. Yet nevertheleſs, he calling together certain Divines, gave them in Commiſſion to ſit upon Wickliff's Books, and to proceed againſt them by a definitive ſentence in the Canon Law. Theſe Men, by a general ſentence, judged all thoſe Books worthy to be burned. The which when the Doctors, Maſters and Scholars of the Univerſity heard report of, they all together, with one conſent and accord (none excepted but only they, which before were choſen by the Archbiſhop to ſit in judgment) determined to make ſupplication unto the King to ſtay the matter. The King granting their requeſt, ſent by and by certain unto the Archbiſhop to examine the matter. There he denied that he would decree any thing, as touching Wickliff's Books, contrary unto the Kings will and pleaſure. Whereupon, albeit that he had determined to burn them the next day after, yet for fear of the King, the matter was paſſed over.

Wickliff's Books burned in Prague againſt the Kings will.

In the mean time Pope Alexander the 5*th* being dead, the Archbiſhop, fearing leſt the Bull which he had received of the Pope, would be no longer of any force or effect, privily calling unto him his adherents, and ſhutting the Gates of his Court round about him, being guarded with a number of armed ſoldiers, conſumed and burned all Wickliff's Books. Beſides this great injury, the Archbiſhop by means of his Bull aforeſaid, committed another no leſs tolerable. For he gave out commandment, that no man after that time, under pain of Excommunication, ſhould teach any more in Chappels. Whereupon I did appeal unto the Pope; who being dead, and the cauſe of my matter remaining undetermined, I appealed likewiſe unto his ſucceſſor John 23*d*. Before whom when as, by the ſpace of two years, I could not be admitted by my advocate to defend my cauſe, I appealed unto the high Judge Chriſt. When John Hus had ſpoken theſe words it was demanded of him, whether he had received Abſolution of the Pope or no? He anſwered, No. Then again, whether it were lawful for him to appeal unto Chriſt or no? Whereunto John Hus anſwered, Verily I do affirm here before you all, that there is no more juſt or effectual appeal, than that appeal which is made unto Chriſt, foraſmuch as the Law doth determine, that to appeal, is no other thing than in a cauſe of grief or wrong done by an inferiour Judge, to implore and require aid and remedy at a higher Judges hand. Who is then an higher Judge than Chriſt? Who, I ſay, can know or judge the matter more juſtly, or with more equity? when as in him there is found no deceit, neither can he be deceived; or, who can better help the miſerable and oppreſſed than he? While John Hus with a devout and ſober countenance, was ſpeaking and pronouncing thoſe words, he was derided and mocked of all the whole Council.

A decree that no man ſhould teach any more in Chappels.

J. Hus appealed to the Pope, and from the Pope to Chriſt.

A queſtion of the counſel, whether it be lawful to appeal to Chriſt or no.

The Popiſh Church deriderh Chriſt.

Then was there rehearſed another Article of his accuſation in this manner; That John Hus to confirm the Hereſie which he had taught the common and ſimple people out of Wickliff's Books, ſaid openly theſe words, That at what time a great number of Monks and Friers, and other learned men were gathered together in England, in a certain Church, to diſpute againſt John Wickliff, and could by no means vanquiſh him, or give him the foyl, ſuddenly the Church-door was broken open with lightning, ſo that with much ado Wickliff's enemies hardly eſcaped without hurt. He added moreover, that he wiſhed his ſoul to be in the ſame place where John Wickliff's ſoul was. Whereunto John Hus anſwered, that a dozen years before that any Books of Divinty of John Wickliff's were in Boheme, he did ſee certain Works of Philoſophy of his, the which, he ſaid, did marvelouſly delight and pleaſe him. And when he underſtood the good and godly life of the ſaid Wickliff, he ſpake theſe words, I truſt, ſaid he, that Wickliff is ſaved; and albeit that I doubt whether he be damned or no, yet with a good hope I wiſh, that my ſoul were in the ſame place where John Wickliff's is. Then again did all the company jeſt and laugh at him.

Hus accuſed for truſting that Wickliff's ſoul is ſaved.

It is alſo in his accuſation, that John Hus did counſel the people, according to the example of Moſes, to reſiſt with the ſword againſt all ſuch as did gainſay his Doctrine. And the next day after he had preached the ſame, there were found openly in divers places certain intimations, that every man, being armed with his ſword about him, ſhould ſtoutly proceed, and that Brother ſhould not ſpare Brother, neither one neighbour another. John Hus anſwered, that all theſe things were falſly laid unto his charge by his adverſaries; for he at all times when he preached, did diligently admoniſh and warn the people, that they ſhould all arm themſelves to defend the truth of the Goſpel, according to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, with the helmet and ſword of Salvation; and that he never ſpake of any material ſword, but of that which is the Word of God. And as touching intimations, or Moſes ſword, he never had any thing to do withal.

Sedition laid to his charge.

Hus accuſed for moving certain tumults againſt the Clergy, and diviſion in the Univerſity of Prague.

It is moreover affirmed in his accuſation and witneſs, that many offences are ſprung up by the Doctrine of Hus. For firſt of all, he ſowed diſcord between the Eccleſiaſtical and the Politick ſtate: whereupon followed the perſecution ſecution, ſpoiling and robbery of the Clergy and Biſhops. And moreover, that he through his diſſention diſſolved the Univerſity of Prague. Hereunto John Hus briefly anſwered, that theſe things had not happened by his means or default. For the firſt diſſention that was between the Eccleſiaſtical and Politick ſtate, ſprang and grew upon this cauſe, that Pope Gregory the Twelfth of that name, promiſed at his Election, that at all times at the will and pleaſure of the Cardinals he would depart from, and give over his ſeat again; for under that condition he was elect and choſen. This man, contrary and againſt Winceſlaus King of Boheme, who was then alſo King of the Romans, made Lewes Duke of Bavaria Emperor.

A Story of Popes.

A few years after it happened when as Pope Gregory would not refuſe and give over his ſeat and office at the requeſt of the Cardinals, that the whole College of Cardinals ſent Letters to the King of Boheme, requiring him, that together with them he would renounce and forſake his obedience unto Pope Gregory, and ſo it ſhould come to paſs, that by the authority of a new Biſhop he ſhould recover again his Imperial Dignity. For this cauſe the King conſented to the will of the Cardinals as touching a Neutrality; that is to ſay, that he would neither take part with Pope Gregory, neither yet with Benedict the Twelfth, Biſhop of Avinion, which was then named Pope, as it doth appear by Chronicles. In this cauſe then, forſomuch as the Archbiſhop Swinco with the Clergy were againſt the King, and abſtaining from the Divine ſervice, many of them departed out of the City, and the Archbiſhop himſelf breaking down the Tomb of the Lord Wincelate, contrary and againſt the Kings will, did alſo take Wickliffs Books and burned them: Thereupon the King without any gain-ſaying, ſuffered that certain goods of theirs, which of their own wills were fled away, ſhould be ſpoiled, becauſe they ſhould not conſent or accord with the Biſhop. Whereupon it is eaſie to be underſtood and known that John Hus was falſly accuſed for that matter. Howbeit a certain man, one Naſo, riſing up, ſaid, The Clergy (ſaid he) did not abſtain from the Divine ſervice, becauſe they would not ſwear to conſent unto the King, but becauſe that they were ſpoiled and robbed of their goods and ſubſtance. And the Cardinal of Cambray, who was one of the Judges ſaid, Here I muſt ſay ſomewhat which is come into my mind.

The cauſe why Swinco and other of the Clergy did fly out of Prague.

This Doctor Naſo was Counſellor to King Winceſlaus.

When as I came from Rome, the ſame year that theſe things were done, by chance I met on the way certain Prelates of Boheme. Whom when I demanded what news they had brought out of Boheme, they anſwered, that there was happened a wonderful cruel and heinous fact: for all the Clergy were ſpoiled of all their ſubſtance, and very ill intreated and handled. Then John Hus alledging the ſame cauſe which he did before, went forward unto the ſecond part of the article which was objected againſt him, denying alſo that it hapned through his fault, that the Germans departed from the Univerſity of Prague. But when as the King of Boheme, according to the foundation of Charles the Fourth his Father, granted three voices unto the Bohemes, and the fourth unto the Germans; whereat the Germans grudging that they ſhould be exempted from their voices, of their own accord departed and went their ways; binding themſelves with a great Oath, and under a great penalty, both of their ſame, and alſo money, that none of them ſhould return again unto Prague. Notwithſtanding, I am not aſhamed to confeſs, that I did approve and allow the doings of the King, unto whom of duty I owe obedience for the commodity and profit of my Country. And becauſe you ſhall not think that I have ſpoken any untruth. Here is preſent Albert Warren Trapius, which was Deacon of the Faculties, who had ſworn to depart with the reſt of the Germans; he, if that he will ſay the truth, ſhall eaſily clear me of this ſuſpition.

A declaration how the Germans departed from the Univerſity of Prague.

The penalty of money was a 100 ſilver ſhock.

But when as Albert would have ſpoken, he could not be heard. But the foreſaid Naſo, of whom before is made mention, after he had asked leave to ſpeak, ſaid, This matter do I underſtand well enough, for I was in the Kings Court when theſe things were done in Boheme, when as I ſaw the Maſters of the three Nations, of the Germans, Bavarians, Saxons, and Sileſians, amongſt whom the Polonians were alſo numbred, moſt humbly come unto the King, requiring that he would not ſuffer the right of their voices to be taken from them. Then the King promiſed them that he would foreſee and provide for their requeſts. But John Hus and Jerome of Prague, with divers others, perſwaded the King that he ſhould not ſo do. Whereat the King at the firſt being not a little moved, gave him a ſore check, that he and Jerome of Prague did ſo much intermeddle themſelves, and moved ſuch open controverſies, inſomuch that he threatned them, that except they would foreſee and take heed, he would bring it to paſs that the matter ſhould be determined and decreed by fire. Wherefore moſt reverend Fathers, you ſhall underſtand that the King of Boheme did never favour with his heart theſe men, whoſe unſhamefaſtneſs is ſuch, that they feared not even of late to intreat me evil, being ſo much in the Kings favour and credit. After him ſtepped forth Paletz, ſaying, Verily moſt reverend Fathers, not only the learned men of other Nations, but alſo of Boheme it ſelf, are through the counſel of John Hus and his adherents baniſhed out of Boheme; of the which number ſome remain yet in exile in Moravia. Hereunto John Hus anſwered: How can this be true, ſaid he, ſithence I was not at Prague at that time, when as theſe men you ſpeak of departed and went away from thence? Theſe things were thus debated the day aforeſaid as touching John Hus.

KING Hen. 5.

Paletz ſpeaketh againſt John Huſs.

This done, the ſaid John Hus was commited to the cuſtody of the Biſhop of Reigen, under whom Jerome of Prague was alſo priſoner. But before that he was led away the Cardinal of Cambray calling him back again in the preſence of the Emperor, ſaid, John Hus, I have heard you ſay, that if you had not been willing of your own mind to come unto Conſtance, neither the Emperor himſelf, neither the King of Boheme could have compelled you to do it. Unto whom John Hus anſwered, Under your licenſe moſt reverend Father, I never uſed any ſuch kind of talk or words. But this I did ſay, That there was in Boheme a great number of Gentlemen and Noblemen, which did favour and love me, the which alſo might eaſily have kept me in ſome ſure and ſecret place, that I ſhould not have been conſtrained to come into this Town of Conſtance, neither at the will of the Emperor, neither of the King of Boheme. With that the Cardinal of Cambray, even for very anger began to change his colour, and deſpiteouſly ſaid, Do you not ſee the unſhamefaſtneſs of the man here? And as they were murmuring and whiſpering on all parts, the Lord John de Clum, ratifying and confirming that which John Hus had ſpoken, ſaid, That John Hus had ſpoken very well; for on my part, ſaid he, which in compariſon of a great many others am but of ſmall force in the Realm of Boheme, yet always if I would have taken it in hand, I could have defended him eaſily by the ſpace of one year, even againſt all the force and power of both theſe great and mighty Kings. How much better might they have done it which are of more force or puiſſance than I am? And have ſtronger Caſtles and places than I have? After that the Lord de Clum had ſpoken, the Cardinal of Cambray ſaid, Let us leave this talk. And I tell you, John Hus, and counſel you, that you ſubmit your ſelf unto the ſentence and mind of the Council, as you did promiſe in the Priſon; and if you will do ſo, it ſhall be greatly both for your profit and honour.

Hieronymus delivered to cuſtody. Jerome of Prague.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

John de Clum.

And the Emperor himſelf began to tell him the ſame tale, ſaying, Albeit that there be ſome which ſay, that the fifteenth day after you were committed to priſon, you obtained of us our Letters of ſafe-conduct: Notwithſtanding, I can well prove by the witneſs of many Princes and Noblemen, that the ſaid ſafe conduct was obtained and gotten of us by my Lord de Dube and de Clum, before you were parted out of Prague, under whoſe guard we have ſent for you, to the end that none ſhould do you any outrage or hurt, but that you ſhould have full liberty to ſpeak freely before all the Council, and to anſwer as touching your Faith and Doctrine: and as you ſee, my Lords the Cardinals and Biſhops have ſo dealt with you, that we do very well perceive their good will towards you, for the which we have great cauſe to thank them. And forſomuch as divers have told us, that we may not, or ought not of right to defend any man which is an Heretick, or ſuſpect of Hereſie; therefore now we give you even the ſame counſel which the Cardinal of Cambray hath given you already, that you be not obſtinate to maintain any opinion, but that you do ſubmit your ſelf under ſuch obedi-

KING Hen. 5. ence as you owe unto the authority of the holy Council, in all things that ſhall be laid againſt you, and confirmed by credible witneſſes. The which thing if you do according to our counſel, we will give order that for the love of us, of our Brother, and the whole Realm of Boheme, the Council ſhall ſuffer you to depart in peace, with an eaſie and tolerable penance and ſatisfaction. The which thing if you contrariwiſe refuſe to do, the Preſidents of the Council ſhall have ſufficient wherewithal to proceed againſt you. And for our part be ye well aſſured, that we will ſooner prepare and make the fire with our own hands, to burn you withal, than we will endure or ſuffer any longer that you ſhall maintain or uſe this ſtiffneſs of opinions, which you have hitherto maintained and uſed. Wherefore our advice and counſel is, that you ſubmit your ſelf wholly unto the judgment of the Council. Unto whom John Hus anſwered in this ſort, O moſt noble Emperor, I render unto your Highneſs moſt immortal thanks for your Letters of ſafe conduct. Upon this Lord John de Clum did break him of his purpoſe, and admoniſhed him that he did in no point excuſe himſelf of the blame of obſtinacy.

Then ſaid John Hus, O moſt gentle Lord, I do take God to my witneſs, that I was never minded to maintain any opinion ever obſtinately, and that for this ſame intent and purpoſe I did come hither of mine own good will, that if any man could lay before me any better or more holy Doctrine than mine, that then I would change mine opinion without any further doubt. After he had ſpoken and ſaid theſe things, he was ſent away with Serjeants.

The morrow after, which was the eighth day of June, the very ſame company which was aſſembled the day before, aſſembled now again at the Covent of the Franciſcans. And in this aſſembly were alſo John Hus his Friends, Lord de Dube, and Lord de Clum, and Peter the Notary. Thither was John Hus alſo brought: and in his preſence there were read about Thirty nine Articles, the which they ſaid, were drawn out of his Books. Hus acknowledged all thoſe that were faithfully and truly collected and gathered, to be his; of the which ſort there were but very few. The reſidue were counterfeited and forged by his adverſaries, and ſpecially by Stephen Paletz, the principal Author of this miſchief: for they could find no ſuch thing in the Books, out of the which they ſaid they had drawn and gathered them; or at the leaſt, if they were, they were corrupted by ſlanders, as a man may eaſily perceive by the number of Articles.

39 Articles laid to John Hus.

Theſe be the ſame Articles in a manner which were ſhewed before in the priſon to John Hus, and are rehearſed here in another order. Howbeit there were more Articles added unto them, and otherſome corrected and enlarged. But now we will ſhew them one with another, and declare what the ſaid Hus did anſwer both openly before them all, as alſo in the priſon, for he left his anſwers in the priſon briefly written with his own hand in theſe words.

The anſwer of John Hus concerning his Book of the Church.

I John Hus, unworthy Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, Maſter of Art, and Bachelor of Divinity, do confeſs that I have written a certain ſmall Treatiſe, Intituled, Of the Church; the copy whereof was ſhewed me by the Notaries of the three Preſidents of the Council, that is to ſay, the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, the Biſhop of Caſtle, and the Biſhop of Libuſſe; the which Deputies or Preſidents, in reproof of the ſaid Treatiſe, delivered unto me certain Articles, ſaying, that they were drawn out of the ſaid Treatiſe, and were written in the ſame.

The firſt Article: There is but one holy univerſal or Catholick Church, which is the univerſal company of all the Predeſtinate. I do confeſs that this Propoſition is mine, and is confirmed by the ſaying of S. Auguſtin upon S. John.

St. Paul was never any member of the Devil.

The ſecond Article: St. Paul was never any member of the Devil, albeit that he committed and did certain acts like unto the acts of the malignant Church. And likewiſe St. Peter which fell into an horrible ſin of perjury and denial of his Maſter, it was by the permiſſion of God, that he might the more firmly and ſtedfaſtly riſe again and be confirmed. I anſwer according to St. Auguſtine, that it is expedient that the Elect and Predeſtinate ſhould ſin and offend.

Hereby it appeareth that there are two manner of ſeparations from the holy Church. The firſt is not to perdition, as all the Elect are divided from the Church. The ſecond is to perdition, by the which certain Hereticks are through their deadly ſin divided from the Church. Yet notwithſtanding by the grace of God, they may return again unto the flock, and be of the fold of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, of whom he ſpeaketh himſelf, ſaying, I have other ſheep which are not of this fold, Joh. 20.

Two manner of ſeparations from the Church.

The third Article: No part or member of the Church doth depart or fall away at any time from the body, forſomuch as the charity of Predeſtination, which is the bond and chain of the ſame, doth never fall. This Propoſition is thus placed in my Book: As the reprobate of the Church proceed out of the ſame, and yet are not as parts or members of the ſame; forſomuch as no part or member of the ſame doth finally fall away, becauſe that the charity of Predeſtination, which is the bond and chain of the ſame, doth never fall away. This is proved by the thirteenth Chapter of the firſt to the Corinthians, and to the Romans, the eighth Chapter: All things turn to good to them which love God. Alſo I am certain that neither death nor life can ſeparate us from the charity and love of God, as it is more at large in the Book.

The members of the Church never fall finally away.

The fourth Article: The predeſtinate, although he be not in the ſtate of Grace according to preſent juſtice, yet is he always a member of the univerſal Church. This is an error, if it be underſtood of all ſuch as be predeſtinate: for thus it is in the Book, about the beginning of the fifth Chapter, where it is declared, that there be divers manners and ſorts of being in the Church; for there are ſome in the Church, according to the miſhapen faith, and other ſome according to predeſtination, as Chriſtians predeſtinate now in ſin, but ſhall return again unto grace.

The predeſtinate is always a member of the univerſal Church, although not in preſent juſtice.

The fifth Article: There is no degree of honour or dignity, neither any humane election, or any ſenſible ſign, that can make any man a member of the univerſal Church. I anſwer, this article is after this manner in my Book. And ſuch ſubtilties are underſtood and known by conſidering what it is to be in the Church, and what it is to be a part or member of the Church, and that predeſtination doth make a man a member of the univerſal Church, the which is a preparation of grace for the preſent, and of glory to come: and not any degree of dignity, neither election of man, neither any ſenſible ſign. For the Traytor Judas Iſcarioth notwithſtanding Chriſts election, and the temporal graces which were given him for his office of Apoſtleſhip, and that he was reputed and counted of men a true Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, yet was he no true Diſciple, but a wolf covered in a ſheeps-skin, as St. Auguſtine ſaith.

To be in the Church, and a member of the Church.

Predeſtination.

The ſixth Article: A reprobate man is never a member of the holy Church. I anſwer, it is in my Book with ſufficient long probation out of the 26th Pſalm, and out of the fifth Chapter to the Epheſians, and alſo by St. Bernards ſaying, The Church of Jeſus Chriſt is more plainly and evidently his body, than the body which he delivered for us to death. I have alſo written in the fifth Chapter of my Book, that the holy Church is the Barn of the Lord, in the which are both good and evil, predeſtinate and reprobate, the good being as the good corn or grain, and the evil as the chaff: and thereunto is added the Expoſition of Saint Auguſtine.

Both good and bad in the Church.

The ſeventh Article: Judas was never a true Diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt. I anſwer, and I do confeſs the ſame. This appeareth by the fifth article, which is paſſed before, and by St. Auguſtine in his Book of penance, where he doth expound the meaning of St. John, in the firſt Epiſtle and ſecond Chapter, where he ſaid, They came out from amongſt us, but they were none of us. He knew from the beginning all them which ſhould believe, and him alſo which ſhould betray him, and ſaid, And therefore I ſay unto you, that none cometh unto me except it be given him of my father. From that time many of the Diſciples parted from him; and were not thoſe alſo called Diſciples, according to the words of the Goſpel? And yet notwithſtanding they were true Diſciples, becauſe they did not remain and continue in the Word of the Son of God, according as it is ſaid, If you remain in my word, you be my diſciples. Forſomuch then as they did not continue with Chriſt as his true Diſciples, ſo likewiſe are they not the true Sons of God: although they ſeem ſo, unto him they are not ſo, unto whom it is known what they ſhall be, that is to ſay, of good, evil. Thus much writeth

St.

St. Auguſtine: It is alſo evident that Judas could not be the true Diſciple of Chriſt, by means of his covetouſneſs: for Chriſt himſelf ſaid in the preſence of Judas, as I ſuppoſe, Except a man forſake all that he hath, he cannot be my Diſciple. Forſomuch then as Judas did not forſake all things, according to the Lords will, and follow him, he was a Thief, as it is ſaid John the twelfth, and a Divel, John the ſixth, whereby it is evident by the Word of the Lord, that Judas was not his true but fained Diſciple. Whereupon St. Auguſtine writing upon John, declaring how the ſheep hear the voice of Chriſt, ſaith, What manner of hearers, think we, his ſheep were? Truly Judas heard him and was a wolf, yet followed he the ſhepherd; but being clothed in a ſheeps skin, he lay in wait for the ſhepherd.

8. The eighth Article of the Congregation of the Predeſtinate, whether they be in the ſtate of Grace or no, according unto preſent juſtice, is the holy univerſal Church, and therefore it is an article of faith, and it is the ſame Church which hath neither wrinkle, neither ſpot in it, but is holy and undefiled, the which the Son of God doth call his own. The anſwer, The words of the Book out of the which this article was drawn are theſe: Thirdly, The Church is underſtood and taken for the congregation and aſſembly of the faithful, whether they be in the ſtate of grace, according to preſent juſtice or not. And in this ſort it is an article of our faith, of the which St. Paul maketh mention in the fifth Chapter to the Epheſians: Chriſt ſo loved his Church, that he delivered and offered himſelf for the ſame, &c. I pray you then, is there any faithful man the which doth doubt that the Church doth not ſignifie all the Elect and Predeſtinate, the which we ought to believe to be the univerſal Church, the glorious Spouſe of Jeſus Chriſt, holy and without ſpot? Wherefore this article is an article of faith, the which we ought firmly to believe according to our Creed, I believe the Holy Catholick Church: and of this Church doth St. Auguſtine, St. Gregory, St. Jerome, and divers others make mention.

The Church is taken ſometime for the congregation of the Elect and faithful, and ſo is the article taken in the Creed.

9. The ninth Article. Peter never was, neither is the Head of the holy univerſal Church. The anſwer: This article was drawn out of theſe words of my Book. All men do agree in this point, that Peter had received of the Rock of the Church (which is Chriſt) humility, poverty, ſtedfaſtneſs of faith, and conſequently bleſſedneſs. Not as though the meaning of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt was, when he ſaid, Upon this Rock I will build my Church, that he would build every militant Church upon the perſon of Peter, for Chriſt ſhould build his Church upon the Rock which is Chriſt himſelf, from whence Peter received his ſtedfaſtneſs of faith, forſomuch as Jeſus Chriſt is the only Head and foundation of every Church, and not Peter.

Peter never was head of the whole univerſal Church.

The Church builded upon Peter, how.

10. The tenth Article: If he that is called the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, do follow Chriſt in his life, then he is his true Vicar. But if ſo be, he do walk in contrary paths and ways, then is he the meſſenger of Antichriſt, and the enemy and adverſary of St. Peter, and of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and alſo the Vicar of Judas Iſcarioth. I anſwer, The words of my Book are theſe: If he which is called the Vicar of St. Peter, walk in the ways of Chriſtian vertues aforeſaid, we do believe verily that he is the true Vicar, and true Biſhop of the Church which he ruleth; but if he walk in contrary paths and ways, then is he the meſſenger of Antichriſt, contrary both to St. Peter, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore Saint Bernard in his fourth Book did write in this ſort unto Pope Eugenie: Thou delighteſt and walkeſt in great pride and arrogancy; being gorgeouſly and ſumptuouſly arrayed, what fruit or profit do thy flock or ſheep receive by thee? If I durſt ſay it, theſe be rather the paſtures and feedings of Divels than of ſheep. St. Peter and St. Paul did not ſo; wherefore thou ſeemeſt by theſe thy doings to ſucceed Conſtantine, and not St. Peter. Theſe be the very words of St. Bernard. It followeth after in my Book, that if the manner and faſhion of his life and living be contrary to that which St. Peter uſed, or that he be given to avarice and covetouſneſs, then is he the Vicar of Judas Iſcarioth, which loved and choſe the reward of iniquity, and did ſet out to ſale the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. As ſoon as they had read the ſame, thoſe which ruled and governed the Council, beheld one another, making mocks and mowes, they nodded their heads at him.

The Vicar of Chriſt, how he is to be taken.

Bern. ad Eugen. lib. 4.

The eleventh Article: All ſuch as do uſe ſimony, and Prieſts living diſſolutely and wantonly, do hold an untrue opinion of the ſeven Sacraments, as unbelieving baſtards, and not as children, not knowing what is the office and duty of the Keys or Cenſures, Rites and Ceremonies, neither of the Divine ſervice of the Church, or of veneration or worſhipping of Relicks, neither of the Orders conſtituted and ordained in the Church, neither yet of Indulgences or Pardons. I anſwer, that it is placed in this manner in my Book. This abuſe of authority or power is committed by ſuch as do ſell and make merchandize of holy Orders, and get and gather together riches by ſimony, making Fairs and Markets of the holy Sacraments, and living in all kind of voluptuouſneſs and diſſolute manners, or in any other filthy or villainous kind of living: They do pollute and defile the holy Eccleſiaſtical ſtate. And albeit that they profeſs in words that they do know God, yet do they deny it again by their deeds, and conſequently believe not in God: But as unbelieving baſtards they hold a contrary and untrue opinion of the ſeven Sacraments of the Church. And this appeareth moſt evidently, forſomuch as all ſuch do utterly contemn and deſpiſe the name of God according to the ſaying of Malachi, the firſt Chapter, Unto you, O Prieſts, be it ſpoken, which do deſpiſe and contemn my name.

Prieſts making merchandize of holy Orders.

12. The twelfth Article: The Papal dignity hath his original from the Emperors of Rome. I anſwer, and mark well what my words are: The preheminence and inſtitution of the Pope is ſprung and come of the Emperors power and authority. And this is proved by the ninety ſixth Diſtinction: for Conſtantine granted this privilege unto the Biſhop of Rome, and other after him confirmed the ſame: That like as Auguſtus for the outward and temporal goods beſtowed upon the Church, is counted always the moſt high King above all others; ſo the Biſhop of Rome ſhould be called the principal Father above all other Biſhops. This notwithſtanding the Papal dignity hath his original immediately from Chriſt, as touching his ſpiritual adminiſtration and office to rule the Church. Then the Cardinal of Cambray ſaid, In the time of Conſtantine, there was a General Council holden at Nice, in the which, albeit the higheſt room and place in the Church was given to the Biſhop of Rome, for honours cauſe, it is aſcribed unto the Emperor. Wherefore then do ye not as well affirm and ſay, that the Papal dignity took his original rather from that Council, than by the Emperors authority and power?

13. The thirteenth Article: No man would reaſonably affirm (without relation) either of himſelf or of any other, that he is the head of any particular Church. I anſwer, I confeſs it to be written in my Book, and it followeth ſtraight after, Albeit that through his good living he ought to hope and truſt that he is a member of the holy univerſal Church, the Spouſe of Jeſus Chriſt, according to the ſaying of the Preacher, No man knoweth whether he be worthy and have deſerved grace and favour, or hatred. And Luk. 17. When ye have done all that ye can, ſay that you are unprofitable ſervants.

The Pope is not the head of any particular Church.

The fourteenth Article: It ought not to believed that the Pope, whatſoever he be, may be the head of any particular Church, unleſs he be predeſtinate or ordained of God. I anſwer, that I do acknowledg this Propoſition to be mine, and this is eaſie to prove forſomuch as it is neceſſary that the Chriſtian Faith ſhould be depraved, forſomuch as the Church was deceived by N. as it appeareth by St. Auguſtine.

15. The fifteenth Article: The Popes power as Vicar, is but vain and nothing worth, if he do not confirm and addreſs his life according to Jeſus Chriſt, and follow the manners of St. Peter. I anſwer, that it is thus in my Book, That it is meet and expedient that he which is ordained Vicar, ſhould addreſs and frame himſelf, in manners and conditions, to the authority of him which did put him in place. And John Hus ſaid moreover before the whole Council: I underſtand that the power and authority in ſuch a Pope as doth not repreſent the manners of Chriſt, is fruſtrate and void, as touching the merit and reward, which he ſhould obtain and get thereby, and doth not get the ſame: but not as concerning his office. Then certain others ſtanding by, aſked of him, ſaying, Where is that gloſs in your Book? John Hus anſwered, You ſhall find it in my my Treatise against Mr. Paletz, whereat all the assistants (looking one upon another) began for to smile and laugh.

16. Holiness cometh not by sitting, but by following.

The sixteenth Article: The Pope is most holy, not because he doth supply and hold the room and place of Saint Peter, but because he hath great revenues. I answer, that my words are mutilate, for thus it is written, He is not most holy, because he is called the Vicar of St. Peter, or because he hath great and large possessions; but if he be the follower of Jesus Christ in humility, gentleness, patience, labour and travel, and in perfect love and charity.

17. The Cardinals do count it heresie, that they should be compelled to be followers of the Apostles.

The seventeenth Article: The Cardinals are not the manifest and true successors of the other Apostles of Jesus Christ, if they live not according to the fashion of the Apostles, keeping the commandments and ordinances of the Lord Jesus, I answer, that it is thus written in my Book, and it proveth it self sufficiently: For if they enter in by another way than by the door which is the Lord Jesus, they be murtherers and thieves.

Then said the Cardinal of Cambray, Behold both this and all other Articles before rehearsed, he hath written much more detestable things in his Book than are presented in his Articles. Truly John Hus thou hast kept no order in thy Sermons and writings. Had it not been your part to have applied your Sermons according to your audience? or to what purpose was it, or what did it profit you before the people to preach against the Cardinals, when as none of them were present? It had been meeter for you to have told them their faults before them all, than before the Laity. Then answered John Hus, Reverend Father, forsomuch as I did see many Priests and other learned men, present at my Sermons, for their sakes I spake those words. Then said the Cardinal, thou hast done very ill, for by such kind of talk thou hast disturbed and troubled the whole state of the Church.

18. John Hus condemneth the cruelty of the Prelates in seeking the death of hereticks.

The eighteenth Article: An Heretick ought not to be committed to the secular powers to be put to death, for it is sufficient only that he abide and suffer the Ecclesiastical censure. These are my words, That they might be ashamed of their cruel sentence and judgment, specially forsomuch as Jesus Christ, Bishop both of the Old and New Testament, would not judg such as were disobedient by civil judgment, neither condemn them to bodily death. As touching the first point, it may evidently be seen in the twelfth Chapter of St. Luke. And for the second it appeareth also by the woman which was taken in adultery, of whom it is spoken in the eighth Chapter of St. John. And it is said in the eighteenth Chapter of Saint Matthew. If thy brother have offended thee, &c. Mark therefore what I do say, That an heretick whatsoever he be, ought first to be instructed and taught with Christian love and gentleness by the holy Scriptures, and by the reasons drawn and taken out of the same, as St. Augustine and others have done, disputing against the Hereticks. But if there were any which after all these gentle and loving admonitions and instructions, would not cease from, or leave off their stiffness of opinions, but obstinately resist against the truth, such, I say, ought to suffer corporal or bodily punishment.

As soon as John Hus had spoken those things, the Judges read in his Book a certain clause, wherein he seemed grievously to inveigh against them which delivered an Heretick unto the secular power, not being confuted or convicted of heresie, and compared them unto the High Priests, Scribes and Pharisees, which said unto Pilate, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death, and delivered Christ unto him: and yet notwithstanding, according unto Christs own witness, they were greater murtherers than Pilate. For he, said Christ, which hath delivered me unto thee, hath committed the greatest offence. Then the Cardinals and Bishops made a great noise, and demanded of John Hus, saying, Who are they that thou dost compare or assimule unto the Pharisees? Then he said, all those which delivered up any innocent unto the civil sword, as the Scribes and Pharisees delivered Jesus Christ unto Pilate. No, no, said they again; for all that, you spake here of Doctors. And the Cardinal of Cambray, according to his accustomed manner, said, Truly they which have made and gathered these Articles, have used great lenity and gentleness, for his writings are much more detestable & horrible.

The betraying and condemning of Innocents. And how could this Bishop of Cambray understand the Books of John Hus being written in Bohemian speech, which he understood not?

19. The nineteenth Article: The Nobles of the world ought to constrain and compel the Ministers of the Church to observe and keep the Law of Jesus Christ. I answer, that it standeth thus word for word in my Book. Those which be on our part do preach and affirm that the Church militant, according to the parts which the Lord hath ordained, is divided, and consisteth in these parts: That is to say, Ministers of the Church, which should keep purely and sincerely the ordinances and commandments of the Son of God, and the Nobles of the world that should compel and drive them to keep the commandments of Jesus Christ, and of the common people, serving to both these parts and ends, according to the institution and ordinance of Jesus Christ.

The Church militant standeth in three parts. 1. Ministers. 2. Nobles. 3. Commons.

20. The twentieth Article: The Ecclesiastical obedience is a kind of obedience, which the Priests and Monks have invented without any express authority of the Holy Scriptures. I answer and confess, that those words are thus written in my Book. I say that there be three kinds of obedience, Spiritual, Secular, and Ecclesiastical. The Spiritual obedience is that which is only due according to the Law and Ordinance of God, under the which the Apostles of Jesus Christ did live, and all Christians ought to live. The Secular obedience is that which is due according to the Civil Laws and Ordinances. The Ecclesiastical obedience is such as the Priests have invented, without any express authority of Scripture. The first kind of obedience doth utterly exclude from it all evil, as well on his part which giveth the commandment, as on his also which doth obey the same. And of this obedience it is spoken in Deut. 24. Thou shalt do all that which the Priests of the kindred of Levi shall teach and instruct thee, according as I have commanded them.

Three kinds of obedience: 1. Spiritual. 2. Secular. 3. Ecclesiastical.

True obedience ruled by Gods commandment.

Deut. 24.

21. The twenty first Article: He that is Excommunicated by the Pope, if he refuse and forsake the judgment of the Pope, and the General Council, and appealeth unto Jesus Christ, after he hath made his appellation, all the Excommunications and Curses of the Pope cannot annoy or hurt him. I answer, that I do not acknowledg this Proposition; but indeed I did make my complaint in my Book, that they had both done me, and such as favoured me great wrong, and that they refuse to hear me in the Popes Court. For after the death of one Pope, I did appeal to his Successor, and all that did profit me nothing. And to appeal from the Pope to the Council it were too long; and that were even as much as if a man in trouble should seek an uncertain remedy. And therefore last of all I have appealed to the Head of the Church my Lord Jesus Christ, for he is much more excellent and better than any Pope, to discuss and determine matters and causes, forsomuch as he cannot err, neither yet deny justice to him that doth ask or require it in a just cause, neither can he condemn the innocent. Then spake the Cardinal of Cambray unto him, and said, Wilt thou presume above St. Paul, who appealed unto the Emperor, and not unto Jesus Christ? John Hus answered, Forsomuch then as I am the first that do it, am I therefore to be reputed and counted an Heretick? And yet notwithstanding St. Paul did not appeal unto the Emperor of his own motion or will, but by the will of Christ, which spake unto him by revelation, and said, Be firm and constant for thou must go unto Rome. And as he was about to rehearse his Appeal again, they mocked him.

Appealing unto Christ.

Appealing unto Christ forbidden by the Cardinal of Cambray.

¶ Forsomuch as mention here is made of the Appeal of the said Hus, it seemeth good here to shew the manner and form thereof.

The Copy and tenor of the Appeal of J. Hus.

The Appeal of John Hus from a Pope John 23. unto Christ.

FOr asmuch as the most mighty Lord, one in essence, three in person, is both the chief and first, and also the last, and uttermost refuge of all those which are oppressed, and that he is the God which defendeth verity and truth throughout all generations, doing justice to such as be wronged, being ready and at hand to all those which call upon him in verity and truth, unbinding those that are bound, and fulfilling the desires of all those which honour and fear him; defending and keeping all those that love him, and utterly destroying and bringing to ruin the stiff-necked and unpenitent sinner, and that the Lord Jesus Christ very God and man, being in great anguish, compassed in with the Priests, Scribes and Pharisees, wicked Judges and witnesses, willing by the most bitter and ignominious death to redeem the children of God, chosen before the foundation of the world, from everlasting damnation; hath left behind him this godly example for a memory unto them which should come after him, to the intent they should commit mit all their cauſes into the hands of God, who can do all things, and knoweth and ſeeth all things, ſaying in this manner: O Lord, behold my affliction, for my enemy hath prepared himſelf againſt me, and thou art my protector and defender. O Lord, thou haſt given me underſtanding, and I have acknowledged thee, thou haſt opened unto me all their enterpriſes; and for mine own part, I have been as a meek lamb which is led unto ſacrifice, and have not reſiſted againſt them. They have wrought their enterpriſes upon me, ſaying, Let us put wood in his bread, and let us baniſh him out of the land of the living, that his name be no more ſpoken of nor had in memory. But thou O Lord of hoſts, which judgeſt juſtly, and ſeeſt the devices and imaginations of their hearts, haſten thee to take vengeance upon them, for I have manifeſted my cauſe unto thee, forſomuch as the number of thoſe which trouble me is great, and have counſelled together, ſaying, The Lord hath forſaken him, purſue him and catch him. O Lord my God, behold their doings, for thou art my patience; deliver me from mine enemies, for thou art my God; do not ſeparate thy ſelf far from me, forſomuch as tribulation is at hand, and there is no man which will ſuccour me. My God, my God, look down upon me, wherefore haſt thou forſaken me? So many dogs have compaſſed me in, and the company of the wicked have beſieged me round about, for they have ſpoken againſt me with deceiful tongues, and have compaſſed me in with words full of deſpite, and have inforced me without cauſe. Inſtead of love towards me they have ſlandered me, and have recompenced me with evil for good, and in place of charity they have conceived hatred againſt me.

The fervent complaint and prayer of Chriſt againſt wicked Judges.

After the example of Chriſt he maketh his prayer to God.

Wherefore behold, I ſtaying my ſelf upon this moſt holy and fruitful example of my Saviour and Redeemer, do appeal before God for this my grief and hard oppreſſion, from this moſt wicked ſentence and judgment, and the Excommunication determined by the Biſhops, Scribes, Phariſees, and Judges, which ſit in Moſes ſeat, and reſign my cauſe wholly unto him; ſo as the holy Patriarch of Conſtantinople, John Chryſoſtom, appealed twice from the Council of the Biſhops and Clergy; and Andrew Biſhop of Prague, and Robert Biſhop of Lincoln, appealed unto the ſoveraign and moſt juſt Judg, the which is not defiled with cruelty, neither can he be corrupted with gifts and rewards, neither yet be deceived by falſe witneſs. Alſo I deſire greatly that all the faithful ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt, and eſpecially the Princes, Barons, Knights, Eſquires, and all other which inhabit our Country of Boheme, ſhould underſtand and know theſe things, and have compaſſion upon me, which am ſo grievouſly oppreſſed by the Excommunication which is out againſt me, the which was obtained and gotten by the inſtigation and procurement of Michael de Cauſis my great enemy, and by the conſent and furtherance of the Canons of the Cathedral Church of Prague, and given and granted out by Peter of Saint Angels, Dean of the Church of Rome, and Cardinal, and alſo ordained Judg by Pope John XXIII, who hath continued almoſt theſe two years, and would give no audience unto my Advocates and Procurators, which they ought not to deny, (no not to a Jew or Pagan, or to any heretick whatſoever he were) neither yet would he receive any reaſonable excuſe, for that I did not appear perſonally, neither would he accept the teſtimonials of the whole Univerſity of Prague with the ſeal hanging at it, or the witneſs of the ſworn Notaries, and ſuch as were called unto witneſs. By this all men may evidently perceive that I have not incurred any fault or crime of contumacy or diſobedience, forſomuch as that I did not appear in the Court of Rome, was not for any contempt, but for reaſonable cauſes.

A godly prayer of John Hus.

Chryſoſtome. Andrew of Prigue. Robert Biſhop of Lincoln appealeth from men to Chriſt.

And moreover, forſomuch as they had laid ambuſhments for me on every ſide by ways where I ſhould paſs, and alſo becauſe the perils and dangers of others have made me the more circumſpect and adviſed: And forſomuch as my procurers were willing and contented to bind themſelves even to abide the puniſhment of the fire to anſwer to all ſuch as would oppoſe or lay any thing againſt me in the Court of Rome; as alſo becauſe they did impriſon my lawful procurator in the ſaid Court, without any cauſe, demerit, or fault, as I ſuppoſe. Forſomuch then as the order and diſpoſition of all ancient Laws as well Divine of the Old and New Teſtament, as alſo of the Canon Laws, is this, that the Judges ſhould reſort unto the place where the crime or fault is committed or done, and there to enquire of all ſuch crimes as ſhall be objected and laid againſt him which is accuſed or ſlandered, and that of ſuch men as by converſation have ſome knowledg or underſtanding of the party ſo accuſed (the which may not be the evil willers or enemies of him which is ſo accuſed or ſlandered; but muſt be men of an honeſt converſation, no common quarrel-pickers or accuſers, but fervent lovers of the Law of God:) and finally, that there ſhould be a fit and meet place appointed, whither as the accuſed party might without danger or peril, reſort or come, and that the judg and witneſſes ſhould not be enemies unto him that is accuſed. And alſo forſomuch as it is manifeſt, that all theſe conditions were wanting and lacking, as touching my appearance for the ſafeguard of my life, I am excuſed before God from the frivolous pretended obſtinacy and excommunication. Whereupon I John Hus do preſent and offer this my appeal unto my Lord Jeſus Chriſt, my juſt Judg, who knoweth and defendeth, and juſtly judgeth every mans juſt and true cauſe.

John Hus complaineth of Michael de Cauſis his great enemy.

The Procurator of John Hus laid in priſon at Rome

The Pope proved to do againſt his own Canon-law.

The twenty ſecond Article. A vicious and naughty man liveth viciouſly and naughtily; but a vertuous and godly man liveth vertuouſly and godly. I anſwer, My words are theſe, That the diviſion of all humane works is in two parties, that is, that they be either vertuous or vicious; forſomuch as it doth appear, that if any man be vertuous and godly, and that he do any thing, he doth it vertuouſly and godly. And contrariwiſe if a man be vicious and naught, that which he doth is vicious and naught. For as vice, which is called crime or offence, and thereby underſtand deadly ſin, doth univerſally infect or deprave all the acts and doings of the ſubject, that is, of the man which doth them: ſo likewiſe vertue and godlineſs doth quicken all the acts and doings of the vertuous and godly man; inſomuch that he being in the ſtate of grace is ſaid to pray and do good works even ſleeping, as it were by a certain means working; as St. Auguſtine, St. Gregory, and divers others affirm. And it appeareth in the ſixth Chapter of Luke, If thine eye, that is to ſay, the mind or intention be ſimple, not depraved with the perverſneſs of any ſin or offence, all the whole body, that is to ſay, all the acts and doings ſhall be clear and ſhining, that is, acceptable and grateful unto God. But if thine eye be evil, the whole body is darkened. And in the ſecond to the Corinthians, tenth Chapter, All things that you do, do them to the glory of God. And likewiſe in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and laſt Chapter, it is ſaid, Let all your doings be done with charity. Wherefore all kind of life and living according unto charity, is vertuous and godly; and if it be without charity, it is vicious and evil. This ſaying may well be proved out of the 23 Chapter of Deuteronomy, where God ſpeaketh to the people, that he that keepeth his Commandments is bleſſed in the houſe and in the field, out-going and in-coming, ſleeping and waking, but he that doth not keep his commandments is accurſed in the houſe, and in the fields, in going out and in coming in, ſleeping and waking, &c. The ſame alſo is evident by St. Auguſtine upon the Pſalm where he writeth, that a good man in all his doings doth praiſe the Lord. And Gregory ſaith, That the ſleep of Saints and holy men doth not lack their merit. How much more then his doings which proceed of good zeal, be not without reward, and conſequently be vertuous and good? And contrariwiſe it is underſtood of him which is in deadly ſin, of whom it is ſpoken in the Law, that whatſoever the unclean than doth touch, is made unclean.

22. A knot found in a ruſh.

The tree that is good bringeth forth good fruit.

2 Cor. 10

1 Cor. ult.

Deut. 23.

To this end doth that alſo appertain which is before repeated out of the firſt of Malachi. And Gregory in the firſt Book and firſt Queſtion ſaith, We do defile the Bread, which is the Body of Chriſt, when as we come unworthily to the Table, and when we being defiled, do drink his Blood. And St. Auguſtine upon the 146th Pſalm ſaith, If thou doſt exceed the due meaſure of nature, and doſt not abſtain from gluttony, but gorge thy ſelf up with drunkenneſs, whatſoever laud and praiſe thy tongue doth ſpeak of the grace and favour of God, thy life doth blaſpheme the ſame. When he had made an end of this article, the Cardinal of Cambray ſaid, The Scripture ſaith that we be all ſinners. And again, if we ſay we have no ſin, we deceive our ſelves, and ſo we ſhould always live in deadly ſin. John Hus anſwered, The Scripture ſpeaketh in that place of venial ſins, the which do not utterly expell or put away the habit of vertue from a man, but do aſſociate themſelves together.

Cardinal of Cambray objecteth.

John Hus anſwereth.

KING Hen. 5. together. And a certain Engliſhman whoſe name was W. ſaid, But thoſe ſins do not aſſociate themſelves with any act morally good. John Hus alledged again S. Auguſtines place upon 146 Pſal. the which when he rehearſed, they all with one mouth ſaid, What makes this to the purpoſe?

23. Forbidding to Preach whether it ought to be obeyed.

The twenty third Article. The Miniſter of Chriſt living according to his Law, and having the knowledge and underſtanding of the Scriptures, and an earneſt deſire to edifie the people, ought to preach; notwithſtanding the pretended Excommunication of the Pope. And moreover, if the Pope, or any other Ruler, do forbid any Prieſt or Miniſter ſo diſpoſed to Preach, that he ought not to obey him. I Anſwer, that theſe are my words; That albeit the Excommunication were either threatned or come out againſt him, in ſuch ſort that a Chriſtian ought not to do the Commandments of Chriſt, it appeareth by the words of Saint Peter, and the other Apoſtles, That we ought rather to obey God then man. Whereupon it followeth, that the Miniſter of Chriſt living according unto his Law, &c. ought to preach notwithſtanding any pretended Excommunication. For it is evident, That it is commanded unto the Miniſters of the Church to Preach the Word of God, Acts 5. God hath commanded us to preach and teſtifie unto the people, as by divers other places of the Scripture, and the holy Fathers rehearſed in my Treatiſe, it doth appear more at large. The ſecond part of this Article followeth in my Treatiſe in this manner.

Preaching and Almsgiving be not works indifferent, but duties and commandments. To forbid a Miniſter to Preach, and to forbid a rich man to give Alms, is both one.

By this it appeareth, that for a Miniſter to Preach, and a rich Man to give Alms, are not indifferent Works, but Duties and Commandments. Whereby it is further evident, that if the Pope, or any other Ruler of the Church, do command any Miniſter diſpoſed to Preach, not to Preach, or a rich Man diſpoſed to give Alms, not to give, that they ought not to obey him. And he added moreover, to the intent that you may underſtand me the better, I call that a pretended Excommunication, the which is unjuſtly diſordered and given forth, contrary to the order of the Law and Gods Commandments. For the which, the meet Miniſter appointed thereunto, ought not to ceaſe from Preaching, neither yet to fear damnation.

Then they objected unto him, that he had ſaid, that ſuch kind of Excommunications were rather Bleſſings. Verily, ſaid John Hus, even ſo I do now ſay again, that every Excommunication, by the which a man is unjuſtly Excommunicate, is unto him a Bleſſing before God; according to that ſaying of the Prophet, I will curſe where as you bleſs: and contrariwiſe, they ſhalt curſe, but thou, O Lord, ſhall bleſs. Then the Cardinal of Florence, which had always a Notary ready at his hand to write ſuch things as he commanded him, ſaid, The Law is, that every Excommunication, be it never ſo unjuſt, ought to be feared. It is true, ſaid John Hus; for I do remember eight Cauſes, for the which Excommunication ought to be feared. Then ſaid the Cardinal: Are there no more but eight? It may be, ſaid John Hus, that there be more.

How the Popes Curſings are Bleſſings.

The Cardinal of Florence with his Notary.

Eight cauſes why Excommunication ought to be feared.

24. A Miniſter once admitted, is more bound to Preach, than to do any other work of mercy; the Popes prohibition notwithſtanding.

The twenty fourth Article. Every man which is admitted unto the Miniſtery of the Church, receiveth alſo by ſpecial commandment the Office of a Preacher, and ought to execute and fulfil that Commandment, notwithſtanding any Excommunication pretended to the contrary. The Anſwer: My words are theſe. Forſomuch as it doth appear by that which is aforeſaid, That whoſoever cometh or is admitted unto the Miniſtery, receiveth alſo by eſpecial Commandment the Office of Preaching, he ought to fulfil that Commandment, any Excommunication to the contrary pretended notwithſtanding. Alſo no Chriſtian ought to doubt, but that a man ſufficiently inſtructed in Learning, is more bound to counſel and inſtruct the ignorant, to teach thoſe which are in doubt, to chaſtiſe thoſe which are unruly, and to remit and forgive thoſe that do him Injury, than to do any other works of mercy. Forſomuch then as he that is rich and hath ſufficient, is bound under the pain of damnation, to miniſter and give corporal and bodily Alms, as appeareth in the five and twentieth Chapter of Matthew; How much more is he bound to do Spiritual Alms?

25. Cenſures of the Popes Church multiply the Popes covetouſneſs.

The twenty fifth Article. The Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures are Antichriſtian, ſuch as the Clergy have invented for their own preferment, and for the bondage and ſervitude of the common people. Whereby if the Laity be not obedient unto the Clergy at their will and pleaſure, it doth multiply their covetouſneſs, defendeth their malice, and prepareth a way for Antichriſt. Whereby it is an evident ſign and token, that ſuch Cenſures proceed from Antichriſt; the which Cenſures in their Proceſſes they do call Fulminations or Lightnings, whereby the Clergy doth chiefly proceed againſt ſuch as do manifeſt and open the wickedneſs of Antichriſt, which thruſt themſelves into the Office of the Clergy. Theſe things are contained in the laſt Chapter of his Treatiſe of the Church. I Anſwer, and I deny that it was in that form. But the matter thereof is largely handled in the 23d Chapter. And in the Examination of the Audience, they have gathered certain Clauſes moſt contrary thereunto. The which when they had read, the Cardinal of Cambray renewed his old Song, ſaying; Truly theſe are much more grievous and offenſive, than the Articles which are gathered.

26. Chriſt interdicted none, but prayed for all.

The twenty ſixth Article. There ought no interdictment to be appointed unto the People, forſomuch as Chriſt the high Biſhop, neither for John Baptiſt, neither for any injury that was done unto him, did make any interdictment. My words are theſe: When as I complained, that for one Miniſters ſake, an Interdictment was given out, and thereby all good men ceas'd from the laud and praiſe of God. And Chriſt the high Biſhop, notwithſtanding that the Prophet was taken and kept in Priſon, than whom there was no greater amongſt the Children of Men, did not give out any Curſe or Interdictment, no not when as Herod beheaded him; neither when as he himſelf was ſpoiled, beaten, and blaſphemed of the Souldiers, Scribes and Phariſees, did he then curſe them, but prayed for them, and taught his Diſciples to do the ſame, as it appeareth in the fifth Chapter of S. Matthew. And Chriſts firſt Vicar following the ſame Doctrine and Learning, ſaith in his firſt Epiſtle of Saint Peter, and the ſecond Chapter, Hereunto are ye called: for Chriſt hath ſuffered for us, leaving us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps, who when he was curſed and evil ſpoken of, did not curſe again. And Saint Paul following the ſame order and way in the twelfth Chapter of the Romans, ſaith, Bleſs them that perſecute you. There were beſides theſe, many other places of Scripture recited in that Book; but they being omitted, theſe were only rehearſed, which did help or prevail to ſtir up or move the Judges minds. 1 Pet. 2. Rom. 12.

And theſe are the Articles which are alledged out of John Hus his Book, entituled, Of the Church.

Other Articles moreover out of his other Books were collected, and forced againſt him: Firſt, out of his Treatiſe written againſt Steven Paletz, to the number of ſeven Articles. Alſo ſix other Articles ſtrained out of his Treatiſe againſt Staniſlaus Znoyma. Whereunto his Anſwers likewiſe be adjoyned, not unfruitful to be read.

¶ Here followeth ſeven Articles, which are ſaid to be drawn out of his Treatiſe which he wrote againſt Stephen Paletz.

Articles drawn out of the Treatiſe written againſt Stephen Paletz.

THe firſt Article. If the Pope, Biſhop, or Prelate, be in deadly ſin, he is then no Pope, Biſhop, nor Prelate. The Anſwer: I grant thereunto, and I ſend you unto Saint Auguſtine, Jerome, Chryſoſtome, Gregory, Cyprian, and Bernard; the which do ſay moreover, That whoſoever is in deadly ſin, is no true Chriſtian, how much leſs then is he Pope, or Biſhop? Of whom it is ſpoken by the Prophet Amos, in his eighth Chapter, They have reigned and ruled, and not through me; they became Princes, and I knew them not, &c. But afterward I do grant, that a wicked Pope, Biſhop, or Prieſt, is an unworthy Miniſter of the Sacrament, by whom God doth Baptize, Conſecrate, or otherwiſe work to the profit of his Church; and this is largely handled in the Text of the Book by the Authority of the holy Doctors, for even he which is in deadly ſin, is not worthily a King before God, as appeareth in the firſt Book of Kings, the fifteenth Chapter; Whereas God ſaith unto Saul by the Prophet Samuel, ſaying, Forſomuch as thou haſt refuſed and caſt off my word, I will alſo refuſe and caſt thee off, that thou ſhalt be no more King. Whilſt theſe things were thus intreating, the Emperor looking out of a certain Window of the Cloyſter, accompanied with the County Palatine, and the Burgrave of Norenberg, conferring and talking much of John Hus, at length he ſaid, That there was never a worſe or more pernicious Heretick than he. In the mean while, when John Hus had ſpoken theſe Words as touching the unworthy King, by and by the Emperor was called, and he was commanded to repeat thoſe words again; which after that he had done, his duty therein being conſidered, the Emperor anſwered: No man, ſaith he, doth live without fault. Then the Cardinal of Cambray being in a great fury, ſaid, Is it not enough for thee that thou doſt contemn and deſpiſe the Eccleſiaſtical State, and goeſt about by thy Writings and Doctrine to perturb and trouble the ſame, but that now alſo thou wilt attempt to throw Kings out of their State and Dignity? Then Paletz began to alledge the Laws, whereby he would prove that Saul was King, even when thoſe words were ſpoken by Samuel, and therefore that David did forbid that Saul ſhould not be ſlain, not for the holineſs of his life, the which there was none in him, but for the holineſs of his Anointing. And when as John Hus repeated out of S. Cyprian, that he did take upon him the name of Chriſtianity in vain, which did not follow Chriſt in his living: Paletz anſwered, Behold and ſee what a folly is in this Man, which alledgeth thoſe things which make nothing for the purpoſe; for albeit any man be not a true Chriſtian, is he not therefore true Pope, Biſhop, or King? When as theſe are names of Office, and to be a Chriſtian, is a name of merit and deſert; and ſo may any man be a true Pope, Biſhop, or King, although he be no true Chriſtian. Then ſaid John Hus, If Pope John the three and twentieth were a true Pope, wherefore have ye deprived him of his Office? The Emperor anſwered, The Lords of the Council have now lately agreed thereupon, that he was true Pope; but for his notorious and manifeſt evil doings, wherewithal he did offend and trouble the Church of God, and did ſpoil and bring to ruine the power thereof, he is rejected and caſt out of his Office.

The Emperors judgment of John Hus.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

The ſecond Article. The grace of Predeſtination is the Bond whereby the body of the Church, and every part and member thereof is firmly knit and joyned unto the Head. The anſwer: I acknowledge this Article to be mine, and it is proved in the Text out of the eighth Chapter of the Romans, Who ſhall ſeparate us from the charity and love of Chriſt, &c? and in the tenth Chapter of John, My ſheep hear my voice; and I know them, and they follow me, and I give them eternal life, neither ſhall they periſh eternally, neither is there any man which ſhall take them out of my hands. This is the knot of the Body of the Church, and of our Spiritual Head Chriſt, underſtanding the Church to be the congregation of the Predeſtinate.

The third Article. If the Pope be a wicked man, and ſpecially a Reprobate, then even as Judas the Apoſtle, he is a Devil, a Thief, and the Son of perdition, and not the Head of the holy Militant Church, forſomuch as he is no part or member thereof. The Anſwer: My words are thus, If the Pope be an evil or wicked man, and ſpecially if he be a Reprobate; then even as Judas, ſo is he a Devil, a Thief, and the Son of perdition. How then is he the head of the holy Militant Church? Whereas he is not truly any Member, or part thereof; for if he were a Member of the holy Church, then ſhould he be alſo a Member of Chriſt, and if he were a Member of Chriſt, then ſhould he cleave and ſtick unto Chriſt by the grace of predeſtination and preſent juſtice, and ſhould be one Spirit with God, as the Apoſtle ſaith in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, the ſixth Chapter, Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt?

The fourth Article. An evil Pope or Prelate, or Reprobate is no true Paſtor, but a Thief and a Robber. The Anſwer. The Text of my Book is thus: If he be evil or wicked, then is he a Hireling, of whom Chriſt ſpeaketh, He is no Shepherd, neither are the Sheep his own. Therefore when he ſeeth the Wolf coming, he runneth away and forſaketh the ſheep: and ſo finally doth every wicked and reprobate man. Therefore every ſuch Reprobate, or wicked Pope or Prelate, is no true Paſtor; but a very Thief and a Robber, as is more at large proved in my Book. Then ſaid John Hus, I do ſo limit all things, that ſuch as touching their deſert, are not truly and worthily Popes and Shepherds before God, but as touching their office and reputation of men, they are Popes, Paſtors, and Prieſts. KING 1 Hen. 5.

Then a certain Man riſing up behind John Hus, clothed all in Silk, ſaid, My Lords, take heed leſt that John Hus deceive both you and himſelf with theſe his Gloſſes, and look whether theſe things be in his Book or not; for of late, I had diſputation with him upon theſe Articles, in the which I ſaid, that a wicked Pope, &c. was no Pope, as touching merit and deſert, but as touching his Office he was truly Pope. Whereupon he uſed theſe Gloſſes which he had heard of me, and did not take them out of his Book. Then John Hus, turning himſelf unto him, ſaid, Did you not hear that it was ſo read out of my Book? and this did eaſily appear in John the twenty third, whether he were true Pope, or a very Thief and Robber. Then the Biſhops and Cardinals looking one upon another, ſaid, That he was a true Pope, and laughed John Hus to ſcorn.

The fifth Article. The Pope is not, neither ought to be called according unto his Office, Moſt Holy; for then the King ought alſo to be called Moſt Holy, according to his Office. Alſo the Tormentors, Lictors, and Devils ought alſo to be called Holy. The Anſwer. My words are otherwiſe placed, in this manner; So ought a feigner ſay, that if any man be a moſt holy Father, then he doth moſt holily obſerve and keep his Fatherlineſs: and if he be a naughty and wicked Father, then doth he moſt wickedly keep the ſame. Likewiſe, if the Biſhop be moſt holy, then is he alſo moſt good; and when as he ſaith, that he is Pope, it is the name of his Office.

Whereupon it followeth, That the man which is Pope, being an evil and reprobate man, is a moſt holy man; and conſequently by that his Office he is moſt good. And foraſmuch as no man can be good by his Office, except he do exerciſe and uſe the ſame his Office very well; it followeth, that if the Pope be an evil and reprobate man, he cannot exerciſe or uſe his Office his well. Forſomuch as he cannot uſe the Office well, except he be morally good, Matthew 12. How can you ſpeak good things, when you your ſelves are evil? And immediately after it followeth, If the Pope by reaſon of his Office be called, Moſt Holy, wherefore ſhould not the King of Romans be called Moſt Holy, by reaſon of his Office and Dignity? When as the King, according to S. Auguſtines mind, repreſenteth the Deity and Godhead of Chriſt, and the Prieſt repreſenteth only his Humanity. Wherefore alſo ſhould not Judges, yea, even Tormenters be called Holy, forſomuch as they have their Office by miniſtring unto the Church of Chriſt? Theſe things are more at large diſcourſed in my Book; but I cannot find or know, ſaith John Hus, any Foundation whereby I ſhould call the Pope moſt Holy, when as this is only ſpoken of Chriſt: Thou only art moſt holy: Thou only art the Lord, &c. Should I then truly call the Pope moſt Holy?

The ſixth Article. If the Pope live contrary unto Chriſt, albeit he be lawfully and canonically elect and choſen, according to humane election, yet doth he aſcend and come another way than by Chriſt. The Anſwer. The Text is thus: If the Pope live contrary unto Chriſt in pride and avarice, how then doth he not aſcend and come in another way into the Sheepfold, than by the lowly and meek door our Lord Jeſus Chriſt? But admit, as you ſay, that he did aſcend by lawful Election, the which I call an election principally made of God, and not according unto the common and vulgar conſtitution and ordinances of men; yet for all that, it is affirmed and proved, that he ſhould aſcend and come in another way; for Judas Iſcariot was truly and lawfully choſen of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto his Biſhoprick, as Chriſt ſaith in the ſixth of John, And yet he came in another way into the ſheepfold, and was a thief, and a devil, and the ſon of perdition. Did he not come in another way? when as our Saviour ſpake thus of him, He that eateth bread with me, ſhall lift up his heel againſt me.

The

The ſame alſo is proved by S. Bernard unto Pope Eugenius. Then ſaid Paletz, Behold the fury and madneſs of this Man; for what more furious or mad thing can there be, than to ſay, Judas is choſen by Chriſt, and notwithſtanding he did aſcend another way, and not by Chriſt? John Hus anſwered, verily both parts are true, that he was elect and choſen by Chriſt, and alſo that he did aſcend, and came in another way, for he was a Thief, a Devil, and the ſon of Perdition. Then ſaid Paletz, Cannot a man be truly and lawfully choſen Pope, or Biſhop, and afterward live contrary unto Chriſt? And that notwithſtanding, he doth not aſcend any other ways. But I, ſaid John Hus, do ſay, that whoſoever doth enter into any Biſhoprick, or like Office by Simony, not to the intent to labor and travel in the Church of God, but rather to live delicately, voluptuouſly and unrighteouſly, and to the intent to advance himſelf with all kind of Pride, every ſuch man aſcendeth and cometh up by another way, and according unto the Goſpel, he is a thief and a robber.

The ſeventh Article. The condemnation of the forty five Articles of John Wickliff made by the Doctors, is unreaſonable and wicked, and the cauſe by them alledged is feigned and untrue; that is to ſay, That none of thoſe Articles are Catholick, but that every of them be either Heretical, Erroneous or Offenſive. The Anſwer: I have written it thus in my Treatiſe; The forty and five Articles are condemned for this cauſe, that none of thoſe forty and five is a Catholick Article, but each of them is either Heretical, Erroneous or Offenſive.

O Mr. Doctor, where is your proof? you feign a cauſe which you do not prove, &c. as it appeareth more at large in my Treatiſe. Then ſaid the Cardinal of Cambray, John Hus, thou didſt ſay that thou wouldſt not defend any Error of John Wickliffs. And now it appeareth in your Books, that you have openly defended his Articles. John Hus anſwered, Reverend Father, even as I ſaid before, ſo do I now ſay again, that I will not defend any Errors of John Wickliffs, neither of any other mans: but forſomuch as it ſeemed unto me to be againſt Conſcience, ſimply to conſent unto the condemnation of them, no Scripture being alledged or brought contrary and againſt them, thereupon I would not conſent or agree unto the condemnation of them: And foraſmuch as the reaſon which is copulative cannot be verified in every point, according to every part thereof.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

Now there remain ſix Articles of thirty nine. Theſe are ſaid to be drawn out of another Treatiſe which he wrote againſt Staniſlaus de Znoyma.

Articles drawn out of his Treatiſe written againſt Staniſlaus de Znoyma.

1. The firſt Article. No man is lawfully elect or choſen, in that the Electors, or the greater part of them, have conſented with a lively voice, according to the cuſtom of men to elect and chuſe any perſon, or that he is thereby the manifeſt and true ſucceſſor of Chriſt, or Vicar of Peter in the Eccleſiaſtical Office, but in that that any man doth moſt abundantly work meritoriouſly to the profit of the Church, he hath thereby more abundant power given him of God thereunto. The Anſwer: Theſe things which follow are alſo written in my Book. It ſtandeth in the power and hands of wicked Electors, to chuſe a Woman into the Eccleſiaſtical office, as it appeareth by the election of Agnes, which was called John, who held and occupied the Popes place and dignity, by the ſpace of two years and more.

It may alſo be, that they do chuſe a Thief, a Murderer or a Devil, and conſequently they may alſo elect and chuſe Antichriſt.

It may alſo be that for love, covetouſneſs, or hatred, they do chuſe ſome perſon whom God doth not allow. And it appeareth that that perſon is not lawfully elect and choſen; Inſomuch as the Electors, or the greater part of them, have conſented and agreed together according to the cuſtom of men, upon any perſon, or that he is thereby the manifeſt Succeſſor or Vicar of Peter the Apoſtle, or any other in the Eccleſiaſtical Office.

Therefore, they which moſt accordingly unto the Scripture do elect and chuſe, revelation being ſet apart, do only pronounce and determine by ſome probable reaſon upon him they do elect and chuſe; whereupon, whether the Electors do ſo chuſe good or evil, we ought to give credit unto the works of him that is choſen; for in that point that any man doth moſt abundantly work meritoriouſly to the profit of the Church, he hath thereby more abundant power given him of God thereunto. And hereupon ſaith Chriſt, in John 10. Give credit unto works.

The ſecond Article. The Pope being a Reprobate, is not the Head of the holy Church of God. The Anſwer, I wrote it thus in my Treatiſe, that I would willingly receive a probable and effectual reaſon of the Doctor, how this queſtion is contrary to the Faith, to ſay, That if the Pope be a Reprobate, how is he the Head of the Holy Church? Behold, the Truth cannot decay or fail in Diſputation, for did Chriſt diſpute againſt the Faith, when he demanded of the Scribes and Phariſees, Matthew 12. Ye ſtock and off-ſpring of vipers, how can ye ſpeak good things, when you your ſelves are wicked and evil? And behold, I demand of the Scribes, if the Pope be a Reprobate, and the ſtock of vipers, how is he the head of the holy Church of God, that the Scribes and Phariſees, which were in the Council-houſe of Prague, may make anſwer hereunto? For it is more poſſible that a reprobate man ſhould ſpeak good things, forſomuch as he may be in ſtate of Grace according unto preſent Juſtice, than to be the Head of the holy Church of God.

Alſo in the fifth of John, our Saviour complaineth of the Jews, ſaying, How can you believe which do ſeek for glory amongſt your ſelves, and do not ſeek for the glory that cometh only of God? And I likewiſe do complain, how that if the Pope be a Reprobate; can he be the Head of the Church of God, which receiveth his glory of the World, and ſeeketh not for the glory of God? For it is more poſſible, that the Pope being a Reprobate ſhould believe, than that he ſhould be the Head of the Church of God; forſomuch as he taketh his glory of the World.

The third Article. There is no ſpark of apparance, that there ought to be one Head in the Spiritualty, to rule the Church, the which ſhould be always converſant with the Militant Church. The Anſwer, I do grant it. For what a conſequence is this. The King of Bobeme is head of the Kingdom of Boheme: Ergo, The Pope is Head of the whole Militant Church? Chriſt is the Head of the Spiritualty, ruling and governing the Militant Church by much more and greater neceſſity than Cæſar ought to rule the Temporalty. Forſomuch as Chriſt, which ſitteth on the right Hand of God the Father, doth neceſſarily rule the Militant Church as Head. And there is no ſpark of appearance that there ſhould be one Head in the Spiritualty ruling the Church, that ſhould always be converſant with the Militant Church, except ſome Infidel would heretically affirm, that the Militant Church ſhould have here a permanent and continual City or dwelling place, and not enquire and ſeek after that which is to come. It is alſo farther evident in my Book, how unconſequent the proportion of the ſimilitude is, for a reprobate Pope to be Head of the Militant Church, and a reprobate King to be Head of the Kingdom of Bobeme.

The fourth Article. Chriſt would better rule his Church by his true Apoſtles, diſperſed throughout the whole World, without ſuch monſtrous Heads. I Anſwer, That it is in my Book as here followeth, that albeit that the Doctor doth ſay, that the body of the Militant Church is oftentimes without a Head; yet notwithſtanding, we do verily believe that Chriſt Jeſus is the Head over every Church, ruling the ſame without lack or default, pouring upon the ſame a continual motion and ſenſe, even unto the later day: Neither can the Doctor give a reaſon why the Church, in the time of Agnes, by the ſpace of two years and five months, lived according to many Members of Chriſt in grace and favor, but that by the ſame reaſon the Church might be without a Head, by the ſpace of many years. Forſomuch as Chriſt ſhould better rule his Church by his true Diſciples diſperſed throughout the whole World, without ſuch monſtrous Heads. Then ſaid they all together, Behold, now he propheſieth. And John Hus again further proſecuting his former talk, ſaid, But I ſay that the Church in the time of the Apoſtles, was far better ruled and governed than now it is. And what doth let and hinder, that Chriſt ſhould not now alſo rule the ſame better by his true Diſciples, without ſuch monſtrous Heads as have been now a late? For behold, even at this preſent we have no ſuch head, and yet Chriſt ceaſeth not to rule his Church. When he had ſpoken theſe words, he was derided and mocked.

5. The fifth Article. Peter was no Univerſal Paſtor or Shepherd of the Sheep of Chriſt, much leſs is the Biſhop of Rome. The Anſwer, Thoſe words are not in my Book, but theſe which do follow. Secondly, It appeareth by the words of Chriſt, that he did not limit unto Peter for his Juriſdiction the whole World, no not one only Province. So likewiſe, neither unto any other of the Apoſtles. Notwithſtanding, certain of them walked through many Regions; and otherſome fewer, preaching and teaching the Kingdom of God, as Paul, which labored and travelled more than all the reſt, did corporally viſit and convert moſt Provinces, whereby it is lawful for any Apoſtle or his Vicar to convert and confirm as much people, or as many Provinces in the Faith of Chriſt, as they are able, neither is there any reſtraint of their Liberty or Juriſdiction, but only by diſability or inſufficiency.

The ſixth Article. The Apoſtles, and other faithful Prieſts of the Lord, have ſtoutly ruled the Church in all things neceſſary unto ſalvation, before the Office of the Pope was brought into the Church, and ſo would they very poſſibly do ſtill, if there were no Pope even unto the later day. Then they all cried out again and ſaid, Behold the Prophet. But John Hus ſaid, Verily it is true that the Apoſtles did rule the Church ſtoutly, before the Office of the Pope was brought into the Church. And certainly a great deal better than it is now ruled. And likewiſe may other faithful Men which do follow their ſteps do the ſame; for as now we have no Pope, and ſo peradventure it may continue and endure a year or more. Beſides this, were brought againſt him other nineteen Articles, objected unto him being in Priſon, which with his Anſwers to the ſame here likewiſe follow. Of the which Articles the firſt is this.

The firſt Article. Paul, according unto preſent Juſtice, was a Blaſphemer and none of the Church, and therewithal was in Grace, according unto Predeſtination of life everlaſting. The Anſwer: This propoſition is not in the Book, but this which followeth; Whereby it doth ſeem probable, that as Paul was both a Blaſphemer, according to preſent Juſtice, and therewithal alſo was a faithful Child of our holy Mother the Church, and in Grace according to Predeſtination of Life everlaſting: So Iſcariot was both in Grace, according unto preſent Juſtice, and was never of our holy Mother the Church, according to the Predeſtination of Life everlaſting, forſomuch as he lacked that Predeſtination. And ſo Iſcariot, albeit he was an Apoſtle, and a Biſhop of Chriſt, which is the name of his Office, yet was he never any part of the Univerſal Church.

The firſt Article. Paul how he was both a blaſphemer, and alſo a member of Chriſt.

The ſecond Article. Predeſtination. The ſecond Article. Whether Chriſt doth more love a Predeſtinate Man being ſinful, than any Reprobate in what grace poſſible ſoever he be. The Anſwer: My words are in the fourth Chapter of my Book intituled of the Church; and it is evident, that God doth more love any predeſtinate being ſinful, than any reprobate in what grace ſoever he be for the time: foraſmuch as he will, that the predeſtinate ſhall have perpetual bleſſedneſs, and the reprobate to have eternal fire. Wherefore God partly infinitely loving them both as his Creatures, yet he doth more love the predeſtinate, becauſe he giveth him greater grace, or a greater gift, that is to ſay, life everlaſting, which is greater and more excellent than only grace, according unto preſent Juſtice. And the third Article of thoſe Articles before, ſoundeth much near unto this, That the predeſtinate cannot fall from grace, for they have a certain radical grace rooted in them, although they be deprived of the abundant grace for a time. Theſe things are true in the compound ſenſe.

The third Article. Who ſo commiteth deadly ſin, ſwarveth from the Faith. The third Article. All the ſinful, according unto preſent Juſtice, are not faithful, but do ſwarve from the true Catholick Faith, forſomuch as it is impoſſible that any man can commit any deadly ſin but in that point, that he doth ſwarve from the Faith. The Anſwer: I acknowledge that ſentence to be mine, and it appeareth, that if they did think upon the puniſhment which is to be laid upon ſinners, and did fully believe, and had the faith of the Divine Knowledge and Underſtanding, &c. then undoubtedly they would not ſo offend and ſin. This propoſition is verified by the ſaying of the Prophet Iſaiah, Thy rulers are unfaithful, miſ-believers, fellows and companions of thieves, they all love bribes and follow after rewards. Behold, the Prophet calleth the Rulers of the Church Infidels for their offences; for all ſuch as do not keep their Faith inviolate unto their principal Lord, are unfaithful ſervants, and they alſo are unfaithful children which keep not their obedience, fear, and love unto God their Father. KING Hen. 5.

Item, This propoſition is verified by the ſaying of the Apoſtle, the firſt Chapter to Titus. They do confeſs that they know God, but by their works they do deny him. And foraſmuch as they which are ſinful, do ſwarve away from the meritorious work of Bleſſedneſs, therefore they do ſwarve from the true Faith grounded upon Charity, forſomuch as Faith without Works is dead. To this end doth alſo appertain that which the Lord ſpeaketh, Matth. 23. of the faithful and unfaithful ſervant. Titus 1.

The fourth Article. The words of Chriſt for binding and looſing, unleſs they be vvell underſtood, do cauſe fear or preſumption. The fourth Article. These words of John in his two and twentieth Chapter, Receive the holy Ghoſt, and, Whatſoever you ſhall bind upon earth, &c. and Matthew the ſixteenth and eighteenth Chapter, for lack of underſtanding ſhall terrifie many Chriſtians, and they ſhall be wonderfully afraid, and others ſhall be deceived by them, preſuming upon the fulneſs of their Power and Authority. The Anſwer: This Sentence I do approve and allow, and therefore I ſay in the ſame place, that it is firſt of all to be ſuppoſed, that the Saying of our Saviour is neceſſary, as touching the vertue of the Word, foraſmuch as it is not poſſible for a Prieſt to bind and looſe, except that binding and looſing be in Heaven. But for the lack of the true underſtanding of thoſe words, many ſimple Chriſtians ſhall be made afraid, thinking with themſelves, that whether they be juſt or unjuſt, the Prieſts may at their pleaſures, whenſoever they will, bind them. And the ignorant Prieſts do alſo preſume and take upon them to have power to bind and looſe whenſoever they will. For many fooliſh and ignorant Prieſts do ſay, that they have power and authority to abſolve every man confeſſing himſelf, of what ſin or offence ſoever it be, not knowing that in many ſins it is forbidden them, and that it may happen that an Hypocrite do confeſs himſelf, or ſuch a one as is not contrite for his ſin, whereof proof hath oftentimes been found and it is evident, forſomuch as the letter doth kill, but the Spirit doth quicken.

The fifth Article. Binding and looſing chiefly and principally belong to Chriſt. The fifth Article. The binding and looſing of God, is ſimply and plainly the chief and principal. The Anſwer: This is evident, forſomuch as it were blaſphemous preſumption to affirm, That a man may remit and forgive an evil Fact or Offence done againſt ſuch a Lord, the Lord himſelf not approving or allowing the ſame. For by the Univerſal Power of the Lord, it is neceſſary that he do firſt abſolve and forgive, before that his Vicar do the ſame; neither is there one Article of our Faith, which ought to be more common or known unto us, than that it ſhould be impoſſible for any man of the militant Church to abſolve or bind, except in ſuch caſe as it be conformable to the head of the Church, Jeſus Chriſt. Wherefore every faithful Chriſtian ought to take heed of that ſaying, If the Pope, or any other, pretend by any manner of ſign to bind or looſe, that he is thereby bound or looſed; for he that doth grant or confeſs that, muſt alſo conſequently grant and confeſs that the Pope is without ſin, and ſo that he is a God, for otherwiſe he muſt needs err and do contrary unto the Keys of Chriſt. This ſaying proveth the fact of the Pope, who always in his Abſolution preſuppoſeth Contrition and Confeſſion. Yea moreover, if any letter of Abſolution be given unto any Offender, which doth not declare the circumſtances of the Offence which ought to be declared, it is ſaid that thereby the letter of Abſolution is of no force and effect. It is alſo hereby evident, that many Prieſts do not abſolve thoſe which are confeſſed, becauſe that either through ſhamefaſtneſs they do cloak or hide greater Offences, or elſe that they have not due Contrition or Repentance; for unto true Abſolution there is firſt required Contrition. Secondly, A purpoſe and intent to ſin no more. Thirdly, True Confeſſion. And fourthly, ſtedfaſt hope of forgiveneſs. The firſt appeareth by Ezechiel, If the wicked

To true Abſolution four thing are required.

KING Hen. 5.

wicked do repent him, &c. The ſecond, in the fifth and eighth of John, Do thou not ſin any more. The third part by this place of Luke, Shew your ſelves unto the Prieſts. And the fourth is confirmed by the ſaying of Chriſt, My ſon, believe, and thy ſins are forgiven thee. I alſo added many other probations in my Treatiſe out of the Holy Fathers, Auguſtine, Jerome, and the maſter of the Sentences.

The ſixth Article.

The ſixth Article. The Prieſts do gather and heap up out of the Scriptures thoſe things which ſerve for the belly, but ſuch as appertain to the true imitation and following of Chriſt, that they reject, and refuſe as impertinent unto ſalvation. The Anſwer: This St. Gregory doth ſufficiently prove in his ſeventeenth Homily, alledging the ſaying of Chriſt, The harveſt is great, the workmen are few; ſpeaking alſo that which we cannot ſay without grief or ſorrow, that albeit there be a great number which willingly hear good things, yet there lack ſuch as ſhould declare the ſame unto them; for behold, the World is full of Prieſts, but notwithſtanding there is a ſcarcity of Workmen in the Harveſt of the Lord. We take upon us willingly Prieſthood, but we do not fulfil and do the works and office of Prieſthood. And immediatly after he ſaith, We are fallen unto outward affairs and buſineſs, for we take upon us one Office for honor ſake, and we do exhibit and give another to eaſe our ſelves of labor. We leave Preaching, and as far as I can perceive we are called Biſhops to our pain, which do retain the name of Honor, but not the Verity.

Prieſts are given to their own ſtore and eaſily, than to the ſervice of Chriſt.

And immediately after he ſaith, We take no care for our Flock, we daily call upon for our ſtipend and wages, we covet and deſire Earthly things with a greedy mind, we gape after Worldly glory, we leave the cauſe of God undone, and make haſte about our Worldly affairs and buſineſs; we take upon us the place of Sanctity and Holineſs, and we are wholly wrapped in worldly cares and troubles, &c. This writeth Saint Gregory, with many other things more in the ſame place. Alſo in his Paſtoral, in his Morals, and in his Regiſter. Alſo Saint Bernard, as in many other places, ſo likewiſe in his 33. Sermon upon the Canticles, he ſaith, All friends, and all enemies, all kinſfolks and adverſaries, all of one houſhold, and no peace-makers; they are the Miniſters of Chriſt, and ſerve Antichriſt; they go honorably honored with the Goods of the Lord, and yet they do honor, &c.

The ſeventh Article.

The ſeventh Article. The power of the Pope, which doth follow Chriſt, is not to be feared. The Anſwer: It is not in my Treatiſe, but contrariwiſe, that the ſubjects are bound willingly and gladly to obey the vertuous and good Rulers, and alſo thoſe which are wicked and evil. But notwithſtanding, if the Pope do abuſe his power, it is not then to be feared as by bondage. And ſo the Lords the Cardinals, as I ſuppoſe, did not fear the power of Gregory the twelfth before his depoſition, when as they reſiſted him, ſaying, That he did abuſe his Power contrary unto his own Faith.

The Popes power doing ungodly is not to be feared.

The eighth Article.

The eighth Article. An evil and a wicked Pope is not the ſucceſſor of Peter, but of Judas. The Anſwer; I wrote this in my Treatiſe, If the Pope be humble and meek, neglecting and deſpiſing the honors and lucre of the World; if he be a Shepheard, taking his name by the feeding of the Flock of God (of the which feeding the Lord ſpeaketh, ſaying, Feed my Sheep) if he feed the Sheep with the Word, and with virtuous Example, and that he become even like his Flock with his whole heart and mind; if he do diligently and carefully labor and travel for the Church, then is he without doubt the true Vicar of Chriſt. But if we walk contrary unto theſe Virtues, for ſo much as there is no ſociety between Chriſt and Belial, and Chriſt himſelf ſaith, He that is not with me, is againſt me: how is he then the true Vicar of Chriſt or Peter, and not rather the Vicar of Antichriſt? Chriſt called Peter himſelf, Satanas, when he did contrary him but only in one word, and that with a good affection, even him whom he had choſen his Vicar, and ſpecially appointed over his Church. Why ſhould not any other then, being more contrary unto Chriſt, be truly called Satanas, and conſequently Antichriſt, or at leaſt the chief and principal Miniſter or Vicar of Antichriſt? There be infinite teſtimonies of this matter in Saint Auguſtine, S. Jerome, Cyprian, Chryſoſtome, Bernard, Gregory, Remigius, and Ambroſe, &c.

The Pope doing contrary to Chriſt, is not the Vicar of Chriſt, but Antichriſt.

The ninth Article. The Pope is the ſame Beaſt of whom it is ſpoken in the Apocalips, Power is given unto him to make war upon the Saints. The Anſwer: I deny this Article to be in my Book.

The ninth Article. John Hus need not prove this Article, the Pope will prove it himſelf.

The tenth Article. The tenth Article. To preach againſt the Popes commandment.

The tenth Article. It is lawful to preach notwithſtanding the Popes Inhibition. The Anſwer: The Article is evident, for ſo much as the Apoſtles did preach contrary to the commandment of the Biſhops of Jeruſalem. And Saint Hilary did the like, contrary to the commandment of the Pope which was an Arrian. It is alſo manifeſt by the example of Cardinals, which, contrary unto the commandment of Pope Gregory the twelfth, ſent throughout all Realms ſuch as ſhould preach againſt him. It is alſo lawful to preach under Appeal, contrary unto the Popes Commandment. And finally, he may preach which hath the commandment of God, whereunto he ought chiefly to obey.

The eleventh Article. If the Popes commandment be not concordant and agreeable with the Doctrine of the Goſpel or the Apoſtles, it is not to be obeyed. The Anſwer: I have thus written in my Book, The faithful diſciple of Chriſt ought to weigh and conſider, whether the Popes commandment be expreſly and plainly the commandment of Chriſt or any of his Apoſtles, or whether it have any foundation or ground in their Doctrine or no; and that being once known or underſtood, he ought reverently and humbly to obey the ſame. But if he do certainly know that the Popes commandment is contrary and againſt the holy Scripture, and hurtful unto the Church; then he ought boldly to reſiſt againſt it, that he be not partaker of the crime and offence by conſenting thereunto. This I have handled at large in my Treatiſe, and have confirmed it by the authorities of Saint Auguſtine, Hierome, Gregory, Chryſoſtome, Bernard, and Bede, and with the holy Scripture and Canons, the which for brevities cauſe I do here paſs over. I will only rehearſe the ſaying of Saint Iſidore, who writeth thus, He which doth rule, and doth ſay or command any thing contrary and beſides the will of God, or that which is evidently commanded in the Scriptures, he is honored as a falſe witneſs of God, and a Church-robber. Whereupon we are bounden to obey no Prelate, but in ſuch caſe as he do command or take counſel of the counſels and commandments of Chriſt.

The eleventh Article.

How far Prelates are to be obeyed.

Iſidor.

Likewiſe Saint Auguſtine upon this ſaying, upon the chair of Moſes, &c. ſaith, ſecondly. They teach in the chair of Moſes the law of God: Ergo, God teacheth by them: but if they will teach you any of their own Inventions, do not give ear unto them, neither do as they command you. Alſo in the ſaying of Chriſt, He that heareth you, heareth me, all lawful and honeſt things be comprehended, in the which we ought to be obedient, according to Chriſts ſaying, It is not you which do ſpeak, but the Spirit of my Father which ſpeaketh in you. Let therefore my adverſaries and ſlanderers learn, that there be not only twelve Counſels in the Goſpel, in the which ſubjects ought to obey Chriſt and his appointed Miniſters, but that there are ſo many counſels and determinations of God, as there be lawful & honeſt things joyned with precepts and commandments of God, binding us thereunto under the pain of deadly ſin; for every ſuch thing doth the Lord command us to fulfil in time and place, with other circumſtances, at the will and pleaſure of their Miniſter.

Concilia præcepta.

The twelfth Article. It is lawful for the Clergy and Laity, by their Power and Juriſdiction to judge and determine of all things pertaining unto Salvation, and alſo of the works of the Prelates. The Anſwer: I have thus written in my Book, That it is lawful for the Clergy and Laity to judge and determine of the works of their Heads and Rulers. It appeareth by this, that the judgment of the ſecret Counſels of God, in the Court of Conſcience is one thing, and the judgment of the Authority and Power in the Church is another. Wherefore Subjects firſt ought principally to judge and examine themſelves, 1 Corinthians the eleventh Chapter. Secondly, They ought to examine all things which pertain unto their ſalvation, for a Spiritual Man judgeth and examineth all things. And this is alledged as touching the firſt Judgment, and not the ſecond, as the enemy doth impute it unto me. Whereupon in the ſame place I do ſay, that the Lay-man ought to judge and examine the works of his Prelate, like as Paul doth judge the doings of Peter in blaming him. Secondly, to avoid them according to this ſaying, Beware of falſe Prophets, &c. Thirdly, to rule over the Miniſtry: For the ſubject ought by reaſon to judge and examine the works of the Prelates. And if they be good, to praiſe God therefore and rejoyce: But if they be evil, they ought with patience to ſuffer them, and to be ſorry for them, but not to do the like, leſt they be damned with them, according to this ſaying, If the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch.

The Clergy and Laity may judge of the works of their Prelates.

Judgment double.

Secret in the Court of Conſcience. Open in the Court of Authority.

The thirteenth Article. To Godward all wicked Miniſters be ſuſpended.

The thirteenth Article. God doth ſuſpend of himſelf every wicked Prelate from his Miniſtery, while he is actually in Sin, for by that means that he is in deadly ſin, he doth offend and ſin whatſoever he do, and conſequently is forbidden ſo to do; therefore alſo is he ſuſpended from his Miniſtry. The anſwer, This is proved as touching ſuſpenſion from Dignity, by Hoſea the fourth Chapter, and Iſaiah, and Malachy the firſt. And Paul in the firſt to the Corinthians, the eleventh Chapter, ſuſpendeth all ſuch as be ſinful, or in any grievous Crime or Offence, from the eating of the Body of the Lord, and the drinking of his Blood, and conſequently ſuſpendeth all ſinful Prelate from the miniſtration of the reverend Sacrament. And God doth ſuſpend the wicked and ſinful from the declaration of his righteouſneſs, Pſalm 49. Foraſmuch then as to ſuſpend in effect, is to prohibit the Miniſtery, or any other good thing for the offence ſake; or as the new Laws do determine or call it, to interdict, forbid: It is manifeſt by the Scriptures afore rehearſed, that God doth prohibit the ſinful, being in ſin, to exerciſe or uſe their Miniſtry or Office, which by Gods commandment ought to be exerciſed without offence. Whereupon he ſaith by Iſaiah the Prophet, Ye that carry the veſſels of the Lord, be ye cleanſed and made clean. And to the Corinthians it is ſaid, Let all things be done with love and charity, &c. The ſame thing alſo is commanded by divers and ſundry Canons, the which I have alledged in my Treatiſe.

The fourteenth Article. The lay-people ſupplanted by the Clergy.

The fourteenth Article. The anſwer which he made to the five and twentieth Article in Priſon, ſufficeth for this, that is to ſay, That the Clergy for their own preferment and exaltation, do ſupplant and undermine the lay-people, do increaſe and multiply their covetouſneſs, cloke and defend their malice and wickedneſs, and prepare a way for Antichriſt.

The firſt part he proveth by experience, by the example of Peter de-Luna, which named himſelf Benedict, by the example of Angelus Coriarius, which named himſelf Gregory the Twelfth; and alſo by the Example of John the Three and twentieth; likewiſe by the thirteenth and twenty fourth of Ezekiel, and out of Gregory, which ſaith, What ſhall become of the Flock, when the Shepheards themſelves are become Wolves, &c. Alſo out of Hoſea, Michah, and other of the Prophets, and many places of S. Bernard.

The ſecond part is proved by the eighth Chapter of Jeremiah, Gregory in his ſeventeenth Homily, and S. Bernard upon the Canticles.

The third part of this Article is alſo proved by experience; for who defendeth the wickedneſs of any Schiſm but only the Clergy, alledging Scriptures, and bringing reaſons therefore? Who excuſeth Symony, but only the Clergy? likewiſe Covetouſneſs, in heaping together many Benefices, Luxurioufneſs and Fornication? For how many of the Clergy are there now a days which do ſay, it is no deadly ſin, alledging (albeit diſorderly) the ſaying of Geneſis, Increaſe and multiply?

Hereby alſo is the fourth part of the Article eaſily verified. For the way of Antichriſt is wickedneſs and ſin, of the which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh to the Theſſalonians: Gregory in his Regiſter, Paſtoral and Morals; alſo S. Bernard upon the Canticles plainly ſaith, Wicked and evil Prieſts prepare the way for Antichriſt.

The fifteenth Article. The diſhoneſty of ſuch as gathered falſe accuſations againſt John Hus.

The fifteenth Article. John Hus doth openly teach and affirm, that theſe Concluſions aforeſaid are true. The anſwer is manifeſt by that which I have afore written. For ſome of theſe Propoſitions I did write and publiſh, other-ſome mine enemy did feign, now adding, then diminiſhing and taking away, now falſly aſcribing and imputing the whole Propoſition unto me, the which thing the Commiſſioners themſelves did confeſs before me. Whom I deſired, for the falſe invention and feigning of thoſe Articles, that they would puniſh thoſe whom they themſelves knew and confeſſed to be mine Enemies.

{KING} 1 Hen. 5.

The fifteenth Article. Hereby alſo it appeareth, that it is not true which they have affirmed in the Article following; that is to ſay, That all the aforeſaid Concluſions be falſe, erroneous, ſeditious, and ſuch as do weaken and make feeble the power and ſtrength of the Church, invented contrary to the holy Scriptures and the Church. But if there be any ſuch, I am ready moſt humbly to revoke and recant the ſame.

The ſixteenth Article.

The ſeventeenth Article. There was alſo an objection made againſt me as touching the Treatiſes which I wrote againſt Paletz and Staniſlaus de Znoyma. The which I deſired for Gods ſake they might be openly read in the audience of the whole Council, and ſaid, that I, notwithſtanding my former proteſtation, would willingly ſubmit my ſelf to the judgment of the whole Council.

The ſeventeenth Article.

The eighteenth Article. There was alſo another Article objected againſt me in this form. Item, John Hus ſaid and preached, that he ſhould go to Conſtance, and if ſo be that for any manner of cauſe he ſhould be forced to recant that he had before taught, yet notwithſtanding he never purpoſed to do it with his mind; foraſmuch as whatſoever he had before taught, was pure and true, and the ſound Doctrine of Chriſt. The Anſwer; This Article is full of lies, to the Inventer whereof I ſuppoſe the Lord ſaith thus, All the day long thou haſt imagined miſchief and wickedneſs, and with thy tongue, as with a ſharp razor, thou haſt wrought deceit: thou haſt delighted and loved rather to talk of wickedneſs and miſchief, than of equity and juſtice. Verily I do grant, that I left behind me a certain Epiſtle to be read unto the people, the which did contain, that all ſuch as did weigh and conſider my careful Labors and Travels, ſhould pray for me, and ſtedfaſtly preſerve and continue in the Doctrine of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, knowing for a certainty, that I never taught them any ſuch Errors as mine enemies do impute or aſcribe unto me; and if it ſhould happen that I were overcome by falſe Witneſs, they ſhould not be vexed or troubled in their minds, but ſtedfaſtly continue in the Truth.

The eighteenth Article.

The nineteenth Article. Laſt it was objected againſt me, That after I was come into Conſtance, I did write unto the Kingdom of Boheme, that the Pope and the Emperor received me honorably, and ſent unto me two Biſhops to make agreement between me and them; and that this ſeemeth to be written by me to this end and purpoſe, that they ſhould confirm and eſtabliſh me and my hearers in the Errors which I had Preached and Taught in Boheme. This Article is falſly alledged, even from the beginning. For how manifeſtly falſe ſhould I have written, that the Pope and the Emperor did honor me, when as otherwiſe I had written before, that as yet we knew not where the Emperor was? And before the Emperor himſelf came unto Conſtance, I was by the ſpace of three Weeks in Priſon. And to write that I was honored by my Impriſonment, the People of the Kingdom of Boheme would repute the honor as no great renown and glory unto me. Howbeit, mine enemies may in deriſion ſay unto me, That according to their wills and pleaſures I am exalted and honored. Wherefore this Article is wholly throughout falſe and untrue.

The nineteenth Article.

Unto theſe Articles above prefixed, were other Articles alſo to be annexed, which the Pariſians had drawn out againſt Mr. John Hus, to the number of nineteen. The chief Author whereof, was John Gerſon, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Paris, a great ſetter on of the Pope againſt good men. Of theſe Articles John Hus doth often complain in his Epiſtles, that he had no time nor ſpace to make anſwer unto them. Which Articles being falſly collected and wrongfully depraved, although J. Hus had no time to anſwer unto them, yet I thought it not unfit here to ſet them down for the Reader to ſee and judge.

Nineteen Articles drawn out by the Pariſians againſt John Hus. John Gerſon Chancellor of Paris.

¶ Articles formerly contained or picked out of the Treatiſe of John Hus of Prague, which he intituled of the Church, following in this part or behalf the errors, as they term them, of John Wickliffe.

THe firſt Article. No reprobate is true Pope, Lord, or Prelate. The Error is in the faith, and behavior, and manners {KING Hen. 5.} manners, being both of late and many times before condemned, as well againſt the poor men of Lions as alſo againſt the Waldenſes and Pikards. The affirmation of which Error is temerarious, ſeditious, offenſive and pernitious, and tending to the ſubverſion of all humane Policy and Governance, foraſmuch as no man knoweth whether he be worthy of love or hatred, for that all men do offend in many points, and thereby ſhould all rule and dominion be made uncertain and unſtable, if it ſhould be founded upon Predeſtination and Charity: neither ſhould the commandments of Peter have been good, which willeth all ſervants to be obedient unto their Maſters and Lords, although they be wicked.

The ſecond Article. That no man being in deadly ſin, whereby he is no member of Chriſt, but of the Devil, is true Pope, Prelate, Lord. The Error of this is like unto the firſt.

The third Article. No reprobate or otherwiſe being in deadly ſin, ſitteth in the Apoſtolick Seat of Peter, neither hath any Apoſtolical power over the Chriſtian people. This Error is alſo like unto the firſt.

The fourth Article. No reprobates are of the Church, neither likewiſe any which do not follow the life of Chriſt. This Error is againſt the common underſtanding of the Doctors, concerning the Church.

The fifth Article. They only are of the Church, and ſit in Peters Seat, and have Apoſtolick power which follow Chriſt and his Apoſtles in their life and living. The Error hereof is in faith and manners, as in the firſt Article, but containing more arrogancy and raſhneſs.

The ſixth Article. That every man which liveth upſightly, according to the rule of Chriſt, may and ought openly to preach and teach, although he be not ſent, yea, although he forbidden or excommunicated by any Prelate or Biſhop, even as he might and ought to give Alms; for his good life in living together with his Learning, doth ſufficiently ſend him.

This is a raſh and temerarious Error, offenſive, and tending to the confuſion of the whole Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy.

The ſeventh Article. That the Pope of Rome being contrary unto Chriſt, is not the univerſal Biſhop, neither hath the Church of Rome any Supremacy over other Churches, except peradventure it be given unto him of Cæſar, and not of Chriſt. An Error lately and plainly reproved.

The eighth Article. That the Pope ought not to be called moſt Holy, neither that his Feet are holy and bleſſed, or that they ought to be kiſſed. This Error is temerarious, unreverently and offenſively publiſhed.

The ninth Article. That according unto the Doctrine of Chriſt, Hereticks, be they never ſo obſtinate or ſtubborn, ought not to be put to death, neither to be accurſed or excommunicated. This is the Error of the Donatiſts, temerariouſly, and not without great offence affirmed againſt the Law of the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, as St. Auguſtine doth prove.

The tenth Article. That ſubjects and the common people may and ought publickly and openly to detect and reprove the vices of their Superiors and Rulers, as having power given them of Chriſt, and example of S. Paul ſo to do. This Error is pernicious, full of offence, inducing all Rebellion, Diſobedience and Sedition, and the curſe and malediction of Cham.

The eleventh Article. That Chriſt only is head of the Church, and not the Pope. It is an Error according unto the common underſtanding of the Doctors, if all the reaſon of the Supremacy, and of being head, be ſecluded and taken away from the Pope.

The twelfth Article. That the only Church, which comprehendeth the predeſtinate and good Livers, is the Univerſal Church, whereunto Subjects do owe obedience. And this is conſequent unto the former Article. The Error is contained as in the former Articles.

The thirteenth Article. That Tithes and Oblations given to the Church, are publick and common Alms. This Error is offenſive, and cohtrary to the determination of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 9.

The fourteenth Article. That the Clergy living wickedly, ought to be reproved and corrected by the Laypeople, by the taking away of their Tithes and other Temporal Profits. A moſt pernicious Error and offenſive, inducing the Secular people to perpetrate Sacriledge, ſubverting the Eccleſiaſtical Liberty. 15.

The fifteenth Article. That the Bleſſings of ſuch as are reprobate or evil livers of the Clergy, are maledictions and curſings before God, according to the ſaying, I will curſe your bleſſings. This Error was lately reproved of S. Auguſtine, againſt S. Cyprian and his followers; neither is the Maſter of the Sentences allowed of the Maſters in that point that he ſeemeth to favor this Article.

The ſixteenth Article. That in theſe days, and in long time before, there hath been no true Pope, no true Church or Faith, which is called the Romiſh Church, whereunto a Man ought to obey, but that it both was, and is the Synagogue of Antichriſt and Satan. The Error in this Article is in this Point, That it is derived, and taketh his foundation upon the former Articles. 16.

The ſeventeenth Article. That all gift of money given unto the Miniſters of the Church, for the miniſtration of any Spiritual matter, doth make ſuch Miniſters in that caſe uſers of Simony. This Error is ſeditious and temerarious, foraſmuch as ſomething may be given unto the Clergy, under the Title of ſuſtentation or maintaining the Miniſter, without the ſelling or buying of any Spiritual thing. 17.

The eighteenth Article. That whoſoever is Excommunicate of the Pope, if he appeal to Chriſt, he is preſerved that he need not fear the Excommunication, but may utterly contemn and deſpiſe the ſame. This Error is temerarious and full of arrogancy. 18.

The nineteenth Article. That every deed done without Charity, is ſin. This Error was reproved and revoked before this time at Paris, ſpecially if it be underſtood of deadly Sin; for it is not neceſſary that he which lacketh Grace, ſhould continually ſin and offend anew, albeit he be continually in ſin. 19.

This following, the Maſters of Paris, by their whole voice and conſent, did add and adjoyn unto theſe nineteen Articles, for their reaſon and determination.

WE affirm, That theſe Articles aforeſaid are notoriouſly Heretical, and that they are Judicially condemned for ſuch, and diligently to be rooted out with their moſt ſeditious Doctrines, leſt they do infect other. For albeit they ſeem to have a Zeal againſt the Vices of the Prelates and the Clergy, the which (the more is the pity and grief) do but too much abound, yet is it not according unto Learning; for a ſober and diſcreet Zeal, ſuffereth and lamenteth thoſe ſins and offences, which he ſeeth in the Houſe of God, that he cannot amend or take away; for Vices cannot be rooted out and taken away by other Vices and Errors, foraſmuch as Devils are not caſt out through Beelzebub, but by the power of God, which is the Holy Ghoſt, who willeth, that in Correction the meaſure and mean of prudence be always kept, according to the ſaying, Mark who, what, where and why, by what means and when, Prelates and Biſhops are bound, under grievous and expreſs penalties of the Law, diligently and vigilantly to bear themſelves againſt the foreſaid Errors, and ſuch other like, and the maintainers of them; for let it always be underſtood and noted, that the Error which is not reſiſted is allowed, neither is there any doubt of privy affinity or ſociety of him, which ſlacketh to withſtand a manifeſt miſchief.

Theſe things are intermedled by the way under correction, as by way of Doctrine.

John Gerſon Chancellor of Paris, unworthily.

THeſe things thus declared, a man may eaſily underſtand, that John Hus was not accuſed for holding any opinion contrary to the Articles of our Faith, but becauſe he did ſtoutly preach and teach againſt the Kingdom of Antichriſt for the glory of Chriſt, and the reſtoring of the Church.

The words of the Cardinal of Cambray unto John Hus after his accuſation.

Now to return unto the Story: whereas the firſt thirty nine Articles, which I have before rehearſed, were all read over together with their Teſtimonies, the Cardinal of Cambray calling unto John Hus, ſaid, Thou haſt heard heard what grievous and horrible crimes are laid againſt thee, and what number of them they are; and now it is thy part to deviſe with thy ſelf what thou wilt do. Two ways are proponed and ſet before thee of the Council whereof the one of them thou muſt of force and neceſſity enter into.

A double inconvenience for John Hus to fall into.

Firſt, That thou do humbly and meekly ſubmit thy ſelf unto the judgment and ſentence of the Council, that whatſoever ſhall be there determined by their common voice and judgment, thou wilt patiently bear, and ſuffer the ſame. The which thing if thou wilt do, we of our part, both for the honor of the moſt gentle Emperor here preſent, and alſo for the honor of his Brother the King of Boheme, and for thy own ſafeguard and preſervation, will intreat and handle thee with as great humanity, love and gentleneſs, as we may. But if as yet thou art determined to defend any of thoſe Articles which we have propounded unto thee, and doſt deſire or require to be further heard thereupon, we will not deny thee power and licenſe thereunto: But this thou ſhalt well underſtand, that here are ſuch manner of men, ſo clear in underſtanding and knowledge, and having ſo firm and ſtrong reaſons and arguments againſt thy Articles, that I fear it will be to thy great hurt, detriment and peril, if thou ſhouldeſt any longer will or deſire to defend the ſame.

This I do ſpeak and ſay unto thee, to counſel and admoniſh thee, and not as in manner of a Judge.

This Oration of the Cardinals many others proſecuting, every man for himſelf did exhort and perſwade John Hus to the like; unto whom, with a lowly countenance he anſwered, Moſt reverend Fathers, I have often ſaid, that I came hither of mine own free will, not to the intent obſtinately to defend any thing, but if that in any thing I ſhould ſeem to have conceived a perverſe or evil opinion, that I would meekly and patiently be content to be reformed and taught. Whereupon I deſire that I may have yet further liberty to declare my mind. Whereof except I ſhall alledge moſt firm and ſtrong reaſons, I will willingly ſubmit my ſelf (as you require) unto your information.

John Hus anſwereth.

Then there ſtart up one which, with a loud voice ſaid, Behold, how craftily this man ſpeaketh: He tearmeth it information, and not correction or determination. Verily ſaid John Hus, even as you will tearm it, information, correction or determination: for I take God to my witneſs, that I ſpeak nothing but with my heart and mind.

The Cardinal of Cambray appointeth John Hus certain conditions whereby he may be delivered.

Then ſaid the Cardinal of Cambray; foraſmuch then as thou doſt ſubmit thy ſelf unto the information and grace of this Council, this is decreed by almoſt threeſcore Doctors, whereof ſome of them are now deparred hence, in whoſe room and place the Pariſians are ſucceeded; and alſo it is approved by the whole Council, not one man ſpeaking the contrary thereunto.

Firſt of all, That thou ſhalt humbly and meekly confeſs thy ſelf to have erred in theſe Articles which are alledged and brought againſt thee.

Moreover, That thou ſhalt promiſe by an Oath, that from henceforth thou ſhalt not teach, hold or maintain any of theſe Articles. And laſt of all, that thou ſhalt openly recant all theſe Articles.

Upon the which Sentence, when as many others had ſpoken their minds, at the length John Hus ſaid, I once again do ſay, that I am ready to ſubmit my ſelf to the Information of the Council; but this I moſt humbly require and deſire you all, even for his ſake, which is the God of us all, That I be not compelled or forced to do the thing which my Conſcience doth repugn or ſtrive againſt, or the which I cannot do without danger of eternal Damnation, that is, that I ſhould make revocation by Oath to all the Articles which are alledged againſt me. For I remember, that I have read in the Book of Univerſalities, That to abjure, is to renounce an Error which a man hath before holden. And forſomuch as many of theſe Articles are ſaid to be mine, which were never in my mind or thought to hold or teach, how ſhould I then renounce them by an Oath? But as touching thoſe Articles which are mine indeed, if there be any man which can teach me contrariwiſe unto them, I will willingly perform that which you deſire.

The Emperor exhorteth John Hus to recant.

Then ſaid the Emperor, Why mayeſt not thou without danger alſo renounce all thoſe Articles which thou ſayeſt are falſly alledged againſt thee by the Witneſſes? For I verily would nothing at all doubt to abjure all errors, neither doth it follow that therefore by and by I have profeſſed any Error. To whom John Hus anſwerd: Moſt noble Emperor, this word to abjure, doth ſignifie much otherwiſe than your Majeſty doth here uſe it. Then ſaid the Cardinal of Florence, John Hus, you ſhall have a form of Abjuration, which ſhall be gentle, and tolerable enough, written and delivered unto you, and then you will eaſily and ſoon determine with your ſelf, whether you will do it or no: Then the Emperor, repeating again the words of the Cardinal of Cambray, ſaid, Thou haſt heard that there are two ways laid before thee: Firſt, That thou ſhouldeſt openly renounce thoſe thy Errors, which are now condemned, and ſubſcribe unto the judgment of the Council, whereby thou ſhouldeſt try and find their grace and favor. But if thou proceed to defend thy Opinions, the Council ſhall have ſufficient, whereby according to their Laws and Ordinances, they may decree and determine upon thee. To whom John Hus anſwered, I refuſe nothing (moſt noble Emperor) whatſoever the Council ſhall decree or determine upon me. Only this one thing I except, that I do not offend God and my conſcience, or ſay that I have profeſſed thoſe Errors which was never in my mind or thought to profeſs. But I deſire you all, if it may be poſſible, that you will grant me further liberty to declare my mind and opinion, that I may anſwer as much as ſhall ſuffice, as touching thoſe things which are objected againſt me, and ſpecially concerning Eccleſiaſtical Offices, and the ſtate of the Miniſtery.

The force of falſe witneſs.

But when as other men began to ſpeak, the Emperor himſelf began to ſing the ſame Song which he had ſung before. Thou art of lawful age, ſaid the Emperor, thou mighteſt eaſily have underſtood what I ſaid unto thee yeſterday, and this day; for we are forced to give credit unto theſe Witneſſes which are worthy of credit, foraſmuch as the Scripture ſaith, That in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all truth is tryed: how much more then, by ſo many witneſſes of ſuch worthy men?

The Emperor to John Hus.

Wherefore if thou be wiſe, receive penance at the hands of the Council with a contrite heart, and renounce thy manifeſt Errors, and promiſe by an Oath, that from henceforth thou wilt never more teach or preach them. The which if thou refuſeſt to do, there are Laws and Ordinances whereby thou ſhalt be judged of the Council.

An old Biſhop of Pole.

Here a certain very old Biſhop of Pole put to his verdict. He ſaid, the Laws are evident as touching Hereticks, with what puniſhment they ought to be puniſhed. But John Hus conſtantly anſwered as before, inſomuch that they ſaid he was obſtinate and ſtubborn. Then a certain well fed Prieſt, and gaily apparelled, cryed out unto the Preſidents of the Council, ſaying, he ought by no means to be admitted to recantation, for he hath written unto his Friends, That although he do ſwear with his tongue, yet he will keep his mind unſworn without Oath; wherefore he is not to be truſted. Unto this ſlander John Hus anſwered, as is ſaid in the laſt Article, affirming that he was not guilty of any Error.

Objection of a Prieſt better fed than taught.

Paletz againſt John Hus.

Then ſaid Paletz, to what end is this Proteſtation, forſomuch as thou ſayeſt that thou wilt defend no Error, neither yet Wickliffe, and yet doſt defend him? When he had ſpoken theſe words, he brought forth for witneſs nine Articles of John Wickliffs, and read them openly, and afterward he ſaid, When as I and Mr. Staniſlaus, in the preſence of Ernſtus of Auſtrich, Duke of Prague, preached againſt them, he obſtinately defended the ſame, not only by his Sermons, but alſo by his Books which he ſet forth. The which, except you do here exhibit, we will cauſe them to be exhibited. So ſaid the Emperor alſo. Unto whom John Hus anſwered, I am very well contented that not only thoſe, but alſo all other my Books, be brought forth and ſhewed.

A new heap of ſlanders.

In the mean time there was exhibited unto the Council a certain Article, wherein John Hus was accuſed, that he had ſlanderouſly interpreted a certain Sentence of the Popes: the which he denyed that he did, ſaying, That he never ſaw it but in Priſon, when as the Article was ſhewed him by the Commiſſioners. And when he was demanded who was the Author thereof; he anſwered, that he knew not, but that he heard ſay that Mr. Jeſſenitz was the Author thereof.

What

KING 1 Hen. 5. John Hus waxeth faint and weary.

What (ſaid they) then do you think or judge of the interpretation thereof? Then anſwered John Hus, what ſhould I ſay thereunto, when as I ſaid I never ſaw it, but as I have heard of it of you. Thus they were all ſo grievous and troubleſome unto him that he waxed faint and weary, for he had paſſed all the night before without ſleep, through the pain of his Teeth.

Another quarrel againſt John Hus, touching theſe three men beheaded at Prague. Vide ſupra.

Then was there another Article read, in the which was contained, That three men were beheaded at Prague, becauſe that through Wickliff's Doctrine and Teaching they were contumelious and ſlanderous againſt the Popes Letters: and that they were by the ſame Hus, with the whole pomp of the Scholars, and with a publick Convocation or Congregation carried out to be buried, and by a publick Sermon placed among the number of Saints. And the ſame Dr. Naſo, of whom you have heard certain teſtimonies already recited, affirmed the ſame to be true, and that he himſelf was preſent, when as the King of Bohemia commanded thoſe Blaſphemers ſo to be puniſhed.

John Hus lied.

Then ſaid John Hus, both thoſe parts are falſe, that the King did command any ſuch puniſhment to be done, and that the Coarſes were by me conveyed with any ſuch pomp unto their Sepulture or Burial: wherefore you do injury both unto me and the King. Then Paletz confirmed the affirmation of Dr. Naſo his Fellow, with this argument (for they both labored to one end and purpoſe) That it was provided by the Kings commandment, that no man ſhould once ſpeak againſt the Popes Bulls: And theſe three ſpake againſt the Popes Bulls: Ergo, by vertue of the Kings commandment they were beheaded. And what John Hus his opinion and mind was as touching theſe men, it is evident enough by his Book entituled, Of the Church, wherein he writeth thus: I believe they have read Daniel the Prophet, where, as is ſaid, And they ſhall periſh with ſword and fire, and with captivity, and many ſhall fraudulently and craftily aſſociate themſelves unto them. And afterward he ſaith, how this is fulfilled in theſe two Lay-men, who not conſenting, but ſpeaking againſt the feigned lies of Antichriſt, have offered their lives therefore, and many other were ready to do the ſame, and many were fraudulently aſſociate unto them, which being feared by the threatnings of Antichriſt, are fled, and have turned their backs, &c.

Ex parte affirmativa non conſiſtit argum. in 2. figura.

When theſe things were read, one looking upon another, as though they had been all in a marvellous ſtrange ſtudy, they held their peace for a certain ſpace. For this Paletz, and the foreſaid Doctor Naſo had alſo added, that John Hus in an open Sermon had inflamed and ſtirred up the people againſt the Magiſtrates, inſomuch that a great number of the Citizens did openly ſet themſelves againſt the Magiſtrates; and by that means was it, that he ſaid, Thoſe three were ready to ſuffer death for the Truth. And this ſedition was hardly appeaſed by any benefit or help that the King could do. Then the Engliſh-men exhibited the Copy of a certain Epiſtle, which they ſaid was falſly conveyed unto Prague, under the title of the Univerſity of Oxford, and that John Hus did read the ſame out of the Pulpit unto the people, that he might commend and praiſe John Wickliff unto the Citizens of Prague. When they had read the ſame before the Council, the Engliſh-men demanded of John Hus, whether he had read the ſame openly or no. Which when he had confeſſed, becauſe it was brought thither by two Scholars under the Seal of the Univerſity; they alſo inquired of him, what Scholars they were. He anſwered, this my Friend (meaning Stephen Paletz) knoweth the one of them as well as I, the other I know not what he was.

Another quarrel picked by Engliſhmen againſt John Hus.

The teſtimonial of Oxford for Wickliff brought to Prague.

Then they firſt enquired of him, as touching the laſt man, where he was. John Hus anſwered, I heard ſay (ſaid he) that in his return into England he died by the way. As touching the firſt, Paletz ſaid, That he was a Bohemian and no Engliſh-man, and that he brought out of England a certain ſmall piece of the Stone of Wickliffs Sepulchre, which they that are the followers of his Doctrine at this preſent, do reverence and worſhip as a thing moſt holy. Hereby it appeareth for what intent all theſe things were done, and that John Hus was the Author of them all.

A piece of the ſtone of Wickliffs ſepulchre brought for a Relick to Prague.

Then the Engliſh-men exhibited another Epiſtle, contrary to the firſt, under the Seal of the Univerſity, the effect and argument whereof was this: The Senate of the Univerſity, not without great ſorrow and grief, hath experimented and found, That the Errors of Wicliff are ſcattered and ſpread out of that Univerſity throughout all England. And to the intent that through their help and labor means may be found to remedy this miſchief, they have appointed for that purpoſe twelve Doctors, Men of ſingular Learning, and other Maſters, which ſhould ſit in judgment upon the Books of Wickliff.

Theſe Men have noted out above the number of two hundred Articles, the which the whole Univerſity have judged worthy to be burnt; but for the reverence of the ſaid Sacred Council, the ſaid Univerſity hath ſent them unto Conſtance, referring and remitting the whole Authority of the Judgment unto this Council.

The Oath of Paletz.

Here was great ſilence kept for a while. Then Paletz riſing up, as though he had finiſhed now his Accuſation, ſaid, I take God to my witneſs before the Emperors Majeſty here preſent, and the moſt reverend Fathers, Cardinals and Biſhops, that in this accuſation of John Hus, I have not uſed any hatred or evil will; but that I might ſatisfie the Oath which I took when I was made Doctor, that I would be a moſt cruel and ſharp Enemy of all manner of Errors, for the profit and commodity of the holy Catholick Church. Michael de Cauſis did alſo the like. And I, ſaid John Hus, do commit all theſe things unto the Heavenly Judge, which ſhall juſtly judge the cauſe or quarrels of both Parties. Then ſaid the Cardinal of Cambray, I cannot a little commend and praiſe the humanity and gentleneſs of Mr. Paletz, which he hath uſed in drawing out the Articles againſt Mr. John Hus. For as we have heard, there are many things contained in his Book much worſe and more deteſtable.

The Oath of Michael de Cauſis.

John Hus witneſſeth the Lord.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, the Biſhop of Rygen, unto whom John Hus was committed, commanded, that the ſaid John Hus ſhould be carried again ſafely unto Priſon. Then John de Clum following him, did not a little incourage and comfort him. No tongue can expreſs what courage and ſtomach he received by the ſhort talk which he had with him; when as in ſo great a broil and grievous hatred, he ſaw himſelf in a manner forſaken of all men. After that John Hus was carried away, the Emperor began to exhort the Preſidents of the Council in this manner, ſaying,

John de Clum doth comfort John Hus.

The Emperors Oration to the Preſidents of the Council.

YOu have heard the manifold and grievous crimes which are laid againſt John Hus, which are not only proved by manifeſt and ſtrong witneſſes, but alſo confeſſed by him; of the which, every one of them by my judgment and advice, have deſerved and are worthy of death. Therefore except he do recant them all, I judge and think meet that he be puniſhed with Fire. And albeit he do that which he is willed and commanded to do; notwithſtanding I do counſel you, that he be forbid the office of Preaching and Teaching, and alſo that he return no more into the Kingdom of Boheme: For if he be admitted again to Teach and Preach, and ſpecially in the Kingdom of Boheme, he will not obſerve and keep that which he is commanded, but, hoping upon the favour and good will of ſuch as be his adherents and fautors there, he will return again unto his former purpoſe and intent, and then, beſides theſe Errors, he will alſo ſow new Errors amongſt the People, ſo the laſt Error ſhall be worſe than the firſt.

That which God planteth, man ſhall never root up.

Moreover, I judge and think it good, that his Articles which are condemned, ſhould be ſent unto my Brother the King of Boheme, and afterward into Pole and other Provinces; whereas mens minds are repleniſhed with his Doctrine, with this commandment, That whoſoever do proceed to hold or keep the ſame, they ſhould by the common aid both of the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Power, be puniſhed. So at the length ſhall remedy be found for this miſchief, if the boughs, together with the root, be utterly rooted and pulled up: and if the Biſhops and other Prelates, which here in this place have labored and travelled for the extirpating of this Hereſie, be commended by the whole voices of the Council unto the King and Princes, under whoſe Dominion they are. Laſt of all, if there be any found here at Conſtance, which are Familiars unto John Hus, they alſo ought to be puniſhed with ſuch ſeverity and puniſhment as is due unto them, and ſpecially his Scholar Jerome of Prague. Then ſaid the reſt, when the Maſter is once puniſhed, we hope we ſhall find the Scholar much more tractable and gentle.

Hierome of Prague mentioned and promoted by the Emperor.

After

After they had ſpoken theſe words, they departed out of the Cloyſter, where they were aſſembled and gathered together. The day before his Condemnation, which was the ſixth of July, the Emperor Sigiſmund ſent unto him four Biſhops, accompanied with Mr. Wencelate de Duba, and John de Clum, that they ſhould learn and underſtand of him what he did intend to do. When as he was brought out of Priſon unto them, John de Clum began firſt to ſpeak unto him, ſaying, Four Biſhops ſent to John Hus.

The pitiful and loving Oration of John de Clum unto John Hus.

After J. Hus, I am a man unlearned, neither am I able to counſel or adviſe you, being a man of learning and underſtanding: notwithſtanding I do require you, if you know your ſelf guilty of any of thoſe Errors, which are objected and laid againſt you before the Council, that you will not be aſhamed to alter and change your mind to the will and pleaſure of the Council; if contrariwiſe, I will be no Author unto you, that you ſhould do any thing contrary, or againſt your Conſcience, but rather to ſuffer and endure any kind of puniſhment, than to deny that which you have known to be the Truth. Unto whom John Hus turning himſelf, with lamentable Tears ſaid; Verily, as before I have oftentimes done, I do take the moſt High God for my witneſs, that I am ready with my heart and mind, if the Council can inſtruct or teach me any better by the Holy Scripture, and I will be ready with all my whole heart to alter and change my purpoſe. Then one of the Biſhops which ſat by, ſaid unto him, that he would never be ſo arrogant or proud, that he would prefer his own Mind or Opinion before the judgment of the whole Council. To whom John Hus anſwered, neither do I otherwiſe mind or intend. For if he which is the meaneſt or leaſt in all this Council can convict me of Error, I will with an humble heart and mind perform, and do whatſoever the Council ſhall require of me. Mark, ſaid the Biſhops, how obſtinately he doth perſevere in his Errors. And when they had thus talked, they commanded the Keepers to carry him again to Priſon, and ſo they returned again unto the Emperor with their Commiſſion.

The marvellous conſtancy of John Hus.

That is no right modeſty that more regardeth to obey man, than manifeſt verity. John Hus anſwereth.

The next day after, which was Saturday, and the ſixth day of July, there was a General Seſſion holden of the Princes and Lords, both of the Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal Eſtates, in the head Church of the City of Conſtance, the Emperor Sigiſmond being Preſident in his Imperial Robes and Habit; in the midſt whereof there was made a certain high Place, being ſquare about like a Table, and hard by it there was a Desk of wood, upon the which the Garments and Veſtments pertaining unto Prieſthood were laid for this cauſe, that before John Hus ſhould be delivered over unto the Civil Power, he ſhould be openly deprived and ſpoiled of his Prieſtly Ornaments. When John Hus was brought thither, he fell down upon his knees before the ſame high Place, and prayed a long time. In the mean while the Biſhop of Londy went up into the Pulpit, and made this Sermon following.

The Sermon of the Biſhop of Londy, before the Sentence was given upon John Hus.

The Sermon before the Sentence.

'IN the Name of the Father, the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. Truſting by humble Invocation upon the Divine help and aid, moſt noble Prince, and moſt Chriſtian Emperor, and you moſt excellent Fathers, and reverend Lords, Biſhops and Prelates, alſo moſt excellent Doctors and Maſters, famous and noble Dukes, and high Counts, honorable Nobles and Barons, and all other men worthy of remembrance; that the intent and purpoſe of my mind may the more plainly and evidently appear unto this moſt Sacred Congregation: I am firſt of all determined to intreat or ſpeak of that which is read in the Epiſtle on the next Sunday, in the ſixth Chapter to the Romans; That is to ſay, Let the body of ſin be deſtroyed, &c.

The Theme

His Theme confirmed by Ariſtotle.

'It appeareth by the Authority of Ariſtotle, in his Book entituled, De cælo & mundo, how wicked, dangerous and fooliſh a matter it ſeemeth to be, not to withſtand perverſe and wicked beginnings. For he ſaith, That a ſmall Error in the beginning, is very great in the end. It is very damnable and dangerous to have erred, but more hard to be corrected or amended. Whereupon that worthy Doctor S. Jerome, in his Book upon the Expoſition of the Catholick Faith, teacheth how neceſſary a thing it is that Hereticks and Heretical ſhould be ſuppreſſed, even at the firſt beginning of them, ſaying thus; The rotten and dead fleſh is to be cut off from the body, leſt that the whole body do periſh and putrifie. For a ſcabbed Sheep is to be put out of the Fold, leſt that the whole Flock be infected. And a little Fire is to be quenched, leſt the whole Houſe be conſumed and burned. Arius was firſt a ſpark in Alexandria, who becauſe he was not at the firſt quenched, he preſumed, and went about with his wicked and perverſe imaginations, and phantaſtical inventions, to ſpot and defile the Catholick Faith, which is founded and eſtabliſhed by Chriſt, defended with the victorious triumphs of ſo many Martyrs, & illuminated and ſet forth with the excellent doctrines and writings of ſo many men. Such therefore muſt be reſiſted; ſuch Hereticks of neceſſity muſt be ſuppreſſed and condemned.

KING Hen. 5.

'Wherefore I have truly propounded, as touching the puniſhment of every ſuch obſtinate Heretick, that the body of ſin is to be deſtroyed. Whereupon it is to be conſidered according to the holy Traditions of the Fathers, that ſome ſins are adverſe and contrary unto another. Otherſome are annexed or conjoyned together; other-ſome are, as it were, branches and members of others; and ſome are, as it were, the roots and heads of others. Amongſt all which, thoſe are to be counted the moſt deteſtable, out of which the moſt and worſt have their original and beginning. Wherefore, albeit that all ſins and offences are to be abhorred of us; yet thoſe are ſpecially to be eſchewed, which are the head and root of the reſt. For by how much the perverſeneſs of them is of more force and power to hurt, with ſo much the more ſpeed and circumſpection ought they to be rooted out and extinguiſhed, with apt preſervatives and remedies. Forſomuch then as amongſt all ſins, none doth more appear to be inveterate than the miſchief of this moſt execrable Schiſm, therefore have I right well propounded, That the body of ſin ſhould be deſtroyed. For by the long continuance of this Schiſm, great and moſt cruel deſtruction is ſprung up amongſt the Faithful, and hath long continued; abominable Diviſions of Hereſies are grown; Threatnings are increaſed and multiplyed; the confuſion of the whole Clergy is grown thereupon, and the Opprobries and Slanders of the Chriſtian people, are abundantly ſprung up and increaſed: And truly it is no marvel, forſomuch as that moſt deteſtable and execrable Schiſm, is, as it were, a body and heap of diſſolution of the true Faith of God: for what can be good or holy in that place, whereas ſuch a peſtiferous Schiſm hath raigned ſo long a time? For as Saint Bernard ſaith, Like as in the unity and concord of the Faithful, there is the Habitation and Dwelling of the Lord; ſo likewiſe in the Schiſm and diſſipation of the Chriſtians, there is made the habitation and dwelling of the Devil. Is not Schiſm and diviſion the original of all ſubverſion, the den of Hereſies, and the nouriſher of all Offences? For the knot of Unity and Peace being once troubled and broken, there is free paſſage made for all ſtrife and debate. Covetouſneſs is uttered in others for lucres ſake; Luſt and Will is ſet at liberty, and all means opened unto ſlaughter. All Right and Equity is baniſhed, the Eccleſiaſtical power is injured, and the calamity of this Schiſm bringeth in all kind of Bondage, ſword and violence doth Rule, the Laity have the dominion, Concord and Unity are baniſhed, and all preſcript Rules of Religion utterly contemned and ſet at naught.

They cannot abide the Laity to rule in any caſe.

'Conſider, moſt gentle Lords, during this moſt peſtiferous Schiſm, how many Hereſies have appeared and ſhewed themſelves, how many Hereticks have ſcaped unpuniſhed, how many Churches have been ſpoiled and pulled down, how many Cities have been oppreſſed, and Regions brought to ruine, what confuſion hath there hapned in the Clergy? What and how great deſtruction hath been amongſt the Chriſtian people? I pray you mark how the Church of GOD, the the Spouſe of Chriſt, and the Mother of all Faithful, is contemned and deſpiſed. For who doth reverence the Keys of the Church, who feareth the Cenſures or Laws, or who is it that doth defend the Liberties thereof?

All the Popiſh Religion lieth in Lands, Lordſhips, and Livelies.

But

{KING Hen. 5.} 'But rather who is it that doth not offend the ſame, or 'who doth not invade it, or elſe what is he that dare not 'violently lay hands upon the Patrimony or Heritage of 'Jeſus Chriſt? The Goods of the Clergy, and of the 'poor, and the relief of Pilgrims and Strangers, gotten 'together by the blood of our Saviour, and of many 'Martyrs, are ſpoiled and taken away: behold, the abo- Note here the Popes Divinity, how the blood of Chriſt ſervеth to ſhade their patrimony. 'mination of deſolation brought upon the Church of 'GOD, the deſtruction of the Faith, and the confuſion 'of the Chriſtian people, to the ruine of the Lords Flock 'or Fold, and all the whole company of our moſt holy 'Saviour and Redeemer. This loſs is more great or 'grievous than any which could happen unto the Mar- 'tyrs of Chriſt, and this Perſecution much more cruel, 'than the Perſecution of any Tyrant; for they did but 'only puniſh the Bodies, but in the Schiſm and Diviſion 'the Souls are tormented. There the blood of Men was 'only ſhed, but in this caſe the true Faith is ſubverted 'and overthrown. That Perſecution was ſalvation unto 'many; but this Schiſm is deſtruction unto all men. 'When the Tyrants raged, then the Faith did increaſe; 'but by this Diviſion it is utterly decayed. During their 'cruelty and madneſs, the Primitive Church increaſed; 'but through this Schiſm it is confounded and over- 'thrown. Tyrants did ignorantly offend, but in this 'Schiſm many do wittingly and willingly even of obſti- 'nacy offend. There came in Hereticks, uſers of Simony, 'and Hypocrites, to the great detriment and deceit of the 'Church; under thoſe Tyrants, the merits of the Juſt were 'increaſed.

'But during this Schiſm, miſchief and wickedneſs 'are augmented: for in this moſt curſed and execrable 'Diviſion, Truth is made an enemy to all Chriſtians, 'Faith is not regarded, Love and Charity hated, Hope is 'loſt, Juſtice overthrown, no kind of courage or vali- 'antneſs, but only unto miſchief: Modeſty and Tempe- 'rance cloked, Wiſdom turned into deceit, Humility feign- 'ed, Equity and Truth fallified, Patience utterly fled, 'Conſcience ſmall, all Wickedneſs intended, Devotion 'counted folly, Gentleneſs abject and caſt away, Religion 'deſpiſed, Obedience not regarded, and all manner of 'Life reproachful and abominable. With how great and 'grievous ſorrows is the Church of God repleniſhed and 'filled, whilſt that Tyrants do oppreſs it, Hereticks in- 'vade it, uſers of Simony do ſpoil and rob it, and Schiſ- This Schiſm continued 40 years. 'maticks go about utterly to ſubvert it? O moſt miſer- 'able and wretched Chriſtian people, whom now by the 'ſpace of forty years, with ſuch indurate and continual 'Schiſm, they have tormented, and almoſt brought to 'ruine! O the little Bark and Ship of Chriſt, which 'hath ſo long time wandred and ſtrayed now in the midſt 'of the Whirl-pools, and by and by ſticketh faſt in the 'Rocks, toſſed to and fro with moſt grievous and tem- 'peſtuous Storms! O miſerable and wretched Boat of 'Peter, if the moſt Holy Father would ſuffer thee to 'ſink or drown, into what dangers and perils have 'the Wicked Pirats brought thee? Amongſt what Rocks 'have they placed thee? O moſt Godly and loving 'Chriſtians, what faithful devout Man is there, which 'beholding and ſeeing the great ruine and decay of the 'Church, would not be provoked unto Tears? What 'good Conſcience is there that can refrain Weeping? He ſtirreth up the Emperor Sigiſmund. 'becauſe that Contention and Striſe is poured upon 'the Eccleſiaſtical Rulers, which have made us to err 'in the way, becauſe they have not found, or rather 'would not find the way of Unity and Concord: Where- 'upon ſo many Hereſies, and ſo great Confuſion is ſprung 'up, and grown in the Flock of Peter, and the Fold of the 'Lord.

'Many Princes, Kings and Prelates, have greatly la- 'bored and travelled for the rooting out hereof; but yet 'could they never bring to paſs, or finiſh that moſt whol- 'ſome and neceſſary Work. Wherefore moſt Chriſtian 'King, this moſt glorious and triumphant Victory hath 'tarried only for thee, the Crown and Glory thereof 'ſhall be thine for ever, and this moſt happy Victory ſhall 'be continually celebrate to thy great Honor and Praiſe, 'that thou haſt reſtored again the Church which was ſo 'ſpoiled, thou haſt removed and put away all inveterate 'and overgrown Schiſms and Diviſions; thou haſt trod- 'den down uſers of Simony, and rooted out all Here- 'ticks. Doſt thou not behold and ſee how great, per- 'petual and famous Renown and Glory it will be unto 'thee? For what can be more Juſt, what more Holy, 'what Better, what more to be Deſired; or final- 'ly, what can be more acceptable, than to root out this 'wicked and abominable Schiſm, to reſtore the Church 'again unto her Ancient Liberty, to extinguiſh and put 'away all Simony, and to condemn and deſtroy all Er- 'rors and Hereſies from amongſt the Flock of the Faith- 'ful? Nothing truly can be better, nothing more holy, 'nothing more profitable for the whole World; and fi- 'nally, nothing more acceptable unto God. For the 'performance of which moſt Holy and Godly Work, 'thou waſt elect and choſen of God, thou waſt firſt de- 'puted and choſen in Heaven, before thou waſt elect and 'choſen upon Earth. Thou waſt firſt appointed by the 'Celeſtial and Heavenly Prince, before the Electors of 'the Empire did elect or chooſe thee, and ſpecially, that 'by the Imperial Force and Power, thou ſhouldeſt con- 'demn and deſtroy thoſe Errors and Hereſies, which we 'have preſently in hand to be condemned and ſubvert- 'ed. To the performance of this moſt holy Work, God 'hath given unto thee the knowledge and underſtanding 'of his Divine Truth and Verity, power of Princely Ma- 'jeſty, and the juſt judgment of Equity and Righteouſ- 'neſs, as the Higheſt himſelf doth ſay: I have gi- 'ven thee Underſtanding and Wiſdom, to ſpeak and ut- 'ter my words, and have ſet thee to rule over Nations 'and Kingdoms, that thou ſhouldeſt help the People, 'pluck down and deſtroy Iniquity, and by exerciſing of 'Juſtice thou ſhouldſt, I ſay, deſtroy all Errors and He- 'reſies, and ſpecially this obſtinate Heretick here preſent, 'through whoſe Wickedneſs and Miſchief, many places Euripidem reſtas deri. dest, ethio. pem albus. 'of the World are infected with moſt peſtilent and here- 'tical Poyſon, and by this means and occaſion almoſt ut- 'terly ſubverted and deſtroyed. This moſt holy and god- 'ly labor, O moſt noble Prince, was reſerved only for thee, 'upon thee it doth only lie, unto whom the whole rule and 'miniſtration of Juſtice is given. Wherefore thou haſt eſta- 'bliſhed thy praiſe and renown, even by the mouths of Note the vile flattery of theſe Papiſts, when they would have any thing of the Emperor for their pur- poſe. 'Infants and ſucking Babes, for thy praiſes ſhall be cele- 'brate for evermore, that thou haſt deſtroyed and over- 'thrown ſuch and ſo great enemies of the Faith. The 'which that thou mayeſt proſperouſly and happily perform 'and bring to paſs, our Lord Jeſus vouchſafe to grant thee his grace and help, who is bleſſed for ever and ever. Amen.

* When this Sermon was thus ended, the Proctor of the Council riſing up, named Henricus de Piro, required, that the Proceſs of the Cauſe againſt John Hus might be continued, and that they might proceed unto the definitive Sentence. Then a certain Biſhop, which was appointed one of the Judges, declared the Proceſs of the Cauſe, which was pleaded long ſince in the Court of Rome, and elſewhere, between John Hus and the Prelates of Prague. The Proctor of the Council calleth for the Sentence.

At the laſt he repeated thoſe Articles which we have before remembred; amongſt the which he rehearſed alſo one Article, That John Hus ſhould Teach the two Natures of the Godhead and Manhood to be one Chriſt. John Hus went about briefly with a word or two to anſwer every of them; but as often as he was about to ſpeak, the Cardinal of Cambray commanded him to hold his peace, ſaying, Hereafter you ſhall anſwer all together, if you will. Then ſaid John Hus, How can I at once anſwer all theſe things which are alledged againſt me, when as I cannot remember them all? Then ſaid the Cardinal of Florence, We have heard thee ſufficiently. But when as John Hus for all that would not hold his peace, they ſent the Officers which ſhould force him thereunto. Then began he to intreat, pray, and beſeech them, that they would hear him, that ſuch as were preſent might not credit or believe thoſe things to be true which were reported of him. But when all this would nothing prevail, he kneeling down upon his knees, committed the whole matter unto God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for at their hands he believed eaſily to obtain that which he deſired. The Cardinal of Cambray commanded John Hus to keep ſilence. John Hus could not be heard in the Council. John Hus committeth his cauſe to the Lord Chriſt.

When the Articles aboveſaid were ended, laſt of all there was added a notable Blaſphemy, which they all imputed imputed to John Hus, that is, That he ſaid there ſhould be a fourth Perſon in Divinity, and that a certain Doctor did hear him ſpeak of the ſame. When John Hus deſired that the Doctor might be named, the Biſhop that alleadged the Article, ſaid, That it was not needful to name him. Then ſaid John Hus, O miſerable and wretched man that I am, which am forced and compelled to bear ſuch a blaſphemy and ſlander.

Mark the unſhamefaſtneſs of them to feign what they liſt. John. Hus again ſlandred.

23. The Council doth call it Heretical to appeal to Chriſt.

Afterward the Article was repeated, how he appealed unto Chriſt, and that by name was called Heretical. Whereunto John Hus anſwered, O Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe word is openly condemned here in this Council, unto thee again I do appeal; which when thou waſt evil intreated of thine enemies, diddeſt appeal unto God thy Father, committing thy cauſe unto a moſt juſt Judge, that by thy Example, we alſo being oppreſſed with maniſeſt Wrongs and Injuries, ſhould flee unto thee. Laſt of all the Article was rehearſed, as touching the contempt of the Excommunication by John Hus. Whereunto he anſwered as before, that he was excuſed by his Advocates in the Court of Rome, wherefore he did not appear when he was cited; and alſo that it may be proved by the Acts, that the Excommunication was not ratified; and finally, to the intent he might clear himſelf of obſtinacy, he was for that cauſe come unto Conſtance, under the Emperors ſafe Conduct. When he had ſpoken theſe words, one of them which was appointed Judge, read the definitive Sentence againſt him, which followeth thus word for word.

Contempt of the Popes excommunication laid to John Hus

The Sentence or Judgment of the Council of Conſtance againſt John Hus.

The ſentence againſt John Hus

THe moſt Holy and Sacred General Council of Conſtance, being congregate and gathered together, repreſenting the Catholick Church, for a perpetual Memory of the thing, as the Verity and Truth did witneſs, An evil Tree bringeth forth evil Fruit; hereupon it cometh, that the man of moſt damnable memory, John Wickliff, through his peſtiferous Doctrine, not through Jeſus Chriſt by the Goſpel; as the Holy Fathers in times paſt have begotten faithful Children, but contrary unto the wholſome Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, as a moſt venomous root, hath begotten many peſtilent and wicked Children, whom he hath left behind him, Succeſſors and Followers of his perverſe and wicked Doctrine, againſt whom this Sacred Synod of Conſtance is forced to riſe up, as againſt baſtards and unlawful children, and with diligent care, with the ſharp knife of the Eccleſiaſtical Authority, to cut up their Errors out of the Lords field, as moſt hurtful Brambles and Bryers, leſt they ſhould grow to the hurt and detriment of others.

Forſomuch then as in the holy General Council, lately celebrated and holden at Rome, it was Decreed, That the Doctrine of John Wickliff, of moſt damnable memory, ſhould be condemned, and that his Books which contained the ſame Doctrine, ſhould be burned as Heretical, and this Decree was approved and confirmed by the Sacred Authority of the whole Council; nevertheleſs, one John Hus here perſonally preſent in this Sacred Council, not the Diſciple of Chriſt, but of John Wickliff, an Arch-heretick, after, and contrary or againſt the Condemnation and Decree hath Taught, Preached and affirmed the Articles of Wickliff, which were condemned by the Church of God, and in times paſt by certain moſt Reverend Fathers in Chriſt, Lords, Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, of divers Kingdoms and Realms, Maſters of Divinity of divers Univerſities; eſpecially reſiſting in his open Sermons, and alſo with his Adherents and Complices in the Schools, the condemnation of the ſaid Articles of Wickliffs, oftentimes publiſhed in the ſaid Univerſity of Prague, and hath declared him the ſaid Wickliff, for the favor and commendation of his Doctrine, before the whole multitude of the Clergy and People, to be a Catholick Man, and a true Evangelical Doctor. He hath alſo publiſhed and affirmed certain and many of his Articles, worthily condemned to be Catholick, the which are notoriouſly contained in the Books of the ſaid John Hus.

Wherefore, after diligent deliberation and full information firſt had upon the premiſes by the Reverend Fathers and Lords in Chriſt of the holy Church of Rome, Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates, Doctors of Divinity, and of both Laws, in great number aſſembled and gathered together, this moſt Sacred and holy Council of Conſtance, declareth and determineth the Articles aboveſaid (the which after due conference had, are found in his Books written with his own hand, the which alſo the ſaid John Hus in open audience, before this holy Council, hath confeſſed to be in his Books) not to be Catholick, neither worthy to be taught, but that many of them are Erroneous, ſome of them wicked, otherſome offenſive to godly ears, many of them temerarious and ſeditious, and the greater part of them notoriouſly Heretical, and even now of late by the holy Fathers and general Councils reproved and condemned. And forſomuch as the ſaid Articles are expreſly contained in the Books of the ſaid John Hus, therefore this ſaid * Sacred Council doth condemn and reprove all thoſe Books which he wrote, in what form or phraſe ſoever they be, or whether they be tranſlated by others, and doth determine and decree, That they all ſhall be ſolemnly and openly burned in the preſence of the Clergy and People of the City of Conſtance, and elſewhere, adding moreover for the premiſes, That all his Doctrine is worthy to be deſpiſed and eſchewed of all faithful Chriſtians. And to the intent this moſt pernicious and wicked Doctrine may be utterly excluded and ſhut out of the Church, this ſacred Synod doth ſtraitly command, that diligent Inquiſition be made by the Ordinaries of the places by the Eccleſiaſtical cenſure, for ſuch Treatiſes and Works, and that ſuch as are found be confuted and burned with fire. And if there be any found, which ſhall contemn or deſpiſe this Sentence or Decree, this ſacred Synod Ordaineth and decreeth, That the Ordinaries of the places, and the Inquiſitors of Hereſies, ſhall proceed againſt every ſuch perſon as ſuſpect of Hereſie.

KING { Hen. 5. } They ſhall bring you before their Councils, they ſhall perſecute you, and caſt you in Priſon, and bring you before Kings and Prelates, &c.

* The ſaid conciliabulum malignantium.

Wherefore, after due inquiſition made againſt the ſaid John Hus, and full information had by the Commiſſaries and Doctors of both Laws, and alſo by the ſayings of the witneſſes which were worthy of credit, and many other things openly read before the ſaid John Hus, and before the Fathers and Prelates of this ſacred Council (by the which Allegations of the witneſſes, it appeareth, that the ſaid John Hus hath taught many evil and offenſive, ſeditious and perilous Hereſies, and hath preached the ſame by a long time) this moſt ſacred and holy Synod, lawfully congregate and gathered together in the Holy Ghoſt, the name of Chriſt being invocate and called upon, by this their Sentence which here is ſet forth in writing, determineth, pronounceth, declareth, and decreeth, that J. Hus was and is a true and manifeſt Heretick, and that he hath Preached openly Errors and Hereſies lately condemned by the Church of God, and many ſeditious, temerarious and offenſive things to no ſmall offence of the Divine Majeſty, and of the Univerſal Church, and detriment of the Catholick Faith, and Church, neglecting and deſpiſing the Keys of the Church, and Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures. In the which his Error, he hath continued with a mind altogether indurate and hardened by the ſpace of many years, much offending the faithful Chriſtians by his obſtinacy and ſtubbornneſs, when as he made his Appeal unto the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as the moſt High Judge, omitting and leaving all Eccleſiaſtical means. In the which his Appeal he alledgeth many falſe, injurious, and offenſive matters, in contempt of the Apoſtolick See, and the Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures and Keys.

Many ſhall come in my name, and ſhall deceive many. Mark 13.

The Appeal to Chriſt is derogatory to the Pope, Holineſs.

Whereupon, both for the premiſes and many other things, the ſaid Synod pronounceth John Hus to be an Heretick, and judgeth him by theſe Preſents to be condemned and judged as an Heretick; and reproveth the ſaid Appeal as injurious, offenſive, and done in deriſion unto the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and judgeth the ſaid Hus not only to have ſeduced the Chriſtian people by his Writings and Preachings, and ſpecially in the Kingdom of Boheme, neither to have been a true Preacher of the Goſpel of Chriſt unto the ſaid people, according to the expoſition of the holy Doctors; but alſo to have been a Seducer of them, and alſo an obſtinate and ſtiffnecked perſon, yea and ſuch an one as doth not deſire to return again to the lap of our Holy Mother the Church, neither to abjure the Errors and Heresies which he hath openly preached and defended. Wherefore this most sacred Council Decreeth and declareth, that the said John Hus shall be famously deposed and degraded from his priestly Orders and Dignity, &c.

John Hus clareth himself of obstinacy.

¶ Whilest these things were thus read, John Hus, albeit he were forbidden to speak, notwithstanding did often interrupt them, and specially when he was reproved of obstinacy, he said with a loud voice: I was never obstinate, but as always heretofore, even so now again I desire to be taught by the Holy Scriptures, and I do profess my self to be so desirous of the truth, that if I might by one only word subvert the Errors of all Hereticks, I would not refuse to enter into what peril or danger soever it were. When his Books were condemned, he said, Wherefore have you condemned those Books, when as you have not proved by any one Article, that they are contrary to the Scriptures, or Articles of Faith? And moreover what injury is this that you do to me, that you have condemned these Books written in the Bohemian-Tongue, which you never saw, neither yet read? And oftentimes looking up to Heaven he prayed.

They condemn the Books written in the Bohemian-Tongue which they never read.

When the sentence and judgment was ended, kneeling down upon his knees, he said, Lord Jesus Christ, forgive mine Enemies, by whom thou knowest that I am falsly accused, and that they have used false witness and slanders against me; forgive them I say, for thy great mercies sake. This his Prayer and Oration the greater part, and specially the chief of the Priests, did deride and mock.

Hus prayeth for his enemies.

At the last, the seven Bishops which were chosen out to degrade him of his Priesthood commanded him to put on the Garments pertaining unto Priesthood, which thing when he had done, until he came to the putting on of the Albe, he called to his remembrance the white Vesture which Herod put on Jesus Christ to mock him withal. So likewise in all other things he did comfort himself by the example of Christ. When he had now put on all his Priestly Vestures, the Bishops exhorted him that he should yet alter and change his mind and purpose, and provide for his honour and safegard. Then he (according as the manner of the ceremony is) going up to the top of the Scaffold, being full of tears, spake unto the people in this sort.

John Hus commanded to put on the Priests vestments.

John Hus his oration unto the people.

These Lords and Bishops do exhort and counsel me, that I should here confess before you all that I have erred; the which thing to do, if it were such as might be done with the infamy and reproach of Man only, they might peradventure easily perswade me thereunto; but now truly I am in the sight of the Lord my God, without whose great ignominy and grudg of mine own conscience, I can by no means do that which they require of me. For I do well know, that I never taught any of those things which they have falsly alledged against me, but I have always preached, taught, written and thought contrary thereunto. With what countenance then should I behold the Heavens? With what face should I look upon them whom I have taught, whereof there is a great number, if through me it should come to pass that those things, which they have hitherto known to be most certain and sure, should now be made uncertain? Should I by this my example astonish or trouble so many souls, so many consciences, indued with the most firm and certain knowledge of the Scriptures and Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ and his most pure Doctrine, armed against all the assauls of Satan? I will never do it, neither commit any such kind of offence, that I should seem more to esteem this vile Carcase appoined unto death, than their health and salvation. At this most godly word he was forced again to hear, by the consent of the Bishops, that he did obstinately and maliciously persevere in his pernicious and wicked errors.

Then he was commanded to come down to the execution of his judgment, and in his coming down, one of the seven Bishops afore rehearsed, first took away the Chalice from him which he held in his hand, saying, O cursed Judas, why hast thou forsaken the council and ways of peace, and hast counselled with the Jews? We take away from thee this Chalice of thy salvation. But John Hus received this Curse in this manner: But I trust unto God the Father omnipotent, and my Lord Jesus Christ, for whose sake I do suffer these things, that he will not take away the Chalice of his redemption, but have a stedfast and firm hope that this day I shall drink thereof in his Kingdom. Then followed the other Bishops in order, which every one of them took away the vestments from him which they had put on, each one of them giving him their Curse. Whereunto John Hus answered, That he did willingly embrace and bear those blasphemies for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. At the last they came to the rasing of his shaven Crown. But before the Bishops would go in hand with it, there was a great contention between them, with what Instrument it should be done, with a Rasor or with a pair of Shears.

The degrading of John Hus.

In the mean season, John Hus turning himself toward the Emperor, said, I marvel that forsomuch as they be all of like cruel mind and stomach, yet they cannot agree upon their kind of cruelty. Notwithstanding, at the last they agreed to cut off the skin of the Crown of his Head with a pair of Shears. And when they had done that, they added these words, Now hath the Church taken away all her ornaments and priviledges from him. Now there resteth nothing else, but that he be delivered over unto the secular power. But before they did that, there yet remained another knack of reproach. For they caused to be made a certain Crown of Paper, almost a Cubit deep, in the which were Painted three Divels of wonderful ugly shape, and this title set over their heads, Heresiarcha. The which when he saw, he said, My Lord Jesus Christ for my sake did wear a Crown of Thorns; why should not I then for his sake again wear this light Crown, be it never so ignominious? Truly I will do it, and that willingly. When it was set upon his Head, The Bishop said, Now we commit thy Soul unto the Divel. But I, said John Hus (lifting his eyes up towards the Heavens) do commit my Spirit into thy hands, O Lord Jesus Christ, unto thee I commend my Spirit which thou hast redeemed. These contumelious opprobries thus ended, the Bishops turning themselves towards the Emperor, said, This most sacred Synod of Constance leaveth now John Hus, which hath no more any Office, or to do in the Church of God, unto the civil judgment and power. Then the Emperor commanded Ludovicus Duke of Bavaria, which stood before him in his Robes, holding the golden Apple with the Cross in his Hand, that he should receive John Hus of the Bishops, and deliver him unto them which should do the execution. By whom as he was led to the place of execution, before the Church doors he saw his Books burning, whereat he smiled and laughed. And all men that passed by he exhorted, not to think that he should die for any Error or Heresie, but only for the hatred and ill will of his adversaries, which had charged him with most false and unjust Crimes. All the whole City in manner being in Armor, followed him.

The place appointed for the execution was before the Gate Gotlebian, between the Gardens and Gates of the Suburbs. When as John Hus was come thither, kneeling down upon his knees, and lifting his eyes up unto Heaven, he prayed, and said certain Psalms, and specially the 31, and 50 Psalms. And they which stood hard by, heard him oftentimes in his Prayer, with a merry and cheerful countenance, repeat this verse, Into thy hands, O Lord I commend my spirit, &c. Which thing when the Lay-people beheld which stood next unto him, they said, What hath he done afore, we know not, but now we see and hear that he doth speak and pray very devoutly and godly. Othersome wished that he had a Confessor. There was a certain Priest by, sitting on Horseback, in a green Gown, drawn, about with red silk, which said, He ought not to be heard, because he is an Heretick. Yet notwithstanding, whilest he was in prison, he was both confessed, and also absolved by a certain Doctor, a Monk, as Hus himself doth witness in a certain Epistle which he wrote unto his friends out of prison. Thus Christ Reigneth unknown unto the world, even in the midst of his Enemies. In the mean time whilest he prayed, as he bowed his neck backward to look upward unto Heaven, the Crown of Paper fell off from his head upon the ground. Then one of the Souldiers taking it up again, said, let us put it again upon his head, that he may be burned with his Masters the Divels, whom he hath served.

At the prayer of John Hus the paper with the Divels fell down

When as by the commandment of the Tormentors he was riſen up from the place of his prayer, with a loud voice he ſaid, Lord Jeſus Chriſt aſſiſt and help me, that with a conſtant and patient mind, by thy moſt gracious help, I may bear and ſuffer this cruel and ignominious death, whereunto I am condemned for the Preaching of thy moſt Holy Goſpel and Word. Then, as before, he declared the cauſe of his death unto the people. In the mean ſeaſon the Hang-man ſtripped him of his Garments, and turning his hands behind his back, tied him faſt unto the Stake with Ropes that were made wet. And whereas by chance he was turned towards the Eaſt, certain cried out that he ſhould not look towards the Eaſt, for he was an Heretick: So he was turned towards the Weſt. Then was his Neck tied with a Chain unto the Stake, the which Chain when he beheld, ſmiling he ſaid, That he would willingly receive the ſame Chain for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, who, he knew, was bound with a far worſe Chain. Under his feet they ſet two Fagots, admixing ſtraw withal, and ſo likewiſe from the feet up to the Chin he was inclofed in round about with wood. But before the wood was ſet on fire. Lodovicus Duke of Bavaria, with another Gentleman with him, which was the Son of Clement, came and exhorted John Hus, that he would yet be mindful of his Safe-guard, and renounce his errors. To whom he ſaid, What error ſhould I renounce, when as I know my ſelf guilty of none? For as for thoſe things which are falſly alledged againſt me, I know that I never did ſo much as once think them, much leſs Preach them. For this was the principal end and purpoſe of my Doctrine, that I might teach all Men penance and remiſſion of ſins, according to the verity of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, and the expoſition of the Holy Doctors: wherefore with a cheerful mind and courage I am here ready to ſuffer death. When he had ſpoken theſe words, they left him, and ſhaking hands together, they departed.

Then was the Fire kindled, and John Hus began to ſing with a loud voice, Jeſus Chriſt the Son of the living God have mercy upon me. And when he began to ſay the ſame the third time, the Wind drove the flame ſo upon his Face, that it choked him. Yet notwithſtanding he móved a while after, by the ſpace that a Man might almoſt ſcy three times the Lords Prayer. When all the wood was burned and conſumed, the upper part of the Body was left hanging in the Chain, the which they threw down ſtake and all, and making a new fire, burned it, the Head being firſt cut in ſmall gobbets, that it might the ſooner be conſumed unto Aſhes. The Heart, which was found amongſt the bowels, being well beaten with Staves and Clubs, was at laſt pricked upon a ſharp Stick, and Roſted at a Fire apart until it was conſumed. Then with great diligence gathering the Aſhes together, they caſt them into the River of Rhene, that the leaſt remnant of the Aſhes of that Man ſhould not be left upon the Earth, whoſe memory notwithſtanding cannot be aboliſhed out of the minds of the godly, neither by Fire, neither by Water, neither by any kind of Torment.

¶ I know very well that theſe things are very ſlenderly written of me as touching the labours of this moſt Holy Martyr John Hus, with whom the labours of Hercules are not to be compared. For that ancient Hercules ſlew a few Monſters; but this our Hercules with a moſt ſtout and valiant courage, hath ſubdued even the world it ſelf, the Mother of all Monſters and cruel Beaſts. This Story were worthy ſome other kind of more curious handling; but forſomuch as I cannot otherwiſe perform it my ſelf, I have endeavoured according to the very truth, as the thing was indeed, to commend the ſame unto all godly minds: neither have I heard it reported by others, but I my ſelf was preſent at the doing of all theſe things, and as I was able, I have put them in writing, that by this my labour and endeavour, howſoever it were, I might preſerve the memory of this holy Man and excellent Doctor of the Evangelical truth.

The Author and witneſs of this Story.

What was the name of this Author which wrote this Story it is not here expreſſed. Cochleus in his ſecond Book contra Huſſitas, ſuppoſeth his name to be Johannes Pizibram, a Bohemian. Who afterward ſucceeding in the place of John Hus at Prague, at laſt is thought to relent to the Papiſts.

M. John Pizibram is thought to be his name. Ex Cochleo lib. 2. de Hiſt Huſſit.

This godly Servant and Martyr of Chriſt was condemned by the cruel Council, and burned at Conſtance, Anno 1415. about the month of July.

How grievouſly this death of John Hus was taken among the Nobles of Boheme and of Moravia, hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall appear by their Letters which they ſent unto the Council, and by the Letters of Sigiſmund the King of Romans, written unto them. Wherein he laboureth, all that can, to purge and excuſe himſelf of Huſſes death. Albeit he was not altogether gether free from that cruel fact, and innocent from that blood: Yet notwithſtanding he pretendeth in words ſo to wipe away that blot from him, that the greateſt part of that crime ſeemeth to reſt upon the bloody Prelates of that Council; as the words of the King do purport in form as followeth.

Ex Cochleo de Hiſt. Huſſ. lib. 4.

The Emperor excuſeth himſelf of the death of Hus.

INterea (inquit) nobis adhuc in partibus Rheni exiſtentibus, pervenit ad Conſtantiam, &c. i. In the mean time as we were about the coaſts of Rhene, John Hus went to Conſtance, and there was arreſted, as is not to you unknown. Who, if he had firſt reſorted unto us, and had gone with us up to the Council, perhaps it had been otherwiſe with him. And God knoweth what grief and ſorrow it was to our heart, to ſee it ſo to fall out, as with no words can be well expreſſed. Whereof all the Bohemians, which were there preſent, can bear us witneſs, ſeeing and beholding how careful and ſolicitous we were in labouring for him: Inſomuch that we many times with anger and fury departed out of the Council; and not only out of the Council, but alſo went out of the City of Conſtance taking his part, unto ſuch time as the Rulers of the Council ſending unto us, ſaid; That if we would not permit them to proſecute that which right required in the Council, what ſhould they then do in the place? Whereupon thus we thought with our ſelves, that here was nothing elſe for us more to do, nor yet to ſpeak in this caſe, foraſmuch as the whole Council otherwiſe had been diſſolved. Where is to be noted moreover, that in Conſtance the ſame time there was not one Clerk, or two, but there were Ambaſſadors from all Kings and Princes in Chriſtendom, eſpecially, ſince the time that (Petrus de Luna giving over) all thoſe Kings and Princes which took his part, came to us; ſo that whatſoever good was to be done, it was now to be paſſed in this preſent Council, &c. Ex Regiſt. Imp Sigiſmund. ad Nobiles, &c.

¶ By this it may appear that the Emperor, as partly aſhamed and ſorry of that which was, would gladly have cleared himſelf thereof, and have waſhed his hands with Pilate; yet he could not ſo clear himſelf, but that a great portion of that murder remained in him to be noted, and well worthy of reprehenſion, as may appear by his laſt words ſpoken in the Council to John Hus, whereof John Hus in his Epiſtles complaineth, writing to certain of his friends in Boheme in his 33*d* Epiſtle, as by his words here following may appear.

Ex Epiſt. J. Hus. 33.

The Emperor uncourteous to John Hus.

I Deſire you yet again for the love of God, that the Lords of Boheme joyning together will deſire the King for a final audience to be given to me. Forſomuch as he alone ſaid to me in the Council, that they ſhould give me audience ſhortly, and that I ſhould anſwer for my ſelf briefly in writing: it will be to his great confuſion, if he ſhall not perform that which he hath ſpoken. But I fear that word of his will be as firm and ſure, as the other was concerning my ſafe conduct granted by him. Certain there were in Bohemia, which willed me to beware of his ſafe conduct. And other ſaid, he will ſurely give you to your Enemies. And the Mileſt Dwaky told me before M. Jeſſenitz, ſaying, Maſter, know it for certain you ſhall be condemned. And this I ſuppoſe he ſpake, knowing before the intention of the King. I hope well that he had been well affected toward the Law of God and the truth, and had therein good intelligence: now I conceive that he is not greatly skilful, nor ſo prudently circumſpect in himſelf. He condemned me before mine enemies did. Who if it had pleaſed him, might have kept the moderation of Pilate the Gentile, which ſaid: I find no cauſe in this man: or at leaſt if he had ſaid but thus, Behold, I have given him his ſafe conduct ſafely to return: And if he will not abide the deciſion of the Council, I will ſend him home to the King of Bohemia with your ſentence and atteſtations, that he with his Clergy may judge him. But now I hear by the relation of Henry Leffy, and of other, that he will ordain for me ſufficient audience; And if I will not ſubmit my ſelf to the judgment of the Council, he will ſend me ſafe, the contrary way, &c.

Pilate more moderate to Chriſt, than this Emperor to John Hus.

This John Hus being in priſon, wrote divers Treatiſes, as of the Commandments, of the Lords Prayer, of mortal Sin, of Matrimony, of the knowledge and love of God, of three Enemies of mankind, the world, and fleſh, and the Divel, of Penance, of the Sacrament of the Body and blood of the Lord, of the ſufficiency of the Law of God to rule the Church, &c. He wrote alſo divers Epiſtles and Letters to the Lords, and to his Friends of Boheme; And in his writings did foreſhew many things before to come, touching the reformation of the Church; and ſeemeth in the priſon to have had divers prophetical revelations ſhewed to him of God. Certain of which his letters and predictions, I thought here underneath to inſert, in ſuch ſort, as neither in reciting all I will overcharge the Volume too much; nor yet in reciting of none will I be ſo brief, but that the Reader may have ſome taſte, and take ſome profit of the Chriſtian writings and doings of this bleſſed man; Firſt beginning with the letter of the Lord Clum, concerning the ſafe conduct of John Hus.

A Letter of the Lord John de Clum, concerning the ſafe conduct of John Hus.

'TO all and ſingular that ſhall ſee and hear theſe preſents, I John de Clum do it to underſtand, how Maſter John Hus Bachelor of Divinity, under the ſafe conduct 'and protection of the renowned Prince and Lord Sigiſmond of Romans, ſemper Auguſtus, and King of Hungary, '&c. My gracious Lord, and under the protection, defence, and 'ſafegard of the holy Empire of Rome, having the Letters 'Patent of the ſaid my Lord King of Romans, &c. Came 'unto Conſtance to render a full count of his faith in pub'lick audience to all that would require the ſame. This the 'ſaid Maſter John Hus, in this Imperial City of Conſtance, 'under the ſafe conduct of the ſaid my Lord King of Ro'mans, hath been and yet is detained. And although the Pope 'with the Cardinals have been ſeriouſly required by ſolemn 'Ambaſſadors of the ſaid my Lord King of Romans, &c. In 'the Kings Name and behalf, that the ſaid Maſter John Hus 'ſhould be ſet at liberty, and be reſtored unto me, yet not'withſtanding, they have and yet do refuſe hitherto to ſet 'him at liberty, to the great contempt and derogation of the 'ſafe conduct of the King, and of the ſafegard and protecti'on of the Empire, or Imperial Majeſty. Wherefore I John 'aforeſaid, in the name of the King, do here publiſh and make 'it known, that the apprehending, and detaining of the ſaid 'Maſter John Hus was done wholly againſt the will of the 'forenamed King of Romans my Lord, ſeeing it is done in 'the contempt of the ſafe conduct of his ſubjects, and of the 'protection of the Empire, becauſe that the ſaid my Lord 'was then abſent far from Conſtance, and if he had been 'there preſent, would never have permitted the ſame. And 'when he ſhall come, it is to be doubted of no man, but 'that he, for this great injury and contempt of this ſafe con'duct done to him and to the Empire, will grievouſly be 'moleſted for the ſame.

Given at Conſtance, in the day of the Nativity of the Lord, 1414.

Firſt, The goodneſs of this gentle Lord John de Clum, being ſo fervent and zealous in the cauſe of John Hus, or rather in the cauſe of Chriſt.

Secondly, The ſafe conduct granted unto the ſaid John Hus, under the faith and protection of the Emperor, and of the Empire.

Thirdly, Here is to be ſeen the contempt and rebellion of theſe proud Prelates, in diſobeying the authority of their high Magiſtrate, who contrary to his ſafe conduct given, and the mind of the Emperor, did arreſt and impriſon this good man, before the coming of the ſaid Emperor, and before that John Hus was heard. Let us now, as we have promiſed, adjoyn ſome of the Epiſtles of this godly Man.

An Epiſtle of John Hus, unto the people of Prague, in his own vulgar Speech.

A Letter of John Hus to the people of Prague.

'GRace and Peace from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that you being delivered from ſin may walk in his grace, 'and may grow in all modeſty and vertue, and after this 'may enjoy eternal life.

'Dearly beloved, I beſeech you which walk after the Law 'of God, that you caſt not away the care of the ſalvation 'of your ſouls, when as you hearing the Word of God

'are premoniſhed wiſely to underſtand that you be not deceived by falſe Apoſtles; which do not reprehend the ſins of men, but rather do extenuate and diminiſh them; which flatter the Prieſts, and do not ſhew to the people their offences; which magnifie themſelves, boaſt their own works, and marvelouſly extol their own worthineſs, but follow not Chriſt in his humility, in poverty, in the Croſs and other manifold afflictions. Of whom our merciful Saviour did premoniſh us before, ſaying; Falſe Chriſts and falſe Prophets ſhall riſe, and ſhall deceive many. And when he had forewarned his welbeloved Diſciples, he ſaid unto them, Beware and take heed of falſe Prophets, which come to you in ſheeps clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves: ye ſhall know them by their fruits. And truth it is, that the faithful of Chriſt have much need diligently to beware and take heed unto themſelves. For as our Saviour himſelf doth ſay, The elect alſo, if it were poſſible, ſhall be brought into error. Wherefore my welbeloved, be circumſpect and watchful, that ye be not circumvented with the crafty trains of the Devil. And the more circumſpect ye ought to be, for that Antichriſt laboureth the more to trouble you. The laſt judgment is near at hand: death ſhall ſwallow up many, but to the elect children of God the Kingdom of God draweth near, becauſe for them he gave his own Body. Fear not death, love together one another, perſevere in underſtanding the good will of God without ceaſing. Let the terrible and horrible day of Judgment be always before your eyes, that you ſin not; and alſo the joy of eternal life, whereunto you muſt endeavour. Furthermore, let the paſſion of our Saviour be never out of your minds; that you may bear with him, and for him gladly, whatſoever ſhall be laid upon you. For if you ſhall conſider well in your minds his croſs and afflictions, nothing ſhall be grievous unto you, and patiently you ſhall give place to tribulations, curſings, rebukes, ſtripes, and priſonment, and ſhall not doubt to give to your lives moreover for his holy truth, if need require. Know ye, welbeloved, that Antichriſt being ſtirred up againſt you, deviſeth divers perſecutions. And many he hath not hurt, no not the leaſt hair of their heads, as by mine own example I can teſtifie, although he hath been vehemently incenſed againſt me. Wherefore I deſire you all, with your prayers to make interceſſion for me to the Lord, to give me intelligence, ſufferance, patience and conſtancy, that I never ſwarve from his divine verity. He hath brought me now to Conſtance. In all my journey, openly and manifeſtly, I have not feared to utter my name as becometh the ſervant of God. In no place I kept my ſelf ſecret, nor uſed any diſſimulation. But never did I find in any place more peſtilent and manifeſt Enemies than at Conſtance. Which Enemies neither ſhould I have had there, had it not been for certain of our own Bohemians, Hypocrites and Deceivers, who, for benefits received, and ſtirred up with covetouſneſs, with boaſting and bragging have perſwaded the people that I went about to ſeduce them out of the right way: But I am in good hope, that through the mercy of our God, and by your prayers, I ſhall perſiſt ſtrongly in the immutable verity of God unto the laſt breath. Finally, I would not have you ignorant, that whereas every one here is put in his Office, I only as an outcaſt am neglected, &c. I commend you to the merciful Lord Jeſus Chriſt, our true God, and the Son of the immaculate Virgin Mary which hath redeemed us by his moſt bitter death, without all merits, from eternal pains, from the Thraldom of the Devil, and from ſin.

From Conſtance the Year of our Lord, 1415.

Another Letter of John Hus to his Benefactors.

Another Letter of John Hus.

'MY gracious Benefactors and Defenders of the truth, I exhort you by the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, that now ye ſetting aſide the vanities of this preſent world, will give your ſervice to the Eternal King, Chriſt the Lord. Truſt not in Princes, nor in the Sons of men, in whom there is no health. For the Sons of Men are diſſemblers and deceitful. To day they are, to morrow they periſh, but God remaineth for ever. Who hath his ſervants, not for any need he hath of them, but for their own profit: unto whom he performeth that which he promiſeth, and fulfilleth that which he purpoſeth to give. He caſteth off no faithful ſervant from him; for he ſaith; Where I am, there alſo ſhall my ſervant be. And the Lord maketh every ſervant of his to be the Lord of all his poſſeſſion, giving himſelf unto him, and with himſelf, all things; that without all tediouſneſs, fear, and without all defect he may poſſeſs all things, rejoycing with all Saints in joy infinite. O happy is that ſervant, whom, when the Lord ſhall come, he ſhall find watching. Happy is the ſervant which ſhall receive that King of Glory with joy. Wherefore welbeloved Lords and Benefactors, ſerve you that King in fear; which ſhall bring you, as I truſt, now to Bohemè at this preſent by his grace in health, and hereafter, to eternal life of glory. Fare you well, for I think that this is the laſt Letter that I ſhall write to you; who to morrow, as I ſuppoſe, ſhall be purged in hope of Jeſus Chriſt, through bitter death for my ſins. The things that happened to me this night I am not able to write. Sigiſmund hath done all things with me deceitfully, God forgive him, and only for your ſakes. You alſo heard the ſentence which he awarded againſt me. I pray you have no ſuſpition of faithful Vitus.

Another Letter to the Lord John de Clum.

Another Letter of John Hus.

'MOſt gracious Benefactor in Chriſt Jeſus, dearly beloved, yet I rejoyce not a little, that by the grace of God I may write unto your honour. By your Letter, which I received Yeſterday; I underſtand, Firſt how the iniquity of the great ſtrumpet, that is, of the Malignant Congregation (whereof mention is made in the Apoc.) is detected, and ſhall be more detected. With the which ſtrumpet the Kings of the Earth do commit Fornication, fornicating ſpiritually from Chriſt, and as is there ſaid, ſliding back from the truth, and conſenting to the lies of Antichriſt, through his ſeduction and through fear, or through hope of confederacy, for getting of worldly honour. Secondly, I perceived by your Letter how the Enemies of the truth begin now to be troubled. Thirdly, I perceived the ſetled conſtancy of your charity, wherewith you profeſs the truth bodily. Fourthly, with joy I perceived that you mind now to give over the vanity and painful ſervice of this preſent world, and to ſerve the Lord Jeſus Chriſt quietly at home. Whom to ſerve is to Reign, as Gregory ſaith, Whom he that ſerved faithfully, hath Jeſus Chriſt himſelf in the Kingdom of Heaven to miniſter unto him, as he himſelf ſaith, Bleſſed is that ſervant, whom when the Lord ſhall come, he ſhall find waking, and ſo doing. Verily I ſay unto you, that he riſing ſhall gird himſelf, and ſhall miniſter to him. This do not the Kings of the world to their ſervants; whom only they do love ſo long as they are profitable and neceſſary for their commodities, &c.

Another Epiſtle of John Hus, wherein he declareth why God ſuffereth not his to periſh, bringing divers examples, wherewith he doth comfort and confirm both himſelf and other.

'THE Lord God be with you. Many cauſes there were, welbeloved in God my dear Friends, which moved me to think that thoſe Letters were the laſt, which before I ſent unto you, looking that ſame time for inſtant death. But now underſtanding the ſame to be deferred, I take it for great comfort unto me, that I have ſome leaſure more to talk with you by Letters. And therefore I write again to you, to declare and teſtifie at leaſt my gratitude and mindful duty toward you. And as touching death, God doth know why he doth defer it both to me, and to my welbeloved Brother Maſter Jerom, who I truſt will die holily and without blame; and do know alſo that he doth, and ſuffereth now more valiantly, than I my ſelf a wretched ſinner. God hath given us a long time, that we might call to memory our ſins the better, and repent for the ſame more fervently. He hath granted us time, that our long and great temptation ſhould put away our grievous ſins, and bring the more conſolation. He hath given us time, wherein we ſhould remember the horrible rebukes of our merciful King and Lord Jeſus, and ſhould ponder his cruel death, and ſo more patiently might learn to bear our afflictions. And moreover that we might keep in remembrance, how that the joyes of the life to come are

KING Hen.5.

'not given after the joyes of this world immediately, but 'through many tribulations the Saints have entred into the 'Kingdom of Heaven. For some of them have been cut 'and chopt all to pieces, some their eyes bored through, 'some sod, some roasted, some slain alive, some buried 'quick, stoned, crucified, grinded betwixt millstones, drawn 'and hailed hither and thither unto execution, drowned in 'waters, strangled and hanged, torn in pieces, vexed with 'rebukes before their death, pined in prisons, and afflicted 'in bands. And who is able to recite all the torments and 'sufferings of the holy Saints, which they suffered under 'the Old and New Testament for the verity of God; 'namely, those which have at any time rebuked the malice 'of the Priests; or have Preached against their wickedness? 'And it will be a marvel if any man now also shall escape 'unpunished, whosoever dare boldly resist the wickedness 'and pervertity, especially of those Priests, which can abide 'no correction. And I am glad that they are compelled 'now to read my Books, in the which their malice is some- 'what described; and I know they have read the same 'more exactly and willingly, than the Bibly Gospel, seek- 'ing therein to find out errors. Given at Constance upon 'Thursday, the 28*th* day of June, Anno 1415.

Another Letter of John Hus wherein he rehearseth what injuries he received of the Council, and of the Deputies.

'IF my Letter be not yet sent to Boheme, keep it and 'send it not, for hurt may come thereof, &c.

'Item, If the King do ask, who ought to be my Judge, 'since that the Council neither did call me, nor did cite me, 'neither was I ever accused before the Council, and yet the 'Council hath imprisoned me, and hath appointed their 'Proctor against me.

'Item, I desire you, right noble and gracious Lord John, 'audience shall be given me, that the King will be there 'present himself, and that I may have a place appointed 'near unto him, that he may hear me well, and under- 'stand what I say; and that you also with the Lord Henry, 'and with Lord Wencelaus and other mo, if you may, will 'be present, and hear what the Lord Jesus Christ, my 'procurator and advocate, and most gracious Judge, will 'put in my mouth to speak, that whether I live or die, 'you may be true and upright witnesses with me, lest 'lying lips shall say hereafter that I swarved away from the 'truth which I have Preached.

'Item, Know you that before witnesses and notaries in 'prison, I desire the Commissioners that they would depute 'unto me a Proctor and an Advocate, who promised so to 'do, and afterward would not perform it. Wherefore I have 'committed my self to the Lord Jesus Christ, that he will 'be my Procurator and Advocate and Judge of my Cause.

'Item, Know you, that they have as I suppose, no other 'quarrel against me, but only this, that I stood against the 'Popes Bull, which Pope John sent down to Boheme, to 'sanctifie war with the sign of the Cross and full remission 'of sins to all them which would take the holy Cross, to 'fight for the Patrimony of the Romish Church against 'Ladislaus King of Naples, and they have mine own writing 'which was read against me, and I do acknowledge it to be 'mine. Secondly, They have also against me, that I have 'continued so long in excommunication, and yet did take 'upon me to minister in the Church and say Mass. 'Thirdly, They have against me, because I did appeal from 'the Pope to Christ. For they read my appeal before me, 'the which with a willing mind, smiling, I confessed before 'them all to be mine. Fourthly, Because I left a certain Let- 'ter behind me, which was read in the Church of Bethleem, 'the which Letter my adversaries have very evil favouredly 'translated, and sinisterly expounded, in the which I did 'write that I went out with a safe conduct. Whereunto 'you your selves can say and bear me record, that I in my 'going out had no safe conduct of the Pope, neither yet 'did I know whether you should go out with me when I 'wrote that Letter.

'Item, If audience may be given to me, and that after the 'same audience the King would suffer me not to be retur- 'ned again into prison, but that I may have your Counsels 'and others my Friends; and if it may please God that I 'may say something to my soveraign Lord the King, for the 'behalf of Christianity, and for his own profit, &c.

Another Letter of John Hus, wherein he confirmeth the Bohemians, and describeth the wickedness of that Council.

Another Letter of John Hus.

'John Hus, in hope the servant of God, to all the faithful 'in Boheme, which love the Lord, greeting through the 'grace of God. It cometh in my mind, wherein I must needs 'admonish you, that be the faithful and beloved of the Lord, 'how that the Council of Constance being full of pride, ava- 'rice, and all abomination, hath condemned my Books writ- 'ten in the Boheme-Tongue for Heretical, which Books they 'never saw, nor ever heard them read. And if they had 'heard them, yet they could not understand the same, being 'some Italians, some Frenchmen, some Britains, some 'Spaniards, Germains, with other people of other Nations 'moe; unless peradventure John Bishop of Litomish under- 'stood them, which was present in that Council, and cer- 'tain other Bohemians, and Priests which are against me, 'and labour all they may how to deprave both the verity of 'God, and the honesty of our Country of Boheme. Which 'I judge in the hope of God, to be a godly Land, right well 'given to the true knowledge of the faith, for that it doth 'so greatly desire the Word of God, and honest manners. 'And if you were here at Constance, ye should see the grie- 'vous abomination of this Council, which they call so holy, 'and such as cannot erre. Of the which Council I have 'heard it by the Swechers reported, that the City of Con- 'stance is not able in thirty years to be purged of those 'abominations in that Council committed. And all be of- 'fended almost with that Council, being sore grieved to 'behold such execrable things perpetrate in the same.

The Coun- cil condemn Books which they understand not.

Praise of Bohemia.

The abomi- nation of the Council of Constance described.

'When I stood first to answer before mine adversaries, 'seeing all things there done with no order, and hearing 'them also outragiously crying out, I said plainly unto them, 'that I looked for more honest behaviour, and better or- 'der and discipline in that Council. Then the chief Cardi- 'nal answered, sayest thou so? But in the Tower thou spakest 'more modestly. To whom said I, In the Tower no man 'cried out against me, whereas now all do rage against me, 'My faithful and beloved in Christ, be not afraid with 'their sentence in condemning my Books. They shall be 'scattered hither and thither abroad, like light Butterflies, 'and their statutes shall endure as Spider-webs. They went 'about to shake my constancy from the verity of Christ: 'but they could not overcome the vertue of God in me. 'They would not reason with the Scripture against me, as 'divers honourable Lords can witness with me, which being 'ready to suffer contumely for the truth of God, took my 'part stoutly; namely Lord Wenceslaus de Duba, and Lord 'John de Clum: for they were let in by King Sigismund 'into the Council. And when I said, that I was desirous to 'be instructed if I did in any thing erre; then they heard 'the chief Cardinal answer again; Because thou wouldest 'be informed, there is no remedy but that thou must first 'revoke thy Doctrine according to the determination of Fif- 'ty Bachelors of Divinity appointed. O high instruction!

John Hus seemeth here to prophecy of the Council, as it came to pass.

The Coun- cil afraid to be tried by the Scriptures.

This Cardi- dal was Cardinal Cambrensis.

'After like manner S. Katherine also should have denied 'and revoked the verity of God and faith in Christ, because 'the fifty Masters likewise did withstand her: which not- 'withstanding, that good Virgin would never do, standing 'in her faith unto death: But she did win those her 'Masters unto Christ, when as I cannot win these my 'Masters by any means. These things I thought good to 'write unto you, that you might know how they have 'overcome me, with no grounded Scripture, nor with any 'reason: but only did assay with terrors and deceits to per- 'swade me to revoke and to abjure. But our merciful God, 'whose Law I have magnified, was and is with me, and 'I trust, so will continue, and will keep me in his grace 'unto death. Written at Constance after the Feast of John 'Baptist, in prison and in bands, daily looking for death; 'although for the secret Judgments of God, I dare not say 'whether this be my last Epistle: for now also Almighty 'God is able to deliver me.

S. Katharine disputed with fifty Doctors, converted them; but John Hus could not convert his fifty Doctors.

* Another Letter of John Hus, wherein he comforteth his Friends, and willeth them not to be troubled for the condemning of his Books: and alſo declareth the wickedneſs of the Clergy.

'MAſter John Hus, in hope the Servant of God, to all the Faithful which love him and his Statutes, wiſheth the Truth and Grace of God.

'Beloved, I thought it needful to warn that you ſhould not fear or be diſcouraged, becauſe the Adverſaries have decreed that my Books ſhall be burnt. Remember how the Iſraelites burned the preachings of the Prophet Jeremy, and yet they could not avoid the things that were propheſied of in them. For after they were burnt, the Lord commanded to write the ſame Propheſie again, and that larger, which was alſo done. For Jeremy ſitting in priſon ſpake, and Baruch which was ready at his hand, wrote. This is written either in the thirty fifth or forty fifth Chapter of the Viſion of Jeremy. It is alſo written in the Books of the Machabees, That the wicked did burn the Law of GOD, and killed them that had the ſame. Again, under the New Teſtament, they burned the Saints, with the Books of the Law of GOD. The Cardinals condemned and committed to fire certain of Saint Gregories Books, and had burnt them all if they had not been preſerved of GOD by the means of Peter Gregories Miniſter. Having theſe things before your eyes, take heed leſt through fear you omit to read my Books, and deliver them to the Adverſaries to be burnt. Remember the ſayings of our merciful Saviour, by which he forewarneth us, Matth. 24. There ſhall be (ſaith he) before the day of Judgment, great Tribulation, ſuch as was not from the beginning, until this day, neither ſhall be afterwards: So that even the Elect of God ſhould be deceived, if it were poſſible. But for their ſakes thoſe days ſhall be ſhortned. When you remember theſe things (beloved) be not afraid, for I truſt in GOD that that School of Antichriſt ſhall be afraid of you, and ſuffer you to be in quiet, neither ſhall the Council of Conſtance extend to Bohemia. For I think, that many of them which are of the Council, ſhall die before they ſhall get from you my Books. And they ſhall depart from the Council and be ſcattered abroad, throughout the parts of the World, like Storks, and then they ſhall know when Winter cometh, what they did in Summer. Conſider that they have judged their Head the Pope worthy of death, for many horrible Facts that he hath done. Go to now; Anſwer to this you Preachers, which Preach that the Pope is the god of the Earth, that he may, as the Lawyers ſay, make ſale of the holy things; that he is the Head of the whole holy Church, in verity well governing the ſame; that he is the heart of the Church in quickning the ſame ſpiritually: that he is the Well-ſpring from which floweth all vertue and goodneſs: that he is the Sun of the holy Church: that he is the ſafe Refuge to which every Chriſtian man ought to fly for Succour. Behold now that Head is cut off with the Sword, now the god of the Earth is bound, now his Sins are declared openly, now that Well-ſpring is dried up, that Sun darked, that Heart is plucked out and thrown away, leſt that any man ſhould ſeek ſuccour thereat. The Council hath condemned that Head, and that for this offence, becauſe he took money for Indulgences, Biſhopricks, and other ſuch like. But they condemned him by Order of Judgment which were themſelves the Buyers and Sellers of the ſame Merchandiſe. There was preſent John Biſhop of Lytomiſſia, who went twice about to buy the Biſhoprick of Prague, but others prevented him. O wicked men, why did they not firſt caſt out the beam of their own eyes? Theſe men have accurſed and condemned the Seller, but they themſelves which were the Buyers and Conſenters to the Bargain, are without danger. What ſhall I ſay, that they do uſe this manner of buying and ſelling at home in their own Countries? For at Conſtance there is one Biſhop that bought, and another which ſold, and the Pope for allowing of both their Facts took Bribes on both ſides. It came ſo to paſs in Bohemia alſo as you know. I would that in that Council God had ſaid, He that amongſt you is without ſin let him give the Sentence againſt Pope John; Then ſurely they had gone all out of the Council-houſe, one after another. Why did they bow the knee to him always, before this his fall, kiſs his Feet, and call him The moſt holy Father, ſeeing they ſaw apparently before, that he was an Heretick, that he was a Killer, that he was a wicked Sinner, all which things now they have found in him? Why did the Chardinals chooſe him to be Pope, knowing before that he had killed the holy Father? Why ſuffered they him to meddle with holy things, in bearing the Office of the Popedom? for to this end they are his Counſellors, that they ſhould admoniſh him of that which is right. Are not they themſelves as guilty of theſe faults as he? ſeeing that they accounted theſe things Vices in him, and were partakers of ſome of them themſelves? Why durſt no man lay ought to his charge, before he had fled from Conſtance, but as ſoon as the ſecular power, by the ſufferance of God, laid hold upon him, then, and never afore, they conſpired all together that he ſhould not live any longer? Surely, even at this day is the malice, the abomination and filthineſs of Antichriſt revealed in the Pope and others of this Council.

'Now the faithful Servants of GOD may underſtand what our Saviour Chriſt meant by this ſaying, When you ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, which is ſpoken of by Daniel, &c. who ſo can underſtand it, &c. Surely, theſe be great Abominations, pride, covetouſneſs, ſimony, ſitting in a ſolitary place; that is to ſay, in a Dignity without of goodneſs, of humility, and other vertues; as we do now clearly ſee in thoſe that are conſtituted in any Office and Dignity. O how acceptable a thing ſhould it be (if time would ſuffer me) to diſcloſe their wicked acts, which are now apparent, that the faithful Servants of God might know them? I truſt in God that he will ſend after me thoſe that ſhall be more valiant; and there are alive at this day, that ſhall make more manifeſt the malice of Antichriſt, and ſhall give their lives to the death for the truth of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall give both to you and me the joys of life everlaſting. This Epiſtle was written upon S. John Baptiſts-day in priſon and in cold Irons, having this meditation with my ſelf, that John was beheaded in his priſon and bonds, for the word of God.

Another Letter of John Hus.

'John Hus in hope the Servant of GOD, to all the faithful at Boheme, which love the Lord, wiſheth to ſtand and die in the Grace of God, and at laſt to attain unto eternal life.

'Ye that bear Rule over other and be rich, and ye alſo that be poor, welbeloved and faithful in God, I beſeech you, and admoniſh you all, that ye will be obedient unto God, make much of his Word, and gladly hearing the ſame, will humbly perform that which ye hear. I beſeech you ſtick faſt to the verity of Gods Word, which I have written and preached unto you out of his Law, and the Sermons of his Saints. Alſo I deſire you if any man either in publick Sermon, or in private talk heard of me any thing, or have read any thing written by me which is againſt the verity of God, that he do not follow the ſame. Albeit I do not find my conſcience guilty that I ever have ſpoken or written any ſuch thing amongſt you.

'I deſire you moreover if any man at any time have noted any levity either in my talk or in my conditions, that he do not follow the ſame; but pray to GOD for me, to pardon me that ſin of lightneſs. I pray you that ye will love your Prieſts and Miniſters, which be of honeſt behaviour, to prefer and honour them before others; namely, ſuch Prieſts as travel in the Word of God. I pray you take heed to your ſelves, and beware of malicious and deceitful men, and eſpecially of theſe wicked Prieſts of whom our Saviour doth ſpeak, That they are under ſheeps clothing, and inwardly are ravening Wolves. I pray ſuch as be Rulers and Superiors, to behave themſelves gently towards their poor Inferiors, and to Rule them juſtly. I beſeech the Citizens that they will walk every man in his degree and vocation with an upright conſcience. The Artificers alſo I beſeech, that they will

'exerciſe their Occupations diligently, and uſe them with 'the fear of GOD. I beſeech the Servants, that they will ſerve their Maſters faithfully. And likewiſe the School-Maſters I beſeech, that they living honeſtly will bring up their Scholars vertuouſly, and teach them faithfully, firſt to learn to fear God; then for the glory of God and the publick utility of the Commonwealth, and their own health, and not for avarice or for worldly honour, to employ their minds to honeſt Arts. I beſeech the Students of the Univerſity and all Schools, in all honeſt things to obey their Maſters, and to follow them, and that with all diligence they will ſtudy to be profitable both to the ſetting forth of the Glory of God, and to the Souls health, as well of themſelves, as of other men. Together I beſeech and pray you all, that you will yield moſt hearty thanks to the right honourable Lords, the Lord Wencelaus de Duba, Lord John de Clum, Lord Henry Lumlovio, Lord Vilem Zagecio, Lord Nicholas, and other Lords of Boheme, of Moravia and Polonie; that their 'diligence towards me may be grateful to all good men; 'becauſe that they, like valiant Champions of Gods truth, 'have oftentimes ſet themſelves againſt the whole Council 'for my deliverance, contending and ſtanding againſt the 'ſame to the uttermoſt of their power; but eſpecially 'Lord Wencelaus de Duba, and Lord John de Clum. 'Whatſoever they ſhall report unto you, give credit unto 'them; for they were in the Council when I there anſwered many. They know who they were of Bohemia, 'and how many falſe and ſlanderous things they brought 'in againſt me, and that Council cried out againſt me, and 'how I alſo anſwered to all things whereof I was demanded. I beſeech you alſo that ye will pray for the King of 'Romans, and for your King, and for his Wife your Queen, 'that God of his mercy would abide with them and with 'you, both now and henceforth in everlaſting life. Amen.

all noble men to pray and to follow.

'This Epiſtle I have written to you out of priſon and 'in bonds, looking the next day after the writing hereof 'for the ſentence of the Council upon my death; having 'a full truſt that he will not leave me, neither ſuffer me 'to deny his truth, and to revoke the errors, which falſe 'Witneſſes maliciouſly have deviſed againſt me. How mer-'cifully the Lord God hath dealt with me, and was with 'me in marvelous temptations, ye ſhall know when as 'hereafter by the help of Chriſt we ſhall all meet together 'in the joy of the World to come. As concerning Maſter 'Hierome my dearly beloved Brother and Fellow, I hear no 'other but that he is remaining in ſtrait bonds, looking for 'death as I do; and that for the Faith which he valiantly 'maintained amongſt the Bohemians, our cruel enemies of 'Boheme have given us into the power and hands of other 'enemies, and into bands. I beſeech you pray to God for 'them.

'Moreover, I beſeech you, namely you of Prague, that 'ye will love the Temple of Bethlehem, and provide ſo 'long as God ſhall permit, that the Word of God may be 'preached in the ſame. For, becauſe of that place, the 'Devil is angry, and againſt the ſame place he hath ſtirred 'up Prieſts and Canons, perceiving that in that place his 'Kingdom ſhould be diſturbed and diminiſhed. I truſt in 'God that he will keep that holy Church ſo long as it ſhall 'pleaſe him, and in the ſame ſhall give greater increaſe of 'his Word by other, than he hath done by me a weak 'Veſſel. I beſeech you alſo, that ye will love one another, 'and withholding no man from the hearing of Gods 'Word, ye will provide and take care that good men be not 'oppreſſed by any force and violence. Written at Conſtance, the year of our Lord, 1415.

¶ Another right godly Letter of John Hus to a certain Prieſt admoniſhing him of his Office, and exhorting him to be faithful; worthy to be read of all Miniſters.

A worthy Leſſon for all Miniſters and Prelates.

THE peace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. My dear Brother be diligent in preaching the Goſpel, and do the work of a good Evangeliſt; neglect not your vocation; labour like a bleſſed Souldier of Chriſt. Firſt, live godly and holily. Secondly, teach faithfully and truly. Thirdly, be an example to other in well-doing, that you be not reprehended in your ſayings; correct Vice and ſet forth Vertue. To evil Livers threaten eternal puniſhment; but to thoſe that be faithful and godly, ſet forth the comforts of eternal joy. Preach continually, but be ſhort and fruitful, prudently underſtanding, and diſcreetly diſpenſing the holy Scriptures. Never affirm or maintain thoſe things that be uncertain and doubtful, leſt that your Adverſaries take hold upon you, which rejoyce in depraving their Brethren, whereby they may bring the Miniſters of God into contempt. Exhort men to the confeſſion of their Faith, and to the communion of both kinds, both of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, whereby ſuch as do repent earneſtly of their ſins, may the more often come to the holy Communion. And I warn you that you enter into no Taverns with Gueſts, and be not a common Company-keeper. For the more a Preacher keepeth him from the company of men, the more he is regarded. Albeit, deny not yet your help and diligence, whereſoever you may profit other. Againſt fleſhly luſt preach continually all that ever you can; For that is the raging Beaſt, which devoureth men, for whom the Fleſh of Chriſt did ſuffer. Wherefore my heartily beloved, I beſeech you to fly Fornication; for whereas a man would moſt profit and do good, there this Vice uſeth moſt to lurk. In any caſe fly the company of young women, and believe not their devotion; For S. Auſtin ſaith, The more devout ſhe is, the more proclive to wantonneſs, and under the pretence of Religion the ſnare and venome of Fornication lurketh. And this know my welbeloved, that the Converſation with them ſubverteth many, whom the Converſation of this World could never blemiſh nor beguile. Admit no Women into your houſe, for what cauſe ſoever it be, and have not much talk with them otherwiſe, for avoiding of offence. Finally, howſoever you do, fear God and keep his Precepts; ſo ſhall you walk wiſely, and ſhall not periſh; ſo ſhall you ſubdue the Fleſh, contemn the World, and overcome the Devil; ſo ſhall you put on God, find life, and confirm other, and ſhall crown your ſelf with the Crown of Glory, the which the juſt Judge ſhall give you. Amen.

S. Auguſtine meaneth not here of all, but of the common ſort of light perſons.

'HEalth be to you from Jeſus Chriſt, &c. My dear friend, 'I know that Paletz came to me to perſwade me 'that I ſhould not fear the ſhame of abjuration, but to con-'ſider the good which thereof will come. To whom I ſaid, 'That the ſhame of condemnation and burning is greater 'than to abjure; and why ſhould I fear then that ſhame? 'But I pray you tell me plainly your mind: Preſuppoſe 'that ſuch Articles were laid to you, which you knew your 'ſelf not to be true; what would you do in that caſe? 'would you abjure? Who anſwered, The caſe is ſore, and 'began to weep. Many other things he ſpake which I did 'reprehend. Michael de Cauſis was ſometimes before in 'the priſon with the Deputies. And when I was with the 'Deputies, thus I heard him ſpeak unto the Keepers, We 'by the Grace of God will burn this Heretick ſhortly, for 'whoſe cauſe I have ſpent many Florens. But yet under-'ſtand that I write not this to the intent to revenge me of 'him, for that I have committed to God, and pray to God 'for him with all my heart.

This Paletz was the chiefeſt enemy of John Hus, and procurer of his death.

Michael de Cauſis another bitter enemy of John Hus. John Hus prayeth for his enemies.

'Yet I exhort you again, to be circumſpect about our 'Letters. For Michael hath taken ſuch order, that none 'ſhall be ſuffered to come into the priſon; no nor yet the 'Keepers wives are permitted to come to me. O holy 'God, how largely doth Antichriſt extend his power and 'cruelty? But I truſt that his Power ſhall be ſhortned, and 'his Iniquity ſhall be detected more and more amongſt the 'faithful people.

A Propheſie of J. Hus.

'Almighty God ſhall confirm the hearts of his Faithful, 'whom he hath choſen before the conſtitution of the 'world, that they may receive the eternal Crown of Glory. 'And let Antichriſt rage ſo much as he will, yet he ſhall 'not prevail againſt Chriſt, which ſhall deſtroy him with 'the ſpirit of his mouth, as the Apoſtle ſaith; and then 'ſhall the Creature be delivered out of ſervitude of corrup-'tion, into the liberty of the glory of the Sons of God, as 'ſaith the Apoſtle in the words following. We alſo within

'our

'our ſelves do groan, waiting for the Adoption of the Sons 'of God, the redemption of our Body.

'I am greatly comforted in thoſe words of our Saviour, 'Happy be you when men ſhall hate you, and ſhall ſeparate 'you, and ſhall rebuke you, and ſhall caſt out your name as 'execrable, for the Son of man: Rejoyce and be glad, for 'behold, great is your reward in Heaven, Luke 6. O wor- 'thy, yea O moſt worthy Conſolation, which not to un- 'derſtand, but to practiſe in time of Tribulation, is a hard 'Leſſon.

The example of Chriſt

'This rule Saint James, with the other Apoſtles, did 'well underſtand, which ſaith, Count it exceeding joy my 'Brethren, when ye ſhall fall into divers temptations, 'knowing that the probation of your Faith worketh Pati- 'ence; let Patience have her perfect work. For certainly 'it is a great matter for a man to rejoyce in trouble, and to 'take it for joy to be in divers temptations. A light mat- 'ter it is to ſpeak it and to expound it; but a great matter 'to fulfil it. For why? our moſt patient and moſt valiant 'Champion himſelf, knowing that he ſhould ariſe again 'the third day, overcoming his Enemies by his death, and 'redeeming from damnation his Elect after his laſt Sup- 'per, was troubled in Spirit, and ſaid, My Soul is heavy 'unto death. Of whom alſo the Goſpel ſaith, That he be- 'gan to fear to be ſad and heavy. Who being then in 'an Agony, was confirmed of the Angel, and his ſweat 'was like the drops of blood falling upon the ground. And 'yet he notwithſtanding, being ſo troubled, ſaid to his 'Diſciples, Let not your hearts be troubled, neither fear the 'cruelty of them that perſecute you, for you ſhall have me 'with you always, that you may overcome the tyranny of 'your Perſecutors. Whereupon thoſe his Souldiers, look- 'ing upon the Prince and King of Glory, ſuſtained great 'Conflicts. They paſſed thorow fire and water, and were 'ſaved, and received the Crown of the Lord God, of the 'which Saint James in his Canonical Epiſtle, ſaith, Bleſ- 'ſed is the man ſuffereth temptation, for when he ſhall be 'proved, he ſhall receive the Crown of life, which God 'hath promiſed to them that love. Of this Crown I truſt 'ſtedfaſtly the Lord will make me a partaker alſo with you, 'which be the fervent Sealers of the Truth, and with all 'them which ſtedfaſtly and conſtantly do love the Lord 'Jeſus Chriſt, which ſuffered for us, leaving to us exam- 'ple that we ſhould follow his ſteps. It behoved him to 'ſuffer, as he ſaith, and us alſo it behoved to ſuffer, that 'the Members may ſuffer together with the Head. For he 'ſaith, If any man will come after me, let him deny him- 'ſelf, and take up his Croſs, and follow me.

The Prayer of John Hus to Chriſt.

'O moſt merciful Chriſt, draw us weak Creatures af- 'ter thee, for except thou ſhould draw us, we are not able 'to follow thee. Give us a ſtrong ſpirit, that it may be 'ready, and although the Fleſh be feeble, yet let thy 'Grace go before us, go with us, and follow us; for 'without thee we can do nothing, and much leſs enter 'into the cruel death for thy ſake. Give us that prompt 'and ready ſpirit, a bold heart, an upright faith, a firm 'hope and perfect charity, that we may give our lives 'patiently and joyfully for thy Names ſake, Amen. Writ- 'ten in priſon in bonds in the Vigil of S. John the Baptiſt, 'who being in priſon and in bonds for the rebuking of 'wickedneſs, was beheaded.

¶ Among divers other Letters of John Hus, which he wrote to the great Conſolation of others; I thought alſo here to intermix another certain godly Letter written out of England, by a faithful Scholar of Wickliff, as appeareth unto John Hus and the Bohemians, which for the zealous affection therein contained, ſeemeth not unworthy to be read.

A Letter to John Hus, and to the Bohemians from London.

A zealous Letter to John Hus from London.

'GReeting, and whatſoever can be deviſed more 'ſweet, in the bowels of Chriſt Jeſus. My dearly 'beloved in the Lord, whom I love in the truth, and not 'I only, but alſo all they that have the Knowledge of the 'Truth; which abideth in you, and ſhall be with you 'through the Grace of God for evermore. I rejoyced 'above meaſure, when our beloved Brethren came and 'gave teſtimony unto us of your truth, and how you walked 'in the truth; I have heard Brethren how ſharply Anti- {KING Hen. 5.} 'chriſt perſecuteth you, in vexing the faithful Servants of 'Chriſt with divers and ſtrange kinds of afflictions. And 'ſurely no marvel, if amongſt you (ſince it is ſo almoſt all the 'world over) the Law of Chriſt be too too grievouſly im- 'pugned, and that red Dragon having ſo many heads (of 'whom it is ſpoken in the Apocalyps) have now vomited 'out of his mouth that great Flood, by which he goeth 'about to ſwallow up the Women; but the moſt gracious 'God will deliver for ever his only and moſt faithful 'Spouſe. Let us therefore comfort our ſelves in the Lord 'our God, and in his unmeaſurable goodneſs, hoping 'ſtrongly in him, which will not ſuffer thoſe that love him 'to be unmercifully defrauded of any their purpoſe, if we 'according to our duty ſhall love him with all our heart; 'for adverſity ſhould by no means prevail over us, if there 'were no iniquity reigning in us. Let therefore no tribu- 'lation or ſorrow for Chriſts cauſe diſcourage us, knowing 'this for a ſurety, that whomſoever the Lord vouchſafeth 'to receive to be his Children, thoſe he ſcourgeth, for ſo 'the merciful Father will have them tried in this miſerable 'life by perſecutions, that afterwards he may ſpare them. For 'the gold that this high Artificer hath choſen, he purgeth and 'trieth in this fire, that he may afterwards lay it up in his 'pure treaſury. For we ſee that the time we ſhall abide here 'is ſhort and tranſitory; the life which we hope for after this 'is bleſſed and everlaſting. Therefore whilſt we have time, 'let us take pain that we may enter into that reſt. What 'other thing do we ſee in this brittle life, than ſorrow, hea- 'vineſs and ſadneſs, and that which is moſt grievous of all 'to the Faithful, too much abuſing and contempt of the 'Law of the Lord? Let us therefore endeavour our ſelves, 'as much as we may, to lay hold of the things that are 'eternal and abiding, deſpiſing in our minds all tranſitory 'and frail things. Let us conſider the holy fellowſhip of our 'Fathers that have gone before us. Let us conſider the 'Saints of the Old and New Teſtament. Did they not paſs Examples of the old Martyrs. 'through this Sea of Tribulation and Perſecution? were 'not ſome of them cut in pieces, otherſome ſtoned, and 'other of them killed with the Sword? ſome others of 'them went about in Pelts and Goats skins, as the Apoſtle 'to the Hebrews witneſſeth. Surely they all walked ſtrait- 'ways, following the ſteps of Chriſt, which ſaid, He that 'miniſtreth unto me, let him follow me whereſoever I go, '&c. Therefore let us alſo, which have ſo noble Examples 'given us of the Saints that went before us, laying away, as 'much as in us lieth, the heavy burden and the yoke of ſin 'which compaſſeth us about, run forward through patience, 'to the battel that is ſet before us, fixing our eyes upon the 'Author of Faith, and Jeſus the Finiſher of the ſame; who, 'ſeeing the joy that was ſet before him, ſuffered the pains of 'the Croſs, deſpiſing death. Let us call upon him, which 'ſuffered ſuch reproach againſt himſelf of Sinners, that we 'be not wearied, fainting in our hearts, but that we may 'heartily pray for help of the Lord, and may fight againſt 'his Adverſary Antichriſt; that we may love his Law, and 'not be deceitful Labourers, but that we may deal faithfully 'in all things, according to that which God hath vouch- 'ſafed to give us, and that we may labour diligently in the 'Lords Cauſe, under hope of an everlaſting Reward. Be- 'hold therefore Brother Hus, moſt dearly beloved in Chriſt, 'although in face unknown to me, yet not in faith and love, '(for diſtance of places cannot ſeparate thoſe whom the 'love of Chriſt doth effectually knit together) be comforted 'in the grace which is given unto thee, labour like a good 'Souldier of Chriſt Jeſus, preach, be inſtant in word and in 'example, and call as many as thou canſt to the way of 'truth; for the truth of the Goſpel is not to be kept in 'ſilence, becauſe of the frivolous Cenſures and Thunderbolts 'of Antichriſt. And therefore to the uttermoſt of thy power, 'ſtrengthen thou and confirm the Members of Chriſt, which 'are weakned by the Devil; and if the Lord will vouchſafe 'it, Antichriſt ſhall ſhortly come to an end. And there 'is one thing wherein I do greatly rejoyce, that in your 'Realm and in other places God hath ſtirred up the hearts 'of ſome men that they can gladly ſuffer, for the Word of 'God, Impriſonment, Baniſhment and Death.

'Further, beloved, I know not what to write unto you, 'but I confeſs that I could wiſh to pour out my whole 'heart, if thereby I might comfort you in the Law of the 'Lord. Alſo I ſalute from the bottom of my heart all the faithful {KING Hen. 5.} ‘faithful Lovers of the Law of the Lord, and ſpecially Jacobellus your Coadjutor in the Goſpel, requiring that he ‘will pray unto the Lord for me in the univerſal Church ‘of Jeſus Chriſt. And the God of peace which hath raiſed ‘from the dead the Shepherd of the ſheep, the mighty Lord ‘Jeſus Chriſt, make you apt in all goodneſs, to do his will, ‘working in you that which may be pleaſant in his ſight. ‘All your Friends ſalute you which have heard of your ‘conſtancy, I would deſire alſo to ſee your Letters written ‘back to us, for know ye that they ſhall greatly comfort ‘us.

Another Letter of John Hus to his Friends of Boheme.

‘THe Lord God be with you. I love the counſel of the Lord above gold and precious ſtone. Wherefore I ‘truſt in the mercy of Jeſus Chriſt, that he will give me ‘his Spirit to ſtand in his truth. Pray to the Lord, For the ſpirit is ready, and the fleſh is weak. The Lord Almighty ‘be the eternal reward unto my Lords, which conſtantly, ‘firmly and faithfully do ſtand for righteouſneſs; to whom ‘the Lord God ſhall give in the Kingdom of Boheme, to ‘know the truth. For the following of which truth, ne‘ceſſary it is that they return again into Boheme, ſetting ‘apart all vain-glory, and following not a mortal and mi‘ſerable King, but the King of Glory which giveth eternal ‘life.

‘O how comfortable was the giving of the hand of Lord ‘John de Clum unto me, which was not aſhamed to reach ‘forth his hand to me a Wretch, and ſuch an abject He‘retick, lying in fetters of Iron, and cried out upon all men! ‘Now peradventure I ſhall not ſpeak much hereafter with ‘you: Therefore ſalute in time as you ſhall ſee them all ‘the faithful of Boheme.

‘Paletz came to me into priſon. His ſalutation in my ‘vehement infirmity was this before the Commiſſaries, ‘that there hath not riſen a more perilous Heretick ſince ‘Chriſt was born, than was Wickliff and I. Alſo he ſaid, ‘That all ſuch as came to hear my talk were infected with ‘this Hereſie, to think that the ſubſtance of bread remained ‘in the Sacrament of the Altar. To whom I anſwered and ‘ſaid, O Maſter what a grievous Salutation have you ‘given me, and how greatly do you ſin? Behold I ſhall ‘die, or peradventure to morrow ſhall be burnt; And what ‘reward ſhall be recompenced to you in Boheme for your ‘labour.

‘This thing peradventure I ſhould not have written, leſt ‘I might ſeem to hate him. I have always had this in my ‘heart, Truſt not in Princes, &c. And again, Curſed be the ‘man that truſteth in man, and maketh fleſh to be his arm. ‘For God ſake be you circumſpect how you ſtand and ‘how you return. Carry no Letters with you. Direct your ‘Books not all by one, but diverſly by divers Friends.

The viſions of John Hus by dreams.

‘Know this, for certain, that I have had great conflicts ‘by dreams, in ſuch ſort as I had much ado to refrain from ‘crying out. For I dreamed of the Popes eſcape before he ‘went. And after the Lord John had told me thereof, ‘immediately in the night it was told me, That the Pope ‘ſhould return to you again. And afterward alſo I dream‘ed of the apprehending of Maſter Jerome, although not ‘in full manner as it was done. All the priſonments, whi‘ther and how I am carried, were opened to me before, ‘although not fully after the ſame form and circumſtance. ‘Many Serpents oftentimes appeared unto me, having ‘heads alſo in their tail; but none of them could bite me, ‘and many other things more.

A Propheſie of Maſter Hierome of Prague.

‘Theſe things I write, not eſteeming my ſelf as a Pro‘phet, or that I extol my ſelf, but only to ſignifie unto you ‘what temptations I had in body and alſo in mind, and ‘what great fear I had, leſt I ſhould tranſgreſs the Com‘mandment of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Now I remember ‘with my ſelf the words of Maſter Jerome, which ſaid, ‘That if I ſhould come to the Council, he thought I ſhould ‘never return home again. In like manner there was a This Tay‘lors name was Andrew a Polonian. ‘good and godly man, a Taylor, which taking his leave of ‘me at Prague, ſpake to me in theſe words, God be with ‘you (ſaid he) for I think verily, my dear and good Maſter ‘John, that you ſhall not return again to us with your life. ‘The King, not of Hungary, but of Heaven, reward you ‘with all goodneſs, for the faithful Doctrine which I at ‘your hands received, &c.

¶ And ſhortly after the writing hereof, he ſendeth alſo unto them another Prophetical Viſion of his to be expounded touching the reformation of the Church, written in his forty fourth Epiſtle, the Contents whereof be theſe.

Another Letter of John Hus, ſent to the Lord John de Clum.

I Pray you expound to me the dream of this night, I ſaw how that in my Church of Bethlehem they came to race and put out all the Images of Chriſt, and did put them out. The next day after I aroſe and ſaw many Painters, which painted and made more fairer Images, and many more than I had done before, which Images I was very glad and joyful to behold. And the Painters, with much people about them, ſaid, Let the Biſhops and Prieſts come now, and put us out theſe Pictures. Which being done, much people ſeemed to me in Bethlehem to rejoyce, and I with them. And I awaking therewith felt my ſelf to laugh, &c.

Propheti.

¶ This Viſion Lord John de Clum, and John Hus himſelf in his Book of Epiſtles in the forty fifth Epiſtle ſeemeth to expound, and applieth the Images of Chriſt unto the preaching of Chriſt and of his life. The which preaching and Doctrine of Chriſt, though the Pope and his Cardinals ſhould extinguiſh in him, yet did he foreſee and declare, that the time ſhould come, wherein the ſame Doctrine ſhould be revived again by others, ſo plenteouſly, that the Pope with all his Power ſhould not be able to prevail againſt it. Thus much as concerning this Viſion of J. Hus. Whereunto doth well accord the Propheſie of Jerome of Prague, printed in the Coin called Moneta Huſſi; of the which Coin I have my ſelf one of the Plates having this Superſcription following printed about it; Centum revolutis annis Deo reſpondebitis & mihi, that is, after an hundred years come and gone, you ſhall give account to God and to me. Whereof (God willing) more ſhall be ſaid hereafter.

Furthermore, in the 48*th* Epiſtle the ſaid J. Hus ſeeming to ſpeak with the like Spirit of Propheſie, hath theſe words following, Sed ſpero, quod quæ dixi ſub tecto, prædicabuntur ſuper tecta: That is, but I truſt that thoſe things which I have ſpoken within the houſe, hereafter ſhall be preached upon the top of the houſe. Propheti.

And becauſe we are here in hand with the Propheſies of John Hus, it ſhall ſerve well in place, here moreover to record his words in a certain Treatiſe by him written, De Sacerdotum & Monachorum carnalium abominatione; wherein the ſaid John Hus, ſpeaking prophetically of the Reformation of the Church, hath theſe words following, Ex iſtis ulterius adverte incidentaliter, quod Dei Eccleſia nequit ad priſtinam ſuam dignitatem reduci, &c.

That is in Engliſh.

Moreover, hereupon note and mark by the way, that the Church of God cannot be reduced to his former Dignity, or be reformed, before all things firſt be made new; The truth whereof is plain by the Temple of Solomon. Like as the Clergy and Prieſts, ſo alſo the people and laity; Or elſe unleſs all ſuch as now be addict to avarice, from the leaſt to the moſt, be firſt converted and reclaimed, as well the people as Clergy and Prieſts. Albeit as my mind now giveth me, I believe rather the firſt, that is, that then ſhall riſe a new people, formed after the new man, which is created after God. Of the which people new Clerks and Prieſts ſhall come, and be taken; which all ſhall hate covetouſneſs, and the glory of this life, haſtening to an heavenly converſation. Notwithſtanding all theſe things ſhall come to paſs, and be brought by little and little in order of times, diſpenſed of God for the ſame purpoſe. And this God doth and will do for his own goodneſs and mercy, and for the riches of his great longanimity and patience, giving time and ſpace of repentance to them that have long lien in their ſins, to amend, and fly from the face of the Lords fury, while that, in like manner the carnal people, and carnal Prieſts ſucceſſively and in time ſhall fall away and be conſumed as with the moth, &c. Propheti.

Another

Another Letter of John Hus.

MAfter Martin my dear Brother in Chriſt, I exhort you in the Lord that you fear God, keep his Commandments, and flee the company of women, and beware of hearing their confeſſion, leſt by the hypocriſie of women Satan deceive you; truſt not their devotion. You know how I have deteſted the avarice and the inordinate life of the Clergy: wherefore through the Grace of God I ſuffer now Perſecution, which ſhortly ſhall be conſummate in me, neither do I fear to have my heart poured out for the Name of Chriſt Jeſus; I deſire you heartily be not greedy in ſeeking after Benefices. And yet if you ſhall be called to any Cure in the Country, let the Honour of God, the Salvation of Souls, and the travel thereof move you thereunto, and not the having of the Living or the Commodities thereof. And if you ſhall be placed in any ſuch Benefice, beware you have no young Woman for your Cook or Servant, leſt you edifie and increaſe more your Houſe than your Soul. See that you be a builder of your ſpiritual Houſe, being gentle to the Poor and humble of mind, and waſte not your Goods in great fare. I fear alſo if you do not amend your life, ceaſing from your coſtly and ſuperfluous Apparel, leſt you ſhall be grievouſly chaſtiſed, as I alſo wretched man ſhall be puniſhed, which have uſed the like, being ſeduced by cuſtom of evil men and worldly glory, whereby I have been wounded againſt God with the Spirit of Pride. And becauſe you have notably known both my preaching and outward Converſation even from my Youth, I have no need to write many things unto you, but to deſire you for the mercy of Jeſus Chriſt, that you do not follow me in any ſuch levity and lightneſs, which you have ſeen in me. You knew how before my Prieſthood (which grieveth me now) I have delighted to play oftentimes at Cheſs, and have neglected my time, and have unhappily provoked both my ſelf and other to anger many times by that play. Wherefore beſides other my innumerable faults, for this alſo I deſire you to invocate the mercy of the Lord, that he will pardon me, and ſo direct my life, that having overcome the wickedneſs of this preſent Life, the Fleſh, the World, and the Devil, I may find place in the heavenly Countrey, at the leaſt in the day of Judgment. Fare ye well in Chriſt Jeſus, with all of them which keep his Law. My grey Coat, if you will, keep to your ſelf for my remembrance, but I think you are aſhamed to wear that grey colour; therefore you may give it to whom you ſhall think good. My white Coat you ſhall give the Miniſter N. my Scholar. To George or elſe to Zuzikon ſixty Groats, or elſe my grey Coat, for he hath faithfully ſerved me.

Note that then Prieſts were not married, and therefore he willeth them to avoid the company of Women.

He repenteth his gay Garments.

He repenteth his playing at the Cheſs.

John Hus from his gay Garments cometh to his white Coat.

℄ The Superſcription.

I pray you that you do not open this Letter, before you be ſure and certain of my death.

The Conſolation of Maſter Jerome to Maſter Hus.

MY Maſter, in thoſe things which you have both written hitherto, and alſo preached after the Law of God againſt the pride, avarice, and other inordinate Vices of the Prieſts, go forward, be conſtant and ſtrong. And if I ſhall know that you are oppreſſed in the cauſe, and if need ſhall ſo require, of mine own accord I will follow after to help you, as much as I can.

John Hus condemned for no erroneous Doctrine wherein he was culpable.

BY the Life, Acts and Letters of John Hus hitherto rehearſed, it is evident and plain, that he was condemned not for any error of Doctrine, which they could well prove in him, who neither denied their Popiſh Tranſubſtantiation, neither ſpake againſt the authority of the Church of Rome, if it were well governed, nor yet the ſeven Sacraments, and alſo ſaid Maſs himſelf, and almoſt in all their Popiſh opinions was a Papiſt with them; but only of evil will was accuſed of his malicious Adverſaries, becauſe he ſpake againſt the Pomp, Pride and Avarice, and other wicked Enormities of the Pope, Cardinals and Prelates of the Church, and becauſe he could not abide the high Dignities and Livings of the Church, and thought the doings of the Pope to be Antichriſt-like. For this cauſe he procured ſo many enemies and falſe Witneſſes againſt him. Who ſtraining and picking matter out of his Books and Writings, having no one juſt Article of Doctrine to lay unto him, yet they made him an Heretick, whether he would or no, and brought him to his condemnation. This can hatred and malice do, where the charity of Chriſt hath no place. Which being ſo, as thy charity (good Reader) may eaſily underſtand, in peruſing the whole courſe of his ſtory; I beſeech thee then, what cauſe had John Cochleus to write his twelve Books againſt J. Hus and Huſſites? In which Books how bitterly and intemperately he miſuſeth his Pen, by theſe few words in his ſecond Book thou mayſt take a little taſte: which words I thought here briefly to place in Engliſh, to the end that all Engliſhmen may judge thereby, with what ſpirit and truth theſe Catholicks be carried. His words be theſe, Lib. 2. Hiſt. Dico igitur Joan. Hus neque ſanctum neque beatum habendum eſſe, ſed impium potius, &c. That is, I ſay therefore John Hus is neither to be counted holy nor bleſſed, but rather wicked and eternally wretched; inſomuch that in the day of Judgment it ſhall be more eaſie not only with the infidel Pagans, Turks, Tartarians and Jews, but alſo with the moſt ſinful Sodomites, and the abominable Perſians, which moſt filthily do lie with their Daughters, Siſters, or Mother, yea and alſo with moſt impious Cain, Killer of his own Brother, with Thieſtes, Killer of his own Mother, and the Leſtrygones and other Anthropophagi, which devour mans fleſh; yea more eaſie with thoſe infamous Murderers of Infants, Pharaoh and Herod, than with him, &c. Theſe be the words of Cochleus. Whoſe railing Books although they deſerve neither to be read nor anſwered, yet if it pleaſe God, it were to be wiſhed, that the Lord would ſtir up ſome towardly young man, that hath leiſure, to defend the ſimplicity of this J. Hus, which cannot now anſwer for himſelf. In the mean time, ſomething to ſatisfie or ſtay the Readers mind againſt this immoderate Hyperbole of Cochleus, in like few words I will bring out John Hus to ſpeak and to clear himſelf againſt this ſlander: whoſe words in his Book De Sacerdotum & Monachorum abominatione deſolationis, pag. 84. &c. I beſeech the Reader to note, Nam & iſta ſcribens Ego non, quod nihil aliud me in illis perurget, niſi dilectio Dom. noſtri Jeſu Crucifixi, &c. That is, For in writing theſe things, I confeſs nothing elſe to have moved me hereunto, but only the love of our Lord Jeſus crucified, whoſe prints and ſtripes (according to the meaſure of my weakneſs and vileneſs) I covet to bear in my ſelf, beſeeching him ſo to give me Grace, that I never ſeek to glory in my ſelf, or in any thing elſe, but only in his Croſs, and in the ineſtimable ignominy of his Paſſion which he ſuffered for me. And therefore I write and ſpeak theſe things, which I do not doubt will like all ſuch as unfainedly do love the Lord Chriſt crucified; and contrary will miſlike not a little all ſuch as be of Antichriſt. Alſo again, I confeſs before the moſt merciful Lord Jeſus Chriſt crucified, that theſe things which I do now write, and thoſe that I have written before, neither I could have written, nor knew how, nor durſt ſo have written, unleſs he by his inward unction had ſo commanded me. Neither yet do I write theſe things as of authority, to get me fame and name. For as S. Auguſtine and Hierome do ſay, that is only to be given to the Scriptures and Writings of the Apoſtles, Evangeliſts and Prophets, and to the Canonical Scriptures, which do abound in the fulneſs of the Spirit of Jeſus. And whatſoever is there ſaid, is full of verity and wholſome utility, &c. And here place alſo would require ſomething to ſay to Aeneas Sylvius, to Antoninus, and to Laziardus, which falſly impute Articles to him, which he never maintained. But becauſe time ſuffereth not, I will proceed to the ſtory of Maſter Jerome of Prague.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Cochleus raileth againſt J. Hus without cauſe.

Ex Cochleo lib. 2. Hiſtoriarum, pag. 88.

* The tragical and lamentable Hiſtory of the famous learned man and godly Martyr of Chriſt, Maſter Jerome of Prague, burned at Conſtance for like cauſe and quarrel as Maſter John Hus was, 1416.

THeſe things hitherto being diſcourſed, touching the life, acts and conſtant martyrdom of Maſter John Hus, with part alſo of his Letters adjoyned to the ſame; whoſe death was on the fifth of July, Anno 1416. now remaineth conſequently to deſcribe the like tragedy and cruel handling of his Chriſtian Companion and Fellow in bands bands Master Jerome of Prague. Who grievously sorrowing the slanderous reproach and defamation of his Country of Boheme, and also hearing tell of the manifest injuries done unto that man of worthy memory, Master John Hus; freely and of his own accord came unto Constance the fourth day of April, 1415. Who there perceiving that John Hus was denied to be heard, and that watch and wait was laid for him on every side, he departed to Ibeyling a City of the Empire, until the next day; the which City was a mile off from Constance, and from thence he wrote his Letters by me unto Sigismund King of Hungary and his Barons, and also unto the Council, most earnestly requiring that the King and the Council would give him a safe Conduct freely to come and go, and that he would then come in open Audience to answer unto every man, if there were any of the Council that would lay any Crime unto him, as by the tenor of his intimation shall more at large appear.

The ſtory of Jerome of Prague.

KING Hen. 5.

Jerome cometh to Constance.

The safe conduct was required, but in vain, of the Emperor.

When as the said King of Hungary was required thereunto, as is aforesaid, being in the house of the Lord Cardinal of Cambray, he denied to give Master Jerome any safe conduct, excusing himself for the evil speed he had with the safe conduct of John Hus before, and alledging also certain other causes. The Deputies also of the four Nations of the Council being moved thereunto by the Lords of the Kingdom of Boheme, answered, We (say they) will give him a safe conduct to come, but not to depart. Whose answers, when they were reported unto Master Jerome, he the next day after wrote certain Intimations according to the tenor under-written, which he sent unto Constance to be set upon the Gates of the City, and upon the Gates of the Churches and Monasteries, and of the houses of the Cardinals, and other Nobles and Prelates. The tenor whereof here followeth word for word in this manner.

The intimation of Jerome of Prague, set up in divers places of the Town of Constance Unto the most noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Sigismund, by the Grace of God King of the Romans, always Augustus, and of Hungary, &c. I Jerome of Prague, Master of Art of the general Universities of Paris, Cullen, Heidelberg and Prague, by these my present Letters do notifie unto the King, together with the whole reverend Council, and as much as in me lieth, do all men to understand, and know, that because of the crafty Slanderers, Backbiters and Accusers, I am ready freely and of mine will, to come unto Constance, there to declare openly before the Council, the purity and sincerity of my true Faith, and mine Innocency, and not secretly in Corners before any private or particular person. Wherefore if there be any of my Slanderers, of what Nation or Estate soever they be, which will object against me any Crime of Error or Heresie; let them come forth openly before me in the presence of the whole Council, and in their own names object against me, and I will be ready, as I have written, to answer openly and publickly before the whole Council, of mine innocency, and to declare the purity and sincerity of my true Faith. And if so be that I shall be found culpable in Error or Heresie, then I will not refuse openly to suffer such punishment as shall be meet and worthy for an erroneous person, or an Heretick.

Wherefore I most humbly beseech my Lord the King, and the whole sacred Council, That I may have to this end and purpose aforesaid, safe and sure access. And if it happen that I offering such Equity and Right as I do, before any fault be proved against me, be arrested, imprisoned, or have any violence done unto me; that then it may be manifest unto the whole World, that this general Council doth not proceed according to Equity and Justice, if they would by any means put me back from this profound and strait Justice, being come hither freely of mine own mind and accord. The which thing I suppose to be far from so sacred and holy Council of wise men.

Safe conduct denied to Jerome.

Jerome returneth toward Boheme, with the testimonies of the Lords of Boheme.

When as yet he through such Intimations copied out in the Bohemian, Latin, and German-Tongue, being set up as is aforesaid, could not get any safe Conduct, then the Nobles, Lords, and Knights specially of the Bohemian Nation, present in Constance, gave unto Master Jerome their Letters Patents, confirmed with their Seals for a Testimony and Witness of the premisses. With the which Letters the said Master Jerome returned again unto Boheme; but by the Treason and Conspiracy of his Enemies he was taken in Hirsaw by the Officers of Duke John, and in Zulzbach was brought back again to the presence of the Duke. In the mean time such as were the Setters forward of the Council against Master John Hus, and Master Jerome; that is to say, Michael de Causis and Master Paletz, and other their Accomplices, required that the said Master Jerome should be cited by reason of his Intimations, and certain days after the citation here under-written was set upon the Gates and Porches of the City and Churches, which followeth here in this manner:

Jerome apprehended in the way by Duke John.

Michael de Causis, and Paletz enemies to Jerome.

¶ This most sacred and holy Synod and General Council of Constance, faithfully congregated and gathered together in the Holy Ghost, representing the universal Militant-Church, unto Jerome of Prague, which writeth himself to be a Master of Art of so many Universities, and pretendeth those things which are only pertaining unto Sobriety and Modesty, and that he knoweth no more than he ought, &c. Know thou that there is a certain Writing come unto our understanding and knowledge, the which was set up as it were by thine own person upon the Gates of the Churches and City of Constance, upon the Sunday, when there was sung in the Church of God, Quasi modo geniti. Wherein thou dost affirm, That thou wilt openly answer unto thy Accusers and Slanderers which shall object any Crime, Error or Heresie against thee, whereof thou art marvelously infamed and accused before us, and specially touching the Doctrine of Wickliff, and other Doctrines contrary unto the Catholick Faith, so that thou mightest have granted unto thee a safe conduct to come. But forsomuch as it is our part principally and chiefly to foresee and look unto these crafty Foxes which go about to destroy the Vineyard of the Lord of Hosts, therefore we do cite and call forth by the tenour of these presents, thy person manifoldly defamed and suspected for the temerarious affirming and teaching of manifold Errors; so that within the term of fifteen days to be accounted from the date of these presents, whereof five days are appointed for the first term, five for the second, and other five for the third; We do ordain and appoint by Canonical admonition and warning, that thou do appear in the publick Sessions of the sacred Council, if there be any holden in the same day, or else the first day immediately following, when as any Session shall be, according to the tenor of thy said writing, to answer to those things, which any person or persons shall object or lay against thee in any cause of thy Faith, and to receive and have as Justice shall require. Whereupon, so much as in us lieth, and as Catholick Faith shall require; We offer and assign to thee, by the tenor hereof, our safe conduct from all violence (Justice always being saved;) certifying thee, that whether thou dost appear or not, the said term or time appointed notwithstanding, Process shall go forward against thee by the said Sacred Council, or by their Commissary or Commissaries, for the time aforesaid not observed and kept, thy contumacy or stubbornness in any thing notwithstanding. Given in the sixth Session of the General Council, the seventeenth day of April, under the Seal of the Presidents of the four Nations.

¶ Grumpert Faber-Notary of the Germans.

After that Sigismund King of Hungary, with the rest of the Council, understood by the foresaid Duke John, that Master Jerome was taken, they were earnestly in hand, requiring that Master Jerome should be brought before them unto the Council. The which Duke John, after he had received Letters of the King and the Council, brought Master Jerome bound unto Constance, whom his Brother Duke Ludovicus led thorow the City to the Cloyster of the Friers Minors in Constance, whereas the chief Priests and Elders of the people, Scribes and Pharisees, were gathered together; attending and waiting for his coming. He the said Master Jerome carried a great handbolt of Iron with a long chain in his hand, and as he passed, the chain made a great ratling and noise, and for the more confusion and despite towards him, they led him by the same chain after Duke Ludovicus aforesaid, holding and stretching out the same a great way from him, with with the which chain they alſo kept him bound in the Cloyſter. When he was brought into the Cloyſter, they read before him the Letter of Duke John, which was ſent with the ſaid Maſter Jerome unto the Council, containing in effect, how that the ſaid Duke John had ſent Maſter Jerome unto the Council, who by chance was fallen into his hands, becauſe he heard an evil report of him, that he was ſuſpected of the Hereſies of Wickliff; that the Council might take order for him, whoſe part it was to correct and puniſh ſuch as did err and ſtray from the truth, beſides many other flattering Tales which were written in the ſaid Letter for the praiſe of the Council. After this they read the Citation which was given out by the Council againſt Maſter Jerome, whereof we have ſpoken before. Then certain of the Biſhops ſaid unto him, Jerome, why didſt thou fly and run away, and didſt not appear when thou waſt cited? He anſwered, Becauſe I could not have any ſafe conduct, neither from you, neither from the King, as it appeareth by theſe Letters Patents of the Barons, which you have, neither by mine open Intimations could I obtain any ſafe conduct.

The Council neither would give him liberty ſafely to come, nor freely to go

Wherefore I, perceiving many of my grievous and heavy Friends to be here preſent in the Council, would not my ſelf be the occaſion of my perils and dangers; but if I had known or had any underſtanding of this Citation, without all doubt, albeit I had been in Boheme, I would have returned again. Then all the whole Rabble riſing up, alledged divers and ſundry Accuſations and Teſtimonies againſt him with a great noiſe and tumult. When the reſt held their peace, then ſpake Maſter Gerſon the Chancellor of Paris, Jerome, when thou waſt at Paris thou thoughteſt thy ſelf by means of thy Eloquence to be an Angel, and didſt trouble the whole Univerſity, alledging openly in the Schools many erroneous Concluſions with their corolaria, and eſpecially in the queſtion de univerſalibus & de Idæis, with many other very offenſive queſtions. Unto whom Maſter Jerome ſaid, I anſwer to you Maſter Gerſon; Thoſe matters which I did put forth there in the Schools at Paris, in the which alſo I anſwered to the Arguments of the Maſters, I did put them forth philoſophically, and as a Philoſopher, and Maſter of the Univerſity; and if I have put forth any queſtions which I ought not to have put forth, teach me that they be erroneous, and I will moſt humbly be informed, and amend the ſame.

M. Jerome was accuſed by Mr. Gerſon, with commendation of his Eloquence. Gerſon renewveth matters.

Whiles he was yet ſpeaking, another (as I ſuppoſe, the Maſter of the Univerſity of Cullen upon the River of Rheine) riſing up, ſaid, When thou waſt alſo at Cullen, in thy poſition which thou didſt there determine, thou didſt propound many erroneous matters. Then ſaid Maſter Jerome unto him, Shew me firſt one Error which I propounded. Wherewithall he being in a manner aſtoniſhed, ſaid, I do not remember them now at the firſt, but hereafter they ſhall be objected againſt you.

The Maſter of the Univerſity of Cullen. This man would accuſe, but he lacked matter.

And by and by the third man riſing up, ſaid, When that you were alſo at Heidelberg, you propounded many erroneous matters as touching the Trinity, and there painted out a certain Shield or Scutchine, comparing the Trinity of Perſons in divinity unto Water, Snow and Ice, and ſuch like. Unto whom Maſter Jerome anſwered, Thoſe things that I wrote or painted there, the ſame will I alſo ſpeak, write, and paint here; and teach me that they be erroneous, and I will moſt humbly revoke and recant the ſame.

The Maſter of the Univerſity of Heidelberg.

Then certain cried out, Let him be burned, let him be burned. Unto whom he anſwered, If my death do delight or pleaſe you, In the Name of God let it be ſo.

Crucifige, crucifige eum.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop of Saliſburg; Not ſo Maſter Jerome, forſomuch as it is written, I will not the death of a Sinner, but rather that he convert and live. When theſe and many other Tumults and Cries were paſſed, whereby they did then moſt diſorderly and outragiouſly witneſs againſt him, they delivered the ſaid Maſter Jerome, [illegible] ing bound, unto the Officers of the ſaid City of Con[illegible]nce, to be carried to priſon for that night; and ſo every [illegible] of them returned to their Lodgings.

In the mean time, one of the Friends of Maſter John Hus, looking out at a window of the Cloiſter, ſaid unto him, Welcome Jerome. Then ſaid he, You are welcome my dear Brother. Then ſaid Peter unto him, Be conſtant and fear not to ſuffer death for the Truth ſake, of the which, when you were in times paſt at liberty, you did preach ſo much goodneſs. Unto whom Jerome anſwered, Truly Brother I do not fear death, and forſomuch as we know that we have ſpoken much thereof in times paſt; let us now ſee what may be known or done in effect. By and by his Keepers coming to the window, threatning him with ſtrokes, did put away the ſaid Peter from the window of the Cloiſter.

Then came there one Vitus unto Maſter Jerome, and ſaid, Maſter, how do you do? Unto whom he anſwered, Truly Brother, I do very well. Then his Keepers coming about him laid hold of the ſaid Vitus, ſaying, This is alſo one of the number, and kept him. When it drew towards evening, the Archbiſhop of Rigen ſent certain of his Servants which led away Maſter Jerome, being ſtrongly bound with chains, both by the Hands and by the Neck, and kept him ſo for certain hours. When night drew on, they carried him unto a certain Tower of the City in Saint Pauls Church-yard, where they tying him faſt unto a great Block, and his Feet in the Stocks, his Hands alſo being made faſt upon them, they left him; whereas the Block was ſo high, that he could by no means ſit thereupon, but that his Head muſt hang downward. They carried alſo the ſaid Vitus unto the Archbiſhop of Rigen, who demanded of him, Why he durſt be ſo bold to talk with ſuch a man being a Reprobate of all men, and an Heretick: and when as he could find no cauſe of Impriſonment in him, and that he ſaid he was Maſter John de Clums Friend (taking an Oath and Promiſe of him, that he ſhould not go about to endamage the Council by reaſon of that Impriſonment and Captivity) ſo diſmiſſed him and ſent him away.

Maſter Jerome, unknown unto us whither he was carried, lay in the ſaid Tower two days and two nights, relieved only with Bread and Water. Then one of his Keepers, coming unto Maſter Peter, declared unto him how that Maſter Jerome lay hard by in bonds and chains, and how he was fed. Then Maſter Peter deſired that he might have leave given him to give him meat, becauſe he would procure the ſame unto him. The Keeper of the priſon, granting his requeſt, carried meat unto him. Within eleven days after, ſo hanging by the heels, he uſed ſo ſmall repaſt, that he fell ſore ſick even unto the death. When as he living then in that captivity and priſon, deſired to have a Confeſſor, they of the Council denied that he ſhould have any, until ſuch time as by great importunity he obtained to have one; his Friends being then there preſent in the ſame Priſon and Tower, wherein he then lay by the ſpace of one year, lacking but ſeven days.

Jerome hanging in the ſtocks was fed with bread and water. Peter bringeth meat to Jerome.

Maſter Jerome was kept in priſon the ſpace of one year.

After they had put John Hus to death, then about the Feaſt of the Nativity of Mary the Virgin, they brought forth Maſter Jerome, whom they had kept ſo long in chains, unto the Church of S. Paul: and threatning him with death, being inſtant upon him, they forced him to abjure and recant, and conſent unto the death of Maſter John Hus, that he was juſtly and truly condemned and put to death by them. He, what for fear of death, and hoping thereby to eſcape out of their hands, according to their will and pleaſure, and according to the tenor which was exhibited unto him, did make Abjuration, and that in the Cathedral-Church and open Seſſion, the draught whereof penned to him by the Papiſts, here enſueth.

¶ The Abjuration of Maſter Hierome of Prague.

The forced abjuration of Hierome.

I Hierome of Prague, Maſter of Art, acknowledging the Catholick Church, and the Apoſtolick Faith, do accurſe and renounce all Hereſies, and eſpecially that whereof I have hitherto been infamed, and that which in times paſt John Hus and John Wickliff have holden and taught in their Works, Treatiſes and Sermons, made unto the people and Clergy; for the which cauſe the ſaid Wickliff and Hus, together with the ſaid Doctrines and Errors, are condemned by this Synod of Conſtance as Hereticks, and all the ſaid Doctrine ſententially condemned, and eſpecially in certain Articles expreſſed in the Sentences and Judgments given againſt them by this ſacred Council.

Alſo I do accord and agree unto the holy Church of Rome, the Apoſtolick Seat in this ſacred Council, and with my mouth and heart do profeſs in all things, and touching

touching all things, and ſpecially as touching the Keys, Sacraments, Orders, and Offices, and Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, of Pardons, Reliques of Saints, Eccleſiaſtical liberty, alſo Ceremonies, and all other things pertaining unto Chriſtian Religion, as the Church of Rome, the Apoſtolick See, and this Sacred Council do profeſs: and ſpecially that many of the ſaid Articles are notoriouſly heretical, and lately reproved by the holy Fathers, ſome of them blaſphemous, other ſome erroneous; ſome offenſive unto godly ears, and many of them temerarious and ſeditious. And ſuch alſo were counted the Articles lately condemned by the Sacred Council, and it was inhibited and forbidden to all and ſingular Catholick men hereafter to preach, teach, or preſume to hold or maintain any of the ſaid Articles, under pain of being accurſed.

And I the ſaid Hierome, forſomuch as I have laboured by Scholaſtical arts to perſwade the opinion, de Univerſalibus realibus, and that one ſubſtance of the common kind ſhould ſignifie many things ſubject under the ſame, and every one of them, as Saint Ambroſe, Hierome, Auguſtine, do affirm, and likewiſe others; for the teaching hereof by a divine example I deſcribed as it were a certain Triangle, form or figure, the which I called the ſhield of faith.

Therefore utterly to exclude and take away the erroneous and wicked underſtanding thereof, the which peradventure ſome men may gather thereby, I do ſay, affirm, and declare that I never made the ſaid figure, neither named it the ſhield of faith to that intent or purpoſe, that I would extoll or prefer the opinion of Univerſalities above or before the contrary opinion, in ſuch ſort, as though that were the ſhield of faith, and that without the affirmation thereof the Catholick Faith could not be defended or maintained, when as I my ſelf would not obſtinately ſtick thereunto. But this I ſaid, becauſe I had put example in the deſcription of the Triangle or form, that one Divine eſſence conſiſted in three ſubjects or perſons in themſelves diſtinct, that is to ſay, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. The Article of the which Trinity is the chief ſhield of faith, and foundation of the Catholick truth.

Furthermore, that it may be evident unto all men what the cauſes were for the which I was reputed and thought to ſtick to, and favour ſometime John Hus; I ſignifie unto all men by theſe preſents, that when as I heard him oftentimes both in his Sermons, and alſo in the Schools, I believed that he was a very good man, neither that he did in any point gainſay the Traditions of our Holy Mother the Church, or holy Doctors; inſomuch as when I was lately in this City, and the Articles which I affirmed were ſhewed unto me, which were alſo condemned by the Sacred Council, at the firſt ſight of them I did not believe that they were his, at the leaſt not in that form. But when as I had further underſtood by certain famous Doctors and Maſters of Divinity that they were his Articles, I required for my further information and ſatisfaction, to have the Books of his own hand-writing ſhewed unto me, wherein it was ſaid thoſe Articles were contained. The which Books when they were ſhewed unto me written with his own hand, which I did know as well as mine own, I found all, and every one of thoſe Articles therein written in like form as they are condemned. Wherefore I do worthily judg and think him and his Doctrine, with his adherents to be condemned and reproved by the ſacred Council, as heretical and without reaſon. All which the premiſſes with a pure mind and conſcience I do here pronounce and ſpeak, being now fully and ſufficiently informed of the foreſaid ſentences and judgments given by the ſacred Council againſt the Doctrines of the ſaid John Wickliff, and John Hus, and againſt their own perſons; unto the which judgment as a devout Catholick in all things, I do moſt humbly conſent and agree.

Hierome is made here to ſay not his own mind, but what pleaſeth them.

Alſo I the foreſaid Hierome, which before the reverend Fathers the Lords Cardinals, and reverend Lords, Prelates and Doctors, and other worſhipful perſons of this ſacred Council in the ſame place, did heretofore freely and willingly declare and expound mine intent and purpoſe amongſt other things ſpeaking of the Church, did divide the ſame into three parts: And as I did perceive afterward, it was underſtood by ſome that I would affirm, that in the Triumphant Church there was faith. Whereas I do firmly believe that there is the bleſſed ſight and beholding of God, excluding all dark underſtanding and knowledg. And now alſo I ſay, affirm and declare that it was never my intent and purpoſe to prove that there ſhould be faith, ſpeaking of faith, as faith is commonly defined, but knowledg far exceeding faith. And generally whatſoever I ſaid, either there, or at any time before, I do refer, and moſt humbly ſubmit my ſelf unto the determination of this ſacred Council of Conſtance.

Moreover, I do ſwear both by the Holy Trinity, and alſo by the moſt Holy Goſpel, that I will for evermore remain and perſevere without all doubt, in the truth of the Catholick Church. And all ſuch as by their Doctrine and teaching ſhall impugn this faith, I judg them worthy together with their Doctrines of eternal curſe. And if I my ſelf at any time (which God forbid I ſhould) do preſume to preach or teach contrary thereunto, I will ſubmit my ſelf unto the ſeverity of the Canons, and be bound unto eternal pain and puniſhment. Whereupon I do deliver up this my confeſſion and tenor of my Profeſſion willingly before this ſacred General Council, and have ſubſcribed and written all theſe things with mine own hand.

Jerome after his Abjuration returned into priſon.

After all this they cauſed him to be carried again unto the ſame priſon, but not ſo ſtraitly chained and bound as he was before; notwithſtanding kept every day with Soldiers and armed men. And when as afterward his enemies which were appointed againſt him, as Michael de Cauſis, and wicked Paletz, with other their companions in theſe affairs, underſtood and knew by the words and talk of Maſter Hierome, and by other certain tokens, that he made the ſame Abjuration and Recantation, not of a ſincere and pure mind, but only to the intent thereby to ſcape their hands, they together with certain Friers of Prague, of the Order of Carmelites, then coming in, put up new accuſations againſt the ſaid Maſter Hierome, and drew the ſame into Articles, being very inſtant and earneſt that he ſhould anſwer thereunto. And forſomuch as his Judges, and certain Cardinals, as the Cardinal of Cambray, the Cardinal de Urſinis, the Cardinal of Aquilegia, and of Florence, conſidering the malice of the enemies of Maſter Hierome, did ſee the great injury that was done unto him, they laboured before the whole Council for his delivery.

Jerome accuſed anew by Cauſis, Paletz, and the Carmelites.

The Cardinal of Cambray, with certain other Cardinals labour for the delivery of Jerome.

It happened upon a certain day, as they were labouring in the Council for the delivery of the ſaid Maſter Hierome, that the Germans and Bohemians his enemies with all force and power reſiſted againſt it, crying out that he ſhould in no caſe be diſmiſſed. Then ſtart up one called Doctor Naſo, which ſaid unto the Cardinals, We marvel much of you moſt reverend Fathers, that your Reverences will make interceſſion for ſuch a wicked Heretick, for whoſe ſake we in Boheme with the whole Clergy have ſuffered much trouble and miſchief, and peradventure your Fatherhoods ſhall ſuffer; and I greatly fear, leſt that you have received ſome rewards either of the King of Boheme, or of theſe Hereticks. When as the Cardinals were thus rebuked, they diſcharged themſelves of Maſter Hieromes cauſe and matter.

Si dimittis hunc non es amicus Cæſaris.

Then his enemies aforeſaid obtained to have other Judges appointed, as the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and a German Doctor, forſomuch as they did know that the Patriarch was a grievous enemy unto Maſter Hierome, becauſe he being before appointed Judg by the Council, had condemned John Hus unto death.

The Patriarch of Conſtantinople gave ſentence of death both againſt Mr. Hus, and Mr. Hierome of Prague.

But Mr. Hierome would not anſwer them in priſon, requiring to have open audience, becauſe he would there finally declare unto them his mind, neither would he by any means conſent unto thoſe private Judges. Whereupon the Preſidents of the Council thinking that the ſaid Maſter Jerome would renew his Recantation before the ſaid Audience, and confirm the ſame, did grant him open audience.

In the year of our Lord 1416, the 25*th* day of May, which was the Saturday before the Aſcenſion of our Lord, the ſaid Maſter Jerome was brought unto open Audience before the whole Council, to the great Cathedral Church of Conſtance, where by the Commiſſioners of the Council, in the behalf of his foreſaid enemies, there were laid againſt him of new a hundred and ſeven Articles, to the intent that he ſhould not ſcape the ſnare of death, which they provided and laid for him; inſomuch as the Judges had before declared that by the ſaying of the witneſſes it was already concluded in the ſame audience. The day aforeſaid, from morning until noon, he anſwered unto more than forty Articles, moſt ſubtilly objected againſt him; denying that he held or maintained any ſuch Articles as were either hurtful or falſe, and affirming that thoſe witneſſes had depoſed them againſt him falſly and ſlanderouſly, as his moſt cruel and mortal enemies. In the ſame Seſſion they had not yet proceeded unto death, becauſe that the noon-time drew ſo faſt on, that he could not anſwer unto the Articles. Wherefore for lack of time ſufficient to anſwer unto the reſidue of the Articles, there was another time appointed. Which was the third day after the foreſaid Saturday before the Aſcenſion of our Lord, at which time again early in the morning he was brought unto the ſaid Cathedral Church to anſwer unto all the reſidue of the Articles.

Ann. 1416. Jerome brought again before the Council.

Falſe witneſs againſt Hierome.

In all which Articles, as well thoſe which he had anſwered unto the Saturday before, as in the reſidue, he cleared himſelf very learnedly, refelling his adverſaries (who had no cauſe, but only of malice and diſpleaſure were ſet againſt him, and did him great wrong) in ſuch ſort, that they were themſelves aſtonied at his Oration, and refutation of their teſtimonies brought againſt him, and with ſhame enough were put to ſilence: As when one of them had demanded of him what he thought by the Sacrament of the Altar, he anſwered, Before conſecration (ſaid he) it is Bread and Wine; after the conſecration it is the true Body and Blood of Chriſt; adding withal moe words according to their Catholick Faith. Then another riſing up, Hierome, ſaid he, there goeth a great rumour of thee, that thou ſhouldeſt hold Bread to remain upon the Altar. To whom he pleaſantly anſwered, ſaying, That he believed Bread to be at the Bakers. At which words being ſpoken one of the Dominick Friers fumiſhly took on, and ſaid, What, doſt thou deny, that which no man doubteth of? Whoſe peeviſh faucineſs Hierome with theſe words did well repreſs, Hold thy peace (ſaid he) thou Monk, thou hypocrite: And thus the Monk being nipped in the head, ſat down dumb. After whom ſtarted up another, who with a loud voice cried out, I ſwear (ſaid he) by my conſcience, that to be true, that thou doſt deny. To whom ſaid Hierome again, ſpeaking in Latin, Heus, inquit, ſic jurare per conſcientiam tutiſſima fallendi via eſt. That is, thus to ſwear by your conſcience is the next way to deceive. Another there was, a ſpiteful and a bitter enemy of his whom he called by no other name than dog, or aſſe. After he had thus refuted them one after another, that they could find no crime againſt him, neither in this matter, nor in any other, they were all driven to keep ſilence.

Falſe witneſſes.

This done, then were the witneſſes called for, who coming in preſence gave teſtimony unto the Articles before produced. By reaſon whereof the innocent cauſe of Hierome was oppreſſed, and began in the Council to be concluded. Then Hierome riſing up began to ſpeak: Forſomuch (ſaith he) as you have heard mine adverſaries ſo diligently hitherto, convenient it is that you ſhould alſo now hear me to ſpeak for my ſelf. Whereupon with much difficulty at laſt audience was given in the Council for him to ſay his mind. Which being granted, he from morning to noon continuing, intreated of divers and ſundry matters, with great learning and eloquence. Who firſt beginning with his prayer to God, beſought him to give him ſpirit, ability, and utterance, which might moſt tend to the profit and ſalvation of his own ſoul. And ſo entring into his Oration.

Audience hardly given to Hierome to ſpeak for himſelf.

The Oration of Hierome had before the Council.

I Know, ſaith he, Reverend Lords, that there have been many excellent men, which have ſuffered much otherwiſe than they have deſerved, being oppreſſed with falſe witneſſes, and condemned with wrong judgments. And ſo beginning with Socrates, he declared how he was unjuſtly condemned of his Countrymen, neither would he eſcape when he might; taking from us the fear of two things, which ſeem moſt bitter to men, to wit, of impriſonment and death. Then he inferred the captivity of Plato, the baniſhment of Anaxagoras, and the torments of Zeno. Moreover, he brought in the wrongful condemnation of many Gentiles, as the baniſhment of Rupilius, reciting alſo the unworthy death of Boetius and of others, whom Boetius himſelf doth write of.

Socrates.

Plato. Anaxagoras Zeno. Rupilius. Boetius.

From thence he came to the examples of the Hebrews, and firſt began with Moſes the deliverer of the people, and the Law-giver, how he was oftentimes ſlandered of his people as being a ſeducer and contemner of the people. Joſeph alſo, ſaith he, for envy was ſold of his Brethren, and for falſe ſuſpition of whoredom was caſt into bands. Beſides theſe, he reciteth Eſaias, Daniel, and almoſt all the Prophets, who as contemners of God, and ſeditious perſons, were oppreſſed with wrongful condemnation. From thence he proceeded to the judgment of Suſanna, and of divers other beſides, who being good and holy men, yet were they unjuſtly caſt away with wrongful ſentence. At the length he came to John Baptiſt, and ſo in long proceſs he deſcended unto our Saviour, declaring how it was evident to all men, by what falſe witneſſes both he and John Baptiſt were condemned. Moreover, how Stephen was ſlain by the College of the Prieſts, and how all the Apoſtles were condemned to death, not as good men, but as ſeditious ſtirrers up of the people, and contemners of the gods, and evil doers. It is unjuſt, ſaith he, unjuſtly to be condemned one Prieſt of another, and yet he proved that the ſame hath ſo happened moſt unjuſtly in that Council of Prieſts. Theſe things did he diſcourſe at large, with marvellous eloquence, and with ſingular admiration of all that heard him.

And foraſmuch as all the whole ſum of the cauſe did reſt only in the witneſſes, by many reaſons he proved that no credit was to be given unto them, eſpecially ſeeing they ſpake all things of no truth, but only of hatred, malice, and envy. And ſo proſecuting the matter, ſo lively and expreſſly he opened unto them the cauſes of their hatred, that he had almoſt perſwaded them. So lively and likely their hatred was detected, that almoſt no truſt was given to their teſtimonies, ſave only for the cauſe and quarrel wherein they ſtood touching the Popes Doctrine. All mens minds here were moved and bending to mercy towards him; for he told them how that he of his own accord came up to the Council, and to purge himſelf he did open unto them all his life and doings, being full of vertue and godlineſs. This was (ſaith he) the old manner of ancient and learned men, and moſt holy Elders, that in matters of Faith, they did differ many times in arguments, not to deſtroy the Faith, but to find out the verity. So did Auguſtine and Jerome diſſent, not only being divers; but alſo contrary one from the other, and yet without all ſuſpition of hereſie.

The falſe Witneſſes of Hierome refuted.

All this while the Popes holy Council did wait ſtill, when he would begin to excuſe himſelf, and to retract thoſe things which were objected againſt him, and to crave pardon of the Council. But he perſiſting ſtill in his conſtant Oration, did acknowledg no error, nor gave any ſignification of retractation.

At laſt entring into the praiſe and commendation of Maſter John Huſs, he affirmed that he was a good, juſt, and holy man, and much unworthy that death which he did ſuffer. Whom he did know from his youth upward, to be neither fornicator, drunkard, neither any evil or vicious perſon, but a chaſt and ſober man, and a juſt and true Preacher of the holy Goſpel; and whatſoever things Maſter John Huſs and Wickliff had holden or written, ſpecially againſt the abuſe and pomp of the Clergy, he would affirm even unto the death, that they were holy and bleſſed men, and that in all points of the Catholick Faith he doth believe as the holy Catholick Church doth hold or believe. And finally he did conclude, that all ſuch Articles as John Wickliff and John Huſs had written and put forth againſt the enormities, pomp and diſorder of the Prelates, he would firmly and ſtedfaſtly, without recantation hold and defend even unto the death. And laſt of all he added, that all the ſins that ever he had committed, did not ſo much gnaw and trouble his conſcience, as did that only ſin, which he had committed in that moſt peſtiferous fact, when as in his recantation he had unjuſtly ſpoken againſt that good and holy man and his Doctrine, and ſpecially in conſenting unto his wicked condemnation, concluding that he did utterly revoke and deny that wicked recantation which he made in that moſt curſed place, and that he did it through weakneſs of heart and fear of death: And moreover, that whatſoever thing he hath ſpoken againſt that bleſſed man, he hath altogether lyed upon him, and that he doth repent him with his whole heart that ever he did it.

Hierome commendeth the life, and bewaileth the death of Iohn Hus.

And

{KING Hen. 5.}

And at the hearing hereof the hearers were not a little sorry. For they wished, and desired greatly that such a singular man should be saved, if otherwise their blind superstition would have suffered it. But he continued still in his prefixed sentence, seeming to desire rather death than life. And persisting in the praise of John Hus, he added moreover, that he never maintained any Doctrine against the state of the Church, but only spake against the abuses of the Clergy, against the pride, pomp, and excess of the Prelates. Forsomuch as the Patrimonies of the Churches were first given for the poor, then for hospitality, and thirdly to the reparations of the Churches; it was a grief to that good man (said he) to see the same mispent and cast away upon Harlots, great feastings, and keeping of horses and dogs, upon gorgeous apparel, and such other things unbeseeming Christian Religion. And herein he shewed himself marvellous eloquent; yea never more.

Hus never maintained any Doctrine against the Church of Rome, but only spake against their naughty life.

Hierome did put them to silence.

And when his Oration was interrupted many times by divers of them, carping at his sentences as he was in speaking; yet was there none of all those that interrupted him which escaped unblanckt, but he brought them all to confusion, and put them to silence. When any noise began, he ceased to speak, and after began again, proceeding in his Oration, and desiring them to give him leave a while to speak, whom they hereafter should hear no more, neither yet was his mind ever dashed at all these noises and murmurings.

Jerome in prison 340 days.

The excellent memory in Mr. Hierome.

And this was marvellous in him to behold, notwithstanding he continued in strait prison three hundred forty days, having neither Book, nor almost light to read by, yet how admirable his memory served him: Declaring how all those pains of his strait handling did not so much grieve him, as he did wonder rather to see their unkind humanity towards him.

When he had spoken these and many things as touching the praise of John Wickliff, and John Hus, they which sat in the Council whispered together, saying, By these his words it appeareth that he is at a point with himself. Then was he again carried into prison, and grievously fettered by the hands, arms and feet, with great chains and fetters of Iron.

Mr. Hierome brought again before the Council.

The Saturday next before the Ascension-day, early in the morning, he was brought with a great number of armed men unto the Cathedral Church before the open Congregation, to have his judgment given him. There they exhorted him that those things which he had before spoken in the open audience, as is aforesaid touching the praise and commendation of Master John Wickliff, and Master John Hus, confirming and establishing their Doctrine, he would yet recant the same: But he marvellous stoutly without all fear spake against them, and amongst other things said unto them, I take God to my witness, and I protest here before you all, that I do believe and hold the Articles of the Faith, as the holy Catholick Church doth hold and believe the same; but for this cause shall I now be condemned, for that I will not consent with you unto the condemnation of those most holy and blessed men aforesaid, whom you have most wickedly condemned for certain Articles, detesting and abhorring your wicked and abominable life. Then he confessed there before them all his belief, and uttered many things very profoundly and eloquently, insomuch that all men there present could not sufficiently commend and praise his great eloquence and excellent learning, and by no means could they induce or perswade him to recant.

Mr. Hierome holdeth all the Articles of the Catholick Church.

The Eloquence of Mr. Hierome.

Then a certain Bishop, named the Bishop of Londy, made a certain Sermon exhortative against Master Hierome, perswading to his condemnation.

After the Bishop had ended the said Sermon, Master Hierome said again unto them, You shall condemn me wickedly and unjustly. But I after my death will leave a remorse in your conscience, and a nail in your hearts: Et citò vos omnes, ut respondeatis mihi coram altissimo & justissimo Judice post centum annos. That is, And here I cite you to answer unto me before the most high and just Judge, within a hundred years.

The Prophesie of M. Hierome.

No pen can sufficiently write, or note those things which he most eloquently, profoundly, and Philosophically had spoken in the said Audience, neither can any tongue sufficiently declare the same; wherefore I have but only touched here the superficial matter of his talk, partly and not wholly noting the same. Finally, when as by no means he might be perswaded to recant the premisses, immediately even in his presence, the sentence and judgment of his condemnation was given against him, and read before him.

The sentence read against Hierome.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Christ our God, and our Saviour being the true Vine, whose Father is the Husbandman, taught his Disciples, and all other faithful men, saying, If any man dwell not in me, let him be cast out as a bough or branch, and let him wither and dry, &c. The Doctrine and precepts of which most excellent Doctor and Master this most Sacred Synod of Constance executing and following in the cause of inquisition against Hereticks, being moved by this said Sacred Synod, through report, publick fame, and open infamation, proceeding against Hierome of Prague, Master of Art, Lay-man. By the acts and processes of whose cause it appeareth that the said Master Hierome hath holden, maintained, and taught divers Articles heretical and erroneous, lately reproved and condemned by the holy Fathers, some being very blasphemous, othersome offending godly ears, and many temerarious and seditious, which have been affirmed, maintained, preached and taught by the men of most damnable memory, John Wickliff, and John Hus, the which are also written in divers of their Works and Books. Which Articles of Doctrine and Books of the said John Hus, and John Wickliff, together with their memory, and the person of the said John Hus, were by the said sacred Synod condemned of Heresie. The which sentence of condemnation this Hierome afterward during the time of Inquisition, acknowledged in the said sacred Synod, and approved the true Catholick and Apostolick Faith, thereunto consenting, accursing all Heresie, specially that whereof he was infamed, and confessed himself to be infamed, and that which in times past John Hus and John Wickliff maintained and taught in their Works, Sermons, and Books, for the which the said Wickliff and Hus, together with their Doctrine and Errors, were by the said sacred Synod as heretical condemned. The condemnation of all which the premisses he did openly profess and allow, and did swear that he would persevere and continue in the verity of that faith. And if that he should presume at any time to hold opinion, or preach contrary thereunto, that he would submit himself to the trial and truth of the Canons, and be bound to perpetual punishment. And this his profession written with his own hand, he delivered up unto the holy Council. Many days after his said profession and abjuration, as a dog returning unto his vomit, to the intent he might openly vomit up the most pestilent poyson which had long lurked and lyen hid in his breast, he required and desired that he might be openly heard before the Council. The which being granted unto him, he affirmed, said and professed before the whole Synod, being publickly gathered together, that he had wickedly consented and agreed to the sentence and judgment of the condemnation of the said Wickliff and Hus, and that he had most shamefully lyed in approving and allowing the said sentence, neither was he ashamed to confess that he had lyed; yea, he did also revoke and recant his confession, approbation, and protestation, which he had made upon their condemnation, affirming that he never at any time had read any errors or heresie in the Books and Treatises of the said Wickliff and Hus. Albeit he had before confessed it, and it is evidently proved, that he did diligently study, read, and preach their Books, wherein it is manifest that there are contained many errors and heresies. Also the said Master Hierome did profess as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Transubstantiation of the Bread into the Body of Christ, that he doth hold and believe as the Church doth hold and believe, saying also that he doth give more credit unto Saint Augustine, and the other Doctors of the Church, than unto Wickliff and Hus. It appeareth moreover by the premisses, that the said Hierome is an adherent and maintainer of the said Wickliff and Hus, and their Errors, and both is and hath been a favourer of them. Wherefore the said sacred Synod determineth the said Master Hierome as a rotten and withered branch, not growing upon the Vine, to be cut off and caſt out. The ſaid Synod alſo pronounceth, declareth and condemneth him as an Heretick and drowned in all kind of Hereſies, excommunicate and accurſed, leaving him unto the arbitrement and judgment of the ſecular Judg, to receive juſt and due puniſhment, according to the quality of ſo great an offence; the ſacred Synod notwithſtanding intreating that the ſaid Judg would moderate his ſentence of judgment without peril of death.

M. Hierome given to the ſecular power.

The which ſentence ſo given before his face, and ended, a great and long Miter of paper was brought unto him, painted about with red Devils, the which when he beheld and ſaw, throwing away his Hood upon the ground amongſt the Prelates, he took the Miter and put it upon his head, ſaying, Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when as he ſhould ſuffer death for me moſt wretched ſinner, did wear a Crown of Thorn upon his head; and I for his ſake inſtead of that Crown, will willingly wear this Miter and Cap. Afterward he was laid hold of by the ſecular power.

A paper with red Devils put upon the head of M. Hierome by Deviliſh Papiſts.

KING Hen. 5. M. Hierome committed to the ſecular power.

After that he was led out of the ſaid Church to the place of execution; when he was going out of the Church, with a cheerful countenance and a loud voice lifting his eyes up unto Heaven, he began to ſing, Credo in unum Deum, as it is accuſtomed to be ſung in the Church. Afterward as he paſſed along, he did ſing ſome Canticles of the Church; the which being ended, in the entring out of the Gate of the City, as men go unto Gothlehem, he did ſing this Hymn, Felix namque. And that Reſpond being ended, after he came to the place of Execution where Maſter John Hus before had ſuffered death innocently, kneeling down before an Image which was like unto the Picture of Maſter John Hus, which was there prepared to burn Maſter Jerome, he made a certain devout prayer.

M. Hierome went ſinging unto his Martyrdom.

While he was thus praying, the tormentors took him up, and lifting him up from the ground ſpoiled him of all his garments, and left him naked, and afterwards girded him about the loyns with a linnen cloth, and bound him faſt with cords and chains of Iron, to the ſaid Image which was made faſt unto the earth; and ſo ſtanding upon the ground, when as they began to lay the wood about him, he ſung Salve feſta dies. And when the Hymn was ended, he ſung again with a loud voice, Credo in unum Deum, unto the end. That being ended, he ſaid unto the people in the German Tongue in effect as followeth. Dearly beloved children, even as I have now ſung, ſo do I believe, and none otherwiſe. And this Creed is my whole Faith, notwithſtanding now I die for this cauſe, becauſe I would not conſent and agree to the Council, and with them affirm and hold that Maſter John Hus was by them holily and juſtly condemned; for I did know well enough that he was a true Preacher of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt.

M. Hierome tyed to an Image like to J. Hus.

M. Hierome giveth teſtimony of John Hus.

After that he was compaſſed in with the wood up to the crown of the head, they caſt all his garments upon the wood alſo, and with a fire-brand they ſet it on fire. The which being once fired, he began to ſing with a loud voice, In manus tuas Domine commendo ſpiritum meum. When that was ended, and that he began vehemently to burn, he ſaid in the vulgar Bohemian Tongue, O Lord God, Father Almighty, have mercy upon me, and be merciful unto mine offences, for thou knoweſt how ſincerely I have loved thy truth. Then his voice by the vehemency of the fire was choaked and ſtopped, that it was no longer heard, but he moved continually his mouth and lips, as though he he had ſtill prayed or ſpoken within himſelf.

The laſt words of M. Hierome.

When as in a manner his whole Body with his Beard was burned round about, and that there appeared through the great burning upon his Body certain great Bladders as big as an Egg, yet he continually very ſtrongly and ſtoutly moved, and ſhaked his head and mouth, by the ſpace almoſt of one quarter of an hour. So burning in the fire, he lived with great pain and martyrdom, whileſt one might eaſily have gone from St. Clements over the Bridg unto our Lady-Church; he was of ſuch a ſtout and ſtrong nature. After that he was thus dead in the fire, by and by they brought his Bedding, his Straw-bed, his Boots, his Hood, and all other things that he had in the priſon, and burned them all to aſhes in the ſame fire. The which aſhes, after that the fire was out, they did diligently gather together, and carry them in a Cart, and caſt them into the river of Rheine, which ran hard by the City.

The cruelty of his death.

The aſhes of M. Hierome caſt into the river of Rheine.

That man which was the true reporter hereof, and which teſtified unto us the acts and doings about the condemnation of Maſter Jerome, and ſent the ſame unto us to Prague in writing, doth thus conclude. All theſe things (ſaid he) I did behold, ſee, and hear to be done in this form and manner. And if any man do tell you the contrary, do not credit him; for all thoſe things which happened unto him when he came toward Conſtance, and alſo at his firſt coming unto Conſtance of his own free will, and afterward when he was brought bound unto Conſtance, as is aforeſaid, I my ſelf did ſee and perfectly behold, and for a perpetual memory thereof to be had for ever, I have directed the ſame unto you, not lying or fallifying any point thereof, as he which is the ſearcher of all mens hearts can bear the witneſs, willing rather to ſuſtain the note of ignorance and rudeneſs of ſtile, to bear witneſs unto the truth, than I would by any means be compelled by tickling, or flattering the ears of the hearers with fained and cloaked ſpeech, to ſwarve or go aſide from the truth.

The truth of this ſtory

Thus end the Tragical Hiſtories of Maſter John Hus, and Maſter Jerome of Prague, faithfully gathered and collected by a certain Bohemian, being a preſent witneſs and beholder of the ſame, written and compiled firſt in Latin, and ſo ſent by the ſaid Bohemian into his Country of Boheme, and again tranſlated out of the Latin with like fidelity into our Engliſh Tongue.

In the mean time while Maſter Hierome was in this trouble, and before the Council, the Nobles and Lords of Boheme and of Moravia (but not a little agrieved thereat) directed their Letters unto this barbarous Council of Popiſh murderers, in tenor and form of words as followeth.

The Letter of the Fifty four Nobles of Moravia, written unto the Council of Conſtance in the defence of Maſter John Hus and Hierome of Prague.

To the right reverend Fathers and Lords in Chriſt, the Lords Cardinals, Patriarchs, Primates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Ambaſſadors, Doctors and Maſters, and to the whole Council of Conſtance, We the Nobles, Lords, Knights and Eſquires, of the famous Marqueſdom of Moravia, wiſh the deſire of all goodneſs, and the obſervation of the Commandments of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Forſomuch as every man both by the Law of Nature, and alſo by Gods Law, is commanded to do that unto another man, which he would have done unto himſelf, and is forbidden to do that thing unto another, which he would not have done unto himſelf, as our Saviour ſaith, Mat. 7. All things whatſoever you will that men ſhould do unto you, the ſame do you unto them, for this is the Law and the Prophets; yea, the Law is fulfilled in this one point, Rom. 13. Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf: We therefore (God being our Author) having reſpect as much as in us lyeth unto the ſaid Law of God, and the love of our neighbour, before did ſend our Letters unto Conſtance for our dearly beloved friend of good memory, Maſter John Hus, Bachelor of Divinity, and Preacher of the Goſpel. Whom of late in the Council of Conſtance (we know not with what ſpirit being led) you have condemned as an obſtinate Heretick; neither having confeſſed any thing, neither being lawfully convict as were expedient; having no errors or hereſies declared or laid againſt him, but only at the ſiniſter, falſe and importune accuſations, ſuggeſtions and inſtigations of his mortal enemies, and the Traytors of our Kingdom and Marqueſdom of Moravia. And being thus unmercifully condemned, you have ſlain him with moſt ſhameful and cruel death, to the perpetual ſhame and infamy of our moſt Chriſtian Kingdom of Boheme, and the famous Marqueſdom of Moravia (as we have written unto Conſtance, unto the moſt noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Sigiſmund King of Romans, and of Hungary, the heir and ſucceſſor of our Kingdom) the which was alſo read and publiſhed in your Congregations, which we will here alſo have enrolled; and have burned him, as it is reported, in reproach and contempt of us.

Wherefore we have thought good even now to direct our Letters Patents to your Reverences now preſent in the behalf of Maſter John Hus, openly profeſſing and proteſting both with heart and mouth, that he the ſaid Maſter John Hus was a juſt, good, and Catholick man, and a long ſeaſon worthily commended and allowed in our Kingdom for his life and converſation. He alſo preached and taught us and our ſubjects the Law of the Goſpel, and of the holy Prophets, and the Books of the Old and New Teſtament, according to the Expoſition of the holy Doctors approved by the Church, and left many Monuments in writing, moſt conſtantly deteſting and abhorring all errors and hereſies, continually admoniſhing both us and all faithful Chriſtians to do the like, diligently exhorting all men as much as in him lay, by his words, writings, and travel, unto quietneſs and concord; ſo that uſing all the diligence that we might, we never heard or could underſtand, that Maſter John Hus had preached, taught, or by any means affirmed any error or hereſie in his Sermons, or that by any manner of means he had offended us, or our ſubjects, either by word or deed, but that he always led a quiet and a godly life in Chriſt, exhorting all men diligently, both by his word and works, as much as he might, to obſerve and keep the Law of the Goſpel, and the inſtitutions of the holy Fathers, after the preaching of our Holy Mother the Church, and to the edifying of mens ſouls. Neither did theſe premiſſes which you had ſo perpetrated to the reproach both of us and our Kingdom and Marqueſdom, ſuffice and content you, but that alſo without all mercy and pity you have apprehended, impriſoned and condemned, and even now peradventure, like, as you did Maſter John Hus, you have moſt cruelly murdered the worſhipful man Maſter Jerome of Prague, a man abounding in eloquence, Maſter of the Seven Liberal Arts, and a famous Philoſopher, not being ſeen, heard, examined, neither convict, but only at the ſiniſter and falſe accuſations of his and our accuſers and betrayers.

The cauſe of John Hus cleared by the teſtimony of the Nobles of Bohemia.

All that will live godly in Chriſt. 2 Tim. 3.

Defence of Mr. Jerome of Prague.

Furthermore, it is come to our knowledg and underſtanding (which we do not without great grief rehearſe) as we may alſo evidently gather by your writings, how that certain detractors, odious both to God and men, privy enviers and betrayers, have wickedly and grievouſly, albeit falſly and trayterouſly, accuſed us, our Kingdom and Marqueſdom aforeſaid, before you in your Council, that in the ſaid Kingdom of Boheme and Marqueſdom of Moravia, divers errors are ſprung up, which have grievouſly and manifoldly infected both our hearts, and alſo the hearts of many faithful men; inſomuch that without a ſpeedy ſtop or ſtay of correction, the ſaid Kingdom and Marqueſdom, together with the faithful Chriſtians therein, ſhould incur an irrecuperable loſs and ruin of their ſouls.

Theſe cruel and pernicious injuries which are laid unto us, and to our ſaid Kingdom and Marqueſdom, albeit moſt falſly and ſlanderouſly, how may we ſuffer? Forſomuch as through the grace of God (when in a manner all other Kingdoms of the World have oftentimes wavered, making Schiſmes and Antipopes) our moſt gracious Kingdom of Boheme, and moſt noble Marqueſdom of Moravia, *ſince the time they did receive the Catholick Faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as a moſt perfect * Quadrant have always without reproof ſtuck upon the Church of* Rome, and have ſincerely done their true obedience. Alſo with how great coſts and charges, and great travel, with what worſhip and due reverence they have reverenced the Holy Mother the Church and her Paſtors, by their Princes and faithful Subjects, it is more manifeſt than the day-light unto the whole world; and your ſelves, if you will confeſs the truth, can witneſs the ſame alſo.

He meaneth the long ſchiſm ſpoken of before, where three Popes were ſtriving one againſt another.

* A Quadrant being foureſquare, proverbially ſignifieth a man that is conſtant and immutable.

Wherefore, that we, according to the mind of the Apoſtle, may procure honeſt and good things, not only before God, but before men alſo, and leſt by neglecting the famous renown of the Kingdom and Marqueſdom, we be found cruel toward our neighbours; having a ſtedfaſt hope, a pure and ſincere conſcience and intent, and a certain true faith in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, by the tenour of theſe we ſignifie and declare unto your Fatherhoods, and to all faithful Chriſtians, openly profeſſing both with heart and mouth, that whatſoever man, of what eſtate, preheminence, dignity, condition, degree, or religion ſoever he be, which hath ſaid, or affirmed, either doth ſay or affirm, that in the ſaid Kingdom of Boheme, and Marqueſdom of Moravia, hereſies have ſprung up which have infected us and other faithful Chriſtians, as is aforeſaid (the only perſon of our moſt noble Prince and Lord, Sigiſmund King of Romans, and of Hungary, &c. our Lord and heir ſucceſſour, being ſet apart, whom we truſt and believe, not to be guilty in the premiſſes) all and every ſuch man (as is aforeſaid) doth lye falſely upon his head, as a wicked and naughty Traytor and betrayer of the ſaid Kingdom and Marqueſdom, and moſt trayterous unto us, and moſt pernicious heretick, the ſon of all malice and wickedneſs, yea, and of the Devil himſelf, Joh. 8. who is a lyar, and the father of all lyes.

Notwithſtanding, we for this preſent committing the foreſaid injuries unto God, unto whom vengeance pertaineth, who will alſo abundantly reward the workers of iniquity, will proſecute them more amply before him, whom God Deut. 38. Pſal. 30.

ſhall appoint in the Apoſtolick See, to govern his holy Church, as the only and undoubted Paſtor. Unto whom, God willing, we exhibiting our due reverence and obedience as faithful children, in thoſe things which are lawful, honeſt, and agreeable to reaſon and the Law of God will make our requeſt and petition, that ſpeedy remedy may be provided for us, our ſaid Kingdom and Marqueſdom upon the premiſſes, according to the Law of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the Inſtitutions of the holy Fathers. The premiſſes notwithſtanding, we ſetting apart all fear and mens Ordinances provided to the contrary, will maintain and defend the Law of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the devout, humble and conſtant Preachers thereof, even to the ſhedding of our Bloud.

These Noblemen offered their obedience to the Pope, no further than was lawful, honeſt and agreeable to reaſon and the law of God. Mark this, and learn, you Noblemen.

Dated at Sternberg, in the year of our Lord 1415. upon St. Wenceſlaus day, Martyr of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Round about the ſaid Letters there were fifty four Seals hanging, and their Names ſubſcribed, whoſe Seals they were. The Names of which Noblemen I thought it good here to annex withal, partly for the more credit of that which hath been ſaid, partly alſo for examples ſake, to the intent that our Noblemen and Gentlemen in this our Realm of England, now living in this clear light of the Goſpel, may by their example underſtand, that if they joyn themſelves with the Goſpel of Jeſus, zealouſly, and as they ſhould do, yet are they neither the firſt, nor the moſt that ſo have done before them: if not, yet the truth may here remain in the ſtory to their ſhame, or elſe to their inſtruction, ſeeing ſo many noble and worthy Gentlemen, within the ſmall Kingdom of Bohemia, to be ſo forward in thoſe ſo dark days, and among ſo many enemies two hundred years ago, to take part with Chriſt; and yet our Gentlemen here in ſuch long continuance of time, being ſo diligently taught, are neither in number nor in zeal to them to be compared, but will ſtill take part, contrary both to Chriſt, and to the example of theſe Nobles, whoſe Names they may ſee and read here following:

After theſe things thus declared and diſcourſed, concerning the Hiſtory of John Hus and Jerome of Prague, the order of place and Country next would require, conſequently to infer and comprehend the great troubles and perturbations which happened after, and upon the death of theſe Men in the Country of Boheme: but the order of time calleth me back, firſt to other matters here of our own Country, which paſſed in the mean time with us in England. Which things being taken by the way, and finiſhed, we will (Chriſt willing) afterward return to the tractation hereof, to proſecute the troubles and conflicts of the Bohemians, with other things beſide, pertaining to the later end of the Council of Conſtance, and chooſing of Pope Martin, as the order of years and time ſhall require. KING Hen. 5.

Ye heard before, how after the death of Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſucceeded Henry Chicheſley, in the year of our Lord one thouſand four hundred and fourteen, and ſate twenty five years. In whoſe time was much trouble and great affliction of good men here in England; of whom many were compelled to abjure, ſome were burned, divers were driven to Exile. Whereof partly now to intreat, as we find them in Regiſters and Hiſtories recorded, we will firſt begin with John Claydon Coriar, of London, and Richard Turming, whom Robert Fabian doth falſly affirm to be burned in the year wherein Sir Roger Acton and Maſter Brown ſuffered, who indeed ſuffered not before the ſecond year of Henry Chicheſley being Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which was in the year of our Lord, one thouſand four hundred and thirteen. The Hiſtory of which John Claydon in the Regiſters is thus declared.

The Story of John Claydon Coriar, and of Richard Turming Baker.

The Hiſtory of J. Claydon Coriar of London, and Richard Turming Baker. Ex Regiſt. Cant.

THE ſeventeenth of Auguſt one thouſand four hundred and fifteen, did perſonally appear John Claydon Coriar of London (arreſted by the Mayor of the ſaid City for the ſuſpicion of Hereſie) before Henry Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in Saint Paul's Church; which John (it being objected to him by the Archbiſhop, that in the City of London, and other places of the Province of Canterbury, he was ſuſpected by divers godly and learned Men for Hereſie, and to be contrary to the Catholick Faith, and Determination of the Church) did openly confeſs, and denied not, but that he had been for the ſpace of twenty years ſuſpected both about the City of London, and alſo in the Province of Canterbury, and eſpecially of the common ſort, for Lollardy and Hereſie, and to be contrary to the Catholick Faith and Determination of the Church of Rome, and defamed of the ſame all the time aforeſaid. J. Claydon examined.

Inſomuch, that in the time of Maſter Robert Braybrook Biſhop of London deceaſed, he was for the ſpace of two years, committed to the Priſon of Conwey for the foreſaid defamation and ſuſpicion, and for the ſame cauſe alſo he was in Priſon in the Fleet for three years. Out of which Priſon he (in the Reign of King Henry the fourth) was brought before the Lord John Scarle then Chancellor to the King, and there did abjure all hereſie and error. And the ſaid John Claydon being asked of the ſaid Archbiſhop whether he did abjure the Hereſie of which he was ſuſpect before any other? did confeſs, that in a Convocation at London in Paul's Church before Thomas Arundel late Archbiſhop deceaſed, he did abjure all ſuch Doctrine, which they called Hereſie and Error, contrary to the Catholick Faith and Determination of the Church, and that he had not only left ſuch Articles and Opinions, wherein he was defamed, but alſo did abſtain from all company that were ſuſpected of ſuch Opinions, ſo that he ſhould neither give aid, help, counſel, nor favour unto them. J. Claydon firſt impriſoned by Robert Braybrook Biſhop of London. J. Claydon before abjured.

And moreover, the ſaid John was asked by the ſaid Archbiſhop, whether ever he had in his houſe ſince his Abjuration, in his keeping, any books written in Engliſh. Whereunto he confeſſed, that he would not deny, but that he had in his houſe, and in his keeping many Engliſh books, for he was arreſted by the Mayor of the City of London for ſuch books as he had, which books (as he thought) were in the Mayors keeping. Upon the which the Mayor did

Engliſh Books

KING 2 Hen. 5. The judgment of the Mayor of London.

did openly confeſs, that he had ſuch Books in his keeping which in his judgment were the worſt, and the moſt perverſe that ever he did read or ſee, and one Book that was well bound in red Leather, of parchment, written in a good Engliſh hand; and among the other Books found with the ſaid John Claydon, the Mayor gave up the ſaid Book before the Archbiſhop. Whereupon the ſaid John Claydon, being asked of the Archbiſhop if he knew that Book, did openly confeſs that he knew it very well, becauſe he cauſed it to be written of his own coſts and charges, for he ſpent much mony thereupon ſince his Abjuration. Then was he asked who wrote it. He did anſwer, one called John Grime.

Claydon beſtowed much mony upon Monks.

And further, being required what the ſaid John Grime was, he anſwered, he could not tell. Again, being demanded whether he did ever read the ſame Book, he did confeſs, that he could not read, but he had heard the fourth part thereof read of one John Fullar. And being asked, whether he thought the contents of that Book to be Catholick, profitable, good and true? He anſwered, that many things which he had heard in the ſame Book, were both profitable, good and healthful to his ſoul; and as he ſaid, he had great affection to the ſaid Book, for a Sermon preached at Horſaldowne, that was written in the ſaid Book. And being further asked, whether, ſince the time of his ſaid Abjuration, he did commune with one Richard Baker of the City aforeſaid; he did anſwer, yea: for the ſaid Richard Baker did come often unto his houſe to have communication with him. And being asked whether he knew the ſaid Richard to be ſuſpected, and defamed of Hereſie, he did anſwer again, that he knew well that the ſaid Richard was ſuſpected and defamed of many Men and Women in the City of London, as one whom they thought to be an Heretick.

J. Claydon could not read.

Richard Turming Baker.

This Two ming behike was then in Priſon.

Which confeſſion being made, he did cauſe the ſaid Books to be delivered to Maſter Robert Gilbert, Doctor of Divinity; to William Lindewood Doctor of both Laws, and other Clerks to be examined, and in the mean time, David Beard, Alexander Philip, and Balthaſar Mero, were taken for witneſſes againſt him, and were committed to be examined to Maſter John Eſcourt General Examiner of Canterbury. This done, the Archbiſhop continued his Seſſion till Munday next in the ſame place. Which Munday being come, which was the 20*th* of the ſaid Month, the ſaid Maſter Eſcourt openly and publickly exhibited the witneſſes, being openly read before the Archbiſhop, and other Biſhops; which being read, then after that were read divers tractations, found in the houſe of the ſaid John Claydon: out of the which being examined, divers points were gathered and noted for Hereſies and Errors, and eſpecially out of the Book aforeſaid, which Book the ſaid John Claydon confeſſed by his own coſts to be written and bound, which Book was intituled, The Lanthorn of Light. In the which, and in the other examined, were theſe Articles under written contained:

Wil. Lindewood Doctor of both Laws.

An Engliſh Book, intituled, The Lanthorn of Light.

1. Firſt, Upon the Text of the Goſpel, how the enemy did ſow the Tares, there is ſaid thus; That wicked Antichriſt the Pope hath ſowed among the Laws of Chriſt his Popiſh and corrupt Decrees, which are of no authority, ſtrength, nor value.

2. That the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, ſpeaking indifferently, are the Seats of the Beaſt Antichriſt, when he ſitteth in them, and reigneth above other people in the dark caves of Errors and Hereſies.

3. That the Biſhops Licence, for a Man to preach the Word of God, is the true Character of the Beaſt, i. Antichriſt, and therefore ſimple and faithful Prieſts may preach when they will againſt the prohibition of that Antichriſt, and without Licence.

The head and tail of Antichriſt.

4. That the Court of Rome is the chief Head of Antichriſt, and the Biſhops be the body; and the new Sects, that is, the Monks, Canons and Friers, brought in not by Chriſt, but damnably by the Pope, be the venomous and peſtiferous Tail of Antichriſt.

This is true ſpeaking of the inviſible Church.

5. That no Reprobate is a Member of the Church, but only ſuch as be elected and predeſtinate to Salvation; ſeeing the Church is no other thing but the Congregation of faithful ſouls, which do and will keep their Faith conſtantly, as well in deed as in word.

6. That Chriſt did never plant private Religions in the Church, but whilſt he lived in this world, he did root them out. By which it appeareth that private Religions be unprofitable branches in the Church, and to be rooted out.

7. That the material Churches ſhould not be decked with Gold, Silver and Precious Stones ſumptuouſly, but the followers of the humility of Jeſus Chriſt ought to worſhip their Lord God humbly in mean and ſimple houſes, and not in great buildings, as the Churches be now adays.

8. That there be two chief cauſes of the Perſecution of the Chriſtians: one is, the Prieſts unlawful keeping of temporal and ſuperfluous goods; the other is, the unſatiable begging of the Friers, with their high buildings. Two cauſes of perſecution noted.

9. That Alms is not given vertuouſly nor lawfully, except it be given with theſe four conditions: firſt, unleſs it be given to the honour of God: ſecondly, unleſs it be given of goods juſtly gotten: thirdly, unleſs it be given to ſuch a perſon as the giver thereof knoweth to be in charity: and fourthly, unleſs it be given to ſuch as have need, and do not diſſemble. Four conditions in giving Alms.

10. That the often ſinging in the Church is not founded in the Scripture, and therefore it is not lawful for Prieſts to occupy themſelves with ſinging in the Church, but with the ſtudy of the Law of Chriſt, and preaching his Word.

11. That Judas did receive the Body of Chriſt in Bread, and his Bloud in Wine. In the which it doth plainly appear, that after Conſecration of Bread and Wine made, the ſame Bread and Wine that was before, doth truly remain on the Altar. That Bread remaineth in the Sacrament.

12. That all Eccleſiaſtical Suffrages do profit all vertuous and godly perſons indifferently.

13. That the Popes and the Biſhops Indulgences be unprofitable, neither can they profit them to whom they be given by any means.

14. That the Laity is not bound to obey the Prelates, whatſoever they command, unleſs the Prelates do watch to give God a juſt account of the ſouls of them.

15. That Images are not to be ſought to by Pilgrimages, neither is it lawful for Chriſtians to bow their Knees to them, neither to kiſs them, nor to give them any manner of Reverence.

For the which Articles, the Archbiſhop with other Biſhops, and divers learned communing together, firſt condemned the Books as heretical, and burned them in fire: and then becauſe they thought the ſaid John Claydon to be forſworn and faln into Hereſie, the Archbiſhop did proceed to his definitive ſentence againſt the ſaid John, perſonally appearing before him in judgment (his Confeſſions being read and depoſed againſt him) after this manner: The books of J. Claydon burned.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We Henry by the grace of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, in a certain cauſe of heretical pravity, and of relapſe into the ſame, whereupon John Claydon Layman of the Province of Canterbury, was detected, accuſed and denounced, and in the ſaid our Province of Canterbury publickly defamed (as by publick fame and common report notoriouſly to us hath been known) firſt, ſitting in Judgment-ſeat, and obſerving all things lawfully required in this behalf, do proceed to the pronouncing of the ſentence definitive in form as followeth. The name of Chriſt being invocated and only ſet before our eyes, foraſmuch as by the acts and things enacted, produced, exhibited and confeſſed before us, alſo by divers ſigns and evidences we have found the ſaid John Claydon to have been, and to be publickly and notoriouſly relapſed again into his former Hereſie, heretofore by him abjured; according to the merits and deſerts of the ſaid cauſe, being of us diligently ſearched, weighed and pondered before, to the intent that the ſaid John Claydon ſhall not infect other with his ſcab, by the conſent and aſſent of our reverend brethren Richard Biſhop of London, John Biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield, and Stephen Biſhop of Saint Davids, and of other Doctors, as well of Divinity as of both Laws, and alſo of other diſcreet and learned men aſſiſting us in this behalf, we do judge, pronounce and declare the ſaid The ſentences and condemnation of J. Claydon.

John

John Claydon to be relapsed again into his Heresie, which he before did abjure, finally and definitively appointing him to be left unto the secular judgment, and so do leave him by these presents.

J. Claydon committed to the secular power. The Law de comburendo, insufficient.

Thus John Claydon, receiving his Judgment and Condemnation of the Archbishop, was committed to the Secular power, and by them unjustly and unlawfully was committed to the fire, for that the temporal Magistrate had no such law sufficient for them to burn any such man for Religion condemned of the Prelates, as is above sufficiently proved and declared. But to be short, Quo jure, quaqua injuria, John Claydon notwithstanding, by the temporal Magistrates not long after, was had to Smithfield, where meekly he was made a Burnt Offering unto the Lord, Anno 1415.

The death and Martyrdom of J. Claydon.

Robert Fabian, and other Chronologers which follow him, add also, that Richard Turming Baker, of whom mention is made before in the Examination of John Claydon, was likewise the same time burned with him in Smithfield. Albeit in the Register I find no sentence of Condemnation given against the said Turning, neither yet in the Story of Saint Albans, is there any such mention of his burning made, but only of the burning of John Claydon aforesaid; wherefore the judgment hereof I leave free to the Reader. Notwithstanding, concerning the said Turming this is certain, that he was accused to the Bishops, and no doubt was in their hands and ban[illegible] What afterward was done with him, I refer it unto [illegible] Authors.

The Burning of John Claidon and Richard Turming.

{Ann. 1416}

The next year after the burning of these two aforesaid, and also of John Hus, being burnt at Constance, which was Anno 1416. the Prelates of England seeing the daily encrease of the Gospel, and fearing the ruine of their Papal Kingdom, were busily occupied with all their counsel and diligence to maintain the same. Wherefore to make their state and Kingdom sure, by Statutes, Laws, Constitutions, and terrour of punishment, as Thomas Arundel, and other Prelates had done before, so the forenamed Henry Chicheſley Archbishop of Canterbury, in his Convocation holden at London, maketh another constitution (as though there had not enough been made before) against the poor Lollards; the Copy and tenor whereof he sendeth abroad to the Bishop of London, and to other his Suffragans, by them to be put in straight execution, containing in words as followeth:

Ex Regist. Chicheſley 217.

'HEnry by the Grace of God Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England and Legate of the chief Seat; To our Reverend Brother in the Lord, Richard, by the Grace of God, Bishop of London, health and brotherly love, with continual increase. Lately in our last Convocation in S. Paul's Church in London, being kept by you and other our Brethren and Clergy of our Province, we do remember to have made this Order underwritten, by your consents: When as among many other our cares, this ought to be chief, that by some means we may take those Hereticks, which like Foxes, lurk and hide themselves in the Lords Vineyard; and that the dust of negligence may be utterly shaken from our feet, and from the feet of our fellow brethren; in this the said Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy, we have ordained, that our fellow Brethren, our Suffragans and Archdeacons of our Province of Canterbury, by themselves, their Officials or Commissaries in their Jurisdictions, and every of their charges in their Country, twice every year at the least, do diligently inquire of such persons as are suspect of Heresie; and that in every such their Archdeaconries in every Parish, wherein is reported any Hereticks to inhabite, they cause three or more of the honestest men, and best reported of, to take their Oath upon the holy Evangelist, that if they shall know or understand any frequenting either in privy Conventicles, or else differing in life or manners, from the common conversation of other Catholick Men, or else that hold any either Heresies or Errors, or else that have any suspected Books in the English Tongue, or that do receive any such persons suspect of Heresies and Errors into their Houses, or that be favourers of them that are inhabitants in any such place, or conversant with them, or else have any recourse unto them; they make Certificates of those persons in writing, with all the circumstances wherewith they are suspect, unto the said our Suffragans or Archdeacons, or to their Commissaries, so soon, and with as much speed as possibly they can; And that the said Archdeacon, and every of their Commissaries aforesaid, do declare the Names of all such persons denounced, together with all the circumstances of them, the Dioceſs and places, and secretly under their Seals do send over unto us the same: and that the same Dioceſans effectually direct forth lawful process against them, as the quality of the cause requireth, and that with all diligence they discern, define and execute the same.

Twice every year to enquire for Lollards.

Against privy Conventicles.

To differ from the common sort in life and manners, against the Popes law.

Against English Books.

You should be better occupied to shake off the dust from your dusty Pulpits.

'And

KING Hen. 5

'And if perhaps, they leave not ſuch perſons convict 'unto the Secular Court, yet notwithſtanding, let them com- 'mit them unto the perpetual or temporal Priſons, as the 'quality of the cauſe ſhall require, until the next Convo- 'cation of the Prelates and Clergy of our Province of Can- 'terbury, there perſonally to remain; and that in the ſame 'Priſons they cauſe them to be kept according as the law 'requireth: And that of all and ſingular the things afore- 'ſaid, that is, what inquiſition they have made, and what 'they have found, and how in the proceſs they have beha- 'ved themſelves, and what perſons ſo convict they have 'cauſed to be put in ſafe keeping, with what diligence or 'negligence of the Commiſſaries aforeſaid, with all and all 'manner of other circumſtances premiſed, and thereunto in 'any wiſe appertaining, and eſpecially of the Abjurations, if 'in the mean time they ſhall chance to abjure any Hereſies, 'that then in the next Convocation of the Prelates and 'Clergy under the form aforeſaid, they cauſe the ſame di- 'ſtinctly and apertly to be certified to us and our ſucceſſors; 'and that they deliver effectually to the Official of our 'Court the ſame proceſs to remain with them, or elſe in the 'Regiſter of our Court of Canterbury, ſo that every one, to 'whom ſuch things appertain, for the further execution of 'the ſame proceſs, may have recourſe unto the ſame Offici- 'al with all effect.

'We therefore command, that as touching the conſtitu- 'tion brought unto your City and Dioceſan, you cauſe the 'ſame in convenient place and time to be publiſhed, and 'that in all points you both obſerve the ſame your ſelves, 'and cauſe it alſo of others to be diligently obſerved: com- 'manding furthermore, all and ſingular our fellow Brethren 'and Suffragans, that they in like wiſe cauſe the ſame to be 'publiſhed throughout all their Cities and Dioceſs, and both 'diligently obſerve the ſame themſelves, and alſo cauſe all 'others to do the ſame; and what thing ſoever you ſhall do 'in the premiſſes, that you certifie us betwixt this and the 'Feaſt of St. Peter ad vincula next coming, that you duly 'certifie us of theſe things, by your Letters Patents, contain- 'ing the ſame effect, ſealed with your Seals. Dated at our 'Houſe in London, the firſt day of July, Anno 1416.

¶ During the time of this Convocation in the year a- boveſaid, two Prieſts were preſented and brought before the Biſhops, noted and defamed for Hereticks, one named John Barton, unto whom it was objected by Philip Biſhop of Lincoln, that he had been excommunicated about ſix or ſeven years before, upon Articles concerning Religion, and yet neither would appear, being cited, nor would ſeek to be reconciled again to the Church. Which things being ſo proved againſt him, he was committed to the cuſtody of the foreſaid Philip Biſhop of Lincoln, and ſo to be holden in Priſon, till he ſhould hear further what ſhould be done.

The trouble of John Barton and Robert Chapel in cauſe of religion.

This Philip ſeemeth to be Philip Repington afore mentioned in the ſtory of Wickliff.

The other was Robert Chapel, otherwiſe named Holbech, Chaplain ſometimes to the Lord Cobham; unto whom likewiſe it was objected, that he being under the ſentence of Excommunication about three or four years, yet notwithſtanding, to the contempt of the Keyes, did continue ſaying Maſs, and preaching, and ſought not to be reconciled; Chapel denying that he did know any ſuch Excommunication given out againſt him. Then was the Copy of his Excommunication firſt made by the Biſhop of Roff. afterward denounced by the Biſhop of London at Pauls-Croſs, brought and read before him; and ſo that done, that Seſſion brake up for that time, which was about the later end of May, Anno 1416.

The 12*th* day of the Month of July next following, the ſaid Chapel appeared again before the Archbiſhop and the Prelates. To whom when it was objected as before, how he had preached without the Biſhops Licence in divers places, as at Cobham, at Cowling, and at Shorn; at length, he confeſſing and ſubmitting himſelf, deſired pardon. Which although it was not at the firſt granted unto him, yet at the laſt the Biſhop of Roff. putting in his hands the Decree of the Canon Law; 1. q. 7. Cap. Quoties, &c. and cauſing him to read the ſame, made him to abjure all his former Articles and Opinions as Heretical and Schiſmatical, never to hold the ſame again, according to the contents of the foreſaid Canon. Whereupon the ſaid Robert, being abſolved by the authority of the Archbiſhop (ſave only that he ſhould not intermeddle with ſaying Maſs before he had been diſpenſed from the Pope himſelf for irregularity) was injoyned by the Archbiſhop himſelf for his Penance, ſtanding at Paul's to publiſh theſe Articles following unto the people, inſtead of his confeſſion given him to be read.

Articles obtruded to R. Chapel to confeſs.

Imprimis, I confeſs that Biſhops, Prieſts and other Eccleſiaſtical perſons, having no other poſſeſſion to the contrary, may lawfully have, receive, and retain Lands and Poſſeſſions temporal, to diſpenſe and diſpoſe the ſame and the Rents thereof, to the behoof of themſelves, or of their Church where they dwell, according as ſeemeth good to them.

2. Item, I confeſs, That it were very unlawful, yea rather, unjuſt, that temporal men upon any occaſion, whatſoever it be, ſhould take away temporal Lands and Poſſeſſions from the Church, either univerſal or particular, to which they are given, the conſideration of the abuſe of mortal Prelates, Prieſts, or other Miniſters in the Church converſant (which are mixt together good with bad) abuſing the ſame, to the contrary notwithſtanding.

3. Item, I confeſs, That Peregrinations to the Relicks of Saints, and to holy places, are not prohibited; nor to be contemned of any Catholick, but are available to remiſſion of ſins, and approved of holy Fathers, and worthy to be commended.

Mark well this Catholick Doctrine of the Popes Church concerning remiſſion of ſins.

4. Item, I confeſs, That to worſhip the Images of Chriſt or of any other Saints, being ſet up in the Church, or in any other place, is not forbidden; neither is any cauſe inductive of Idolatry, being ſo uſed as the holy Fathers do will them to be worſhipped; but rather ſuch Images do profit much to the health of Chriſtians, becauſe they do put us in remembrance of the merits of thoſe Saints whom they repreſent, and the ſight of them doth move and ſtir up the people to prayers and devotion.

Mark how this Doctrine joyneth with Gods Commandment, and with his Word.

5. Item, I confeſs, That Auricular Confeſſion uſed in the Church is neceſſary for a ſinner to the ſalvation of his ſoul, and neceſſary to be done of ſuch a Prieſt, as is ordained by the Church to hear the confeſſion of the ſinner, and to enjoyn him Penance for the ſame; without which confeſſion (if it may be had) there is no remiſſion of ſins to him that is in ſin mortal.

Ergo, by this Doctrine the juſt man liveth not by his faith, but by his Confeſſion Auricular.

6. Item, I confeſs and firmly do hold, that although the Prieſt be in mortal ſin, yet may he make the Body of Chriſt, and miniſter other Sacraments and Sacramentals; which nevertheleſs are profitable to all the faithful, whoſoever receive them in faith and devotion of the Church.

How can theſe Prieſts be ſervants of Chriſt, which be makers of Chriſt.

7. Item, I confeſs, That Biſhops in their own Dioceſſes may forbid, decree, or ordain upon reaſonable cauſes, that Prieſts ſhould not preach, without their ſpecial Licence, the Word of God, and that thoſe that do againſt the ſame, ſhould ſuffer the Eccleſiaſtical cenſures.

8. Item, I confeſs, That private Religions, as well of Monks, Canons and other, as alſo of the Begging Friers, being allowed by the Church of Rome, are profitable to the Univerſal Church, and in no means contrary to Gods Law, but rather founded and authoriſed thereon.

Private religions profitable, if ye could tell wherefore.

9. Item, I promiſe and ſwear upon theſe holy Evangeliſts, which I hold here in my hands, that I will henceforth never hold, affirm, nor by any means teach any thing contrary unto the premiſſes either openly or privately.

After the ſetting out of the Conſtitution aforeſaid, in the days of the abovenamed Henry Chicheſley Archbiſhop of Canterbury, great Inquiſition hereupon followed in England, and many good men, whoſe hearts began to be won to the Goſpel, were brought to much vexation, and cauſed outwardly to abjure.

Strait Inquiſition in England.

Thus, while Chriſt had the inward hearts of men; yet the Catholick Antichriſt would needs poſſeſs their outward bodies, and make them ſing after his ſong. In the number of whom, being compelled to abjure, beſides the other aforeſaid, was alſo John Taylor of the Pariſh of St. Michaels at Quern: William James, Maſter of Art and Phyſician, who had long remained in Priſon, and at length, after Abjuration, was licenſed with his Keeper to practiſe his Phyſick.

Chriſt had the hearts of men, they had their bodies.

A brief ſum of ſuch as abjured, under Henry Chicheſley.

J. Taylor.

Will. James.

Alſo John Dwarf, ſo named fore his low ſtature, which was ſent by the Duke of Bedford to the foreſaid Chicheſley, and and other Biſhops, to be examined before them or the Convocation; there he at length revolting from his Doctrine, recanted and did penance.

J. Fourdelay. In like manner John Fourdelay of Lincolnſhire, well commended in the Regiſters for his learning, accuſed by the Prieſts of Lincoln for a certain Book, which he contrary to the former Decree of the Biſhops, did conceal, and did not exhibite unto them, was therefore enforced to abjure. After whom was brought likewiſe before the Biſhops, one Katharine Dertford, a Spinſter, who being accuſed and examined upon theſe 3 Articles concerning the Sacrament of the Popes Altar, Adoration of Images, and of Pilgrimage, anſwered, that ſhe was not able, being unlearned, to anſwer to ſuch high matters, neither had ſhe any further skill, but only her Creed and Ten Commandments; and ſo was ſhe committed to the Vicar-General of the Biſhop of Wint. (for that ſhe was of the ſame Dioceſs) to be kept, and further to be examined of the ſame. Ex Regiſt. H. Chicheſley.

J. Fourdelay abjureth.

Robert Parſon of Heggeley examined. At the ſame ſitting was alſo brought before the ſaid Archbiſhop and his fellow Biſhops, by the Lieutenant of the Tower, the Parſon of Heggeley in Lincolnſhire, named Mr. Rob. who being long kept in the Tower, at length, by the Kings Writ, was brought and examined the ſame time upon the like Articles, to wit, touching the Sacrament of their Altar, Peregrination, Adoration of Images, and whether it was lawful for ſpiritual men to enjoy temporal Lordſhips, &c. To the which Articles he anſwered (ſaith the Regiſter) doubly and mockingly, ſave only in the Sacrament he ſeemed ſomething more conformable, albeit not yet fully to their contentation. Wherefore, being committed to the cuſtody and examination of Richard Biſhop of Lincoln, in the end he was alſo induced to ſubmit himſelf.

W. Henry of Tenterden examined. The ſame likewiſe did W. Henry of Tenterden, being ſuſpected and arreſted for company keeping with them whom the Biſhops called Lollards, and for having ſuſpected Books.

A book of the new lavv. J. Galle. Rob. Monke. Bart. Cornmonger. N. Hoper. Tho. Granter, troubled for their Doctrine. Beſides theſe, divers other there were alſo which in the ſame Convocation were convented, and revoked their Opinions, as J. Galle a Prieſt of London, for having a Book in Engliſh, intituled, A Book of the new Law. Item, Richard Monk, Vicar of Cheſham in Lincolnſhire, who ſubmitted himſelf likewiſe. In this race and number followed moreover, Bartholomew Cornmonger, Nic. Hoper ſervant to the Lord Cobham, Thomas Granter with othermore, mentioned in the foreſaid Regiſter.

Among the reſt which were at this time troubled for their Faith, was one Radulph Mungin Prieſt, who for the ſame Doctrine was arreſted and ſent by the Lord Chantellor of England, to the foreſaid Archbiſhop, and by him committed to David Price, Vicar-General to the Biſhop of London: Where after he had indured four Months in Priſon, he was by the ſaid David preſented to the Convocation, againſt whom divers Articles were objected.

A Subſidy gathered by the Pope to fight againſt the faithful of Bohemia. But for the better explaining of the matter, firſt here is to be noted, that touching the time of this Convocation Provincial, Pope Martin had ſent down to the Clergy of England, for a Subſidy to be gathered of the Church, to maintain the Popes War againſt the Lollards (ſo the Papiſts did term them) of Bohemia. Alſo another Subſidy was demanded to perſecute one Peter Clerk Maſter of Art of Oxford, who flying out of England, was at the Council of Baſil; diſputing on the Bohemians ſide. And thirdly, another Subſidy was alſo required to perſecute William Ruſſel, Warden of the Gray Friers in London, who the ſame time was fled from England to Rome, to maintain his opinion before the Pope, and there eſcaped out of Priſon, &c. of whom more largely hereafter (Chriſt willing) we ſhall entreat. In the mean time mark here the pretty ſhifts of the Pope to hook in the Engliſh money, by all manner of pretences poſſible.

Romiſh ſleights to get the Engliſh money.

Articles objected againſt Ralph Mungin. Thus Ralph Mungin, the foreſaid Examinate, appearing before the Biſhops in the Convocation, it was articulated againſt him, firſt that he ſhould affirm and hold, that it was not lawful for any Chriſtian to fight and make War againſt the Hereticks of Bohemia.

Item, It was to him objected, that he did hold and ſay, that it was not lawful for any man to have propriety of Goods, but the ſame to be common; which he expreſly denied that ever he ſo ſaid or affirmed. Whereby we have to obſerve, how the crafty malice of theſe adverſaries uſeth falſly to collect and furniſe of men, what they never ſpake, whereby to oppreſs them wrongfully whom by plain truth they cannot expugn.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Moreover, they objected againſt him, that he ſhould keep company with Maſter Clerk aforeſaid, and alſo that he diſperſed in the City of London certain Books of John Wickliff and of Peter Clerk, namely the Book Trialogus, and the Goſpels of John Wickliff, &c. He was charged moreover, to have ſpoken againſt the Popes Indulgences affirming that the Pope had no more powr to give Indulgences than he had.

Trialogus. The Goſpels tranſlated by J. Wickl.

Upon theſe and other ſuch Articles objected, the ſaid Mungin, being asked if he would revoke, anſwered, that it ſeemed to him not juſt or meet ſo to do, which did not know himſelf guilty of any Hereſie. Thus he being reſpited for the time, was committed to Priſon till the next ſitting; who then being called divers and ſundry times afterward before the Biſhops, after long Inquiſition and ſtrict Examination made, alſo Depoſitions brought in againſt him ſo much as they could ſearch out, he notwithſtanding ſtill denied, as before, to recant. Wherefore the foreſaid Henry the Archbiſhop, proceeding to his ſentence definitive, condemned him to perpetual Priſon.

Ralph Mungin condemned to perpetual Priſon.

After whoſe condemnation, the Sunday next following the Recantation of Thomas Granter, and of Richard Monk Prieſts above mentioned, were openly ſide at Pauls Croſs; the Biſhop of Rocheſter the ſame time preached at the ſaid Croſs. The tenor of whoſe Recantation, with his Articles in the ſame expreſſed, hereunder followeth:

Tho. Granter. Rich. Monk.

IN the Name of God. Before you my Lord of Canterbury, and all you my Lords here being preſent, and afore you all here gathered at this time, I Thomas Granter, Prieſt unworthy, dwelling in the City of London, feeling and underſtanding that afore this time, I affirmed open Errors and Hereſies, ſaying, believing and affirming within this City, that he that Chriſtian men calleth Pope, is not very Pope, nor Gods Vicary in earth, but I ſaid he was Antichriſt. Alſo I ſaid, believed and affirmed, that after the Sacramental words ſaid by a Prieſt in the Maſs there remaineth material bread and Wine and is not turned into Chriſts Body and his Bloud. Alſo I ſaid and affirmed, that it was not to do in no wiſe, to go on Pilgrimage, but it was better, I ſaid, to abide at home, and beat the ſtools with their heels; for it was, I ſaid, but tree and ſtone that they ſoughten. Alſo I ſaid and affirmed, that I held no Scripture Catholick nor holy, but only that is contained in the Bible. For the Legends and lives of Saints, I held hem nought, and the Miracles written of hem I held untrue. Becauſe of which Errors and Hereſies I was tofore Mr. Dave Price Vicar-general of my Lord of London, and ſince tofore you my Lord of Canterbury and your brethren in your Council Provincial, and by you fully informed, which ſo ſaid, mine affirming, believing and teaching been open Errors and Hereſies, and contrarious to the determination of the Church of Rome. Wherefore I willing to follow and ſewe the Doctrine of Holy Church, and depart fro all manner Errors and Hereſies, and turn with good will and heart to the one Head of the Church, conſidering that holy Church ſhitteth ner cloſeth not hor boſom to him that will turn again, ne God will not the death of a ſinner, but rather he ben turned and live: with a pure heart I confeſs, deteſt, and deſpiſe my ſaid Errors and Hereſies, and the ſaid Opinions I confeſs, as Hereſies and Errours to the Faith of the Church of Rome, and to all univerſall holy Church impugnant. And therefore theſe ſaid Opinions in ſpecial, and all other Errors and Hereſies, Doctrines and Opinions, ayen the Faith of the Church, and the Determinations of the Church of Rome, I abjure and forſwear heretofore you all, and ſwear by theſe holy Goſpels by me bodily touched, that from henceforth I ſhall never hold, teach, ye preach Error, ne Errors, Hereſie, ne Hereſies, nor falſe Doctrine againſt the Faith of holy Church, and determination of the Church of Rome, ner none ſuch thing I ſhall obſtinately defend, ne any man holding or teaching ſuch manner things by me or any other perſon, openly or privily I ſhall defend, I ſhall never after this time be receiver, fautor, counſellor or defendor of Hereticks, or of any perſon ſuſpect of Hereſie, ner I ſhall trow to him, nor wittingly fellaſhip with him, ner yeve him counſel, favour, gift,

And if I know any Hereticks, or of Hereſie, or of ſuch falſe Opinions any perſon ſuſpect, or any man or woman making or holding privy Conventicles, or Aſſemblies, or any divers or ſingular Opinions from the common Doctrine of the Church of* Rome, or if I may know any of their fautors, comforters, counſellers or defenſers, or any that have ſuſpect books or quiers of ſuch Errors and Hereſies; I ſhall let you my Lord of Canterbury, or your Officers in your abſence, or the Dioceſans and Ordinaries of ſuch men, have ſoon and ready knowing, So help me God and holy deme, and theſe holy Evangeliſts by me bodily touched.

After this Recantation at the Croſs thus publiſhed, and his ſubmiſſion made, the ſaid Granter then was by the advice of the Prelates put to ſeven years priſonment, under the cuſtody and charge of the Biſhop of London.

The affliction and trouble in Kent, under Chicheſley.

After this followed in like manner the Recantation of Richard Monk. Alſo of Edmund Frith who was before Butler to Sir John Oldcaſtle.

Beſides theſe above remembred, many and divers there be in the ſaid Regiſter recorded, who likewiſe for their Faith and Religion were greatly vexed and troubled, eſpecially in the Dioceſs of Kent, in the Towns of Romney, Tenterden, Woodchurch, Crambrook, Stophelherſt, Benenden, Halden, Rolvenyden, and others, whereas whole Houſholds, both Man and Wife, were driven to forſake their Houſes and Towns for danger of Perſecution; as ſufficiently appeareth in the proces of the Archbiſhop Chicheſley againſt the ſaid perſons, and in the Certificate of Burbath his Official, wherein are named the perſons following:

Perſons perſecuted in Kent.

Theſe being cited up together by the Biſhop, would not appear. Whereupon great Inquiſition being made for them by his Officers, they were conſtrained to fly their Houſes and Towns, and ſhift for themſelves as covertly as they might. When Burbath and other Officers had ſent to the Archbiſhop, that they could not be found, then he directed down order that Citations ſhould be ſet up for them on every Church-door, through all Towns where they did inhabite, appointing them a day and term when to appear. But notwithſtanding, when as they yet could not be taken, neither would appear, the Archbiſhop, ſitting in his Tribunal Seat, proceedeth to the ſentence of Excommunication againſt them. What afterward happened to them in the Regiſter doth not appear; but like it is, at length they were forced to ſubmit themſelves.

The ſecond apprehenſion of the Lo. Cobham.

¶ Concerning Sir John Oldcaſtle the Lord Cobham, and of his firſt Apprehenſion with his whole Story and Life, ſufficiently hath been expreſſed before, how he being committed to the Tower, and condemned falſly of Hereſie, eſcaped afterward out of the Tower, and was in Wales about the ſpace of four years. In the which mean time, a great ſum of mony was proclaimed by the King, to him that could take the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, either quick or dead. About the end of which four years being expired, the Lord Powis, whether for love or greedineſs of the mony, or whether for hatred of the true and ſincere Doctrine of Chriſt, ſeeking all manner of ways how to play the part of Judas, at length obtained his bloudy purpoſe, and brought the Lord Cobham bound up to London; which was about the year of our Lord 1417. and about the Month of December. At which time there was a Parliament aſſembled in London, for the relief of Mony the ſame time to be ſent to the King, whom the Biſhops had ſent out (as ye heard before) to fight in France. The Records of which Parliament do thus ſay: That on Tueſday the fourteenth day of December, and the nine and twentieth day of the ſaid Parliament, Sir John Oldcaſtle of Cowling, in the County of Kent, Knight, being outlawed (as is afore minded) in the Kings-Bench, and Excommunicated before by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury for Hereſie, was brought before the Lords, and having heard his ſaid Convictions, anſwered not thereto in his Excuſe. Upon which Record and Proceſs it was adjudged, that he ſhould be taken as a Traitor to the King and the Realm; that he ſhould be carried to the Tower of London, and from thence down through London, unto the new Gallows in Saint Giles without Temple-Bar, and there to be hanged, and burned hanging.

The Lord Powis playeth Judas.

As touching the pretenſed Treaſon of this Lord Cobham, falſly aſcribed unto him in his Indictment, riſing upon wrong ſuggeſtion and falſe ſurmiſe, and aggravated by rigour

Treaſon falſly ſurmiſed.

rigour of words, rather than upon any ground of due probation, ſufficiently hath been diſcourſed before in my defence of the ſaid Lord Cobham, againſt Alanus Copus. Where again, it is to be noted, as I ſaid before, and by this it appeareth, that the Lord Cobham was never executed by force of the Indictment or Outlawry, becauſe if he had, he ſhould then have been brought to the Bar in the Kings-Bench, and there the Judges ſhould have demanded of him, what he could have ſaid, why he ſhould not have died; and then not ſhewing ſufficient cauſe for the diſcharge or delay of execution, the Judges ſhould have awarded and given the Judgment of Treaſon; which being not ſo, it is clear he was not executed upon the Indictment. Beſides, to prove that he was not executed upon the Indictment and the Outlawry, the manner of the execution proveth it, becauſe it was neither an execution of a Traitor, nor was the whole puniſhment thereof pronounced by the Judge, as by due order of Law was requiſite.

Vide ſupra.

Finally, as I ſaid before, here I repeat again, that albeit the ſaid Lord Cobham was attainted of Treaſon by the Act, and that the King, the Lords, and the Commons aſſented to the Act: yet all that bindeth not in ſuch ſort (as if indeed he were no Traitor) that any man may not by ſearch of the truth, utter and ſet forth ſincerely and juſtly the very true and certain cauſe whereupon his execution did follow. Which ſeemeth by all circumſtance and firm arguments, to riſe principally of his Religion, which firſt brought him in hatred of the Biſhops; the Biſhops brought him in hatred of the King; the hatred of the King brought him to his Death and Martyrdom. And thus much for the Death and Execution of this worthy Servant of Chriſt the Lord Cobham.

Judas ſeeketh for his reward.

Moreover, in the Records above mentioned, it followeth, how in the ſaid Parliament, after the Martyrdom of this valiant Knight, motion then was made, that the Lord Powis might be thanked and rewarded, according to the Proclamation made for his great travel taken in the apprehenſion of Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, Heretick. Thus ſtand the words of the Record. Where two things are to be noted: Firſt, how Sir John here in the Record is called not Traitor, but Heretick only. Secondly, mark how this Brother of Judas here craveth his reward for betraying the innocent bloud. Wherein it is not to be doubted, but that his light fee, and quid vultis mihi dare in this world, will have an heavy reward hereafter in the world to come, unleſs he repented, &c.

An. 5. Hen. 5. Act 17.

Furthermore, in the ſaid Parliament, Act 17. it was Enacted, That the Church and all Eſtates ſhould enjoy all their Liberties, which were not repealed, or repealable by the common Law; meaning belike, the excluding of the Juriſdiction of the Popes foreign power, which hath always, by the common Law been excluded out of this Realm.

An. 5. Hen. 5. Act 17.

In the ſame Parliament alſo, a grievous complaint was made (by the Biſhops no doubt) againſt Inſurrections. In the end they ſuſpected that they were the Lollards, Hereticks and Traitors, with a requeſt that Commiſſions might at all times be granted to inquire of them. Whereunto anſwer was made, that the Statutes therefore made ſhould be executed, &c. Thus the Clergy, Tanquam leones rugientes, ceaſed not to roar after Chriſtian bloud; and whoſoever was elſe in fault, ſtill the Clergy cried, Crucifie Chriſt, and deliver us Barabbas: for then all horrible facts and miſchiefs, if any were done, were imputed to the poor Lollards.

All the blame laid to the Lollards.

And now from our Engliſh matters, to return again to the ſtory of the Bohemians, from whence we have a little digreſſed: When as the News of the barbarous cruelty exerciſed at Conſtance againſt John Hus and Jerome of Prague, were noiſed in Boheme, the Nobles and Gentlemen of Moravia and Boheme, ſuch as favoured the cauſe of John Hus, gathering themſelves together in the zeal of Chriſt; firſt ſent their Letter unto the Council; expoſtulating with them for the injury done to thoſe godly Men, as is before expreſſed. For the which Letter they were all cited up to the Council. Unto this Letter Sigiſmund the Emperor maketh anſwer again in the name of the whole Council; firſt, excuſing himſelf of John Hus his death, which, he ſaid, was againſt his ſafe conduct, and againſt his will: Inſomuch that he roſe in anger from the Council, and departed out of Conſtance, as is before remembred. Secondly, he requireth them to be quiet, and to conform themſelves peaceably unto the order of the Catholick Church of Rome, &c.

KING 1 Hen. 5. 5

Alſo the Council hearing or fearing ſome ſtir to riſe among the Bohemians, did make Laws and Articles whereby to bridle them, to the number of 14.

Articles decreed by the Council of Conſtance againſt the Bohemians.

FIrſt, That the King of Bohemia ſhall be ſworn to give obedience, and to defend the liberties of the Church of Rome.

That all Maſters, Doctoes and Prieſts ſhall be ſworn to abjure the Doctrine of Wickliff and Hus, in that Council condemned.

That all they which being cited would not appear, ſhould alſo be ſworn to abjure; and they which would not appear, contemning the cenſure of the Keys, ſhould have proceſs againſt them, and be puniſhed.

That all ſuch Lay-men as had defended the cauſe of John Wickliff and John Hus, ſhould ſwear to defend them no more, and to approve the doings of that Council, and the condemnation of John Hus.

That all ſuch ſecular men as had ſpoiled the Clergy, ſhould be ſworn to reſtitution.

That Prieſts being expelled from their Benefices, ſhould be reſtored again.

That all prophaners of Churches ſhould be puniſhed after the Canonical Sanctions.

That ſuch as had been promoters in the Council againſt John Hus, ſhould be permitted ſafely to return into Boheme again, and to enjoy their Benefices.

That the relicks and treaſure taken out of the Church of Prague, ſhould be reſtored fully again.

That the Univerſity of Prague ſhould be reſtored again and reformed, and that they which had been the diſturbers thereof ſhould be really puniſhed.

The favourers of J. Hus in Boheme.

That the principal Hereticks and Doctors of that Sect ſhould be ſent up to the See Apoſtolick, namely, Johannes Jeſſenetz, Jacobellus de Miſna, Simon de Tyſna, Simon de Rochinzano, Chriſtianus de Brachatitz, Joannes Cardinalis, Zdenko de Loben, The Provoſt of Alhallows, Zaiſlaus de Suiertitz, and Michael de Czisko.

That all ſecular men, which communicated under both kinds, ſhould abjure that Hereſie, and ſwear to ſtop the ſame hereafter.

This Suffragan was a good man, and held with Hus.

That they which were ordained Prieſts by the Suffragan of the Archbiſhop of Prague, taken by the Lord Zenco, ſhould not be diſpenſed with, but ſent up to the See Apoſtolick.

Wickliff's Books, tranſlated by J. Hus and Jacobellus into the Bohemian ſpeech.

That the Treatiſes of John Wickliff, tranſlated into the Bohemian Tongue by John Hus and Jacobellus, ſhould be brought to the Ordinary.

That the Treatiſes of John Hus, condemned in the Council, ſhould alſo be brought to the Ordinary.

That all the Tractations of Jecobellus De utraque ſpecie de Antichriſto (wherein he calleth the Pope Antichrift) Et de remanentia panis poſt conſecrationem, ſhould likewiſe be brought and burned.

That all Songs and Ballads made to the prejudice of the Council, and of the Catholick perſons of both States, ſhould be forbid to be ſung in Cities, Towns and Villages, under great and exceam puniſhment.

That none ſhould preach the Word without the Licence of the Ordinary, or of the Parſon of that place.

That Ordinaries and Prelates, having Juriſdiction, ſhould not be ſtopped in their Juriſdiction, by the ſecular power, under pain of Excommunication.

That all and ſingular perſons ſhall be commanded to obedience, under pain of Excommunication; and that whoſoever knoweth any perſon to favour any Wickleviſts, or their Doctrine, or that keepeth company with ſuſpect perſons, he ſhall preſent the ſame to his Dioceſans or his Officials.

That the confederacy of the Seculars made between themſelves, or any of the Spiritualty, to the prejudice of the foreſaid Council, and of the Apoſtolick See and Church of Rome, in the favour of John Hus, Jerome of Prague, and other in the ſaid Council condemned, ſhall be diſſolved.

Conſilium malignantium.

That the Rites and Ceremonies of Chriſtian Religion, touching Gods ſervice, Images, and worſhipping of Relicks ſhall be obſerved, and tranſgreſſors of the ſame be puniſhed.

That

KING Hen. 5.

That all and ſingular, either ſpiritual or ſecular that ſhall preach, teach, hold, or maintain the opinions and articles of John Wickliff, John Hus, and Hierom, in this Council condemned, and convicted of the ſame, ſhall be holden for Hereticks, and falling in relapſe ſhall be burned.

That all ſecular Perſons being moniſhed and charged by the Ordinaries, ſhall be bound to give their aid and furtherance unto them touching the premiſſes.

The Bohemians, notwithſtanding theſe cruel Articles, ſtemming the vain devices of theſe Prelates and Fathers of the Council, ceaſed not to proceed in their league and purpoſe begun, joyning themſelves more ſtrongly together.

In this mean time it happened, that during this Council of Conſtance, after the deſpoiling of Pope John, and ſpoyling of his goods, which came to 75 thouſand pounds of Gold and Silver, as is reported in the Story of Saint Albanes; Pope Martine upon the day of Saint Martine, was elected. Concerning whoſe election great preparation was made before of the Council, ſo that beſide the Cardinals, five other Biſhops of every Nation ſhould enter into the Conclave, who there together ſhould be kept with thin Diet, till they had founded a Pope. At laſt, when they were together, they agreed upon this Man, and not tarrying for choſing the door, like mad men, for haſte they brake open an hole in the wall, crying out, Habemus Papam Martinum, We have a Martine Pope. The Emperor hearing thereof, with the like haſte came apace, and falling down kiſſed the new Popes feet. Then went they all to the Church together, and ſung Te Deum.

The next day following, this Martine was made Prieſt (which before was but a Cardinal Deacon) and the next after was conſecrate Biſhop, and ſang his firſt Maſs, whereat was preſent 140. mitred Biſhops. After this the next morrow, the new holy Pope ordained a general proceſſion, where a certain Clerk was appointed to ſtand with Flax, and fire; who ſetting the Flax on fire, thus ſaid, Ecce Pater ſancte, ſic tranſit gloria mundi. i. Behold holy Father, thus vadeth the Tranſitory glory of this World. Which done, the ſame day the holy Father was brought up unto an high Scaffold (ſaith the Story) I will not ſay to an high Mountain, where was offered to him all the glory of the World, &c. there to be crowned for a triple King. This done, the ſame day after Dinner, the new crowned Pope was with great Triumph brought through the midſt of the City of Conſtance, where all the Biſhops and Abbots followed with their Miters. The Popes Horſe was all Trapt with red Skarlet down to the ground. The Cardinals Horſes were all in white Silk; the Emperor on the right ſide, and Prince Elector on the left, (playing both the Popes Footmen) went on foot, leading the Popes Horſe by the Bridle.

This was Anno, 1417.

Thus the Pope, being now confirmed in his Kingdom, firſt beginneth to write his Letters to the Bohemians, wherein partly he moveth them to Catholick Obedience, partly he diſſembleth with them, ſaigning that if it were not for the Emperors requeſt, he would enter proceſs againſt them. Thirdly and finally he threatneth to attempt the uttermoſt againſt them, and with all force to invade them, as well with the Apoſtolick, as alſo with the ſecular Arm, if they did ſtill perſiſt, as they began.

Albeit theſe new threats of the new Biſhop did nothing move the conſtant hearts of the Bohemians, whom the inward zeal of Chriſts Word had before inflamed.

And although it had been to be wiſhed, ſuch bloodſhed and wars not to have followed; yet to ſay the truth, how could theſe Rabines greatly blame them herein, whom their bloudy Tyranny had before provoked ſo unjuſtly, if now with their gloſing Letters they could not ſo eaſily appeaſe them again?

Wherefore theſe foreſaid Bohemians, partly for the love of John Huſs and Jerome, their Country-men, partly for the hatred of their maglignant papiſtry, aſſembling together, firſt agreed to celebrate a ſolemn Memorial of the death of John Hus and Jerome, decreeing the ſame to be holden and celebrated yearly. And afterward, by means of their Friends they obtained certain Churches of the King, wherein they might freely Preach and Miniſter the Sacraments unto the Congregation. This done, they ſuppreſſed divers Monaſteries, Phariſaical Temples, and Idolatrous Fanes, beginning firſt with the great Monaſtery of the Black-Friers, eight Miles from Prague, driving away the wicked and vicious Prieſts and Monks out of them, or compelling them unto a better Order. And thus their number more and more increaſing under the ſafe conduct of a certain Noble Man named Nicholas, they went again unto the King, requiring to have more and ampler Churches granted unto them. The King ſeemed at the firſt willingly and gently to give ear unto the ſaid Nicholas intreating for the people, and commanded them to come again the next day.

A yearly memorial of J. Hus and Jerome kept among the Bohemians.

When the people were departed, the King turning himſelf to the Noble Man Nicholas, which tarried ſtill behind, ſaid; Thou haſt begun a Web to put me out of my Kingdom, but I will make a Rope of it, wherewithal I will hang thee. Whereupon he immediately departed out of the Kings preſence, and the King himſelf went into the Caſtle of Viſſegrade: within a while after, into a new Caſtle, which he himſelf had builded five ſtones caſts from thence, ſending Embaſſadors to his Brother to require aid.

K. Wenceſlaw threateneth Nicholas.

Theſe Proteſtants being Aſſembled in the Town of Prague, holding their Conventions, the King ſent forth his Chamberlain with three hundred Horſemen to run upon them; but he having reſpect unto his life, fled. When news thereof was brought unto the King, all that were about him being amazed, utterly deteſted the fact: but the Kings Cupbearer ſtanding by, ſaid, I knew before that theſe things would thus come to paſs. Whom the King in a rage taking hold of, threw him down before his feet, and with his Dagger would have ſlain him; but being letted by ſuch as were about him, with much ado he pardoned him his life. Immediately the King being taken with a Palſie fell ſick, and within eighteen days after, when he had marked the names of ſuch whom he had appointed to be put to death, inceſſantly calling for aid of his Brother, and other his Friends, he departed this life before the Princes which he had ſent unto, were come with aid, when he had Reigned five and fifty years, and was about the age of ſeven and fifty years.

The death of King Wenceſlaus.

The marvelous work of Gods judgment to be noted, in defending his people.

The Story of Ziſca.

IMmediately after the death of Wenceſlaus, there was a certain Nobleman named Ziſca, born at Troſnovia, which from his youth upward was brought up in the Kings Court, and had loſt one of his eyes in a Battel, whereas he had valiantly born himſelf. This man being ſore grieved for the death of John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, minding to revenge the injuries which the Council had done, greatly to the diſhonor of the Kingdom of Boheme, upon their complices and adherents; he gathered together a number of Men of War, and ſubverted the Monaſteries and Idolatrous Temples, pulling down and breaking in pieces the Images and Idols, driving away the Prieſts and Monks, which he ſaid were kept in their Cloyſters, like Swine in their ſties to be fatted. After this his Army being increaſed, having gathered together about Forty thouſand Men, he attempted to take the Caſtle of Viſſegrade, which was but ſlenderly warded. From thence the ſaid Ziſca, under the conduct of Coranda, went ſpeedily unto Pelzina, where he knew he had many friends of his faction, and took the Town into his power, fortifying the ſame very ſtrongly, and thoſe which tarried behind, took the Caſtle of Viſſegrade.

Out of Enea Silvius.

Ziſca getteth Pelzina.

Then the Queen Sophia, being very careful, ſent Letters and Meſſengers unto the Emperor Sigiſmund, and other Nobles adjoyned unto her, requiring aid and help: But the Emperor made preparation againſt the Turk, which had then lately won certain Caſtles of him. Whereupon the Queen ſeeing all aid ſo far off, together with Zenko Warterberge, gathered an Hoſt with the Kings treaſure, and fortified the Caſtle of Prague, and the leſſer City which joyneth unto the Caſtle, making Gates and Towers of wood upon the Bridge, over the River Multain, to ſtop that the Proteſtants ſhould have no paſſage that way. Then it happened that at the Iſle of S. Benedict one Peter Steremberge fought an equal or indifferent battel with them.

In the mean time, the number of the Proteſtants being increaſed in Prague, they fought for the Bridge. In which battel many were ſlain on both parts, but at the length the Huſſities wan the Bridge and the nether part of leſſer Prague, the Queens part flying into the upper part thereof: where they turning again fiercely renewed the battel, and fought continually day and night by the ſpace of five days. Many were ſlain on both parts, and goodly buildings were raced, and the Council Houſe, which was in a low place, was utterly defaced and burned.

The Emperors Ambaſſadors agree with the Citizens of Prague.

During the time of this troublous eſtate, the Embaſſadors of the Emperor Sigiſmund were come: which taking upon them the rule and governance of the Realm, made a Truce or League with the City of Prague under this condition, that the Caſtle of Viſſegrade being rendred, it ſhould be lawful for them to ſend Embaſſadors to the Emperor Sigiſmund to intreat as touching their Eſtate, and that Ziſca ſhould render Pilzina and Pieſta with the other Forts which he had taken. Theſe conditions thus agreed upon and received, all the foreign Proteſtants departed out of the City, and the Senate of the City, began to govren again according to their accuſtomed manner, and all things were quieted. Howbeit, the Papiſts which were gone out of the Town, durſt not return again, but ſtill looked for the Emperor, by whoſe preſence they thought they ſhould have been ſafe. But this their hope was fruſtrate by means of certain Letters which were ſent from the Emperor, wherein it was written, that he would ſhortly come and Rule the Kingdom, even after the ſame order and manner as his Father Charles had done before him. Whereupon the Proteſtants underſtood that their Sect and Religion ſhould be utterly baniſhed, which was not begun during the Reign of the ſaid Charles.

About Chriſtmas the Emperor Sigiſmund came to Brunna, a City of Moravia, and there he pardoned the Citizens of Prague, under condition that they would let down the chains and bars of the City, and receive his Rulers and Magiſtrates. Whereunto the whole City obeyed, and the Magiſtrates thereof, lifting up their hands unto Heaven, rejoyced at the coming of the new King. But the Emperor turned another way, and went unto Uratiſlavia, the head City of Sleſia, where a little before the Communalty of the City had ſlain, in an inſurrection, the Magiſtrates, which his Brother Wenceſlaus had ſet in authority; the principals whereof he beheaded. The news whereof when they were reported at Prague, the Citizens being feared by the example of the Uratiſlavians, diſtruſting their pardon, rebelled out of hand, and having obtained Cencho, on their part, which had the government of the Caſtle of Prague, they ſent Letters into all the Realm, that no man ſhould ſuffer the Emperor to enter, which was an enemy unto Boheme, and ſought nothing elſe but to deſtroy the Kingdom: which alſo bound the ancient City of the Prutenians under order by pledges, and put the Marqueſs of Brandenburge, from the Bohemian Crown: and had not only ſuffered John Hus and Hierome of Prague to be burned at the Council of Conſtance, but alſo procured the ſame, and with all his endeavour did impugn the Doctrine and faith which they taught and followed. Whileſt theſe things were thus done Ziſca having given over Pelzina by compoſition, was twice aſſaulted by his Enemies, but through policy he was always Victor. The places where they fought were rough and unknown, his Enemies were on Horſeback, and his Souldiers on Foot, neither could there be any battel fought but on foot. Whereupon when his Enemies were allighted from their Horſes, Ziſca commanded the Women which cuſtomably followed the Hoſt, to caſt their kerchieffs upon the ground, wherein the Horſemen being intangled by their Spurs, were ſlain before they could unlooſe their feet.

The policy of Ziſca.

After this, he went unto Auſca, a Town ſituate upon the River Lucinitius, out of which Town, Procopius and Ulricius, two Brethren Papiſts, had caſt out many Proteſtants. This Town Ziſca took by force of Arms the firſt night of Lent, raced it, and ſet it on fire. He alſo took the Caſtle of Litius, which was a Mile off, whither Ulricius was fled, and put Ulricius and all his Family to the Sword ſaving one only.

The City of Thabor builded.

Then foraſmuch as he had no walled or fenced Town to inhabite, he choſe out a certain place upon the ſame River, which was fenced by nature, about eight Miles from the City of Auſca. This place he compaſſed in with walls, and commanded every man to build them Houſes, where they had pitched their Tents, and named this City Thabor, and the Inhabitants his Companions Thaborites, because their City by all like, was builded upon the top of ſome Hill or Mount. This City, albeit it was fenced with high Rocks and Cleaves, yet was it compaſſed with a wall and vaumure, and the River of Lucinitius fenceth a great part of the Town; the reſt is compaſſed in with a great Brook, the which running ſtraight into the River Lucinitius, is ſtopped by a great Rock, and driven back towards the right hand all the length of the City, and at the further end it joyneth with the great River. The way unto it by land is ſcarce thirty foot broad, for it is almoſt an Iſland. In this place there was a deep ditch caſt, and a triple wall made, of ſuch thickneſs, that it could not be broken with any engine. The wall was full of Towers and Forts ſet in their convenient and meet places. Ziſca was the firſt that builded the Caſtle, and thoſe that came after him fortified it, every man according to his own device. At that time the Thaborites had no Horſemen amongſt them, until ſuch time as Nicholas, Maſter of the Mint (whom the Emperor had ſent into Bohemia with a thouſand Horſemen to ſet things in order, and to withſtand the Thaborites, lodging all night in a Village named Vogize) was ſurpriſed by Ziſca coming upon him ſuddenly in the night, taking away all his Horſe and Armour, and ſetting fire upon the Village. Then Ziſca taught his Souldiers to mount on Horſeback, to leap, to run, to turn, and to caſt a ring, ſo that after this he never led Army without his wings of Horſemen.

Sigiſmund getteth the Caſtle of Prague.

In this mean time Sigiſmundus the Emperor gathering together the Nobles of Sleſia, entred into Boheme, and went into Grecium, and from thence with a great Army unto Cuthna, alluring Cencho with many great and large promiſes to render up the Caſtle of Prague unto him, and there placed him to annoy the Town. This Cencho, infamed with double Treaſon, returned home. The Citizens of Prague ſent for Ziſca, who ſpeeding himſelf thither with the Thaborites, received the City under his governance. In the Bohemians Hoſt there were but only two Barons, Hilco, Cruſina of Lituburge, and Hilco Waldeſtene, with a few other Nobles. All the reſidue were of the Common-people. They went about firſt to ſubdue the Caſtle, which was by nature very ſtrongly fenced, and could not be won by any other means than with Famine: Whereupon all the paſſages were ſtopped that no Victuals ſhould be carried in. But the Emperor opened the paſſages by dint of Sword, and when he had given unto them which were beſieged all things neceſſary, having ſent for aid out of the Empire, he determined ſhortly after to beſiege the City. There were in the Emperors Camp the Dukes of Saxon, the Marqueſs of Brandenburge and his Son in Law of Auſtrich. The City was aſſaulted by the ſpace of ſix weeks. The Emperor Sigiſmund was Crowned in the Metropolitan Houſe in the Caſtle, Conradus the Archbiſhop ſolemniſing the ceremonies of the Coronation. The City was ſtraitly beſieged. In the mean time the Captains Roſenſes and Chragery, which had taken the Tents of the Thaborites, being overcome in battel by Nicholas Hus, whom Ziſca had ſent with part of his power, for that purpoſe, were driven out of their Tents, and Grecium the Queens City was alſo taken.

Ziſca conquereth the City of Prague.

Prague beſieged of Sigiſmund.

There is alſo above the Town of Prague a high Hill, which is called Videchoh. On this Hill had Ziſca ſtrongly planted a garriſon, that his enemies ſhould not poſſeſs it, with whom the Marqueſs of Miſniah skirmiſhing, loſt a great part of his Souldiers. For when as the Miſnians had gotten the top of the hill, being driven back into a corner, which was broken and ſteep, and fiercely ſet upon, when as they could no longer withſtand the violent force of their Enemies, ſome of them were ſlain, and ſome falling headlong from the Hill, were deſtroyed. Whereupon the Emperor Sigiſmund raiſing his ſiege, departed into Cuthna, and Ziſca with his company departed unto Thabor and ſubdued many places ; amongſt which he ſubverted a Town pertaining to the Captain of Viſgrade. During this time the Caſtle of Viſgrade was ſtrongly beſieged, where, when other Victuals wanted, they were compelled to eat horſe fleſh. Laſt of all, except the Emperor did aid them by a certain day, they promiſed to yield it up, but under this condition, that if the Emperor did come, they within the Caſtle ſhould be no more moleſted.

Sigiſmund the Emperor raiſeth his ſiege.

The Emperor was preſent before the day, but being ignorant of the truce taken, entring into a ſtrait underneath the Caſtle, was ſuddenly ſet upon by the Souldiers of Prague, where he had a great overthrow, and ſo leaving his purpoſe unperformed, returned back again. There were ſlain in that conflict fourteen Noblemen of the Moravians, and of the Hungarians, and other a great number. The Caſtle was delivered up unto them. Whileſt theſe things were in doing, Ziſca took Boſlaus a Captain, which was ſurnamed Cigneus, by force, in a very ſtrong Town of his, and brought him unto his Religion. Who a few years after, leading the Proteſtants hoſt in Auſtria, was wounded before Rhetium, and died. There were in the Territory of Pelzina many Monaſteries, of the which Ziſca ſubverted and burned five. And forſomuch as the Monaſtery of Saint Clare was the ſtrongeſt, there he pitched himſelf.

Emperor ſeeing the Ziſcans to the Crown.

The Abbies of Pelzina ſubverted.

Thither alſo came the Emperor with his Army: But when Ziſca brought forth his power againſt him, he moſt cowardly fled, and not long after, he departed and left Boheme. Then Ziſca went with his Army unto Pelzina ; But foraſmuch as he ſaw the City ſo fenced, that he was in doubt of winning the ſame, he went from thence to Committavia a famous City, the which he took by force, burning all the Prieſts therein.

Ziſca puteth the Emperor to flight.

Afterward, when as he lay before the Town of Raby, and ſtrongly beſieged the ſame, he was ſtricken with a ſhaft in the eye, having but that one before to ſee withall. From thence he was carried to Prague by Phyſitians, where he being cured of his wound, and his life ſaved, yet he loſt his ſight, and for all that he would not forſake his Army, but ſtill took the charge of them.

Ziſca loſeth his other eye in battel. Ziſca, albeit he loſt his eyes, yet would not forſake his Army.

After this the Garriſons of Prague went unto Varona, where there was a great Garriſon of the Emperors, and took it by force, many being ſlain of either part. They alſo took the Town of Broda in Germany, and ſlew the Garriſon, and afterward took Cuthna and many other Cities by compoſition. Further, when as they led their Army unto a Town called Pont, which is inhabited of the Miſnians, the Saxons meeting them by the way, becauſe they durſt not joyn battel, they returned back. After all this, the Emperor appointed the Princes Electors a day, that at Bartholomewtide they ſhould with their Army invade the Weſt part of Boheme, and he with an Hoſt of Hungarians would enter into the Eaſt part. There came unto his aid the Archbiſhop of Mentz, the County Palatine of Rhein, the Dukes of Saxon, the Marqueſs of Brandenburge, and many other Biſhops out of Alwaine ; all the reſt ſent their aids. They encamped before the Town of Sozious, a ſtrong and well fenced place, which they could by no means ſubdue. The Country was ſpoyled and waſted round about, and the ſiege continued until the feaſt of S. Galle. Then it was broken up, becauſe the Emperor was not come at his day appointed : but he, having gathered together a great Army of the Hungarians, and Weſt Moravians, about Chriſtmas entred into Boheme ; and took certain Towns by force, and Cuthna was yielded unto him. But when Ziſca (although he was blind) came towards him, and ſet upon him, he being afraid, and many of his Nobles ſlain, fled. But firſt he burned Cuthna, which the Thaborites, by means of the Silver-Mines, called The Powch of Antichriſt. Ziſca purſuing the Emperor a days journey, got great and rich ſpoil, and taking the Town of Broda by force, ſet it on fire ; the which afterward almoſt by the ſpace of fourteen years, remained diſinhabited. The Emperor paſſed by a Bridge over the River of Iglavia. And Piſo a Florentine, which had brought fifteen thouſand Horſemen out of Hungary to theſe Wars, paſſed over the Ice ; the which by the multitude and number of his Horſemen being broke, devoured and deſtroyed a great number. Ziſca having obtained this Victory, would not ſuffer any Image or Idol to be in the Churches, neither thought it to be born withal, that Prieſts ſhould miniſter with Copes or Veſtements : for the which cauſe he was much the more envied amongſt the States of Boheme. And the Conſuls of Prague, being agrieved at the inſolency of John Premonſtratenſis, called him and nine other of his adherents, whom they ſuppoſed to be the principals of this faction into the Council Houſe, as though they would confer with them as touching the Common-wealth : and when they were come in, they ſlew them, and afterward departed home every man to his own houſe, thinking the City had been quiet, as though nothing had been done. But their ſervants being not circumſpect enough, waſhing down the Court or Yard, waſhed out alſo the Blood of thoſe that were ſlain, thorow the Sinks or Chanels ; the which being once ſeen, the people underſtood what was done. By and by there was a tumult ; the Council-houſe was ſtraightway overthrown, and eleven of the principal Citizens, which were thought to be the Authors thereof, were ſlain, and divers houſes ſpoyled.

The Martyrdom of certain godly Bohemians falſly circumvented and killed with the Sword.

Privy murther at length come out.

About the ſame time the Caſtle of Purgel, wherein the Emperor had left a ſmall Garriſon (whither alſo many Papiſts with their Wives and Children were fled) was through negligence burned, and thoſe which eſcaped out of the fire went unto Pelzina. After this divers of the Bohemian Captains, and the Senate of Prague, ſent Ambaſſadors to Vitold Duke of Lituania, and made him their King. This did Ziſca and his adherents gainſay. This Vitold ſent Sigiſmund Coributus with two thouſand Horſemen into Boheme, who was honourably received of the inhabitants of Prague. At his coming they determined to lay ſiege unto a Caſtle ſituate upon a Hill, which was called Charles Stone.

Here Sigiſmundus had left for a Garriſon four Centurions of Souldiers. The Tents were pitched in three places. The ſiege continued ſix Months, and the aſſault never ceaſed day and night. Five great Slings threw continually great ſtones over the walls, and about two thouſand Veſſels, Tubs, or Baskets, filled with dead carcaſes and other excrements, were caſt in amongſt thoſe which were beſieged : which thing did ſo infect them with ſtench, that their Teeth did either fall out, or were all looſe. Notwithſtanding they bare it out with ſtout courage, and continued their fight until the winter, having privily received medicine out of Prague, to faſten their Teeth again.

Stench very hurtful for the Teeth.

In the mean time Frederick the Elder, Prince of Brandenburg, entring into Boheme with a great Power, cauſed them of Prague to raiſe the Siege. And Vitoldus at the requeſt of Uladiſlaus King of Pole, which had talked with the Emperor in the Borders of Hungary, called Coributus his Uncle, with his whole Army, out of Boheme, Whereupon the Emperor ſuppoſed that the Proteſtants being deſtitute of foreign Aid, would the ſooner do his Commandment : but he was far deceived therein ; for they leading their Armies out of Boheme, ſubdued the Borderers thereupon adjoyning. It is alſo reported that Ziſca went into Auſtrich, and when as the Husbandmen of the Country had carried away a great number of their Cattel by water into an Ile of the River called Danubius, and by chance had left certain Calves and Swine in their Villages behind them : Ziſca drave them unto the River ſide, and kept them there ſo long, beating them, and cauſing them to roar out and cry, untill that the Cattel feeding in the Iſland, hearing the lowing and grunting of the Cattel on the other ſide the water for the deſire of their like did ſwim over the River ; by the means whereof he got and drave away a great booty.

Another War-like policy of Ziſca. Stratagema.

About the ſame time the Emperor Sigiſmundus gave unto his Son in law Albert Duke of Auſtrich, the Country of Moravia, becauſe it ſhould not want a Ruler. At the ſame time alſo Ericius King of Denmark, and Peter Infant, Brother to the King of Portugal and Father of James, Cardinal of Saint Euſtachius, came unto the Emperor, being both very expert men in the affairs of War, which did augment the Emperors Hoſt with their Aid and Power. Whereupon they ſtraightway pitched their Camp before Lutemperge, a Town of Moravia, and and continued the ſiege by the ſpace of three Months. There was at that time a certain Knight at Prague ſurnamed Aqua, which was very Rich and of great Authority. This man, forſomuch as he had no Child of his own, adopted unto him his Siſters Son, named Procopius; whom when he was of mean nature and age, he carried with him into France, Spain, and Italy, and unto Jeruſalem, and at his return cauſed him to be made Prieſt. This man when the Goſpel began to flouriſh in Boheme, took part with Ziſca; and forſamuch as he was ſtrong and valiant, and alſo painful, he was greatly eſteemed.

Procopius Magnus.

This Procopius for his valiant Acts was afterward called Procopius Magnus, and had committed unto him the whole charge of the Province of Moravia, and the defence of the Lutemperges, who receiving a great power by force (mauger all the whole power which lay in the ſiege) carried Victuals into the Town which was beſieged, and ſo did fruſtrate the Emperors ſiege: The Emperor before this, had delivered unto the Marqueſſes of Miſnia the Bridge and Town of Aſca, upon the River of Albis, that they ſhould fortifie them with their Garriſons. Whereupon Ziſca beſieged Auſca; and Frederick the Marqueſs of Miſnia, with his Brother the Lantzgrave of Turing, gathering together a great Army out of Saxonia, Turing, Miſnia, and both the Luſaces, determined to reſcue and aid thoſe which were beſieged.

The valiant courage of Procopius.

There was a great battel fought before the City, and the Victory depended long uncertain; but at laſt it fell on the Portenants part. There were ſlain in the battel the Burgraves of Miſnia or Chyrpogenſes, the Barons of Glychen and many other Nobles, beſides nine thouſand common Souldiers, and the Town of Auſca was taken and utterly raced.

The victory of Protestants.

At the laſt, diſſention riſing between Ziſca and them of Prague, they of Prague prepared an Army againſt him, wherewith he perceiving himſelf overmatched, fled unto the River of Albis, and was almoſt taken, but that he had paſſage thorow the Town of Poggiebras; but they of Prague, purſuing the tail of the battel, ſlew many of his Thaborites. At the length they came unto certain Hills, where Ziſca going into the valley, knowing the ſtraits of the place, that his Enemies could not ſpread their Army, he commanded his Standard to ſtand ſtill, and exhorting and encouraging his Souldiers he gave them battel.

The battel between the City of Prague and Ziſca.

This battel was very fierce and cruel; but Ziſca having the upper hand, ſlew three Thouſand of them of Prague, and put the reſt to flight, and ſtraightways took the City of Cathna by force (which they of Prague had repaired) and ſet it on fire: then with all ſpeed he went with his Army to beſiege Prague, and incamped within a bow ſhot of the Town. There were many both in the City, and alſo in his Hoſt, which grudged ſore at that ſiege; ſome accuſing Ziſca, otherſome them of Prague. There were great tumults in the Camp, the Souldiers ſaying that it was not reaſonable, that the City ſhould be ſuppreſſed, which was both the head of the Kingdom, and did not diſſent from them in opinion, ſaying, that the Bohemians power would ſoon decay, if their enemies ſhould know that they were divided within themſelves; alſo that they had ſufficient wars againſt the Emperor, and that it was but a fooliſh device to move wars amongſt themſelves. This talk came unto the ear of Ziſca, who calling together his Army, ſtanding upon a place to be heard ſpake in theſe words.

The noble victory of Ziſca.

Ziſca beſiegeth Prague.

A notable Oration of Ziſca to his Souldiers.

BRethren, be ye not aggrieved againſt me, neither accuſe him which hath ſought your health and ſafegard. The victories which ye have obtained under my conduct are yet freſh in memory, neither have I brought you at any time unto any place, from whence you have not come victors. You are become famous and rich, and I for your ſake have loſt my ſight, and dwell in darkneſs. Nothing have I gotten by all theſe fortunate battels, but only a vain name. For you have I fought, and for you have I vanquiſhed; neither do I repent me of my Travels, neither is my blindneſs grievous unto me, but only that I cannot provide for you according to my accuſtomed manner: neither do I perſecute them of Prague for mine own cauſe, for it is your bloud that they thirſt and ſeek for, and not for mine. It were but ſmall pleaſure for them to deſtroy me, being now an old man and blind, it is your valiantneſs and ſtout ſtomachs which they fear. Either muſt you or they periſh; who whileſt they ſeem to lie in waite for me, do ſeek after your lives. You muſt rather fear civil War than foreign, and civil ſedition ought firſt to be avoided. We will ſubdue Prague, and baniſh the ſeditious Citizens before the Emperor ſhall have any news of this ſedition. And then having but a few of his faction left, we may with the leſs fear look for it, better than if theſe doubtful Citizens of Prague were ſtill in our Camp. But becauſe ye ſhall accuſe me no more, I give you free liberty to do what you will. If it pleaſe you to ſuffer them of Prague to live in quietneſs, I will not be againſt it, ſo that there be no Treaſon wrought. If you determine to have War, I am alſo ready. Look which part you will incline unto, Ziſca will be your aid and helper.

KING Hen. 5.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, the Souldiers minds were changed, and wholly determined to make Wars, ſo that they ran by and by to take up their Armor and Weapons, to run unto the Walls, to provoke their Enemies to fight for the Gates of the City. Ziſca in the mean time prepared all things ready for the aſſault. There is a little from Pelzina a certain Village named Rochezana. In this place there was a Child born of poor and baſe Parentage, whoſe name was John; he came unto [illegible], and got his living there by begging, and learned Grammar and Logick. When he came to Mans ſtate, he became the Schoolmaſter of a Noble Mans Child; and forſomuch as he was of an excellent Wit and ready Tongue, he was received into the College of the Poor: and laſt of all, being made Prieſt, he began to Preach the Word of God to the Citizens of Prague, and was named Joannes de Rochezana, by the name of the Town where he was born. This Man grew to be of great name and authority in the Town of Prague. Whereupon when as Ziſca beſieged Prague, he by the conſent of the Citizens went out into the Camp and reconciled Ziſca again unto the City.

Peace between Ziſca and Prague, by the means of John de Rochezana.

When as the Emperor perceived that all things came to paſs according unto Ziſca his will and mind, and that upon him alone the whole State of Boheme did depend, he ſought privy means to reconcile and get Ziſca into his favour, promiſing him the Governance of the wole Kingdom, the guiding of all his Hoſts and Armies, and great yearly revenewes if he would proclaim him King, and cauſe the Cities to be ſworn unto him. Upon which conditions, when as Ziſca for the perſormance of the covenants went unto the Emperor, being in his journey at the Caſtle of Miſcovia, he was ſtricken with ſickneſs and died.

The Emperor glad to be reconcilled with Ziſca.

It is reported, that when he was demanded, being ſick, in what place he would be buried; he commanded the skin to be pulled off from his Carcaſe, and the fleſh to be caſt unto the Fowls and Beaſts, and that a Drum ſhould be made of his skin, which they ſhould uſe in their battels; affirming, that as ſoon as their enemies ſhould hear the ſound of that Drum, they would not abide but take their flight. The Thaborites deſpiſing all other Images, yet ſet up the Picture of Ziſca over the Gates of the City.

The Epitaph of Ziſca.

JOhn Ziſca, not inferiour to an Emperor, or Captain in warlick policy, a ſevere puniſher of the pride and avarice of the Clergy, and a defender of my Country, do lie here. That which Appius Claudius by giving good Counſel, and M. Furius Camillus by valiantneſs did for the Romans; the ſame I being blind have done for my Bohemians. I never ſlacked opportunity of battel, neither did fortune at any time fail me. I being blind did foreſee all opportunity of well ordering or doing my buſineſs. Eleven times in joyning battel I went Victor out of the field. I ſeemed to have worthily defended the cauſe of the miſerable and hungry againſt the delicate, fat, and gluttonous Prieſts, and for that cauſe to have received help at the hands of God. If their envy had not let it, without doubt I had deſerved to be numbred amongſt the moſt famous men. Notwithſtanding my bones lie here in this hallowed place, even in deſpite of the Pope.

IOANNES

[KING Hen. 5.] ΙΩΑΝΝΕΣ ΣΙΣΚΑΣ ὁ βωμικὸς τῆς αἱρετικερδοῦς ἱερέων ἐχθρὸς, ἀλλὰ ὐ θείω ζηλῳ.

¶ John Ziſca a Bohemian, enemy to all wicked and covetous Prieſts, but with a godly zeal.

And thus have you the acts and doings of this worthy Ziſca, and other Bohemians, which for the more credit we have drawn out of Æneas Sylvius, only his railing terms excepted which we have here ſuppreſſed.

All this while the Emperor with the whole power of the Germans, were not ſo buſie on the one ſide, but Martin the Pope was as much occupied on the other ſide: who about the ſame time directed down a terrible Bull, full of all Poiſon, to all Biſhops and Archbiſhops, againſt all ſuch as took any part or ſide with Wickliff, John Hus, Jerom, or with their doctrine and opinions. The copy of which Bull, which I found in an old written Monument, I wiſh the Reader thoroughly to peruſe, wherein he ſhall ſee the Pope to pour out at once all his Poiſon.

The Bull of Pope Martin directed forth againſt the Followers of John Wickliff of England, of John Hus of Boheme, and Jerom of Prague.

Pope Martins bloudy Bull to all Biſhops and Archbiſhops.

MArtin, Biſhop, the ſervant of Gods Servants, to our Reverend Brethren the Archbiſhops of Salzeburgen, Gueznen, and Pragen, and to the Biſhops of Olumucen, Luthomuſlen, Bambergen, Miſnen, Patavien, Uratiſlavien, Ratiſponen, Cracovian, Poſnamen, and Nitrien, and alſo to our beloved Children the Inquiſitors appointed of the Prelates above recited, or where elſe ſoever, unto whom theſe preſent Letters ſhall come, greeting, and Apoſtolical Benediction. Amongſt all other paſtoral cares wherewith we are oppreſſed, this chiefly and ſpecially doth inforce us, that Hereticks with their falſe Doctrine and Errors, being utterly expulſed from amongſt the company of Chriſtian men, and rooted out (ſo far forth as God will make us able to do) the Right and Catholick Faith may remain ſound and undefiled; and that all Chriſtian people, immoveable and inviolate, may ſtand and abide in the ſincerity of the ſame Faith, the whole veil of obſcurity being removed. But lately in divers places of the World, but eſpecially in Bohemia, and the Dukedom of Moravia, and in the Straits adjoyning thereunto, certain Arch-hereticks have riſen and ſprung up, not againſt one only, but againſt divers and ſundry Documents of the Catholick Faith, being Land-lopers, Schiſmaticks, and ſeditious Perſons, fraught with deviliſh Pride, and wolviſh Madneſs, deceived by the ſubtilty of Satan, and from one evil Vanity brought to a worſe. Who although they roſe up and ſprang in divers parts of the World, yet agreed they all in one, having their tails as it were knit together, to wit, John Wickliff of England, John Hus of Bohemia, and Jerom of Prague of damnable memory, who drew with them no ſmall number to miſerable ruine and infidelity. For when as thoſe and ſuch like peſtiferous Perſons did in the beginning of their poiſoned Doctrine obſtinately ſow and ſpread abroad perverſe and falſe opinions, the Prelates who had the regiment and execution of the judicial Power, like dumb Dogs not able to Bark, neither yet revenging ſpeedily with the Apoſtle all ſuch diſobedience, nor regarding corporally to caſt out of the Lords houſe (as they were injoyned by the Canons) thoſe ſubtil and peſtilent Arch-hereticks, and their wolviſh fury and cruelty, with all expedition, but ſuffering their falſe and pernitious Doctrine negligently, by their over-long delays, to grow and wax ſtrong; a great multitude of people inſtead of true Doctrine received thoſe things, which they did long, falſly, pernitiouſly and damnably ſow among them, and giving credit unto them, fell from the right Faith, and are intangled (the more pity) in the foul Errors of Paganiſm.

All theſe Errors and Hereſies be, for that they ſpeak againſt the pride of Prelates and their exceſſive dignities.

All the Pagans, with the Pope, that like not his ſuperſtitious and idolatrous traditions.

Inſomuch, that theſe Arch-hereticks, and ſuch as ſpring of them, have infected the Catholick flock of Chriſt in divers climates of the World, and parts bordering upon the ſame, and have cauſed them to putrifie in the filthy Dunghil of their lies. Wherefore the general Synod of Conſtance was compelled with Saint Auguſtine to exclaim againſt ſo great and ruinous a Plague of faithful Men, and of the ſound and true Faith it ſelf, ſaying; What ſhall the ſoveraign Medicine of the Church do, with motherly love ſeeking the health of her Sheep, chafing as it were, amongſt a company of Men frantick, and having the diſeaſe of the Lethargy? What ſhall ſhe deſiſt and leave off her good purpoſe? No, not ſo. But rather let her, if there be no remedy, be ſharp to both theſe ſorts, which are the grievous Enemies of her womb. For the Phyſitian is ſharp unto the man diſtraught and raging in his frenzie, and yet he is a Father to his own rude and unmannerly Son, in binding the one, in beating the other, by ſhewing therein his great love unto them both. But if they be negligent, and ſuffer them to periſh (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) this Manſuetude is rather to be ſuppoſed falſe cruelty.

A great difference between a loving Mother, and the frantick Whore of Babylon.

And therefore the foreſaid Synod, to the glory of Almighty God, and preſervation of his Catholick Faith, and augmenting of Chriſtian Religion, and for the ſalvation of Mens ſouls, hath corporally rejected and caſt forth of the houſhold of God, the foreſaid John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerom; who amongſt other things did believe, preach, teach, and maintain of the Sacrament of the Altar, and other Sacraments of the Church, and Articles of the Faith, contrary to that the Holy Church of Rome believeth, holdeth, preacheth and teacheth, and have preſumed obſtinately to preach, teach, hold and believe many other moe, to the damnation of themſelves and of others; and the ſaid Synod hath ſeparated the ſame, as obſtinate and malapert Hereticks from the Communion of the faithful people, and hath declared them to be ſpiritually thrown forth. And many other things both wholeſome and profitable hath the ſame Council, as touching the premiſſes, Stabliſhed and Decreed, whereby they, which by the means of thoſe Arch-hereticks, and by their falſe Doctrine, have ſpiritually departed from the Lords Houſe, may by the Canonical Rules be reduced to the ſtraight path of truth and verity.

And moreover (as we to our great grief do hear) not only in the Kingdom of Bohemia, and Dukedom of Moravia, and other places above recited, but alſo in certain parts and provinces near adjoyning and bordering upon the ſame, there be many other of the ſectaries and followers of the foreſaid Arch-hereticks and Heretical opinions; caſting behind their backs as well the fear of God, as the ſhame of the world, neither receiving Fruit of converſion and repentance by the miſerable deſtruction of the foreſaid John Hus and Jerom, but as men drowned in the Dungeon of their ſins, ceaſe not to blaſpheme the Lord God, taking his name in vain (whoſe minds the Fathers of lies hath damnably blinded) and do read and Study the foreſaid Books or Works, containing Hereſies and Errors, being lately by the foreſaid Synod condemned to be burned; alſo to the peril of themſelves and many other ſimple men, and againſt the Statutes, Decrees, and Ordinances in the Synod aforeſaid, and the Canonical Sanctions, do preſume to preach and teach the ſame, to the great peril of ſouls, and derogation of the Catholick Faith, and ſlander of many other beſides: We therefore conſidering, that Error, where it is not reſiſted, ſeemeth to be allowed and liked; and having a deſire to reſiſt ſuch evil and pernitious Errors, and utterly root them out from amongſt the company of faithful Chriſtians, eſpecially from the aforerecited places of Bohemia, Moravia, and other Straits and Ilands joyning and bordering upon the ſame, leſt they ſhould ſtretch out and enlarge their limits; we will and command your diſcretions by our Letters Apoſtolical, the holy Council of Conſtance approving and allowing the ſame, that you that are Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other of the Clergy, and every one of you by himſelf, or by any other or others, being grave and fit perſons to have ſpiritual juriſdiction, do ſee that all and ſingular perſons, of what Diginity, Office, Preeminence, State, or Condition ſoever they be, and by what name ſoever they are known, which ſhall preſume otherwiſe to teach, preach, or obſerve, touching the moſt high and excellent, the moſt wholeſome and ſuperadmirable Sacrament of the Bloud of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, or elſe of the Sacrament of Baptiſm, Confeſſion of ſins, Penance for ſins, and extream Unction, or elſe of any other Sacraments of the Church, and the Articles of the Faith, than that which the right Holy and Univerſal Church of Rome doth hold, teach, preach, and obſerve; or elſe that ſhall perſume obſtinately by any ways or means, privily or apertly, to hold, believe, and teach the Articles, Books, or Doctrine of the foreſaid Arch-hereticks, John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerom of Prague, being by the foreſaid Synod of Conſtance with their Authors (as is ſaid) damned and condemned, or dare preſume publickly or privily to allow or commend in any wiſe the death and end of the ſaid Arch-hereticks, or of any other their receivers, aiders, and favourers, in the favour or ſupportation of the foreſaid Errors, as alſo their believers and adherents; that then as before, you ſee and cauſe them, and every of them to be moſt ſeverely puniſhed, and that you judge and give ſentence upon them as Hereticks, and that as arrant Hereticks you leave them to the ſecular Court or power. Let the receivers alſo and favourers and defenders of ſuch moſt peſtiferous Perſons, notwithſtanding they neither believe, favour, nor have devotion towards their Errors, but haply ſhall receive or entertain ſuch peſtiferous Perſons becauſe of carnal affection, or Friendly love, beſides the puniſhment due unto them by both Laws, over and above the ſame puniſhment by competent Judges, be ſo afflicted, and for ſo hainous Acts of theirs, with ſo ſevere pain and puniſhment excruciated, that the ſame may be to other in like caſe offending an example of terror; that at the leaſt, thoſe whom the fear of God by no means may revoke from ſuch evil doing, yet the ſeverity of this our diſcipline may force and conſtrain.

As touching the third ſort, which ſhall be any manner of ways infected with this damnable Sect, and ſhall after competent admonition repent and amend themſelves of ſuch Errors and Sects aforeſaid, and will return again into the lap and unity of our holy Mother the Church, and fully acknowledge and confeſs the Catholick Faith towards them let the ſeverity of juſtice, as the quality of the fact ſhall require, be ſomewhat tempered with a taſte of mercy.

Et vidi beſtiam & reges terræ & exercituum eorum pugnantes cum illo qui ſedebat in equo, & exercitu ejus. Apoc. 19. Et data eſt illi poteſtas in omnem tribum, & populum, & linguam & gentem, I. e. And power is given him over all Tribes, and People, and Tongues, and Nations, &c. Apoc. 13.

And furthermore we will and command, that by this our authority Apoſtolical ye exhort and admoniſh all the profeſſors of the Catholick Faith, as Emperors, Kings, Dukes, Princes, Marqueſſes, Earls, Barons, Knights, and other Magiſtrates, Rectors, Conſuls, Proconſuls, Shires, Countries, and Univerſities of the Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, Caſtles, Villages, their Lands and other places, and all other executing Temporal Juriſdiction, according to the form and exigence of the Law, that they expel out of their Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, Caſtles, Villages and Lands, and other places, all and all manner of ſuch Hereticks, according to the effect and tenour of the Council of Lateran, beginning, Sicut ait Eccleſia, &c. that thoſe whom publickly and manifeſtly by the evidence of their deeds ſhall be known to be ſuch as like ſick and ſcabbed Sheep infect the Lords Flock, they expel and baniſh till ſuch time as from us, or you, or elſe other Eccleſiaſtical Judges or Inquiſitors, holding the faith and communion of the holy Church of Rome, they ſhall receive other Order and countermand; and that they ſuffer no ſuch within their Shires and Circuits, to preach or to keep either houſe or family, either yet to uſe any handy-craft or occupations, or other trades of Merchandiſe, or elſe to ſolace themſelves any ways, or frequent the company of Chriſtian men.

And furthermore, if ſuch publick and known Hereticks ſhall chance to die, (although not ſo denounced by the Church) yet in this ſo great a Crime let him and them want Chriſtian burial, and let no Offerings or Oblations be made for them, nor received. His goods and ſubſtance alſo from the time of his death, according to the canonical Sanctions being confiſcate, let no ſuch enjoy them to whom they appertain, till that by the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, having power and authority in this behalf, Sentence upon that his or their crime of Hereſie be declared, and promulgate; and let ſuch Owners as be found ſuſpect or noted with any ſuch ſuſpition of Hereſie, before a competent and Eccleſiaſtical Judge, according to the conſideration and exigence of that ſuſpition, and according to the quality of the perſon, by the arbitrement of ſuch a Judge, ſhew and declare his proper and own innocency with devotion, as beſeemeth in that behalf. And if in his purgation, being canonically interdicted, he do fail, or be not able canonically to make his purgation, or that he refuſe to take his Oath by damnable obſtinacy to make ſuch purgation; then let him be condemned as an Heretick. But ſuch as through negligence or through ſlothfulneſs ſhall omit to ſhew their ſaid Innocency, and to make ſuch purgation, let him be Excommunicate, and ſo long put out from the company of Chriſtian men, till that they ſhall make condign ſatisfaction; ſo that if by the ſpace of one whole year they ſhall remain in ſuch Excommunication, then let them as Hereticks be condemned.

{KING Hen. 8.}

And further, if any ſhall be found culpable in any point of the foreſaid peſtiferous Doctrine of the Arch-hereticks aforeſaid, or in any Article thereof, whether it be by the report of the Seditious, or elſe well-diſpoſed; let them yet be puniſhed according to the Canons. If only through infamy and ſuſpition of the foreſaid Articles, or any of them, any man ſhall be found ſuſpect, and in his purgation canonical for this thing being interdicted, ſhall fail; let him be accounted as a man convict, and as a convict perſon by the Canons let him be puniſhed.

Note the tenderneſs of this living Chuſch Rome.

And furthermore, we invocating and putting in execution the Canon of our Predeceſſor of happy Memory, Pope Boniface the Eighth, which beginneth thus, Ut inquiſitionis negotium, &c. In exhorting-wiſe require, and alſo command all Temporal Potentates, Lords and Judges afore recited, by whatſoever Dignities, Offices and Names they are known, that as they deſire to be had, eſteemed, and counted for the Faithful members and children of the Church, and do rejoyce in the peace of Chriſt, ſo in likewiſe for defence of the ſame Faith, they will obey, intend, give their aid and favourable help to you that are Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Eccleſiaſtical men, Inquiſitors of all heretical pravity, and other Judges and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons by you hereunto, as aforeſaid, appointed (holding the faith and communion of our holy Mother the Church) for the ſearching out, taking, and ſafe cuſtody of all the aforeſaid Hereticks, their Believers, their Favourers, their Receivers, and their Defenders, whenſoever they ſhall be thereunto of them required.

Et faciet omnes pusillos, & magnos, & divites, & pauperes, & ſervos, accipere characterem in manu ſua dextra. I. e. And he ſhall make both little and great, rich and poor, free and bond to take his character in their right hand, &c. Apoc. 13.

And that they bring and cauſe to be brought (all delay ſet apart) the foreſaid peſtiferous perſons ſo ſeeking to deſtroy others with them, into ſuch ſafe keeping and priſons, as by you the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Clergy and Inquiſitors aforeſaid, are to be appointed or elſe unto ſuch other place or places, as either you or they ſhall command within any of their Dominions, Governments and Rectories, where they by Catholick men; that is, by you the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, the Clergy and Inquiſitors, or any other that ſhall be by you appointed, or are already appointed by any of you, may be holden and kept in ſafe keeping, putting them in fetters, ſhackles, bolts, and manacles of Iron under moſt ſtraight cuſtody for eſcaping away, till ſuch time as all that buſineſs, which belongeth unto them, be by the judgment of the Church finiſhed and determined, and that of ſuch Hereſie, by a competent Eccleſiaſtical Judge (which firmly holdeth the faith and communion of the foreſaid holy Church of Rome) they be condemned.

Satan raiſeth his chains.

The reſidue let the foreſaid Temporal Lords, Rectors, Judges, or other their Officers and Purſevants take amongſt them with condign deaths, without any delay to puniſh. But fearing leſt to the prejudice and ſlander of the foreſaid Catholick Faith and Religion, through the pretext of ignorance, any man herein ſhould be circumvented, or that any ſubtil and crafty men ſhould under the veil of frivolous excuſe cloke and diſſemble in this matter; and that as touching the convincing or apprehending of the foreſaid Hereticks, their Receivers and Defenders, Favourers, Believers, and Adherents; and alſo of ſuch as are ſuſpect of Hereſie, and with ſuch like perverſe Doctrine in any wiſe ſpotted, we might give more perfect inſtruction; Therefore as well to the Kingdom of Bohemia, and parts near adjoyning to the ſame, as all other where this ſuperſtitious Doctrine began to ſpread, we have thought it good to ſend the Articles hereunder written concerning the Sect of thoſe Arch-Hereticks, for the better direction of the foreſaid Catholick Faith.

Touching which Articles, by vertue of holy Obedience, we charge and command you and all other Archbiſhops and Biſhops, all manner of Commiſſaries and Inquiſitors, that every of them within the Dioceſs and Limits of their Juriſdiction; and alſo in the foreſaid Kingdom, and Dukedom, and places near adjoyning, although the ſame places be beyond the ſame their Juriſdiction, in the favour of the

KING Hen. 5.

Catholick Faith, do give moſt diligent and vigilant care about the extirpation and correction of thoſe Errors, Archheſeſies, and moſt peſtiferous Sect aforeſaid; and alſo that they compel all defamed perſons and ſuſpect of ſo peſtiferous a Contagion, whether it be under the penalty of the Crime confeſſed, or of Excommunication, ſuſpenſion or interdict, or any other formidable pain canonical or legal, when and whereſoever it ſhall ſeem good unto them, and as the quality of the fact requireth, by an Oath corporally taken, either upon the holy Evangeliſts, or upon the Reſiques of Saints, or upon the Image of the Crucifix, according to the obſervances of certain places, and according to the Interrogatories, to make convenient anſwer to every Article therein written. For we intend againſt all and ſingular Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, or Inquiſitors, which ſhall ſhew themſelves negligent and remiſs in the extirpation of the leaven of this heretical pravity, and purging their Territories, Dioceſs, and places to them appointed, of ſuch evil and wicked men, to proceed and cauſe to be proceeded unto the deprivation and depoſition of their Pontifical Dignities, and ſhall ſubſtitute ſuch other in their places, which can and may be able to confound the ſaid heretical pravity, and proceed to further pains againſt ſuch by the Laws limited, and to other yet more grievous (if need require) we our ſelves will proceed and cauſe to be proceeded, according as the party his Fact, and filthineſs of his Crime committed, ſhall deſerve. The tenor of thoſe Articles whereof we have made mention in this our own writing are in words as follow.

The old manner of the Popiſh Oath.

The Articles of John Hus to be enquired upon.

1. THere is one only univerſal Church, which is the Univerſity of the Predeſtinate, as ſhall after be declared.

2. The univerſal Church is only one; as there is one Univerſity of thoſe that are Predeſtinate.

3. Paul was never a member of the Devil, although he did certain acts like unto the acts of the Church Malignant.

Speaking of the invisible Church, the Article is true.

4. The Reprobate are not parts of the Church, for that no part of the ſame finally falleth from her, becauſe that the charity of Predeſtination, which bindeth the ſame Church together, never faileth.

5. The two Natures (that is) the Divinity and the Humanity, be one Chriſt.

This Article ſeemeth to be gathered out of the words of Jerome of Prague.

6. The Reprobate, although he be ſometime in grace according to preſent juſtice, yet is he never a part of the holy Church; and the Predeſtinate is ever a member of the Church, although ſometime he fall from grace adventitia, but not from grace of Predeſtination; ever taking the Church for the convocation of the predeſtinate, whether they be in grace or not, according to preſent juſtice. And after this ſort the Church is an Article of our belief.

7. Peter is not, nor ever was the head of the holy Catholick Church.

8. Prieſts living viciouſly do defile the authority of Prieſthood, and ſo, as unfaithful Children, do unfaithfully believe of the ſeven Sacraments, of the Keys of the Church, of Offices, of Cenſures, of Ceremonies, of the worſhipping of Reliques, Indulgences, Orders, and other holy things of the Church.

The Papal Dignity touched.

9. The Papal Dignity came and grew from the Emperor; and his Government and Inſtitution ſprang from the Emperors Government.

10. No man can reaſonably affirm either of himſelf or other, that he is the Head of any particular Church, or that the Biſhop of Rome is the Head of the Church of Rome.

11. A man ought not to believe, that he which is Biſhop of Rome is the head of every particular Church, unleſs God have predeſtinate him.

12. None is the Vicar of Chriſt, or elſe of Peter, unleſs he follow him in manners and conditions, ſeeing that there is no other following more pertinent, nor otherwiſe apt to receive of God this Power procuratory. For unto the Office of a Vicegerent of Chriſt is required the conformity of Manners, and the authority of the Inſtitutor.

13. The Pope is not the manifeſt and true Succeſſor of Peter the Prince of the Apoſtles, if he live in manners contrary to Peter; and if he hunt after avarice, then is he the Vicar of Judas Iſcariot. And likewiſe the Cardinals be not the true and manifeſt Succeſſors of the College of the other Apoſtles of Chriſt, unleſs they live according to the manner of the Apoſtles, keeping the Commandments and Councils of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

14. The Doctors alledging that a man, which will not be amended by the Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, is to be delivered to the Secular Powers, do follow in this point the Biſhops, Scribes and Phariſees, that delivered Chriſt to the Secular Power (ſaying, It is not lawful for us to kill any man) becauſe he would not obey them in all things; and that ſuch be greater Homicides than Pilate.

15. The Eccleſiaſtical Obedience is ſuch an Obedience as the Prieſts of the Church have found out, beſides the expreſs authority of the Scripture. The immediate diviſion of humane works, is, that they be either vertuous or vitious; And if a man be vitious, and doth any thing, then doth he it vitiouſly, and if he be vertuous, and doth any thing, then doth he it vertuouſly. For like as Vice, which is called a great offence or mortal ſin, doth ſtain all the doings of a vitious man; ſo Vertue doth quicken all the doings of a vertuous man.

16. A Prieſt of God living after his Law, and having the knowledge of the Scripture, and a deſire to edifie the people, ought to preach, notwithſtanding any Excommunication pretended of the Pope. And further, if the Pope, or any other Magiſtrate doth forbid a Prieſt ſo diſpoſed to preach, he ought not to be obedient unto him. For every one that taketh upon him the Order of Prieſthood, receiveth in charge the Office of a Preacher; and of that burden ought he well to diſcharge himſelf, any Excommunication againſt him pretended in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

17. By the Cenſures Eccleſiaſtical, as of Excommunication, ſuſpending and interdict, the Clergy to their own advancement cauſe the Lay-people to aid them; they multiply their avarice, they defend their malice, and prepare the way to Antichriſt. And it is an evident ſign that ſuch Cenſures proceed from Antichriſt, which in their Proceſs they call Fulminationes; that is, their Thunderbolts wherewith the Clergy principally proceedeth againſt thoſe that declare the wickedneſs of Antichriſt, who ſo greatly for his own commodity hath abuſed them.

18. If the Pope be evil, eſpecially if he be a Reprobate, then is he with Judas a very Devil, a Thief, and the Son of Perdition, and is not the head of the holy Church Militant, nor any member of the ſame.

19. The grace of Predeſtination is the band wherewith the body of the Church and every member of the ſame is indiſſolubly joyned to their head Chriſt.

20. The Pope or Prelate, that is evil and a Reprobate, is a Paſtor in name, and not in deed, yea he is a Thief and a Robber in very deed.

John Hus expoundeth this Article with this diſtinct. Non ratione meriti, ſed ratione officii.

21. The Pope ought not to be called the moſt holy one for his Office-ſake, for then ought a King to be called by his Office the moſt holy One; and the Hangman, with other ſuch Officers alſo, were to be called holy; yea, the Devil himſelf ought to be called holy, for as much as he is Gods Officer.

John Hus declareth his mind touching this Article ſufficiently before.

22. If the Pope live contrary unto Chriſt, although he climb up by the right and lawful Election, according to the common cuſtom of men; yet notwithſtanding ſhould he otherwiſe climb than by Chriſt; yea, though we admit that he ſhould enter by the Election principally made by God. For Judas Iſcariot was lawfully elect of God Chriſt Jeſus to his Biſhoprick, and yet came not he the ſame way he ought to do unto the Sheepfold.

23. The condemnation of forty five Articles of John Wickliff by the Doctors made is unreaſonable, wicked and naught, and the cauſe by them alledged is fained; that is, that none of them are Catholick, but every one of them heretical, erroneous, or ſlanderous.

Election maketh not the Succeſſor of Peter, but imitation.

24. Not for that the Electors or the moſt part of them have conſented together with lively voice, according to the cuſtom of men upon the perſon of any, therefore that perſon is lawfully elect, or therefore is the true and manifeſt Succeſſor and Vicar of Peter the Apoſtle, or of

of any other the Apoſtles in the Eccleſiaſtical Office. Wherefore, whether the Electors have either well or evil made their Election, it behoveth us to believe the ſame by the works of him that is elected. For in that that every one worketh more meritoriouſly to the profit of the Church, he hath ſo much the more greater authority from God.

One head of the univerſal Church, beſide Chriſt, hath no foundation in all Scripture.

25. There is not ſo much as one ſpark of appearance, that there ought to be one head, ruling and governing the Church in Spiritual Cauſes, which ſhould always be converſant in the Church Militant; for Chriſt without any ſuch monſtrous heads, by his true Diſciples ſparſed through the whole world, could better a great deal Rule his Church.

26. The Apoſtles and faithful Prieſts of God have right worthily, in all things neceſſary to ſalvation, governed the Church before the Popes Office took place, and ſo might they do again, by like poſſibily until Chriſt came to Judgment, if the Office ſhould fail.

Let every one that is ſuſpected in the foreſaid Articles, or elſe otherwiſe found with the aſſertion of them, be examined in manner and form as followeth.

The form and manner of the Popes Inquiſition.

IN primis, Whether he knew John Wickliff of Englund, John Hus of Bohemia, and Jerome of Prague, or any of them, and how he came by the knowledge of them; whether that during the lives of them, or any of them, they had either been converſant with them, or found any friendſhip at their hands?

2. Item, Whether he knowing them, or any of them to be excommunicate, did willingly participate with them; eſteeming and affirming the ſame their participation to be no ſin?

Hereſie to pray for John Wickliff or John Hus, &c.

3. Item, Whether that after their deaths, he ever prayed for them, or any of them, openly or privily, doing any work of mercy for them, affirming them to be either Saints, or elſe to be ſaved?

4. Item, Whether he thought them, or any of them to be Saints, or whether that ever he ſpake ſuch words, and whether ever he did exhibite any worſhip unto them as unto Saints?

5. Item, Whether he believe, hold and affirm, that every general Council, as alſo the Council of Conſtance, doth repreſent the univerſal Church?

Hereſie not to believe the Council of Conſtance

6. Item, Whether he doth believe, that that which the holy Council of Conſtance, repreſenting the univerſal Church, hath and doth allow in the favour of the Faith, and ſalvation of Souls, is to be approved and allowed of all the faithful Chriſtians; and that whatſoever the ſame Council hath condemned, and doth condemn to be contrary both to Faith and to all good men, is to be believed, holden, and affirmed for condemned, or not?

7. Item, Whether he believeth that the condemnations of John Hus, John Wickliff, and Jerome of Prague, made as well upon their perſons, as their Books and Doctrine, by the holy general Council of Conſtance, be rightly and juſtly made, and of every good Catholick man are ſo to be holden and affirmed, or not?

8. Item, Whether he believe, hold, and affirm, that John Wickliff of England, John Hus of Bohemia, and Jerome of Prague, were Hereticks or not, and for Hereticks to be nominated and preached, yea or not; and whether their Books and Doctrines were and be perverſe or not; for the which, together with their pertinacy, they were condemned by the holy ſacred Council of Conſtance for Hereticks?

9. Item, Whether he have in his cuſtody any Treatiſes, ſmall Works, Epiſtles, or other writings in what Language or Tongue ſoever, ſet forth and tranſlated by any of theſe Hereticks, John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerome, or any other of their falſe Diſciples and Followers, that he may deliver them to the Ordinaries of that place, or his Commiſſary, or to the Inquiſitors upon his Oath. And if he ſay that he hath no ſuch writing about him, but that they are in ſome other place, that then you ſwear him to bring the ſame before his Ordinary, or other aforenamed, within a certain time to him prefixed?

10 Item, Whether he knoweth any that hath the Treatiſes, Works, Epiſtles, or any other writings of the aforeſaid John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerome, in whatſoever Tongue they are made or tranſlated, and that he detect and manifeſt the ſame, for the purgation of their Faith and execution of Juſtice. KING 1 Hen. 5. 1.

11. Item, Eſpecially let the learned be examined whether he believeth that the Sentence of the holy Council of Conſtance upon the forty five Articles of John Wickliff, and the thirty Articles of John Hus be not Catholick; which ſaith that ſome of them are notorious and hereticał, ſome erroneous, otherſome blaſphemous, ſome ſlanderous, ſome raſh and ſeditious, ſome offenſive to godly ears?

12. Item, Whether he believeth and affirmeth that in no caſe it is lawful for a man to ſwear?

13. Item, Whether he believeth, that at the Commandment of a Judge or any other it is lawful to take an Oath to tell the truth in any convenient cauſe, although it be but purging of infamy, or not?

14. Item, Whether he believeth that Perjury wittingly committed, upon what cauſe ſoever, whether it be for the ſafeguard of his own life, or of any other mans life, yea although it be in the cauſe and defence of the Faith, be a ſin or not?

15. Item, Whether a man contemning purpoſely the Rites of the Church, and the Ceremonies of Exorciſm, of Catechiſm, and the conſecration of the water of Baptiſm be in deadly ſin or not?

16. Item, Whether he believe, that after the conſecration of the Prieſt, in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the figure of Bread and Wine be no material Bread and Wine; but in all points the ſame very Chriſt which was crucified upon the Croſs, and ſitteth upon the right hand of the Father?

17. Item, Whether he believe, that after the conſecration made by the Prieſt, under the only form of Bread, and beſides the form of Wine, be the very Fleſh of Chriſt and his Blood, his Soul and his Deity, and ſo whole Chriſt as he is; and in like wiſe, under the form of Wine, without the form of Bread, be the very Fleſh of Chriſt and his very Blood, his Soul and Deity, and ſo whole Chriſt, and the ſame body abſolutely under every one of thoſe kinds ſingularly?

Hereſie to miniſter in both kinds.

18. Item, Whether he doth believe, that the cuſtom of houſeling of the Lay-people under the form of Bread only, obſerved of the univerſal Church, and allowed by the only Council of Conſtance, be to be uſed, and not without the Authority of the Church at mens pleaſures to be altered, and that they that obſtinately affirm the contrary to this are to be puniſhed as Hereticks, or not?

19. Item, Whether he believe that thoſe which contemn the receiving of the Sacraments of confirmation, or extream Unction; or elſe the ſolemnization of Matrimony, commit deadly ſin or not?

20. Item, Whether he believe that a Chriſtian man, over and beſides the contrition of heart, being licenſed of a convenient Prieſt, is bound to confeſs himſelf only to a Prieſt, and not to any Lay-man, be he never ſo devout or good, upon the neceſſity of Salvation?

21. Item, Whether he believe, that in the caſes before put, a Prieſt may abſolve a Sinner confeſſing himſelf, and being contrite, from all ſins, and enjoyn him penance for the ſame?

22. Item, Whether he believe, that an evil Prieſt, with due manner and form, with the intention of doing, doth verily conſecrate, doth verily abſolve, doth verily baptize, and doth verily diſpoſe all other Sacraments even as the Church doth?

23. Item, Whether he believe that S. Peter was the Vicar of Chriſt, having power to bind and to looſe upon the Earth?

24. Item, Whether he believe that the Pope being canonically elect, which for the time ſhall be, by that name expreſly be the Succeſſor of Peter or not, having ſupream Authority in the Church of God?

25. Item, Whether he believe that the Authority or Juriſdiction of the Pope, an Archbiſhop or a Biſhop, in binding or looſing, be more than the authority of a ſimple Prieſt or not, although he have charge of Souls?

Hereſie to deny the Popes Indulgences.

26. Item, Whether he believe, that the Pope may upon a juſt and good cauſe give Indulgences and remiſſion of Sins to all Chriſtian men, being verily contrite and con-

27. Item, Whether he believe, that by ſuch grant the Pilgrims that viſit thoſe Churches, and give them any thing, may obtain remiſſion of ſins or not?

28. Item, Whether he believe that all Biſhops may grant unto their Subjects, according as the holy Canons do limit, ſuch Indulgences, or not?

Hereſie not to worſhip Images. 29. Item, Whether he believe and affirm, that it is lawful for faithful Chriſtians to worſhip Images and the Reliques of Saints, or not?

30. Item, Whether he believe that thoſe Religions, which the Church hath allowed, were lawfully and reaſonably brought in of the holy Fathers, or not?

31. Item, Whether he believe that the Pope, or any other Prelate for the time being, or their Vicars, may excommunicate their ſubject Eccleſiaſtical or Secular for diſobedience or contumacy; ſo that ſuch an one is to be holden and taken for excommunicate, or not?

32. Item, Whether he believe, that for the diſobedience and contumacy of perſons excommunicate, increaſing, the Prelates or their Vicars in ſpiritual things have power to aggravate and to reaggravate, to put upon men the interdict, and to call for the Secular Arm; and that the ſame Secular Arm or Power ought to be obedient to the Cenſures, by their Inferiors called for?

33. Item, Whether he believe that the Pope and other Prelates, or elſe their Vicars, have power in ſpiritual things to excommunicate Prieſts, and Lay-men that are ſtubborn and diſobedient, from their Office, Benefice, or entrance into the Church, and from the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments of the Church, alſo to ſuſpend them?

Theſe Popes will be ſure to loſe nothing. 34. Item, Whether he believe that it is lawful for Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, without committing ſin, to have any Poſſeſſions and Temporal goods; and whether he believe that it is not lawful for Lay-men to take away the ſame from them by their authority; but rather that ſuch takers away and incroachers upon Eccleſiaſtical goods are to be puniſhed as Committers of Sacriledge, yea, although ſuch Eccleſiaſtical Perſons live naughtily that have ſuch goods?

Wealthy wickedneſs maintained. 35. Item, Whether any ſuch taking away or encroaching upon any Prieſt raſhly or violently made, although the Prieſt be an evil Liver, be Sacriledge, or not?

36. Item, Whether he believe that it is lawful for Lay-men of whether Sex ſoever, that is, men and women, to preach the Word of God, or not?

How Pope neither preacheth himſelf, nor yet will ſuffer other good Prieſts to preach. 37. Item, Whether he believe that it is lawful to all Prieſts freely to preach the Word of God whereſoever, whenſoever, and to whomſoever it ſhall pleaſe them, although they be not ſent at all?

38. Item, Whether he believe that all mortal ſins, and eſpecially ſuch as be manifeſt and publick, are to be corrected and to be extirpate, or not?

Furthermore, we will, command, and decree, That if any by ſecret information, by you or any other to be received, ſhall be found either infamed or ſuſpected of any kind of the peſtiferous Sect, Hereſie, and Doctrine of the moſt peſtilent men, John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerome of Prague, the Arch-hereticks aforeſaid, or of favouring, receiving, or defending the foreſaid damned men whilſt they lived on the Earth, their falſe Followers and Diſciples, or any that believeth their Errors, or any that after their death pray for them or any of them, or that nominateth them to be amongſt the number of Catholick men, or that defendeth them to be placed amongſt the number of the Saints, either by their preaching, worſhipping, or other ways, wherein they deſerve to be ſuſpected; that then they by you or ſome of you may be cited perſonally to appear before you or ſome of you, without either Proctor or Doctor to anſwer for them, an Oath being openly taken by them as is aforeſaid, to ſpeak the plain and meer verity of the Articles above written, and every of them, or other opportune, as caſe and circumſtance ſhall require, according to your diſcretion, as you or any of you ſhall ſee expedient to proceed againſt them, or any of them, according to theſe preſents, or otherwiſe Canonically, as you ſhall think good.

Alſo that you do publiſh ſolemnly, and cauſe to be publiſhed theſe preſent Letters, omitting the Articles and Interrogatories herein contained, in the Cities and other places of your Dioceſs, where conveniently you may, under our Authority, and there to denounce and cauſe to be denounced all and ſingular ſuch Hereticks, with their Abettors and Favourers of their Hereſies and Errors; of what ſex or kind ſoever, that do hold and defend the ſaid Errors, or do participate any manner of way with Hereticks, privily or apertly; of what ſtate, dignity, or condition ſoever he or they be, Patriarch, Archbiſhop, King, Queen, Duke, or of what other dignity either Eccleſiaſtical or Secular he be; alſo with their Advocates and Procurators whoſoever, which are Believers, Followers, Favourers, Defenders, or Receivers of ſuch Hereticks, or ſuſpected to be Believers, Followers, Fautors, Defenders, or Receivers of them, to be excommunicate every Sunday and Feſtival day, in the preſence of the people. Pope ſpirat minus & cadet.

Furthermore, that you diligently cauſe to be enquired, by the ſaid our authority, upon all and ſingular ſuch perſons both men and women, that maintain, approve, defend, and teach ſuch Errors, or that be Favourers, Receivers and Defenders of them, whether exempt or not exempt, of what dignity, ſtate, preheminence, degree, order, or condition ſoever. And ſuch as you ſhall find in the ſaid your Inquiſition, either by their own confeſſion, or by any other mean to be defamed, or otherwiſe infected with the ſpot of ſuch Hereſie or Error, you through the ſentence of Excommunication, Suſpenſion, Interdict, and privation of their Dignities, Parſonages, Offices, or other Benefices of the Church, and Fees which they hold of any Church, Monaſtery, and other Eccleſiaſtical Places, alſo of Honors and ſecular Dignities and degrees of Sciences, or other faculties, as alſo by other pains and cenſures of the Church, or by ways and means whatſoever elſe ſhall ſeem to you expedient, by taking and impriſoning their Bodies, and other corporal Puniſhments wherewith Hereticks are puniſhed, or are wont, and are commanded by Canonical Sanctions to be uſed; and if they be Clerks, by degradation, do correct and puniſh, and cauſe them to be corrected and puniſhed with all diligence.

Furthermore, that you do riſe up ſtoutly and couragiouſly againſt ſuch Hereticks, and the goods as well of them, as of the Lay-men, according to the Canonical Sanction made againſt Hereticks and their Followers, under the which we will and command them and their partakers to be ſubject. And alſo ſuch perſons as ſhall be infamed of the Hereſies or Errors aforeſaid, or any of the premiſſes, ſhall be bound to purge themſelves at your arbitrement: but the other, which either by Witneſſes, or by their own confeſſions, or other allegations or probations, ſhall be convicted of the foreſaid Hereſies or Articles, or of any the premiſſes, they ſhall be compelled to revoke and abjure publickly and ſolemnly the ſaid Articles and Errors, and to ſuffer condign penance and puniſhment, yea even to perpetual impriſonment (if need be) for the ſame. See here the Dragon caſting out whole floods to ſwallow up the Saints.

And to the intent that they ſhall not nouriſh any kind of Hereſies hereafter, either in word, deed, or geſture, or ſhall induce other either to word or deed, privily or apertly, directly or indirectly to believe the ſame, they ſhall be forced to put in ſufficient Surety. Who, if it ſo chance that they will not publickly and ſolemnly renounce and abjure their Articles and Errors, and take at your hands condign Penance, though it be to perpetual or temporal puniſhment according to your diſcretion, neither will be contented to put in ſufficient ſurety that they will not hereafter hold or nouriſh theſe Errors and Hereſies, neither will induce other by word or deed privily or apertly, directly or indirectly, or by any other manner of colour to believe the ſame, that then you ſhall proceed againſt them, according to the quality of their errors and demerits; yea, and if you ſee it ſo expedient, as againſt Hereticks, and as infected with Hereſie, by our authority, according to the Canonical Sanctions ſummarily, and ſimply and plainly, Sine ſtrepitu & figura judicii, and of Office, all Appelation or Appellations whatſoever ceaſing, and that you puniſh the ſame, according to the Sanctions and Traditions Canonical, yea if need be, in leaving and committing them to the ſecular power; and againſt ſuch as be Superiors or learned Doctors, laying the Cenſures of Eccleſiaſtical Excommunication, all Appellation ſet aſide, alſo invocating, if need ſhall require, aid of the ſecular arm; The Conſtitution as well of our Predeceſſor

Pope Martin undoeth the Acts and Edicts of all other Popes

Predeceſſor Pope Boniface the Eighth of bleſſed memory, wherein is decreed that no man without his City or Dioceſs (except in certain caſes) or in places being one days journey diſtant from thence where he inhabiteth, ſhall be called into judgment, and that no man do preſume to depute Judges from the See Apoſtolick, without the City and Dioceſs where they are deputed to proceed againſt any; and do preſume to commit their authority to any other perſon or perſons, or to fetch and remove any man beyond one days journey from out his Dioceſs where he dwelleth, or at moſt two days journey, if it be in a general Council; as alſo all other Conſtitutions of any Biſhop of Rome, touching as well Judges delegate, as perſons not be called to judgment beyond a certain number; or elſe any other Edict, indulge, priviledge, or exemption general or ſpecial, granted from the Apoſtolick See, for any perſon or perſons not to be interdicted, ſuſpended, or excommunicated, or cited up to judgment without the compaſs of certain limits, or elſe whatſoever thing otherwiſe may hinder, ſtop, or impeach your juriſdiction, power, and free proceeding herein by any means to the contrary notwithſtanding. Dat. Conſtant. the firſt year of our Popedom.

¶ This bloody and abominable Commiſſion of Pope Martin, which I have copied out of a certain old Monument, remaining in the hands of Maſter Hackluyt, Student in the Temple, ſeemeth to be directed and given out to the publick deſtruction of all faithful Chriſtian men, about the later end and breaking up of the Council of Conſtance. Anno 1418. By the which the prudent Reader hath this to note and conſider, what labour, what policy, what counſel, and what Laws have been ſet, what ways have been taken, what ſeverity hath been ſhewed, how mens power, wit, and authority of the whole world have conſpired together from time to time, continually by all manner of means to ſubvert and ſupplant the Word and Way of the Lord; and yet notwithſtanding man hath not prevailed, but all his force and deviſed policies hath been overthrown, diſpatched, and with the counſel of Achitophel and Ammon, have been brought to naught, and contrary to the fury of the World the Goſpel of Chriſt hath ſtill increaſed. Neither yet for all this will the Pope ceaſe to ſpurn and rebel ſtill againſt the Kingdom of Chriſt and his Goſpel, againſt which neither he, nor yet the Gates of Hell ſhall ever prevail. The Lord of Hoſts be merciful to his poor perſecuted Flock. Amen.

Note how Antichriſt rageth and riſeth againſt Chriſt

Mans power and counſel too weak againſt Chriſt

Againſt this peſtilent Bull and Inquiſition of Pope Martin the great Antichriſt, I thought good here to adjoyn and annex another contrary writing of the Bohemians, bearing the name and ſubſcription of Procopius, Conradus, and other Captains of the Bohemians; which ſeemeth not long after the death of Ziſca to be written againſt the peſtiferous See of Rome, the tenour whereof here followeth.

A fruitful and Chriſtian Exhortation of the Bohemians to Kings and Princes, to ſtir them up to the zeal of the Goſpel.

An exhortation of the Bohemians.

THe Almighty God the Father, by his welbeloved Son Jeſus Chriſt, may in his holy Spirit open the underſtanding both of you and of all Chriſtians, and lighten your hearts with the light of his Doctrine of Righteouſneſs, and may make you to continue therein ſurely eſtabliſhed to the end. This we deſire of you for your ſalvation, all ye honourable, wiſe, and honeſt Noblemen, and all the Communalty, yea Rich and Poor, hear and conſider with diligent heed the words of this preſent Letter, which is ſent unto you from the Country of the Bohemians. It is manifeſt and well known to you and many other Cities, Kings, Princes, and Lords, that now a certain number of years there hath been great diſcord betwixt us and you; and there have been ſome which have moved you by Letters, and provoked you to make War againſt us, and to deſtroy us. And as well on your part as ours many men, as well noble as unnoble, have fooliſhly loſt their lives. Yet never hitherto have ye in any part underſtood our Faith by our own confeſſion, neither whether we be able to prove the ſame out of the Scriptures, yea or no; and yet in the mean time Kings, Princes, Lords and Cities have ſuſtained great damage. And hereof we greatly marvel that you do ſo much truſt and believe the Pope and his Prieſts, which give you drink full of poiſon, and ſuch comforts as no man can underſtand, in that they ſay that they will give you forgiveneſs of all your ſins, and great grace and pardon, to this end that you ſhould War upon us and deſtroy us; whereas their graces and pardons are none other than great Lyes, and a great ſeducing of the Body and Soul of all them that believe them, and put their truſt in them.

The Pope and all his Prieſts herein deal with you as the Devil would have done with our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Of whom Luke writeth in his fourth Chapter, That he brought him upon an high hill, and ſhewed unto him in the twinkling of an eye, all the Kingdoms that are in the compaſs of the earth, and ſaid unto him, I will give thee, &c. So the Devil deceiveth the Pope, and all the Prieſts with the riches of the World, and worldly power; And they think they can give grace and pardon when they will; and they themſelves ſhall never find favour before Almighty God, except they repent and make amends, becauſe of their great deceiving of Chriſtendom. And how can they give that to others, which they themſelves have not? For did the Devil, who was rich in promiſing, and poor in giving. And like as the Devil is not aſhamed to tell a lye, ſo all they are not aſhamed to [illegible] which ſhall never be found true, nor be proved by the holy Scriptures, becauſe for no cauſe they ſtir up Kings, Princes, Lords, and Citizens to make War againſt us, not to the end that the Chriſtian Faith ſhould thereby be defended, but becauſe they fear that their ſecret Vices and Hereſies ſhall be diſcloſed and made manifeſt. For if they had a true cauſe, and a godly love to the Chriſtian Faith, they would then take the Books of the holy Scripture, and would come unto us, and overcome us with the Weapons of Gods Word, and that is our chief deſire. For ſo did the Apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who came to the Pagans and Jews, and brought them from their Infidelity to the true Faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and this they did in the Spirit of meekneſs, as the Apoſtle Paul writeth in the ſixth Chapter of the Galatians, Brethren, if any man be grieved, &c. So ought they alſo to do, if they perceived that they were juſt and we unjuſt. And if we would not abide Inſtruction, then they might take to them Kings, Princes, Lords, and Imperial Cities, and reſiſt us according to the Commandments of the holy Scripture. But this is the ſubtil defence of all the Biſhops and Prieſts, that they ſay that Maſter Hus and Hierome, which were burnt at Conſtance, were overcome of the holy Father the Pope, and of the whole Council. For ye muſt underſtand that they were not overcome by the Holy Ghoſt, but unjuſtly, with wrongful violence, which God may yet hereafter grievouſly puniſh in all them that gave their counſel and aid thereto. And they ſay it ought not to be ſuffered, that we ſhould be heard in confeſſing our Faith. How may that be proved by the holy Scripture, ſince Chriſt heard the Devil, as it is written in the fourth Chapter of Matthew? And they are not better than Chriſt, nor we worſe than the Devil. If they be juſt and have the truth with them (as they ſay they have) and we be unrighteous, why do they fear, ſince the truth ought not be afraid of falſehood, as Eſdras writeth in his ſecond Book, the third Chapter? Zorobabel declared that truth is of all things the moſt mighty, and overcometh all things. For Chriſt is the truth, Joh. 14. I am the way, the truth, &c. And the Devil is the Father of lyes, Joh. 8. He is a Lyar from the beginning, and never abode in the truth, and there is no truth in him. Therefore, if the Pope and his Prieſts have the truth, let them overcome us with the Word of God. But if they have lyes, then they cannot long abide in their preſumption. Wherefore, we exhort and beſeech all the Imperial Cities, all Kings, Princes, Noblemen, Rich and Poor, for Gods ſake, and for his righteouſneſs, that one of them write hereof to another, and that there may be ſome means made, how we may commune with you ſafely and friendly, at ſome ſuch place as ſhall be fit both for you and us, and bring with you your Biſhops and Teachers, and let them and our Teachers fight together with the Word of God, and let us hear them, and let not the one overcome the other by violence or falſe ſubtilty, but only by the Word of KING Hen. 8. of God. And if your Biſhops and Teachers have better proofs of their Faith out of the holy Scripture, than we, and our Faith be found untrue, we will receive penance and ſatisfaction, according to the Goſpel. But if your Biſhops and Teachers be overcome of ours by the holy Scripture, then do ye repent and hearken to us, and hold with us. And if your Biſhops and Teachers will ceaſe from their Spiritual Pride, and repent and make ſatisfaction; then we will help you according to our power, and will compel them, either to joyn with us, or elſe we will expel them out of Chriſtendom. And if your Biſhops and Teachers will ſay, that it is not lawful for Lay-men to hear ſuch reaſoning, or to be preſent at it; that may you underſtand to tend to no other end, but that they fear they ſhould be overcome and put to ſhame in the ſight of you. For if they knew that they ſhould overcome therein, out of doubt they would deſire that every man ſhould hear it, and thereby their glory ſhould become the greater, and their fame and praiſes ſhould be encreaſed upon the earth. And if your Biſhops and Teachers counſel you to come to the hearing with us, then do it whether they will or no, and ſuffer not your ſelves at any time to be ſo fooliſhly ſeduced with their fooliſh Pardons, but tarry at home in your houſes with your Wives and Children. And let the Pope of Rome come to us with all his Cardinals and Biſhops, and with all his Prieſts, with his own perſon and power, to war with us, and let themſelves deſerve the abſolution of Sins, Grace and Pardon, which they preach to you (for they have great need of forgiveneſs of Sins, Grace and Pardon,) and by the Grace of God we will give them Pardon enough as they ſhall need. But their ſubtil excuſe is this, they ſay that it belongeth not to Prieſts to fight with bodily Weapons: and true it is that belongeth not to them; but it belongeth as little to them to ſtir up, to counſel, and to fortifie others thereto. For Paul ſaith in the firſt to the Romans, and in the fifth to the Galathians, That all that do ſuch things are worthy of everlaſting death.

Wherefore the Popes Clergy will have no reference to me.

The Popes pretenced excuſe detected. Rom. 1.

And if ye will not determine to do any other thing than to fight againſt us, then will we take the Lord to our help and his truth, and we will defend it to the death, and we will not be afraid for the Excommunication or Curſe of the Pope, or his Cardinals, or of the Biſhops, becauſe we know that the Pope is not God, as he maketh himſelf, that he can curſe and excommunicate when he will, or bleſs when he will; who hath now theſe many years curſed and excommunicated us, and yet notwithſtanding God and his gracious bleſſing hath been our help.

Experience of Gods bleſſing where the Pope hath curſed.

Objection. But peradventure ye will ſay, that though we ſee that Biſhops and Prieſts be evil and wicked, yet we cannot lack them; for who ſhould baptize our Children, who ſhould hear Confeſſions, and miniſter the holy Sacraments? and then alſo we ſhould be within the Excommunication of the Pope, and of his Biſhops. Welbeloved, ye need to take no care for theſe matters. The excommunicating of the Pope hurteth you nothing. Fear ye the excommunicating of God, and the Lord will provide for thoſe things well enough. If ye would baniſh evil Biſhops and Prieſts, ye ſhould have good Prieſts which ſhould baptize your Children, hear Confeſſions, and miniſter the holy Myſteries, becauſe when the Devil is baniſhed, then place is made for the Holy Ghoſt: So when ill Biſhops and Prieſts ſhall be baniſhed, then place ſhall be made for good Prieſts and Biſhops.

Anſwer. Alſo, your Biſhops and Prieſts ſay, That we are Miſcreants and Hereticks, and that we believe not on Purgatory, upon the Virgin Mary, nor upon the Saints; wherein they ſay ill, for we will prove by the holy Scripture, that we know better by Gods Grace how we ought to believe upon Purgatory, and upon Mary the Mother of our Lord, and upon his welbeloved Saints, than they can tell us. Alſo they ſay, That we will not be obedient unto the Pope. Truly when he ſhall become holy and juſt, then we know well that we ought to be obedient to him in all things, and not before. They ſay alſo, That we deſtroy Gods holy Service, in that we deſtroy Monaſteries, baniſhing thence the wicked Monks and Nuns. Truly we did it, thinking once that they were holy, that they did the reverend Service of God, but after that we well perceived and conſidered their life and works, then we perceived that they were falſe lowly Hypocrites, and wicked Builders on high, and Sellers of Pardons and Maſſes for the dead, and ſuch as devoured in themſelves the ſins of the people. And whereas they ſaid that they riſe at midnight when other men ſleep, and pray for the ſins of the people: foraſmuch as their ſelling of their Prayers and Maſſes for the dead for Gifts, is no better than Hypocriſie and Hereſie; therefore if we do ſpeak againſt them and deſtroy their Monaſteries, we do not therein deſtroy the Service of God, but rather the Service of the Devil, and the Schools of Hereticks. And if ye knew them as we know them, ye would as diligently deſtroy them as we do. For Chriſt our Lord did not ordain any ſuch Order, and therefore it muſt needs come to paſs that ſhortly it ſhall be deſtroyed, as our Lord ſaith in the Goſpel of Saint Matthew, Chap. 15. Every plant which my Father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted up. We deſire you alſo that ye would diligently conſider the Articles here written, wherein your Biſhops and Prieſts are guilty.

The Popes falſe Accuſation anſwered. Mat. 15.

The firſt Article is, That when your Biſhops will ordain Prieſts, they do it not except he that is to be made Prieſt have ſufficient living, either Inheritance left him of his Parents, or of Benefices: whereas notwithſtanding, Chriſt would that Prieſts ſhould be poor, foraſmuch as it is enough for the Scholar to be as his Maſter is, and for the Servant to be as his Lord is; and the Biſhops will that they ſhould be rich upon Earth, which is unjuſt before the Lord.

The abuſe of Popiſh Religion in making Prieſts, &c. dinals, &c.

The ſecond Article is, That Biſhops take money of ſuch as are to be ordained; but Saint Peter did therefore ſharply rebuke Simon Magus, when he would have given him money, as it is written in the eighth of the Acts. Acts 8.

The Third Article is, That they that come to be Prieſts enter into their Prieſthood, not for Gods Service-ſake, becauſe they mean to preach and increaſe it among the Chriſtian people, ſo as the people may be edified and made better, but rather for an idle life, and that they may eat well and drink well, and that they may be honoured and reverenced upon Earth. For every one waiteth upon his Prieſt as a Thief and a Robber, as John writeth in his tenth Chapter.

The abuſe of Popiſh Religion in taking Orders.

The fourth Article is, Of Excommunication, which the Pope and all his Prieſts take to themſelves, and therewith fetter and bind all Chriſtian people as they will, and they think that whoſoever they Excommunicate or Curſe, he is accurſed and excommunicate before God. And we will prove by the holy Scripture, that they themſelves are excommunicate and accurſed before God, becauſe they keep not the Commandment of the love of God, whereof the Apoſtle writeth in the firſt to the Corinthians, the ſixteenth Chapter. If any man loveth not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, he is excommunicate in the day of the coming of the Lord. For they cannot excommunicate you, who are ready bound and excommunicate before God and his Saints; and therefore why fear ye their Excommunication?

Popiſh Excommunication abuſed. 1 Cor. 16

The fifth Article is, That they take Gifts to pray for the dead, and to ſay Maſs for their Souls. This is a wickedneſs and Hereſie before the Lord, and all they that contribute to them to this end, do wickedly, for that hereby Prieſts become Merchants of Prayers and of Maſſes; and herewith is all the Church of Rome poiſoned and defiled. For if they would pray for the dead, and ſay Maſs for their Souls, yet no man ought to hire them thereto, foraſmuch as they ought to take no Gifts, neither little nor great. And every one that taketh Rewards to this end, to redeem Souls out of Purgatory, do therewithall caſt their own Souls down into Hell. And they that give any thing to that end, do altogether loſe that which they give: And with ſuch deviliſh ſubtilty the Pope with all his Prieſts have deceived, ſpoiled, and diſherited Kings, Princes, Lords and Knights, and good Houſholders and many other, of their lawful Inheritances, becauſe their Anceſtors and Progenitors gave it to Colleges, Monaſteries, and Churches, that they might make Memorials of them, and to ſing or ſay Prayers or Maſſes for their Souls, that they might be redeemed out of Purgatory. And with ſuch goods, Biſhops, Canons, and Monaſteries have made themſelves ſo rich, that now they fall at variance with Cities and Princes: and whereas they ſhould procure peace betwixt Cities and Rulers, there they are the firſt that begin War; and as long as they have ſuch goods, they will never ceaſe to be at ſtrife with Lords

The Popes Church polluted with buying and ſelling their prayers and maſſes, and all their doings for money.

Fear of Purgatory hath robbed almoſt all the whole World.

So long as Prieſts be rich, they will never be true Teachers.

Lords and Cities, neither will they begin to teach you the true foundation of the truth. For they do as a Dog, which as long as he holdeth a bone in his mouth and gnaweth it, ſo long he holdeth his peace, and cannot bark; Even ſo, as long as they have this bone of pleaſant riches, it will never be well in the World. Wherefore all Kings, Princes, and Imperial Cities ſhould do a great Work of godlineſs and mercy, if by them they were compelled to do this, as the Dog is when the bone is taken from him.

The ſubtilty of the Devil in making the Church rich

And therefore ye noble Men, Kings, Princes, Lords, Imperial Cities, and all the Communalty, both rich and poor, if ye have been aſleep, yet now awaken and open your eyes, and behold the ſubtilty of the Devil, how he hath blinded the Church of Rome, and take again that which is yours, and not theirs. And if you will make a good memorial for your Souls, then do as the Wiſeman ſaith, Eccl. 19. Eccleſ. 19. Lay up Alms, &c.

Popiſh Prieſts with their long and ſumptuous Gownsmore like to the Phariſees than Chriſt.

The ſixth Article is, that they are full of pride and of high mind, which is manifeſtly known by their long, coſtly, and ſuperfluous Garments, wherein they walk very unlike to Chriſt our Lord, who had a Garment without a ſeam, and to the welbeloved John Baptiſt, who had a Garment of Camels hair; and they will be honoured and worſhipped, and they preach and ſay, That Prieſthood ought to be honoured, and ſo it ought indeed to be; but there are none that do ſo much ſlander and abaſe it, as they themſelves, with their evil Works, gay Apparel, and with their evil words, wherein they paſs all other men. Saint Paul

1 Tim. 3. ſaith in the firſt to Timothy, the third Chapter, Let the Elders that govern well be honoured with double honour, chiefly they that labour in the Word and Doctrine of the Lord. Conſider, that he ſaith, They that govern well.

Honour in well governing.

The Popes Church poiſoned with covetouſneſs.

The ſeventh Article is, That they are covetous from the higheſt to the loweſt, and for covetouſneſs they preach many fooliſh deeds and manifeſt lies, and ſell the holy Sacraments, which is a great Hereſie; for God com-

1 Tim. 1. manded that they ſhould give freely. Saint Paul writeth in the firſt to Timothy, Covetouſneſs is the root of all miſchief, whereunto many have been given, and therefore they are ſeparated from the Faith, and have denied the Truth.

The Popes Church poiſoned much with whoredom.

The eighth Article is, That they commonly are called Notorious Whoremongers. This is manifeſtly ſeen in their Concubines and Children, which walk openly in all mens ſight, and make many mens Wives Whores, or corrupt their Daughters being Virgins, and make them Prieſts Harlots and Ribalds.

The Popes Church and Monaſteries commonly poiſoned with deviliſh envy.

The ninth Article is, That they are full of deviliſh envy, and eſpecially in all Monaſteries they have great envy and hatred amongſt themſelves, becauſe when any thing is given or diſpoſed to one Monaſtery or College, then there are others that hate it, and envy at it, and would more gladly have it themſelves; Like as among Dogs, when any thing is given to the one and not to the other, which the other ſeeing envieth his fellow, and the other likewiſe will rather devour all himſelf, than give any part to his fellow. Wherefore it were well that they were brought from that great ſin of Envy, giving nothing unto them; And it were better that their Poſſeſſions were taken from them, and that they ſhould do that which the Lord ſpake to his Diſciples, ſaying, Go ye and preach the Goſpel to all men.

The Popes Church poiſoned with idleneſs and belly-cheer.

The tenth Article is, That they are idle, and chiefly the Biſhops, Canons, and other Prelates, which will not labour diligently in the holy Scripture, wherewith they might cure the miſeries of Chriſtendom, whereto they have bound themſelves, and they eat the bread thereof in idleneſs, becauſe when other men watch and labour to maintain themſelves and their little Ones, then are they with their Lemmons, or elſe they walk in ſome City carrying Hawks on their fiſts, or elſe they ſit at the good Wine with their Concubines, and there they ſing and play the Lucians, and eat of the beſt; and therefore all that willingly bring and give to them, ſhall be made Partners of that Curſe which is given them of God, becauſe they eat their bread unjuſtly, whereof Saint Paul writeth in the ſecond to the Theſſalonians, the third Chapter, He that laboureth not, let him not eat.

The eleventh Article, That they are notorious Lyars, becauſe, to the end that they may pleaſe men, they tell many tales and lyes which in the holy Scripture have no foundation nor proof. Of ſuch writeth John in the Apocal. 21.

{KING} Hen. 5.

The Popes Church infamous with notorious lies.

The twelfth Article is, That they do not rightly give or miniſter to the people the Body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and they give it not as God hath inſtituted it and commanded. This is a great and deviliſh ſin, and too great malapertneſs. Herein we would overcome them, with the teſtimonies of the Evangeliſts; I ſay, we would overcome the Pope, and all his Prieſts with the Authorities of Mark, Luke, and Paul, Rom. 13. and we would ſuffer, that Kings, Princes, Lords, and all that are willing to hear, ſhould hear it.

The Popes Church eſteemeth in diminiſhing one part of the Sacrament.

The thirteenth Article is, That they ſit in Spiritual Judgment, and then many times they judge according to favour, and not according to the righteouſneſs of God, that they take Bribes, giving Sentence for him, which in Gods ſight hath the wrongful Cauſe. Woe be to ſuch Sentences, as it is written in Eſay 5. Woe be to you that, &c.

The Popes Church charged with carnality.

The fourteenth Article is, That they ſit hearing Confeſſions, and when there come to them Uſurers, Raveners, and Thieves, they take Bribes of them of their ill-gotten Goods, to ſpare them; and they willingly ſuffer them in Cities and Towns. And likewiſe of Adulterers and other notorious Whoremongers and Whores, and they neither let or ſtay them in their great ſins, to the end that the Scripture may be fulfilled in them, which ſaith, Gifts and the love of money do draw to Hell, and do blind the eyes of Judges.

He meaneth of claiming Tythes by meer neceſſity of the old Law, and not by the poſitive Law of Princes.

The fifteenth Article is, That they receive Tythes of men, and will of Right have them, and preach and ſay that men are bound to give them Tythes; and therein they ſay falſly. For they cannot prove by the New Teſtament, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt commanded it, and his Diſciples warned no man to do ſo, neither did themſelves receive them. But although in the Old Teſtament it were commanded to give Tythes, yet it cannot thereby be proved, that Chriſtian-men are bound thereto; For this Precept of the Old Teſtament had an end in the firſt year of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, like as the Precept of Circumciſion. Wherefore, beloved, conſider and ſee how your Biſhops ſeduce you and ſhut your eyes with things that have no proof. Chriſt ſaith in the eleventh of Luke, Give Alms of thoſe things that remain; but he ſaid not, Give the Tenth of the Goods which ye poſſeſs, but give Alms. But when they hear the Word, they may ſay as the Lawyer ſaid to Chriſt, Maſter, when thou ſayeſt ſo, thou giveſt offence, Luke 11.

The Pope, Church charged with uſury.

The ſixteenth Article is, That they in many places lend money or goods to have Treaſure or Uſury, and they have in Cities and Towns yearly Payments and perpetual Revenues, as great Princes and Lords. Wherein they do againſt the Goſpel, which ſaith, Do not ye poſſeſs Gold nor Silver. And whereas they lend for gain and uſury, againſt that ſpeaketh the Lord, Deuteronomy the four and twentieth, Lend not to uſury to thy Brother, &c. Yea, honeſt, diſcreet, and welbeloved Lords, all the aforeſaid Articles we will prove againſt the Pope, all his Prieſts, with many Teſtimonies of the holy Scripture, which for brevities ſake we have not here mentioned. But note ye chiefly theſe four Articles, for which we ſtrive, and deſire to defend them to the death.

The firſt Article is, That all publick and cuſtomable mortal ſins ought to be forbidden and prohibited to all Prieſts and Lay-men, according to the commandment of the holy Scripture.

He meaneth the immoderate riches and temporal poſſeſſions.

The ſecond Article is, That Riches ought to be taken from the Pope and all his Prieſts, from the higheſt to the loweſt, and they ought to be made poor, as the Diſciples of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt were; who had nothing of their own, neither Poſſeſſions in this World, neither worldy Power.

Men appointed to preach, may preach though the Pope forbid them.

The third Article is, That the Word of God ought to be free for every man appointed and ordained thereto, to preach and read in all places whither they ſhall come, without reſiſtance of any man, or without any inhibition of either Spiritual or Earthly Power, openly or manifeſtly.

{KING Hen. 5.} When the Pope holdeth his council, let men look into their Wives and Daughters where the Council is kept.

The fourth Article is, that the body of our Lord Jesus Christ ought to be delivered to every Christian as our Lord hath ordained it, and as the holy Evangelists have written. We have also understood that there shall be a Council in Basil. Wherefore let no man be exalted, but let them diligently keep their Wives, their Daughters, and their Virgins from Bishops, Priests, and Monks. And do not think that there is made any holy Assembly of Bishops and Priests for the common commodity and profit of Christendom, but only to this end, that they may hide their secret vices and heresies with the cloak of hypocrisie, and let, and hinder the righteousness of God, which is much contrary to them; and for this cause consider ye diligently, that they will not make an Holy Assembly, but the congregation of Satan. And take ye heed that it be not done as some did at Constance, who took many of Bishops and Prelates, and suffered them to sleep with their Wives. Ye well beloved and honest Lords, if ye find any thing in these foresaid Articles or words written somewhat sharply, we did it not to offend or contemn you, but to the end that ye should diligently consider and devise, how Christendom is ill kept and led by the Priests of this present Age. Our Lord Jesus Christ keep you both in body and Soul, Amen. In the year of our Lord, 1430.

Several Captains of the Hussites. Procopius, Smahors, Conradus, Samssmolich, Captains of Bohemia.

Now to prosecute the wars of the Bohemians again. After Zisca was dead, whereof we did entreat before, there was great fear, sorrow, and lamentation in the Army, the Souldiers accusing fortune which gave over such an invincible Captain to be overcome with death. Immediately there was a division in the Host, the one part choosing Procopius Magnus to be their Captain, the other part saying, that there was none could be found worthy to succeed Zisca; whereupon they choosing out certain to serve the wars, named themselves Orphans.

The Army of Zisca divided.

Thus the Thaborites being divided into two Armies, the one part retained their old and accustomed name, and the other, by means of the death of their Captain, named themselves Orphans. And albeit that often times there was dissention between them, yet whensoever any forrain power came towards them, they joyned their powers together in one Camp, and defended themselves. They seldom went unto any fenced towns, except it were to buy necessaries, but lived with their Wives and Children in their Camp and Tents. They had amongst them many Carres, the which they used as a Bulwork; For whensoever they went unto battel, they made two wings of them, which closed in the Footmen. The wings of the Horsemen were one the outside, and when as they saw their time to joyn battel, the Waggon-men which led the wings going forth unto the Emperors Standard, and compassing in such part of their enemies as they would, did close themselves in together, whereby the enemies being incloſed, so that they could not be rescued, they were partly by the Footmen, and partly by the men that were in the Carres, with their Darts slain. The Horsemen fought without the Fortification; and if it happened that they were oppressed or put to flight, by and by the Carres opening themselves received them as it were into a fenced City; and by this means they got many Victories, forsomuch as their enemies were ignorant of their policies.

The order and Policy that the Army of Zisca used in War after his decease.

These two Armies went forth, the one into Slesia, and the other into Moravia, and returned again with great prey, before their enemies knew of their coming. After this they besieged the Town of Swetly in Austrich, where the Thaborites and the Orphans two nights continually assaulted the Walls without ceasing; but Albert Duke of Austrich coming with his Host to aid the Citizens, they fought by the space of almost four hours, the valiantest warriers being slain on both parts. At the length the battel was broken off, and the Thaborites lost their Carres, and Albert was put out of his Camp and Tents. Within a while after, Procopius Magnus came again and incloſed the City of Rhetium in Austrig with a notable Siege. They of Prague were in his Army, and Boslaus Cygneus of whom we spake before, was slain there with a Dart, and the City of Rhetium was taken by force, sacked and burnt. The Burgrave of Malderburge, Lord of the Town was also taken and carried unto Prague, where also he dyed in prison.

Procopius Magnus.

Sigismond the Emperor which burned Hus and Jerom before, now is fain to intreat for his Kingdom.

These things thus done, the Emperor sent for the Nobles of Bohemia, which went unto him unto a Town of Hungary, called Posonium in the borders of Austria, upon the banks of the River of Danubius; but they would not enter into the Town, but remained without the Town in their Tents; whither as the Emperour going out unto them, communed much with them. as touching his right and title, and the recovering of his Fathers Kingdom, promising if there were any cause, which did alienate the Bohemians minds from him, that he would take away all the occasion thereof: They made answer, that he had made war upon them without a cause, and that he had suffered their Countrimen, contrary to his promise, to be burnt at Constance not being heard, and the Kingdom to be contumeliously interdicted, and the Nobles of Bohemia to be condemned by the Church of Rome as Hereticks; and that he should think the force and power of the Bohemians not to be so small, but that they would provide for their own honour. Whereunto the Emperor answered very gently, and offered them a General Council, wherein they might declare their innocency, if they would submit themselves to the judgment of the universal Church: but the Bohemians which were become valiant Victors in Arms, would not be overcome with words; and so nothing being finally concluded, the Emperor returned home.

The death of John Hus and Hierom revenged.

Then Pope Martin perceiving the Gospel to encrease daily more and more, sent the Cardinal of Winchester an Englishman, born of a Noble House into Germany to move them unto war against the Bohemians. Whereunto the Emperor also did assist him.

The Cardinal of Winchester sent into Germany to raise war against the Bohemians.

There were three Armies provided. In the first Army were the Dukes of Saxony and the lower Cities.

Three Armies sent against the Bohemians.

The second Army, which was gathered of the Franconians, was under the conduct of the Marquiss of Brandenburg.

The third Army was led by Otho the Archbishop of Trevers, whom the Rhenenses, the Bavarians, and the Imperial Cities of Swevia followed. These armies entring into Bohemia in three several parts. after they were passed the Wood, they joyned together and pitched before Misna. This Town a certain learned and eloquent Protestant, named Prichicho, the night before had wonn from the Papists; wherefore the Army was determined first to recover that City, before they would go any further. But when as news came unto the Host, how the Protestants had gathered an Army, and came with all speed towards them; they fled before they saw their enemies, and went unto Tacovia, leaving behind them their warlike Engins with a great prey. The Cardinal was not yet come into the Camp, but meeting them in their flight at Tacovia, he marvelled at the coward y flight of so many Noble and valiant men, desiring them that they would turn again unto their enemies, which, he said, were farr weaker than they. Which thing when he had long travelled about in vain, he was fain to be a companion with them in their flight. They were scarcely entred the Wood, when as the Bohemians coming upon them, set upon the rereward. Then was their flight much more disordered and fearful than before, neither did they leave flying before the Bohemians left following. Then all impediment or let being taken away, they vanquished Tacovia; and having obtained great store of warlike Engins, they destroyed Misna. And when they would have returned home by Franconia, they had great sums of money sent unto them, that they should not waste or destroy the Countries of Bamberge and Noremberge; whereby the Host of the Bohemians was greatly enriched.

God restoreth his people newly converted.

The Popes Army flieth like Captain like Souldier.

Sigismundus the Emperor, having news of these things, went straight unto Noremberge, and gathered there new aid and help. Also Pope Martin sent Julian the Cardinal of Saint Angel into Germany with his Ambassage; to make War against the Bohemians, and that he should in the Council of Basil, which doth now shortly draw on, be President in the Popes name. He entring into Germany went straight to Noremberge to the Emperor, where many of the Nobles of Germany were assembled.

{Anno 1431.} The Pope raiseth War the second time against the Bohemians.

A new war raiſed by the Pope againſt the Bohemians.

There was a new expedition decreed againſt the Bohemians, againſt the eighth of the Kalends of July, and Frederick Marqueſs of Brandenburge appointed General of that War, which ſhould follow the Cardinal. He entred into Bohemia by the way that leadeth unto Thopa, and Albertus Prince of Auſtrich was appointed to bring his Army thorow Moravia.

In this expedition was Albert and Chriſtopher of Bavaria, and Frederick Dukes of Saxony, John and Albert Princes of Brandenburge, with their Father which was General of thoſe Wars. Alſo the Biſhops of Hyperbolis, Bamberge and Eyſten. Alſo the Company of the Swevians, which they called the Company of S. George, and the Magiſtrates of the Imperial Cities, the Biſhop of Mentz, Trevers, and Colen ſent their aids, and with them the Chieftains of their Provinces. It is ſaid that the number of their Horſemen were above forty thouſand, but their Footmen were not full ſo many, for the Germans for the moſt part do uſe to fight their battels on horſeback.

The number of the Popes Army againſt the Bohemians.

Alſo Rhenatus Prince of Lorrain promiſed to come to theſe Wars; but being letted by his Civil Wars, forſomuch as he went about to vanquiſh the Earl of Vandome, he could not keep his promiſe, and the County Palatine of Rheine, which did aid and ſuccour the Earl of Vandome, could not go againſt the Bohemians. The Cardinal ſtaying for them deferred his journy until the Calends of Auguſt. In the mean time Albert leading his Army out of Auſtria, underſtanding that the Cardinal was not preſent at the day appointed, and ſeeing himſelf unable to encounter with the Bohemian power, he returned back again. After this the Cardinal entred into Bohemia with a huge Army, and deſtroyed many of the Proteſtants towns, killing Men, Women and Children, ſparing neither Old nor Young; notwithſtanding this his Tyranny was exerciſed in the uttermoſt borders of Bohemia, for his Captains feared to enter farr into the Land. The Bohemians, aſſoon as they had heard tell that their enemy was come, made ready and gathered their Hoſt with all ſpeed, and laid ſiege to a Tower called Stiltverge, and brought it under ſubjection.

Cardinal Julian with a main hoſt entreth Bohemia. The cruel ſlaughter done by the Cardinal.

God ſtriketh a fear into the Popes Army.

In the mean ſeaſon there fell ſuch a marvellous ſudden fear amongſt the Papiſts throughout the whole Camp, that they began moſt ſhamefully to run away before any enemy came in ſight. The Cardinal Julianus marvelled at this moſt ſudden fear, and what ſhould move ſo great an Army to flee, went about unto the Captains, exhorting them to put on Armour, to order their battels, and couragiouſly to abide their enemies, ſaying, they did not fight for the glory of their Kingdom, or for the poſſeſſion of Lands, but for their lives, and honour, and Religion of Chriſt, and for the ſalvation of ſouls. How ignominious a thing is it (ſaith he) for the Germans to flee in battel, whoſe courage and valiantneſs all the world doth extoll? It were much better to dye, than to give place to any enemies before they were ſeen; for they can by no means live in ſafety within the walls, which give place unto their enemy in the field: for it is the weapon that defendeth a man and not the walls, and except they would even preſently defend their liberty with the ſword, they ſhould ſhortly be in greater bondage, more miſerable than any death. But this exhortation was all in vain, for fear had put away all boldneſs: for the Enſigns were ſnatched up, and as though there had been no Captain in the Hoſt, every man run headlong away. No man regarded any commandment, neither once took his leave of his Captain, but caſting away their Armor with ſpeedy flight they ran away, as though their enemy had been at their backs. The Cardinal alſo, although it were againſt his will, was forced to do the like.

Rather for the Religion of Antichriſt. The Cardinal ſeldom loved to preach rather in the Camp than in the Church.

The Cardinals Army ran away for fear.

Thus the Proteſtants, by the fear of their enemies made the more bold and couragious, purſued them through the Woods, and had a great prey and ſpoil of them. Notwithſtanding, Albertus when he heard tell that the Cardinal was entred into Bohemia, with all ſpeed came again out of Auſtrich with his Army, and beſieged the ſtrong Town of Prezorabia: but when he underſtood how the Cardinal was fled, he left off his purpoſe, and returned through Moravia, which was not yet ſubject unto him and deſtroyed above fifty Towns with Fire and Sword; took many of their Cities by force, and ſpoiled them, committing great murther and ſlaughter, and ſo afflicted them that they took upon them his yoke, and promiſed to be ſubject and obedient to him under this condition, that as touching Religion he would be bound to do that which the Council of Baſil ſhould determine.

Great ſlaughter in Bohemia by Duke Albert

{KING} {Hen. 5.}

Then was there an Ambaſſage ſent out of Bohemia unto Baſil, where Sigiſmund held the Council, who during the time of the Wars had kept himſelf at Noremberge. When as he ſhould take his journy unto Rome to be Crowned Emperor, he wrote letters unto the Nobles of Bohemia, wherein was contained, how that he was a Bohemian born, and how he was not more affectioned to any nation than to his own, and that he went to Rome for none other cauſe but to be Crowned, the which his honour ſhould alſo be a renown to the Bohemians, whom to advance it hath been always his ſpecial care.

The Council of Baſil.

A Letter of the Emperors to the Bohemians.

Alſo, how that through his endeavour the Counſel was begun at Baſil, exhorting all ſuch as were deſirous to be heard as touching Religion, that they ſhould come thither, and that they would not maintain any quarrel contrary to the holy Mother the Church; that the Council would lovingly and gently hear their reaſons; that they ſhould only endeavour themſelves to agree with the Synod as touching Religion, and reſerve and keep a quiet and peaceable Kingdom for him, againſt his return: Neither ſhould the Bohemians think to refuſe his Regiment, whoſe Brother, Father, and Uncle had reigned over them, and that he would reign over them after no other manor ſort, than other Chriſtian Kings uſed to do.

The Council of Baſil alſo wrote their letter to the Bohemians, that they ſhould ſend their Ambaſſadors which ſhould ſhew a reaſon of their Faith, promiſing ſafe conduct to go and come, and free liberty to ſpeak what they would. The Bohemians in this point were of two opinions; for the Proteſtants, and almoſt all the common people ſaid, it was not good to go, alledging the examples of John Hus and Jerom of Prague, which going unto Conſtance, under the ſafe conduct of the Emperor, were there openly burned. But the Nobility following the mind of Maynardus, Prince of the new houſe, ſaid, that they ought to go unto the Council, and that they are not to be ſuffered which had invented thoſe new and ſtrange opinions of Faith, and new kind of Religion, except they would render account of their doings and ſayings before the univerſal Church, and defend thoſe things which they had openly taught before learned men. This opinion took place, and an ambaſſage of three hundred Horſe was ſent unto Baſil. The chief whereof were William Coſca a valiant Knight, and Procopius, ſurnamed Magnus, a man of worthy fame for his manifold Victories, John Rhochezana preacher of Prague, Nicholas Galecus, Miniſter of the Thaborites, and one Peter an Engliſhman, of excellent prompt and pregnant wit. The people came in great number out of the Town, and many out of the Synod and Council, attending before the gates to ſee the coming of this valiant and famous people; otherſome gathered together in great number into the ſtreets where they ſhould paſs through. The Matrons, Maids and Children filled the Windows and Houſes to behold and ſee, and to marvel at their ſtrange kind of apparel, and ſtout couragious countenances, ſaying, that it was not untrue which was reported of them: notwithſtanding all men beheld Procopius, ſaying, this is he which hath overthrown the Papiſts in ſo many battels, which hath ſubverted ſo many Towns, and ſlain ſo many Men, whom both his enemies, and alſo his own ſouldiers do fear and reverence; alſo, that he was a bold, valiant and invincible Captain, which could not be overcome with any terror, labour or travail.

The Bohemians ſent for by the Council.

Safe conduct given to the Bohemians to come to the Council.

A doubt among the Bohemians whether to go to the Council of Baſil or no.

This Maynardus was after a great backfriend to the faithful Bohemians.

Three hundred Horſemen of the Bohemians ſent Ambaſſage to the Council.

This Engliſhman was Peter Pain.

The receiving of the Bohemians at Baſil.

Procopius famous among the Germans.

The Oration of Cardinal Julian.

Theſe Bohemian Ambaſſadors were gently received. The next day after, Cardinal Julianus, ſending for them unto the Council houſe, made a gentle, long and eloquent Oration unto them, exhorting them to unity and peace, ſaying, that the Church was the Spouſe of our Saviour Chriſt, and the Mother of all faithful, that it hath the Keys of binding and looſing, and alſo that it is white and fair without ſpot or wrinkle, and cannot err in thoſe points that are neceſſary to ſalvation, and that he which doth contemn the ſame Church is to be counted as a prophane Ethnick, and Publican, neither can this Church be repreſented better by any means than in this Council. He exhorted them alſo to receive the decrees of the Council, and to give no leſs credit to the Council than unto the Goſpel, by whoſe authority thority the Scriptures themſelves are received and allowed. Alſo that the Bohemians, which call themſelves the Children of the Church, ought to hear the voice of their Mother, which is never unmindful of her Children; how that now of late they have lived apart from their Mother; alledging ſaid life) that is no new or ſtrange thing, for there have been many in times paſt which have forſaken their Mother, and yet ſeeking after Salvation have returned to her again; That in the time of Noah's flood, as many as were without the Ark periſhed; that the Lords Paſſover was to be eaten in one Houſe; that there is no Salvation to be ſought for out of the Church, and that this is the Garden and famous Fountain of Water, whereof whoſoever ſhall drink, ſhall not thirſt everlaſtingly; That the Bohemians have done as they ought, in that they have ſought the Fountains of this Water at the Council and have determined now at length to give ear unto their Mother. Now all hatred ought to ceaſe, all Armor and Weapon is to be laid apart, and all occaſion of War utterly to be rejected. For the Fathers would lovingly and gently hear whatſoever there they would ſay in their own cauſe or quarrel, requiring only that they would willingly receive and embrace the good counſels and determinations of the ſacred Synode; whereunto not only the Bohemians, but alſo all other faithful Chriſtians, ought to conſent and agree, if they will be partakers of Eternal life.

KING Hen. 5.

The Bohemians anſwer to the Cardinals Oration.

This Oration of the Cardinal was heard and very well allowed of the Fathers. Whereunto the Bohemians anſwered in few words. That they neither had contemned the Church nor the Council; that the ſentence given at Conſtance, againſt thoſe which were unheard, doth diminiſh nothing of the Chriſtian Religion; that the Authority of the Fathers hath always remained amongſt them inviolate; and that whatſoever thing the Bohemians have taught, was confirmed by the Scriptures and Goſpel; and that they are now come to manifeſt their innocency before the whole Church, and to require open Audience, where the Laity may alſo be preſent. Their requeſt was granted them; and being further demanded in what points they did diſagree from the Church of Rome, they propounded four Articles.

The Articles wherein the Bohemians diſſented from the Church of Rome.

Firſt, They affirmed, That all ſuch as would be ſaved, ought of neceſſity to receive the Communion of the laſt Supper under both kinds of Bread and Wine.

The ſecond Article. They affirmed all civil rule and dominion to be forbidden unto the Clergy by the Law of God.

The third Article. That the preaching of the Word of God is free for all Men, and in all places.

The fourth Article. As touching open crimes and offences which are in no wiſe to be ſuffered for the avoiding of greater evil.

Theſe were the only propoſitions which they propounded before the Council in the name of the whole Realm. Then another Ambaſſador affirmed, That he had heard of the Bohemians divers and ſundry things offenſive to Chriſtian ears, amongſt the which this was one point, That they ſhould preach that the invention of the order of begging Friers was Diabolical.

Then Procopius riſing up, ſaid, Neither is it untrue; for if neither Moſes, neither before him the Patriarchs, neither after him the Prophets, neither in the New Law Chriſt and his Apoſtles did Inſtitute the Order of begging Friers: Who doth doubt but that it was an invention of the Devil, and a work of darkneſs?

This anſwer of Procopius was derided of them all. And Cardinal Julianus went about to prove, That not only the Decrees of the Patriarchs and Prophets, and thoſe things which Chriſt and his Apoſtles had Inſtituted, were of God, but alſo that all ſuch Decrees as the Church ſhould Ordain, being guided through the Holy Ghoſt, be the works of God. Albeit as he ſaid, the Order of begging Friers might ſeem to be taken out of ſome part of the Goſpel. The Bohemians choſe out four Divines which ſhould declare their Articles to be taken out of the Scriptures. Likewiſe on the contrary part there were four appointed by the Council. This Diſputation continued fifty days, where many things were alledged on either part, whereof, as place ſhall ſerve, more hereafter (by the grace of Chriſt) ſhall be ſaid, when we come to the time of that Council.

Certain appointed by the Bohemians and the Council to Diſpute.

In the mean ſeaſon, while the Bohemians were thus in long conflicts with Sigiſmund the Emperor and the Pope, fighting for their Religion, unto whom, notwithſtanding all the fulneſs of the Popes power was bent againſt them, God of his goodneſs had given ſuch noble victories, as is above-expreſſed, and ever did proſper them ſo long as they could agree among themſelves; as theſe things (I ſay) were doing in Bohemia, King Henry the fifth fighting likewiſe in France, albeit for no like matter of Religion, fell ſick at Bloys and died, after he had Reigned nine years, five months, three weeks and odd days from his Coronation. This King in life, and in all his doings, was ſo devout and ſerviceable to the Pope and his Chaplains, that he was called of many, The Prince of Prieſts: who left behind him a Son being yet an infant, nine months and fifteen days of age, whom he had by Queen Katherine, Daughter to the French King, married to him about two or three years before. The name of which Prince, ſucceeding after his Father, was Henry the ſixth, left under the Government and Protection of his Uncle, named Humphry Duke of Gloceſter.

THE Sixth Part or Section;

PERTAINING

To the laſt Three Hundred Years.

A Preface to the Reader.

ACcording to the Five ſundry diverſities and alterations of the Church, ſo have I divided hitherto the order of this preſent Church-Story into Five principal parts, every part containing 300 years. So that now coming to the laſt 300 years; that is, to the laſt times of the Church, counting from the time of Wickliff: Foraſmuch as in the compaſs of the ſaid laſt 300 years are contained great troubles and perturbations of the Church, with the marvellous reformation of the ſame through the wondrous Operation of the Almighty; all which things cannot be comprehended in one Book: I have therefore diſpoſed the ſaid later 300 years into divers Books; beginning now with the Sixth Book at the Reign of King Henry the Sixth. In which Book, beſide the grievous and ſundry Perſecutions raiſed up by Antichriſt, to be noted, herein is alſo to be obſerved, That whereas it hath of long time been received and thought of the common People, that this Religion now generally uſed hath ſprung up and riſen but of late, even by the ſpace (as many do think) of 20 or 30 years, it may now manifeſtly appear, not only by the Acts and Monuments heretofore paſſed out alſo by the Hiſtories hereafter following, how this profeſſion of Chriſts Religion hath been ſpread abroad in England of Old and Ancient time, not only for the ſpace of theſe 200 late years, from the time of Wickliff, but hath continually from time to time ſparkled abroad, although the flames thereof have never ſo perfectly burſt out, as they have done within theſe Hundred years and more; As by theſe Hiſtories here collected and gathered out of Regiſters, eſpecially of the Dioceſs of Norwich, ſhall manifeſtly appear: wherein may be ſeen what Men, and how many both Men and Women within the ſaid Dioceſs of Norwich have been, which have defended the ſame cauſe of Doctrine which now is received by us in the Church. Which Perſons although then they were not ſo ſtrongly armed in their cauſe and quarrel as of late years they have been, yet were they Warriers in Chriſts Church, and fought to their power in the ſame cauſe. And although they gave back through tyranny, yet judge thou the beſt, good Reader, and refer the cauſe thereof to God, who revealeth all things according to his determinate will and appointed time.

King Henry the ſixth.

{Ann. 1422}

THIS young Prince being under the Age of one Year, after the Death of his Father, ſucceeded in his Reign and Kingdom of England, An. 1422, and in the Eighth Year was Crowned at Weſtminſter: and the ſecond Year after was Crowned alſo at Paris, Henry Biſhop of Wincheſter, Cardinal, being preſent at them both, and Reigned 38 Years, and then was depoſed by Edward the 4th, as hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in his time. In the firſt Year of his Reign was burned the conſtant Witneſs-bearer and Teſtis of Chriſts Doctrine, William Tailor a Prieſt, under Henry Chicheſley Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Ex ſcala mundi. Ex Regiſt. Cant.

Of this William Tailor I read, That in the days of Thomas Arundel he was firſt apprehended, and abjured. Afterward in the days of Henry Chicheſley, about the Year of our Lord 1421, which was a Year before his burning, the ſaid William Tailor appeared again in the Convocation before the Archbiſhop, being brought by the Biſhop of Worceſter, being complained of to have taught at Briſtow theſe Articles following:

William Tailor the firſt time apprehended.

William Tailor again appeareth before the Archbiſhop.

Three Articles firſt objected to William Tailor.

Firſt, That whoſoever hangeth any Scripture about his neck, taketh away the honour due only to God, and giveth it to the Devil.

Secondly, That no human perſon is to be worſhipped, but only God is to be adored.

Thirdly, That the Saints are not to be worſhipped nor invocated.

Upon theſe Articles the ſaid William Tailor being examined, denied that he did preach or hold them in way of defending them, but only did commune and talk upon the ſame, eſpecially upon the ſecond and third Articles, only in way of reaſoning, and for argument ſake. And to juſtify his Opinion to be true in that which he did hold, he brought out of his boſom a Paper or Libel written, wherein were contained certain Articles, with the Teſtimonies of the Doctors alledged, and exhibited the ſame unto the Archbiſhop. Who then being bid to ſtand aſide, the Archbiſhop conſulting together with the Biſhops and other Prelates what was to be done in the matter, delivered the writings unto Maſter John Caſtle, and John Rikinghale, the two Vice-Chancellors of Oxford, and Cambride, and to John Langdon Monk of Canterbury. Who adviſing with themſelves, and with other Divines, about the Articles and Allegations, on the Monday following preſented the ſaid Articles of William Tailor to the Archbiſhops and Prelates, as Erroneous and Heretical. Whereupon William Tailor, being called before them, in concluſion was contented to revoke the ſame, and for his Penance was by them condemned to perpetual Priſon.

Notwithſtanding, through favour, they were contented that he ſhould be releaſed from his carceral indurance, in caſe he would put in ſufficient ſurety in the Kings Chancery, and ſwear that he ſhall never hold nor favour any ſuch Opinions hereafter. And thus the ſaid William Tailor, appointed to appear the next Wedneſday at Lambeth before the Archbiſhop, to take his Abſolution from his long Excommunication during the time from Thomas Arundel, appeared again before him: where he laying aſide his ſunlouſe, that is, his Cloak, his Cap, and ſtripped unto his Doublet, kneeled at the feet of the Archbiſhop. Who then ſtanding up, and having a Rod in his hand, began the Pſalm Miſerere, &c. His Chaplains anſwering the ſecond Verſe. After that was ſaid the Collect, Deus cui proprium, &c. with certain other prayers. And ſo taking an Oath of him, the Archbiſhop committed him to the cuſtody of the Biſhop of Worceſter, to whom power and authority was permitted to releaſe him, upon the conditons aforeſaid. And thus was William Tailor for that time Abſolved, being enjoyned notwithſtanding to appear at the next Convocation, whenſoever it ſhould be, before the ſaid Archbiſhop or his Succeſſor that ſhould follow him.

The form of Canonical Abſolution in the Church uſed againſt them that were Excommunicate.

In the mean time, while William Tailor was thus in the cuſtody of the Biſhop of Worceſter, there paſſed certain writings between him and one Thomas Smith Prieſt at Briſtow, in the which writings William Tailor replied againſt the ſaid Thomas, concering the queſtion of worſhipping of Saints. Upon the occaſion of which reply, being brought to the hands of the Biſhop of Worceſter, William Tailor began a new to be troubled, and was brought again before the publick Convocation of the Clergy by the ſaid Biſhop of Worceſter, to anſwer unto his writings. This was Anno 1432, the 11th day of February.

Unto

{KING Hen. 6.}

Unto the which Convocation the ſaid William being preſented, his writings were read to him; which he would not, nor could not deny to be of his own hand writing.

The Opinion of William Tailor concerning worſhipping of Saints.

The tenor and effect of whoſe writing only tended to prove, That every petition and prayer for any Supernatural gift ought to be directed to God alone, and to no Creature. Albeit in this his writing he did not utterly deny that it was lawful in any reſpect to pray to Saints (and bringeth for the ſame Thomas Aquin) but only in reſpect of that worſhip, which is called Cultus latriæ; And further ſo proſecuteth his mind herein, that he ſeemeth little or nothing to differ from the ſuperſtition of the Papiſts, as moſt plainly appeareth by his own words, ſaying, Nunquam tamen negavi, aut negare intendo, merita aut ſanctorum ſuffragia tam beatorum quam viantium, tam vivis, quam mortuis ad hoc diſpoſitis, quantum poſſunt, ſuffragari, vel proficere; quia hoc eſt elicibile ex Scriptura, quæ non fallit, & ex conſona ratione, &c. And moreover he inſerteth the example of Moſes, who prayed unto God, alledging the merits of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, which were dead, &c. And furthermore, paſſing from the teſtimony of Moſes, and alledging the example of Stephen, ſaith, Quod nunc magis exauditur pro veneratoribus ſuis, quam tunc exauditus eſt pro lapidatoribus. And at length he cometh to this concluſion, proving by St. Auſtin, in this manner, Ne igitur, cum impiis & idololatris in veteri teſtamento, in circuitu ambulemus, nunquam deveniendo ad centrum, ſatium eſt quod faciamus ſecundum conſilium Apoſtoli ſic dicentis, Accedamus cum fiducia ad thronum gratiæ ejus, ut miſericordiam conſequamur, & gratiam inveniamus in auxilio opportuno, &c. That is, And therefore, leſt we run about in circles with the wicked, and with the idolaters of the Old Teſtament, and never come to the center, it is wholſome and good counſel, that we follow the mind of the Apoſtle, ſaying, Let us reſort with boldneſs unto the Throne of his Grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace in time of opportune help, &c.

Cultus latriæ, that is, worſhip which is only due to God.

Aug. ſuper Pſal. 21.

Thus much out of the foreſaid writing of William Tailor, I have excerped, to the intent that the indifferent Reader, uſing his judgment herein, may ſee how little matter was in this, wherefore he ſhould be condemned by the Papiſts. And yet notwithſtanding the ſame writing, being delivered by the Archbiſhop to the four orders of Friers of London to be examined, was found erroneous and heretical in theſe points:

Four Articles by the four Orders of Friers laid againſt William Tailor.

1. That every prayer which is a petition of ſome Supernatural gift or free gift, is to be directed only to God.

2. Item, That prayer is to be directed to God alone.

3. Item, To pray to any Creature is to commit Idolatry.

4. Alſo, another Opinion there was much like to the other, to make up the fourth; ſo that although all theſe Opinions agreed in one, yet to make up a number, every Order of the four ſorts of Friers, thought to find out ſome matter to offer up to the Archbiſhop againſt him, leſt one Order ſhould ſeem more cunning or pregnant, in finding out more than could another; or elſe perchance leſt any of them ſhould ſeem to favour the party, in bringing nothing againſt him, as the reſt had done.

When the Saturday was come, which was 20th day of February, upon the which day the four Orders were appointed to declare their cenſure upon the Articles in the Chapter-houſe of Paul's, firſt appeareth Frier Tille, for the black Friers, then Frier Winchelſey, then Frier Low, after Frier Aſhwel, each Frier for his Order ſeverally bringing his Hereſie, as is above-ſpecified.

Thus the verdict of theſe four Orders being given up to the Archbiſhop, and ſeverally each Order coming in with his Hereſie, which was the twentieth day of February; hereupon cometh down a Writ from the King, directed to the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London, De hæretico comburendo, dated the firſt day of March, the firſt year of his Reign. The Copy whereof remaineth in the Records of the Tower, beginning thus: Rex Majori & Vice-comitibus. Whereupon the ſaid William Tailor, condemned as a relapſe, firſt was degraded, and after to be burned, and ſo was committed to the Secular Power Power; who then being had to Smithfield, the firſt day of March, with Chriſtian conſtancy, after long Impriſonment, there did conſummate his Martyrdom, 1422.

William Tailor degraded. William Tailor Martyr burned in Smithfield.

The manner of his degrading was all one with the degrading of John Hus before, for the Papiſts uſe but one form for all men. Firſt, Degrading them from Prieſthood, by taking from them the Chalice and Patine. From Deaconſhip, by taking from them the Goſpel-Book and Tunicle. From ſub-Deaconſhip, by taking from them the Epiſtle-Book and Tunicle. From Acoluteſhip, by taking from them the Cruet and Candleſtick. From an Exorciſt, by taking away the Book of Exorciſms or Gradual. From the Sextonſhip, by taking away the Church-Door-Key and Surplice. And likewiſe from Benet, in taking away the Surpliſe, and firſt Tonſure, &c. All which they orderly accompliſhed upon this godly Martyr, before his burning.

The Popes manner of degradation.

John Florence a Turner.

JOhn Florence a Turner, dwelling in Shelton, in the Dioceſs of Norwich, was attached for that he held and taught theſe Hereſies here under-written (as they called them) contrary to the determination of the Church of Rome.

Imprimis, That the Pope and Cardinals have no power to make or conſtitute any Laws.

Item, That there is no day to be kept Holy, but only the Sunday which God hath hallowed.

Item, That Men ought to faſt no other time, but of the Quatuor temporum.

Item, That Images are not to be worſhipped, neither that the people ought to ſet up any Lights before them in the Churches, neither to go on Pilgrimage, neither to Offer for the Dead, or with Women that are Purified.

He meaneth they ſhould not claim ſuch riches by any exaction.

Item, That Curates ſhould not take the Tithes of their Pariſhioners, but that ſuch Tithes ſhould be divided amongſt the poor Pariſhioners.

Item, That all ſuch as Swear by their life or power, ſhall be damned, except they repent.

Upon Wedneſday being the ſecond day of Auguſt in the year of our Lord 1424, the ſaid John Florence perſonally appeared before William Bernam, Chancellor to William Biſhop of Norwich, where he proceeding againſt him, objected the firſt Article touching the power of the Pope and Cardinals; to which Article the ſaid John Florence anſwered in this manner: If the Pope lived uprightly as Peter lived, he hath power to make Laws; otherwiſe I believe he hath no power. But being afterward threatned by the Judge, he acknowledged that he had erred, and ſubmitted himſelf to the correction of the Church, and was Abjured, taking an Oath that from that time forward he ſhould not hold, teach, preach, or willingly defend any Error or Hereſie contrary to the determination of the Church of Rome, neither maintain, help, or aid any that ſhall teach or hold any ſuch Errors or Hereſies, either privily or apertly; and for his offence in this behalf done he was enjoyned this Penance following:

{Ann. 1424}

The manner of this diſciplining was with a white Rod thrice laid upon the head of the Penitentiary.

Three Sundays in a Solemn Proceſſion, in the Cathedral Church of Norwich, he ſhould be diſciplined before all the people. The like alſo ſhould be done about his Pariſh-Church of Shelton, three other ſeveral Sundays, he being bare-headed, bare-footed, and bare-necked, after the manner of a publick Penitentiary, his body being covered with a Canvas-ſhirt, and Canvas-breeches, carrying in his hand a Taper of a pound weight; and that done he was diſmiſſed.

Richard Belward of Eriſam in the Dioceſs of Norwich.

Richard Belward of Eriſam in the Dioceſs of Norwich, was accuſed for holding and teaching theſe Errors and Opinions here under written, contrary to the determination of the Church of Rome.

He meaneth the wicked Biſhops of that time, whoſe curſes God did bleſs.

Imprimis, That Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters and Ordinaries have no power to Excommunicate, neither can Excommunicate. And albeit that a Biſhop do Excommunicate any Man, God doth abſolve him.

This proveth Sir J. Oldcaſtle to be no Traytor.

Item, That he held the erronious Opinions and Concluſions that Sir John Oldcaſtle held when he was in Priſon, and affirmed that Sir John Oldcaſtle was a true Catholick Man, and falſly condemned and put to death without any reaſonable cauſe.

Item, That ſuch as go on Pilgrimage, offering to Images made of Wood and Stone, are Excommunicate, becauſe they ought to offer to the quick, and not to the dead; and that the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters; that is to ſay, the Curates do ſell God upon Eaſter-day, when as they receive Offerings of ſuch as ſhould Communicate, before they do Miniſter the Sacrament unto them.

Item, That he counſelled divers Women, that they ſhould not Offer in the Church for the dead, neither with Women that were purified.

The words of the Regiſter.

Item, That he blamed divers of his Neighbours that refuſed his Doctrine, ſaying unto them, Truly ye are fools that deny to learn the Doctrine of my Sect; for your Neighbours which are of my Sect are able to confound and vanquiſh all other that are of your Sect. {KING Hen. 6.}

Item, That the Saints which are in Heaven ought in no caſe to be prayed unto, but only God.

Item, That the ſaid Richard keepeth Schools of Lollardy in the Engliſh Tongue, in the Town of Dichingham, and a certain Parchment-maker bringeth him all the Books containing that Doctrine from London.

The fifth day of July 1424, the ſaid Richard Belward, was brought before John Biſhop of Norwich, ſitting in place of Judgment, where the foreſaid Articles were objected againſt the ſaid Richard, which he there denied; whereupon the Biſhop appointed him another day to purge himſelf, the Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Margaret: upon which day, being the 24th of July, in the year aforeſaid, he appeared again before the Biſhop, and brought with him nine of his Neighbours to purge him upon thoſe Articles, and there did ſolemnly purge himſelf. And afterward, forſomuch as the ſaid Biſhop ſuſpected the ſaid Richard Belward greatly of Lollardy, he commanded him there preſently to Swear upon the Evangeliſts, That from that day forward he ſhould not wittingly preach, teach, or defend any Error or Hereſie, contrary to the Church of Rome, neither aid, aſſiſt, favour or maintain, privily or apertly, any manner of perſon or perſons, that ſhould hold or maintain the ſaid Errors or Hereſies. In the preſence of Maſter William Bernam, John Wadden, Robert Serle, and J. Berne Eſquire, and other of his Neighbours which came unto his purgation.

John Goddeſel of Dichingham.

In like manner John Goddeſel of Dichingham Parchment-maker, was detected and accuſed upon the ſame Articles, and thereupon brought before the Biſhop, where he denying them, purged himſelf by his Neighbours, as Richard Belward before had done, being Sworn alſo in like manner as he was, and ſo was diſmiſſed and ſet at liberty, until the year of our Lord 1428, when he was again apprehended, accuſed and abjured, as ſhall be more at large declared in the Hiſtory when we come to that year. Sir Hugh Pie alſo, Chaplain of Ludney in the Dioceſs of Norwich, was likewiſe accuſed and brought before the Biſhop of Norwich the fifth day of July, Anno 1424, for holding of theſe Opinions following:

Sir Hugh Pie Prieſt.

That the people ought not to go on Pilgrimage.

Item, That the people ought not to give Alms, but only unto ſuch as beg at their doors.

Image of the Croſs not to be worſhipped.

Item, That the Image of the Croſs and other Images are not to be worſhipped. And that the ſaid Hugh had caſt the Croſs of Bromehold into the fire to be burned, which he took from one John Welgate of Ludney. Which Articles, as is aforeſaid, being objected againſt him, he utterly denied; whereupon he had a day appointed to purge himſelf by the witneſs of three Lay-men, and three Prieſts. That ſo done, he was Sworn as the other before, and ſo diſmiſſed.

After this, in the year of our Lord 1428, King Henry the 6th ſent down moſt cruel Letters of Commiſſion unto John Exeter and Jacolet Germain, Keeper of the Caſtle of Colcheſter, for the apprehending of Sir William White Prieſt, and others ſuſpected of Hereſies, the tenor whereof hereafter enſueth.

The Copy of the Kings Letters directed to John Exeter and Jacolet Germain, Keeper of the Caſtle of Colcheſter, for the apprehending of Sir William White Prieſt, and other (as they called them) Lollards.

A Letter of the King.

HEnry by the grace of God King of England and of France, Lord of Ireland, to his well-beloved John Exeter, and Jacolet Germain, Keeper of the Caſtle of Colcheſter, health:

We ſhall underſtand that we fully truſting unto your fidelity and circumſpections, have appointed you joyntly and ſeverally to take and Arreſt William White Prieſt, and Thomas, late Chaplain of Setling, in the County of Norfolk, and William Northampton Prieſt, and all other whatſoever they be that are ſuſpect of Hereſie or Lollardy, whereſoever they may be found within the Liberties or without, and ſtraightway being ſo taken, to ſend them unto our next

Goal

KING Hen. 6. Goal or Priſon, until ſuch time as we ſhall have taken other order for their delivery: And therefore we ſtraightly command you, that ye diligently attend about the Premiſes, and fulfil the ſame in form aforeſaid. Alſo we charge and commend all and ſingular Juſtices of Peace, Mayors, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Conſtables, and all other our faithful Officers, by the tenor of theſe Preſents, That they do aſſiſt, aid and counſel you and every of you, in the execution of the Premiſes, as it ſhall be comely for them. In witneſs whereof we have cauſed theſe our Letters Patents to be made. Witneſs my ſelf at Weſtminſter, the ſixth of July, the ſixth of our Reign.

By vertue of which Commiſſion we find in old Monuments, that within ſhort ſpace after John Exeter, which was appointed one of the Commiſſioners, attached ſix perſons in the Town of Bungay in the Dioceſs of Norwich, and committed them to William Day, and William Roe, Conſtables of the Town of Bungay, to be ſent within ten days following, under ſafe cuſtody, unto the Caſtle of Norwich. Whoſe names through the Antiquity of the Monument were ſo defaced, that we could not attain to the perfect knowledge of them all; only three names partly remained in the Book to be read, which were theſe:

¶ John Waddon of Tenterton, in the County of Kent, Bartholomew, Monk of Erſham, in the County of Norfolk, Cornleader, a married Man, William Scuts.

Theſe three were in the cuſtody of the Duke of Norfolk, at his Caſtle of Fremingham.

Beſide theſe, we alſo find in the ſaid old Monuments within the Dioceſs of Norfolk and Suffolk, ſpecially in the Towns of Beckles, Erſham, and Ludney, a great number both of Men and Women to have been vexed and caſt into Priſon, and after their Abjuration brought to open ſhame in Churches and Markets, by the Biſhop of the ſaid Dioceſs, called William, and his Chancellor William Bernham, John Exeter being the Regiſter therein; ſo that within the ſpace of three or four years; that is, from the year 1428, unto the year 1431, about the number of 120 Men and Women were examined, and ſuſtained great vexation for the profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith; of whom ſome were only taken upon ſuſpition, for eating of Meats prohibited upon Vigile-days, who, upon their purgation made, eſcaped more eaſily away, and with leſs puniſhment, whoſe name here follow ſubſcribed.

William Biſhop of Norwich, William Bernham his Chancellor.

¶ The names of them that were taken and Examined upon ſuſpition of Hereſie.

The other were more cruelly handled, and ſome of them were put to death and burned, among whom we do ſpecially find mention made of theſe three:

Father Abraham of Colcheſter.
William White, Prieſt.
John Waddon, Prieſt.

Theſe fore-named Perſons and Soldiers of Chriſt, being much beaten with the cares and troubles of thoſe days, although they were conſtrained to relent and abjure; that is, to proteſt otherwiſe with their Tongues than their hearts did think, partly through correction, and partly through infirmity (being as yet but new trained Soldiers in Gods field) yet for their good will they bare unto the truth, although with their Tongues they durſt not expreſs it, we have thought good that their names ſhould not be ſuppreſſed, as well for other ſundry cauſes, as ſpecially for this; either to ſtop the mouths of malignant adverſaries, or to anſwer to their ignorance, who following rather blind affection, than the true knowledge of Times and Antiquities, for lack of knowledge blame that they know not, accuſing the True Doctrine of the Word of God for novelty, and carping the teachers thereof for new broched Brethren. Who, if they did as well foreſee times paſſed, as they be unwilling to follow times now preſent, they ſhould underſtand as well by theſe Stories as other before, how this Doctrine of the Grace of God, lacking no antiquity, hath from time to time continually ſought to burſt out, and in ſome places hath prevailed; although in moſt places, places, through tyranny and the malice of Men, Chriſts proceedings have been ſuppreſſed and kept under from riſing, ſo much as Mens power and ſtrength joyned with craft and ſubtilty could labour to keep down the ſame; as here by theſe good Men of Norfolk and Suffolk may well appear. For if the knowledge and the good towardneſs of thoſe good Men had had the like liberty of time, with the help of like authority, as we have now, and had not been reſtrained through the iniquity of time and tyranny of Prelates, it had well appeared how old this Doctrine would have been, which now they contemn and reject for the newneſs thereof: neither needed Bonner to have asked of Thomas Hawks, and ſuch other, where their Church was forty years ago, in as much as for forty years ago, and more, within the countrey of Norfolk and Suffolk, was then found ſuch plenty of the ſame Profeſſion and like Doctrine which we now profeſs. And thus much for the number and names of theſe perſons.

Bonner might ſee the Church here in this age more than forty years before he was born

Now as touching their Articles which they did maintain and defend: Firſt, this is to be conſidered, as I find it in the Regiſters, ſuch ſociety and agreement of Doctrine to be amongſt them, that almoſt in their Aſſertions and Articles there was no difference. The Doctrine of the one was the Doctrine of all the other: what their Articles were, partly it is ſhewed in the Leaf before; and partly here followeth to be declared more at large.

Although it is to be thought concerning theſe Articles, that many of them either were falſly objected againſt them, or not truly reported of the Notaries, according as the common manner is of theſe Adverſaries, where the matter is good, there to make Hereſie, and of a little occaſion to ſtir up great matter of ſlander, as they did before by the Articles of John Wickliff and John Hus, and others moe: So in like manner it ſeemeth they did in the Articles of theſe Men, either miſtaking that which they ſaid, or miſunderſtanding that which they meant, eſpecially in theſe two Articles concerning Baptiſm and paying of Tithes. For whereas they ſpeaking againſt the ceremonial and ſuperfluous Traditions then uſed in Baptiſm, as Salt, Oil, Spittle, Taper, Light, Chriſomes, exorciſing of the Water, with ſuch other, accounted them as no materſal thing in the Holy Inſtitution of Baptiſm, the Notaries ſlanderouſly depraving this their aſſertion, to make it more odious to the ears of the people, ſo gave out the Article, as though they ſhould hold, that the Sacrament of Baptiſm uſed in the Church by Water is but a light matter and of ſmall effect.

These Men are falſly ſlandered about Baptiſm.

Again, In ſpeaking againſt the Chriſtening the Midwives uſe in private Houſes, againſt the Opinion of ſuch as think ſuch Children to be damned which depart before they come to their Baptiſm, they are falſly reported, as though they ſhould ſay, That Chriſtian people be ſufficiently Baptized in the Blood of Chriſt, and need no Water, and that Infants be ſufficiently Baptiſed, if their Parents be Baptiſed before them. Which thing is ſo contrary to the manifeſt Word, That it is not to be thought any to be ſo ignorant of the Goſpel, that ever would or did affirm the ſame.

Moreover, they thought or ſaid peradventure, That in certain caſes Tithes might be withholden from wicked Prieſts ſometime, and be conferred to better uſes, to the behoof of the poor: Therefore they are falſly ſlandered, as ſaying and affirming, That no Tithes were to be given to the Miniſters and Curates of the Churches.

The Papiſts are but quarrel pickers.

And likewiſe for Matrimony, wherein they are reported to hold and affirm, as though it conſiſted only in the mutual conſent betwixt the Man and the Woman, needing no other Solemnizing in the publick Church, and all becauſe (as it is like) they denied it to be a Sacrament. Other Articles were objected againſt them, as theſe which hereafter follow:

Articles.

That Auricular Confeſſion is not to be made unto a Prieſt, but unto God only; becauſe no Prieſt hath any power to Abſolve a ſinner from his ſin.

Item, That no Prieſt hath power to make the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar, but that, after the Sacramental words, there remaineth pure material Bread as before.

Item, That every true Chriſtian-man is a Prieſt to God.

Item, That no Man is bound under pain of damnation unto Lent, or any other days prohibited by the Church of Rome. {KING Hen. 6.}

Item, That the Pope is Antichriſt, and his Prelates the Diſciples of Antichriſt, and the Pope hath no power to bind and looſe upon Earth.

Item, That it is lawful for every Chriſtian to do any bodily work (ſin only except) upon Holy-days.

Item, That it is lawful for Prieſts to have Wives.

Item, That Excommunications and Eccleſiaſtical cenſures given out by the Prelates, are not to be regarded.

In caſe of neceſſity urgent they meant.

Item, It is not lawful to Swear in private caſes.

Item, That Men ought not to go on Pilgrimage.

Item, That there is no honour to be given to the Images of the Crucifix, of our Lady or any other Saint.

Item, That the holy water, hallowed in the Church by the Prieſt, is not holier or of more vertue than other running or Well-water, becauſe the Lord bleſſed all Waters in their firſt creation.

Item, That the death of Thomas Becket was neither Holy nor Meritorious. The death of Thomas Becket.

Item, That the relicts, as dead Mens Bones, ought not to be worſhipped or digged out of their Graves, or ſet up in Shrines.

Item, That prayers made in all places are acceptable unto God.

Item, That Men ought not to pray to any Saint, but only to God.

Item, That the Bells and Ringing in the Church was Ordained for no other purpoſe, but to fill the Prieſts purſes.

Item, That it is no ſin to withſtand the Eccleſiaſtical Precepts.

Item, That the Catholick Church is only the Congregation of Elect. In this Article is meant, that the wicked be in the Church, but not of the Church.

Theſe were the Articles which were generally objected againſt them all, wherein they did ſo agree in one uniform Faith, that whatſoever one did hold, all the other did maintain, and hold the ſame. By the which their conſent and Doctrine it appeareth, That they all received it of ſome one Inſtructer, who was William White; which being a Scholar and follower of John Wickliff, reſorted afterward into this Country of Norfolk, there inſtructed theſe Men in the Light of the Goſpel. And now, as we have declared the names and Articles of theſe good Men, ſo it remaineth ſomewhat to ſpeak of their troubles, how they were handled; beginning firſt with William White.

William White, Preiſt.

THIS William White, being a follower of John Wickliff, and a Prieſt, not after the common ſort of Prieſts, but rather to be reputed amongſt the number of them, of whom the wiſe Man ſpeaketh, * He was as the morning ſtar in the midſt of a cloud, &c. This Man was well learned, upright and a well-ſpoken Prieſt. He gave over his Prieſthood and Benefice, and took unto him a godly young Woman to his Wife, named Joan; notwithſtanding he did not therefore ceaſe to leave from his former Office and Duty, but continually laboured to the glory and praiſe of the Spouſe of Chriſt, by reading, writing, preaching. The principal points of his Doctrine were theſe, which he was forced to recant at Canterbury.

Will. White Martyr. {Ann. 1428} Ex Waldenſ. Ecc. 18.

That Men ſhould ſeek for the forgiveneſs of their ſins only at the hands of God.

That the wicked living of the Pope, and his Holineſs, is nothing elſe but a Deviliſh eſtate and heavy yoke of Antichriſt, and therefore he is an Enemy unto Chriſts Truth.

That Men ought not to worſhip Images, or other Idolatrous Paintings.

That Men ought not to worſhip the holy Men which are dead.

The Romiſh Church aptly reſembled to the curſed Fig-tree.

That the Romiſh Church is the Fig-tree which the Lord Chriſt hath accurſed, becauſe it hath brought forth no fruit of the true belief.

That ſuch as wear Couls, or be Anointed or Shorn, are the lance-Knights and Soldiers of Lucifer; and that they all, becauſe their Lamps are not burning, ſhall be ſhut out, when as the Lord ſhall come.

Upon

{KING Hen.6.}

Upon which Articles he being attached at Canterbury under the Archbiſhop Henry Chicheſly, in the Year of our Lord 1424, there for a certain ſpace, ſtoutly and manly witneſſed the truth which he had preached: but like as there he loſt his courage and ſtrength, ſo afterward he became again much more ſtouter and ſtronger in Jeſus Chriſt, and confeſſed his own error and offence. For after this, he going into Norfolk with his ſaid Wife Joan, and there occupying himſelf buſily in teaching, and converting the people unto the True Doctrine of Chriſt, at the laſt, by the means of the Kings Letters ſent down for that intent and purpoſe, he was apprehended and taken, and brought before William Biſhop of Norwich, by whom he was convict, and condemned of thirty Articles, and there was burned in Norwich, in the month of September, An. 1424.

This William White and his Wife had his moſt abode with one Thomas Moon of Ludney. This Man was of ſo devout and holy life, that all the people had him in great reverence, and deſired him to pray for them; inſomuch that one Margaret Wright confeſſed, That if any Saints were to be prayed to, ſhe would rather pray to him than any other. When he was come unto the Stake, thinking to open his mouth to ſpeak unto the people, to exhort and confirm them in the verity, one of the Biſhops ſervants ſtruck him on the mouth, thereby to force him to keep ſilence. And thus this good Man, receiving the Crown of Martyrdom, ended this mortal life to the great dolour and grief of all the good Men of Norfolk. Whoſe ſaid Wife Joan, following her Husbands footſteps according to her power, teaching and ſowing abroad the ſame Doctrine, confirmed many Men in Gods Truth; wherefore ſhe ſuffered much trouble and puniſhment the ſame Year at the hands of the ſaid Biſhop.

The Biſhops man ſmiteth him on the mouth exhorting the people.

The Burning of William White

The deſcription of the penance of Thomas Pye and John Mendham

Father Abraham, John Waddon, Prieſt, Martyrs and burned.

About the ſame time alſo was burned father Abraham of Colcheſter, and John Waddon Prieſt, for the like Articles.

Concerning them which abjured, how and by whom they were examined, what Depoſitions came in againſt them, and what was the order and manner of the Penance enjoyned them, here it might be ſet out at large: But for avoiding of prolixity, it ſhall be ſufficient briefly to touch certain of the principals, whereby the better underſtanding may be given to the Reader, after what manner and order all the other were intreated.

Firſt, Amongſt them which were Arreſted and cauſed to Abjure in this Year aforeſaid ſpecified, 1428, was Thomas Pie, and John Mendham of Aldborough, who, being convict upon divers of the Articles before-mentioned, were injoyned Penance to be done in their own Pariſh-Church, as by the Biſhop's Letter directed to the Dean of Rhodenhall, and the Pariſh-Prieſt of Aldborough, doth more at large appear, the Tenor whereof here enſueth:

The Copy of the Biſhop of Norwich his Letter.

A Letter of the Biſhop of Norwich.

William by the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Norwich, to our well-beloved Sons in Chriſt, the Dean of Rhodenhall of our Dioceſs, and to the Pariſh-Prieſt of the Pariſh-Church of Alborough of the ſame our Dioceſs, Health, Grace and Benediction. Foraſmuch as we, according to our Office, Lawfully proceeding to the correction and amendment of the Souls of Thomas Pie and John Mendham of Aldborough of the Dioceſs aforeſaid, becauſe they have holden, believed and affirmed divers and many Errors and Hereſies, contrary to the determination of the holy Church of Rome, and the Univerſal Church and Catholick Faith, have enjoyned the ſaid Thomas and John, appearing before us perſonally, and confeſſing before us judicially that they have holden, believed and affirmed divers and many Errors and Hereſies, this Penance he hereunder written, for their offences to be done and fulfilled in manner, form and time hereunder-written, according as Juſtice doth require; that is to ſay, ſix juſtigations or diſciplinings about the Pariſh-Church of Aldborough aforeſaid, before a ſolemn Proceſſion ſix ſeveral Sundays, and three diſciplinings about the Market-place of Hereſtone of our ſaid Dioceſs three principal Market-days, bare necked, head, legs and feet, their bodies being covered only with their ſhirts and breeches, either of them carrying a Taper in his hand of a pound weight, as well round about the Church, as about the Market-place, in every of the foreſaid appointed days; which Tapers, the laſt Sunday after the Penance finiſhed, we will that the ſaid John and Thomas do humbly and devoutly offer unto the high Altar of the Pariſh-Church of Aldborough at the time of the Offertory of the high Maſs the ſame day, and that either of them, going about the Market-place aforeſaid, ſhall make four ſeveral pauſes and ſtays, and at every of thoſe ſame pauſes humbly and devoutly receive at your hands three diſciplinings: Therefore we ſtraitly charge and command you and either of you, joyntly and ſeverally by vertue of your

The manner of the Popes Penance.

your obedience, that every Sunday and Market-day, after the receit of our preſent commandment, you do effectually admoniſh and bring forth the ſaid Thomas Pie and John Mendham to begin and accompliſh their ſaid Penance, and ſo ſucceſſively to finiſh the ſame in manner and form aforeappointed. But if they will not obey your monitions, or rather our commandments in this behalf, and begin and finiſh their ſaid Penance effectually, you or one of you ſhall cite them peremptorily, that they or either of them appear before us, or our Commiſſary, in the Chappel of our Palace at Norwich, the twelfth day after the Citation ſo made, if it be a Court day, or elſe the next Court day following, to declare if they or any of them have any cauſe why they ſhould not be Excommunicate for their manifeſt offence in this behalf committed, according to the form and order of Law, and further to receive ſuch puniſhment, as Juſtice ſhall provide in that behalf. And what you have done in the Premiſes, whether the ſaid Thomas and John have obeyed your Admonitions, and performed the ſame Penance or no, we will that you or one of you, which have received our ſaid commandment for the execution thereof, do diſtinctly certify us between this and the laſt day of November next coming. Dated at our Palace of Norwich under our Commiſſaries Seal, the 8th day of October, Anno 1428.

This (gentle Reader) was for the moſt part, the order of their whole Penance: howbeit ſome were oftentimes more cruelly handled; and after their Penance they were baniſhed out of the Dioceſs, and other ſome more ſtraitly uſed by longer Impriſonment, whereof we will briefly rehearſe one or two for example.

John Beverly alias Battild.

John Beverly.

John Beverly alias Battild, a labourer, was attached by the Vicar of Southereke, the Pariſh-Prieſt of Waterden, and a Lawyer, and ſo delivered unto Maſter William Barnham the Biſhops Commiſſary, who ſent him to the Caſtle of Norwich there to be kept in Irons: where afterward he being brought before the Commiſſary, and having nothing proved againſt him, he took an Oath, that every year afterward he ſhould confeſs his ſins once a year to his Curate, and receive the Sacrament at Eaſter, as other Chriſtians did; and for his offence was enjoyned that the Friday and Saturday next after he ſhould faſt on Bread and Water, and upon the Saturday to be * whipped from the Palace of Norwich, going round about by Tomelands, and by St. Michaels Church, by Cottlerew, and about the Market, having in his hand a Wax-Candle of two pence, to offer to the Image of the Trinity after he had done his Penance. And forſomuch as he confeſſed that he had eaten fleſh upon Eaſter-day, and was not ſhriven in all Lent, nor received upon Eaſter-day, the Judge enjoyned him that he ſhould faſt Tueſday, Wedneſday and Friday in Whitſon-week, having but one meal a day of fiſh and other white Meats, and after this Penance ſo done he ſhould depart out of the Dioceſs, and never come there any more.

* Altas, fuſtigated.

John Skilley of Flixon, Miller.

John Skilley. The Penance of J. Skilley.

John Skilley of Flixon, Miller, being apprehended and brought before the Biſhop of Norwich the 14th day of March, 1428, for holding and maintaining the Articles above-written, was thereupon convict and forced to abjure; and after this abjuration ſolemnly made (which here to avoid tedioufneſs we omit) he had a moſt ſharp ſentence of Penance pronounced againſt him, the effect whereof being briefly collected, was this: That forſomuch as the ſaid Skilley was convict by his own confeſſion, for holding and maintaining the Articles before-written, and for receiving certain good and godly Men into his Houſe, as Sir William White Prieſt, and John Wadden, whom they called famous, notorious, and damnable Hereticks, and had now abjured the ſame, being firſt abſolved from the ſentence of Excommunication which he had incurred by means of his Opinions, he was injoyned for Penance ſeven years Impriſonment in the Monaſtery of Langly, in the Dioceſs of Norwich. And for ſo much as in times paſt he uſed upon the Fridays to eat fleſh, he was enjoyned to faſt on Bread and Water every Friday by the ſpace of that ſeven years to come; and that by the ſpace of two years next immediately after the ſeven years expired, every Wedneſday in the beginning of Lent, and every Maundy-Thurſday, he ſhould appear before the Biſhop or his Succeſſor, or Commiſſary for the time being, in the Cathedral Church of Norwich, together with the other Penitentiaries, to do open Penance for his offences.

KING Hen. 6.

Beſides theſe there were divers other of the ſame company, which the ſame year were forced to like Abjuration and Penance. And ſo to proceed to the next year following, which was 1429, there enſueth a great number in the ſame Regiſter, which were examined, and did Penance in like ſort, to the number of 16 or 17. In the number of whom was John Baker, otherwiſe called Uſher Toaſtal, who for having a Book with the Pater-Noſter, the Ave and Creed in Engliſh, and for certain other Articles of faſting, Confeſſion, and Invocation, contrary to the determination of the Romiſh Church, after much vexation for the ſame, was cauſed to abjure and ſuſtain fifth Penance, as the other before him had done.

The Story of Margery Backſter.

Margery Backſter.

A Nother was Margery Backſter, Wife of William Backſter Wright in Martham, the ſame year accuſed; againſt whom one Joan, Wife of Cliffland was brought in by the Biſhop, and compelled to depoſe, and was made to bring in, in form following:

A Woman brought in for witneſs in the Popes Court.

Firſt, That the ſaid Margery Backſter did inform this Deponent, That ſhe ſhould in no caſe Swear, ſaying to her in Engliſh, Dame beware of the Bee, for every Bee will ſting, and therefore take heed you Swear not, neither by God, neither by our Lady, neither by any other Saint; and if ye do contrary, the Bee will ſting your Tongue and venom your Soul.

The Bee will ſting.

Item, This Deponent being demanded by the ſaid Margery, what ſhe did every day at Church; ſhe anſwered, That ſhe kneeled down and ſaid five Pater-Noſters, in worſhip of the Crucifix, and as many Ave Maries in worſhip of our Lady. Whom Margery rebuked, ſaying, You do evil to kneel or pray to ſuch Images in the Churches, for God dwelleth not in ſuch Churches, neither ſhall come down out of Heaven, and will give you no more reward for ſuch prayer, than a Candle lighted, and ſet under the cover of the Font, will give light by night to thoſe which are in the Church; ſaying moreover in Engliſh, Lewd Wrights of Stocks hew and form ſuch Croſſes and Images, and after that, lewd Painters gleer them with Colours. And if you deſire ſo much to ſee the true Croſs of Chriſt, I will ſhew it you at home in your own Houſe. Which this Deponent being deſirous to ſee, the ſaid Margery, ſtretching out her Arms abroad, ſaid to this Deponent, This is the true Croſs of Chriſt, and this Croſs thou oughteſt and maiſt every day behold and worſhip in thine own Houſe, and therefore it is but vain to run to the Church to worſhip dead Croſſes and Images.

Againſt Images.

Item, This Deponent, being demanded by the ſaid Margery how ſhe believed touching the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaid, That ſhe believed the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Conſecration, to be the very Body of Chriſt in form of Bread. To whom Margery ſaid, Your belief is naught. For if every ſuch Sacrament were God, and the very Body of Chriſt, there ſhould be an infinite number of gods, becauſe that a Thouſand Prieſts and more do every day make a Thouſand ſuch gods, and afterward eat them, and void them out again by their hinder parts, filthily ſtinking under the Hedges, where you may find a great many ſuch gods if you will ſeek for them. And therefore know for certainty, That by the grace of God it ſhall never be my god, becauſe it is falſly and deceitfully ordained by the Prieſts in the Church, to induce the ſimple people to Idolatry; for it is only material Bread.

The Sacrament is not God.

Moreover, The ſaid Margery ſaid to this Deponent, That Thomas of Canterbury, whom the people called St. Thomas, was a falſe Traitor, and damned in Hell, becauſe he injuriouſly endowed the Churches with poſſeſſions, and raiſed up many Hereſies in the Church, which ſeduce the ſimple people; and therefore if God be bleſſed, the ſaid Thomas is accurſed; and thoſe falſe Prieſts that The Becket a Traitor.

The Becket ſlain, not before the Altar, but in his flying.

ſay

{KING Hen. 6.} ſay that he ſuffered his death patiently before the Altar, do lie; For as a cowardly Traitor he was ſlain in the Church door, as he was flying away.

Moreover, the Deponent ſaith, that the ſaid Margery told her that the curſed Pope, Cardinals, Archbiſhop, and Biſhops, and ſpecially the Biſhop of Norwich and others that ſupport and maintain Hereſies and Idolatry, reigning and ruling over the people, ſhall ſhortly have the very ſame or worſe miſchief fall upon them, than that curſed man Thomas of Canterbury had. For they falſely and curſedly deceive the people with their falſe Mammetries and Laws, to extort money from the ſimple folk to ſuſtain their pride, riot and idleneſs. And know aſſuredly that the vengeance of God will ſpeedily come upon them, for they have moſt cruelly ſlain the children of God, Father Abraham, and W. White, a true preacher of the Law of God, and John Wadden, with many other godly men; which vengeance had come upon the ſaid Caiaphas, the Biſhop of Norwich and his Miniſters, which are members of the Devil, before this time, if the Pope had not ſent over theſe falſe pardons unto thoſe parties, which the ſaid Caiaphas had falſly obtained, to induce the people to make proceſſion for the ſtate of them and of the Church. Which pardons brought the ſimple people to curſed Idolatry.

Father Abingham, William White, John Wadden.

Item, The ſaid Margery ſaid to this Deponent, that every faithful Man and Woman is not bound to faſt in Lent, or other days appointed for faſting by the Church, and that every man may lawfully eat fleſh and all other meats upon the ſaid days and times: and that it were better to eat the fragments left upon Thurſday at night on the faſting days, than to go to the Market to bring themſelves in debt to buy fiſh; and that Pope Silveſter made the Lent.

Againſt the Popes faſting days.

Item, The ſaid Margery ſaid to this Deponent, that William White was falſly condemned for an Heretick, and that he was a good and holy man, and that he willed her to follow him to the place of execution, where ſhe ſaw that when he would have opened his mouth to ſpeak unto the people to inſtruct them, a Devil, one of Biſhop Caiaphas ſervants ſtruck him on the lips, and ſtopped his mouth; that he could in no caſe declare the will of God.

William White willing to ſpeak at the ſtake, was ſtrucken on the mouth.

Item, This Deponent ſaith, that the ſaid Margery taught her that ſhe ſhould not go on Pilgrimage, neither to our Lady of Walſingham, nor to any other Saint or place.

Alſo this Deponent ſaith, that the ſaid Margery deſired her that ſhe and Joan her Maid would come ſecretly in the night to her Chamber, and there ſhe ſhould hear her Husband read the Law of Chriſt unto them; which Law was written in a book that her Husband was wont to read to her by night, and that her Husband is well learned in the Chriſtian verity.

Alſo that the ſame Margery had talked with a Woman named Joan Weſt, and that the ſaid Woman is in a good way of Salvation.

Alſo that the ſaid Margery ſaid to this Deponent, Joan, It appeareth by your countenance, that you intend to diſcloſe this that I have ſaid unto you; and this Deponent ſwear that ſhe would never diſcloſe it, without the ſaid Margery gave her occaſion. Then ſaid Margery unto this Deponent; If thou do accuſe me unto the Biſhop, I will do unto thee as I did once unto a certain Frier a Carmelite of Yarmouth, which was the beſt learned Frier in all the Country. Then this Deponent deſired to know what ſhe had done to the Frier. Unto whom Margery anſwered, that ſhe had talked with the ſaid Frier, rebuking him becauſe he did begg, ſaying; that it was no Alms to give him any good thing, except he would leave his habit, and go to the Plough, and ſo he ſhould pleaſe God more, than following the life of ſome of thoſe Friers. Then the Frier required of the ſaid Margery, whether ſhe could teach him or tell him any thing elſe. Then the ſaid Margery (as ſhe affirmed to this Deponent) declared to this Frier the Goſpel in Engliſh, and then the Frier departed from her. After this the ſaid Frier accuſed the ſaid Margery of Hereſie; and ſhe underſtanding that the Frier had accuſed her, accuſed the Frier again, that he would have known her carnally; and becauſe ſhe would not conſent unto him, the Frier had accuſed her of Hereſie. And moreover ſhe ſaid, that her Husband would have killed the Frier therefore; and ſo the Frier for fear held his peace, and went his way for ſhame.

This Margery alſo ſaid, that ſhe had oftentimes been fainedly confeſſed to the Dean of the Fields, becauſe he ſhould think her to be a woman of good life; and therefore he gave the ſaid Margery oftentimes money. Then this Deponent asked her whether ſhe had confeſſed her ſins to a Prieſt or not. And ſhe anſwered, that ſhe had never offended any Prieſt, and therefore ſhe would never confeſs her ſelf to any Prieſt, neither obey him, becauſe they have no power to abſolve any man from their ſins, for that they offend daily more grievouſly than other men; and therefore that men ought to confeſs themſelves only unto God, and to no Prieſt.

Againſt auricular confeſſion.

Item, That the ſaid Margery ſaid to this Deponent, that the people did worſhip Devils which fell from Heaven with Lucifer, which Devils in their Fall to the Earth, entred into the Images which ſtand in the Churches, and have long lurked and dwelled in them; ſo that the people, worſhipping thoſe Images commit Idolatry.

Againſt Image worſhip.

Item, She ſaid more to this Deponent, that holy Bread and holy Water were but trifles of no effect or force, and that the Bells are to be caſt out of the Church, and that they are excommunicated which firſt ordained them.

Moreover, that ſhe ſhould not be burned, although ſhe were convict of Lollardy, for that ſhe had a Charter of ſalvation in her body.

Alſo the ſaid Deponent ſaith, that Agnes Berthem her ſervant, being ſent to the houſe of the ſaid Margery the Saturday after Aſhwedneſday, the ſaid Margery not being within, found a braſs Pot ſtanding over the fire, with a piece of Bacon and Oatmeal ſeething in it, as the ſaid Agnes reported to this Deponent.

There were alſo, beſides this Deponent, divers other ſworn and examined upon the ſaid Margery, as John Grimley and Agnes Berthem, ſervants to William Cliſland, which all together confirmed the former Depoſitions.

Thus much we have thought good to note as concerning Margery Backſter, which we have gatheted out of the old Monuments and Regiſters. But what became of her after this her accuſation, becauſe we find no mention made in the ſaid Regiſters, we are not able to declare.

The ſame year alſo were the like Depoſitions made by one William Wright againſt divers good men, as here followeth.

Firſt, This Deponent ſaith, that William Taylor told John Piry of Ludney, in the houſe of John Bungay of Beghton, in the preſence of John Bungay, Robert Grigges, Wright of Martham, and John Uſher, that all the good men of Martham which were favourers and helpers to that good man William White, are evil troubled now adays, and that the ſaid William White was a good and holy Doctor; and that the beſt Doctor after him was William Everden, which wrought with the ſaid William Taylor of Ludney, by the ſpace of one month, and that the firſt Sunday of the ſame month, the ſaid William Everden did ſit all day upon the table at work, ſaying to the ſaid William Taylor, that he would not go to Church to ſhew himſelf a Scribe or a Phariſee; and the ſecond Sunday he put on gentlemans apparel, and went to Norwich to harken how the Biſhop and his Miniſters uſed the poor Chriſtians there in priſon.

John Piry John Bungay Robert Grigges John Uſher. W. Everden.

Alſo the ſaid William Wright depoſed, that William Taylor of Ludney was one of the Sect, and went to London with Sir Hugh Pie, and had converſation oftentimes with Sir William White, having often conference upon the Lollards Doctrine.

W. Taylor of Ludney

Item, That Aniſe, Wife of Thomas Moon, is of the ſame Sect, and favoured them, and receiveth them often, and alſo the Daughter of Thomas Moon is partly of the ſame Sect, and can read Engliſh.

The Wife and Daughter of Tho. Moon.

Item, That Richard Fletcher of Beckles is a moſt perfect Doctor in that Sect, and can very well and perfectly expound the Holy Scriptures, and hath a Book of the new Law in Engliſh, which was Sir Hugh Pies' firſt.

Richard Fletcher.

Item, That Nicholas Belward, ſon of John Belward, dwelling in the Parith of Southelam, is one of the ſame Sect, and hath a new Teſtament which he bought at London for four Marks and forty pence, and taught the ſaid William Wright and Margery his Wife, and wrought with them continually by the ſpace of one year, and ſtudied diligently upon the ſaid New Teſtament.

Nicholas Belward. A New Teſtament there coſt four marks and forty pence.

Item,

Tho. Gremner. Item, That Thomas Gremner, Turner of Dychingham, is perfect in that Sect and Law.

John Clark. John Clark the Younger of Bergh had the Bedding and Apparel of William Everden in his cuſtody, after the return of William White from Bergh, and is of the ſame Sect.

W. Bate. Item, William Bate, Tailor of Sething and his Wife, and his Son, which can read Engliſh very well, are of the ſame Sect.

W. Skirving. Item, William Skirving of Sething received Joan the Wife of William White into his houſe, being brought thither by William Everden, after their departure from Martham.

W. Osbourn. John Reve. Bawdwin Cooper. John Pert. Item, Will. Osbourn of Sething, John Reve Glover, and Bawdwin Cooper of Beckles, are of the ſame Sect.

Item, John Pert, late ſervant of Thomas Moon, is of the ſame Sect, and can read well, and did read in the preſence of William White, and was the firſt that brought Sir Hugh Pie into the company of the Lollards, which aſſembled oftentimes together at the houſe of the ſaid Thomas Moon, and there conferred upon their doctrine.

Sir Hugh Pie Prieſt. Item, Sir Hugh Pie bequeathed to Alice, ſervant to William White, a new Teſtament, which they then called the Book of the new Law, and was in the cuſtody of Oſwald Godfrey of Colcheſter.

John Perker. John Perker, Mercer of a Village by Ipſwich, is a famous Doctor of that Sect. Alſo he ſaid, that Father Abraham of Colcheſter is a good man.

A prophecy. Item, The ſaid William Wright depoſeth, that it is read in the Propheſies amongſt the Lollards, that the Sect of the Lollards ſhall be in a manner deſtroyed; notwithſtanding at the length the Lollards ſhall prevail and have the victory againſt all their enemies.

Alſo he ſaid, that Tucke knoweth all of that Sect in Suffolk, Norfolk and Eſſex.

Beſides theſe, there were many other the ſame year troubled, whoſe names being before expreſſed in the table of Norfolk-men, here for brevities ſake we omit further to intreat of, paſſing over to the next year following, which was 1430. Ex Regiſt. Norw.

ex Regiſt. Norw.

John Burrel. JOhn Burrel, ſervant to Thomas Moon of Ludney, in the Dioceſs of Norwich, was apprehended and arreſted for Hereſie the 9th day of September, in this year of our Lord 1430, and examined by Mr. William Bernham the Biſhops Commiſſary, upon the Articles before mentioned, and divers others hereafter following objected againſt him.

Imprimis, That the Catholick Church is the ſoul of every good Chriſtian man.

Lent faſt, fiſh-days. Item, That no man is bound to faſt the Lent or other faſting days appointed by the Church, for they were not appointed by God, but ordained by the Prieſts; and that every man may eat fleſh or fiſh upon the ſame days indifferently, according to his own will, and every Friday is a free day to eat both fleſh and fiſh indifferently.

Pilgrimage to the poor. Item, That Pilgrimage ought not to be made but only unto the poor.

Maſſes for the dead unprofitable. Item, That it is not lawful to ſwear, but in caſe of life and death.

Item, That Maſſes and Prayers for the dead are but vain; for the ſouls of the dead are either in Heaven or Hell: and there is none other place of Purgatory but this World. Upon the which Articles he being convicted, was forced to abjure, and ſuffered like penance as the other before had done.

KING Hen. 6.

Tho. More of Ludney.

THomas Moon of Ludney was apprehended and attached for ſuſpition of Hereſie, againſt whom were objected by the Biſhop the Articles before written, but ſpecially this Article, that he had familiarity and communication with divers Hereticks, and had received, comforted, ſupported, and maintained divers of them, as Sir William White, Sir Hugh Pie, Tho. Pet, and Will. Callis Prieſts, with many more; upon the which Articles he being convict before the Biſhop was forced to abjure, and received the like penance, in like manner as before.

Will. White, Hugh Pie, Tho. Pet, Will. Callis, Prieſts perſecuted. Robert Grigger of Martham.

In like manner, Robert Grigges of Martham was brought before the Biſhop the 17th day of February, in the year aforeſaid, for holding and affirming the foreſaid Articles, but ſpecially theſe hereafter following.

Articles.

That the Sacrament of confirmation, miniſtred by the Biſhop did avail nothing to Salvation.

That it was no ſin to withſtand the Ordinances of the Church of Rome.

That holy Bread and holy Water were but trifles, and that the bread and water were the worſe for the conjurations and characters which the Prieſts made over them.

Upon which Articles he being convict, was forced to abjure, and received Penance in manner and form as the other had done before him.

John Finch of Colcheſter. The like alſo (albeit ſomewhat more ſharp) happened unto John Finch of Colcheſter, the 20 day of September, who albeit he was of the Dioceſs of London, being ſuſpect of Hereſie, was attached in Ipſwich in the Dioceſs of Norwich, and brought before the Biſhop there, before whom he being convict of the like Articles, as all the other before him, was enjoyned Penance, three diſciplinings in ſolemn proceſſion about the Cathedral Church of Norwich, three ſeveral Sundays, and three diſciplinings about the Market-place of Norwich three princpal Market-days, his head and neck and feet being bare, and his body covered only with a ſhort ſhirt or veſture, having in his hand a Taper of wax of a pound weight, which, the next Sunday after his penance, he ſhould offer to the Trinity; and that for the ſpace of three years after, every Aſhwedneſday and Maunday-Thurſday, he ſhould appear in the Cathedral Church at Norwich, before the Biſhop or his Vicegerent, to do open penance amongſt the other Penitentiaries for his offences.

Popiſh penance.

There were, beſides theſe men which we have here rehearſed, divers and many other, who, both for the concordance of the matter, and alſo for that their Articles and puniſhments were all one, we have thought good at this time to paſs over, eſpecially forſomuch as their names be before recited in the Catalogue.

Richard Hoveden Martyr.

ABout the ſame time, even the ſame year 1430, ſhortly after the ſolemn Coronation of King Henry the ſixth, a certain man named Richard Hoveden, a Wooll-winder, and Citizen of London, received alſo the Crown of Martyrdom. Which man when he could by no perſwaſions be withdrawn or plucked back from the opinions of Wickliff, he was by the Rulers of the Church condemned for Hereſie: and as Fabian writeth, burned hard by the Tower of London.

Nicolas Canon of Eye.

Nicolas Canon of Eye. Ann. 1431.

NOW to proceed in our ſtory of Norfolk and Suffolk, in following the order of years, we find that in the year of our Lord 1431, one Nicolas Canon of Eye was brought before the Biſhop of Norwich for ſuſpition of Herelie, with certain witneſſes ſworn to depoſe againſt him touching his manners and converſation, which witneſſes appointing one William Chriſtopher to ſpeak in the name of them all, he depoſed in manner and form following.

Firſt, that on Eaſter-day when all the Pariſhioners went about the Church of Eye ſolemnly in Proceſſion, as the manner was, the ſaid Nicolas Canon, as it were mocking and deriding the other Pariſhioners, went about the Church the contrary way, and met the Proceſſion.

Depoſitions

This Article he confeſſed, and affirmed that he thought he did well in ſo doing.

Item, The ſaid Nicolas asked of Maſter John Colman of Eye this queſtion, Maſter Colman, what think you of the Sacrament of the Altar? To whom the ſaid Colman anſwered, Nicolas, I think that the Sacrament of the Altar is very God and very man, the very fleſh and very blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt under the form of Bread and Wine. Unto whom Nicolas in deriſion ſaid, Truly, if the Sacrament of the Altar be very God and very man, and the very Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, then may very God and very man be put in a ſmall room; as when it is in the Prieſts mouth, that receiveth it at Maſs. And why may not we ſimple men as well eat fleſh upon Fridays, and all other prohibited days, as the Prieſt to eat the fleſh, and drink the blood of our Lord every day indifferently? The which Article the ſaid Nicolas denied that he ſpake unto Maſter Colman, but unto a Monk of Hockeſney, and furthermore he thought he had ſpoken well in that behalf.

If the Sacrament be very fleſh, then the Prieſts eat fleſh on Friday.

Item, That on Corpus Chriſti day at the Elevation of his Maſs, when all the Pariſhioners and other ſtrangers kneeled down, holding up their hands, and doing reverence unto the Sacrament, the ſaid Nicolas went behind a Pillar of the Church, and turning his face from the High Altar, mocked them that did reverence unto the Sacrament.

This Article he alſo acknowledging affirmed that he believed himſelf to do well in ſo doing.

Item, When his Mother would have the ſaid Nicolas to lift up his right hand, and to croſs himſelf from the craſts and aſſaults of the Devil, forſomuch as he deferred the doing thereof, his Mother took up his right hand and croſſed him, ſaying, In nomine patris, filii, & ſpiritus ſancti. Amen. Which ſo ended, the ſaid Nicolas immediately deriding his Mothers bleſſing, took up his right hand of his own accord, and bleſſed him otherwiſe, as his adverſaries report of him. This Article the ſaid Nicolas acknowledged to be true.

Item, That upon Alhallows-day, in the time of Elevation of High Maſs, when as many of the Pariſhioners of Eye lighted many Torches, and carried them up to the High Altar, kneeling down there in reverence and honour of the Sacrament, the ſaid Nicolas carrying a Torch went up hard to the High Altar, and ſtanding behind the Prieſts back ſaying Maſs, at the time of the Elevation he ſtood upright upon his feet, turning his back to the Prieſt, and his face toward the people, and would do no reverence unto the Sacrament. This Article he acknowledged, affirming that he thought he had done well in that behalf. All which Articles the Biſhops Commiſſary cauſed to be copied out word for word, and to be ſent unto Maſter William Worſted, Prior of the Cathedral Church of Norwich, and to other Doctors of Divinity of the Order of Begging-Friers, that they might deliberate upon them, and ſhew their minds between that and Thurſday next following. Upon which Thurſday, being the laſt of November the year aboveſaid, the ſaid Nicolas was again examined before Maſter Barnam and divers other, upon two other Articles which he had confeſſed unto J. Excetor Notary, and Thomas Geruſten Bachelor of Divinity, and others. Whereof the firſt Article was this, That the ſaid Nicolas Canon being of perfect mind and remembrance, confeſſed that he doubted whether in the Sacrament of the Altar were the very Body of Chriſt or no. This Article he confeſſed before the Commiſſary to be true.

Nicolas Canon turned his back to the Sacrament.

Another examination of Nicolas Canon.

Item, That he being of perfect mind and remembrance, believed that a man ought not to confeſs his ſins to a Prieſt. This Article he alſo confeſſed that he doubted upon.

Articles objected.

Now remaineth to declare what theſe Doctors aforeſaid concluded upon the Articles; whoſe anſwer unto the ſame was this.

Firſt of all, as touching the firſt Article, they ſaid that the Article in the ſame terms as it was propounded, is not ſimply an Hereſie, but an error.

Item, As touching the ſecond Article, the Doctors agree as in the firſt.

The judgment of the Prior and Doctors upon his Articles.

Item, As touching the third Article, they affirm that it is an Hereſie.

Unto the fourth Article, they anſwered as unto the firſt and ſecond.

Item, The Doctors affirm the fifth Article to be an Hereſie.

An hereſie to doubt whether the Sacrament be the perfect Body of Chriſt, or no.

Item, As touching the ſixth Article, the Doctors conclude, that if the ſaid Nicolas, being of perfect mind and remembrance, did doubt whether the Sacrament of the Altar were the very perfect Body of Chriſt or no, then the Article is ſimply an Hereſie.

Nic. Cannon declared an Heretick.

Whereupon the ſaid Commiſſary declared and pronounced the ſaid Nicolas upon the determination of the ſaid Doctors, to be an Heretick, and thereupon forced the ſaid Nicolas to abjure all the ſaid Articles. That done he enjoyned the ſaid Nicolas penance for his offences, three Diſciplinings about the Cloiſter of the Cathedral Church of Norwich, before a ſolemn Proceſſion, bare headed and bare foot, carrying a Taper of half a pound in his hand, going after the manner aforeſaid, like a meer Penitentiary: the which his penance the Judg commanded ſhould be reſpited until the coming of the Biſhop into his Dioceſs, and that in the mean time he ſhould be kept in priſon, to the end that he ſhould not infect the flock with his venom and poyſon of Errors and Hereſies.

Penance enjoyned to Nic. Canon.

Thus have we briefly diſcourſed unto you the great trouble and afflictions which happened in Norfolk and Suffolk by the ſpace of thoſe four years before mentioned, having drawn out briefly for every year, certain notable examples ſufficient for the declaration of all the reſt, forſomuch as their opinions being nothing different their penance and punithment did alſo nothing differ, otherwiſe than by thoſe particular examples may be plainly ſeen,

Thomas Bagley Prieſt.

Thomas Bagley Prieſt, Martyr.

AND now to proceed as we have begun with our former Stories, generally we find in Fabians Chronicles, that in the ſame year of our Lord 1431. Thomas Bagley a Prieſt, Vicar of Monenden beſide Malden, being a valiant Diſciple, and adherent of Wickliff, was condemned by the Biſhops of Hereſie at London, about the middeſt of Lent, and was degraded and burned in Smithfield.

Paul Craw a Bohemian.

Paul Craw, Martyr.

THE ſame year alſo was Paul Craw a Bohemian taken at Saint Andrews by the Biſhop Henry, and delivered over to the Secular power to be burnt for holding contrary opinions unto the Church of Rome touching the Sacrament of the Lords-Supper, the worſhipping of Saints, Auricular confeſſion, with other of Wickliffs opinions.

The Story of Thomas Rhedon, a French man, and a Carmelite Frier, burnt in Italy for the profeſſion of Chriſt.

Thomas Rhedonenſis Martyr. Ex Antonino 3. part. Hiſt fol. 165

WE have declared before how this cruel ſtorm of perſecution which firſt began with us in England after it had long raged here againſt many good and godly men, brake out and paſſed into Boheme, and after within a ſhort time, the fire of this perſecution increaſing by little and little, invaded Scotland, and from thence now with greater force and violence this furious devouring flame hath entred Italy, and ſuffereth not any part of the world to be free from the murther and ſlaughter of moſt good and godly men. It happened about this time that one Thomas Rhedon, a Frier of that Sect, which taketh his name of the Mount Carmelus, by chance came with the Venetian Ambaſſadors into Italy. This man although he was of that ſort and Sect, which inſtead of Chriſtians are called Carmelites, yet was he of a far other Religion, and underſtood the Word of God, judging that God ought not to be worſhipped neither in that Mount, nor at Jeruſalem only, but in ſpirit and truth. This man being a true

Thomas Rhedonenſis cometh into Italy.

Carmelite, and ſavouring with his whole heart that new ſweet Muſte of Jeſus Chriſt, with earneſt ſtudy and deſire ſeeking after a Chriſtian integrity of life, prepared himſelf firſt to go into Italy, truſting that he ſhould find there, or elſe in no place, ſome by whoſe good life and living he might be edified and inſtructed. For where ought more abundance of vertue and good living to be, than in that place which is counted to be the fort and fountain of all Religion? And how could it otherwiſe be, but that whereas ſo great holineſs is profeſſed, whereupon all mens eyes are bent as upon a Stage, whereas Saint Peters ſeat is, and is thought to be the Ruler and Governour of all the Church, all things ſhould flouriſh and abound worthy of ſo great expectation in that place? This holy man having theſe things before his eyes, and conſidering the ſame with himſelf, forſook his own Country and City, and went unto Rome, conceiving a firm and ſure hope that by the example of ſo many notable and worthy men, he ſhould greatly profit in godlineſs and learning: but the ſucceſs of the matter did utterly fruſtrate his hope, for all things were clean contrary. Whatſoever he ſaw was nothing elſe but meer diſſimulation and hypocriſie. Inſtead of gold he found nothing but coals; and to ſay the truth he found nothing elſe there but gold and ſilver. Inſtead of heavenly gifts there reigned amongſt them the pomp and pride of the world: In place of godlineſs, riot: Inſtead of learning and ſtudy, ſlothfulneſs and ſuperſtition. Tyranny and haughtineſs of mind had poſſeſſed the place of Apoſtolick ſimplicity: that now there remained no more any place or liberty for a man to learn that which he knew not, or to teach that which he perfectly underſtood. Finally, all things were turned arſieverſie, all things happened unto him contrary to his expectation whereſoever he went. But nothing ſo much offended this good mans mind, as the intolerable ambition and pompous pride in them, whom example of humility ſhould eſpecially commend and praiſe to the whole world. And albeit that he ſaw here nothing which did accord and agree with the rule of the Apoſtles, yet theſe things did ſo much paſs all meaſure and patience, that he could by no means refrain his tongue in ſo great abuſe and corruption of the Church, ſeeing ſuch ambitious pride in their buildings, apparel, in their Palaces, in their dainty fare, in their great trains of ſervants, in their horſe and armour, and finally in all things pertaining unto them. Which things how much they did vary from the preſcript rule of the Goſpel, ſo much the more was this good man forced to ſpeak; albeit he did well underſtand how little he ſhould prevail by ſpeaking: for if admonition would profit any thing at all, the Books of Wickliff and divers other were not wanting. The famous teſtimonies of John Huss, and of Hierome of Prague, and their blood ſhed for the ſame, was yet preſent before their eyes: at whoſe moſt effectual exhortations, they were ſo little corrected and amended, that they ſeemed twice more cruel than they were before. Yet all this could not fear this good man, but that in ſo neceſſary and wholeſome an office he would ſpend his life if need ſhould be. So by this means he which came to be a ſcholar unto others, was now forced to be their teacher. And he which determined to follow other mens lives and manners, had now contrariwiſe ſet before them his life to be marked and followed. For he lived ſo amongſt them, that his life might be a rule unto them all, and ſo taught, as he might alſo be their Schoolmaſter. For even as Paul had foreſhewed unto ſuch as deſired to live godly in Chriſt, that they ſhould ſuffer perſecution, ſuch like reward happened unto this man. He gave unto them the fruit of Godlineſs, which they ſhould follow: they again ſet upon his head the diadem of Martyrdom. He ſhewed them the way to ſalvation; and they for the benefit of life rewarded him death: and whereas no rewards had been worthy for his great labours and travels, they with moſt extream ignominy perſecuted him even unto the fire. For when as by continual Preachings he had gotten great envy and hatred, the Rulers began to conſult together by what means they might circumvent this mans life. Here they had recourſe to their accuſtomed remedies: for it was a peculiar and continual cuſtom amongſt the Prelates of the Church, that if any man did diſpleaſe them, or that his talk be not according to their mind, or by any means hurtful, or a hindrance to their lucre and gain, by and by they frame out Articles of ſome Hereſie, which they charge charge him withal. And like as every living thing hath his peculiar and proper weapon to defend himself from harm, as nature hath armed the Boar with his Tusks, the Hedghog with his Prickles, the Lion is feared for his Claws, the Dog for his biting, the Bull fighteth with his Horns, neither doth he use lack his Hoofs to strike withal: even so this is the only armour of the Bishops, to strangle a man with Heresie, if he once go about to mutter against their will and ambition; which thing may be easily perceived and seen in this most holy man, beside a great number of other. Who when as now he began to wax grievous unto them, and could no longer be suffered; what did they? straightways flie unto their old policies, and as they had done with Hus, and Jerome of Prague, even so went they about to practise against this man. They overwhelm him with suspition, they seek to intangle him with questions, they examin him in judgment, they compile Articles against him, and lay Heresie unto his charge, they condemn him as an Heretick, and being so condemned, they destroy and kill him. This was their godliness: this was the peaceable Order of those Carmelites. Whose Religion was to wear no sword nor shield, notwithstanding they did bear in their hearts malice, rancor, vengeance, poyson, craft, and deceit, sharper than any sword. With how great care and policy is it provided by Law, that none of these Clergy-men should fight with sword in the streets? when as in judgment and accusations (whereas it is not lawful for a man to oppress his Brother) there is no murtherer which hath more ready vengeance, or that doth more vilely esteem his Brothers soul than they. They shed no blood themselves, they strike not, nor kill, but they deliver them over unto others to be slain. What difference is there I pray you, but that they are the authors, and the other are but the Ministers of the cruel fact? they kill no man as murtherers do. How then? Although not after the same sort, yet they do it by another mean.

Popery armed with policy, defended with tyranny.

His Articles

The Articles which they falsly gathered against this man, are affirmed by some to be these:

That the Church lacketh reformation, and that it shall be punished and reformed.

That Infidels, Jews, Turks, and Moors shall be converted unto Christ in the later days.

That abominations are used at Rome.

That the unjust Excommunication of the Pope is not to be feared: and those which do not observe the same do not sin or offend.

Ex Antonin. 3 part. Hist. fol. 165.

But yet there lacked a Minister for these Articles, albeit he could not long be wanting at Rome, where all things are to be sold, even mens souls. For this office and ministry there was no man thought more meet than William of Rowne, Cardinal of Saint Martins in the Mount, Vice-chancellor of the Court of Rome. Eugenius at that time was Pope, who had a little before succeeded Pope Martin above mentioned. Before the which Eugenius this godly Rhedonensis the Frenchman was brought, and from thence sent unto prison. And again after his imprisonment, and divers and sundry grievous torments, he was brought before the Judges. The Wolf sat in judgment, the Lamb was accused. Why? because he had troubled the spring: But here need not many words. This good Thomas not being able to resist the malice of these mighty Potentates, had offended enough, and was easily convict and condemned to be burned, but in such sort, as first of all he should be deprived of all such degrees as he had taken of Priesthood. For it is counted an unlawful thing, that a Priest should be punished with prophane punishment, when as notwithstanding it is lawful enough for Priests to put any Lay-man to death, be he never so guiltless.

Vit. Cardinalit. Rhotomagensis his persecutor.

Thomas Rhedonensis brought before Pope Eugenius.

How religiously and earnestly do they foresee that the Majesty of the Priestly dignity should not in any case be hurt? But how little care have they that their consciences be not hurt with false judgments, and oppressing the guiltless? Wherefore before that he should come unto punishment, this good man must be degraded. The order and manner of this Popish degrading is partly before touched in the story of William Taylor.

Thomas degraded.

After that it had pleased the Bishops to degrade this man from the degrees wherewith before they had consecrated him, and thought not that sufficient, by and by after they deprived him of his life also, and burned him four years after that he came to Rome. In the year of our Lord, 1436.

Thomas Rhedonensis a Frenchman, burned at Rome.

And thus through the cruelty of these most tyrannous Prelates, this blessed Martyr died. Albeit it is not to be thought that he died, but made a loss of this body for a greater gain of salvation before the just judgment of God. Neither is it to be doubted but that he liveth eternally under the Altar with them whose blood the Lord will revenge, peradventure too soon for some of them, whom the earth hath here so long holden unpunished.

As this Thomas aforesaid suffered at Rome, so were divers others in other places about Germany executed neer about the same time, after the burning of John Hus, and Henry Grundfelder Priest, of Ratisbone, Ann. 1420, also Henry Radtgeber Priest, in the same City, Ann. 1423. John Draendorfe of Noble birth, and a Priest, was burned at Wormes, Anno 1424. Peter Thoraw at Spire, Anno 1426. Matthew Hager also suffered at Berlin in Germany, not long after. Ex Bălei Centur. sept.

Henry Grundfelder Priest, Henry Radtgeber Priest, John Draendorfe Priest, Peter Thoraw, Matth. Hager, Martyrs.

After the death of Pope Martin, who reigned fourteen years, succeeded Eugenius the Fourth of that name, about the year of our Lord 1431. Of whom Antonius thus writeth, that he was much given to wars, as his conflicts and fighting with the Romans may declare: also the Battels between the Venetians and the Florentines.

Pope Eugenius the Fourth.

This Pope began first to celebrate the Council of Basil, which Council Martin his Predecessor had before intended according to the institution of the Council of Constance. Notwithstanding the said Eugenius perceiving afterward this Council of Basil not to favour him and his doings, and fearing some detriment to come to him by the same, afterward laboured by all subtil practise to dissolve and interrupt the said Council, and from Basil to translate it first to Ferraria, then to Florentia, more near to his own See of Rome. Concerning the which Council of Basil, forsomuch as we have begun here to make mention, it shall be no great digression out of the way to discourse something thereof (the Lord so permitting) more at large, so much as for the most principal matters thereof shall seem sufficient or necessary to be known.

---

Here followeth the order and manner of the Council of Basil, touching the principal matters concluded therein, briefly collected and abridged here in this present Book; the rest whereof we have referred unto our former Edition, wherein the full discourse of the whole Disputation is to be seen more at large for such as have list and leisure to see more thereof.

The Council of Basil. Ex Æneâ Sylvio. Ex Cochleo in Hist. Hus. sit. Et ex paralipom. Abbat. Ursperg.

IN the Thirty ninth Session of the Council of Constance, (as is before mentioned) it was decreed and provided concerning the order and times of such General Councils as should hereafter follow: The first that should next ensue, to be kept the fifth year after the said Council of Constance: The second to be holden the 7th year after that, and so orderly all other to follow successively from ten year to ten year. Wherefore according to this Decree, followed a General Council five years after the Council of Constance, celebrate and holden at Sene, under Pope Martin, Anno 1424, but it soon broke up. After the which Council the term of seven years being expired, another Council was holden at Basil, in the year of our Lord 1431. The which Council is noted to have been the most troublesome, and to have endured longer than any other Council beforetime celebrate and holden in the Church. This Council continued almost the space of seventeen years: wherein it was concluded, as before in the Council of Constance, that the General Councils were above the Pope, and both of these two Councils did attribute the chief authority in decreeing and determining unto the General Council; which is the cause that the contrary part doth derogate so much from the authority of this present Council.

Whereas Pope Martin the Fifth had appointed Julian, Cardinal and Deacon of Saint Angel, his Legate, to celebrate and hold a General Council at Basil, for the reformation of the Church, and rooting out of Heresies, within ſhort ſpace after Pope Martin died, in whoſe ſeat Eugenius the Fourth ſucceeded, who confirmed unto the ſaid Cardinal Julian the ſame authority which his Predeceſſor before had given him. Unto this Council of Baſil being begun, came the Emperor Sigiſmund, who during his life time, with his preſence and authority, did protect and defend the ſaid Synod. After the Emperors death, Pope Eugenius altering his former mind and purpoſe, would tranſport the Council unto Bononie, and thereby hindred the ſucceſs of the Council of Baſil. And firſt he held a contrary Council at Ferraria, and afterward at Florence. For after the death of the Emperor Sigiſmund, there were no Princes nor Noblemen that had any care or regard of the Council. Eugenius the Pope pretended cauſes, as touching the Greeks which ſhould come unto the Council, and the uniting of the Church unto the Weſt Church, the which Greeks would in no wiſe paſs the Alpes; alſo as touching his own incommodity, that he could not come unto Baſil, being ſo long a journey, and that all his men might have eaſie acceſs unto Bononia, and that amongſt the Germans (which in their own Country are ſo intractable) nothing can be attempted for their reformation: whereupon he cited Cardinal Julian, and the Fathers of the Council unto Bononia, under great penalty. They again cited the Pope that either he ſhould come himſelf unto the Council, or ſend Ambaſſadors under the like penalty. For this cauſe the Ambaſſadors of Albert King of the Romans, and of the other Princes of Germany, aſſembled together firſt at Norenberge; and when as they could determine nothing there, they aſſembled again at Franckford to appeaſe the diſſenſion between the Council and the Pope: for it was thought that the Electors of the Empire might beſt aſſemble and meet in that place, in the mean time the Emperors Ambaſſadors, and the Ambaſſadors of the Electors went into Baſil, and having conference with the Ambaſſadors of the other Princes which were there, they did earneſtly exhort the Fathers of the Council, that they would embrace and receive the unity which they would offer. The requeſt of the Princes was, that the Fathers would tranſport the Council, and go unto another place; the which only thing Pope Eugenius ſeemed always to ſeek and deſire, that thereby he might either divide the Fathers of the Council, or take away their liberty.

The death of Pope Martin. Pope Eugenius the Fourth.

Pope Eugenius ſeeketh to diſſolve the Council of Baſil.

Diſſention beween the Council of Baſil, and Pope Eugenius.

The Prelates of the Council refuſed the Popes requeſt.

Notwithſtanding this ſacred Synod thought good neither to deny the Princes requeſt, nor to grant that which Pope Eugenius required. During this doubt, the Emperors Ambaſſadors, the Biſhops of Patavia and Auguſta, (being much required and ſtirred thereunto) appointed a noble and valiant Baron called Conrade Weinſperge, by the Kings commandment to be Protector and defender of the Council, and the Fathers. Whereby as the enemies perceived the Emperors mind to be alienate from the Pope, ſo the Fathers of the Council underſtood his good will towards them, forſomuch as he would not have ſent them a Protector, if he had not judged it a lawful Council; neither again would he have judged it a Council in Baſil, if he had given credit to Pope Eugenius. But by means of a great Peſtilence which began to grow, the aſſembly that ſhould have been holden at Frankford was tranſported unto Mentz. The Ambaſſadors of the Princes alſo thought good to go thither, if they might find any means of unity, whereby they might unite and knit the Pope again unto the Council.

The Princes aſſembled at Mentz, to make unity between the Council and the Pope.

The aſſembly was very famous, for there were preſent the Archbiſhops of Mentz, Collen, and Trevers, Electors of the Sacred Empire, and all the Ambaſſadors of the other Electors. Notwithſtanding, the Archbiſhop of Collen was the chief favourer of the Council in this aſſembly, who with all his labour and diligence went about to bring the matter unto a good end. Rabanus the Archbiſhop of Trevers ſhewed himſelf ſomewhat more rough. The ſacred Synod alſo thought good to ſend thither their Ambaſſadors, and appointed out the Patriarch of Aquileia, the Biſhop of Vicene, and the Biſhop of Argon: Divines, John Segovius, and Thomas de Corcellis, with divers others. There was no man there preſent which would name himſelf the Ambaſſador of Eugenius: Albeit there were many of his favourers and friends come thither, both from the Council, and alſo out of Florence, the which albeit they had ſworn to the contrary, yet favoured they more Eugenius than the Council. But the chief Hercules of all the Eugenians was Nicolas Cuſanus, a man ſingularly well learned, and of great experience. After divers conſultations had, the Electors of the Empire, and the Ambaſſadors of the other Princes of Germany, thought good to give out commandment throughout their whole Nation and Country, that the Decrees of the Council of Baſil ſhould be received and obſerved.

Whileſt theſe things were thus debated at Mentz, there ſprang a certain very doubtful Queſtion amongſt the Divines which remained at Baſil, whether Eugenius might be called an Heretick, which had ſo rebelliouſly contemned the commandments of the Church. Hereupon they gathered themſelves together, diſputing long amongſt themſelves, ſome affirming, and otherſome holding the Negative part. Upon this their diſputation there aroſe three ſeveral opinions, ſome affirming that he was an Heretick, otherſome, not only an Heretick, but alſo a relapſe: The third ſort would neither grant him to be an Heretick nor a relapſe. Amongſt theſe Divines, the chief and principal both in learning and authority, was the Biſhop of Ebrun, Ambaſſador of the King of Caſtile, and a certain Scotiſh Abbot: which as two moſt valiant Champions, ſubdued all their enemies, ſo that all the reſt did either conſent unto their arguments, or gave place unto them, and ſo their determination took place, and Eugenius was pronounced both an Heretick and relapſe. Eight Concluſions were there determined and allowed amongſt the Divines, which they called verities, the copy whereof they did divulgate throughout all Chriſtendom.

Three opinions touching the Pope.

The Ambaſſadours return from Mentz.

When the Ambaſſadors of the Council were returned from Mentz, and that certain report was made of the allowing of their Decrees, the Fathers of the Council thought good to diſcuſs the Concluſions of the Divines more at large. Whereupon by the commandment of the Deputies all the Maſters, and Doctors, and Clergy were called together, with all the reſidue of the Prelates, into the Chapter-houſe of the great Church, there openly to diſpute and diſcuſs Eugenius hereſie. The which thing ſo grieved the Biſhop of Millain, fearing leſt this diſputation would work the deprivation of Eugenius, the which, as he ſaid, he had always letted for fear of a Schiſm. Wherefore he ceaſed not by all manner of ways to labour, to ſtop and trouble the matter, exhorting them that were abſent by his Letters, and encouraging thoſe that were preſent by his words, to the defence of Eugenius. But at the laſt there was a great aſſembly in the Chapter-houſe, ſome coming thither to diſpute, and otherſome to hear. This diſputation continued ſix days, both forenoon and afternoon, amongſt whom Cardinal Lodovicus, Archbiſhop Arelatenſis was appointed as Judg and Arbiter of the whole diſputation; who beſides many other notable vertues, was both valiant and conſtant. Nicholas Amici which was alſo a Protector of the Faith, a famous man amongſt the Divines of Paris, demanded of every man what their opinion was. John Deinleſiſt, publick Notary, wrote every mans ſentence and judgment. The Concluſions of the Divines, which were the ground and foundation of their diſputation, were theſe here following.

The Popes hereſie diſcuſſed.

The Biſhop of Millain taketh Eugenius part for fear of Schiſm.

Concluſions of the Diſputation.

1. It is a verity of the Catholick Faith, that the Sacred General Council hath power over the Pope, or any other Prelate.

2. The Pope cannot by his own authority, either diſſolve, tranſport, or prorogue the General Council being lawfully congregate, without the whole conſent of the Council: and this is of like verity.

3. He which doth obſtinately reſiſt theſe verities, is to be counted an Heretick.

4. Pope Eugenius the Fourth hath reſiſted theſe verities, whereas at the firſt, by the fulneſs of his Apoſtolick power, he attempted to diſſolve or to tranſport the Council of Baſil.

5. Eugenius being admoniſhed by the Sacred Council, did recant the errors repugnant to theſe verities.

6. The diſſolution or tranſlation of the Council, attempted the ſecond time by Eugenius, is againſt the aforeſaid verities, and containeth an inexcuſable error touching the Faith.

7. Eugenius, in going about to diſſolve and tranſport the Council again, is fallen into his before revoked errors.

8. Eugenius

{KING Hen.6.}

8. Eugenius being warned by the Synod that he ſhould revoke the diſſolution of tranſlation the ſecond time attempted, after that his contumacy was declared, perſevering in his rebellion, and erecting a Council at Ferraria, ſhewed himſelf thereby obſtinate.

These were the Concluſions which were read in the Chapter-houſe before the Fathers of the Council. Upon the which when they were deſired to ſpeak their minds, they all in a manner confirmed and allowed them. Notwithſtanding, Panormitane Archbiſhop diſputed much againſt them. Likewiſe did the Biſhop of Burgen, the King of Arragons Almoner. Yet did they not gain-ſay the three firſt Concluſions, but only thoſe wherein Pope Eugenius was touched. This Panormitane, as he was ſubtil, ſo did he ſubtilly diſpute againſt the laſt Concluſions, endeavouring himſelf to declare that Eugenius was not relapſed, and had great contention with the Biſhop of Argens, John Segovius, and Francis de Fuxe, Divines. He divided the Articles of the Faith into three ſorts: ſtraitly, as in the Creed: largely, as in the Declarations made by the Church: moſt largely of all, as in thoſe things which riſe of the premiſſes: affirming that Eugenius did by no means violate his faith in his firſt diſſolution that he made, becauſe it is not contained in the Creed, neither yet in the determinations of the Church, that the Pope cannot diſſolve the Councils; and that it ſeemeth not unto him to riſe of the determinations before made, but rather of the Decrees of the Council of Conſtance. And further, that this as a caſe omitted is reſerved for the Pope to be diſcuſſed, forſomuch as in the Chapter beginning Frequens, it appeareth that the place where the Council ſhould be kept ought to be choſen by the Pope, the Council allowing the ſame, and nothing is thereof at all ſpoken. And if peradventure Eugenius had offended in the firſt diſſolution, notwithſtanding he ought to be holden excuſed, becauſe he did it by the Council of the Cardinals, repreſenting the Church of Rome; whoſe authority he ſaid to be ſuch, that the judgment thereof ſhould be preferred before all the world. Neither had there been any ſacred Council found to have proceeded againſt Eugenius as an Heretick; and that is an evident ſign that the Council hath not thought him to have warved from the faith, neither to have any occaſion that he ſhould be called Heretick for his errors revoked; and that he himſelf hath read the whole Text, that the Pope did not revoke the diſſolution as contrary unto the faith, but as breeding offence: Alſo that the laſt diſſolution hath no ſuch cauſe in it, forſomuch as likewiſe he had done it by the Council of the Cardinals, and for the uniting of the Greeks, that he might not be compelled in a criminal cauſe to anſwer by his Procurator, when as he being letted by ſickneſs, could not come perſonally, ſcil. forаſmuch as in the firſt diſſolution Eugenius hath fallen into no error of faith, he cannot be perſwaded that he can be called a relapſe, forſomuch as he neither in the firſt, neither yet in the ſecond diſſolution did violate his faith.

This Oration of Panormitane was more praiſed than allowed of men. Notwithſtanding this effect it wrought, that afterward this word relapſe was taken out of the Concluſions, and inſtead thereof this word prolapſe put in. Neither durſt Panormitane himſelf altogether excuſe Eugenius of Hereſie, but defended more the firſt diſſolution, than the ſecond, yet departed he not without anſwer, for John Segovius an expert Divine, riſing up, anſwered him reverently, as was comely for ſuch a Prelate. He ſaid, He granted that which Panormitane had ſpoken touching the diviſion of the Articles of the Faith into three points, becauſe it made for this purpoſe. For if thoſe things are to be holden for Articles of Faith, ſaid he, which may be gathered of the determinations of the Church, it were manifeſt that the Concluſions whereupon we now contend, redound and come of the determinations of the Church, that is to ſay, of the Council of Conſtance; for if therein the Pope be made ſubject unto the General Council, who is it that will ſay that the Pope hath power over the Council which is above him; or that Eugenius ought to remain Pope, becauſe he could not diſſolve the Council which is above him, without the conſent thereof? The which article undoubtedly he hath violate and broken. And if any man will ſay that in the firſt diſſolution this article was not violate, becauſe there was no declaration made thereof, let him which ſo thinketh thus, underſtand, That the Biſhop of Rome ought not only to know the plain and manifeſt, but alſo the ſecret and hidden things of the Faith; for he being the Vicar of Chriſt, and the Head of all other, ought to inſtruct and teach all men. But if ſo be he will not, then he ſhall be convicted for being dead, becauſe he continued long in the diſſolution after the declaration of the Council, neither did conſent unto the determination of the Church; and therefore if peradventure he did not err in the Faith in diſſolving of the Council, yet did he err in perſevering in the ſame, as it manifeſtly appeareth by the ſaying of Clement oftentimes alledged by Panormitane, wherein it is ſaid, That he which liveth rebelliouſly, and neglecteth to do good, is rather a member of the Devil than of Chriſt, and rather an Infidel than a true believer; ſo that Eugenius by diſobeying the Church may worthily be called an Infidel. Neither is it true that the Pope hath not offended in the Faith; forſomuch as well in that anſwer which beginneth Cogitanti, as alſo in the anſwer which beginneth Sperant, made unto the Popes Ambaſſadors, theſe words are manifeſt; this Article concerning Faith, and we had rather die than through cowardlineſs to give place. By the which ſaying it is evident the Synod to have ſufficiently admoniſhed the Pope that he did againſt the Faith, and therefore it ſeemed that afterward, when as Eugenius revoked the diſſolution, he alſo revoked the error of faith contained in the ſame. There are alſo divers offences ſprung and riſen through the error of faith: for ſome ſay that the Pope is under the Council, other-ſome deny it, and this diverſity of Doctrine bringeth offence. Alſo it is expreſſly againſt the authority of the Council, that the Pope did revoke the aſſertions made in their name.

And albeit in ſuch revocations the ſtile and order of judgments is not obſerved, notwithſtanding it doth ſuffice in ſuch caſe when as the Council doth proceed againſt the Pope, in which caſe only the truth is to be obſerved, neither is the Council ſubject unto any poſitive Law, that it ought to obſerve any terms or judicial orders. Alſo he ſaid that he utterly contemned that ſingular Gloſs which did prefer the Pope before all the world, ſo that it might well be called ſingular, which decreed ſo fooliſh and fond things, and unworthy to be followed of any man; and that he did much marvel at Panormitane, and other Doctors of thoſe days, which whileſt they went about to extoll the authority of the Gloſſes, do abaſe the ſame by adding a ſingularity thereto; for that Gloſs is ſingular which is alone. But who would not more eſteem a Gloſs conſtantly written and agreeable in all places, than that which in any one place teacheth any thing which may ſeem to be an error; and that as touching the verity and truth? Saint Hierome a grave and ancient Doctor, is contrary to this Gloſs, who doubteth nothing at all, but that the world, as touching authority, is above the City it ſelf, that is to ſay, Rome.

Segovius could ſcarcely finiſh this his Oration without interruption; for Panormitane oftentimes interrupting him, went about to confute now this, and now that reaſon. Whereupon the Biſhop of Argen riſing up, a man not only eloquent, but alſo of a ſtout courage, troubled Panormitane in his reaſons and arguments, and put him from his purpoſe; yet they proceeded ſo far, that they paſſed the manner of diſputation, and did not abſtain from opprobrious taunts.

When the Biſhop of Argen chanced to ſay that the Biſhop of Rome ought to be the Miniſter of the Church, Panormitane could not ſuffer that: inſomuch that he ſo forgot himſelf that day, and his knowledg (which otherwiſe was great) did ſo fail him, that he was not aſhamed to ſay and affirm, that the Pope was Lord over the Church. Whom Segovius anſwered, Mark (ſaith he) O Panormitane, what thou ſayeſt; for this is the moſt honourable title of the Biſhop of Rome, wherein he calleth himſelf the Servant of the Servants of God. Which is gathered upon this point, when as Chriſt ſaid unto his Diſciples, when they demanded of him which of them was the greateſt, you know he anſwered them, The Princes of the people have rule and dominion over them, but amongſt you it is not ſo, &c. Wherein he doth utterly prohibit Lordſhip and Dominion; and Peter which was the firſt Vicar of Chriſt ſaid, Feed the flock of Chriſt which is committed

Articles of faith divided into three ſorts.

Panormitane preferreth the judgment of the Cardinals of Rome before all the world.

The Pope pretendeth the uniting of the Greeks, when he meaneth another thing.

The Pope no relapſe, but prolapſe.

John Segovius anſwereth Panormitane.

The Pope neglecting to do good, is a member not of Chriſt, but of the Devil.

Councils bound to no poſitive Law.

Panormitane appointeth the Pope Lord of the Church.

The Pope and the Clergy deſire Dominion contrary to the Scriptures.

unto you, provifling for them not by compalſion, but willingly; and immediately after he ſaid, not as Lords over the Clergy. For if Chriſt the Son of God came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter and to ſerve, how then can his Vicar have any Dominion, or be called Lord, as you Panormitane will affirm? forſomuch as his Diſciple is not above his Maſter, nor the Servant above his Lord. And the Lord himſelf ſaith, Be ye not called Maſters, forſomuch as your only Maſter is Chriſt, and he which is the greateſt among you ſhall be your ſervant. Panormitane being ſomewhat diſquieted with this anſwer, the Council brake up and departed.

The French Kings Embaſſador.

The next day there was a General Congregation, and they returned all again unto the Chapter-houſe after Dinner, where the Archbiſhop of Lions, the Kings Orator, being required to ſpeak his mind, after he had by divers and ſundry reaſons, proved Eugenius to be an Heretick, he bitterly complained, deteſting the negligence and ignavy of thoſe that had preferred ſuch a Man unto the Papacy, and ſo moved all their hearts which were preſent, that they all together with him did bewail the calamities of the Univerſal Church.

The Biſhop of Burgen.

Then the Biſhop of Burgen, the Embaſſador of Spain, divided the Concluſions into two parts, ſome he called general, and otherſome perſonal, diſputing very excellently as touching the three firſt Concluſions, affirming, that he did in no point doubt of them, but only, that the addition, which made mention of the faith, ſeemed to be doubtful unto him. But upon this point he ſtayed much, to prove that the Council was above the Pope. The which, after he had ſufficiently proved both by Gods law, and mans law, he taught it alſo by phyſical reaſon, alledging Ariſtotle for witneſs. He ſaid, That in every well ordered Kingdom it ought eſpecially to be deſired, that the whole Realm ſhould be of more authority than the King, which if it happened contrary, it were not to be called a Kingdom, but a Tyranny: ſo likewiſe doth he think of the Church, that it ought to be of more authority than the Prince thereof, that is to ſay, the Pope. The which his Oration he uttered ſo eloquently, learnedly and truly, that all men depended upon him, and deſired rather to have him continue his Oration, than to have an end thereof.

The Council above the Pope.

The force of truth which appeared alſo in Eneas himſelf the Writer hereof, although afterward when he was Pope, he denied the ſame.

But when as he entred into the other Concluſions, he ſeemed to have forgotten himſelf, and to be no more the ſame man that he was; for neither was there the ſame eloquence in his words, neither gravity in Oration, or chearfulneſs of countenance; ſo that if he could have ſeen himſelf, he would peradventure greatly have marvelled at himſelf. Every man might well ſee and perceive then the power and force of the truth, which miniſtred Copy of matter unto him, ſo long as he ſpake in the defence thereof.

Note what it is for a man to labour againſt his knowledge.

But when as he began once to ſpeak againſt her, the took away even his natural eloquence from him. Notwithſtanding Panormitane, and the Biſhop of Burgen, ſhewed this example of modeſty, that albeit they would not confeſs or grant the laſt Concluſions to be verities of Faith: yet they would not that any man ſhould follow or lean unto their opinion, which were but mean Divines: but rather unto the Opinions of the Divines. But the King of Arragon's Almoner, being a ſubtil and crafty man, did not directly diſpute upon the Concluſions, but picking out here and there certain Arguments, ſought to let and hinder the Council. Againſt whom an Abbot of Scotland, a man of an excellent wit, diſputed very much; and Thomas de Corcellis, a famous Divine, alledged much againſt him out of the Decrees of the ſacred Council, and with a certain modeſt ſhamefaſtneſs, always beholding the ground, did very largely diſpute in the defence of the Concluſions.

The Concluſions of the Diſputation.

But now to avoid tedioufneſs, I will only proceed to declare Arguments whereby the Concluſions were ratified and confirmed, not minding to intreat of the five laſt Concluſions, which concern the perſon of Eugenius, but only upon the three firſt, whereunto I will adjoyn certain probable Arguments, gathered out of the diſputation of the Fathers. In the firſt Concluſion is the greateſt force, and firſt to be diſcuſſed; touching the which, two things are to be required and examined. The one, Whether the General Council have authority over the Pope. The other, Whether the Catholick Faith commandeth it to be believed.

The firſt Concluſion.

As touching that the Pope is ſubject to the General Council, it is excellently well proved by the reaſon before alledged by the Biſhop of Burgen. For the Pope is in the Church, as a King in his Kingdom; and for a King to be of more authority than his Kingdom, it were too abſurd: Ergo, neither ought the Pope to be above the Church. For like as oftentimes Kings which do wickedly govern the Commonwealth, and exerciſe cruelty, are deprived of their Kingdoms; even ſo, it is not to be doubted, but that the Biſhops of Rome may be diſpoſed by the Church, that is to ſay, by the General Councils.

KING Hen. 6.

A King is not of more authority than is his Kingdom.

Neither do I herein allow them which attribute ſo ample and large authority unto Kings, that they will not have them bound under any Laws; for ſuch as ſo do ſay, be but flatterers, which do talk otherwiſe than they think. For albeit that they do ſay, that the moderation of the Law is alway in the Princes power; that do I thus underſtand, that when as reaſon ſhall perſwade, he ought to digreſs from the rigour of the Law; for he is called a King, which careth and provideth for the Commonwealth, taketh pleaſure in the commodity and profit of his Subjects, and in all his doings hath reſpect to the commodity of thoſe over whom he ruleth; which if he do not, he is not to be counted a King but a Tyrant, whoſe property it is, only to ſeek his own profit; for in this point a King differeth from a Tyrant, that the one ſeeketh the commodity and profit of thoſe whom he ruleth, and the other only his own. The which to make more manifeſt, the cauſe is alſo to be alledged wherefore Kings were ordained.

These kind of flatterers are now in our days.

What a King is.

The Inſtitution of Kings.

At the beginning (as Cicero in his Offices ſaith) it is certain, that there was a certain time when as the People lived without Kings. But afterward, when Lands and Poſſeſſions began to be divided according to the cuſtom of every Nation, then were Kings ordained for no other cauſe, but only to exerciſe juſtice. For when as at the beginning, the common people were oppreſſed by rich and mighty men, they ran by and by to ſome good and vertuous man, which ſhould defend the poor from injury, and ordain Laws whereby the rich and poor might dwell together. But when as yet under the rule of Kings, the poor were oftentimes oppreſſed, Laws were ordained and inſtituted, the which ſhould judge neither for hatred nor favour, and give like ear unto the poor as unto the rich; whereby we do underſtand and know, not only the People, but alſo the King to be ſubject to the Laws. For if we do ſee a King to contemn and deſpiſe the Laws, violently rob and ſpoil his Subjects, deflour Virgins, diſhoneſt Matrons, and do all things licentiouſly and temerariouſly; do not the Nobles of the Kingdom aſſemble together, depoſing him from his Kingdom, ſet up another in his place, which ſhall ſwear to rule and govern uprightly, and be obedient unto the Laws? Verily as reaſon doth perſwade, even ſo doth the uſe thereof alſo teach us. It ſeemeth alſo agreeable unto reaſon, that the ſame ſhould be done in the Church, that is to ſay, in the Council, which is done in any Kingdom. And ſo is this ſufficiently apparent, which we have before ſaid, that the Pope is ſubject unto the Council.

The Pope ought to be ſubject unto the Council.

But now to paſs unto the Arguments of Divinity, the foundation of the matter which we do intreat upon, are the words of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in divers places, but eſpecially where as he ſpeaketh unto Peter, Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc Petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam, & portæ inferni non prævalebunt adverſus eam; that is, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, and the gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. Upon which words it ſeemeth good to begin this Diſputation, forſomuch as ſome were wont to alledge theſe words, to extol the authority of the Biſhop of Rome. But (as it ſhall by and by appear) the words of Chriſt had another ſenſe and meaning than divers of them do think; for he ſaith, And the gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. Verily this is a great promiſe, and theſe words of the Lord are of great importance. For what greater word could there have been ſpoken, than that the gates of Hell ſhould not prevail againſt the Church? Theſe gates of Hell, as Sf. Jerome ſaith, do ſignifie ſins. Wherefore, if ſins cannot prevail againſt the Church, neither can any malign ſpirits prevail againſt the ſame, which have no power at all over Mankind, but only through ſin. And for that cauſe, whereas it is ſaid in Job, that there is no power upon the earth that may be compared unto the power of the malign ſpirit, thereby it followeth, that the power of the Church is above all other power.

This place Tu es Petrus expounded.

Sins are the gates of Hell.

We

{KING} Hen. 6 Against the Papists opinion, that the Pope cannot err.

We may also upon the same saying, reason after another sort; forsomuch as the gates of Hell, that is to say, sins, cannot prevail against the Church, the Church thereby is declared to be without sin; the which cannot be spoken of the Pope, which is a mortal man, forsomuch as it is written, Seven times in the day the just man doth offend. If the Church be without spot because it cannot be defiled with sin, who is it that will prefer a sinful man before an undefiled Church? Neither let us give ear unto those which will not refer these words of Christ unto the Church, whereas he saith, Oravi pro te Petre, ut non deficiat Fides tua, that is to say, Peter I have prayed for thee, that thy Faith should not fail thee. For S. Augustine saith in the Exposition of the Psalms, Certain things are spoken as though they seemed properly to pertain unto the Apostle Peter, notwithstanding, they have no evident sense, but when they are referred unto the Church the person whereof he is understood figuratively to represent. Whereupon in another place in the questions of the New and Old Testament, upon the words, Rogavi pro te Petre, I have prayed for thee Peter; what is doubted? Did he pray for Peter, and did he not pray for James and John, beside the rest? It is manifest, that under the name of Peter all others are contained. For in another place of S. John, he saith, I pray for them whom thou hast given me, and I will that whereseever I am, they shall be also with me. Whereupon we do oftentimes by the name of Peter understand the Church, which we do nothing at all doubt to be done in this place; otherwise the truth could not consist, forsomuch as within a while after, the Faith of Peter failed for a time, by the denial of Christ, but the Faith of the Church, whose person Peter did represent, did always persevere inviolate.

The interpretation of this place, Oravi pro te Petre, is meant of the Church.

Bishops of Rome are Heretick. He meaneth Silvester the second.

As touching the Bishops of Rome, if time would suffer us, we could release many examples, how that they either have been Hereticks, or replenished with other vices. Neither are we ignorant, how that Marcellinus at the Emperors commandment, did sacrifice unto Idols, and that another (which is more horrible) did attain unto the Papacy by devilish fraud and deceit. Notwithstanding, the testimony of Paul unto the Hebrews shall suffice us at this time, who saith, that every Bishop is compassed in with infirmity, that is to say, with wickedness and sin. Also the testimonies of Christ himself do approve that the Church remaineth always without sin; for in Matthew he saith, I am with you even unto the end of the World. The which words were not only spoken to the Apostles (for they continued not unto the end of the world) but also unto their successors; neither would Christ then signifie that he was God, dispersed throughout all the world, as he is also perceived to be amongst sinners, but would declare a certain gift of grace through his assistance, whereby he would preserve the holy Church, consisting amongst his Apostles and their successors, always immaculate and undefiled.

The Church is without sin, and the Pope is a sinner.

And again in another place, I (saith he) will pray, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may remain with you for ever, even the Spirit of Truth whom the world cannot receive, because the world seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but you shall know him, because he shall remain with you. The which words being spoke unto the Disciples of Jesus, are also understood to be spoken unto their successors, and so consequently unto the Church. And if the spirit of truth be continually in the Church, no man can deny but that the Church ought to continue undefiled. By the same authority also that Christ is called the Spouse of the Church, who seeth not but that the Church is undefiled? For the Husband and the Wife (as the Apostle saith) are two in one flesh, and (as he doth also add) no man hateth his own flesh; thereby it cometh to pass, that Christ cannot hate the Church, forsomuch as she is his Spouse, and one flesh with him, and no man can hate himself; Ergo, the Church doth not sin; for if it did sin, it should be hated for sinners, the Lord doth hate. The which authorities being gathered together, we ought with the Apostle, to confess that the Church of God hath neither spot nor wrinkle. Also by writing unto Timothy, affirmeth the Church to be the pillar and foundation of the truth; whereupon in this Song to the Spouse it is said, My friend thou art altogether fair and beautiful, neither is there any spot in thee. These words peradventure, may abash some, that I do go about to prove the Church to be without sin. For when as the Church doth contain all Men which are called Christians, which also do agree and come together in one belief of Faith, and participation of the Sacraments, I do fear lest some men will think, that I do affirm all men to be without sin; which is so far from my meaning, that I do verily think the contrary to be most true. For I suppose, that there is no man in the Church, being clothed in this mortal flesh, without sin. Neither do these things vary or dissent among themselves; for the Church hath this gift, that albeit every part and member thereof may sin, yet the whole body cannot sin. For there be always good men in the Church, the which, albeit that they be subject unto humane fragility, notwithstanding they have so perfect a gift of sincere and pure vertue, that subduing all carnal desires and affections, they keep themselves a pleasant and acceptable Sacrifice unto God. Neither do I consent or agree unto the opinion of divers, which affirm that the Virgin Mary only persevered in Faith at the Lords Passion. Whereupon divers have not been ashamed to say, that the faith might be so debilitate and weakned, that it should return to one only old Woman, whose opinion, or rather madness, St. Paul seemeth openly to reject, writing thus unto the Romans, Do ye not know (saith he) what the Scripture writeth of Helias, how incessantly he called upon God against the Children of Israel, (saying) O Lord, they have slain thy Prophets, and digged down thine Altars, and I alone am left, and they seek after my soul: But what answer received he of God? I have left unto my self yet seven thousand men, which have not bowed their knees unto Baal. What other thing doth this answer of God declare, than that it is a foolish opinion of them which think the Church of God to be brought unto so small a number? We ought to believe the words of Christ, which are altogether repugnant unto those men, who affirm, that the Virgin only did persevere in faith. For Jesus said unto his Father, O holy Father, save them in thy Name whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are one. When I was with them, I kept them in thy Name: I have kept them that thou gavest unto me, and none of them perished, but only the Son of perdition. And I do not desire that thou shouldest take them out of the World, but that thou shouldest preserve them from evil.

The Church one flesh with Christ.

The Church is without sin, not by nature, but only by imputation.

The Church without sin, how to be understood.

The error of those which says that only the Virgin Mary did persevere constant at the time of Christs Passion.

Behold, Christ prayeth that his Disciples should not fall, but should be preserved from evil, and he so praying, without doubt is heard; for he saith in another place, I know that thou hearest me. But how is he heard, if all those for whom he prayeth, swarved at the time of his Passion? As for example, by what means did Christ hanging upon the Cross, commend his dearly beloved Mother unto John, if so be he were either then swarved, or should by and by after have swarved from the Faith? Moreover, did not the Centurion by and by cry out and say, truly this is the Son of God? The Jews also which at that time were far distant from Jerusalem, might both be called faithful, and also saved by their faith; seeing that (as the Apostle saith) men are bound unto the Gospel, after it is once known and revealed unto them. But let us leave these men, and speak of that which is more likely, and let us judge that there hath been, and is a great number of good men in the Church, and by them, as by the more worthy part, let us name the Church holy and immaculate, the which doth comprehend as well the evil as the good. For the Church is compared unto a Net which is cast into the Sea, and gathered together all kind of Fishes.

The Church comprehendeth both the evil and good. Mat. 20.

And again, it is compared unto a King, which made a Marriage for his Son, and sent forth his Servants to call those which were bidden unto the Wedding, and they gathered together good and evil, as many as they could find. Wherefore their opinion is erroneous, which affirm, that only good men be comprehended in the Church; the which, if it were true, it would confound all things, neither could we understand or know where the Church were. But forsomuch as the Scripture saith, no man knoweth whether he be worthy of love or hatred, their opinion is more to be allowed and truer, which include all the faithful in the Church; of whom, although a great part be given to voluptuousness and avarice, yet some notwithstanding, are clean from deadly sin. The which part, as it is the most worthy, it giveth the name unto the Church, to be called most holy;

This saying of Ecclesiastes is not so to be translated, and also ferveth to another sense than is here meant.

holy; which is ſo often done, that we are commanded to ſing in our Creed, unam ſanctam Catholicam & Apoſtolicam Eccleſiam, that is to ſay, one holy Catholick and Apoſtolick Church; the which Article the Synod of Conſtantinople added unto the reſt; wherefore if the Church be holy, it is alſo without ſin. But to return to our former purpoſe, this word Sanctum, which ſignifieth holy (as Macrobius alledging Trebatius, affirmeth) is ſometimes taken for religious, and ſometimes for clean and uncorrupt. And after the ſame manner, we call the Church holy, as the Apoſtle Peter calleth it immaculate, as we read in the famous Epiſtle of Clement.

To this end alſo tendeth that which is ſpoken by Saint Paul, That Chriſt is the Head of the Church; for if the Church ſhould wholly ſin, ſhe ſhould not agree with her Head Chriſt, who is in no point defiled. This alſo Chriſt himſelf would ſignifie unto us in Matthew, when he commendeth the Houſe which was builded upon the ſtrong Rock, againſt the which, neither the Winds, neither the Storms could prevail. Is the houſe of God (ſaith the Apoſtle) which is the Church, builded upon the Rock, which Rock (as the Apoſtle declareth) is Chriſt. Who then is ſo unſhamefaſt, that he will affirm the Church, which is founded upon Chriſt, to be ſubject to ſin? And will not rather cry out with the Prophet, and ſay, Domine, dilexi decorum domus tuæ; that is to ſay, O Lord, I have loved the beauty of thy houſe? Hereupon wrote John Chryſoſtome this Golden Sentence, The Church never ceaſeth to be aſſaulted, never ceaſeth to be laid in wait for; but in the name of Chriſt it hath always the upper hand, and overcame. And albeit that others do ly in wait for it, or that the flouds do beat againſt it, yet the foundation which is laid upon the Rock is not ſhaken. Saint Hilary alſo ſaith, That it is the property of the Church to vanquiſh when it is hurt, to underſtand when it is reproved, to be in ſafety when it is forſaken, and to obtain victory when as it ſeemeth almoſt overcome. Thus by many reaſons and teſtimonies, it is proved that the Church doth not err; which is not ſpoken or affirmed of the Biſhops of Rome, ſo that this reaſon doth make the Pope ſubject unto the Church; for it is convenient, that the leſs perfect be ſubject unto the more perfect. There be alſo many other teſtimonies and reaſons, whereof we will now ſomewhat more intreat.

Chriſt is the Rock whereupon the Church is builded.

If authority be ſought for, ſaith Saint Jerome (for I willingly occupy my ſelf in his ſentences, as in a moſt fertile field) the World is greater than a City. What then I pray you Jerome? Is the Pope mighty becauſe he is Head of the Church of Rome? His authority is great, notwithſtanding the Univerſal Church is greater, which doth not only comprehend one City, but alſo the whole World. Hereupon it followeth, that if the Church be the Mother of all faithful, then ſhe hath the Biſhop of Rome for her ſon; otherwiſe, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, he can never have God for his Father, which will not acknowledge the Church for his Mother. The which thing Anacletus underſtanding, called the Univerſal Church his Mother, as the Writers of the Canons do know. And Calixtus ſaith, As a Son he came to do the will of his Father, ſo we do the will of our Mother, which is the Church. Whereby it appeareth, that how much the Son is inferiour to the Mother, ſo much the Church is ſuperiour or above the Biſhop of Rome.

He proveth by authority the Pope to be under the Councel.

If the Church be the Mother, the Pope muſt be her Son.

Alſo we have ſaid before, that the Church was the Spouſe of Chriſt, and the Pope we know to be a Vicar; but no man doth ſo ordain a Vicar, that he maketh his Spouſe ſubject unto him, but that the Spouſe is always thought to be of more authority than the Vicar; forſomuch as ſhe is one body with her Husband, but the Vicar is not ſo. Neither will I here paſs over the words of St. Paul unto the Romans, Let every ſoul (ſaith he) be ſubject unto the higher powers. Neither doth he herein except the Pope. For albeit that he be above all other men, yet it ſeemeth neceſſary that he ſhould be ſubject to the Church. Neither let him think himſelf hereby exempt, becauſe it was ſaid unto Peter by Chriſt, Whatſoever thou bindeſt, &c. In this place, as we will hereafter declare, he repreſented the Perſon of the Church, for we find it ſpoken afterward unto them, Quodcunque ligaveritis ſuper terram, ligatum erit in cœlis, that is, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind upon earth, ſhall be alſo bound in Heaven. And furthermore, if all power be given of Chriſt, as the Apoſtle writeth unto the Corinthians, it is given for the edifying of the Church, and not for the deſtruction thereof; why then may not the Church correct the Pope, if he abuſe the Keys, and bring all things unto ruine?

The Church being the Spouſe, the Pope can not be the Head thereof, but he muſt alſo be the Head of Chriſt, forſomuch as Chriſt and his Spouſe be both one.

*The expoſition of this place, Quodcunque ligaveritis.

Add hereunto alſo another Argument. A Man in this life is leſſer than the Angels, for we read in Matthew of John Baptiſt, that he which is leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he. Notwithſtanding Chriſt ſaith in another place, that amongſt the children of women, there was not a greater than John Baptiſt. But to proceed, Men are forced, by the example of Zacharias, to give credit unto Angels, leſt through their misbelief they be ſtricken blind as he was. What more? the Biſhop of Rome is a Man: Ergo, he is leſs than the Angels, and is bound to give credit to the Angels. But the Angels learn of the Church, and do reverently accord unto her Doctrine, as the Apoſtle writeth unto the Epheſians; Ergo, the Pope is bound to do the ſame, who is leſs than the Angels, and leſs than the Church, whoſe authority is ſuch, that worthily it is compared by Saint Auguſtine unto the Sun; that like as the Sun by his light doth ſurmount all other lights, ſo the Church is above all other authority and power. Whereupon Saint Auguſtine writeth thus, I would not believe the Goſpel, ſaith he, if the authority of the Church did not move me thereunto: the which is not in any place found to be ſpoken of the Biſhop of Rome, who repreſenting the Church, and being Miniſter thereof, is not to be thought greater or equal to his Lord and Maſter. Notwithſtanding, the words of our Saviour Chriſt, do ſpecially prove the Biſhop of Rome to be ſubject to the Church, as we will hereafter declare. For he ſending Peter to preach unto the Church, ſaid, Go, and ſay unto the Church. To the confirmation of whoſe authority, theſe words do alſo pertain, He that heareth you, heareth me. The which words are not only ſpoken unto the Apoſtles, but alſo unto their ſucceſſors, and unto the whole Church.

The Church, and not the Pope compared to the Sun.

Whereupon it followeth, that if the Pope do not hearken and give ear unto the Church, he doth not give ear unto Chriſt, and conſequently he is to be counted as an Ethnick and Publican. For as Saint Auguſtine affirmeth, when as the Church doth excommunicate, he which is ſo excommunicate, is bound in Heaven, and when the Church looſeth he is looſed. Likewiſe, if he be an Heretick which taketh away the Supremacy of the Church of Rome, as the Decrees of the Council of Conſtance do determine, how much more is he to be counted an Heretick which taketh away the authority from the Univerſal Church, wherein the Church of Rome and all other are contained? Wherefore it is now evident, that it is the opinion of all men before our days (if it may be called an opinion, which is confirmed by grave Authors) that the Pope is ſubject unto the Univerſal Church. But this is called into queſtion, whether he ought alſo to be judged of the General Council. For there are ſome, which (whether it be for deſire of vain glory, or that through their flattery they look for ſome great reward) have begun to teach new and ſtrange Doctrines, and to exempt the Biſhop of Rome from the Juriſdiction of the General Council. Ambition hath blinded them, whereof not only this preſent Schiſm, but alſo all other Schiſms, even unto this day have had their original. For as in times paſt the greedy deſire and ambition of the Papacy, brought in that peſtiferous Beaſt, which through Arrius then firſt crept into the Church; even ſo they do eſpecially nouriſh and maintain this preſent Hereſie which are not aſhamed to beg. Of the which number, ſome cry out and ſay, the works of the Subjects ought to be judged by the Pope, but the Pope to be reſerved only unto the Judgment of God. Others ſaid, that no man ought to judge the high and principal Seat, and that it could be judged either by the Emperor, either by the Clergy, either by any King or People. Other affirm, that the Lord hath reſerved to himſelf the depoſitions of the chief Biſhop. Others are not aſhamed to affirm, that the Biſhop of Rome, although he carry ſouls in never ſo great number unto Hell, yet he is not ſubject unto any correction or rebuke.

The Pope if he do hearken to the Church, is an Ethnick and Publican.

It is to be feared leſt the Church hath had many ſuch Popes.

Whether the Pope is to be judged by the General Council, &c.

Theſe are the Canons and the School Divines, and beggin g Friers.

Diverſity of judgments touching the Biſhop of Rome.

KING Hen.6.

And becauſe theſe their words are eaſily reſolved, they run ſtraightway unto the Goſpel, and interpret the words of Chriſt; not according to the ſenſe and meaning of the Holy Ghoſt, but according to their own will and diſpoſition. They do greatly eſteem and regard this which was ſpoken unto Peter, Tu vocaberis Cephas; that is, Thou ſhalt be called Cephas: by the which word they make him the Head of the Church. Alſo, I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind upon the earth, &c. I have prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith ſhould not fail. And again, Feed my Sheep; Caſt thy Net into the deep; Be not afraid, for from henceforth thou ſhalt be a fiſher of men: Alſo that Chriſt commanded Peter, as the Prince of the Apoſtles, to pay Toll for them both; and that Peter drew the Net unto the Land full of great Fiſhes; and that only Peter drew out his ſword for the defence of Chriſt. All which places theſe men do greatly extol, altogether neglecting the Expoſitions of the Fathers; the which if (as reaſon were) they would conſider, they ſhould manifeſtly perceive, by the authorities aforeſaid, that the Pope is not above them, when they are gathered together in Council, but when they are ſeparate and divided.

Howſoolishly the Church of Rome doth wreſt the Scriptures, neglecting the expoſitions of the Fathers.

But theſe things being paſſed over, forſomuch as anſwer ſhall appear by that which hereafter ſhall follow, we will now declare what was reaſoned of by the learned men upon this queſtion. But firſt we would have it known, that all men, which are of any name or eſtimation, do agree, that the Pope is ſubject to the Council, and for the proof thereof they repeat (in a manner) all thoſe things which were before ſpoken of the Church; for they ſuppoſe all that which is ſpoken of the Church, to ſerve for the General Council. And firſt of all they alledge this ſaying of the Goſpel, Dic Eccleſiæ, Tell it unto the Church. In the which place it is convenient to underſtand, that Chriſt ſpake unto Peter, inſtructing him what he ſhould do as touching the correction of his brother. He ſaith, If thy brother offend or ſin againſt thee, rebuke him between thee and him alone. If he give ear unto thee, thou haſt won thy brother; but if he do not give ear unto thee, take with thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all truth may ſtand: if then he will not give ear unto thee, Dic Eccleſiæ, Tell it unto the Church.

Thoſe things were ſpoken of the Church, ſerve alſo for the General Council.

What ſhall we underſtand by the Church in that place? Shall we ſay that it is the multitude of the faithful diſperſed throughout the whole World? My yoke is pleaſant, ſaith the Lord, and my burden is light. But how is it light, if Chriſt command us to do that which is impoſſible to be done? For how could Peter ſpeak unto the Church which was diſperſed, or to ſeek out every Chriſtian ſcattered in every Town or City? But the meaning of theſe words is far otherwiſe, and they muſt be otherwiſe interpreted; for which cauſe, it is neceſſary that we remember the double perſon which Peter repreſented, as the perſon of the high Biſhop, and a private man. The ſenſe and meaning of his words are evident and plain enough of themſelves, that they need no ſupplyment or alteration. We muſt firſt mark and ſee what this word Eccleſia ſignifieth, the which we do find to be but only twice ſpoken of by Chriſt; once in this place, and again when as he ſaid unto Peter, Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc Petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam; that is, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church. Wherefore the Church ſignifieth the convocation or congregation of the multitude. Dic Eccleſiæ, tell it unto the Church, that is to ſay, Tell it unto the congregation of the faithful; the which, forſomuch as they are not accuſtomed to come together but in a General Council, this interpretation ſhall ſeem very good, Dic Eccleſiæ, tell it unto the Church, that is to ſay, Dic generali Concilio, tell it unto the General Council.

Peter repreſenteth a double perſon.

Chriſt nameth the Church but twice in the Goſpel.

What the Church is.

The interpretation of this place Dic Eccleſiæ.

In this caſe I would gladly hear if there be any man which doth think theſe words to be more properly expreſſed in any Prelate, than in the Council, when as they muſt put one man for the multitude; which if it be admitted in the Scriptures, we ſhall from henceforth find no firm or ſtable thing therein? But if any man do marvel at this Interpretation, let him ſearch the old Writers, and he ſhall find that this is no new or ſtrange interpretation, but the interpretation of the holy Fathers and old Doctors, which have firſt given light unto the Church, as Pope Gregory witneſſeth (a man worthy of remembrance, both for the holineſs of his life, and his ſingular learning) whoſe words are theſe, written in his Regiſter unto the Biſhop of Conſtantinople; And we (ſaid he) againſt whom ſo great an offence is committed through temerarious boldneſs, do obſerve and keep that which the truth doth command us, ſaying, Si peccaverit in te frater, that is, If thy brother do offend againſt thee, &c. And afterward he addeth more, If my rebukes and corrections be deſpiſed, it remaineth that I do ſeek help of the Church. The which words do manifeſtly declare the Church here to be taken for the General Council. Neither did Gregory ſay, that he would ſeek help of the Church that is diſperſed abroad in every place, but of that which is gathered together, that is to ſay, the General Council; for that which is diſperſed abroad cannot be had, except it be gathered together. Alſo Pope Nicholas reproving Lotharius the King for adultery, ſaid, If thou doſt not amend the ſame, take heed that we tell it not unto the holy Church.

The Church taken for the General Council.

In the which ſaying, Pope Nicholas did not ſay, that he would go throughout the World to certifie every one, man by man; but that he would call the Church together, that is to ſay, the General Council, and there would publiſh and declare the offence of Lotharius, that he which had contemned the Popes commandments, ſhould fear the reverence of the General Council. I could recite an infinite number of witneſſes for that purpoſe, the which all tend unto one end; but this one teſtimony of the Council of Conſtance, ſhall ſuffice for them all; wherein it is ſaid, that not only the Pope in the correction of his Brother, is remitted unto the Council, when as he cannot correct him of himſelf; but alſo when as any thing is done as touching the correction of the Pope himſelf, the matter ought to be referred to the Council. Whereby it appeareth our interpretation to be moſt true, which doth expound the Church to be in the General Council. Hereupon in the Acts of the Apoſtles, the Congregations which were then holden were called the Church. Alſo in the Council of Nice, and in other Councils, when as many ſhould be excommunicated, always in manner this ſentence was adjoyned, Hunc excommunicat Catholica & Apoſtolica Eccleſia, i. The Catholick and Apoſtolick Church doth excommunicate this man. And hereupon that Title is given unto the Councils, whereby we do ſay, that the General Council doth repreſent the Univerſal Church. Wherefore the Laws and Decrees of the Council are called the Laws of the Church, for that the Church doth not ſet forth any Laws in any other place, but in the General Council; except we will call the Popes Conſtitutions the Laws of the Church, which cannot be properly ſaid but of the Council; whereas, albeit all theſe which are of the Church do not aſſemble and come together, yet the moſt part of them are accuſtomed to be there preſent, and in thoſe which come, the whole power of the Church doth conſiſt. Whereupon we read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, It pleaſed the Apoſtles and Elders with all the Church. For albeit that all the faithful were not there preſent (becauſe a great number of them remained at Antioch) yet notwithſtanding it was called the whole Church, becauſe the whole power of the Church conſiſted in the Council. Thus for this preſent it is ſufficient that we underſtand by the Church the General Council.

The Council of Conſtance decreeth the Pope to be under the Council.

The Acts of the Apoſtles

The Council of Nice.

The title of the Councils

The Conſtitutions of the Biſhops of Rome, are not the laws of the Church.

And now to return unto our purpoſe, let us hear what our Saviour ſaith unto Peter, If thy brother do offend againſt thee, unto this Text following, Tell it unto the Church; and let us underſtand the Council by the Church. Who is greater in this place, he which is ſent unto the Council, or the Council whereunto Peter was ſent? The verity doth remit the Biſhop of Rome unto the General Council. And why ſo? verily becauſe the Biſhop of Rome ſhould not diſdain to acknowledge ſome power in earth to be above them, the which they ſhould conſult withal in matters of importance, and agree unto the determinations thereof. Whereupon Peter is alſo called by another name, Simon; the which, as Rabanus in his Homilies writeth, is interpreted in the Hebrew Tongue, obedience, that all men might underſtand obedience to be neceſſary even in the Biſhop of Rome.

By the Church the Council is underſtood.

Simons obedience neceſſary in the Biſhops of Rome.

The authority of the Council of Conſtance might ſuffice us in this point; but we think it good to ſtay a little upon this matter, and to leave no place open for our adverſaries; which while they go about to maintain the unſatiable

KING 1 Hen. 6. The full judgment of the Church is not to be found but in the General Council.

To appeal to be made from the Council to the Pope.

Gal. 2. Peter constrained to obey the General Council.

The favourers and maintainers of the Pope go about to maintain and prefer the pleasure and profit of one before a common commodity.

satiable wilfulness of one man, preferring a private wealth, before a common commodity, it is incredible how great errors they do stir up. Against the which, besides many other, Zacharias Bishop of Chalcedon, a man both famous and eloquent, did earnestly strive. Who in the great and sacred Synod of Chalcedon, when as the sentence of the Bishop of Rome was objected unto him, that the Canon of Pope Nicholas and other Patriarchs was above the Council, he replied against it. And Zosimus the Pope saith thus, as touching the Decrees of the General Council, The authority of this seat cannot make or alter any thing contrary to the decrees of the Fathers. Neither doth he here speak of the Decrees of the Fathers which are dispersed abroad in Cities or Wilderness, for they do not bind the Pope; but of them which are made and published by the Fathers in the General Council. For the more manifest declaration whereof, the words of Pope Leo, the most eloquent of all the Bishops of Rome, are here to be annexed, who wrote unto Anatholius, That the Decrees of the Council of Nice are in no part to be violate and broken; thereby (as it were) excluding himself and the high Patriarch.

The Pope can abide no General Councils.

The authority also of Damasus upon this sentence is more manifest, writing unto Arelius the Archbishop, as Isidorus declareth in the Book of Councils, whose worthy saying as touching the authority of the Synod is this, That they which are not compelled of necessity, but of their own will either frowardly do any thing, either presume to do any thing, or willingly consent unto those which would do any thing contrary and against the sacred Canons, they are worthily thought and judged to blaspheme the Holy Ghost. Of the which blasphemy whether Gabriel, which calleth himself Eugenius, be presently partaker, let them judge which have heard him say, That it is so far from his office and duty to obey the General Councils, that, he saith, he doth then best merit and deserve, when as he contemneth the Decrees of the Council. Damasus addeth yet moreover, For this purpose, saith he, the rulers of the sacred Canons, which are consecrated by the Spirit of God, and the reverence of the whole world, are faithfully to be known and understood of us, and diligently looked upon, that by no mans, without a necessity which cannot be eschewed (which God forbid) we do transgress against any of the Decrees of the holy Fathers. Notwithstanding we daily see in all the Popes Bulls and Letters, these words, Non obstante, that is to say notwithstanding, which no other necessity hath brought in, than only unsatiable desire of gathering of money. But let them take heed to these things which be the authors thereof.

Non obstante in the Popes Bulls.

The Council to be above the Pope.

But now to return again unto Damasus, mention is made in the Epistles of Ambrose Bishop of Millain, of a certain Epistle, which is said to be written by Damasus, unto the Judges deputed by the Council of Capua, where he declareth that it is not his office to meddle with any matter which hath been before the Council. By the which saying, he doth manifestly reprove all those which affirm and say, the Bishop of Rome to be above the Council. The which, if it were true, Damasus might have taken into his hands the cause of Bonosius the Bishop to determine, which was before begun by the Council; but forsomuch as the Council is above the Pope, Damasus knew himself to be prohibited. Whereupon Hilarius also acknowledging the Synod to be above him, would have his Decrees confirmed by the Council. Also the famous Doctor Saint Augustine in his Epistle which he did write unto Glorius and Eleusius, and Felix the Grammarian, declareth the case. Cecilianus the Bishop was accused by Donatus, with others. Melchiades the Pope with certain other Bishops, absolved Cecilian, and confirmed him in his Bishoprick. They being moved with those doings, made a Schism in the parts of Africa, S. Augustine reproveth them, which having another remedy against the sentence of the Pope, did raise a Schism, and doth inveigh against them in this manner: Behold, let us think those Bishops which gave judgment at Rome, not to have been good Judges, there remained yet the judgment of the Universal Church, where the cause might have bin pleaded even with the Judges themselves, so that if they were convict not to have given just judgment, their sentence might be broken.

Whereby it appeareth, that not only the sentence of the Pope alone, but also the Pope with his Bishops joyned with him, might be made frustrate by the Council; for the full judgment of the Universal Church is not found elsewhere but in the General Council. Let not any man doubt, in that S. Augustine seemeth here only to speak of Bishops, for if the Text of his Epistle be read over, he shall find the Bishop of Rome to be comprehended amongst the other Bishops. It was also prohibited by the Councils of Africa, that the Bishops of Rome should not receive or hear the Appeals of any which did appeal from the Council; which altogether declare the superiority of the Council. And this appeareth more plainly in the Acts of the Apostles, where Peter is rebuked by the Congregation of the Apostles, because he went in to Cornelius a Heathen man, as if it had not been lawful for him to attempt any greater matter without the knowledge of the Congregation; and yet it was said unto him as well as others, Ite & baptizate, &c. Go and baptise. But this seemeth to make more unto the purpose, which St. Paul writeth unto the Galatians, where he saith, he resisted Peter even unto his face, because he did not walk according to the verity of the Gospel. Which words, if they be well understood, signifie none other thing by the verity of the Gospel, than the Canon of the Council decreed amongst the Apostles; for the Disciples being gathered together, have so determined it. Whereupon S. Paul doth shew, that Peter ought to have obeyed the General Council.

Acts 31.

The Decree of the council of Constance.

The Pope bound under the obedience of the General Council.

But now to finish this Disputation, we will here adjoyn the determination of the Council of Constance, the which Council aforesaid, willing to cut off all ambiguity and doubts, and to provide a certain order of living, declared by a solemn Decree, That all men, of what estate or condition soever they were, yea, although that they were Popes themselves, be bound under the obedience and ordinances of the sacred General Councils. And although there be a certain restraint, where it is said, in such things as pertain unto the faith, the extirpation of schism, and the reformation of the Church, as well in the head as in the members, notwithstanding this amplificative clause, which is adjoyned, is to be noted, Et in pertinentibus ad ea, that is to say, with all the appurtenants. The which addition is so large that it containeth all things in it which may be imagined or thought. For the Lord said thus unto his Apostles, Go ye forth and teach all people. He did not say in three points only, but teach them to observe and keep all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And in another place he saith, not this or that, but whatsoever ye shall bind, &c. which all together are alledged for the authority of the Church and General Councils. For the preferment whereof these things also come in place, He that heareth you, heareth me. And again It is given unto you to know the mysteries of God. Also, Where two or three be gathered in my name, &c. Again, Whatsoever ye shall ask, &c. O holy Father, save them whom thou hast given me, &c. And I will be with them even unto the end of the World. Also out of St. Paul these places are gathered, We are helpers of God, &c. Which hath made us apt Ministers of the New Testament, &c. And he appointed some Apostles, and some Prophets, &c. In all which places, both Christ and the Apostles spake of the authority of many, which all together are alledged for the authority of the Universal Church.

Divers places of Scripture alledged out of the Gospels and Apostles, for authority of the Church and General Councils above the Pope.

But forsomuch as that Church, being dispersed and scattered abroad, cannot decree or ordain any thing; therefore, of necessity it is to be said, that the chief and principal authority of the Church doth consist in the General Councils where they assemble together. And therefore it was observed in the Primitive Church, that hard and weighty matters were not intreated upon, but only in the General Councils and Congregations. The same is also found to be observed afterward. For when as the Churches were divided, General Councils were holden. And in the Council of Nice we do find the Heresie of Arrius condemned. In the Council of Constantinople the Heresie of Macedonius. In the Council of Ephesus the Heresie of Nestorius. In the Council of Chalcedon the Heresies of Eutyches were also condemned: forsomuch as they thought the judgment of the Bishop of Rome not to suffice to so great and weighty matters; and also they thought the sentence of the Council to be of greater force than the sentence of the Pope, forsomuch as he might err as a Man; but the Council wherein so many Men were gathered together,

Weighty matters intreated but only in General Councils.

The Pope not sufficient of himself to convince or judge Hereticks.

The Pope may err.

ther, being guided with the holy Ghoſt, could not err. Alſo it is a very excellent ſaying of Martianus the Emperor, which ſerveth for that purpoſe, whoſe words are theſe: Truly he is to be counted a wicked and ſacrilegious perſon, which, after the ſentence of ſo many good and holy men will ſtick to withdraw any part of his opinion. For it is a point of meer madneſs, at the noon-time and fair day light, to ſeek for a feigned light, for he which having found the truth ſeeketh to diſcuſs any thing further, ſeeketh but after vanities and lies.

Whether the Pope may be depoſed by the Council or not.

Now I think it is evident enough unto all men, that the Biſhop of Rome is under the Council. Notwithſtanding ſome do yet ſtill doubt, whether he may alſo be depoſed by the Council or not: For albeit it be proved, that he is under the Council, yet for all that will they not grant, that he may be alſo depoſed by the Council. Wherefore, it ſhall be no digreſſing at all from our purpoſe, ſomewhat to ſay upon that matter: and firſt of all, to ſpeak of theſe Railers, which are yet ſo earneſt for the defence of the Biſhop of Rome, which being vanquiſhed in one Battel ſtill renue another, and contend rather of obſtinacy than of ignorance. They would have here recited again that which we have before ſpoken, as touching the preheminence of the Biſhop of Rome, or the Patriarch. And as there are many of them more full of words than eloquent, they ſtay much of this point, where Chriſt ſaid unto Peter, Tibi dabo claves Regni Cœlorum; I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind upon Earth ſhall be bound in Heaven; as though by thoſe words he ſhould be made Head over the other. And again they do amplifie it by this, Paſce ove meas, Feed my ſheep, which they do not find to be ſpoken to any other of the Apoſtles. And becauſe it is ſaid, that Peter was the chief and the mouth of the Apoſtles, therefore they judge it well ſpoken, that no man ſhall judge the chief and principal See; being all of this opinion with Boniface, which ſaid, that the Pope ought to be judged for no cauſe, except he be perceived or known to ſwarve from the faith, although he do carry innumerable people with him headlong into Hell, there to be perpetually tormented; as though he could open the Kingdom of Heaven to others, if any other could ſhut it againſt him; that he could feed other, if he himſelf lacked paſture.

The places Tibi dabo claves regni cœlorum, Paſce ove meas, make nothing for the Popes ſupremacy.

The Popes ſupremacy confuted.

But we count theſe as things of no force or difficulty. For Saint Auguſtine in the Sermon of the Nativity of Peter and Paul, ſaith in this wiſe, Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, before his Paſſion, choſe his Diſciples, (as ye do know) whom he called brethren. Amongſt thoſe Peter alone almoſt in every place, repreſented the perſon of the Church, And therefore it was ſaid unto him, Tibi dabo claves Regni Cœlorum, that is to ſay, Unto thee will I give the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. Theſe Keys did he not receive as one man, but as one he received them for the Church. And in another place, where he writeth of the Chriſtian Agony, he ſaith, The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven were given unto the Church, when as they were given unto Peter. And when as it was ſpoken unto him, Amas me? Paſce oves meas, that is to ſay, Loveſt thou me? Feed my Sheep; it was ſpoken unto them all. And Saint Ambroſe in the beginning of his Paſtoral, ſaith, Which ſheep and which flock the bleſſed Apoſtle Saint Peter took no charge of alone, but together with us, and we altogether with him. By which words the foundation and principal arguments of thoſe flatterers are utterly ſubverted and overthrown. For if Peter repreſented the perſon of the Church, we ought not to aſcribe the force of theſe words unto Peter, but unto the Church. Neither do I ſee how that can ſtand which Boniface doth affirm, for it is far diſtant from the truth, except it be underſtood otherwiſe than it is ſpoken.

Peter repreſenteth the perſon of the Church, and not of the Pope.

The Keys given to the Church, and not to one man.

Pope Boniface erreth.

But it may peradventure ſeem a great thing unto ſome, that it is ſaid the Biſhop of Rome to be the Head of the Militant Church. For as in the body of man, Phyſicians never give counſel to cut off the Head for any manner of ſickneſs and diſeaſe, although it be never ſo full of Ulcers, or infected: ſo in this Myſtical Body of the Church, the Head ought always to be kept; and albeit it be never ſo wicked, yet it is to be ſuffered and born withal. But now convert this Argument, If it were poſſible in the body of man, when one Head is taken away, to find another to put in his place, as we ſee it may be done in the Church; ſhould not Heads then be oftentimes changed for divers diſeaſes? Moreover, if we will thus reaſon, that the Head of the Church ſhould be, in reſpect of his body, as the Head of Man in reſpect of the body of Man; then doth it neceſſarily follow, that the head being dead, the body muſt alſo die, as is manifeſt in the body of man. So ſhould it grow into an abſurdity to confeſs, that the Pope being dead, the Church alſo ſhould be dead; the which how far it diſſenteth from the truth, it is moſt manifeſt. Therefore whatſoever other men ſay, I am not of opinion with them, which affirm the Biſhop of Rome to be Head of the Church, except peradventure, they do make him the miniſterial Head; for we do read that Chriſt is the Head of the Church, and not the Pope; and that he is the true Head, immutable, perpetual, and everlaſting, and the Church is his body, whereof the Pope himſelf is alſo a member, and the Vicar of Chriſt, not to the deſtruction, but to the maintenance and edifying of the ſame body of Chriſt. Wherefore if he be found a damnable deſtroyer of the Church, he may be depoſed and caſt out, becauſe he doth not that he was ordained to do; and we ought, as Pope Leo ſaith, to be mindful of the commandment given us in the Goſpel; that if our eye, our foot, or our right hand do offend us, it ſhould be cut off from the body. For the Lord ſaith in another place, every tree which bringeth not forth fruit, ſhall be cut down and caſt into the fire. And in another place alſo it is ſaid unto us, Take away all evil and wickedneſs from among you. It is very juſt and true which is written in the Epiſtle of Clement, unto James the brother of our Lord, that he which will be ſaved, ought to be ſeparate from them which will not be ſaved.

They dote which ſay that the Pope cannot be depoſed for any other cauſe than for hereſie.

But for the more manifeſt declaration hereof, we muſt have recourſe to that which is ſpoken by the Lord in the Goſpel of John, I am the true Vine, ſaith the Lord, and my Father is the Husbandman, but ye are the branches; every branch therefore that bringeth not forth fruit in me, my Father will cut off. Theſe words were ſpoken unto the Apoſtles, amongſt whom alſo Peter was preſent, whom the Lord would have cut off, if he brought not forth his fruit. Alſo ſaint Jerome upon theſe words of Matthew, Unſavoury ſalt is profitable for nothing, but to be caſt forth and troden of ſwine. Whereupon in the perſon of Peter and Paul he ſaith thus, It is no eaſie matter to ſtand in the place of Peter and Paul, and to keep the Chair of them which reign with Chriſt. This unſavoury ſalt, that is to ſay, a fooliſh Prelate, unſavoury in preaching, and fooliſh in offending, is good for nothing but to be caſt forth, that is to ſay, depoſed, and to be troden of ſwine, that is, of wicked ſpirits, which have dominion over the wicked and naughty Prelates, as their own flock and herd. Behold this teſtimony of Jerome is plain and evident, Let him be caſt out, ſaith he.

Fruitleſs branches are to be cut off.

If the Pope be unſavoury ſalt, he is to be caſt away.

He expoundeth and ſpeaketh it of the Prelate which uſurpeth the place of Peter, and ſo conſequently of the Biſhop of Rome, who being unſavoury in preaching, and fooliſh in offending, ought to be depoſed (as Jerome affirmeth) from his degree and dignity. Neither as ſome do dream, is he to be depoſed for Hereſie only. Iſidorus in the Book of Councils, rehearſeth a certain Epiſtle of Clement the Succeſſor of Peter, written unto James the Apoſtle, where the ſaid Clement, referring the words of Peter unto himſelf, ſaith thus, If thou be occupied with worldly cares, thou ſhalt both deceive thy ſelf, and thoſe which ſhall give ear unto thee; for thou canſt not fully diſtribute unto every man thoſe things which pertain unto ſalvation; whereby it ſhall come to paſs, that thou, as a man for not teaching thoſe things which pertain unto ſalvation, ſhalt be depoſed, and thy diſciples ſhall periſh through ignorance. Notwithſtanding in another place, in ſtead of this word depoſed, it is found, thou ſhalt be puniſhed; which two words, if they be well underſtood, do not much differ, for depoſition is oftentimes uſed in the place of puniſhment. But peradventure ſome will here object, that this Epiſtle is not to be judged Clement's, becauſe it is ſaid to be written unto James, who as the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory affirmeth, was dead before that Peter was put to death. But Clement might think that James was alive, when as he wrote; which were far diſtant aſunder, and Meſſengers of the Chriſtians came not often unto Rome. Moreover, there is mention made of this Epiſtle in divers places of the Decretals, as moſt true, and therefore

A note for all naughty Prelates.

The words of Peter to Clement.

The Epiſtle of Clement to James doubted.

The Biſhop of Rome unproperly called the Head of the Church.

it

it ſhall be nothing from the purpoſe to rehearſe other ſayings out of the ſame Epiſtle; where he ſaith, That he which liveth rebelliouſly, and refuſeth both to learn and to do good, is rather a member of the Devil than of Chriſt, and doth ſhew himſelf rather to be an Infidel than a faithful Chriſtian. Upon which words, the Gloſs which Panormitane calleth ſingular, and is much allowed, ſaith, That if the crime or offence of the Biſhop of Rome be notorious, whereby the Church is offended, if he be incorrigible, he may be accuſed thereof. If then he may be accuſed, Ergo, alſo he may be puniſhed, and according to the exigent of the fault depoſed; otherwiſe he ſhould be accuſed in vain.

The Pope may and ought to be both accuſed and puniſhed for ill doing.

Now is there no more any place of defence left for our adverſaries, but that the Pope may be depoſed. Notwithſtanding it is not yet evident whether he may be depoſed by the Council or no, which we now take in hand to diſcourſe. And firſt of all the adverſaries will grant this unto us; that the Biſhop of Rome may be depoſed by the Church, forſomuch as the Pope being the Vicar of the Church, no man doubteth but that a Lord may put out his Vicar at his will and pleaſure: neither is it to be doubted but that the Pope is more truly called the Vicar of the Church than of Chriſt. But if the Church may depoſe the Pope, Ergo, the Council alſo may do the ſame. Alſo the Gloſs, which Panormitane in his writing doth ſo greatly commend, hath this ſentence, That the General Council is judge over the Pope in all caſes. Likewiſe the moſt ſacred Synod of Conſtantinople, which is allowed of all men, doth appoint the Biſhops of Rome to be under the judgment of the Council; and the Council to judge and determine of every doubtful matter or queſtion that doth ariſe concerning the Biſhop of Rome. Neither let any man doubt thereof, becauſe this word depoſition is not mentioned; for it is ſaid of every doubtful matter or queſtion; for if the Synod do judge of every doubt, Ergo, it ſhall alſo judge whether the Pope ſhall be depoſed or not; for that may alſo come in doubt. And becauſe we will not ſeek examples far off, John 23. whom all the World did reverence, was depoſed of his Papacy by the Council of Conſtance. Neither yet was he condemned for any Hereſie; but becauſe he did offend the Church by his manifold crimes, the ſacred Synod thought good to depoſe him; and ever ſince continually the Church hath proceeded by like example, that their opinion might ceaſe, which affirm, that the Pope cannot be depoſed, but only for Hereſie.

Whether the Pope may be depoſed by the Council or no.

The Pope is rather to be called the Vicar of the Church, than of Chriſt.

Pope John 23d. depoſed, and yet for no Hereſie.

But here is yet one thing not to be omitted, that certain men do affirm the General Councils to be of no effect, except the Pope do call and appoint them, and his authority remain with them. Whereupon they ſaid, that Dioſcorus did rebuke Paſchaſius the Biſhop of Cicil, and Legate of Pope Leo, becauſe that he did enterpriſe, without the authority of the Apoſtolick See, to call a Council at Epheſus. They alſo alledge another teſtimony of the Synod of Chalcedon; where, when mention was made of the Council of Epheſus, all the Biſhops cried out, ſaying, We ought not to call it a Council, becauſe it was neither gathered by the Apoſtolick authority, neither rightly kept. By the which authorities, they which ſay that the Councils cannot be holden without the conſent of the Pope, do think themſelves marvelouſly armed. Whoſe ſentence and opinion, if it take place and prevail as they deſire, it ſhall bring with it the great ruine and decay of the Church. For what remedy ſhall we find, if that a wicked Pope do diſturb the whole Church, deſtroy ſouls, ſeduce the people by his evil example, if finally he preach contrary unto the Faith, and fill the People full of Hereſies, ſhall we provide no ſtay or ſtop for him? Shall we ſuffer all things to run to ruine and decay with him? Who would think that the Biſhop of Rome would congregate a Council for his own correction or depoſition? for as Men are prone unto ſin, ſo would they alſo ſin without puniſhment. But when as I do peruſe ancient Hiſtories, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, I do not find this order, that Councils ſhould be gathered only at the will of the Pope; for the firſt Council of all, after that Matthias was ſubſtitute in the place of Judas, was not congregate at the commandment of Peter, but at the commandment of Chriſt, who commanded the Apoſtles that they ſhould not depart from Jeruſalem, but look for the promiſe of the Father.

Whether Councils may be congregated without the authority of the Pope.

They err that ſay the Pope ought only to appoint the Councils. Mark wherefore the Popes will have no General Councils.

The firſt Council of the Apoſtles

The ſecond Council, as touching the election of the Deacons, Peter alone did not congregate, but the Twelve Apoſtles, for it is written, The twelve Apoſtles calling together the multitude, &c.

KING Hen. 6. The ſecond Council of the Apoſtles

The third Council, which was holden as touching the taking away of circumciſion and other ceremonies of the Law, was gathered together by a general Inſpiration: for it is written, The Apoſtles and Elders came together, &c.

The third Council of the Apoſtles

The fourth Council, where certain things contained in the Law are permitted, ſeemeth to be gathered by James, and ſo diſcourſing throughout all, there can nothing be found in the primitive Church, whereby it ſhould appear that the authority of congregating of Councils ſhould pertain only unto Biſhops of Rome. Neither afterwards in the time of Conſtantinus Magnus, and other Emperors, was the conſent of the Biſhops of Rome greatly required to the congregating of Councils; and therefore it is written thus of the Synod of Chalcedon, The ſacred and univerſal Synod gathered together at Chalcedon, the chief City of the Province of Bethulia, according unto the grace of God, and the ſanctions of the moſt godly and Chriſtian Emperor. Valentinian and Martian do not make any mention of the Biſhop of Rome, although his conſent were there.

The fourth Council of the Apoſtles

General Councils ſix times paſt congregated by Emperors, and not by Popes.

Wherefore, if the Pope would reſiſt, and would have no Council congregate, yet if the greater part of the Church do judge it neceſſary to have a Council, the Council may be congregate whether the Pope will or no. The Council holden at Piſa, was not congregate by the authority and conſent of any Pope, when as Gregory did condemn it, and Benedict curſed it. The ſame alſo may be ſaid of the Council of Conſtance, which was aſſembled by the authority of Pope John, who in reſpect of the Spaniards was no true Pope. And if the Council of Piſa were no true Council, Pope John was no true Pope; whereupon his conſent to the congregation of the Council of Conſtance was of no effect. Moreover, it is more than folly to affirm, that when the Pope hath once given his conſent, if it ſhould be called back, the Council ſhould then ceaſe, for then it is no more in his power to revoke his conſent. And of neceſſity he muſt be obedient unto the Council whereof he is a member, and give place unto the greater part: and if he ſeparate himſelf from the conſent of the greater part, and depart from the Unity of the Church, he maketh himſelf a Schiſmatick.

If the greater part of the Church do conſent, a Council may be holden whether the Pope will or no.

How the Pope is a Schiſmatick.

Now, to come unto the ſecond concluſion; if it be true, as it is indeed, that the Pope is under the Council, how can the Pope then diſſolve, alter and tranſport the Council, againſt the will of the ſame? For with what countenance can we ſay, that the inferiour hath power over the ſuperiour? How can the Synod correct the Pope, if the Pope may diſſolve the Synod contrary to the will thereof? Admit that the Pope be libidinous, covetous, a ſower of war and diſcord, and a moſt mortal enemy unto the Church and the name of Chriſt, how can the Council reprove him, if he have authority to diſſolve the Council? For aſſoon as ever that the Biſhop of Rome ſhall underſtand that in the Council they do intreat or talk of his correction or puniſhment, ſtraightways he will ſeek remedy by diſſolving the Council. For as Macrobius ſaith, he that hath liberty to do more than is fit or neceſſary, will oftentimes do more than is lawful. If ſo be that the Biſhop of Rome may exempt himſelf from correction by diſſolving or tranſporting the Council, it followeth that the Council is not above him. Therefore we muſt either deny that which is aforeſaid, that the Pope is under the Council, or elſe deny that the Pope hath power to diſſolve the Council, contrary to the will and determination of the Council.

The Pope cannot diſſolve a General Council againſt the will of the ſame.

The ſaying of Macrobius.

And as this firſt concluſion is moſt true, ſo are all other concluſions falſe, which ſeem to impugn the ſame. Wherefore the ſecond concluſion of the Divines is alſo manifeſt, albeit that ſome do admit it in certain caſes, and in other ſome exclude it again. For if we do admit, that for certain cauſes the Pope may diſſolve the Council contrary to the will and determination thereof, that is to ſay, to make the Pope Judge of the Council, it were clean contrary unto the firſt concluſion.

Whether the Pope in certain caſes may diſſolve the Councils.

Now it is proved that the Council is above the Pope, and cannot be diſſolved by the Pope without conſent thereof. Now we muſt further ſee, whether it be an Article {KING Hen. 6.} of our Faith to believe it: which matter hath reſpect unto the third Concluſion. For there have been many, which albeit they did confeſs theſe two Concluſions to be true, yet they doubted whether it were a verity of the Catholick Faith or no. Therefore this ſecond part muſt be confirmed. And we muſt ſee whether it be an Article of Faith that the Pope be under the Council. Which being proved, it ſhall alſo appear to be an Article of Faith, that the Pope cannot Diſſolve the Council without the conſent thereof. Which conſequent none of the contrary part hath refuted. Firſt of all therefore we muſt inquire what Faith is, that we may thereby the better underſtand what pertaineth thereunto.

The definition of Faith.

Faith, as the Divines do define it, is a firm and ſtedfaſt cleaving unto things, believed by the Authority of him that ſpeaketh; If then we believe, as is aforeſaid, that the Pope of Rome is under the Council, ſome authority doth move us thereunto: ſo is it the Faith of him which believeth it. But the Queſtion is not whether it be an Article of Faith only, but whether it be an Article of the Catholick Faith. Wherefore we muſt again enquire what the Catholick Faith is. This word Catholick is a Greek word, and ſignifieth Univerſal. The Catholick Faith, that is to ſay, the Univerſal Faith, is not ſo called becauſe that every man holdeth it, but becauſe every man ought to believe it. For all men do not believe that God is Incarnate, but every Man ought ſo to believe. And albeit that many be againſt this Faith, yet doth it not ceaſe to be Univerſal. For what writeth the Apoſtle unto the Romans? If ſome of them have not believed, doth their misbelief make the Faith of God Vain? God forbid. Verily God is true, but every man is a lyar. Therefore to believe that the Pope is under the Council, is a point of the Catholick Faith, although ſome think the contrary: for we are bound to believe it, forſomuch as it is taken out of the Goſpel. For we are not bound only to believe thoſe things which are noted to us in the Creed, but alſo all thoſe things which are contained in the Holy Scriptures, whereof we may not deny one jot. And thoſe things which we alledge for the ſuperiority of the general Council are gathered out of the ſayings of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and the Epiſtles of Saint Paul: Ergo, we are all bound to believe it. And to prove that theſe things are taken out of the Goſpel, the Council of Conſtance doth witneſs, the which groundeth his authority upon theſe words, Die Eccleſiæ, that is to ſay, Tell it unto the Church. And where two or three are gathered together in my name, &c. And, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind, &c. with other ſuch like texts.

Rom. 3 Catholick what it is.

The definition of the Catholick Faith.

The Council of Conſtance Vide ſupra.

Whereupon ta Pope Martin the fourth being yet in Conſtance, under the licence of the Council, ſent out his Bulls, which do reckon up the Articles, whereupon they ought to be examined which had faln into any Hereſie; amongſt the which Articles he putteth this Article; Whether he doth believe the ſacred general Council to have power immediately from God, and that the Ordinances thereof are to be received of all faithful Chriſtians; which if any Man would deny, he ſhould be counted an Heretick. Wherefore, when as the ſacred Synod of Conſtance doth ſet forth this verity, as touching the ſuperiority of the general Council, what ſhould let, but that we alſo ſhould confeſs the ſame to be a verity of the Catholick Faith? For the Catholick Church being Congregate at Conſtance received that Faith, that is to ſay, believed it by the authority of him which ſpake it, that is, Chriſt and his Saints.

The words of the Council of Chalcedon, whereby he is declared an Heretick that holdeth any opinion contrary to the Council.

To this purpoſe alſo ſerve very well the words of the Synod of Chalcedon, written in this manner: It is not lawful for him that is condemned by the whole Synod to nominate any Biſhop. The determination pleaſeth all men. This is the Faith of the Fathers. He that holdeth any opinion contrary unto this, is an Heretick. And again, it is a rule, that it is not lawful to appeal from the elect and choſen Synod.

Mark the manifeſt witneſs of this moſt ſacred Synod, which ſaid, that he is an Heretick, which holdeth any opinion contrary unto the Council: But he is no Heretick, except he refuſe the Catholick Faith: Ergo, it was the Catholick Faith to believe that it was not lawful to appeal from the ſacred Council. But how was the ſame any point of the Catholick Faith? Verily forſomuch as the ſacred Synod, peruſing over the Holy Scriptures, hath received this Concluſion out of the words of Chriſt and other Holy Fathers. And like as the Synod of Chalcedon took their Concluſions out of the Holy Scriptures, ſo did the Council of Conſtance, this we now reaſon upon. And like as the one is an Article of the Catholick Faith, ſo is the other alſo. And he which holdeth any opinion contrary to either of both, is an Heretick.

Furthermore they ſeem unto me to dream and dote, which confeſſing them to be verities, will not confeſs them to be verities of Faith. For if they be verities, I pray you whereof are they verities? Truly not of Grammar, much leſs of Logick; and from Aſtronomy and Phyſick they are far diſtant. Neither is there, any other Man but a Divine, that will grant this verity, whom Scripture doth force unto it of neceſſity, if he do believe Chriſt, or his Apoſtles. Therefore this is a verity of the Catholick Faith, which all men ought to embrace; and he which obſtinately reſiſteth againſt the ſame, is to be judged an Heretick, as the third Concluſion doth affirm. Neither let any man think it hard or cruel, that he ſhould be called an Heretick, which goeth about to derogate any thing from the power of the general Council, which is confirmed by ſo many Teſtimonies and Authorities. Alſo Panormitane alledgeth Saint Jerome, ſaying, He which underſtandeth the Scripture otherwiſe than the conſent of the Holy Ghoſt doth require, albeit he do not depart from the Church, may be called an Heretick.

Panormitane is noted, and very well nipped by his own ſuppoſition.

Whereupon it followeth, that he which upon the words of Chriſt, ſaying unto Peter, Die Eccleſiæ. i. Tell it unto the Church, doth not underſtand by the Church the general Council, underſtandeth it otherwiſe than the ſenſe of the Holy Ghoſt doth require, and thereby may be noted as an Heretick. And to prove that the ſenſe of the Holy Ghoſt is otherwiſe than he doth judge it, the Council of Conſtance doth declare: The which interpreting thoſe words, Die Eccleſiæ. i. Tell it unto the Church, ſpoken by the Holy Ghoſt, underſtandeth them to be ſpoken of the general Council. By theſe and many other weightier reaſons the three aforeſaid Concluſions ſeemed true unto the Divines, and through them they alſo allowed the reſidue.

Tell the Church, that is to ſay, the general Council.

Now have we ſufficiently ſaid, as touching that which was before promiſed: neither do I think any man now to be in doubt of theſe three firſt Concluſions. Now to return again unto our Story, it is our purpoſe to declare thoſe things which happened after the Concluſions of the Divines; for there are many things worthy of remembrance, which alſo may happily be profitable unto the poſterity.

When the diſputation was ended, and a final Concluſion of theſe matters even at hand, the Archbiſhop of Millain and Panormitane with the reſidue of their fellow Ambaſſadors of the King of Arragon, and Duke of Millain, armed themſelves with all their power to let the matter, exhorting all men of their faction to withſtand it with ſtout and valiant ſtomachs.

The Biſhop of Burgen.

And firſt of all, as ſoon as the Congregation was aſſembled together, the Biſhop of Burgen exhorted them to defer the Concluſion, and to tarry for the Ambaſſadors of other Provinces, which would return from Mentz.

Panormitane's Oration.

After him Panormitane, with a grave and Rhetorical Oration, ſpake (in a manner) as followeth.

I have (ſaid he) had a Commandment by the Prophet, to cry without ceaſing. Which Prophet ſaid; Cry out, ceaſe not, lift up thy voice as a trumpet. If that in any matter at any time before he ought to have cryed, this matter ſpecially which is now in hand lacketh crying and roaring out, when as the ſtate of the Univerſal Church is intreated upon either to be preſerved, or utterly overthrown: and that he hath cryed ſo much in this manner, that he doubted not but the ſaying of David was fulfilled in him, where he ſaith, Laboravi clamans, raucæ ſunt factæ fauces meæ; I have laboured, crying out, that my jaws are become hoarſe.

Notwithſtanding that he would, both now, and as often as need ſhould require, without ceaſing ſtill cry out, and ſpecially now in this moſt difficult and weighty matter; wherein he required the ſacred Council gently to hear both him, and the Ambaſſadors of other Princes: Adding moreover four things to be conſidered in all requeſts made of any man. The which he alſo required the Fathers now preſently to mark and conſider: Who it is that maketh the requeſt. What is required. Why it ſhould be required. And what effect would come by the requeſt either granted or denied. As touching the firſt point he ſaid; The moſt noble Kings and excellent Princes with their Prelates to be of great power: and then he reckoned up the King of Caſtile, the King of Arragon, the Duke of Millain, and the Biſhops of the ſame Princes, rehearſing alſo the merits and good deeds of the ſaid Kings, and alſo of the Duke of Millain. But when as he came to make mention of the Prelates, he could not refrain himſelf, but began to wax ſomewhat hot, ſaying, that the greateſt number of Prelates were on his part. For if the Biſhops and Abbots were counted, it were not to be doubted but the greateſt part of them would have this preſent matter deferred: and forſomuch as the whole power of the Council doth conſiſt in the Biſhops, it is not to be ſuffered, that they being neglected and contemned, that ſhould be concluded, which pleaſed the greater part of the inferiors. For the Keys (ſaid he) were given to the Apoſtles, and to their ſucceſſors which are the Biſhops: alſo that there are three kinds of Synods, Epiſcopal, Provincial, and General, and none of all theſe without Biſhops. Wherefore the manner and order of the preſent Council ſeemed undecent, whereas things were not weighed according as men excel in Dignity, but by moſt voyces: Notwithſtanding, according to the moſt famous Epiſtle of Clement, the Biſhops were the pillars and keys of Heaven, and the Inferiors had no determining voice, but only a conſultative voice with them: wherefore there would be a great offence in this behalf, if a matter of Faith ſhould be determined without the Biſhops; in which matter not only the Biſhops, but alſo the ſecular Princes ought to be admitted. And forſomuch as they in the name of their Princes, deſired to be admitted to the examination of this preſent matter, and would examine the matter more fully, he complained greatly how unworthy a thing it was that they ſhould be contemned or deſpiſed.

Four things to be conſidered in every requeſt.

Panormitane would have dignity to be conſidered in Council, and not voices.

After many things ſpoken to this end and effect, he paſſed over to the ſecond part of his Oration, declaring what it was that he required; not Gold, nor Silver, neither precious Stones, neither Provinces nor Kingdoms, neither a thing hard to be done; but that only the delay of the ſacred Council was required, and that the Fathers would ſtay in the proceſs againſt the Pope, and in the concluſion and determination of matters which are now in hand. Neither ſhould the delay be long, but only until the return of the Ambaſſadors from Mentz, whom he knew well would return very ſhortly. That this was but a ſmall matter, and needed but ſmall intreaty, becauſe there was no danger in it. And alſo it ſhould ſeem injurious, not to tarry for the Ambaſſadors of the Princes which were then at Mentz, when as they were not abſent for their own private Commodity, but about the affairs of the Commonwealth, and the commodity of peace; neither had he forgotten, that at their departure they had deſired, that during their abſence there ſhould be nothing renewed concerning the matters of Eugenius.

Panormitane ſeemeth to delay the proceſs againſt the Pope.

Then immediately adjoyning the third part of his Oration, wherefore this delay was required, he concluded, that it was not required for the private Commodity of any one Man, but for a Common-wealth; not to cauſe any trouble or unquietneſs, but for the better examination of the matter, that all things might paſs with peace and quietneſs, that the matter might be ſo much the more firm and ſtable, by how much it is ratified and allowed by the conſent of many. And ſo he proceeded to the laſt part of his argument, requiring the Fathers that they would conſider, and weigh in their minds the effect that would follow, if they ſhould grant or deny this requeſt. For (ſaith he) if ye ſhall deny this ſmall petition of the Princes, they all will be agrieved therewith, and take this repulſe in ill part. They will ſay, they are contemned of you, neither will they be obedient unto you, or receive your Decrees. In vain ſhall ye make Laws, except the Princes do execute them, and all your Decrees ſhall be but vain: yet would I think this to be born withal, if I did not fear greater matters, to enſue. What if they ſhould joyn themſelves with Eugenius, who deſireth to ſpoil you, not only of your livings, but alſo of your lives? Alas! what ſlaughter and murther do the eyes of my mind behold and ſee? Would God my opinion were but vain! But if you do grant and conſent unto my petitions, they will think themſelves bound unto you; they will receive and imbrace your Decrees; and whatſoever you ſhall require of them ſhall be obtained. They will forſake your adverſary, they will ſpeak evil of him and abhor him; but you they will commend and praiſe, you they will reverence; unto you they will wholly ſubmit themſelves; and then ſhall follow that moſt excellent fruit of reformation and tranquillity of the Church. And thus he required the matter to be reſpited on all parts. At the laſt he ſaid, that except the Ambaſſadors of the Princes were heard, he had a proteſtation written, which he would command to be read before them all.

The third part of Panormitanes Oration.

Perſwaſions of Panormitane.

When Panomitane had made an end of his Oration, Lodovitus the Protonotary of Rome roſe up, a Man of ſuch ſingular wit and memory, that he was thought not to be inferior unto any of the famous Men aforetime. Inſomuch that he had always in memory whatſoever he had heard or read, and never forgat any thing that he had ſeen. This man, firſt commending Panormitane, ſaid, that he came but the day before from the Baths, and that it ſeemed unto him a ſtrange thing which was now brought in queſtion; wherein he deſired to hear other mens minds, and alſo to be heard of others, and that thoſe Prelates which were at Mentz ſhould be tarried for, to be preſent at the diſcuſſing of this matter, in the name and behalf of their Princes, which Prelates were men of great eſtimation, and the Orators of moſt mighty Princes.

The praiſe of Lodovicus the Protonotary.

He allowed alſo the ſaying of Panormitane, touching the voices of the Inferiors, that it ſeemeth not to be againſt the truth, that only Biſhops ſhould have a deciding or determining voice in Councils. And albeit that ſome in this diſputation do think that which is written in the 15. Chap. of the Acts to be their force or defence; notwithſtanding, he was nothing moved therewith, nor took it to be of any effect, albeit it was ſaid, it ſeemed good unto the Holy Ghoſt and to us; whereas both the Apoſtles and the Elders were gathered together: whereby it appeared that the others had a deciding voice with the Apoſtles. For he ſaid, that there was no argument to be gathered of the Acts of the Apoſtles, whoſe examples were more to be marvelled at, than to be followed; and that it doth not appear there, that the Apoſtles called the Elders of Duty, but that it is only declared that they were there preſent; whereupon nothing could be inferred. And that it ſeemed unto him, that the inferiors in the Council of Baſil were admitted to determine with the Biſhops, but of grace and favor only, becauſe the Biſhops may communicate the authority unto others. He alledged for Teſtimony the Biſhop of Concen, a Man of great Authority, who would not ſuffer any incorporation, or fellowſhip of the meaner ſort, and therefore neither any inferior, neither himſelf, which as yet was not made Biſhop, to have any deciding voice in the Council. Wherefore forſomuch as the matter was weighty which was now in hand, and that the Biſhops ſpake againſt it, he required the Council that they would of neceſſity ſtay and tarry for the Ambaſſadors of the Princes coming from Mentz.

Biſhops only to have determining voice in Councils.

His Oration was ſomuch the more grievous, in that many were touched with his words, and ſpecially in that point, that he ſaid the Apoſtles were not to be followed; for that all men did impugn as a blaſphemy. But here a Man may marvel, that a Man of ſuch ſuch excellency alledged no more or better matter. But in this point the memory of the Man is to be pardoned, which did not willingly ſpeak in this matter, and deſired nothing ſomuch, as not to obtain that which he intreated for. After him many other ſpake their minds, but all to this end, that they might protract the time, and defer the concluſion of theſe matters.

It is no marvel why he alledged no more or better matter; for of naughty leather no man can make a good ſhooe. And note here how God withdraweth his gifts, when men diſſemble and cloke the truth.

THen Lodovicus the Cardinal Arelatenſis, a Man of marvelous conſtancy, and born for the governance of the general Councils, gathering together the words of all the Orators, ſpake in this wiſe: Moſt reverend Fathers, this is now no new or ſtrange buſineſs, nor begun to day or yeſterday. For it is now many weeks ago ſince the {KING Hen. 6.} Concluſions were diſputed upon amongſt the Divines, and ſent into Mentz, and to all other parts of the world. After this they were diſputed upon ſix days continually, and fully diſcuſſed, and after that not without great delay approved by the Deputies; and as the truth ſeeketh no corners, ſo all things were done publickly and openly. Neither can any Man pretend ignorance, neither are the Prelates or Princes contemned. For we called all that were preſent at Baſil, and exhorted all the reſt to be preſent. And forſomuch as mention is made of the moſt Noble King of Caſtile; who is it that is ignorant that the Kings Orators were there preſent? The Biſhop of Burgen and Ebrun, men of ſingular learning and eloquence, and you alſo Panormitan your ſelf, which here repreſent the perſon of the moſt famous King of Arragon, were twice preſent your ſelf in the Chapter-houſe, and diſputed twice moſt ſubtilly, and twice declared your mind, what you thought in that matter. What do you deſire any more? Alſo out of the Territory of the Duke of Millain there was preſent the Archbiſhop of Millain, who albeit he be no Ambaſſador, yet how famous a Prelate he is, you are not ignorant. When he had ſpoken theſe words, the Archbiſhop being ſomewhat moved ſaid unto him, My Lord Cardinal, you ſupply the room of a Preſident no better than I do the place of a Dukes Orator, and began to taunt him with many words. But the Cardinal, (as he was a Man moſt patient, and would not be provoked to anger by any means) ſaid, This is it that I even now deſired. For if the Archbiſhop be an Ambaſſador, then hath the Duke no cauſe to complain, which had his Orator preſent at the diſcuſſing of thoſe matters.

Con-

Truth ſeeketh no corners.

The patience and Anſwer of Arelatenſis.

I paſs over other Princes, becauſe they do not complain. Notwithſtanding, the moſt Chriſtian King of France, had there the Biſhop of Lions, a grave and ſober Man, his Ambaſſador at the diſputation. As for other Princes, I ſee no cauſe why they ſhould be tarried for, which knowing the Council to be congregate for ſuch matters as pertain unto Faith, do not think it abſurd that the doubtful matters of Faith ſhould be declared in the Council; Whereupon if they had been willing to come, they would have been preſent ere this.

Why this matter ſhould need ſo much diſcuſſing as ſome will have, I do not underſtand. For if I be well remembred, Panormitan and alſo Ludovicus have oftentimes affirmed in this place even the very ſame thing which the Concluſions ſignifie. And if any of them now will go about to gainſay it, it will happen unto them as it did unto Didimus. To whom, when as on a time he repugned againſt a certain Hiſtory as vain and frivolous; his own Book was delivered unto him, wherein the ſame was written: So likewiſe theſe two Men (meaning Panormitan and Ludovicus the Protonotary) although they be excellently learned, and eloquent, yet may they be confuted by their own writings. Beſides this, there are Synodal Epiſtles and Decrees of this Council, which are full of ſuch Concluſions. What is it then whereupon any difficulty can be raiſed? What is it that may be impugned? Shall we now bring that again in doubt, which hath ſo often been declared, affirmed, and decreed? But (ſay they) the Princes and Ambaſſadors are abſent, which are Biſhops, by whoſe preſence the decrees ſhould be of more authority. Well, they are not only abſent which are gone to Mentz, but almoſt an infinite number of others, diſperſed throughout the whole World; whom if we ſhould tarry to look for, nothing at any time ſhould be decreed. They are all called unto the Council; they might have come if they would. To thoſe that are preſent power is given, and they ought to debate theſe matters. If any man will ſay, that they which are abſent are about the affairs of the Common-wealth; truly we ſent them not thither, but they went rather againſt the will of the Council, than with the conſent thereof.

Didimus reprehended that which was in his own Book found.

He meaneth Panormitan and Ludovicus the Protonotary.

And admit that they had been ſent by the Council, yet were not our power ſo much reſtrained but that we might reform the Church, for otherwiſe there ſhould never any thing be done in the Council: forſomuch as always ſome are ſent out by the Council, and ſome are always to be looked and tarried for, and therefore we muſt either do nothing at all, or ſeild out no Prelates from the Council. Whereas he ſaid that Prelates, and eſpecially Biſhops are contemned, that is moſt far from the truth, for they have the chief and firſt places. They ſpeak firſt, and give their voices firſt of all unto all things: and if ſo be they do ſpeak learnedly and truly, all the inferiors without any gainſaying did ſoon follow their mind.

Neither peradventure ſhall it be found untrue, that there was never any Synod, which did more amplifie the power and authority of Biſhops, than this. For what have the Biſhops been in our days, but only ſhadows? Might they not well have been called Sheepherds without the Sheep? What had they more than their Miter and their Staff, when as they could determine nothing over their Subjects? Verily in the Primitive Church the Biſhops had the greateſt power and authority: but now was it come to that point that they exceeded the common ſort of Prieſts only in their habit and revenews. But we have reſtored them again to their old State: we have reduced the collation of benefices again unto them; we have reſtored unto them the confirmation of elections; we have brought again the cauſes of the Subjects to be heard into their hands, and have made them Biſhops which were none before. What cauſe is there then, that the Biſhops ſhould ſay they are contemned of the Council? Or what injurious thing have we at any time done unto them? But Panormitan ſaith, that forſomuch as moſt Biſhops are on his part, and few againſt him, the Concluſion is not to be determined by the multitude of the inferiors: but let Panormitan remember himſelf, that this is no new kind of proceeding.

Mark O ye Biſhops, the Council of Baſil contendeth for you, and ye will not underſtand it.

This order of Proceeding, the Council ordained from the beginning, neither hath it been changed at any time ſince. And this order, Panormitan, in times paſt hath pleaſed you well enough, when as the multitude did follow your mind. But now, becauſe they do not follow your mind, they do diſpleaſe you. But the Decrees of the Council are not ſo mutable, as the Wills of men. Know ye moreover that the very ſame Biſhops which do conſent with you in word, do not conſent with you in mind, neither ſpeak the ſame ſecretly, which they now do openly. They do fear that which you told them at home in their Country, that except they would follow your mind they ſhould diſpleaſe the King. They fear the power of the Prince, and to be ſpoyled of their temporalties; neither have they free liberty to ſpeak as is requiſite in Councils. Albeit if they were true Biſhops, and true Paſtors of ſouls, they would not doubt to put their lives in venture for their Sheep, neither be afraid to ſhed their bloud for their Mother the Church.

This was a true Cardinal: out of whoſe mouth the verity did ſpeak, which feared not the threatnings of Princes, neither ſought any worldly glory or dignity.

But at this preſent (the more is the pity) it is too rare to find a Prelate in this world, which doth not preſer his temporalties before his ſpiritualties; with the love whereof they are ſo withdrawn, that they ſtudy rather to pleaſe Princes than God; and confeſs God in corners, but Princes they will openly confeſs. Of whom the Lord ſpeaketh in his Goſpel, Every one, ſaith he, that confeſſeth me before Men, I will confeſs him before my Father which is in Heaven. And contrariwiſe, the Lord will not confeſs him before his Father, which is afraid to confeſs the Lord before men. Neither is it true which Panormitan ſaith, moſt Biſhops to be on his part; for here are many Biſhops Proctors whom he doth not reckon, becauſe they are not of his opinion. Neither is the Dignity of the Fathers to be reſpected in the Council, as he ſaith, but only reaſon: nor any thing more to be looked for than the truth: neither will I for my part prefer a lye of any Biſhop, be he never ſo rich, before a verity or truth of a poor Prieſt. Neither ought a Biſhop to diſdain, if he be rude or unlearned, that the multitude doth not follow him, or that the voice of a poor learned and eloquent Prieſt ſhould be preferred before his. For wiſdom dwelleth oftner under a bare and ragged Cloak, than in rich Ornaments and Apparel.

Mark what worldly pomp dignity and wealth had brought the Prelates to in thoſe days.

Note here the great godlineſs and moſt Chriſtian ſaying of this good Biſhop.

Truth many times dwelleth under the ragged cloke.

Wherefore I pray you my Lord Biſhops, do not ſo much contemn your Inferiors; for the firſt which dyed for Chriſt, the which alſo opened unto all other the way of Martyrdom, was no Biſhop but only a Levite. As for that which Ludovicus and Panormitan do alledge touching the voices of Biſhops, I know not where they have it. Whereforſt I deſire them that they would tell me where they have found it. But if we repeat the examples of old Councils, we ſhall find that the Inferiors were always preſent with the Biſhops. And albeit that Ludovicus do forbid us the examples of the Apostles, I stay my self most upon their doings. For what is more comly for us to follow, than the Doctrine and Customs of the Primitive Church? It is said therefore in the 15. Chap. of the Acts of the Apostles, It seemed good unto the holy Ghost, and to us. The which words (to us) is referred unto them which are before named the Apostles and the Elders. Neither this word, (it seemed good) signifieth in this place consultation, but decision and determination; whereby it appeareth that other beside the Bishops had determining voices. In another place also of the said Acts, when as the Apostles should intreat upon a weighty matter, they durst not determine by themselves, but the Twelve called together the multitude.

Steven the firſt Martyr.

Note the sincerity of this good Bishop, which stayed himself upon the examples of the Primitive Church, and not upon customs and Popes.

Here Ludovicus saith, that it doth not appear that the Apostles called other of necessity: But I say unto him, how knowest thou that they did not say unto them of necessity? But forsomuch as both parts are uncertain, nothing doth prohibite us to follow the Apostles. For seeing that all things are written for our learning, it appeareth that the Apostles would give us example, that in weighty matters we should admit our Inferiors. And therefore in all Councils which were celebrate and holden afterwards, we find that Priests were also present: as in the Council of Nice, which of all other was most famous, Athanasius being then but only a Priest, whithstood the Arrians and infringed their arguments, albeit there were also other Priests. And albeit mention be made of three hundred twenty two Bishops, yet it is not denyed but that the Inferiors were there, whom I think to be omitted for this cause, for that they were almost innumerable: for as you know well enough, the denomination for the most part is taken of the most worthy.

Athanasius being but a Priest and no Bishop, vanquished an Archbishop.

In the Synod of Chalcedon (which was counted one of the four principal Synods) it is said that there were there present 600 Priests; the which name is common both unto Bishops and Priests. In other Councils the name both of Bishops and Priests is omitted, and mention made only of Fathers, which hath the same signification that this word Elders hath in the Acts of the Apostles. We have also a Testimony of the Ecclesiastical History, how that there was a Council gathered at Rome of sixty Bishops, and as many Priests and Deacons against the Novatians, which called themselves Cathary. Also, when Paul the Bishop of Antioch in the time of Galiene the Emperor, Preached that Christ was a Man of common nature, the Council assembled against him in Antioch; whereunto there came Bishops out of Cesarea, Cappadocia, out of Pontus, Asia, and from Jerusalem, many other Bishops, Priests and Deacons; and it is said, that for that cause the Council was often holden.

The name of Priests or Elders common both to Bishops and Priests.

Paul Bishop of Antioch.

And at the last in the same place, under Aurelius the Emperor, Paul was condemned of all Christian Churches which were under Heaven: neither was there any man which did more confound the said Paul, than Malchion a Priest of Antioch, which taught Rhetorcik in Antioch. But to make no long digression from the matter, we have most evident Testimonies for the defence of Inferiors. For the chief and principal amongst all the Divines, St. Austen upon the words of Matthew, where Christ saith to Peter, I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, saith, That by those words the judicial Power was given not only unto Peter, but also to the other Apostles, and to the whole Church, the Bishops and Priests. If then Priests have a judicial Power in the Church, what should let that they have not also a determining voice in the Councils. The famous Doctor Saint Jerom doth also agree with Saint Austen, whose words are these upon the Epistle of Paul unto Titus. Before that difference was made in Religion by the instigation of the Divel, or that it was spoken amongst the people, I hold of Paul, I of Apollo, and I of Cephas, the Churches were governed by the common consent and Council of the Priests; for a Priest is, the very same that a Bishop is. Wherefore all Bishops ought to understand, that they are of greater power than Priests, rather by custom than by the dispensation of the truth of God, and that they ought to rule the Church together. And this we do also gather out of Paul unto Titus, which maketh so much concordance between Bishops and Priests, that oftentimes he calleth Priests, Bishops; whereby it doth evidently appear, that Priests are not to be excluded from the conventions of Bishops and determinations of matters. Albeit, as Saint Jerom writeth that Bishops only by custom are preferred before Priests, it may be that a contrary custom may take away that custom. For if Priests ought to rule the Church together with the Bishops, it is evident that it also pertaineth unto them to decide and determine the doubtful matters of the Church.

Paul the Heretick condemned.

St. Augustines mind upon this sentence. Tibi dabo claves regni cælorum.

Bishops are of greater power than Priests, rather by custom than by dispensation of truth.

Bishops and Priests ought to rule the Church together.

Wherefore the Testimony of Saint Paul is evident; for (as he writing unto the Ephesians saith) If Christ instituted his Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, and Teachers to the work of the ministery, for the edifying of his Church, until such time as we should meet him, for this purpose, that there should be no doubt in the diversity of doctrine; who doubteth then, but that the governance of the Church is committed unto others together with the Apostles? Let these our Champions now hold their peace, and seem to be no wiser than they ought to be. The memorial of the Council of Constance is yet fresh in memory, where divers of us were present, and I my self also which was neither Cardinal nor Bishop, but only a Doctor, where I did see without any manner of doubt or difficulty, the Inferiors to be admitted with the Bishops, to the deciding of hard and doubtful matters. Neither ought we to be ashamed to follow the example of that most sacred and great Council, which also followed the examples of the Council of Pisa, and the great Council at Lateran, wherein it is not to be doubted, but that the Priests did joyntly judge together with the Bishops.

Moreover, if Abbots, as we do see it observed in all Councils, having a determining voice, which notwithstanding were not instituted by Christ; why should not Priests have the same, whose order Christ ordained by his Apostles? Hereupon also, if only Bishops should have a determining voice, nothing should be done but what pleased the Italian Nation, the which alone doth exceed all other Nations, or at the least is equal with them, in number of Bishops. And howsoever it be, I judge it in this behalf to be a work of God, that the Inferiors should be admitted to the determinations; for God hath now revealed that unto little ones which he hath hidden from the wise.

Note that Abbots were not instituted by Christ.

Italy surmounteth all other Nations in number of Bishops.

Behold you do see the zeal, constancy, uprightness, and magnanimity of these Inferiors. Where should the Council now be, if only Bishops and Cardinals should have their voice? Where should the Authority of the Councils be? Where should the Catholick Faith be? Where should the Decrees and Reformation be? For all things have now a long time been under the will of Eugenius, and he had now obtained his wicked and naughty purpose, except these Inferiors, whom ye now contemn, had withstood him. These are they which have contemned the privation made by Eugenius. These I say, are they which have not regarded his threatnings, spoil and persecution. These are they which being taken, imprisoned and tormented, have not feared to defend the truth of the Council; yea, even these are they, who albeit they were by Eugenius delivered over a prey, yet would they still continue in the sacred Council, and feared not to suffer War, Famine, and most cruel Pestilence: and finally, what thing is it, that these men have not willingly suffered for the right and equity of the Council? You might have heard this Inferior sort, even in the midst of their Tribulations, with a loud voice cry out and say, Albeit that all Men become obedient unto that Subverter of the Church Eugenius, and that every Man do depart from the verity of the Faith and constitutions of the Fathers, consenting unto the Commandments of Eugenius, yet we and our Brethren will be constant, and doubt not to die for the truth and traditions of the holy Fathers, the which indeed they have done. Neither could they be feared with threatnings or discouraged with any spoils, neither could any fear or hope turn them from their most blessed purpose. And (to speak somewhat of mine own order) whether any Cardinals have done the like or no, that judge you.

Note the terrible persecution of those days, and the great constancy of the godly, for the truths sake.

O zeal of Faith, worthy the crown of Martyrdom?

As for the Bishops, whom Panormitan alone would have to determine, you see how few of them are on our part, and even they which are here present are not able by vertue to overcome iniquity, they fear the Tertene power, and commit offence with their hast. Have ye not heard how they all said, they would consent unto the Kings will and pleasure? But the Inferiors are they which have had truth, right.

Eccles. 4.

The Bishops fear the earthly power, but no God.

KING Hen. 6.

righteouſneſs, and God himſelf before their eyes, and they are greatly to be commended for ſhewing themſelves ſuch Men unto the Church of God. But why do I defend the cauſe of theſe inferiors? When as ſome will alſo exclude thoſe Biſhops which are but Biſhops by name and title, and have no poſſeſſion of the Church, from our company, not underſtanding that whileſt they go about to put back thoſe men, they do condemn Peter, and the other Apoſtles, who (as it is evident) were long without any great flock; neither was Rome unto Peter, nor Jeruſalem unto James, at any time wholly obedient; for at that time no great number of people, but a ſmall flock believed in Chriſt.

The Biſhops of the Primitive Church what they were.

For, I pray you, what is that we ſhould enquire of theſe Biſhops? They have no flock; but that is not their fault. They have no revenews: but Money maketh not a Biſhop, and as the Lord ſaith, Beati pauperes ſpiritu, that is, Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit. Neither was their any rich Biſhops in the Primitive Church, neither did the ancient Church reject Dionyſius Biſhop of Millain, Euſebius Biſhop of Vercelles, or Hilary Biſhop of Pictavia, although they were never ſo poor, and baniſhed without a flock. But if we will grant the truth, the poor are more apt to give judgment, than the rich: becauſe that riches bring fear, and their poverty cauſeth liberty. For the poor Men do not fear Tyranny as our rich Men do, which being given over unto all kind of vanities, idleneſs and ſloath, will rather deny Chriſt, than lack their accuſtomed pleaſures; * whom not their flock, but their revenews make Biſhops, delighting ſo much in Riches, that they judge all poor Men unhappy. But, as Cicero ſaith; Nothing can happen better unto a wiſe Man, than mediocrity of ſubſtance. Whereupon it is written in the Goſpel; It is eaſier for a Camel to paſs thorow a needles eye, than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Poor men more meet to give judgment than rich: for riches, wealth, and dignity, bring fear: but poverty cauſeth liberty.

* The Biſhops in this age of the Church, what they are.

But now to return to a more full Declaration of Panormitans words, I determine to paſs over two points which he propounded in the beginning of his Oration, that is, Qui petant, & cur petant, that is, who maketh the petition, and for what cauſe they make their petition. We grant that they are great Men, and Men of power, and (as he doth affirm) that they have deſerved good of the Church; neither do I doubt but that they are moved thereunto with a ſincere affection. But whether it be a ſmall matter that is required, or that the ſame effects would riſe thereupon which he ſpake of; it is now to be enquired. A delay (ſaith he) is required; a delay for a few days. A ſmall matter; a matter of no importance, a matter eaſie to be granted. Notwithſtanding, let Panormitan here mark well, that he requireth a delay in a matter of Faith. The verities are already declared; they be already diſcuſſed and determined. If now there ſhould be but a little delay, it would grow to a long delay: for oftentimes the delay of one Moment, is the loſs of a whole Year; hereof we have many examples. Hannibal when he had obtained his Victory at Cannas, if he had gone ſtraight unto Rome, by all Mens judgments he had taken the City. But forſomuch as he did defer it until the next day, the Romans having recovered their force again, he was ſhut out, and deſerved to hear this Opprobry:

In matters of Faith and Religion, there ought to be no delays.

Vincere ſcis Hanibal, uti victoria neſcis.

Hannibal thou knoweſt Victory to get,
But how to uſe it thou know'ſt not yet.

Likewiſe the French-men, after they had taken Rome and beſieged the Capitol, whileſt that they greedily ſought to have great ſums of Money, and delayed the time in making of their Truce, Camillus coming upon them did moſt ſhamefully drive them out again. But what need I to rehearſe old Stories, when as our own examples are ſufficient for us? Ye know your ſelves how often theſe delays have been hurtful unto you, and how often the delay of a few days hath grown to a long tract of time. For now this is the Eighth year that you have ſpent in delays; and you have ſeen, that always of one delay another hath ſprung and riſen. Wherefore I do require that Panormitan ſhould conſider, that the Concluſion being this day diſturbed, we know not whether it will be broughtt to paſs hereafter again or no; many impediments or lets may riſe. Neither doth Panormitan ſay, that this delay being obtained, he would afterward conſent with his Fellows unto the Concluſions; for he denyeth that he hath any Commandment thereunto: and (which is more to be conſidered) he ſaith that the Ambaſſadors at their return from Mentz may bring ſuch news, whereby theſe Concluſions may be omitted; as though any thing were more excellent than the truth.

The Eighth year of the Council of Baſil. How fruitfully they fought delays.

The which thing doth manifeſtly declare, that they do not ſeek delays for the better examination of the matter, but for to impugn the Concluſions the more ſtrongly. Neither do I agree with Panormitan, as touching the effects which he ſaid ſhould riſe either of the denial, or granting of the requeſts; For I ſee no cauſe why the Princes ſhould greatly require and delay. There are no Letters of any Prince come unto us as touching ſuch requeſt, neither is there any Man lately come from them, neither is it greatly material unto them, but that the matters of Faith ſhould be determined. But this is a moſt pernicious Concluſion which Panormitan hath made, and not to be looked for at the hands of thoſe moſt godly Princes; where he ſaith, if we do pleaſe them, they will take our part. If contrariwiſe, they will decline unto Eugenius, and wholly reliſt and rebel againſt us. This is a marvelous word, and a wonderful Concluſion, altogether unworthy to be ſpoken of ſuch a Man. The Decrees of the Council of Conſtance are, that all manner of Men, of what ſtate or condition ſoever they be, are bound to the Ordinances and Decrees of the general Councils. But Panormitans words do not tend to that effect, for he would not have the Princes obedient unto the Council, but the Council to be obedient unto the Princes.

The decrees of the Council of Conſtance.

Alas, moſt Reverend Fathers, Alas, what times and days, what manners and conditions are theſe? Into what miſery are we now brought? How ſhall we at any time bring to paſs, that the Pope being Chriſts Vicar, and (as they ſay) another Chriſt in Earth, ſhould be ſubject unto the Council of the Chriſtians, if the Council it ſelf ought to obey worldly Princes? But I pray you look for no ſuch things at the Princes hands. Do not believe that they will forſake their Mother the Church. Do not think them ſo far alienate from the truth, that they would have juſtice ſuppreſſed.

If theſe things ſeem ſo untolerable, what ſhall we ſay, when as they make the Pope a God?

The Concluſions, whereupon the controverſie is, are moſt true, moſt holy, moſt allowable. If the Princes do refuſe them, they do not reſiſt againſt us, but againſt the Holy Scriptures, yea, and againſt Chriſt, himſelf; which you ought neither to believe, neither was it comly for Panormitan ſo to ſay. Panormitan (by your licence be it ſpoken) you have uttered moſt cruel words, neither do you ſeem to go about any other matter than to inculcate terror and fear into the minds of the Fathers: for you have rehearſed great perils and dangers, except we ſubmit our ſelves unto the Princes.

But you moſt Reverend Fathers, ſhall not be afraid of them that kill the body, the ſoul they cannot kill; neither ſhall ye forſake the truth, although you ſhould ſhed your blood for the ſame. Neither ought we to be any whit more ſlack in the quarrel of our Mother Church, and the Catholick Faith, than thoſe moſt holy Martyrs, which have eſtabliſhed the Church with their blood. For why ſhould it be any grievous matter unto us to ſuffer for Chriſt, which for our ſakes hath ſuffered ſo cruel and grievous death? Who when he was an immortal God, void of all Paſſions, took upon him the ſhape of a mortal Man, and feared not for our redemption to ſuffer torments upon the Croſs. Set before your eyes the Prince of the Apoſtles, Peter, Paul, Andrew, James, and Bartholomew, and (not to ſpeak only of Biſhops) mark what Stephen, Laurence, Sebaſtian and Fabian did. Some were Hanged, ſome Beheaded, ſome Stoned to death, other ſome Burned, and others Tormented with moſt cruel and grievous Torments ſuffered for Chriſts ſake. I pray you for Gods ſake let us follow the example of theſe Men. If we will be Biſhops and ſucceed in honour, let us not fear Martyrdom. Alas, what effeminate hearts have we? Alas, what faint hearted people are we? They in times paſt by the contempt of death converted the whole World, which was full of Gentility and Idolatry and we through our ſluggiſhneſs and deſire of life, do bring the Chriſtian Religion out

They which teach this Doctrine, are Hereticks and Schiſmaticks: but bleſſed are thoſe Hereticks, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven.

A Chriſtian exhortation to conſtancy and Martyrdom.

This came ſo to paſs twenty three years after, when Chriſtendom loſt Conſtantinople, and all the Eaſt parts unto the Turks.

out of the whole World into one corner; and I fear greatly, leſt the little alſo which is left, we ſhall loſe through our cowardlineſs, if that by following Panormitans mind, we do commit the whole governance and defence of the Church unto the Princes. But now play the ſtout and valiant men in this time of Tribulation, and fear not to ſuffer death for the Church, which Curtius feared not to do for the City of Rome: which Mencotheus for Thebes, and Codrus for Athens, willingly took upon them.

Examples of good men dying for their Country.

Not only the Martyrs, but alſo the Gentiles might move and ſtir us to caſt off all the fear of death. What is to be ſaid of Theremeus the Athenian? with how joyful heart and mind, and pleaſant countenance, did he drink the poiſon? What ſay you unto Socrates that moſt excellent Philoſopher? did he either weep or ſigh when he ſupped up the poiſon? They hoped for that which we are moſt certain of: Not by dying to die, but to change this preſent life for a better.

Truly we ought to be aſhamed, being admoniſhed by ſo many Examples, inſtructed with ſo great Learning, yea and redeemed with the precious blood of Chriſt, ſo greatly to fear death.

Cato writeth not of one or two men, but of whole Legions, which have chearfully and couragiouſly gone unto thoſe places, from whence they knew they ſhould not return. With like courage did the Lacedemonians give themſelves to death at Thermopylæ, of whom Symonides writeth thus:

Dic hoſpes, Spartanos te hic vidiſſe tacentes,
Dum ſanctis Patriæ legibus obſequimur.

Report thou ſtranger, the Spartans here to lie,
Whiles that their Countrey Laws they obeyed willingly.

The noble Lacedemoniant.

Neither judge the contrary, but that the Lacedemonians went even of purpoſe unto death; unto whom their Captain Leonidas ſaid, O ye Lacedemonians, go forward couragiouſly, for this day we ſhall ſup together with the infernal gods. But I, moſt reverend Fathers, do not invite you unto the Infernals, as he did his Lacedemonians, but unto the celeſtial and everlaſting joys of Paradiſe, if that you can ſuffer death for the truths ſake, and patiently abide the threatnings of theſe Princes, if there be any threatnings at all. I call you unto that eternal Glory, where there is no alteration of State, nothing decayeth or fadeth; where all good and perpetual things do abound: where no man wanteth, no man envieth another, no man ſtealeth from another, no man violently taketh from another, no man baniſheth, no man murdereth; and finally no man dieth. Where all men are bleſſed and happy, all are of one mind and one accord, all are immortal, all are of like eſtate; and that all men have, every man hath, and that every man hath, all men have. Which things if we well conſider, we ſhall truly anſwer Panormitan, as Theodorus Cyrenenſis is ſaid to have anſwered Lyſimachus the King, when he threatned to hang him; who ſaid, I pray you threaten theſe horrible things unto your Courtiers: as for Theodorus, it maketh no matter whether he rot above the ground, or under the ground. So likewiſe let us anſwer unto the Princes, if there be any that do threaten us, and let us not fear their Torments.

The bleſſed ſtate of the life to come.

The worthy anſwer of Theodorus the Cyrenenſis.

What doth a longer life prevail to help us? No man hath lived too ſhort a time, which hath obtained the perfect gift of Vertue. And if the death which a man ſuffereth in the quarrel of his Country, ſeemeth not only to be glorious amongſt the Rhetoricians, but alſo happy and bleſſed: what ſhall we ſay for theſe deaths which are ſuſtained for the Country of all Countries, the Church? Truly moſt reverend Fathers, it is too much that our Adverſaries do perſwade themſelves of you, for they judge you fearful, ſluggiſh and faint-hearted; and therefore they do object Princes unto you, becauſe they think that you will not ſuffer hunger, thirſt, exile in the quarrel and defence of the Church. But I think you will eſteem it no hard matter, for the obtaining of everlaſting life, to do the ſame which Ship-men do for the obtaining of tranſitory riches, to put themſelves in danger of the Sea and Wind, and ſuffer moſt cruel ſtorms.

No death to be feared for Chriſts Church.

Example of Mariners and Hunters.

The Hunters lie abroad in the nights in the Snow, in the Hills and Woods, and are tormented with cold; yet have they none other reward, but ſome wild Beaſt of no value or price. I pray you what ought you then to do whoſe Reward ſhall be Paradiſe? I am aſhamed of your ignavy, when as I read that Women alſo even young Maidens have violently obtained Heaven through their Martyrdom, and we are made afraid only with the name of death. This River of Rheine, which runneth along by the City, in times paſt hath carried eleven thouſand Virgins unto Martyrdom. In India (as Cicero writeth) when any man was dead, his wives (for there they had many wives) came into contention who ſhould be burned with him; and ſhe whom he loved beſt having vanquiſhed the other (all the reſt joyfully following her) was caſt into the fire with the dead Karcaſs of her Husband, and burnt. The other which were overcome, departed full of heavineſs and ſorrow, wiſhing rather to have died than live.

Exampl. of the eleven thouſand Virgins.

The which courage we now taking upon us for Chriſts ſake, will anſwer Panormitan even as the Lacedemonians anſwered Philip, who when as by his Letters he threatned them, that he would ſtop all that which they went about, they asked him, Whether he would alſo let them to die. Therefore, as you are excellent men, ſo uſe your vertue, which is always free, and remaineth always invincible. For you do know that Power is given of the Lord, and ſtrength from the moſt High; who will take account of your works, and examine your thoughts, unto whom ye ſhould be careful to render a good account, judging rightly and keeping the law of righteouſneſs, and in all things walking according to the will of God, and not according to the will of men.

And whereas the Ambaſſadors of Eugenius do openly preach and declare a new Doctrine, extolling the Biſhop of Rome above the univerſal Church, to the end that ignorant Souls be not ſnared, ye ſhall not ceaſe or leave to publiſh the three firſt Concluſions, following the example of the Apoſtle Paul, which would in no point give place unto Peter when he walked not according to the Goſpel. As for the other matters which do reſpect the only perſon of Eugenius (becauſe Panormitan and the other Ambaſſadors of the Princes ſhall not ſay that we do paſs our bounds) ye ſhall defer them for this preſent.

When as Cardinal Arelatenſis had made an end of this Oration, there was a great noiſe, crying out and brawling every where. The Preſidents Commandments were not regarded, neither was the accuſtomed order obſerved; for ſometimes they ſpake unto Panormitan, ſometime unto Ludovicus; no man was ſuffered to ſpeak, but in haſte the Biſhops brawled with Biſhops, and the Inferiors with their Fellows. All was full of contention and debate; which even as Ludovicus the Patriarch of Aquileia perceived, a man of no leſs courage and ſtomach, than of nobility and birth, being alſo a Duke, for the zeal that he bare unto the univerſal Church, turning himſelf unto Panormitan and Ludovicus the Protonotary, he ſaid, Do not think the matter ſhall ſo paſs, you know not yet the manners of the Germans, for if you go forward on this faſhion, it will not be lawful for you to depart out of this Country with whole heads. With which words Panormitan, Ludovicus, and the Archbiſhop of Millain being ſtricken (as it were with Lightning from Heaven,) roſe up, and ſaid, Is our liberty thus taken from us? What meaneth it that the Patriarch doth threaten us, that our heads ſhould be broken? And turning themſelves unto John Earl of Dierſtein, which then ſupplied the Protectors place, they demanded of him whether he would defend the Council, and preſerve all men in their liberty, or no?

Lewis Patriarch of Aquileia Duke of Deak in Swevia.

The Earl of Dierſtein.

The Citizens alſo and Senators were preſent to provide and foreſee that no offence ſhould riſe; for the Citizens obſerved always this order, that they would be preſent in all Affairs, which they ſuppoſed would breed diſſenſion, foreſeeing ſpecially that no tumults ſhould riſe, otherwiſe than with words. They uſed always ſuch a marvelous foreſight and providence, that no man unto this day could have any cauſe againſt them, to complain for violating their promiſe. Wherefore if at any time any Citizens have deſerved well at the hands of the Church, ſurely this praiſe is to be given unto the Baſilians. Theſe men together with John Earl of Dierſtein, being preſent in the Aſſembly of the Fathers, gave a ſign of preſervation of their liberty. The Earl (albeit he was moved at the ſtrange-

The praiſe of the Citizens of Baſil.

{KING Hen.6.} ſtrangeneſs of the matter, (for he would not have thought ſo great contentions could have riſen amongſt wiſe men) anſwered by his Interpreter, That they all ſhould be of good chear. For the Emperors ſafe Conduct ſhould be obſerved and kept even to the uttermoſt: neither ſhould the Patriarch nor any other once violate the liberty, or take away the aſſurance granted by the Emperor. Notwithſtanding he deſired the Patriarch that he would call back his words again, and not to ſpeak any more in ſuch ſort. But that famous Father, being nothing at all moved or troubled, committed his whole mind unto John Bacheiſtein, Auditor of the Chamber, a man both grave and eloquent to be declared. Who affirmed that the Patriarchs mind was not to threaten any man, or diſturb the liberty of the Council, but to move the Fathers unto conſtancy, that they ſhould be mindful of the Reformation which they had promiſed unto the whole World, and not to ſay one thing to day, and another to morrow; for if they would ſo do, it were to be feared, leſt the Laity ſeeing themſelves deluded, and deſpairing of Reformation, ſhould riſe againſt the Clergy.

Therefore he moniſheth the Fathers to foreſee and provide for the peril, that they ſhould not depart from the Council, nothing being determined or done; and finally he deſired pardon, if in his words he had offended either againſt the Council, Panormitan, or any other man. Whereby he declared it to be true which is commonly ſaid, That Humility is the ſiſter of Nobility: both which did very excellently appear in this man. Yet for all this could not the humility of the Patriach ſtop or ſtay their noiſe or cries: for as often as mention was made of reading the Concordatum, great noiſe and rumors were ſtill made to ſtop the ſame. Then Amodeus Archbiſhop of Lions, and Primate of all France, a man of great reverence and authority, being touched with the zeal of Faith, which he ſaw there to be ſtopt and ſuppreſſed, ſaid, Moſt reverend Fathers, I have now a great occaſion to ſpeak: for it is now ſeven years or more, that I have been amongſt you, yet have I never ſeen the matter at that point which it is now at, moſt like unto a Miracle; for even preſently I do behold moſt wonderful ſigns of Miracles: for it is no ſmall matter that the Lame do walk, the Dumb do ſpeak, and that poor men preach the Goſpel. Whereupon I pray you cometh this ſudden Change? How happeneth it that thoſe which lie lurking at home, are now ſuddenly ſtart up? Who hath given hearing to the Deaf, and ſpeech to the Dumb? Who hath taught the poor men to preach the Goſpel? I do ſee here a new ſort of Prelates come in, which unto this preſent have kept ſilence, and now begin to ſpeak. Is not this like to a Miracle? I would to God they came to defend the Truth, and not to impugn Juſtice.

But this is more to be marveled at than any Miracle, that I do ſee the beſt learned men of all impugn our Concluſions which are moſt certain and true: And they which now reprove them, in times paſt allowed them. You are not ignorant how that Ludovicus the Protonotary preached theſe Verities at Lovaine and at Collen, and brought them from thence confirmed with the authorities of the Univerſities. Wherefore albeit that he be now changed, yet is the Truth in no point altered. And therefore I deſire you and beſeech you all, that ye will not give ear unto theſe men, which albeit they are moſt excellently learned, yet have they no conſtancy in them, which doth adorn all other Vertues.

When he had ended his Oration, Ludovicus the Protonotary riſing up, ſaid, It is moſt true that I brought thoſe Verities, but you do call them Verities of Faith, which addition ſeemeth very doubtful unto me. When he had ſpoken theſe words, Cardinal Arelatenſis required that the Concordatum of the twelve men ſhould be read, and many whiſpered him in the ear, that he ſhould go forward, and not alter his purpoſe.

Then Panormitan, as ſoon as the Concordatum began to be read, riſing up with his Companions and other Aragons, cried out with a loud Voice, ſaying, You Fathers do contemn our Requeſts, you contemn Kings and Princes, and deſpiſe Prelates; but take heed leſt whilſt that ye deſpiſe all men, you be not deſpiſed of all men. You would conclude, but it is not your part for to conclude. We are the greateſt part of Prelates, we make the Council, and it is our part to conclude: and I in the name of all other Prelates do conclude, that it is to be deferred and delayed. With this word there ſprang ſuch a noiſe and rumor in the Council, as is accuſtomed to be in battel, with the ſound of Trumpets, and noiſe of Horſemen when two Armies joyn: Some curſing that which Panormitan went about, other ſome allowing the ſame: So that diverſity of minds made divers contentions.

Then Nicholas Amici, a Divine of Paris, according unto his Office, ſaid, Panormitan, I appeal from this your Concluſion, to the Judgment of the Council here preſent; neither do I affirm any thing to be ratified which you have done, as I am ready to prove, if it ſhall ſeem good. The contrary part ſeemed now to be in the better place, for they had already concluded. The other part had neither concluded, neither was it ſeen how they could conclude amongſt ſo great Cries and Uproars. Notwithſtanding, amongſt all this troublous noiſe, John Segovius, a ſingular Divine of the Univerſity of Salamantine, lacked not audience; for the whole Council was deſirous to hear him: wherefore all men as ſoon as he roſe up kept ſilence, and he perceiving that they were deſirous to hear him ſpeak, began in this ſort:

Moſt reverend Fathers, the zeal and love of the Houſe of God forceth me now to ſpeak: and I would to God that I had been either blind this day, not to have ſeen thoſe things which have happened, or that I had been deaf, that I ſhould not have heard thoſe words which have been ſpoken. Who is it that is ſo ſtony or hard-hearted, which can abſtain from tears, when as the authority of the Church is ſo ſpoiled, liberty taken away both from us and the Council, and that there is no place given unto the verity? O ſweet Jeſus, why haſt thou forſaken thy Spouſe? Behold and look upon thy people, and help us if our Requeſts are juſt.

We come hither to provide for the neceſſity of the Church, we require nothing for our ſelves, and our deſire is only that truth might appear. We truſted now to have concluded upon the Verities which were ſometimes allowed in the ſacred Deputations; The Orators of the Princes are preſent, and require the Concluſions to be deferred. But we be not unmindful of thoſe things which Ambroſe wrote unto Valentinian the Emperor in this manner. If we ſhall intreat upon the order of the holy Scripture and ancient times paſt, who is it that will deny but that in caſe of Faith (I ſay in caſe of Faith) the Biſhops ought to judge upon Chriſtian Emperors, and not Emperors upon Biſhops? Neither do we admit their Petition but upon moſt urgent cauſes. Notwithſtanding we heard them patiently and willingly, whilſt that they did ſpeak even ſo long as they would.

But now if any of our part would ſpeak, by and by he is interrupted, troubled and letted. What honeſty is this? what modeſty or gravity? is it lawful ſo to do in the Council? where is the Decree of the Council of Tholouſe now become? (where are our Decrees, which do not only prohibit tumults, but alſo ſmall bablings and talk?) They ſay, it is becauſe we contemn them; but they are they, which not only contemn the Council, but alſo reſiſt the ſame. The Patriarch ſpake but one ſmall word againſt them, and that of no evil intent or purpoſe, and by and by they complained that their liberty was broken: but they, when as they do enforce the Council, when as they forbid the Preſident to ſpeak, and will not ſuffer the Ordinances to be read, do not judge that they do any thing contrary to the liberty of the Council. They ſay, they are the Council themſelves, and yet they intreat the Council. Theſe things do not I underſtand; for if they be the Council, why do they intreat themſelves? If they be not the Council, why do they not ſuffer the Council to ſpeak? Why do they not look for an anſwer of him to whom they make their Petitions?

Truly this is too much violence, and certes our patience is alſo too much, to ſuffer ſuch exceſs even in the face of the Church. But this doth moſt of all grieve me, and this do I moſt marvel at, that Panormitan, a man of ſingular wit and Doctrine, did conclude without any diſcuſſing or deciding of the Deputies, and without the examination of the twelve men, or any rite or order. The which, except mine eyes had beheld and ſeen, I would ſcarcely believe,

Humility ſiſter to nobility.

Biſhops that lie at home, have tongues here to ſpeak for the Pope.

Mark how they are turned back which ſometime favoured the truth, and are now become lyars and flatterers.

believe, if any other man ſhould report it unto me of him. Neither do I yet know whether I may ſufficiently credit my ſelf, the matter ſeemeth ſo terrible: for I do not ſee by what authority his concluſion doth ſtand, except it be by the Authority of his King, Who, he ſaith, will have it ſo. But you moſt reverend Fathers, take heed that ye bring in no ſuch cuſtom; for ſo it ſhall come to paſs, that in all matters, a few froward Prelates ſhall have one to conclude for them.

And albeit Panormitan hath proved (as he thinketh) by ſtrong reaſons, that the verity ought to be deferred, yet notwithſtanding, I do require you moſt reverend Fathers to follow the example of the Apoſtle, who (as Arelatenſis hath very well declared) would not give one hours reſpite unto Peter, when he ſwarved from the truth of the Goſpel. The Faith is ſpeedily to be relieved and holpen; neither doth any thing ſuſtain more danger by delays, than Faith doth. For Hereſies except they be rooted out at the firſt, when they are once grown, are hardly taken away. Wherefore, I deſire you ſpeedily to help and aid, Hoiſe up your Sails, and lanch out your Oars. What ſhould we tarry looking for either the Prelates or the Princes? You are now in conflict: I only deſire that you would haſten unto the Victory. Regard not the threatnings of thoſe Princes, neither the opprobries of thoſe contumelious perſons: For you are bleſſed, ſaith the Lord, when as men curſe you and perſecute you, ſpeaking all evil againſt you, making lyes and ſlanders upon you for my ſake; rejoyce and be glad, for great is your Reward in Heaven. What is it I pray you that the Princes do ſo much object againſt us? Is not our Lord God able to take us out of the Furnace of hot burning fire, and deliver us out of the hands of thoſe Princes? I beſeech you moſt reverend Fathers and loving Brethren, have no leſs hope in Jeſus Chriſt, than Sidrach, Miſach, and Abednego had, which feared not that old King Nabuchodonoſor: and let the people know, That the moſt High ruleth over the Kingdoms of men, and giveth them unto whom he pleaſeth. God beholdeth all things from above; He is (I ſay) in the midſt amongſt us; wherefore are ye then afraid? Be of good courage, and ſhew your ſelves as a ſtrong wall for the Church of God; ſuffer not the Faith to periſh under your hands. The Almighty God is preſent with you. He is preſent that will defend you. Fear not them which ſeek only to kill the body. Do juſtice and equity, and be aſſured that he will not deliver you over into the hands of the Backbiter and Slanderer. Again I ſay unto you, ſhew your ſelves valiant and ſtout, defend your Mother the Church. And unto thee, O thou Preſident, I ſay, that thou oughteſt rather to pleaſe God than man; for if thou depart thence without a final concluſion, know aſſuredly that thou ſhalt render account in the ſtrait Judgment of God. And thus without any more words he ſate down in his place.

Paul would give to Peter no reſpite when he ſwarved awry.

Mark the great conſtancy and Chriſtian zeal of this man.

An exhortation to conſtancy.

In the mean time many grave and ancient men had exhorted Panormitan that he ſhould give over his concluſion. The Biſhop of Burgen was very inſtant and earneſt with him, that he ſhould make unity and concord amongſt the Fathers, and went about to make an unity with all men. But neither the Fathers of the Council were determined to depart without a concluſion; neither was Panormitan minded to alter his intent and purpoſe. All things were diſturbed, neither did the Prelates ſit in their Seats, as they were accuſtomed, but as every mans affection led him. Some went to the Cardinal Arelatenſis, ſome unto Panormitan, and exhorted them, as if they had been Princes or Rulers of Armies. Then Arelatenſis knowing the matter to be in danger; and that there was no ready way to make a concluſion, thought to uſe ſome policy to appeaſe the tumult.

The Biſhop of Burgen ſeeketh concord.

Moſt reverend Fathers, ſaid he, we have received now Letters out of France, which declare unto me marvelous things; that there are incredible news ſprung up there, which if you will give me willing Audience, I will declare unto you. By this means there was a ſudden ſilence throughout the whole Council, and by this marvelous policy he made all men attentive to hear. When he ſaw he had free liberty to ſpeak, without either Fable or Hiſtory of any Letters ſent, he opened the whole order of the matter, and as it is requiſite in an Orator, came by little and little to the principal Point, ſaying, That Eugenius his Meſſengers filled all France, preaching a new Doctrine, and extolling the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome above the General-Council: againſt whom, except ſpeedy remedy were found, it would come to paſs that many would give credit unto them, and therefore the ſacred Council ought of neceſſity to provide remedy, and of neceſſity to conclude upon the Verities which were examined, that thereby the temerity of the Eugenians might be repreſſed; which Verities, albeit they were eight in number, yet was it not the Fathers intent to conclude upon them all, but only the three firſt: even as I alſo (ſaith he) here do conclude in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt.

How men be ready to hear news.

Note the godly policy of the Cardinal.

{ KING } { Hen. 6. }

The concluſion of the Council.

When he had finiſhed his Oration, with a chearful and merry countenance riſing up, he departed. Some of them kiſſed him, and ſome of them kiſſed the skirts of his Garments. A great number followed him, and greatly commended his wiſdom, that being a Frenchman born, had that day vanquiſhed the Italians, which were men of great policy. Howbeit this was all mens opinion, that it was done rather by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt, than by the Cardinals own power. The other of the contrary Faction, as men bereft of their minds, hanging down their heads, departed every man to his Lodging. They went not together, neither ſaluted one another, ſo that their countenances declared unto every man that they were overcome. Something more alſo is reported of Panormitan, that when he came to his Lodging, and was gone unto his Chamber, he complained with himſelf upon his King, which had compelled him to ſtrive againſt the truth, and put both his Soul and good name in danger of loſing; and that in the midſt of his tears and complaints he fell aſleep, and did eat no meat until late in the evening, for very ſorrow for that he had neither ignorantly, neither unwillingly impugned the truth.

The Holy Ghoſt working againſt the Pope.

The ſorrow of Panormitan for impugning the Truth.

After this there was great conſultation amongſt the Eugenians, what were beſt to be done in this matter. Some thought good to depart and leave the Council, otherſome thought it meeter to tarry, and withall endeavour to reſiſt that nothing ſhould further be done againſt the Eugenians; and this opinion remained amongſt them. The next day after, being the fifteenth day of April, the Archbiſhop of Lions and the Biſhop of Burgen, calling together the Prelates in the Chapter-houſe of the great Church, began many things as touching peace. The Biſhop of Burgen perſwaded that there ſhould be Deputations appointed that day, unto whom the Archbiſhop of Lions ſhould give power to make an agreement. Unto whom anſwer was made, as they thought very roughly, but as other judged, gently, but notwithſtanding juſtly and truly: For they ſaid, There could be no unity of Concord made before the Adverſaries confeſſed their fault, and asked pardon therefore.

The Biſhop of Lions and Burgen.

The juſt anſwer of the Council.

The day following the ſaid Biſhop of Burgen, with the other Lombards and Cathelans, went unto the Germans, and from thence unto the Senate of the City, ſpeaking much as touching the prohibiting of Schiſms. The Germans referred themſelves to thoſe things which the Deputation ſhould determine. The Senate of the City (as they were great men in wiſdom, which would do nothing without diligent advice and deliberation) anſwered, That the matter pertained not unto them, but unto the Council: the Fathers whereof were moſt wiſe men, and were not ignorant what pertained unto the Chriſtian Faith; and if there were any danger toward, it ſhould be declared unto the Council, and not to the Senate. For they believe that the Elders of the Council, if they were premonished, would foreſee that there ſhould no hurt happen: as for the Senate of the City, it was their duty only to defend the Fathers and to preſerve the promiſe of the City. With this anſwer the Biſhop of Burgen departed.

The anſwer of them both.

In the mean time the Fathers of the Council had drawn out a form of a Decree upon the former Concluſions, and had approved the ſame in the ſacred Deputations. By this time the Princes Orators were returned from the Aſſembly at Mentz, and holding a Council amongſt themſelves they had determined to let the Decree. The ninth day of May, there was a general Convocation holden, whereunto all men reſorted, either part putting forth himſelf unto the conflict.

The form of the Decrete is written and approved.

The Princes Ambaſſadors were called by the Biſhop of Lubeck and Conrade de Winſperge the Protector into the

KING Hen.6.

the Quire, and there kept where they intreated of a Unity, and by what means it might be had, and there they tarried longer than ſome thought to do; the which matter gave occaſion to bring things well to paſs, beyond all expectation. The only form of the Decree was appointed to be concluded that day; whereupon, as ſoon as Cardinal Arelatenſis perceived the Congregation to be full, and that the twelve men had agreed, and that there was a great expectation with ſilence, he thought good not to delay it for fear of tumult, but commanded by and by the publick Concordances to be read, wherein this was alſo contained, that the Cardinal Arelatenſis might appoint a Seſſion whenſoever he would. Which being read, he being deſired by the Promoters, concluded according as the manner and cuſtom is. The Ambaſſadors of the Princes being yet in the Quire, as ſoon as they underſtood how the matter paſſed, being very much troubled and vexed, they brake off their talk, imputing all things to the Biſhop of Lubeck, which of purpoſe had kept them in the Quire, and protracted the time. Whereupon they entring into the Congregation, filled the Church full of complaints.

The policy of the Cardinal Arelatenſis.

Firſt of all, the Orator of Lubeck complained both in his own name and the name of the Proctor, as touching the concluſion, and required that the Council would revoke the ſame. If that might be granted, he promiſed to intreat a Peace, and to be a Proctor between the Council and the Ambaſſadors of the Princes. But the Archbiſhop of Turnon ſaid, That it ſeemed unto him, every man to have free liberty to ſpeak againſt that Law which ſhould be promulgate, until the Seſſion, when the Canons ſhould be conſecrated and receive their force: when as the Biſhops in their Pontificalibus, after the reading of the Decree in the Seſſion, ſhould anſwer that it pleaſed them: otherwiſe the demand which was made by the Promoters in the Seſſion, to be but vain: And for that the Concluſions were not yet allowed in the Seſſion, therefore he ſaid that he might without rebuke ſpeak ſomewhat as touching the ſame; and that it was a great and hard matter, and not to be knit up in ſuch a ſhort time, and that he had the knowledge thereof but even now; notwithſtanding that he being an Archbiſhop, ought to have known the matter, that at his return home, he might inform the King, and alſo inſtruct thoſe which were under him. And that he and his Fellows, before any Seſſion ſhould be, would both hear and be heard of others. Neither doth it ſeem good unto him that the Seſſion ſhould be holden, before report were made of thoſe things which the Ambaſſadors of the Princes had done at Mentz, which would peradventure be ſuch as might alter and change the minds of the Fathers.

The Biſhop of Turnon.

Then the Biſhop of Concen, Ambaſſador of the King of Caſtile, which was alſo lately returned from Mentz, a man of great underſtanding, but lacking utterance, grievouſly complained that the Prelates were contemned. Neither had it been (ſaid he) any great matter if they had been tarried for, which not without great danger and expences went to Mentz, not for their pleaſure, but of neceſſity. And afterward as it were ſmiling, he ſaid, How mad am I, that would have the Prelates to be tarried for, until they return from Mentz, when as they are not tarried for, whilſt they came out of the Quire of the Church? Do therefore as ye liſt. If there riſe any offence or miſchief hereupon, neither are we the Ambaſſadors of Caſtile to be blamed, neither can any man of right impute any thing to our moſt noble King.

The Biſhop of Concen ſpeaketh.

Here were it long to repeat, with what rebukes and taunts they inveighed againſt the Cardinal Arelatenſis: but eſpecially the Biſhop of Millain railed moſt cruelly upon him, ſaying, That he foſtered and maintained a rabble of Sophiſters and School-Maſters, and that he had concluded in matters of Faith with them; calling him alſo another Catiline, unto whom all deſperate and naughty perſons had refuge, that he was their Prince, and ruled the Church with them; and that he would not give ear unto the Ambaſſadors of the moſt noble Princes, or to the moſt famous Prelates in this moſt weighty matter. Albiganenſis a Biſhop, and a man of great Nobility, deſcended of the Emperors blood, albeit he had never alienate his mind before from the Council, yet leſt he ſhould ſeem to diſſent from other Ambaſſadors of the Princes, he made the like complaint as touching the attempt of the Prelates. After this it came unto Panormitan to ſpeak, who as he had a greater vehemency in ſpeaking, ſo alſo he did declare a more angry ſtomach and mind: for in the beginning of his Oration he ſeemeth not to go about according to the Precept of the Orators, to get the good will of the hearers, but rather their hatred. For he ſaid, That our Saviour ſhewed four ſigns in the Goſpel, whereby we ſhould know the good from the reprobate; for he which is of God (ſaith he) heareth the words of God, but ye hear not the words of God, becauſe ye are not of God. And again, He that doth evil hateth the light. And in another place alſo, By their fruits ye ſhall know them. And a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit.

Mark what the truth muſt ſuffer.

O marvelous deſpite and contumely in a Biſhop! for if Arelatenſis had kept Whores or Concubines, he would have praiſed him: but to maintain learned men was a great offence.

The Fathers of the Council ſlandered by Panormitan.

Four ſigns to know the good from the bad.

All which ſayings he wreſted againſt the Fathers of the Council, becauſe they would not hear the words of God; that is to ſay, the words of peace which the Ambaſſadors had ſpoken: becauſe they fled from the light in the abſence of the Ambaſſadors, privily concluding; and becauſe in their deputation they had not holden and kept the holy-day, but had concluded thereupon; alſo becauſe they had the upper-hand in the foreſaid concluſion, not by reaſon, but by deceit. As touching the fruits, he ſaid, That the Fathers themſelves ſhould mediate and conſider how that, if their fruits were not good, they alſo themſelves were not good; and that he did ſee another Council at hand, where he feared leſt theſe Concluſions ſhould be revoked, as the fruit of an evil Tree: and therefore they ought not ſo ſuddenly to proceed in ſo weighty matters: and that he would be yet more fully heard before the Seſſion, as well in his own name, becauſe he was an Archbiſhop, as in the name of his Prince, which reigned not over one Kingdom alone, but over many. Alſo he ſaid, That he heretofore by his words, deeds and writings, hath extolled the authority of the Council; and that he feared, leſt by theſe means the authority thereof ſhould be ſubverted. At the laſt he required pardon if he had offended the Fathers of the Council, forſomuch as very ſorrow and grief forced him to ſpeak ſo.

Look if it be not ſpoken of them in the Goſpel, where mention is made of the Beaſt which is fallen into the ditch.

What is it that ambition will not do?

The Abbot of Virgiliacenſis would have made anſwer to thoſe things which Panormitan had touched, concerning his deputation: But Aretalenſis thought good that all the contrary part ſhould ſpeak firſt, among whom, laſt of all Ludovicus the Protonotary, the Homer of Lawyers, roſe up. And albeit that he ſpake unwillingly, yet when he had begun, he could not refrain his words. And whiles he went about to ſeem learned and eloquent, he utterly forgot to be good. He ſaid, That the Council ought to take heed, that they intreated no matter of Faith againſt the Prelates, leſt any offence ſhould follow; for that ſome would ſay it were a matter of no force or effect. For albeit that Chriſt choſe twelve Apoſtles and ſeventy Diſciples, notwithſtanding in the ſetting forth of the Creed only the Apoſtles were preſent, thereby (as it were) giving example that the matters of Faith did pertain only unto the Apoſtles, and ſo conſequently unto Biſhops. Neither that they ought haſtily to proceed in matters of Faith, which ought to be clearly diſtinct, forſomuch as Peter affirmeth the trial of Faith to be much more precious than Gold, which is tried by the fire. And if the Biſhops be contemned, which are called the Pillars and Keys of Heaven, the Faith cannot ſeem to be well proved or examined. But at length he confeſſed that the Inferiors might determine with the Biſhops, but denied that the leaſt part of the Biſhops with the moſt part of the Inferiors might determine any thing. From thence he paſſing to the matter of Faith, ſaid, That thoſe Verities whereupon queſtion was now had, are Articles of Faith, if they were Verities of Faith. And forſomuch as every man ſhould be bound to believe thoſe, therefore he would be better inſtructed and taught in that matter which he ſhould believe as an Article of Faith. Neither ſhould it be comely for the Council to deny him his requeſt; which according to the rule of the Apoſtle, ought to be ready to give account unto every man which ſhall require it, touching the Faith which it holdeth.

Abbot of Virgiliacenſis.

Ludovicus the Protonotary in labouring to ſeem learned, forgot to be good.

The Apoſtles principally gathered the Creed.

After every man had made an end of ſpeaking, the Cardinal Arelatenſis calling his Spirits together, made an Oration, wherein he anſwered now the one, and now the other. And firſt of all he commended the deſires of the Imperial Ambaſſadors, which offered to intreat a Peace and Unity; but neither neceſſity, nor honeſty (he ſaid) would ſuffer thoſe things which are concluded to be revoked. He anſwered alſo, That the Petition of the Ambaſſadors baſſadors of France is moſt juſt, in that they required to be inſtructed touching the Faith; and that the Council would grant their requeſt, and ſend unto them certain Divines, which ſhould inſtruct them at home at their Lodgings, but the matter was already concluded, and could no more be brought into queſtion, that the Seſſion was only holden, rather to beautifie the matter, than to confirm the ſame. And as touching that which the Biſhop of Concen ſo greatly complaineth of, he doth not much marvel: for he could not know the proceſs of the matter, when he was abſent; who being better inſtructed, he ſuppoſed would ſpeak no more any ſuch words, forſomuch as a juſt man would require no unjuſt thing. Alſo that his proteſtation had no evil ſenſe or meaning, in that he would not have it imputed either unto him, or unto his King, if any offence ſhould riſe upon the Concluſions. Notwithſtanding, it is not to be feared, that any evil ſhould ſpring of good Works. But unto the Biſhop of Millain, he would anſwer nothing, becauſe he ſaw him ſo moved and troubled, for fear of multiplying of more grievous and hainous words. As for Panormitan he reſerved unto the laſt. But unto Ludovicus the Protonotary, which deſired to be inſtructed, he ſaid, He willed him to be ſatisfied with the words which were ſpoken unto the Biſhop of Turnon.

To the Biſhop of Concen.

To Ludovicus the Protonotary.

Notwithſtanding, he left not this untouched which Ludovicus had ſpoken concerning the Apoſtles Creed. For albeit that in the ſetting forth of the Creed the Apoſtles be only named, yet it doth not follow (ſaith he) that they only were preſent at the ſetting forth thereof. For it happeneth oftentimes, that Princes are commended and praiſed as chief authors and doers of things, when as notwithſtanding they have other helpers; as it appeareth in battels, which although they are fought with the force of all the Souldiers, yet the Victory thereof is imputed but unto a few. As in theſe our days they do aſcribe all things which the Army doth either fortunately or wiſely, unto Nicholas Picenius, that moſt valiant Captain, which hath obtained ſo many famous Victories; albeit that oftentimes other have been the Inventers of the Policy, and Workers of the Feat. And therefore Ludovicus ought to know and underſtand, that they are not only Articles of Faith, which are contained in the Creed, but all other determinations made by the Councils as touching the Faith. Neither is he ignorant, that there be ſome Articles of the Creed which we now uſe in the Church, that were not put to by the Apoſtles, but afterward by general Councils; as that part wherein mention is made of the Holy Ghoſt, which the Council of Lions did add; in which Council alſo it is not to be doubted, but that the Inferiors did judge together with the Biſhops. But for ſo much as he had ſufficiently declared that matter in the Congregation before paſſed, he would ſtay no longer thereupon. But coming unto Panormitan, he rehearſed his words, Qui ex Deo eſt, verba Dei audit, He that is of God, heareth Gods Word; which is very well taken out of the Goſpel, but not well applied unto the Council (ſaid he;) for he firmly believed, that his Predeceſſors have judged the Holy Ghoſt to be in the midſt of the Councils, and therefore the words of the Councils to be the words of the Holy Ghoſt, which if any man do reject, he denieth himſelf to be of God. Neither doth the Council hate the light, which doth all things publickly and openly, whoſe Congregations are evident unto all men, neither doth it, as the Conventicles of the Adverſaries, admit ſome, and exclude otherſome. Moreover, the thing which is now in hand was begun to be intreated of for two months ago, and firſt the concluſions were largely diſputed upon in the Divinity Schools, and afterward ſent unto Mentz and other places of the world.

Articles of the Creed not all put in by the Apoſtles, but ſome by the Councils.

The Article of the Holy Ghoſt put in by the Council of Lions.

Panormitan wounded with his own darts.

After all this the Fathers were called into the Chapter-houſe of the great Church, to the number of an hundred and twenty; amongſt whom Panormitan, which now complaineth, was alſo preſent, and according to his manner did learnedly and ſubtilly diſpute, and had liberty to ſpeak what he would. Likewiſe in the Diſputations every man ſpake his mind freely, and in the diſputation where Panormitan was, the matter was three days diſcuſſed. After this the twelve men did agree upon it, and the general Congregation did conclude it. Neither hath there been at any time any thing more ripely or exactly handled, both openly and alſo without any fraud or deceit. And whereas the deputation did ſit upon a holy day, there is no hurt in that; neither is it any new or ſtrange thing, foraſmuch as they have often their Seſſion upon Feſtival-days, when as the matter hath had haſte, and ſpecially that the matter of Faith hath no holy days. And further he ſaid, That he did not conclude craftily and deceitfully in the Congregation, as Panormitan hath reported, but publickly and openly at the requeſt of the Promoters. Neither hath any man any juſt cauſe to complain upon him, for ſo much as when he was made Preſident, he was ſworn that always when three or four of the deputations did agree, he ſhould conclude thereupon. And for ſo much as he had already concluded, in divers cauſes touching the Pope, he ſaw no cauſe why he ſhould not conclude in the matter of Faith, for that he was a Cardinal, and did wear his red Hat for this purpoſe, that he ſhould ſhed his blood in the defence of the Faith. Neither hath he done any thing now againſt the Pope, for that omitting the five Concluſions touching Eugenius, he had concluded but only the general Concluſions: which except he had done, the Fathers ſhould have had juſt cauſe to complain againſt him (in that they truſting in his fidelity and faithfulneſs, had choſen him Preſident) if by him they ſhould now be forſaken in this moſt neceſſary cauſe of Faith. And turning himſelf unto the people, he deſired the Fathers to be of good comfort, for ſo much as he would never forſake them, yea although he ſhould ſuffer death: for he had given his Faith and Fidelity unto the Council, which he ſhould obſerve and keep: neither ſhould any mans flattery or threatnings put him from his purpoſe: that he would be always ready to do whatſoever the Council ſhould command him, and never leave the commandments of the Deputies by any means unperformed.

Arelatenſis concluded not but at the requeſt of the Promoters.

Theſe four deputations were four form of chooſen men which did diſcuſs and determine thoſe things which the Fathers did conclude upon.

Verily this is no Babinical Cardinal, but of the immaculate Spouſe, Jeſus Chriſt.

He ſpeaketh to the whole Council.

As touching that Panormitan had extolled the authority of the Council, he ſaid, That he was greatly to be thanked. But yet he ought to underſtand and know the authority of the Council to be ſuch as cannot be augmented or increaſed by any mans praiſe or commendation, or be diminiſhed by any opprobry or ſlander. Theſe things thus premiſed, he commanded the form of the Decree to be read. Then Panormitan and thoſe which took his part, would needs have a certain Proteſtation to be firſt read. There was great contention on every ſide. Notwithſtanding at the laſt Arelatenſis prevailed, and the form of the Decree was read unto this word Decernimus; that is to ſay, We decree. Then Panormitan riſing up would not ſuffer it to heard any further: And the Biſhop of Catavia cried out ſaying, That it was uncomely that Arelatenſis, with a few other Biſhops by name, ſhould conclude the matter. The like did alſo all thoſe which favoured Panormitan. The Cardinal of Taraconia alſo (which until that time had holden his peace) did grievouſly rebuke his Partakers, that as men being aſleep or in a dream, they did not read the Proteſtation, and commanded by and by one of his Familiars to read it. But like as the Adverſaries before did perturb the reading of the Concordances, ſo would not the Fathers of the Council now give place to the reading of the Proteſtation. Which when Albiganenſis did conſider, he commanded the Writing to be brought unto him, and as he began to ſpeak, ſuddenly Arelatenſis roſe up, with a great number of the Fathers to depart: Which thing pleaſed the Cardinal of Taraconia and Panormitan very well, for that they hoped that they alone with their Adherents, ſhould remain in the Church. They exhorted Arelatenſis to revoke the concluſion and to make another.

Every man may determine of Faith, having the Scripture on his part.

Contention in the Council about reading of the proteſtation.

There was in that Congregation in his place George the Protonotary of Bardaxina, ſitting ſomewhat beneath his Uncle, the Cardinal of Taraconia, a man but young of age, but grave in wiſdom, and noble in humanity: who as ſoon as he ſaw the Cardinal Arelatenſis riſe, he determined alſo to depart, and when as his Uncle called him, commanding him to tarry, he ſaid, God forbid further that I ſhould tarry in your Congregation, or do any thing contrary to the Oath which I have taken. By which words he declared his excellent Vertue and Nobility, and admoniſhed our men which remained, of thoſe things they had to do. His voice was the voice of the Holy Ghoſt, and words more neceſſary than could be thought. For if he had not ſpoken that word, the Fathers of the Council had peradventure departed, and gone their way; and the {KING Hen.6.} the other remaining in the Church had made another conclusion which they would have affirmed to have been of force, becauſe they would ſay the laſt concluſion was to be received. But many being warned by the words of the Protonotary, and calling to remembrance the like chance of other Councils before, called back again the multitude which were departing, and cried upon the Cardinal and the Patriarch to ſit down again, and that they ſhould not leave the Church void and quiet for their Adverſaries. Whereupon ſuddenly all the whole multitude ſate down, and the Gates were ſhut again. In the mean time Matthæus Albiganenſis a Biſhop, read the proteſtation to none elſe but to himſelf alone, for it could nor be heard for noiſe; which being ended, the Lombards and the Cathelanes confirmed the Proteſtation. When the Cardinal of Terraconia ſaid, That he did agree to that diſſenſion, they marvelled at that ſaying. And when ſome ſmiled and laughed at him: What ſaid he, ye Fools do ye mock me? do not the Ambaſſadors of my King diſſent from you? What do you marvel then if I do ſay I conſent unto their diſſentions? And with theſe words he and almoſt all the Aragons, Lombards and Cathelanes departed; all the other tarried ſtill. And albeit it was ſomewhat late (for it was paſt Two at Afternoon) Arelatenſis ſeeing the Congregation quiet, commanded the affairs of private perſons to be read, as the manner is; which being ended, he commanded alſo the publick affairs to be read, and willed the concluſions and the form of the decree to be read again. There remained in the Congregation, the Ambaſſadors of the Empire of France, talking together of their affairs. Notwithſtanding the Biſhop of Turnon heard mention made of the concluſions, and turning himſelf to the Biſhop of Lubeck, ſaid, Loe, the matters of Faith are now in hand again, let us go hence I pray you, that we be not an offence unto others, or that we be not ſaid, to diſſent from the other Ambaſſadors. To whom the Biſhop of Lubeck anſwered, Tarry Father, tarry here, are not the Concluſions moſt true? Why are you afraid to be here for the truth? Theſe words were not heard of many, for they ſpake them ſoftly between themſelves. Notwithſtanding I heard it, for I ſitting at their feet, did diligently obſerve what they ſaid. Arelatenſis, after all things were read, which he thought neceſſary, at the requeſt of the Deputies concluded, and ſo making an end, diſmiſſed the Congregation. Twice it is declared, with how great difficulty Arelatenſis concluded, forſomuch as neither the matter, nor the form could be concluded without diſſention: * and the concluſions were miraculous, and paſt all mens hope, but were obtained by the induſtry of Arelatenſis, or rather by the ſpecial Gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

After this it was determined between the Lombards and Aragons to abſtain from the Deputations for a certain time, which they did not long obſerve, notwithſtanding the Deputations were holden very quietly for a certain ſpace, neither was there any thing done worthy of remembrance until the fifteenth day of May; during which time, all means poſſible were ſought to ſet a concord between the Fathers, but would not be. Then Nicholas Amici Promoter of the Faith, was called into the Congregation, and briefly rehearſed thoſe things which were done the days before, and declared how that Arelatenſis might point a Seſſion. Wherefore forſomuch as delay in matters of Faith was dangerous; he required that a Seſſion ſhould be appointed againſt the morrow after, requiring the Cardinal for his Dignities-ſake, in that he was called the Principal of the Church, and the other Biſhops, that (as they had promiſed in their Conſecration) they would not now ſhrink from the Church in theſe weighty Affairs, and ſuffer the Faith to be oppreſſed; but the other Inferiors he required, upon their Oath which they had taken, to ſhew themſelves faithful and conſtant herein. Then again there fell a great contention upon theſe words; for Arelatenſis, as he was required, did appoint a Seſſion, and exhorted all men to be there preſent in their Robes. The Biſhop of Lubeck riſing up made a proteſtation in his own name, and alſo in the name of his Protector, That he would not conſent that there ſhould be any Seſſion, if it ſhould in any part derogate from the agreement had at Mentz. Gregorius Miles alſo, his Fellow-Ambaſſor, conſented to this proteſtation. When as the Protector of the Council, appointed by the Emperor, underſtood himſelf to be named by the Biſhop of Lubeck, he marvelled a while what the matter ſhould be. But being certified by an Interpreter, he anſwered, That he would in no caſe conſent unto the Proteſtation of the Biſhop of Lubeck, and that he did not know any thing of their doings at Mentz; alſo that he was ſent by the Emperor to the ſacred Council, and hath his Charge which he doth well remember, and would be obedient thereunto. After whom the Biſhop of Concenſe, according to his accuſtomed manner, made his proteſtation, and after him alſo followed Panormitan. Whoſe words before I will repeat, I deſire that no man would marvel that I make mention ſo often of Panormitan; for it is neceſſary to declare the matter in order as it was done.

It hapned in theſe matters, even as it doth in Warlike affairs: for as there, ſuch as are moſt valiant and ſtrong, and do moſt worthy Feats, obtain moſt fame, as in the battel of Troy, Achilles and Hector: ſo in theſe Spiritual Wars and Contentions, thoſe which moſt excel in Learning and Eloquence, and do more than other, ſhould be moſt renowned and named: for on the one part Panormitan was Prince and Captain; on the other, Arelatenſis: but his own will made not the one Captain, but only neceſſity, for it behoved him to obey his Prince. Notwithſtanding he was not ignorant of the truth and verity, neither did he reſiſt willingly againſt it; for I have ſeen him oftentimes in his Library complain of his Prince, that he followed other mens counſel. When as his time came to ſpeak, he ſaid, That he did not a little marvel why the Protector of the Faith ſhould require the Prelates to have a Seſſion, which was nothing pertaining to his Office, and that he ought not to uſurp the Preſidents place. And again, He complained touching the contempt of the Prelates, for the matter did preſently touch the ſtate of the Apoſtolick See, and for that cauſe the See ought to be heard before any Seſſion be holden. Neither is it to be regarded (ſaid he) that the Council of Conſtance ſeemeth to have decreed, that it ſhould now be ſpoken of, forſomuch as Pope John was not heard at Conſtance, neither any man elſe, to ſpeak for the See; by which words he ſeemed both to contemn and bring in doubt all the Decrees of that moſt great and ſacred Synod of Conſtance: therefore there was a great tumult, and all men cried out with one voice, ſaying, That the Synod of Conſtance is holy, and the Authority thereof ought to be inviolate. But he, being ſtill inſtant, with a ſtout and haughty courage affirmed, That the matter could not be finiſhed without the Ambaſſadors of the Princes, and that the Princes ought to be heard in a matter of Faith. And again, that the Ambaſſadors themſelves cannot conſent, for ſo much as in the Colloquie holden at Mentz they had promiſed, during the Treaty of Peace by them begun, they would receive and allow nothing that the Pope ſhould either do againſt the Council, or the Council againſt the Pope; and that he doubted not but that the three firſt Concluſions declared Eugenius an Heretick, inſomuch that it was evident that Eugenius did vehemently reſiſt the two firſt. And therefore forſomuch as the Seſſion was not yet holden, and that it was lawful for every man before that Seſſion to ſpeak what he will, he deſired and required them moſt inſtantly that there might be no Seſſion as yet holden. Unto whom Arelatenſis anſwered, That it was not to be doubted but that the Promoter of the Faith by his Office might call the Prelates to determine a matter of Faith, and ſpecially forſomuch as the deputation of the Faith and the whole Council had ſo given him in Commandment.

As touching the Prelates, he ſaith, That albeit without all doubt Biſhops have chief Authority, yet notwithſtanding it is accuſtomed in Councils not to make any concluſion in the name of the Biſhops, but in the name of the whole Council: and the univerſal Church hath decreed certain Laws in this Council which ſhould remain inviolate. Neither let the Biſhops think the preſence of the Inferiors grievous unto them, when as oftentimes under a bare and torn Coat, wiſdom lieth hid, and under rich Veſtures and Ornaments fooliſh lurketh. Biſhops ought alſo to be mindful of the ſaying of Domitius, which (as S. Jerome reporteth) ſaid, Why ſhould I eſteem thee as a Prince, if thou doſt not regard me as a Senator? For the Biſhops ought to eſteem Prieſts as Prieſts, if they will have reverence done unto them as Biſhops. Neither ought ought the Princes to be looked for to the deciding of this matter, forſomuch as the Church is not congregated in the name of the Princes, but in the name of Chriſt, which hath not received his Power from Princes, but immediately from God: to the defence whereof he ſhould perceive the Inferiors to be no leſs encouraged than the Biſhops, for that he did well underſtand and know, that they would not only ſpend their Temporal goods, but alſo their lives for the defence thereof. As for ſome Biſhops, rather than they will loſe any part of their Temporalties, they will ſell the liberty of the Church unto the Princes, and make them Judges and Lords over the Council. As touching the Acts at Mentz, he doth not regard them, forſomuch (as it is ſaid) they counted without their Hoſt: for he ſaith, He doth not underſtand how this can be, that they had decreed neither to obey the Pope, nor the Council. The one or the other they muſt needs be obedient unto; for there is no third Tribunal whereunto any Obedience is due in theſe matters which concern the faith and ſalvation of Souls. And finally, that the Church would not ſuffer that their affairs and matters of Faith ſhould be determined by the Judgment of Princes: for the Holy Ghoſt is not ſubject unto Princes, but Princes unto him: and upon this concluſion he would not fear either the loſs of his goods, or any death or martyrdom. And whereas Panormitane doth now ſhew himſelf ſo great a Defender of Eugenius; he ſaith, That he doth not a little marvel at it, for that in times paſt no man hath more publiſhed Eugenius his Errors, than he: by whoſe ſpecial labour and counſel, both a decree monitory, and alſo the ſuſpenſion was admitted and ſet out againſt Eugenius. And now, whereupon this ſudden change ſhould come, he ſaith, That he was utterly ignorant, forſomuch as neither Eugenius had altered his life, neither could the Church continue in ſuch a Schiſm. Wherefore he deſired Panormitane diligently to conſider, whether he ſpake according to his conſcience or not: For (ſaith he) the Concluſions which now ſhall be decreed, are moſt general: neither is there any mention in them of the Pope: and moreover the verity of Faith is contained in them: againſt the which if Eugenius did contend, it were more meet that the Pope ſhould be corrected, than the verity omitted. And thus he maketh an end, all were warned to come the next day unto the Seſſion. The Protector alſo deſired the ſacred Council, that none ſhould be ſuffered to bring any weapon to the Seſſion; forſomuch as he was ready to obſerve the ſafe conduct of the Emperor, and together with the Senate of the City, to prohibite all quarrels for doing of injury.

No man hath heretofore more than Panormitane publiſhed the errors of Eugenius: whom he now ſo greatly defendeth.

The Seſſion proclaimed.

When the ſixteenth day of May was come, all they whom the Seſſion contented and pleaſed, aſſembled at the hour. The Ambaſſadors alſo of the Princes were come together into the Quire of the Church, to attempt further what they could do; and ſending the Biſhop of Lubeck and Concenſe, and the Dean of Turnon, an excellent learned man, they offered themſelves to be preſent at the Seſſion, if that the depoſition of Eugenius might yet be deferred four months. Who when they had received a gentle anſwer of Arelatenſis and the other Principals, returning again unto the Ambaſſadors, they would only have the firſt Concluſion decreed, and thereupon ſent again unto Aretalenſis: unto whom anſwer was made, That the chief force did conſiſt in the two other Concluſions, and that the Council would ſpecially determine upon them. If the Ambaſſadors would not be preſent, they ſhould underſtand, that the Concord was broken by them, which would not obſerve that which they had offered. With which anſwer they departed, and the Seſſion began to be celebrate. There was no Prelate of Aragon preſent at it, neither out of Spain, nor out of Italy, only the Biſhop of Groſſetane, and the Abbot of Dona, which for their conſtancy and ſtedfaſt good will toward the Univerſal Church, could not be changed from their purpoſe: but of Doctors and other Inferiors, there were a great number of Aragons, and almoſt all the Inferiors of Spain and Italy (for the Inferiors feared not the Princes, as the Biſhops did) and then the worthy ſtoutneſs of the Aragons and Catholanes appeared in the inferior ſort, which would not ſhrink away in the neceſſity of the Church. Of the two other Nations there were only preſent twenty Biſhops. The reſidue lurked in their Lodgings, profeſſing the Faith in their hearts, but not in their mouths. Arelatenſis conſidering afore what would come to paſs, cauſed prayers to be made, and after their prayers made unto Almighty God, with tears and lamentation, that he would ſend them his holy Spirit to aid and aſſiſt them, he were greatly comforted and encouraged. This Congregation was famous, and albeit that there were not many Biſhops preſent, yet all the Seats were filled with the Biſhops Proctors, Archdeacons, Preſidents, Priors, Prieſts and Doctors of both Laws, which I judged to be about the number of 400 or more: amongſt whom there was no noiſe, no chiding, no opprobrious words or contention, but one exhorted another to the profeſſion of the Faith, and there appeared a full and whole conſent of them all to defend the Church. The Biſhop of Maſſilia a noble man, read the Decree, which was attentively hearkned unto, and not one word interrupted. When it was ended, Te Deum laudamus was ſung with great joy and gladneſs, and ſo the Seſſion diſſolved, which was in number the thirty third Seſſion, and amongſt all the firſt the moſt quiet and peaceable.

Prayers made with tears.

Among 400 Doctors that were preſent, there was not one ill word.

The day following, being the 22*th* of May, the Princes Ambaſſadors without all mens expectation came unto the general Congregation, by that their doing at the leaſt giving their aſſent unto the Seſſion before paſſed. In celebrating whereof, if the Fathers had erred, it had not been lawful for the Princes and Ambaſſadors to have holden the Council with thoſe Fathers. But it was thought that they were touched with remorſe of conſcience, and even now to deteſt and abhor that which they had done; as it was not hidden to the Ambaſſors of the Empire and France. For the Biſhop of Lubeck ſaid, That the cauſe of his abſence was, for that he was appointed by the Emperors Commandment to intreat a peace: Wherefore it was not comely for him to be preſent at any buſineſs, whereby he ſhould be vexed or troubled, with whom the peace ſhould be intreated. Notwithſtanding, he did much commend the Seſſion before holden, and believed the Decree therein promulgate to be moſt good and holy, and the Verities therein contained to be undoubted; and ſaid, That he would ſtick thereunto both now and ever, even to the death. But the Biſhop of Turnon, a man both learned and eloquent, ſpeaking for him and his Fellows, ſaid, That he heard how that they were evil ſpoken of amongſt ſome, in that they had not honoured their King in that moſt ſacred Seſſion, whom it becometh ſpecially to exalt and defend the Faith; which alſo for that cauſe above all other Kings was named moſt Chriſtian: notwithſtanding, he ſaid, that they had a lawful excuſe, in that it was convenient that they, which were ſent to intreat peace, ſhould do nothing whereby their Ambaſſage ſhould be ſtopped or letted. Alſo there are two kinds of Injuſtice (ſaid he) whereby either things are done that ſhould not be done, or things that ſhould be done are not done. The firſt doth not always bind, becauſe it is convenient to have reſpect of time, place, and perſon. But the laſt doth always bind, wherein he ſaid they were not culpable. But as touching the firſt point, they might ſeem unto ſome to have erred, becauſe they were not preſent at the Seſſion: but yet in this point they had ſufficient to anſwer, forſomuch as if they had been preſent at that Seſſion, they ſhould have been unmeet to have entreated any peace with Eugenius. And therefore albeit they were wanting at ſo holy a buſineſs, in that point they followed the example of Paul, which albeit he deſired to be diſſolved and to be with Chriſt, yet for the further profit and advancement of the Church, it was deferred. So likewiſe he ſaid, That they had now done; for that they were not abſent becauſe they doubted of the Concluſions (which they judged to be moſt true and holy, and whereunto they would ſtick even unto the death) but becauſe they would not be unmeet for the Treaty of Peace for which they came: and yet that which they had not done in their own Perſons, they had fulfilled (ſaid he) by their Servants and Houſhold, whom altogether they commanded to reverence that Seſſion. I would that I had been then in the place of ſome great Prelate; ſurely they ſhould not have gone unpuniſhed, which thought to have played bo-peep. For what doth the declaration of the truth hinder the treaty of peace? Or if it do hurt, why is he not accounted as a great Offender, which conſenteth to him that declareth the truth, as he which doth declare it? What ſhall we need any further teſti-

The Ambaſſadors conſent to the former Seſſion.

Two kinds of Injuſtice.

Aeneas, you ſhould have uſed ſuch ſeverity when you were Pope. Behold, the Princes Ambaſſadors declare Eugenius an enemy unto the truth.

In all Italy there were ſcarcely two Prelates found which fought the commodity of the Univerſal Church, in Spain there was none.

testimony? For now the Embassadors of the Princes have declared Eugenius to be an enemy unto the truth. But to pass over these things, it is sufficient that Eugenius wrote afterward unto the King of France, that he did understand the Bishop of Tournon to become his enemy.

Arelatensis commendeth the Embassadors.

After that the Bishop of Tournon had made an end, Cardinal Arelatensis gave thanks unto God, which had so defended his Church, and after great Storms and Clouds had sent fair and clear weather; and commending the good will of the Emperor and the King of France toward the Church, he also praised the Bishop of Lubeck and Tournon, for that oftentimes in the Council, and also of late at Mentz, they had defended the authority of the Council. But specially he commended this their present doings, that they had openly confessed the truth, and had not sequestred themselves from the faith of the Church.

This Council was gathered to take away the ambition of the Bishops of Rome, that they should not think they might do all things according to their own pleasure; and further to revoke them from the care of temporal things unto spiritual things, which now they regarded not.

Afterward he, entring into the declaration of the matter, said, that he was at Pysis and at Constance, and never saw a more quiet or devout Session than this; affirming that this Decree was most necessary, to repress the ambition of the Bishops of Rome, which exalting themselves above the Universal Church, thought it lawful for them to do all things after their own pleasure, and that no one man from henceforth should transport the Council from one place to another, as Eugenius attempted to do, now to Bononia, now to Florentia, then again to Bononia, after to Ferraria, and after that again to Florentia; and that hereafter the Bishops should withdraw their minds from the carefulness of temporal goods, which (as he himself did see) had no mind at all on spiritual matters; and therefore by how much this Session was most holy and necessary, by so much more the assent of the Embassadors was most laudable and acceptable to all the Fathers. These words thus spoken, he rose up, and the Congregation was dissolved.

The Council doth deliberate upon the Popes Election.

Now after that Gabriel Condulmarius was deposed from the Bishoprick of Rome, the principal Fathers of the Council, being called together in the Chapter-house of the great Church, consulted together, whether it were expedient that a new Bishop should be created out of hand, or deferred for a time. Such as thought good that the Election should be done with speed, shewed how dangerous a thing it was for such a Congregation to be without a Head; also what a pestilentous sickness was in all the City, which not only consumed young men and children, but also men of middle age, and old men in like manner; and that this Plague came first by strangers unto the poor of the City, and so infected the rich, and now was come unto the Fathers of the Council; amplifying moreover, and encreasing the tenor thereof, and making the thing worse than it was, as the manner is. Neither doth the Decree (said they) any thing let or hinder, wherein it is provided, that there should be delay of sixty days after the See is void; for that is to be understood when as the See is void, at such time as there is no Council holden; neither ought we to tarry or make any delay, lest the Princes being perswaded by Gabriel, should resist; unto whom the Deposition of Gabriel, and the Election of some other, is to be certified all under one message. The other, which thought good that there should be a delay, said, that the Council did lack no Head, forsomuch as Christ was the Head thereof; neither did lack a Ruler, forsomuch as it was governed by the Presidents and other Officers; and that no mention should be made of any Pestilence in such case, seeing that unto stout and strong men, death is not to be feared, neither can any thing daunt or fear them which contend for the Christian Faith. As for that Pestilence which doth now increase and grow in the City, forsomuch as judgment is now given, it is to be hoped that it will assuage, which was thought to have come for the neglecting of Justice. Also, that in so doubtful a matter, they ought rather to use the Princes against their will, than to neglect them; and that it is not to be feared, but that in this case God will help those that are stout and valiant. The matter being thus discussed amongst them, (albeit that there were as many minds as there were men) yet it seemed unto them all, that it was most profitable to chuse the Bishop by and by, but most honest to defer it.

60 days must be delayed after the See is void.

Note the Christian zeal of these men, which would refuse no danger for Gods cause.

Hereupon John Segovius, a man of excellent learning, said, Most Reverend Fathers, I am diversly drawn by sundry reasons, to this side and that. But as I weigh the matter more deeply in my mind, this is my opinion, that to come to a speedy election it seemeth good, to speak after mans judgment; but to delay it for two Months, to speak after Gods judgment, it seemeth much better. I do judge that not only the words, but also the meaning of our Decree ought to be observed. Wherefore, if ye will give any credit unto me, follow rather dangerous honesty, than secure utility; albeit that indeed utility cannot be discerned from honesty. This opinion of delay took place among the Fathers, and they determined to stay for the space of two Months.

Dangerous honesty preferred before secure utility.

In the mean time Messengers were sent unto the Princes, to declare the Deposition of Eugenius by the Synod, and publish it abroad.

During this time, the corrupt Air was nothing at all purged, but the Mortality daily increasing, many died and were sick. Whereupon a sudden fear came upon the Fathers. Neither were they sufficiently advised what they might do; for they thought it not to be without danger, either to depart or to tarry. Notwithstanding, they thought it good to tarry, and also they caused others to tarry; that since they had overcome famine, and the assaults of their enemies on earth, they would not seem to shrink for the persecution of any Plague or Sickness. But forsomuch as they could not all be kept there, it was politickly provided, that the Council should not seem to be dissolved for any mans departure. And for the more establishment of the matter, there were certain things read before the Fathers, which they called De stabilimento, whose authority continued long time after. When as the Dog-days were come, and that all Herbs withered with heat, the Pestilence daily increased more and more, that it is incredible how many died. It was too horrible to see the Coarses hourly carried through the Streets, when on every side there was weeping, wailing and sighing. There was no house void of mourning; no mirth or laughter in any place, but Matrons bewailing their Husbands, and the Husbands their Wives. Men and Women went through the Streets, and durst not speak one to another. Some tarried at home, and othersome that went abroad, had Perfumes to smell unto, to preserve them against the Plague.

A great Pestilence in Basil.

The Common People died without number; and like as in the cold Autumn the Leafs of the Trees do fall; even so did the Youth of the City consume and fall away. The violence of the disease was such, that ye should have met a man merry in the Street now, and within ten hours heard that he had been buried. The number of the dead Coarses was such also, that they lacked place to bury them in; insomuch that all the Church-Yards were digged up, and filled with dead Coarses, and great holes made in the Parish Churches, where a great number of Coarses being thrust in together, they covered them over with earth. For which cause the Fathers were so afraid, that there appeared no bloud in their faces; and specially the sudden death of Ludovicus the Prothonotary did make all men afraid, who was a strong man, and flourishing in age, and singularly learned in both Laws, whom the same envious and raging sickness took away in a few hours. By and by, after died Ludovicus the Patriarch of Aquileia, a man of great age, and brought up always in troubles and adversity, neither could he see the day of the Popes Election which he had long wished for. Notwithstanding, he took partly a consolation, in that he had seen Gabriel deposed before his death. This mans death was grievous unto all the Fathers; for now they said, that two Pillars of the Council were decayed and overthrown, meaning the Prothonotary and the Patriarch, whereof the one by the law, and the other with his deeds, defended the verity of the Council.

Ludovicus the Prothonotary died of the Plague.

About the same time also died the King of Arragon's Almoner in Switzerland, a man of excellent learning, being Bishop of Ebron. The Abbot of Vergilia died at Spire, and John the Bishop of Lubeck, between Vienna and Buda.

The exhortation of those which died.

These two last rehearsed, even at the point of death, did this thing worthy of remembrance. When as they perceived the hour of their death approach, calling unto them certain grave and wise men, said, All you that be here present, pray to God that he will convert such as knowledge Gabriel for high Bishop, for in that state they cannot be saved; and professing themselves, that they would die in the Faith of the Council of Basil, they departed in the Lord. In Boheme also departed the Bishop of Constance, which was Embassador for the Council. There was great fear and trembling throughout all the Council. There had been alſo in the Council, by a long time, the Abbot of Dona, of the Dioceſs of Cumana, a man poor unto the World, but rich unto God, whom neither flattering nor threatning could turn away from his good purpoſe and intent, chuſing rather to beg in the truth of the Fathers, than to abound in riches with the falſe flattering adverſaries.

The Bishop of Constance dieth.

The Abbot Dona, a true Abbot.

Whereupon, after the Lords were departed which gave him his living, he remaining ſtill, was ſtricken with the Plague and died. Likewiſe a great number of the Regiſters and Doctors died; and ſuch as fell into that Diſeaſe, few or none eſcaped. One amongſt all the reſt, Æneas Sylvius, being ſtricken with this Diſeaſe, by Gods help eſcaped. This man lay three days even at the point of death, all men being in deſpair of him; notwithſtanding it pleaſed God to grant him longer life. When as the Peſtilence was moſt fervent and hot, and that daily there died about one hundred, there was great intreaty made unto Cardinal Arelatenſis, that he would go to ſome other Town or Village near hand; for theſe were the words of all his friends and houſhold, What do you moſt reverend Father? At the leaſt void this Wane of the Moon and ſave your ſelf; who being ſafe, all we ſhall alſo be ſafe; if you dy, we all periſh. If the Plague oppreſs you, unto whom ſhall we fly? Who ſhall rule us? Or who ſhall be the guide of this moſt faithful flock? The infection hath already invaded your Chamber. Your Secretary and Chamberlain are already dead. Conſider the great danger, and ſave both your ſelf and us. But neither the intreaty of his Houſhold, neither the coarſes of thoſe which were dead could move him, willing rather to preſerve the Council with peril of his life, than to ſave his life with peril of the Council; for he did know, that if he ſhould depart, few would have tarried behind, and that deceit ſhould have been wrought in his abſence.

Æneas the author hereof eſcaped death hardly.

The invincible conſtancy and fortitude of the Cardinal Arelatenſis.

Wherefore, like as in Wars the Soldiers fear no danger, when as they ſee their Captain in the midſt of their enemies: ſo the Fathers of the Council were aſhamed to fly from this Peſtilence, ſeeing their Preſident to remain with them in the midſt of all dangers. Which their doings did utterly ſubvert the opinion of them, which babbled abroad, that the Fathers tarried in Baſil, to ſeek their own profit and commodity, and not the verity of the faith; for there is no commodity upon earth which men would change for their lives; for that all ſuch as do ſerve the World, do prefer it before all other things. But theſe our Fathers, ſhewing themſelves an invincible ſtrong Wall for the Houſe of God, vanquiſhing all the crafty deceits which Gabriel uſed, and overcoming all difficulties, which this moſt cruel and peſtiferous year brought upon them, at the length all deſire of life alſo being ſet apart, they have overcome all dangers, and have not doubted with moſt conſtant minds to defend the verity of the Council, even unto this preſent.

The time of the Decree being paſſed, after the Depoſition of Gabriel, it ſeemed good unto the Fathers, to proceed to the Election of another Biſhop. And firſt of all, they nominated thoſe that together with the Cardinals, ſhould elect the Pope. The firſt and principal of the Electors, was the Cardinal Arelatenſis, a man of invincible conſtancy, and incomparable wiſdom; unto whoſe vertue I may juſtly aſcribe whatſoever was done in the Council; for without him, the Prelates had not perſevered in their purpoſe, neither could the ſhadow of any Prince have ſo defended them. This man came not to the Election by any favour or denomination, but by his own proper right. The reſt of the Electors were choſen out of the Italian, French, German and Spaniſh Nations and their Cells and Chambers appointed to them by lots, without reſpect of dignity or perſon, and as the lots fell, ſo were they placed; whereby it chanced a Doctor to have the higheſt place, and a Biſhop the laſt. Wherein the diſtribution of lots was very ſtrange, or rather a divine diſpenſation, reproving the devices of man, whereas the Prelates had determined to have the beſt Chambers appointed for themſelves, and had earneſtly contended before to have their Chambers appointed according to their dignity.

The commendation of Arelatenſis.

The next day after there was a Seſſion holden, wherein Marcus a famous Divine, made an Oration unto the Electors, wherein he reckoned up the manifold crimes of Gabriel, which was depoſed. He endeavoured to perſwade the Electors to chuſe ſuch a man, which ſhould in all points be contrary unto Gabriel, and eſchew all his vices; that as he, through his manifold reproaches, was hurtful unto all men, ſo he which ſhould be choſen, ſhould ſhew himſelf acceptable unto all men, through juſtice; and as Gabriel was covetous and full of rapine, ſo this man ſhould ſhew himſelf continent.

The counſel of Marcus.

There was ſo great a number of people gathered together to behold this matter, that neither in the Church, neither in the Streets, any man could paſs. There was preſent John Earl of Dierſtein, who ſupplied the place of the Emperors Protector; alſo the Senators of the City, with many other Noblemen, to behold the ſame, whereof you ſhall hear (Chriſt willing) more largely hereafter. The Citizens were without in Armour, to take care that there ſhould be no uproar made. The Electors received the Communion together, and afterwards they received their Oath; and the Cardinal Arelatenſis, opening the Book of Decrees, read the form of the Oath in the audience of all men, and firſt of all, he taking the Oath himſelf, began in this manner:

The godly Oath of Arelatenſis.

Moſt reverend Fathers, I promiſe, ſwear and vow, before my Lord Jeſus Chriſt (whoſe moſt bleſſed Body I unworthy ſinner have received, unto whom in the laſt Judgment, I ſhall give an account of all my deeds) that in this buſineſs of Election, whereunto now by the will of the Council we are ſent, I will ſeek nothing elſe, but the only ſalvation of the Chriſtian People, and the profit of the Univerſal Church. This ſhall be my whole care and ſtudy, that the authority of the General Councils be not contemned, that the Catholick Faith be not impugned, and that the Fathers which remain in the Council be not oppreſſed. This will I ſeek for; this ſhall be my care; unto this, with all my whole force and power, will I bend my ſelf; neither will I reſpect any thing in this point, either for mine own cauſe, or for any friend, but only God, and the profit of the Church. With this mind and intent, and with this heart will I take mine Oath before the Council.

His words were lively and fearful. After him all the other Electors in their order, did ſwear and take their Oath. Then they went with great ſolemnity unto the Conclave, where they remained ſeven days. The manner of their Election was in this ſort. Before the Cardinals Seat was ſet a Deſk, whereupon there ſtood a Baſon of Silver, into the which Baſon all the Electors did caſt their Schedules; which the Cardinal receiving, read one by one, and four other of the Electors wrote as he read them.

The othe Electors take their Oath.

The tenor of the Schedules was in this manner: I George Biſhop of Vicene, do chuſe ſuch a man, or ſuch a man, for Biſhop of Rome, and peradventure named one or two; every one of the Electors ſubſcribed his name unto the Schedule, that he might thereby know his own, and ſay nay, if it were contrary to that which was ſpoken; whereby all deceit was utterly excluded. The firſt ſcrutiny thus ended, it was found that there were many named to the Papacy; yet none had ſufficient voices, for that day there were 17 of divers Nations nominate. Notwithſtanding, Amedeus Duke of Savoy, a man of ſingular vertue, ſurmounted them all; for in the firſt ſcrutiny he had the voice of 16 Electors, which judged him worthy to govern the Church.

Amedeus Duke of Savoy.

After this, there was a diligent inquiſition had in the Council touching thoſe which were named of the Electors, and as every mans opinion ſerved him, he did either praiſe or diſcommend thoſe which were nominate. Notwithſtanding, there was ſuch report made of Amedeus, that in the next ſcrutiny, which was holden in the Nones of November, the ſaid Amedeus had 21 Voices, and likewiſe in the 3d and 4th ſcrutiny, 21 Voices. And forſomuch as there was none found in all the ſcrutiny to have 2 parts, all the other Schedules were burnt. And forſomuch as there lacked but only one Voice to the Election of the high Biſhop, they fell unto prayer, deſiring God that he would vouchſafe to direct their minds to an unity and conſord, worthily to elect and chuſe him which ſhould take the charge over the flock of God. Forſomuch as Amedeus ſeemed to be nearer unto the Papacy than all other, there was great communication had amongſt them touching his life and diſpoſition. Some ſaid that a Lay-man ought not ſo ſuddenly to be choſen; for it would ſeem a ſtrange thing, for a ſecular Prince to be called unto the Biſhoprick of Rome; which would alſo too much derogate from the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate,

A ſcrutiny is a privy election by voices.

Prayer for unity and concord.

KING Hen.6. as though there were none therein meet or worthy for that dignity. Otherſome ſaid, that a man which was married and had children, was unmeet for ſuch a charge. Otherſome againſt affirmed, that the Biſhop of Rome ought to be a Doctor of Law, and an excellet learned man.

When theſe words were ſpoken, otherſome riſing up, ſpake far otherwiſe; that albeit Amedeus was no Doctor, yet was he learned and wiſe, forſomuch as all his whole youth he had beſtowed in learning and ſtudy, and had ſought not the name, but even the ground of Learning. Then ſaid another, if ye be deſirous to be inſtructed further of this Princes life, I pray you give ear unto me, which do know him throughly. Truly this man from his youth upward, and even from his young and tender years, hath lived more religiouſly than ſecularly, being always obedient to his Parents and Maſters, and being always indued with the fear of God, never given to any vanity or wantonneſs; neither hath there at any time been any child of the Houſe of Savoy, in whom hath appeared greater wit or towardneſs; whereby all thoſe which did behold and know this man, judged and foreſaw ſome great matter in him; neither were they deceived. For if ye deſire to know his rule and governance, what and how noble it hath been; firſt, know ye this, that this man hath reigned, ſince his Fathers deceaſe, about forty years.

Let lying Eugenius be aſhamed of his falſe invective againſt Amedeus.

During whoſe time, Juſtice, the Lady and Queen of all other Vertues, hath always flouriſhed: For he, hearing his Subjects himſelf, would never ſuffer the poor to be oppreſſed, or the weak to be deceived. He was the defender of the Fatherleſs, the advocate of the Widows, and protector of the Poor. There was no Rapine or Robbery in all his Territory. The poor and rich lived all under one law, neither was he burthenous to his Subjects, or importune againſt ſtrangers throughout all his Country; there were no grievous exactions of Mony throughout all his Dominion. He thought himſelf rich enough, if the Inhabitants of his Dominions did abound and were rich; knowing that it was the point of a good Shepherd to ſhear his Sheep, and not to devour them. In this alſo was his chief ſtudy and care, that his Subjects might live in peace, and ſuch as bordered upon him, might have no occaſion of grudge.

By which policies he did not only quietly govern his Fathers Dominion, but alſo augmented the ſame by others, which willingly ſubmitted themſelves unto him. He never made War upon any, but reſiſting againſt ſuch as made War upon him, he ſtudied rather to make peace, than to ſeek any revenge, deſiring rather to overcome his enemies with benefits, than with the Sword. He married only one Wife, which was a Noble Virgin, and of ſingular beauty and chaſtity. He would have all his Family to keep their hands and eyes chaſt and continent, and throughout all his houſe, honeſty and integrity of manners was obſerved. When as his Wife had changed her life, and that he perceived his Dutchy to be eſtabliſhed, and that it ſhould come without any controverſie unto his Poſterity, he declared his mind, which was always religious, and dedicate unto God, and ſhewed what will and affection he had long born in his heart. For he contemning the pomp and ſtate of this World, calling unto him his dear friends, departed and went into a Wilderneſs; where building a goodly Abby, he addicted himſelf wholly to the ſervice of God, and taking his Croſs upon him, followed Chriſt. In which place he being converſant by the ſpace of many years, ſhewed forth great examples of holineſs, wearing no other garments but ſuch as could withſtand the cold, neither uſing any kind of dainty fare, but only to reſiſt hunger, watching and praying the moſt part of the Night. Wherefore this Prince is not newly come unto the Church (as ſome do ſuppoſe) but being a Chriſtian, born of Progenitors, a thouſand years and more, being Chriſtians, doth now ſerve God in a Monaſtery.

Commendation of Amedeus Pope elect.

But as touching that alſo which is ſpoken concerning a Wife, I do not regard it; when as not he only which hath had a Wife, but he alſo which hath a Wife may be elect and choſen Pope. For why do the Doctors diſpute, whether a married man choſen Pope, ought to perform his duty towards his Wife, but only becauſe a married man might be received and choſen? For as you know well enough, there were many Popes that had Wives; and Peter alſo was not without a Wife. But what do we ſtand about this? For peradventure, it had been better that more Prieſts had been married; for many ſhould be ſaved through Marriage, which are now damned through their ſingle life. But hereof we will (ſaith he) ſpeak in another place. But this ſeemeth unto me rather to be laughed at, than worthy any anſwer, which is objected touching his children; for what can children (ſpecially being of great age) be impediment or let unto the Father being a Biſhop? Doth not the Scripture ſay, Wo be unto him that is alone; for if he fall, he hath none to help him up again? This cannot be imputed unto the Prince? for he hath two ſons, both comely and wiſe, Whereof the one is Prince of Piemont, the other Earl of the Gevennians: theſe men will rule the Country of Savoy in the abſence of their Father, and will help him if he have need; for they have already learned to rule over that people. I pray you what hurt is it for a Biſhop of Rome to have valiant children, which may help their Father againſt Tyrants? O moſt reverend Fathers, the more I do behold the ſtorm of this moſt perverſe and froward time, the more I do conſider the vexations and troubles which the Church is now tormented withal; I do ſo much the more think it profitable, yea and neceſſary, that this man ſhould be choſen Prince and Head; I will think that God hath ſhewed his mercy upon us, if I may ſee him have the governance over this Boat; I pray you conſider into what ſtraits we are now driven, with what perils we are now vexed and toſſed? What Prince is it that is obedient unto this Council? For ſome will not confeſs, that the Council is here, neither receive our Decrees: Otherſome confeſs it in their words, but by their deeds they declare it to be at Florence. For albeit that by their words and Letters, they do not deny that the Church is here, yet do they procure Promotions at the hands of Gabriel which is depoſed. This is the ſtate of the Church with theſe ſtorms and tempeſts the Ship is ſhaken and bruiſed; wicked children have riſen up againſt their Mother, which being unmindful of their Mothers labours and kindneſs towards them, deſpiſe her, contemn her, and beat her. What is to be done herein? Shall we chuſe a bare man, which ſhall rather be derided of our Princes, than had in reverence? The days are not now, that men have reſpect only unto vertue, for (as the Satyrical Poet writeth) vertue is praiſed, but is coldly followed. A poor man ſpeaketh, and they ask what he is? Truly vertue is good, but for our purpoſe it muſt be marked and looked upon, whether it be in a rich man, or a poor man; you muſt chuſe a Governour which may rule the Ship not only by counſel, but by power alſo. The wind is great; wherefore except the counſel be good, and the power ſtrong, the Ship ſhall be broken and all put in danger. The memorial is yet freſh before our eyes, that the Princes do neglect the authority which is of no force or power. Is there not great valiantneſs ſhewed in this point, in that you fearing no peril or danger, either of life or goods, have ſo long contended for the truth of Chriſt? But the moſt mighty and high God looketh down from on high, and will reſiſt this their pride. I have often conſented unto their opinion, which ſaid it was expedient that the Temporal Dominions ſhould be divided from the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate; for I did think that the Prieſts ſhould thereby be made more apt to the divine Miniſtry, and ſecular Princes more obedient to the Clergy. But forſomuch as at this preſent the Churches of the World are poſſeſſed, partly by Eugenius, and partly by other Tyrants, we muſt provide that we chuſe ſuch a one, which may recover again the Patrimony of the Church, and in whom the office of Chriſts Vicar may not be contemned; through the ſhield of whoſe power their contumacy may be ſuppreſſed, which contemn both verity and reaſon. Whereunto no man ſeemeth unto me more apt or meet, than Amedeus Duke of Savoy, which holdeth the chief part of his poſſeſſions in Italy, and the other in France; unto whom all Chriſtian Princes are allied either by conſanguinity, or joyned by amity and friendſhip, and whoſe vertue, how famous it is, I have already declared. Why do we then ſtay or doubt to chuſe him, than whom Gabriel feareth no man more. Let him therefore periſh with the ſword wherewithal he hath ſtricken. There is no man which can more pacifie the Church than he. Do ye require devotion in a Biſhop? there is no man more devout than he. Do you require prudence? Now ye underſtand by his former life what manner of man is he. If ye ſeek for Juſtice, his people are a witneſs thereof; ſo that whether you ſeek for vertue or power, all are here preſent before you. Whereupon do ye ſtay? Go to I pray you, chuſe this man. He will augment the faith, he will reform manners, and preſerve the authority of the Church. Have ye not heard theſe troubles of the Church to have been afore ſpoken of, and that the time now preſent ſhould be an end of all troubles? Have ye not heard that about this time there ſhould a Pope be choſen which ſhould comfort Sion, and ſet all things in peace? And who I pray you ſhould he be that could fulfil theſe things except we chuſe this man? Believe me, theſe ſayings muſt be fulfilled, and I truſt that God will move your minds thereunto. Notwithſtanding, do whatſoever you ſhall think moſt good and holy.

Good it were that temporal Dominions were divided from the Church.

Amedeus Duke of Savoy choſen Pope.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, the greateſt number of the Electors ſeemed to conſent unto him, and his words took ſuch effect, that in the next ſcrutiny the matter was finiſhed and ended, and when the ſcrutiny was opened, it was found that Amedeus, the moſt devout Duke of Savoy, according to the Decree of the Council, was choſen Pope. Wherefore ſuddenly, there was great joy and gladneſs amongſt them, and all men highly commended their doings. Then the Cardinal Arelatenſis publiſhed unto them the name of the elect Biſhop. After this all the Prelates in their Robes, Pontificalibus and Miters, and all the Clergy of the City coming unto the Conclave, the Electors being likewiſe adorned, they brought him unto the great Church, where after great thanks given unto God, and the Election again declared unto the people, a Hymn being ſung for joy, the Congregation was diſſolved.

Pope Felix the fifth.

This Amedeus aforeſaid, was a man of reverent age, of comely ſtature, of grave and diſcreet behaviour; alſo before married. Who thus being elect for Pope about November, was called Felix the Fifth, and was crowned in the City of Baſil, in the Month of July. There was preſent at his Coronation, Lewis Duke of Savoy; Philip Earl Gebenenſ. Lewis Marqueſs of Salutz; The Marqueſs of Rotelen: Conrade of Winſperg Chamberlain of the Empire: The Earl of Dierſtein: The Embaſſadors of the Cities of Strasbourgh, Bern, Friburgh, Solatorn, with a great multitude of other beſide, to the view of 50000 perſons. At this Coronation, the Popes two Sons did ſerve and miniſter to their Father. Lewis Cardinal of Hoſtia did ſet on his Head the Pontifical Diadem, which was eſteemed at thirty thouſand Crowns. It were long here to recite the whole order and ſolemnity of the Proceſſion, or the Popes riding about the City. Firſt proceeded the Pope under his Canopy of Cloth of Gold, having on his Head a Triple-Crown, and bleſſing the people as he went. By him went the Marqueſs of Rotelen, and Conrade of Winſperg, leading his Horſe by the Bridle. The Proceſſion finiſhed, they went to dinner, which laſted four full hours, being exceſſively ſumptuous; where the Popes two Sons were Butlers to his Cup; the Marqueſs of Salutz was the Steward, &c.

Of this Felix thus writeth Volaterane in his third Book, That he being deſired of certain of the Embaſſadors, if he had any Dogs or Hounds to ſhew them; he willed them the next day to repair unto him, and he would ſhew unto them ſuch as he had. When the Embaſſadors according to the appointment were come, he ſheweth unto them a great number of poor People and Beggars ſitting at his Tables at meat, declaring that thoſe were his Hounds, which he every day uſed to feed, hunting with them (he truſted) for the glory of Heaven to come.

And thus you have heard the ſtate of this Council hitherto, which Council endured a long ſeaſon, the ſpace of 17 years.

The death of Sigiſmund the Emperor. Albert the 2d Emperor. Anno 1438. The death of Albertus.

About the ſixth year of the Council, Sigiſmund the Emperor died, leaving but one Daughter to ſucceed him in his Kingdoms, whom he had married to Albert the ſecond Duke of Auſtrich, which firſt ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Hungary and Boheme, being a ſore adverſary to the Bohemians, and afterward was made Emperor, Anno 1438, and reigned Emperor but two years, leaving his Wife, which was Sigiſmund his Daughter, great with Child. After which Albert ſucceeded his Brother Frederick, the third Duke of Auſtrich, in the Empire, &c. Whereof more (Chriſt willing) hereafter.

In the mean time Eugenius hearing of the death of Sigiſmund above recited, began to work the diſſolution of the Council of Baſil, and to transfer it to Ferraria, pretending the coming of the Grecians. Notwithſtanding, the Council of Baſil, through the diſpoſition of God, and the worthineſs of Cardinal Arelatenſis, conſtantly endured. Albeit in the ſaid Council were many ſtops and practices to impeach the ſame, beſide the ſore Plague of Peſtilence which fell in the City, during the ſaid Council. In the which Plague time, beſides the death of many worthy men, Æneas Sylvius alſo himſelf, the Writer and Compiler of the whole Hiſtory of that Council, ſitting at the feet of the Biſhops of Turnon and Lubeck, lay ſick three days of the ſame ſore, as is above touched, and never thought to eſcape. They that died, departed with this exhortation, deſiring men to pray to God, that he would convert the hearts of them that ſtuck to Eugenius as Pope, againſt that Council, as partly is afore noted, and now repeated again for the better marking. Arelatenſis being moſt inſtantly exhorted by his friends to fly that danger, could by no means be intreated to avoid, fearing more the danger of the Church, than of his own life.

KING Hen. 6. The Plague at Baſil in the time of the Council.

Æneas Sylvius ſick of the Plague in Baſil.

The conſtant zeal of Arelatenſis to the truth.

Beſide theſe ſo great difficulties and obſtacles to ſtay and hinder this Council, ſtrange it was to behold the mutation of mens minds. Of whom ſuch as firſt ſeemed to favour the Council, after did impugn it; and ſuch as before were againſt it, in the end ſhewed themſelves moſt friends unto the ſame. The chief Cardinals and Prelates, the more they had to loſe, the ſooner they ſlipt away, or elſe lurked in Houſes or Towns near, and abſented themſelves for fear; ſo that the ſtay of the Council moſt reſted upon their Proctors, Doctors, Archdeacons, Deans, Provoſts, Priors, and ſuch other of the inferiour ſort. Whereof Æneas Sylvius, in his 183 Epiſtle, maketh this relation, where one Caſpar Schlick, the Emperors Chancellor, writeth to Cardinal Julian in theſe words, Thoſe Cardinals (ſaith he) which ſo long time magnified ſo highly the authority of the Church, and of General Councils, ſeeming as though they were ready to ſpend their lives for the ſame, now at the ſight of one Letter from their King (wherein yet no death was threatned, but only loſs of their promotions) ſlipt away from Baſil. And in the ſame Epiſtle, deridingly commendeth them, as wiſe men, that had rather loſe their faith than their flock. Albeit (ſaith he) they departed not far away, but remained about Solatorn, waiting for other commandments from their Prince. Whereby it may appear how they did ſhrink away not willingly; but the Burſe (quoth he) bindeth faſter than true honour,

Æneas Sylvius, epiſt. 183.

The wealthy Prelates ſlide away from the Council. Wealthy Prelates afraid of truth. Fidem quam plebe, carere malunt. Promotions choke the Clergy.

Quid enim ſalvis infamia nummis? that is to ſay, What matter maketh the name of a Man, ſo his Mony be ſafe? Hæc Æneas.

Moreover, in one of the Seſſions of the ſaid Council, the worthy Cardinal Arelatenſis is ſaid thus to have reported, that Chriſt was ſold for thirty pence; but I (ſaid he) was ſold much more dear: For Gabriel, otherwiſe called Eugenius Pope, offered threeſcore thouſand Crowns, who ſo would take me, and preſent me unto him. And they that took the ſaid Cardinal, afterward excuſed their fact by another colour, pretending the cauſe, for that the Cardinals Brother, what time the Armiakes waſted Alſatia, had brought great damage to the Inhabitants there, and therefore they thought (ſaid they) that they might lawfully lay hands upon a Frenchman, whereſoever they might take him. At length by the Biſhop of Strasbourgh, Rupert, and the ſaid City, the matter was taken up, and he reſcued. Wherein no doubt appeared the hand of God, in defending his life from the peſtilent danger of the Pope his adverſary, Ex Paralip. Abbat. Urſper.

60000 Crowns offered by Pope Eugenius, for the betraying of Arelatenſis.

Arelatenſis taken and reſcued. Gods defence toward his ſervants. Ex Paralip. Abb. Urſper.

And thus far having proceeded in the matters of this foreſaid Council, until the election of Amedeus, called Pope Felix the Fifth, before we proſecute the reſt that remaineth thereof to be ſpoken, the order and courſe of times requireth to intermix withal the reſidue pertaining to the matters concluded between this Council and the Bohemians, declaring the whole circumſtances of the Embaſſage, their Articles, Diſputations and Anſwers, which they had firſt in the ſaid Council, then in their own Country with the Councils Embaſſadors; alſo with their Petitions and Anſwers unto the ſame.

Touching the ſtory of the Bohemians, how they being ſent for, came up to the Council of Baſil, and how they appeared, and what was there concluded and agreed, partly before before hath been expreſſed. Now as leiſure ſerveth from other matters, to return again unto the ſame, it remaineth to proſecute the reſt that lacketh, ſo far as both brevity may be obſerved, and yet the Reader not defrauded of ſuch things, principally worthy in the ſame to be noted and known.

The Bohemians then (as is before declared) having always the upper hand, albeit they were accuſed by the new Biſhop Eugenius, yet it was thought good that they ſhould be called unto Baſil, where the Council was appointed. Whereupon Cardinal Julian ſent thither before John Pulkmiar Doctor of the Law, and John de Raguſio, a Divine. Who coming unto Baſil in the Month of Auguſt, Anno 1431. called by their Letters unto the Council, John Abbot of Muldrun, and Johen Gelhuſius, Monk of the ſame Cloiſter; which men for dexterſty of their wit and experience, and knowledge of Countries, were very meet and neceſſary for Embaſſages.

The Bohemians invited to come to the Council.

Within a few days after, Julianus alſo came thither, as he had promiſed, and immediately ſent out John Gelhuſius, and Hammon Offenbourgh, a Senator of Baſil, firſt unto the Emperor Sigiſmund being at Feldirch, and afterward unto Frederick Duke of Auſtrich, for the appeaſing of the Wars between him and Philip Duke of Burgundy. This was done, to the intent that peace being had, not only the Eccleſiaſtical Prelates, but alſo the Merchants might have ſafe acceſs unto Baſil, and ſo bring in all things neceſſary for ſuſtentation.

They going on this Embaſſage, received Letters from the Synod, to be delivered unto the Emperor Sigiſmund, whereby the Bohemians and Moravians were called unto the Council. Theſe Letters he by and by cauſed to be carried unto Boheme. But forſomuch as he himſelf went into Italy, to receive the Imperial Crown of the Biſhop, he left William Duke of Bavaria, as his Deputy, to be Protector unto the Council. Furthermore, when as the Synod underſtood that our men would take a peace with the Bohemians, after their moſt ſhameful flight, they ſent John Niderus a Divine, and John Gelhuſius, to comfort the people which joyned upon Boheme, and earneſtly to move the Moravians and Bohemians, which were before called, to come unto the Council.

They departing from Baſil, about the end of October, took their journey toward Mnacum, a Town of Bavaria; where, after they had ſaluted William Duke of Bavaria, and his Brother Erneſtus, and Albert the Son of Erneſtus, and had declared the Commiſſion of their Embaſſage, and had ſhewed unto Duke William, how that as ſoon as he ſhould come unto Baſil, the protection of the Council ſhould be committed unto him by the Emperor; they exhorted Frederick Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, and John Duke of Bavaria, the Senate of Noremberg, and other Princes and Lords, partly by the Letters of the Council, and partly by words of mouth, that they ſhould by no means take any Truce with the Bohemians, for that it might be hurtful unto the Church, and ſaid they ſhould have aid out of hand. They deſired them alſo in the name of the Council, That if the Bohemians would ſend their Embaſſadors unto Baſil, they would guide them, every man through his Country in ſafety; which they promiſed to do. It is incredible how all men rejoyced that the Bohemians were ſent for.

After this, when as they counſelled with the Senate of Noremberg, touching the ſending of the Councils Letters unto Boheme, it ſeemed beſt firſt of all to inquire of the Rulers of Egra, whether the Bohemians had made any anſwer to the former Letters of the Council which they had ſent. The Rulers of Egra, being advertiſed by theſe Letters, ſent him which carried the Councils Letters into Boheme, unto Noremberg. He reported how reverently the Council of the greater City of Prague received the Letters, and how he was rewarded.

The Bohemians laboured to come to the Council.

Whereupon they conceived great hope of the good ſucceſs of the Embaſſage. Therefore the Embaſſadors uſing the counſel of the Senate of Noremberg, and divers others, ſent the meſſenger back again unto Egra, with their own private Letters, and with Letters of the Council; for there was no better mean to ſend the Letters to Boheme. Much travel was taken by them of Egra, Frederick Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, and John Duke of Bavaria, in this matter; for that they were very deſirous that peace might be had amongſt Chriſtians. The Copy of thoſe Letters, whereby the Synod did call the Bohemians unto the Council, and other Letters exhortatory of the Embaſſadors, and the Bohemians anſwer unto the ſame, for brevities cauſe we have here pretermitted. The Bohemians not in all points truſting unto the Embaſſadors, required by their Letters that the Councils Embaſſadors, with the other Princes, would come unto Egra, where their Embaſſadors ſhould alſo be preſent, to intreat upon the ſafe conduct, and other matters.

The day was appointed for the meeting, the Sunday after Eaſter, which was the twenty ſeventh day of April. Then came the Embaſſadors of the Council unto Egra, with the noble Princes Frederick Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, and John Duke of Bavaria, with other Nobles, almoſt to the number of 252 Horſe. But none of the Bohemians were preſent, becauſe the Inhabitants of Pilſana, and the Lord Swambergius had not ſent their ſafe conduct. When they underſtood this by their Letters, they brought it to paſs, that the Embaſſadors of the Bohemians, Nicolaus Humpelzius, Secretary of the greater City of Prague, and Matthew Clumpezane, Preſident of Pieſta, ſhould be brought forth by them of Egra, and the Elenbogenſes, and ſo they came unto Egra with nineteen Horſe, the 8th day of May. The next day after Henry Tocgye received the Bohemian Embaſſadors before the Marqueſs with an eloquent Oration, taking this part of the Goſpel for his Theme, Pax vobis, i. Peace be with you. Then they propounded what great injuries they had hitherto received at their hands, which was the cauſe of ſo many great ſlaughters on either party, and that they were glad that yet now at the length there were ſome hope that they ſhould be heard.

The Embaſſadors of the Bohemians, and of the Council, meet together at Egra.

After this they conferred as touching the ſafe conduct. The Bohemians required pledges, and that not of the common ſort, but Princes and Nobles. Which thing, foraſmuch as it did not content the Embaſſadors, and that the matter ſhould ſo be put off, the common People of Egra began to cry out, That it was long of the Eccleſiaſtical Princes, that a concord was not made with the Bohemians. Then Frederick Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, and John Duke of Bavaria, bound themſelves of their own good wills. The like alſo did William Duke of Bavaria, at the requeſt of the Council. Likewiſe alſo did the Council and the Emperor Sigiſmund. Furthermore, promiſe was made, That all the Princes and Cities ſhould do the like, through whoſe dominion they ſhould come, and the City of Baſil alſo. The copy of which ſafe conduct was afterward ſent unto Prague. This alſo was required by the Bohemians, That if it were poſſible the Emperor ſhould be preſent at the Council.

The Bohemians require the Emperor to be preſent at the Council.

This convention at Egra, continued 21 days. But the Bohemians, albeit they heard the Councils Embaſſadors make great promiſes, yet did they not fully give credit unto them. Whereupon they choſe out two Embaſſadors, Nicholas Humgolizius, and John Zaczenſes, which ſhould go to Baſil, and diligently enquire out all things. Theſe men, Conrade Biſhop of Ratiſbone, and Conrade Seglaver Dean of Eſtein brought into Cattelſpurg, where the Marqueſs dwelt, being ſent out by the Synod a little before, to enquire whether the Bohemian Embaſſadors would come or not. When they were come to Biberack, one being overcurious, inquired of one of the Bohemian Embaſſadors, of what County he was. He anſwered that he was a Zaczenſian. There (ſaid he) are moſt execrable hereticks and naughty men, &c. Who for that ſlanderous word, as a breaker of the truce, was ſtraightway carried to Priſon, and there ſhould have ſuffered more puniſhment, if the Bohemian Embaſſadors, and the Abbot of Ebera, had not intreated for him. When they came unto Baſil, they were honourably received with Wine and Fiſh. They tarried there five days and a half. The tenth day of October they came unto the Synod, which was aſſembled at the Friers Auguſtines.

principal verity) to declare the truth unto you. If ye do receive and embrace the declaration of the ſaid three Articles, which is grounded upon the verity of the holy Scripture, as you are bound, and will effectually have a pure, ſimple and perfect unity touching the liberty of the Communion under both kinds which you deſire and require, which alſo you cannot lawfully have without the licence of holy Church; we have authority from the General Council, by certain means to intreat and conclude with you, truſting that you will ſhew your ſelves as you will continue.

The Bohemians take a deliberation of the 4th Article.

Theſe things thus declared, after the Bohemians had taken deliberation, they ſaid, That they would give no anſwer unto the premiſes, before they underſtood what ſhould be offered them as touching the Communion. Wherefore it ſhall be neceſſary to declare the matter, as it was written in form following.

A Declaration of the Council touching the 4th Article of the Communion.

In the Name of God and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, upon the Sacrament of whoſe moſt bleſſed laſt Supper we ſhall intreat, that he which hath inſtituted this moſt bleſſed Sacrament of unity and peace, will vouchſafe to work this effect in us, and to make us that we may be one in the ſaid Lord Jeſus our Head, and that he will ſubvert all the ſubtilties of the Devil, which through his envious craftineſs hath made the Sacrament of peace and unity, an occaſion of war and diſcord; that whilſt Chriſtians do contend touching the manner of communicating, they be not deprived of the fruit of the Communion. Whereupon S. Auguſtine in his Sermon upon Infants, in the Decrees De conſecrat. diſtinct. 2. Quia paſſus, ſaith thus; So the Lord Jeſus Chriſt certified us, and willed that we ſhould appertain unto him, and conſecrate the myſtery of our peace and unity upon the Table. He that receiveth the myſtery of unity, and doth not keep the bond of peace, doth not receive a myſtery for himſelf, but a teſtimony againſt himſelf. This we thought good above all things to be premiſed, that the general cuſtom of the Church, which your Fathers and you alſo in times paſt have obſerved, hath a long time had and ſtill uſeth, that they which do not conſecrate, communicate only under the kind of Bread. Which cuſtom being lawfully brought in by the Church and holy Fathers, and now a long time obſerved, it is not lawful to reject, or to change at your will and pleaſure, without the authority of the Church. Therefore to change the cuſtom of the Church, and to take in hand to communicate unto the people under both kinds, without the authority of holy Church, is altogether unlawful. For holy Church upon reaſonable occaſions, may grant liberty unto the people to communicate under both kinds. And every Communion, which being attempted without the authority and licence of the Church, ſhould be unlawful, when it is done with the authority of holy Church, ſhall be lawful, if other things let it not; becauſe (as the Apoſtle ſaith) He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation.

Conſecrat. diſt. 2. quia paſſus.

This is to ſet up the Church above the Scripture.

The holy Communion requireth amendment of life.

Whereupon St. Iſidore of the ſecond Diſtinct. upon the Conſecration writeth thus, They which live wickedly, and ceaſe not daily to communicate in the Church, thinking thereby to be cleanſed, let them learn that it doth nothing at all profit them to the cleanſing of their ſins. And St. Auguſtine in the ſame diſtinction ſaith, Holy things may hurt the evil, for unto the good they are ſalvation, but unto the evil damnation. There are beſides this many other authorities. The Apoſtle Judas was amongſt them which did firſt communicate, but forſomuch as he received unworthily, having that ſin of Treaſon in his heart, did profit him nothing, but the Devil by and by exerciſed the more power and authority over him. This is declared by a great reaſon, Which of you is it, that if you ſhould receive your Lord into your houſe, would not with all diligence and care ſtudy to make clean and adorn his houſe, that he may receive the Lord honeſtly? much more he that ſhall receive the Lord and Saviour into the houſe of his ſoul, ought diligently to make clean and deck his ſoul, to cleanſe it by the Sacrament of Penance, with ſorrow and contrition of heart, humbly, purely and truly confeſſing his ſins, and receiving due Satisfaction and Penance, to adorn and deck the ſame with the purple or rich aray of devotion, that the heart being ſo purged and adorned with fervent deſire, he may come to that moſt holy Sacrament, whereby God reconcileth all the World unto him.

Holy things nothing profit the wicked.

The reverent receiving of the Sacraments.

Wherefore the moſt ſacred Synod admoniſheth, exhorteth and commandeth, that all Prieſts ſhould diligently exhort and admoniſh the people, and that they ſhould uſe all their care and endeavour, that no man come to that moſt bleſſed Sacrament, except he be duly prepared with great reverence and devotion, leſt that which is received for the ſalvation of the ſoul, redound to the condemnation, through the unworthy receiving thereof. {KING Hen. 6.}

Receiving under one kind, for avoiding two perils.

Moreover, Doctors do ſay, that the cuſtom of communicating unto the people, only under the kind of bread, was reaſonably introduced by the Church and holy Fathers, for reaſonable cauſes, ſpecially for the avoiding of two perils; of error and unreverence. Of error, as to think that the one part of Chriſts Body were in the Bread, and the other part in the Cup, which were a great error. Of unreverence, forſomuch as many things may happen, as well on the part of the Miniſter, as on the part of the Receiver: As it is ſaid, that it happened when as a certain Prieſt, carried the Sacrament of the Cup unto a ſick man, when he ſhould have miniſtred, he found nothing in the Cup, being all ſpilt by the way, with many other ſuch like chances. We have heard moreover, that it hath often happened, that the Sacrament conſecrate in the Cup, hath not been ſufficient for the number of Communicants, whereby a new Conſecration muſt be made, which is not agreeable to the Doctrine of the holy Fathers, and alſo that oftentimes they do miniſter Wine unconſecrate for conſecrate Wine, which is a great peril. By this means when it ſhall be brought to paſs, that if you will effectually receive the unity and peace of the Church in all other things beſides the uſe of the Communion under both kinds, conforming your ſelves to the faith and order of the Univerſal Church, you that have that uſe and cuſtom ſhall communicate ſtill by the authority of the Church under both kinds, and this Article ſhall be diſcuſſed fully in the ſacred Council, where you ſhall ſee what as touching this Article, is to be holden as an univerſal verity, and is to be done for the profit and ſalvation of the Chriſtian people, and all things being thus throughly handled, then if you perſevere in your deſire, and that your Embaſſadors do require it, the ſacred Council will grant licence in the Lord unto your Miniſters, to communicate unto the people under both kinds, that is to ſay, to ſuch as be of lawful years and diſcretion, and ſhall reverently and devoutly require the ſame; this always obſerved, that the Miniſters ſhall ſay unto thoſe which ſhall communicate, that they ought firmly to believe, not the fleſh only to be contained under the form of Bread, and the blood only under the Wine, but under each kind to be whole and perfect Chriſt.

Cauſes why to miniſter under one kind.

Error grounded upon error.

Receiving in both kinds, permitted to the Bohemians.

The condition annexed.

Thus hitherto we have declared the Decree of the Council. As touching the other doubts and queſtions which were afterward moved by the Maſters and Prelates of Boheme, the Embaſſadors of the Council anſwered thus.

Doubts or queſtions of the Bohemians.

Anſwer.

Firſt they ſaid, That it was not the meaning of the ſacred Council, to ſuffer the Communion under both kinds by toleration, or as the Libel of divorcement was permitted to the Jews, forſomuch as the Council, intending even to open the bowels of motherly charity and pity unto the Bohemians and Moravians, doth not mean to ſuffer it with ſuch kind of ſufferance, which ſhould not exclude ſin, but ſo to grant it, that by the authority of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and of his true Spouſe the Church, it may be lawful, profitable and healthful unto thoſe which worthily receive the ſame. Alſo as touching that which was ſpoken by the ſaid Bohemians, of the puniſhing of offences, that it is in the Scriptures, how that God oftentimes ſtirreth up the hearts of private perſons to the correcting and puniſhing of ſins, and ſo it ſhould ſeem lawful unto the inferiours to correct and puniſh their ſuperiors; they anſwered, alledging the Text of S. Auguſtine in the 33d Decree. He that ſtriketh wicked men in that they are wicked, and hath cauſe of death againſt them, is the Miniſter of God; but he which without any publick adminiſtration or office murthereth or maimeth any wicked thief, ſacrilegious, adulterous or perjured perſon, or any other offender, ſhall be judged as an Homicide, and ſo much the more ſharply, in that he feared not to abuſe and uſurp the power not granted him of God; and truly this City would take it much more grievouſly, if any private man ſhould attempt to puniſh an offender, and ſet up a Gallows in the Street and there

Permiſſion of both kinds granted to the Bohemians, not of ſufferance, but by full authority.

Puniſhing of offences conſidered.

How and by whom offenders ought to be puniſhed.

{KING Hen.6.}

there hang him, than if one man ſhould kill another in brawle or quarrel. They alledged alſo other Texts of St. Ambroſe and St. Hierome agreeable to the ſame. They ſaid that no man doubteth that the Law of God is duly and holily appointed, and therein is ſimply written, Thou ſhalt not ſteal. And notwithſtanding by the Commandment of God the Children of Iſrael carried away the Goods of the Egyptians, which they had borrowed of them. Alſo in the ſame Law it is plainly written, Thou ſhalt do no murther. Whereupon St. Auguſtine in his firſt Book De Civitate Dei, proveth, that it is not lawful for any man to kill himſelf; and when as he maketh example of Sampſon, he anſwereth with theſe words: When as God commandeth and doth affirm himſelf to command without any doubt, who is he that will call obedience in ? or who will accuſe the obedience to God ?

To do that God commandeth, is obedience, and no ſin, though it be extraordinary.

The Iſraelites did ſteal from the Egyptians without ſin.

Sampſon killed himſelf without ſin.

Of extraordinary commandment no general Laws to be made.

Here in this Propoſition, you have the words of St. Auſtin for anſwer. But let every man well foreſee, if God do command, or that he do intimate the commandment without any circumſtances, and let him prove the ſpirits whether they be of God. But in ſuch caſes there are no Laws to be given, neither are they much to be talked of; for thereby there ſhould eaſily occaſion riſe to make ſedition, and for the inferiors to riſe againſt the ſuperiors. For when any man had ſtolen, any thing, or killed any man, he would ſay that he was moved thereunto by the Spirit of God: but without manifeſt proof thereof, he ſhould be puniſhed.

Objection.

Again, they ſaid that there were certain caſes wherein the laity had power over the Clergy. It was anſwered, that there were certain caſes in the law, wherein the laity had power over the Clergy, and oftentimes over Cardinals. For if the Pope being dead, the Cardinals would not enter the Conclave to elect a new Pope, the King, Prince, or other Lord or Secular power may compell them: but in theſe caſes he is now no private perſon, but uſeth his juriſdiction by the authority of the Law. The like is to be underſtood of all other caſes expreſſed in the Law.

Anſwer. The Laity hath power over the Clergy, and wherein. The Pope will be judged by his own Laws.

Objection.

They ſaid further, That no common Law hath any right or juſtice, except Gods Law do allow the ſame.

Anſwer.

It was anſwered, That no common Law hath right or juſtice, if it be againſt the Law of God; becauſe the Law of God is the rule of all other Laws. But there is great cunning and knowledg in applying the rule to that which is made by the rule; for oftentimes it ſeemeth that there is diverſity in the thing made by the rule, when there is none indeed; but the default is in the applying, becauſe the rule is not duly applied to the thing made by it.

Objection.

As touching the Article of preaching the Word of God, it was moved that oftentimes ſome Prelates through their own envy and malice, without any reaſonable cauſe, do inhibit a good and meet Preacher that preacheth Catholickly and well.

Anſwer. Abuſe of Prelates in inhibiting true Preachers.

Anſwer was made; How that they underſtood well enough that the abuſe of certain Prelates, which did inordinately behave themſelves, gave a great occaſion of thoſe troubles. Alſo that they never heard of any ſuch complaints in thoſe parts, but that the Prelates do favour good Preachers, and ſtir them up to preach, by intreaty, favour, and promotion. In all ſuch caſes there are remedies already provided by the Law; for when any man is ſo prohibited to uſe his right, he hath remedy to appeal: and if he do truſt his appeal to be juſt, he may uſe his right, all violence both of the Spiritual and Secular power ſet apart; for the end of the matter ſhall declare if he had juſt cauſe to appeal. Then ſhall it be declared that the ſuperior hath done evil in prohibiting, and the Plaintiff juſtly in doing, and the ſuperior for his unjuſt prohibition ſhall be puniſhed. But if he be juſtly prohibited, and that through his temerity he do contemn the juſt commandment of his ſuperior, he is worthy to be puniſhed with condign puniſhment.

Remedy of Appeal.

Objection.

Where it was moved concerning the third Article, whether it were lawful for the Eccleſiaſtical Prelates to exerciſe in their proper perſon, the Acts of Secular dominion: Hereunto it was anſwered, that if by this word, Acts of Secular dominion, are underſtood Acts which a Secular Lord may do or exerciſe, then it is to be ſaid, that a Prelate may lawfully exerciſe ſome ſuch Acts in his proper perſon, as to ſell, pawn, or pledg, to infeoffe by manner and form ordained by Law: but there are ſome Acts which it is not lawful for them to exerciſe in their proper perſon, but ought to have afterward a Vicegerent or Proctor to do the ſame; whereupon there is prohibition made in the Law in the Rubrick, Ne Clerus vel Monachus ſeculáribus negotiis ſe immiſceat, & in aliis rebus.

Anſwer. Acts of Secular dominion to be exerciſed of the Clergy, after a double reſpect, vel per ſe, vel per alium.

It was alſo moved, whether that coactive power, which Juriſdiction. ought to be exerciſed by a Steward, &c. be in the hands of an Eccleſiaſtical Prelate.

Anſwer. Coactive power, whether it belongeth to the Clergy, and how.

Whereupon John Polomair anſwered, That this Queſtion preſuppoſeth another; whereof there are divers opinions amongſt the Doctors, in whoſe power the dominion of the Church ſhould be: and furthermore, whether the actions be in the perſon of the Tutor or Proctor, or if they be not in their perſon, notwithſtanding by the conſtitution of any Actor or Proctor (whoſe exerciſing of thoſe actions do give authority unto the Actor or Proctor) they be; with other difficulties, whereof it is not needful to ſpeak at this preſent. But forſomuch as he was urged to ſay his opinion, he ſaid, that to ſuch as had either leiſure or pleaſure in diſputation, and would argue againſt him, he would be contented to give the choice to take which part he would; but his opinion was rather that the dominion of Church-matters ſhould be in the power of Chriſt: and the Prelates with the other Clergy, are but Canonical adminiſtrators in manner of Tutors; but they have more power and adminiſtration than Tutors, and by conſtituting a Steward or Vicegerent, &c. their conſtitution being duly made, the Steward or Vicegerent hath the ſame coactive power and exerciſe of juriſdiction.

Alſo as touching the fourth Article, for the declaration of the firſt Concluſion, it is agreed that theſe words, Juſte requiſita, i.e. juſtly gotten, alledged therein, determine all things contained in the ſame.

The Goods of the Church in whoſe poſſeſſion they be properly.

Alſo as touching the ſecond Concluſion, whereas the Sacred Canons and holy Doctors ſpeak thus, The Goods of the Church, the ſubſtance of the Church, and the poſſeſſions of the Church, and divers other opinions there be amongſt the Doctors, in whoſe power the rule thereof ſhould be, as it is noted in the Gloſſ. Cap. expedit xii. Quæſt. 1. they do not intend to conſtrain any man to any of thoſe opinions; neither to exclude any of them, but that every man ſhould have liberty probably to maintain which of them he thinketh beſt.

12 q. 1. cap. Expedit.

The Clergy be adminiſtrators, not Lords of the Temporalties of the Church.

Moreover the Bohemians ſaid, that they did believe that the Clergy are but adminiſtrators of the Temporalties of the Church, and not Lords thereof, according to the manner of ſpeaking of the Scriptures, holy Doctors and Canons. Alſo the Bohemians ſaid, that in all occaſions which ſhall hereafter riſe, they would wholly ſtand to the determination of the Judg agreed upon in Egra, with one conſent. In this manner did the Ambaſſadors make anſwer unto the Bohemians. At the laſt, after much communication had to and fro, a concord and unity was concluded and confirmed by ſetting to their hands. The Bohemians promiſed to receive the peace and unity of the Church, and the declaration of the three Articles. This was done in the year of our Lord 1438. About the Feaſt of St. Martin, it was afterward agreed both by the Ambaſſadors of that Council, and of Boheme, that whatſoever remained ſhould be determined and agreed upon, firſt at Ratisbona, afterward at Bruna in the Dioceſs of Olymutes; then at Alba in Hungary, before the Emperor Sigiſmund, but the matter could not be ended in any place.

The agreement between the Bohemians and the Council. {Anno 1438.}

At the laſt the concord was confirmed by writing with their Seals at Inglavia, a City of Moravia, the fifth day of July, in the preſence of the Emperor.

¶ Certain Petitions which the Bohemians put up laſt of all in the Sacred Council of Baſil, Anno 1438, in the Month of November.

Certain Petitions of the Bohemians put up to the Council. {Ann. 1438}

UNto the moſt reverend Fathers in Chriſt, and our moſt gracious Lords: We the Ambaſſadors of the Kingdom of Boheme do moſt humbly and heartily require you that for the perpetual preſervation of peace and concord, and for the firm preſervation of all things contained in the compoſition, you will vouchſafe of your Clemency to give and grant unto us all and ſingular our requeſts here underwritten, with effectual execution of the ſame.

Firſt, And above all things we deſire and require you, for the extirpation of divers diſſentions and controverſies which ill principal verity) to declare the truth unto you. If ye do receive and embrace the declaration of the ſaid three Articles, which is grounded upon the verity of the holy Scripture, as you are bound, and will effectually have a pure, ſimple and perfect unity touching the liberty of the Communion under both kinds which you deſire and require, which alſo you cannot lawfully have without the licence of holy Church; we have authority from the General Council, by certain means to intreat and conclude with you, truſting that you will ſhew your ſelves as you will continue.

The Bohemians take a deliberation of the 4th Article.

These things thus declared, after the Bohemians had taken deliberation, they ſaid, That they would give no anſwer unto the premiſes, before they underſtood what ſhould be offered them as touching the Communion. Wherefore it ſhall be neceſſary to declare the matter, as it was written in form following.

A Declaration of the Council touching the 4th Article of the Communion.

In the Name of God and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, upon the Sacrament of whoſe moſt bleſſed laſt Supper we ſhall intreat, that he which hath inſtituted this moſt bleſſed Sacrament of unity and peace, will vouchſafe to work this effect in us, and to make us that we may be one in the ſaid Lord Jeſus our Head, and that he will ſubvert all the ſubtilties of the Devil, which through his envious craftineſs hath made the Sacrament of peace and unity, an occaſion of war and diſcord; that whilſt Chriſtians do contend touching the manner of communicating, they be not deprived of the fruit of the Communion. Whereupon S. Auguſtine in his Sermon upon Infants, in the Decrees De conſecrat. diſtinct. 2. Quia paſſus, ſaith thus, So the Lord Jeſus Chriſt certified us, and willed that we ſhould appertain unto him, and conſecrate the myſtery of our peace and unity upon the Table. He that receiveth the myſtery of unity, and doth not keep the bond of peace, doth not receive a myſtery for himſelf, but a teſtimony againſt himſelf. This we thought good above all things to be premiſed, that the general cuſtom of the Church, which your Fathers and you alſo in times paſt have obſerved, hath a long time had and ſtill uſeth, that they which do not conſecrate, communicate only under the kind of Bread. Which cuſtom being lawfully brought in by the Church and holy Fathers, and now a long time obſerved, it is not lawful to reject, or to change at your will and pleaſure, without the authority of the Church. Therefore to change the cuſtom of the Church, and to take in hand to communicate unto the people under both kinds, without the authority of holy Church, is altogether unlawful. For holy Church upon reaſonable occaſions, may grant liberty unto the people to communicate under both kinds. And every Communion, which being attempted without the authority and licence of the Church, ſhould be unlawful, when it is done with the authority of holy Church, ſhall be lawful, if other things let it not; becauſe (as the Apoſtle ſaith) He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation.

Conſecrat. diſt. 2. quia paſſus.

This is to ſet up the Church above the Scripture.

The holy Communion requireth amendment of life.

Whereupon St. Iſidore of the ſecond Diſtinct. upon the Conſecration writeth thus, They which live wickedly, and ceaſe not daily to communicate in the Church, thinking thereby to be cleanſed, let them learn that it doth nothing at all profit them to the cleanſing of their ſins. And St. Auguſtine in the ſame diſtinction ſaith, Holy things may hurt the evil, for unto the good they are ſalvation, but unto the evil damnation. There are beſides this many other authorities. The Apoſtle Judas was amongſt them which did firſt communicate, but forſomuch as he received unworthily, having that ſin of Treaſon in his heart, did profit him nothing, but the Devil by and by exerciſed the more power and authority over him. This is declared by a great reaſon, Which of you is it, that if you ſhould receive your Lord into your Houſe, would not with all diligence and care ſtudy to make clean and adorn his houſe, that he may receive the Lord honeſtly? much more he that ſhall receive the Lord and Saviour into the houſe of his ſoul, ought diligently to make clean and deck his ſoul, to cleanſe it by the Sacrament of Penance, with ſorrow and contrition of heart, humbly, purely and truly confeſſing his ſins, and receiving due Satisfaction and Penance, to adorn and deck the ſame with the purple or rich aray of devotion, that the heart being ſo purged and adorned with fervent deſire, he may come to that moſt holy Sacrament, whereby God reconcileth all the World unto him.

Holy things nothing profit the wicked.

The reverent receiving of the Sacraments.

Wherefore the moſt ſacred Synod admoniſheth, exhorteth and commandeth, that all Prieſts ſhould diligently exhort and admoniſh the people, and that they ſhould uſe all their care and endeavour, that no man come to that moſt bleſſed Sacrament, except he be duly prepared with great reverence and devotion, leſt that which is received for the ſalvation of the ſoul, redound to the condemnation, through the unworthy receiving thereof.

{KING Hen. 6.}

Moreover, Doctors do ſay, that the cuſtom of communicating unto the people, only under the kind of bread, was reaſonably introduced by the Church and holy Fathers, for reaſonable cauſes, ſpecially for the avoiding of two perils; of error and unreverence. Of error, as to think that the one part of Chriſts Body were in the Bread, and the other part in the Cup, which were a great error. Of unreverence, forſomuch as many things may happen, as well on the part of the Miniſter, as on the part of the Receiver: As it is ſaid, that it happened when as a certain Prieſt, carried the Sacrament of the Cup unto a ſick man, when he ſhould have miniſtred, he found nothing in the Cup, being all ſpilt by the way, with many other ſuch like chances. We have heard moreover, that it hath often happened, that the Sacrament conſecrate in the Cup, hath not been ſufficient for the number of Communicants, whereby a new Conſecration muſt be made, which is not agreeable to the Doctrine of the holy Fathers, and alſo that oftentimes they do miniſter Wine unconſecrate for conſecrate Wine, which is a great peril. By this means when it ſhall be brought to paſs, that if you will effectually receive the unity and peace of the Church in all other things beſides the uſe of the Communion under both kinds, conforming your ſelves to the faith and order of the Univerſal Church, you that have that uſe and cuſtom ſhall communicate ſtill by the authority of the Church under both kinds, and this Article ſhall be diſcuſſed fully in the ſacred Council, where you ſhall ſee what as touching this Article, is to be holden as an univerſal verity, and is to be done for the profit and ſalvation of the Chriſtian people, and all things being thus throughly handled, then if you perſevere in your deſire, and that your Embaſſadors do require it, the ſacred Council will grant licence in the Lord unto your Miniſters, to communicate unto the people under both kinds, that is to ſay, to ſuch as be of lawful years and diſcretion, and ſhall reverently and devoutly require the ſame; this always obſerved, that the Miniſters ſhall ſay unto thoſe which ſhall communicate, that they ought firmly to believe, not the fleſh only to be contained under the form of Bread, and the bloud only under the Wine, but under each kind to be whole and perfect Chriſt.

Receiving under one kind, for avoiding two perils.

Error grounded upon error.

Cauſes why to miniſter under one kind.

Receiving in both kinds, permitted to the Bohemians.

The condition annexed.

Thus hitherto we have declared the Decree of the Council. As touching the other doubts and queſtions which were afterward moved by the Maſters and Prelates of Boheme, the Embaſſadors of the Council anſwered thus.

Doubts or queſtions of the Bohemians.

Firſt they ſaid, That it was not the meaning of the ſacred Council, to ſuffer the Communion under both kinds by toleration, or as the Libel of divorcement was permitted to the Jews, forſomuch as the Council, intending even to open the bowels of motherly charity and pity unto the Bohemians and Moravians, doth not mean to ſuffer it with ſuch kind of ſufferance, which ſhould not exclude ſin, but ſo to grant it, that by the authority of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and of his true Spouſe the Church, it may be lawful, profitable and healthful unto thoſe which worthily receive the ſame. Alſo as touching that which was ſpoken by the ſaid Bohemians, of the puniſhing of offences, that it is in the Scriptures, how that God oftentimes ſtirreth up the hearts of private perſons to the correcting and puniſhing of ſins, and ſo it ſhould ſeem lawful unto the inferiours to correct and puniſh their ſuperiors; they anſwered, alledging the Text of S. Auguſtine in the 33d Decree. He that ſtriketh wicked men in that they are wicked, and hath cauſe of death againſt them, is the Miniſter of God; but he which without any publick adminiſtration or office murthereth or maimeth any wicked thief, ſacrilegious, adulterous or perjured perſon, or any other offender, ſhall be judged as an Homicide, and ſo much the more ſharply, in that he feared not to abuſe and uſurp the power not granted him of God; and truly this City would take it much more grievoully, if any private man ſhould attempt to puniſh an offender, and ſet up a Gallows in the Street and there

Anſwer.

Permiſſion of both kinds granted to the Bohemians, not of ſufferance, but by full authority.

Puniſhing of offences conſidered.

How and by whom offenders ought to be puniſhed.

{KING Hen. 6.}

To do that God commandeth, is obedience, and no sin, though it be extraordinary.

The Egyptians did steal from the Egyptians and without sin.

Samyson killed himself without sin.

there hang him, than if one man should kill another in brawle or quarrel. They alledged also other Texts of St. Ambrose and St. Hierome agreeable to the same. They said that no man doubteth that the Law of God is duly and holily appointed, and therein is simply written, Thou shalt not steal. And notwithstanding by the Commandment of God the Children of Israel carried away the Goods of the Egyptians, which they had borrowed of them. Also in the same Law it is plainly written, Thou shalt do no murther. Whereupon St. Augustine in his first Book De Civitate Dei, proveth that it is not lawful for any man to kill himself; and when as he maketh example of Sampson, he answereth with these words: When as God commandeth and doth affirm himself to command without any doubt, who is he that will call obedience sin? or who will accuse the obedience to God?

Of extraordinary commandment no general Laws to be made.

Here in this Proposition you have the words of St. Austin for answer. But let every man well foresee, if God do command, or that he do intimate the commandment without any circumstances, and let him prove the spirits whether they be of God. But in such cases there are no Laws to be given, neither are they much to be talked of; for thereby there should easily occasion rise to make sedition, and for the inferiors to rise against the superiors. For when any man had stolen any thing, or killed any man, he would say that he was moved thereunto by the Spirit of God: but without manifest proof thereof, he should be punished.

Objection. Answer. The Laity hath power over the Clergy, and wherein. The Pope will be judged by his own Laws.

Again, they said that there were certain cases wherein the laity had power over the Clergy. It was answered, that there were certain cases in the law, wherein the laity had power over the Clergy, and oftentimes over Cardinals. For if the Pope being dead, the Cardinals would not enter the Conclave to elect a new Pope, the King, Prince, or other Lord or Secular power may compell them: but in these cases he is now no private person, but useth his jurisdiction by the authority of the Law. The like is to be understood of all other cases expressed in the Law.

Objection.

They said further, That no common Law hath any right or justice, except Gods Law do allow the same.

Answer.

It was answered, That no common Law hath right or justice, if it be against the Law of God; because the Law of God is the rule of all other Laws. But there is great cunning and knowledg in applying the rule to that which is made by the rule; for oftentimes it seemeth that there is diversity in the thing made by the rule, when there is none indeed; but the default is in the applying, because the rule is not duly applied to the thing made by it.

Objection.

As touching the Article of preaching the Word of God, it was moved that oftentimes some Prelates through their own envy and malice, without any reasonable cause, do inhibit a good and meet Preacher that preacheth Catholickly and well.

Answer. Abuse of Prelates in inhibiting true Preachers.

Answer was made; How that they understood well enough that the abuse of certain Prelates, which did inordinately behave themselves, gave a great occasion of those troubles. Also that they never heard of any such complaints in those parts, but that the Prelates do favour good Preachers, and stir them up to preach, by intreaty, favour, and promotion. In all such cases there are remedies already provided by the Law; for when any man is so prohibited to use his right, he hath remedy to appeal: and if he do trust his appeal to be just, he may use his right, all violence both of the Spiritual and Secular power set apart; for the end of the matter shall declare if he had just cause to appeal. Then shall it be declared that the superior hath done evil in prohibiting, and the Plaintiff justly in doing, and the superior for his unjust prohibition shall be punished. But if he be justly prohibited, and that through his temerity he do contemn the just commandment of his superior, he is worthy to be punished with condign punishment.

Remedy of Appeal.

Objection.

Where it was moved concerning the third Article, whether it were lawful for the Ecclesiastical Prelates to exercise in their proper person, the Acts of Secular dominion: Hereunto it was answered, that if by this word, Acts of Secular dominion, are understood Acts which a Secular Lord may do or exercise, then it is to be said, that a Prelate may lawfully exercise some such Acts in his proper person, as to sell, pawn, or pledg, to infeoffe by manner and form ordained by Law: but there are some Acts which it is not lawful for them to exercise in their proper person, but ought to have afterward a Vicegerent or Proctor to do the same; whereupon there is prohibition made in the Law in the Rubrick, Ne Clerus vel Monachus secularibus negotiis se immisceat, & in aliis rebus.

Answer. Acts of Secular dominion to be exercised of the Clergy, after a double respect, vel per se, vel per alium.

It was also moved, whether that coactive power, which Jurisdiction. ought to be exercised by a Steward, &c. be in the hands of an Ecclesiastical Prelate.

Answer.

Whereupon John Polomair answered, That this Question presupposeth another; whereof there are divers opinions amongst the Doctors, in whose power the dominion of the Church should be: and furthermore, whether the actions be in the person of the Tutor or Proctor, or if they be not in their person, notwithstanding by the constitution of any Actor or Proctor (whose exercising of those actions do give authority unto the Actor or Proctor) they be; with other difficulties, whereof it is not needful to speak at this present. But forsomuch as he was urged to say his opinion, he said, that to such as had either leisure or pleasure in disputation, and would argue against him, he would be contented to give the choice to take which part he would; but his opinion was rather that the dominion of Church-matters should be in the power of Christ: and the Prelates with the other Clergy, are but Canonical administrators in manner of Tutors; but they have more power and administration than Tutors, and by constituting a Steward or Vicegerent, &c. their constitution being duly made, the Steward or Vicegerent hath the same coactive power and exercise of jurisdiction.

Coactive power, whether in the Clergy, and how.

Also as touching the fourth Article, for the declaration of the first Conclusion, it is agreed that these words, Juste requisita, i.e. justly gotten alledged therein, determine all things contained in the same.

Also as touching the second Conclusion, whereas the Sacred Canons and holy Doctors speak thus, The Goods of the Church, the substance of the Church, and the possessions of the Church, and divers other opinions there be amongst the Doctors, in whose power the rule thereof should be, as it is noted in the Gloss. Cap. expedit xii. Quæst. 1. they do not intend to constrain any man to any of those opinions; neither to exclude any of them, but that every man should have liberty probably to maintain which of them he thinketh best.

The Goods of the Church in whose possession they be properly.

12 q. 1. cap. Expedit.

Moreover the Bohemians said, that they did believe that the Clergy are but administrators of the Temporalties of the Church, and not Lords thereof, according to the manner of speaking of the Scriptures, holy Doctors and Canons. Also the Bohemians said, that in all occasions which shall hereafter rise, they would wholly stand to the determination of the Judg agreed upon in Egra, with one consent. In this manner did the Ambassadors make answer unto the Bohemians. At the last, after much communication had to and from, a concord and unity was concluded and confirmed by setting to their hands. The Bohemians promised to receive the peace and unity of the Church, and the declaration of the three Articles. This was done in the year of our Lord 1438. About the Feast of St. Martin, it was afterward agreed both by the Ambassadors of that Council, and of Boheme, that whatsoever remained should be determined and agreed upon, first at Ratisbona, afterward at Bruna in the Dioces of Olymutes; then at Alba in Hungary, before the Emperor Sigismund, but the matter could not be ended in any place.

The Clergy be administrators, not Lords of the Temporalties of the Church.

The agreement between the Bohemians and the Council. {Anno 1438.}

At the last the concord was confirmed by writing with their Seals at Inglavia, a City of Moravia, the fifth day of July, in the presence of the Emperor.

¶ Certain Petitions which the Bohemians put up last of all in the Sacred Council of Basil, Anno 1438, in the Month of November.

Certain Petitions of the Bohemians put up to the Council. {Ann. 1438}

UNto the most reverend Fathers in Christ, and our most gracious Lords: We the Ambassadors of the Kingdom of Boheme do most humbly and heartily require you that for the perpetual preservation of peace and concord, and for the firm preservation of all things contained in the composition, you will vouchsafe of your Clemency to give and grant unto us all and singular our requests here underwritten, with effectual execution of the same.

First, And above all things we desire and require you, for the extirpation of divers dissentions and controversies which will undoubtedly follow amongſt our people under the diverſity of the Communion, and for the aboliſhing of infinite evils which we are not able to expreſs as we have conceived them, that you will gently vouchſafe of your goodneſs and liberality to give, grant and command, unto our Kingdom of Boheme, and Marqueſdom of Moravia, one uniform order of the Communion unto all men, under both kinds, that is to ſay, unto the Archbiſhop of Prague, the Biſhop of Luthonus, Olimutz, and other Prelates of the Kingdom and Marqueſdom, having charge of Souls, and to their Vicars, and alſo to their flocks and ſubjects, and that according to thoſe things which are contained in the Bull of the Ambaſſadors, and in the compoſitions made in the name of the whole Council, written in the Chapter, Pro firmitate, where it is thus ſaid, And all other things ſhall be done, which ſhall be meet and neceſſary for the preſervation of the peace and unity. For this done, by your benefit the whole Kingdom ſhall be comforted above meaſure, and eſtabliſhed in brotherly love; whereby an uniform ſubjection and obedience ſhall be perpetually attributed unto the holy Church.

The Communion in both kinds to be generally granted.

Item, We require and deſire (as before) that for the avoiding of all falſe ſuſpition and doubtfulneſs of many, which ſuppoſe that the Sacred Council hath granted the ſaid Communion under both kinds unto us but for a time, as neither profitable nor wholſome, but as the libel of divorcement; that you will vouchſafe, according to this Chapter alledged in the Compoſitions: Firſt they ſaid, that it was not the intent of the Sacred Council, &c. wholſomely and ſpeedily to provide for our ſafety, and with your grant in this behalf, and with the Bulls of your Letters, to confirm that Chapter together with the other pertaining to the office of your Ambaſſadors.

Item, We beſeech you (as before) that for the confirmation of obedience, and for the Diſcipline of all the Clergy, and for the final defence and obſervation of all things determined and agreed upon, and for the good order in Spiritualties, ye will vouchſafe effectually to provide for us a good and lawful Paſtor, Archbiſhops and Biſhops, which ſhall ſeem unto us moſt meet and acceptable for our Kingdom, to execute thoſe offices and duties.

To have a good and lawful Paſtor and Biſhop.

Item, We require you (as aforeſaid) that your Fatherly reverences will vouchſafe, for the defence of the worthy fame of the Kingdom and Marqueſdom, to declare and ſhew our innocency, in that they have communicated, do, and hereafter ſhall communicate under both kinds; to give out, ordain, and direct the Letters of the Sacred Council, in manner and form moſt apt and meet for ſuch declaration, unto all Princes, as well Secular as Spiritual, Cities and Communalties, according to the Compoſitions, and as the Lords the Ambaſſadors are bound unto us to do.

Free Communion under both kinds to be permitted to all Princes.

Item, We deſire you that in the diſcuſſing of the matter for the Communion under both kinds, and of the Commandment thereof given unto all faithful, ye will not proceed otherwiſe than according to the Concordatum agreed upon in Egra: that is to ſay, according to the Law of God, the order of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, the General Councils, and the minds of the holy Doctors, truly grounded upon the Law of God.

Item, We deſire that your Fatherly reverences, conſidering the great affection of our people, will give us the deſired liberty to communicate unto the younger ſort the Sacrament of the Supper. For if this uſe of Communicating ſhould be taken away, which our Kingdom being godly, moved by the writings of moſt great and holy Doctors, and brought in by example, hath received as Catholick, and exerciſed now a long time; verily it ſhould raiſe up an intolerable offence amongſt the people, and their minds would be grievouſly vexed and troubled.

The Goſpels and Epiſtles to be read in the vulgar tongue. The Scriptures read in the Slavons tongue of old time.

Item, We require you (as before) that for like cauſes your Fatherly reverences would vouchſafe to permit, at the leaſt the Goſpels, Epiſtles, and Creed, to be ſung and read in the Church in our Vulgar Tongue, before the people, to move them unto devotion; for in our Slavon language it hath been uſed of old in the Church, and likewiſe in our Kingdom.

Incorporations to be granted to Univerſities an unlawful requeſt.

Item, We require you in the name of the ſaid Kingdom, and of the famous Univerſity of Prague, that your Fatherly reverences would vouchſafe to ſhew ſuch diligence and care toward the deſired reformation of that Univerſity, that according to the manner and form of other Univerſities reformed by the Church, Prebends and Collations of certain Benefices of Cathedral and Pariſh-Churches may be annexed and incorporate unto the ſaid Univerſity, that thereby it may be increaſed and preferred.

A requeſt for neceſſary reformation and diſcipline.

Item, We deſire you (as before) as heartily as we may, and alſo (ſaving always your Fatherly reverences) require you, and by the former Compoſitions we moſt inſtantly admoniſh you, that with your whole minds and endeavours, and with all care and ſtudy, your reverences will watch and ſeek for that long deſired and moſt neceſſary reformation of the Church and Chriſtian Religion, and effectually labour for the rooting out of all publick evils, as well in the head, as in the members, as you have often promiſed to do in our Kingdom, in the Compoſitions, and as our fourth Article, touching the avoiding of all publick evils doth exact and require.

There were certain anſwers provided by the Council to theſe Petitions of the Bohemians, which were not delivered unto them, but kept back, for what purpoſe and intent we know not. Wherefore becauſe we thought them not greatly neceſſary for this place, and alſo to avoid prolixity, we have judged it meet at this preſent to omit them. Thus have ye heard compendiouſly the chief and principal matters intreated and done in this famous Council of Baſil. And here (to conclude withal) we have thought good to declare unto you, for the aid and help of the ignorant people (which judg many things to be of longer time and continuance than indeed they be; and thereupon have eſtabliſhed a great part of their opinions) how that toward the latter end of this Council, that is to ſay, in the 37*th* Seſſion of the ſame, holden the 17 of September, in the year of our Lord 1439, the Feaſt of the Conception of our Lady was ordained to be holden and celebrated yearly. In like caſe alſo in the 44*th* Seſſion of the ſame Council, holden the firſt day of July, Ann. 1441, it was ordained that the Feaſt of the Viſitation of our Lady ſhould be celebrate and holden yearly in the Month of July. We have alſo thought it good before we do end this ſtory, to annex hereunto certain Decrees, profitably and wholſomely ordained in the ſaid Council, againſt the inordinate giving of the Eccleſiaſtical Benefices and Livings by the Pope, with certain other Conſtitutions alſo, fruitful for the behalf and edification of the Church.

The Conception of our Lady brought in to the Church.

The Viſitation of our Lady brought in.

During the time that the General Council at Baſil was ſo diligent and careful about the reformation of the Church, this one thing ſeemed good unto them to be proſecuted and followed with an earneſt care and diligence, that thorough every Church apt and meet Miniſters might be appointed, which might ſhine in vertue and knowledg, to the glory of Chriſt, and the healthful edifying of the Chriſtian people: whereunto the multitude of expectative graces hath been a great impediment and let, in that they have been found to have brought grievous troubles, divers diſorders, and many dangers upon the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate. For hereby oftentimes ſcarcely apt or meet Miniſters have been appointed for the Churches, which are neither known nor examined; and this expectation of void Benefices (as the old Laws do witneſs) doth give occaſion to deſire another mans death, which is greatly prejudicial unto ſalvation: beſides that, innumerable quarrels and contentions are moved amongſt the ſervants of God; rancor and malice nouriſhed; the ambition and greedy deſire of Pluralities of Benefices maintained; and the riches and ſubſtance of Kingdoms and Provinces marvellouſly conſumed. Poor men ſuffer innumerable vexations by running unto the Court of Rome. They are oftentimes ſpoiled and robbed by the way, troubled and afflicted with divers plagues; and having ſpent their Patrimony and ſubſtance left them by their parents, they are conſtrained to live in extream poverty. Many do challenge Benefices, which without any juſt title (yea ſuch indeed as ought not to have them) obtain and get the ſame; ſuch I ſay, as have moſt craft and ſubtilty to deceive their neighbour, or have greateſt ſubſtance to contend in the Law. It happeneth oftentimes that under the intrication of theſe prerogatives, antelations, and ſuch other as do aſſociate theſe expectative graces, much craft and deceit is found. Alſo oftentimes the Miniſtry is taken away from young men by their ordinary givers, whiles that by the troubles of thoſe contentions, and divers diſcourſes, running to and fro by means of thoſe graces, they are vexed and troubled; the Eccleſiaſtical order is confounded, whiles that every mans authority and juriſdiction is not preſerved; and the Biſhops of Rome alſo, by challenging and taking upon them too much the office of the inferiors, are withdrawn from more weighty and fruitful matters, neither do they diligently attend to the guiding and correction of the inferiors, as the publick utility doth require. All which things do bring a great confuſion unto the Clergy and Eccleſiaſtical ſtate, to the great prejudice and hinderance of Gods true worſhip, and publick ſalvation.

No controverſies to be brought to Rome beyond four days journey from thence.

In the ſame Council alſo divers other Conſtitutions were made, not unprofitable for reformation, and for removing of certain abuſes and diſorders brought in, eſpecially by the Biſhop of Rome, as touching cauſes not to be brought up and tranſlated to the Court of Rome: Wherein it was decreed, that no actions nor controverſies ſhould be brought from other Countries to be pleaded at Rome, which were beyond four days journey diſtant from the ſaid Court of Rome, a few principal matters only excepted. Alſo that no frivolous Appeals ſhould be made to the Pope hereafter. It was moreover in the ſame Council decreed, for the number, age, and condition of the Cardinals, that they ſhould not exceed the number of four and twenty, beſides them that were already, and that they ſhould be freely taken out of all Countries, and that they ſhould not be of kin to the Biſhop of Rome, or to the Cardinals, nor yet blemiſhed with any ſpot or crime. Alſo for Annates or firſt fruits, or half fruits, it was there provided that no ſuch Annates or confirmation of Elections, or collation of Benefices, ſhould be paid or reſerved any more to the Pope, for the firſt years voidance. All which things, there agreed and concluded by them, were afterward confirmed and ratified by the French King Charles the Seventh, with the full conſent of all his Prelates, in his High Court of Parliament in Bitures, and Amongſt many Decrees of the ſaid Council of Baſil, in the Nineteenth Seſſion there was alſo a Decree made touching the converting of Jews, and young Novices in Religion, unto the Chriſtian Faith.

An Act made for the Converſion of the Jews.

Alſo that all Ordinaries ſhould yearly at appointed times, provide certain men well learned in the Holy Scriptures, in ſuch places where Jews and other Infidels did dwell, to declare to them the truth of the Catholick Faith, that they acknowledging their error might forſake the ſame; unto the which preaching the ſaid Miniſters ſhould compel them to reſort, and to hear, under pain of excluding them from occupying any more in that place; provided that the ſaid Dioceſans and Preachers ſhould behave themſelves towards them mercifully and with all charity, whereby they might win them to Chriſt, not only by the declaring of the verity, but alſo in exhibiting their offices of humanity.

An Act for ſtudying the Hebrew, Latin, and Chaldee.

And to the intent their preaching might be the more fruitful, and that the Preachers might be the better inſtructed in the Tongues, it was alſo in the ſame Council provided and commanded, that the conſtitution made before in the Council of Vienna for learning the Hebrew, Chaldee, Arabick and Greek Tongues, ſhould by all means be obſerved and kept, and ordinary ſtipends provided for them that ſhould teach the ſame tongues.

Againſt Prieſts that kept Concubines.

Another Decree moreover in the twentieth Seſſion was Enacted, that whoſoever was known or publickly noted to be a keeper of Concubines, ſhould be ſequeſtred from all fruits of his Benefices for the ſpace of three months, which fruits ſhould be converted by the Ordinary to the reparations, or ſome other utility of the Church; and if he did not ſo amend, it was by the Synod decreed, that he ſhould be clearly depoſed from all his Benefices.

Furthermore the ſaid Synod did greatly inveigh againſt them, which having the juriſdiction of the Church, did not ſhame to ſuffer ſuch Whoremaſters, for bribes and money, ſtill to continue in their filthineſs, &c.

By theſe Decrees of the Council above ſpecified, it is to be ſeen, what corruption had been then frequented in the Church of God, through the Biſhop and Court of Rome. For the more expreſs declaration whereof, we thought it not much impertinent here to infer the words of one Martin Meyre, writing to Æneas Sylvius, touching and noting the ſaid corruptions; the tenour of whoſe Epiſtle here enſueth.

Unto the Reverend Father, the Lord Æneas, Cardinal of Scene; Martin Meyre, Chancellor to the Biſhop of Mentz, wiſheth health.

An Epiſtle of Martin Meyre to Æneas Sylvius, tranſlated into Engliſh, the Latin whereof is extant in the former Edition of this Book Ex Orib. Gran.

I Have underſtood by certain of my friends Letters, that you are created Cardinal. I am glad for your part, that you have received ſo worthy rewards for your vertues. I rejoyce alſo for mine own part, that my friend hath attained unto ſuch a dignity wherein he may in time to come both help me and my friends: But this is a grief unto me, that you have happed upon thoſe days, which ſeem to be troubleſome unto the Apoſtolick See. For there are many complaints made unto my Lord the Archbiſhop upon the Pope, that he will neither keep the Decrees of the Council of Conſtance, neither of Baſil, neither yet thinketh himſelf bound to the Covenants of his Predeceſſors, and ſeemeth utterly to contemn our Nation, and to ſeek the utter ruin thereof. For it is evident that the Election of Prelates is every where rejected; Benefices and Dignities, of what ſort ſoever they be, are reſerved for the Cardinals, and chief Notaries; and you your ſelf have obtained the reſervation of three Provinces of Germany, under ſuch a form as hath not been accuſtomed or heard of. Vowſons or gifts of Benefices are granted without number; yearly ſtipends and half the revenues are exacted without delay; and it is evident that there is more extorted than is due. The Regiments of Churches are not committed unto ſuch as beſt deſerve them, but unto ſuch as offer moſt money for them, and new pardons are granted out daily to ſcrape and gather together money. Tythes are commanded to be exacted without the conſent of our Prelates, for the Turkiſh war; and thoſe matters which were accuſtomed to be debated and determined at home, are now carried unto the Apoſtolick See of Rome. A thouſand ways are invented and deviſed, how the See of Rome may, by ſubtilty and craft, extort and get gold and treaſure from us, even as it were of the Turks or Barbarians; whereby our Nation, which was ſometime famous and valiant, which by their power and blood conquered the Roman Empire, and was once the Lady and Queen of all the world, now being brought unto poverty, is made a hand-maid, and become tributary, and being now in extream miſery, hath of long time bewailed her cruel fortune and poverty. But now our Nobles, being (as it were) wakened out of their ſleep, have begun to conſider and deviſe with themſelves, by what means they might withſtand this calamity, and utterly ſhake off this yoke and bondage, and have determined with themſelves to challenge again their former liberty. This will be no ſmall loſs unto the Court of Rome, if the Princes of Germany bring to paſs that which they have deviſed. Wherefore as much as I do rejoice of your late obtained dignity, ſo much alſo am I moved and grieved that theſe things happen in your days. But peradventure Gods determination is otherwiſe, and his Will ſhall ſurely take place. You in the mean time be of goood cheer, and deviſe according to your wiſdom, by what means the vehemency of theſe floods may be ſtayed. Thus fare ye well.

The corruption of the Church of Rome detected.

From Haſthaffenberge the laſt day of Auguſt.

Concerning the authority of this General Council of Baſil, what is to be eſteemed of it by the acts and fruits thereof may be underſtood of all good men. Neither was it of any man doubted in the firſt beginning, ſo long as the Pope agreed and conſented unto it. But after the Pope began to draw back, many other followed, eſpecially of the richer ſort of Prelates, which had any thing to loſe; whereof ſufficiently hath been ſaid by Arelatenſis the Cardinal before. In the number of thoſe unconſtant Prelates, beſides many other, was firſt Cardinal Julian, the firſt Collector of this Council, and Vicegerent of the Pope, as by his fervent and vehement Letter, written to Pope Eugenius in defence of this Council, may well appear. Wherein he moſt earneſtly doth expoſtulate with the foreſaid Pope Eugenius, for ſeeking to diſſolve the Council, cil, and declareth in the ſame many cauſes, why he ſhould rather rejoyce, and give God thanks for the godly proceedings and joyful agreement between the Council and the Bohemians, and ſo exhorteth him with manifold perſwaſions to reſort to the Council himſelf, and not to ſeek the diſſolution of the ſame. The copy and tenour of whoſe Epiſtle to the Pope, if any be diſpoſed to peruſe the ſame, we thought here good to ſet down to be ſeen.

The Copy of an Epiſtle, which Julian Cardinal of St. Angen, and the Popes Ambaſſador into Germany, wrote marvellous boldly and freely unto Eugenius Biſhop of Rome, for that he went about to diſſolve the Council of Baſil.

Moſt bleſſed Father, after the devout kiſſes of your bleſſed feet.

'NOW ſhall the whole world underſtand and know, whether that your Holineſs have in you the bowels of fatherly love and charity, and the zeal of the Houſe of God, whether you be ſent to make peace or diſcord, to congregate or diſperſe, or whether you be that good ſhepherd which giveth his life for his ſheep. Behold the door beginneth now to be opened, whereby the loſt ſheep may return again unto their own Fold; now is there good hope even at hand of the reconciliation of the Bohemians. If that your Holineſs, as it is your duty, do help and further the ſame, you ſhall obtain great glory both in Heaven and Earth. But if peradventure you go about to let the ſame (which is not to be feared at your hands) all men will reprove you of impiety; Heaven and Earth will conſpire againſt you, all men will forſake you. For how is he to be followed, which with one word may reſtore peace and quietneſs to the Church, and refuſeth to do it? But I conceive a better hope in you, how that your Holineſs without any excuſe, will, with your whole heart and mind, favour this moſt Sacred Council, and give thanks unto Almighty God for his great goodneſs, that this Congregation hath not departed. Behold the Ambaſſadors of this Sacred Council are returned with great joy and gladneſs from Egra, reporting how that, through the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt, they have firmly concluded with the Ambaſſadors of the Bohemians, that is to ſay, of the Pragues, Orphants and Thaborites, amongſt whom were alſo preſent the Captains of their enemies, and ſpecially Procopius: That a ſolemn Ambaſſade of all the Eſtates of the Realm ſhould come unto the Council of Baſil: After that a ſafe Conduct is ſent unto them by the ſaid Council in form conditioned, which ſhall be done with ſpeed, this Sacred Congregation is marvelloufly exhilerate and joyful. For thoſe our Ambaſſadors affirm, that all things were handled with ſuch charity at Egra, and that they did ſee ſuch things amongſt the Bohemians, that not without cauſe, they do conceive great hope of their reconciliation.

The Ambaſſadors of the Council are returned from Egra.

'And at laſt gently embracing one another, even with tears of gladneſs, they departed from Egra; the Bohemians requiring our Ambaſſadors, that the matter might be ended with all expedition. They report alſo, that many things happened in that Treaty, which if any man heard, and did not weep for joy, he might well think himſelf to be but ſmally affectioned unto Chriſt. As for three of the four Articles, they ſeem not to make any great difficulty upon. As touching the fourth, that is, of the Communion under both kinds, there is good hope that they will follow the judgment of the Council. Who is it then that dare counſel your Holineſs to perſevere any longer in the purpoſe of diſſolution? for if the Council had not been appointed at all, for ſo great hope and neceſſity; it ought to have been appointed in this place. How worthy praiſe and commendation ſhould your Holineſs do, if that you would leave Italy and all other affairs, and come hither in your own perſon; although you ſhould need to be carried in a Wagon or Litter; The keeping and defence of the Temporal Patrimony of the Church may well be diſpoſed and done by Legates and Vicars. This is the true Patrimony of the Church, to win ſouls. For the Church is not an heap of ſtones and walls. Chriſt hath not made you a keeper of Caſtles and Forts, but a Paſtor of ſouls. Therefore you ſhould do that in your own perſon which is moſt neceſſary and acceptable unto Chriſt, and all other things by your ſubſtitutes. For ſo did the Apoſtles, which to the intent they might the more freely attend to the preaching of the Word of God, did inſtitute ſeven to ſerve the Tables, and for the miniſtration of other inferior things. I hear that by the Grace of God your Holineſs doth daily recover and amend; and if ſo be, as it is ſaid, you do viſit ſome Churches on foot, ye may alſo come hither on Horſeback; for you cannot go unto any thing more profitable or concordant to your office, than to go unto the place where innumerable benefits and goodneſs may ſpring. Let your Holineſs underſtand and conſider wherein Chriſt, whoſe Vicar you are, and Saint Peter whoſe Succeſſor you are, and the Apoſtles and holy Biſhops did exerciſe and occupy themſelves, and as you do ſucceed them in office, ſo ſucceed them in manners. But if peradventure your Holineſs cannot come hither, I do counſel you, that for ſo great a benefit you would ſend the more part of the reverend Lords, Cardinals of the Court of Rome, and command all other Prelates to come hither. Do not let or hinder them that are willing to come, as it is reported you do, but rather allure them to come hither.

[KING Hen. 6.] What the Churches is.

'Your Holineſs may believe me, that only charity moveth me to counſel you in this ſort, be ye not ſeparate from your members, nouriſh your children as the Hen doth her Chickens under her wings. And if ſo be that you will do nothing elſe, yet ſpeak this only word, Placet, that is to ſay, that it pleaſeth you that the Council of Baſil ſhould go forward. For a few days paſt there came news hither, for the which your Holineſs ought altogether to ceaſe from your diſſolution. The reverend Father the Archbiſhop of Lions hath written unto the Council, and unto me alſo, how that the Prelates of France have aſſembled together in the City of Bituria, and there after long and exact examination have concluded, that the Council is lawfully congregate in this place. And that it is neceſſary that it ſhould be holden and celebrate here at this preſent; and how the Prelates of France ſhould come unto it: he alſo directed hither the cauſe which moved them ſo to conclude, the copy whereof I ſuppoſe is ſent unto your Holineſs by ſome other. Whereupon then doth your Holineſs ſtay? You have gone about as much as in you lay, by your Meſſengers, Letters, and divers means to draw back the Prelates, and have laboured with all your endeavour to diſſolve the Council; yet notwithſtanding, as you do ſee, it is increaſed day by day. And the more it is forbidden, the more are all mens minds inflamed to the contrary. Is not this then to reſiſt the will of God? Why do ye provoke the Church to anger? Why do ye ſtir up the Chriſtian people? Vouchſafe I pray you ſo to do, that ye may get the love and favour of the people, and not the hatred; for all Nations are greatly offended when they hear theſe your doings. Suffer not your Holineſs to be ſeduced by any man, which peradventure ſhall inculcate fear unto you, whereas there is nothing at all to be doubted; or that do perſwade you this to be no lawful Council. I know I ſhould offend your Holineſs if I ſhould go about to prove the contrary; but it is better that I do offend you a little in words, and profit you in my deeds; for a Phyſician layeth a burning coroſive unto the diſeaſe, and healeth the ſore: For the medicine cannot profit except it be ſharp and bitter in taſte. Under this hope and confidence I will not fear to declare the truth; that it being known, your Holineſs may the better provide both for your ſelf and the Church. It dependeth upon the Council of Conſtance, whether this Council be lawful or not. If that were a true Council, ſo is this alſo. No man ſeemeth to doubt whether that Council were lawful, and likewiſe whatſoever was there decreed to be lawful: for if any man will ſay, that the Decrees of that Council are not of force, he muſt needs grant that the deprivation of Pope John, which was done by the force

Eugenius provoketh the Church.

A ſtrong argument againſt Eugenius.

KING Hen. 6.

'force of thoſe decrees, was of no effect. If that depri'vation were not of effect; neither was the election of 'Pope Martin of any force, which was done he being
'yet alive. If Martin were no true Pope, neither is your 'Holineſs, which was choſen by the Cardinal that he 'made; wherefore it ſtandeth no man more upon to 'defend the decrees of that Council, than your Holi-
'neſs, for if any decree of that Council be called into 'doubt; by like means may all the reſt of the decrees
'be revoked. And by like means ſhall the decrees of 'any other Council be of no force and effect: for by 'like reaſon, as the faith of one Council is weakned, all
'the reſt ſhall alſo be weakned, according to Saint Au-
'guſtine ſaying in the 9. Diſtinct. cap. Si ad ſcripturas.
'Then, ſaith he, both the Faith and all other Sacraments
'ſhall be put in doubt, if that there be once any doubt
'made of the force and power of any Council lawfully
'congregate. There was a decree made in the Council
'of Conſtance, intituled Frequens. Whereby it was 'ordained, that the firſt Council after that ſhould be 'holden within five years, and another within ſeven
'years after that again. The Council of Conſtance
'being ended, and the five years paſſed, the Council of 'Papia or Scene was holden, after which ſeven years
'being alſo run over, this Council is begun to be cele'brate. To what end then is it expreſſed in the Bull of the 'diſſolution, amongſt other cauſes, that the ſeventh year
'is already paſt? When as of neceſſity it ought to be paſ-
'ſed before the Council can be celebrate. For theſe
'words, from ſeven year or five year, ſignifie accor-
'to the Law, that all parts of time ſhould be paſſed,
'and the laſt day looked for. Wherefore it behoved that
'ſeven years to be fully compleat, before this Council of 'Baſil ſhould begin. Like as five years were fully ex'pired, before that the Council of Papia did begin. But 'peradventure ſome man will ſay, that it ought to have 'begun the firſt day after the ſeventh year was expired.
'For otherwiſe the term of the Council is paſſed. But 'hereunto we may anſwer, that it is not contained in 'the Chapter Frequens, that except it were holden the
'firſt day, it ſhould not be holden at all, neither can it
'be gathered either by the words or meaning. For it 'is only required that it ſhould be holden after ſeven
'years expired, but whether it be the ſecond or third day,
'or the third or four month after the ſeventh year, it
'doth ſatisfie the Chapter Frequens. For when the firſt day
'is come, then beginneth the power and liberty to ce'lebrate the Council, but not afore; but it is not pro'hibited to celebrate it after; neither doth this word, In
'quinquennium, that is to ſay, againſt five years, next fol'lowing, which is alledged in the Chapter Frequens, and
'ſeemeth to be repeated alſo for the ſeven years; for it
'is not underſtood that it is neceſſary to be holden the
'firſt day preciſely after the ſeveneth year, but becauſe it
'ſhould not be underſtood of other ſeven years to come.
'For in ſpeaking ſimply of ſeven years, it is underſtood
'of ſeven years next enſuing. Admit alſo that in the 'Chapter Frequens, any of theſe words had been joyned
'with immediately following, as by and by, out of hand,
'immediately, or ſtraightways after, or ſuch other words:
'yet ought they to be underſtood with a certain mo-
'deration, and diſtance of time, that was ſoon as might 'be convenient; as theſe words are expounded by the 'Lawyers and Doctors, for they are inlarged and reſtrain-
'ed according to the Subject and divers circumſtances of 'the matters and affairs. For it is not by any means like'ly that it was the mind of thoſe which made the decree,
'that conſidering the long journey and hard preparation of
'ſuch affairs, and alſo the manifold impediments which 'may happen, that they would reſtrain ſo preciſe a time,
'even at the firſt day, that if it were not then celebrated,
'it ſhould not be holden at all, for by ſuch ſubtil means it
'ſhould alſo be holden even in the firſt moment and very 'inſtant after the ſame year.

'But forſomuch as words are civilly to be under-
'ſtood, this ſenſe or underſtanding is too far diſa-
'greeable. For if any man will ſay, then it is com'manded to be prorogued, that is alſo forbidden in 'the Chapter Frequens. He that doth ſo argue, doth not 'underſtand himſelf, nor the force of the words. It is 'not prorogued if it be begun the ſecond or third
'month, but it is rather a continuation or execution of 'that which is in their power. For if it were a prora-
'gation, then forſomuch as a prorogation doth favour 'of the nature of the firſt delay, it could not be 'begun before the time prorogued; but this happeneth
'not in our caſe: for albeit it were not begun in the 'firſt month, but in the ſecond or third: it is not there-
'by concluded that it could not be begun in the firſt:
'but if there had been any prorogation made till the
'ſecond month, then it could not have been begun
'in the firſt, as for example, I promiſe to give an 'hundred pounds after Eaſter; afore Eaſter it cannot 'be required, but by and by after Eaſter it may be 'required; and albeit that I be not urged for it, not-
'withſtanding I do not ceaſe to be bound; and if ſo
'be I be demanded it in the ſecond or third month
'after, it is not thereby underſtood that there is any 'prorogation made; Neither doth it follow, but that 'it might have been demanded in the beginning,
'which could not have been done if that there had 'been any prorogation made. Alſo it is the nature
'of prorogation to be made before the firſt day or term
'or day be paſſed. For otherwiſe it is no prorogati-
'on, but a new appointment. And albeit it may be 'ſaid, that then it may be long delayed; it is an'ſwered, that in this point we muſt ſtand unto the 'judgement of the Church, which conſidering divers
'circumſtances would think the time meet. For the 'liberty of celebrating of Councils was inſtitute for
'the profit and favour of the Church. What if it
'ſhould happen that when the time cometh, in the 'place where a Council ſhould be kept there be a 'great Plague, or ſome Siege, which ſhould continue
'by the ſpace of three or four months, and the Pope
'in the mean time doth not change the place accord'ing to the form of the Chapter Frequens, and that 'through ſuch impediments the Prelates did not come
'the firſt day unto the place, or if any were com'ing and were taken by the way, which if they had 'not been taken, had been preſent at the firſt day in 'the place appointed; is it therefore to be ſaid that
'the power of the Council is paſt? Or that the im-
'pediment ceaſing, and the Prelates coming thither,
'the Council cannot be holden? That truly were 'greatly abſurd and too much prejudicial to the Church
'of God: but in this our caſe, the cauſe is proba'ble why that the Prelates did defer to come at the 'beginning of the time appointed; for ſo much as
'when the time drew near, Pope Martin dyed the 'twentieth of February. For which cauſe the Prelates
'might well doubt upon ſome impediment of the Coun'cil. Alſo they tarried looking that ſome ſhould
'come thither in the name of the Pope, becauſe they 'would not tarry in that place in vain without a 'Preſident. As for the Legate which was appointed 'for the Council, whoſe preſence all men tarried for 'before he would prepare himſelf for that journey, he 'came not at the time appointed unto the Council, but 'went unto Norenberge, to perſecute the Bohemians;
'according to the commandment of Pope Martin,
'which had enjoyned him to go firſt thither before he went
'to Baſil.

The cauſe of the long delay of the Prelates.

'And the ſame Legate being oftentimes required at 'Norenberge, that he ſhould go to Baſil to hold the 'Council, he anſwered, that he would not go before he 'had the conſent of the new Biſhop. This was the 'cauſe of the Prelates delays, neither is it greatly to be 'imputed unto the Prelates, which ſuſpected that Pope
'Martin would not have holden the Council, and fear-
'ed to bring themſelves in trouble; and good cauſe had
'they ſo to fear, through thoſe things which happned in
'the Council of Scene. For there were many things
'ſpoken which cauſed great ſuſpition. It was reported
'unto me that many had ſaid, I came unto Germany to
'diſturb the Council.

The Coun-cil of Scene

'Alſo this was Pope Martins mind and intent, that
'albeit the Council was not begun at the beginning
'of March, notwithſtanding the authority of holding the 'Council ſhould not be void. For he, when as the time of 'the Council approached, willed me that I ſhould firſt go
'unto Bohemia, before I went unto the Council; whereof

'alſo mention is made in the Bull of the Conſiſtory diſ-'ſolution.

'But what need we any other proof, than by your Holineſs Letters? In which your Letters dated the ſecond 'of the Kalends of June, and delivered unto me long 'after the time, by the ſpace of three months, you 'do commend me, that my buſineſs being done in 'Bohemia, I ſhould take my way to Baſil to hold the 'Council, and there to foreſee unto all things as it was 'enjoyned me, and ordained in the Council of Con- 'ſtance. The ſame alſo ye repeat in the Bull of 'the diſſolution brought unto me by the Lord Paren- 'tine, the words are theſe; Unto your circumſpection. 'Since your going into Germany no Prelates have aſ-'ſembled in Baſil for the celebrating of the Council: 'We gave you in commandment that in the mean time 'you ſhould be diligent about the expedition againſt 'the Bohemian Hereticks, which is committed to 'your charge, and afterward you ſhall come unto Baſil, 'the place appointed for the Council, and there rule 'in Our place in the name of the Church. What is 'more evident than this? If any thing were doubt-'ful, by the tenour of theſe Letters it were evidently taken 'away. If any man would ſay, that neither Pope Mar- 'tin nor Eugenius could confirm the Council by writ-'ing of ſuch Letters, becauſe there was a prorogation 'which is prohibited by the Chapter Frequens: It 'is anſwered, that there is no prorogation, but execuți-'on of that which is in power, or a declaration that it is 'not neceſſary to hold the Council preciſely even at the 'beginning. Alſo it is no prorogation. For a prorога-'tion is made before the term is expired and not after; for 'after, it is rather called a new indiction or appointment. 'And if any man will ſay that there can be no new indi-'ction made, then may this be objected; How could the 'Council of Bononia be newly appointed? If they will 'anſwer, that the appointment of the Council of Bo- 'nonia was of force, becauſe the Council of Baſil was 'diſſolved by your Holineſs, then I have my intent. For 'if it were diſſolved; Ergo, it was a Council be-'fore, becauſe it preſuppoſeth the habit. If it were a 'Council before, then, as hereafter ſhall be proved, it 'could not be diſſolved without the conſent of the Coun-'cil; what can be more anſwered hereunto? For the 'greater declaration and evidence of the matter, the Ab-'bot of Virgilia, even upon the ſame day of the time ap-'pointed or afore, gathering together the Prelates of the 'great Church, and many other Prelates and Notable 'men, made a ſolemn proteſtation, how the time was 'come to celebrate and hold the Council, and that he was 'come unto Baſil for the ſame purpoſe, requiring them 'that they would confer and intreat together upon mat-'ters touching the Council, and hereupon there is a pub-'lick inſtrument or teſtimonial.

'Within a month after the Ambaſſadors of the Uni-'verſity of Paris came thither, and began to entreat 'of matters touching the Council, writing alſo unto 'the Emperor, and to the other Princes of Germany, 'that they ſhould ſend unto the Council; which Letters I 'my ſelf did ſee; neither doth the ſmall number of men 'let; for whereas authority is, a great number is not re-'quired, according to the ſaying of Chriſt, where as two 'or three are gathered together in my name, I am in 'the midſt of them. Upon the which authority the 'Councils are grounded. Now therefore your Holineſs 'doth manifeſtly ſee the ſaid objection to be but frivolous. 'For to what end ſhould any diſſolution be made, if it 'had not been a Council? Wherefore it is not to be 'doubted but that it was a lawful Council, and cano-'nically congregate. And peradventure it is ſcarſly found 'where any Council hath been confirmed by ſo many 'authorities as this, that is to ſay, by the two Councils 'before paſſed, of Conſtance and of Scene, and confirm-'ed by two Biſhops of Rome.

'Beſides this, I have heard that ſome do report at 'Rome, that I could not call the Prelates unto the Coun-'cil, becauſe that clauſe was not added in the Bull of 'Pope Martin. I greatly marvel why this ſhould be 'objected, ſpecially ſeeing that not I alone have cal-'led them, but I together with the reſt which are here 'aſſembled in the Council. It is a marvellous matter; 'Pope Martin gave me authority by the advice of the 'Council to root out Hereſies, to pacifie Kingdoms, 'to reform the manners of every ſtate of Chriſten-'dom, and yet they will ſay that I cannot cite them. 'Power is given me to judge and to condemn, and 'have I not alſo power to cite? The Law doth ſay, un-'to whom any power or juriſdiction is committed, all 'things ſeem to be committed unto him, without 'the which he cannot exerciſe his juriſdiction; for 'how could all the premiſes be done, if the Prelates or 'others ſhould not come hither? Alſo why is it ſaid 'in the Chapter, Ego enim de jurejurando, I will come 'unto the Synod if I be called, if he cannot be cal-'led? By whom then is it preſuppoſed that he ſhould 'be called, but only by the Council, or by him which 'ruleth the Council? Alſo the whole eighteenth di-'ſtinction intreateth of no other matter, but that the 'Biſhops being called unto the Council, if they come 'not, they may be Excommunicate and Suſpended. Let 'theſe men read the Book of Councils of Saint Iſidore, 'and they ſhall find how that in many Councils the Pre-'lates have been called by the Synod. Now remain-'eth, that we ſhould declare, whether the diſſolution be 'of force or no. Wherein I do again fear to move your 'Holineſs unto anger. But charity forceth me thereunto; 'for peradventure your Holineſs doth think the diſſoluti-'on to be effectual, and therefore do perſevere in it; 'whereby for ſo much as many offences may ariſe, my 'Conſcience doth move me not to hold my peace. Firſt of 'all the chapter, Frequens, declareth that it is of no force; for 'if prorogation be forbidden and prohibited, which is 'a ſmall matter, much more is diſſolution, which is a 'greater matter, for it is a greater matter to take away 'than to deferr: For by proroging a thing is but 'deferred, and by diſſolving it is utterly taken away. 'Alſo theſe men ſay, that the ſaid conſtitution in the chap-'ter, Frequens, may be made void, forſomuch as ſoon as 'the Council is begun, it may be diſſolved without any 'thing done, as it is ſaid that it was done at Senes; and now 'they ſay alſo that your Holineſs hath been perverſly inform-'ed touching the diſſolution. They ſay alſo, that the ſaid 'diſſolution doth manifeſtly tend to the ſubverſion of faith, 'the ruin of the Church, and the trouble of the Chriſtian 'people. Therefore it cannot be done, neither obeyed.

'They ſay moreover, that the ſaid diſſolution could not 'be made by means of a certain decree of the Council of 'Conſtance in that behalf provided; That in ſuch matters as 'appertain unto Faith, the extirpation of ſin, and reforma-'tion of the Church in the head and in the members, all 'men of what eſtate or condition ſoever they be, yea the 'Pope himſelf ſhould be bound to obey the ſtatutes, pre-'cepts and ordinances of every general Council; and ex-'cept they did obey, it had power to puniſh them. Mark 'how that theſe things, to have power to determine upon 'any man, to command him and puniſh him if he be not 'obedient, are ſigns of ſuperiority, in thoſe matters which 'he doth decree, command or puniſh; and to be bound 'to obedience, to be ſubject and obey the ſame, are ſigns of 'inferiority in the ſaid caſes. Ergo in the foreſaid caſes, 'ſeeing that the Pope, as they ſay, is under the Council, 'which alſo hath been; in that for one of the ſaid three 'caſes the Council did deprive John, and for the other 'Benedict, neither could the Pope diſſolve the Council, in 'that he is inferiour unto the Council, he cannot bind or 'compel the ſuperiour; As in the Chapter Cum inferior, 'otherwiſe it ſhould contain in it a contradiction, that he 'is bound to obey, and is not bound to obey, becauſe he 'may diſſolve; for how ſhould he be obedient unto the 'ordinance and decree of the Council, if he may annihi-'late and take away the ſame ordinance and decree? 'This Council is congregate for the rooting out of 'Hereſies, for the making of peace, and reformation of 'manners; and in the firſt Seſſion it did ordain, that 'their whole intent and reſpect ſhould be thereunto, and 'that he which ſhould procure to let the Council, to pro-'rogue or alter it, ſhould be puniſhed, and have proceſs 'againſt him as againſt a common diſturber of the peace, '&c. If it may be diſſolved, it is evident that they do 'not obey the ſaid ordinance; whereby this alſo muſt of 'neceſſity be granted, that if it may be diſſolved, the de-'cree of the Council of Conſtance is of no force.

{KING Hen. 6.}

This

KING Hen. 6.

'This is alſo proved by another reaſon. No man doubteth 'but if any controverſie of Hereſie ſhould be moved againſt 'an Biſhop of Rome, that he could not diſſolve the Coun- 'cil: For if he might diſſolve the Council, he could not 'be judged," which were contrary to the Chapter Si Pap. '40. Ergo, like as it is in Hereſie, ſo is it in the two other 'caſes. For theſe three were pacified by the Council of 'Conſtance: for thus ſpeaketh the Council, as it is in the 'Chapter, Si Papa in illo uno. And as I have before ſaid, 'the Council of Conſtance allowed this decree, through 'the which they deprived Peter de Luna, for making of a 'Schiſm, and Pope John for the deformity of his life.

'And albeit there be certain Laws that ſay, The prin- 'cipal ſeat cannot be judged of any man; and again, 'no 'man judgeth the chief ſeat; and, no man ſaith unto 'himſelf, why doeſt thou ſo? There are to be underſtood 'in the three caſes; firſt, that there was proviſo made 'for the faith in the Chapter Si Papa; and in the 'other two points, by the decree of Conſtance Other- 'wiſe it ſhould be underſtood, without any exception, 'that the firſt ſeat, &c. and then the Chapter Si Pa- 'pa 40 diſtinct. and the ſaid decree of Conſtance ſhould 'be falſe. If the Chapter Si Papa had added cauſes of 'Hereſies, no man would have doubted upon theſe two 'caſes, touching the ſaid ſentence; ſo likewiſe no man 'ought to doubt of the decree of the Council, that it 'was made by the authority of the Pope, and repreſent- 'eth the univerſal Church. And if any man would ſay, 'that in all Councils the authority of the Pope is excep- 'ted: I anſwer, that is true, when as the perſon of the 'Pope is not ſpecially included. But if he be ſpecially in- 'cluded, he cannot be excepted, becauſe it ſhould favour 'of contradiction. Moſt bleſſed Father, God is my wit- 'neſs that I have ſpoken theſe things with great anguiſh 'and ſorrow of mind; but I am forced ſo to ſpeak, that 'your Holineſs may ceaſe from the ſaid diſſolution, leſt 'there might happen infinite evils in the Church of God. 'If your Holineſs did ſee my pure mind, my upright 'Conſcience, and entire affection towards you, whereby, 'I am moved to write thoſe things, even for very love 'you would embrace and kiſs me, and without doubt 'love me as your own Son. I have often ſaid, and now 'do ſay and proteſt before God and man, that you will 'be the cauſe of Schiſm, and infinite miſchiefs, if you do 'not alter and change your mind and purpoſe. Almighty 'God preſerve your Holineſs in the proſperity of a vertuous 'man. Unto whoſe feet I do moſt humbly recommend 'me. From Baſil the 5*th* day of June.

Thus endeth the Epiſtle of Cardinal Julian, written unto Pope Eugenius. Wherein, forſomuch as mention is made how that the Bohemians had promiſed to ſend their Ambaſſadors unto the Council, and, as before is partly touched in the Bohemian ſtory, of their coming into Baſil and propounding of certain Articles, wherein they diſſented from the Pope; we do not think it any thing differing from our purpoſe, to annex a brief epitome, declaring the whole circumſtance of their Ambaſſage, their Articles, diſputations and anſwers which they had at the ſaid Council of Baſil, with their petitions and anſwers unto the ſame. Faithfuly tranſlated out of Latine by F. W.

In like manner Æneas Sylvius alſo, with his own hand writing, not only gave teſtimony to the authority of this Council, but alſo beſtowed his labour and travel in ſetting forth the whole ſtory thereof. Notwithſtanding the ſame Sylvius afterward being made Pope, with his new honour, did alter and change his old ſentence. The Epiſtle of which Æneas touching the commendation of the ſaid Council, becauſe it is but ſhort, and will occupy but little room, I thought here following, for the more ſatisfying of the Readers mind, to inſert.

An Epiſtle of Æneas Sylvius to the Rector of the Univerſity of Colen.

An Epiſtle of Æneas Sylvius, in defence of the Council of Baſil.

TO a Chriſtian man which will be a true Chriſtian indeed, nothing ought to be more deſired, than that the ſincerity and pureneſs of Faith, given to us of Chriſt by our forefathers, be kept of all men immaculate: And if at any time any thing be wrought or attempted againſt the true doctrine of the Goſpel, the people ought with one conſent to provide lawful remedy, and every man to bring with him ſome water to quench the general fire; neither muſt we fear how we be hated or envied, ſo we bring the truth. We muſt reſiſt every man to his face, whether he be Paul or Peter, if he walk not directly to the truth of the Goſpel. Which thing I am glad and ſo are we all, to hear that your Univerſity hath done in this Council of Baſil. For a certain Treatiſe of yours is brought hither unto us, wherein you reprehend the rudeneſs, or rather the raſhneſs of ſuch, which do deny the Biſhop of Rome, and the conſiſtory of his judgement, to be ſubject unto the general Council; and that the ſupream tribunal ſeat of judgment ſtandeth in the Church, and in no one Biſhop. Such men as deny this, you ſo confound with lively reaſons and truth of the Scriptures, that they are neither able to ſlide away like ſlippery Eels, neither to cavil or bring any objection againſt you. Theſe be the words of Sylvius.

The Tribunal ſeat ſtandeth not in one Biſhop.

Furthermore, as touching the authority and approbation of the foreſaid Council, this is to be noted, that during the life Sigiſmund the Emperor no man reſiſted this Council. Alſo, continuing the time of Charles the Seventh, the French King, the ſaid Council of Baſil was fully and wholly received through all France. But after the death of Sigiſmund, when Eugenius was depoſed, and Felix Duke of Savoy was elected Pope, great diſcords aroſe, and much practiſe was wrought, but eſpecially on Eugenius part; who being now excommunicated by the Council of Baſil, to make his part more ſtrong made eighteen new Cardinals

{KING Hen. 6}

As these things were doing at Basil, in the mean season Pope Eugenius brought to pass in his convocation at Florence, that the Emperor and the Patriach of Constantinople, with the rest of the Grecians there present, were perswaded to receive the sentence of the Church of Rome, concerning the proceeding of the holy Ghost; also to receive the Communion in unleavened Bread, to admit Purgatory, and to yield themselves to the authority of the Romish Bishop. Whereunto notwithstanding the other Churches of Grecia would in no wise assent at their coming home; insomuch that with a publick execration they did condemn afterward all those Legats which had consented to these Articles, that none of them should be buried in Christian burial: which was, An. 1439. Ex Casp. Peucer.

The Legates of the Greeks condescend first to the Popes Law.

And thus endeth the story, both of the Council of Basil, and of the Council of Florence, also of the Emperor Sigismund, and of the Schism between Pope Eugenius and Pope Felix, and also of the Bohemians. The which Bohemians, notwithstanding all these troubles and tumults aboveſaid, did right well, and were strong enough against all their enemies, till at length through discord, partly between the two preachers of the old and new City of Prague, partly also through the discord of the messengers and Captains taking sides one against the other, they made their enemies strong, and enfeebled themselves. Albeit afterward, in process of time, they so defended the cause of their Religion, not by Sword, but by argument and disputation, that the Bishop of Rome could never yet to this day remove the Thaborites and City of Prague from the communion of both kinds, nor could ever cause them to keep the conditions, which in the beginning of the Council was enjoyned their Priests to observe, as testifieth Cochleus, lib. 8. hist. Hus. With whom also recordeth Antoninus, who in 3. part. hist. saith; That the Doctrine of the Bohemians, which he termeth by the name of Zizania, did take so deep root with them, and grew so fast, that afterward neither by Fire nor Sword it could be extinct. Anton. 3. part. hist. tit. 22. cap. 10.

The Greek Churches refuse the Popes doctrine.

The Inconveniency of discord.

Ex Cochleo lib. 8. hist. Huſſit.

Ex Antonin. 3. part. tit. 22. cap. 10.

Concerning the which Bohemians, briefly and in a general sum to recapitulate their whole acts and doings, here is to be noted, that they in their own defence, and in the quarel of John Hus, and Hierom of Prague, provoked by their Catholick adversaries to War, fighting under Zisca their Captain, had eleven battels with the Popes side, and ever went away victors. Ex Paral. Abb. Ursp. in Epitaphio Joan. Zisc. Moreover in the History of Peucer it is testified that Pope Martain the fifth, sending for the Bishop of Winchester then Cardinal, had levied three main Armies, intending to over-run all the Bohemians; one Army of the Saxons under the Prince Elector: the second of the Francones, under the Marquis of Brandenburge; the third of Renates, Bavarians and Suechers, under Octo Archbishop of Trevers. With these, Sigismund also the Emperor, and Cardinal Julian the Popes Legate (who at last was slain in war, and being spoiled of all his attire, was left naked in the field) joyned all their force. Who joyning together five times (saith the story) with five sundry battles, assailed and invaded the Bohemians; at every which battel, five times the said adversaries, stricken and daunted with a sudden fear, ran away out of the field, leaving their Tents with all their implements and furniture behind them, before any stroke was given. Ex Casp. Peuc. lib. 5. whereby it may appear that the holy Angels of God do fight for them which embrace the sincere doctrine of Christs Gospel.

Ex hist. Casp. Peucer. lib. 5.

Marvelous fear fallen upon the Popes Army. God's holy Angels pitch their tents about them that fear him, Psa. 34.

Thus the Bohemians, through the mighty protection of Almighty God, continued a long time invincible, during all the life of Zisca, and also of Procopius, till at length, through discord growing between them and their Captains Procopious and Mainardus, they were subdued unto their enemies.

The cruel deceit and wicked fact of Mainardus against the Souldiers of Bohemia.

And here by the way is not to be omitted the wicked and cruel fact of Mainardus, who after the death of Procopius, Thinking to purge the Realm of Bohemia of those chief and principal Souldiers, which had been long expert and trained up in Wars, found means for a Proclamation made, as though he would War against other Countries of their enemies bordering about them, craftily to train all them which were disposed to take wages, into certain Barns or Hovels prepared for the same purpose, and so shutting the doors upon them, the wicked dissembler set fire upon them, and burnt of them divers thousands, and so brought the rest by that means under subjection to the Emperor during his life time; which, after that continued not long. Ex Æn. Sylv. The which Souldiers if they had fought so much for the Catholik liberties of the Pope and his Church, as they had fought against him, it is marvel if the Pope had not dignified them all for holy Martyrs. But they that kill with the sword (saith Christ) shall perish with the sword. Notwithstanding, the cruel deceit of Mainardus is worthy of all men to be detested.

Certain thousands of the Bohemian Souldiers burnt. Ex Æneas Sylv. lib. de hist. Bohem. cap. 15.

During this business among the Bishops beyond the Sea, in the mean time our Bishops here also in England were not unoccupied. Whether it be the nature of the Country that so giveth, or whether the great livings and wealthy promotions of the Clergy do draw with them a meere insensible untowardness in Gods religion, hard it is to say: this is manifest to all men which will read and mark our stories from time to time, that in England is more burning and slaying for Religion and for all other matters; more bloodshed among us, than in any other Land or Nation in Christendom besides. After the burning of Richard Hoveden, of Nicholas Canon, and of Thomas Bagley Priest, above recorded, whom the Bishops condemned to death, An. 1431. not long after about the year of our Lord, 1439. which was the eighteenth of the reign of K. Henry the sixth, they had another poor man by the back named Richard Wiche Priest, mentioned both in Robert Fabian, and also in another old English Chronicle borrowed of one Perminger. What his opinions were they do not express. This they record, that this Richard Wiche first was degraded, then burnt at Tower-hill for Heresie. Some do affirm, that he before his death revolted; but that seemeth by his burning not to be true.

England noted of cruelty.

Burning and slaying in England.

{Anno 1439.} Rich. Wiche Priest, Martyr. Ex Fabia. par. 7. Ex antiqua alia Chronic.

It is also testified of him, that before his death he spake (as prophesying) that the Postern of the Tower should sink; which also afterward came as he saith to pass, wherefore of the people he was counted for an holy man; insomuch that (as it is affirmed) they came to the place where he was burnt, and there made their Oblations and prayers, and areared a great heap of stones, and set up a Cross there by night: so that by this means a great clamor ran upon the Church-men, and especially upon such as put him to death. Then, to cease the rumor, the King gave commandment to punish such as went thither on Pilgrimage. The copy whereof is here to be seen as followeth.

Rich. Wiche after his death taken for a Saint.

Rex Vicecomitibus London & Midd. salutem. Albeit Richard Wiche late Clerk, who heretofore long sithence hertically did hold, teach, and publickly preach certain Heresies and erroneous opinions in many places within our Realm of England, and for the same many years now past being judicially convicted, did before a Judge in that behalf sufficiently abjure all Heresie generally, and afterward, as a Dog returning to his vomit, did presume to maintain, teach, and publickly preach his former errors and heresies, so that he was worthily adjudged a Relapse. And again, being impeached, for the same before the reverend Father in God Robert Bishop of Lond. his lawful Ordinary, was called forth to judgement, and being before him, did judiciously confess his errors and heresies: For the which cause the Reverend Father, upon mature deliberation by him the said Reverend Father first had with the advice of the learned in the Law, his assistants, lawfully proceeding against the said Richard, did by his sentence definitive pronounce and adjudge him so be a Relapse, and did degrade him from the order and dignity of priesthood, and took from him all Priestly Ornaments, and deprived him of all Priestly function and privilege (according to justice) and last of all turned him over to the secular power as the manner is; and afterwards you, by our Princely commandment and Warrant, did according to the Law of our Realm, for his last punishment, consume the body of the said Richard to ashes, being a Relapse convict, and degraded as a notorious Traitor, not only against God, but also against us, and our Crown and dignity; All which notwithstanding, certain our Subjects (as we have been sundry times informed) being pricked forward with a diabolical spirit, practising of all likelihood not only Sedition, but also Idolatry within KING (Hen. 6.) in our Realm, are not afraid publickly to affirm, that the ſaid Richard was altogether innocent of heretical pravity. Nay rather they do moſt ſhamefully with their vain devices, and wickedly conceived imaginations, blaze abroad, that he was, and died a good, juſt, and an holy Man, and that he doth many miracles (whereas indeed no ſuch miracles be done by him.) Which diſordinate perſons we may well, and upon probable cauſes, repute and deem culpable not only of heretical pravity, but alſo of High treaſon, and as Rebels to our perſon, Majeſty, and violaters of the peace and dignity of our Realm, as withal breakers and Tranſpaſſers againſt the ſacred Canons of the Church, who dare ſo preſumptuouſly adventure to worſhip the ſaid Richard as a Saint, whereas it is not lawful to worſhip any manner of perſon, be he never ſo holy, before he be canonized by the authority of the Biſhop of Rome: We therefore being very careful for the good preſervation of our peace, and deſirous to aboliſh from out of all the coaſts of the ſame all manner of Idolatry, do charge and command you, that in certain places within your liberties, where you ſhall think moſt convenient, you cauſe forthwith Proclamations to be made on our behalf, ſtraightly charging that no perſon from henceforth preſume to reſort to the place where the ſaid Richard was executed under colour of a Pilgrim, or for any other cauſe of devotion whatſoever, nor ſend any offering thither, nor worſhip him hereafter openly or ſecretly, or adjudge, eſteem, repute, name, or talk of him as otherwiſe juſtified or innocent, than ſuch as the ſaid Reverend Father by his definitive ſentence hath pronounced him to be, upon pain and penalty to be taken and reputed for an Heretick or a favourer of Hereticks and to receive condigne puniſhment provided for Hereticks. And that you arreſt all and every perſon whom ye ſhall find to do any thing contrary to this our Proclamation, and the ſame ſo arreſted commit to our Priſon, there to remain until we ſhall think good to ſend countermand for their deliverance. Witneſs the King at his Manor of Eſtampſted, the fifteenth day of July, in the eighteenth year of his reign.

Per ipſum Regem.

Like Writs and to the ſame effect were directed to all the Sheriffs through all the Realm, bearing all one and the ſame date. By the vertue of which Letter, the Mayor and Sheriffs did uſe ſuch diligence, that ſhortly after, that concourſe and ſeeking of the people was left off.

Ex Regiſt. Henr. Chicheſley.

After the burning of this man, which was about the month of June, in the ſame year about November, a convocation was called by Henry Archbiſhop of Canterbury, wherein was propounded among the Clergy, to conſult with themſelves what way were beſt to be taken for the removing away the Law of Premuniri facias; for ſo were the hearts then of the temporality ſet againſt the Eccleſiaſtical ſort, that where any vantage might be given them by the Law, they did nothing ſpare; by reaſon whereof the Church-men at that time were greatly moleſted by the ſaid Law of Premuniri, and by the Kings Writs, and other Indictments, to their no ſmall annoiance. By long conſultation and good adviſement, at laſt this way was taken, that a petition or ſupplication ſhould be drawn and preſented to the King, for the aboliſhing of the aforeſaid Law of Premuniri facias, and alſo for the reſtraining of other Brieſs, Writs, and Indictments, which ſeemed then to lye heavy upon the Clergy. This Bill or Supplication being contrived and exhibited, by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and of York, unto the King, ſtanding in need the ſame time of a Subſidy to be collected of the Clergy; This anſwer was given to their Supplication, on the Kings behalf: That forſomuch as the time of Chriſtmas then drew near, whereby he had as yet no ſufficient leiſure to adviſe upon the matter, he would take therein a farther pauſe. In the mean time, as one tendring their quiet, he would ſend to all his Officers and Miniſters within his Realm, that no ſuch Brief of Premuniri ſhould paſs againſt them or any of them, from the ſaid time of Chriſtmas till the next Parliament, Anno 1439. Ex Regiſt. Capt.

The Biſhops conſult to aboliſh the Law of Premuniri facias.

The Kings anſwer to the Bill of the Clergy, touching the Law of Premuniri.

In my former Edition of Acts and Moniments, ſo haſtily raked up at that preſent, in ſuch ſhortneſs of time, as in the ſaid Book thou mayeſt ſee (gentle Reader) declared and ſignified; among many other matters therein contained, there is a ſhort note made of one Eleanor Cobham, Dutcheſs of Glouceſter, and of Sir Roger Only Knight (Prieſt, it ſhould have been Printed,) which two perſons, about the year of our Lord 1440, or the next year following, were condemned, the one to Death, the other to perpetual Priſon. Of this little ſhort matter Mr. Cope the Popes ſcout, lying in privy waight to ſpie faults in all mens works whereſoever any may appear, taketh Pepper in the Noſe, and falleth again unto his old barking againſt me, for placing theſe foreſaid perſons in my Book of Martyrs; but eſpecially he thinketh to have great vantage againſt me, for that in the ſame ſtory I do joyn withall, one Margaret Jourdeman, the Witch of Eye, condemned alſo with them the ſame time, and burned for practiſing the Kings death by an Image of Wax, &c. To anſwer hereunto.

A brief anſwer to Cope concerning Lady Eleanor Cobham.

First, I ſay (as I before ſaid) that I profeſs no ſuch title to write of Martyrs, but in general to write of Acts and Monuments paſſed in the Church and Realm of England. Wherein, why ſhould I be reſtrained from the free walk of a ſtory writer, more than other that have gone before me?

To the third Objection.

Secondly, Touching my condemnation of Sir Roger Only, and the Lady Eleanor; if Mr. Alane be therewith offended; I anſwer, that I commended them for favouring and favouring of the truth of Chriſts doctrine: for the fact, if any ſuch were in them, I do not commend them. And although I did commend them, yet neither did I it with any long tarrying upon it, nor yet altogether upon mine one head, without ſome ſufficient warrant of authority. For why may not I as well believe John Bale, as Mr. Alane believe Mr. Fabian? Eſpecially ſeeing I do know, and was privy, that the ſaid John in recogniſing his Centuries, followed altogether the Hiſtory of Leland de Catalogo virorum illuſtrium; which Book being borrowed of Mr. Cheek, I my ſelf did ſee in the hands of the foreſaid John Bale, what time we were both together, dwelling in the Houſe of the Noble Lady Dutcheſs of Richmond. Wherefore if he think me ſo lewd to ſpeak without mine Authors, he is deceived. And if he think mine Authors not to be believed, then let this Nomothetes, or jolly Dictator, come forth and preſcribe us a Law, what Authors he would have us to take, and what to refuſe. For elſe why is it not as free for me to credit John Bale, and Leland, as for him to credit Robert Fabian, and Edward Hall; eſpecially ſeeing they had ſeen his books and works left behind him, whereupon they might better judge, and ſo did never theſe?

Thirdly, For the name of Roger Only; if Cope deny that there was any ſuch name in ſtories mentioned, but that there was one called Roger Bolinbroke, &c. hereby it may appear, that either his prompter out of England deceived him, or elſe that he, going no farther but to Fabian and Hall, lacketh no good will in him, but only a little matter to make a perfect Sicophant. And admit the ſaid name of Only could not be found in thoſe writers, yet were it not unpoſſible for a man to have two names, eſpecially if he were a religious man, to bear the name of the Town where he was born, beſides his own proper ſirname. But now, what if I (Mr. Cope) can avouch and bring forth to you the name of Roger Only out of ſufficient Record, which you ſeem not to have yet read? Have ye not then done well and properly (I think you) ſo bitterly to flee in my face, and bark ſo eagerly all this while at Moon-ſhine in the water, having no more cauſe almoſt againſt me, than againſt the man in the Moon? And now leſt you ſhould think me ſo unprovided of unjuſt authority for my defence, as I ſee you unprovided of modeſty and patience, write you to your prompter or ſuborner (whereſoever he lurketh here in England) to ſend you over unto Lovane the book of John Harding a Chronicler, more ancient than either Fabian or Hall, printed in the houſe of Richard Grafton, Anno 1543. Where turn to the fol. 223. fac. b. lin. 19. and there you ſhall find and read theſe words.

Again, the Church and the King curſedly,
By help of one Maſter Roger Only, &c.

By the which words you muſt neceſſarily confeſs Roger Only to be the name of the man, or elſe muſt ye needs deny the Author. For otherwiſe, that Maſter Roger Bolinbroke was the only helper to the Dutcheſs in that fact.

vid. Centur. 8. Bal. cap. 4.

by no wiſe it can ſtand with the ſtory of theſe Authors, which ſay, that four other beſides him were condemned for the ſame crime, &c. And moreover, though the ſaid Sir Roger Only was no Knight (as I have ſaid in my former Edition) yet this ye cannot deny, by the Teſtimony of them that have ſeen his works, but that he was a Prieſt, which you will grant to be a Knights fellow. And thus much for the name and condition of Mr. Roger Only.

To the fourth objection.

Fourthly, As concerning Margaret Jourdeman, whom ye call the Witch of Eye, ye offer me herein great wrong, to ſay that I make her a Martyr, which was a Witch; when as I here profeſs, confeſs and aſcertain both you, and all Engliſh men, both preſent, and all poſterity hereafter to come, that this Margaret Jourdeman I never ſpake of, never thought of, never dreamed of, nor did ever hear of, before you named her in your book your ſelf. So far is it off, that I either with my will, or againſt my will, made any Martyr of her.

M. Cope raileth without a cauſe.

Furthermore, I profeſs and denounce in like manner, that neither have you any juſt or congrue occaſion in my Book ſo to judge, much leſs to rail on me. For where in expreſs words I do ſpeak of the Mother of the Lady Young, what occaſion have you thereby to ſlander me and my Book with Margaret Jourdeman? Which Margaret whether ſhe was a Witch or not, I leave her to the Lord. As for me, neither did I know of her then, nor did I mean of her now. But becauſe I couple her in the ſame ſtory, you ſay. To this I ſay, becauſe ſhe was the Mother of a Lady, I thought to joyn her with another Lady in the ſame ſtory, as in one Pew together, although in one cauſe I will not ſay. And yet notwithſtanding I do ſo couple the ſaid Mother with the Dutcheſs, in ſuch diſtinct difference of years, that you Maſter Cope might eaſily have underſtood, or beſide you, no man elſe would have thought the contrary but Margaret Jourdeman was neither here in my Book, nor yet in my Memento. For the words of my ſtory are plain, where the condemnation of the Lady Eleanor, and of the Mother of Lady Young, being referred to the year of our Lord, 1441. I do alſo in the ſame ſtory (through the occaſion of that Lady) infer mention of the Mother of the Lady Young, declaring in expreſs words, that ſhe followed certain years after, and in the end of that Chapter do name alſo the year of her burning to be 1490 which was fifty years after the death of Only, and Margaret Jourdeman; by the computation of which years it is plain, that no other woman could be noted in that place, but only the Lady Youngs Mother.

The former Edition, p. 371.

But Mr. Cope, continuing ſtill in his wrangling mood, objecteth again, for that in my Calender the ſaid Lady Youngs Mother hath the next day in the Catalogue next after death of Roger Only, which day pertaineth properly to Margaret Jourdeman, which was burned the ſame day in Smithfield, and not to the Ladies Mother, &c.

What order was taken in placing the names and days, what is that to me? If he which had the diſpoſing of the Catalogue, did place them ſo in months, as he ſaw them joyned in Chapters, not peruſing peradventure nor adviſing the Chapters, that doth nothing prejudice the truth of my ſtory, which ſufficiently doth clear it ſelf in diſtinguiſhing them rightly in names and alſo in years, as is afore declared.

The fifth Objection.

Fifthly and laſtly, Having thus ſufficiently anſwered to your circumſtances of perſons, names, and times (Maſter Cope) I will now enter to encounter with you concerning the fact and crime objected to the Lady Dutcheſs, and to the reſt; with this proteſtation before premiſed unto the Reader, that if the fact be true, and ſo done as is reported in the Hiſtories of Fabian, Hall, and Harding, I deſire the Reader then ſo to take me, as though I did not deal here withal, nor ſpeak of the matter, but utterly to have pretermitted, and diſpuncted the ſame. But for ſo much as the deed and offence laid and given forth againſt theſe parties, may be a matter made, and of evil will compacted, rather than true indeed; therefore I do but only move a queſtion by way of Hiſtory, not as defending, nor commending, nor commemorating the thing, if it be true, but only moving the queſtion, whether it is to be judged true, or ſuſpected rather to be falſe and forged, and ſo having briefly propounded certain conjectural ſuſpitions or ſuppoſals concerning that matter, I will paſs it over, neither medling in the one nor on the other.

The ſtory of the Lady Eleanor and Roger Only here pretermitted.

A queſtion whether Eleanor the Dutcheſs was cauſe of treaſon againſt the King.

The firſt conjecture, why it may be poſſible that this act of Treaſon, laid to the charge of the Dutcheſs and Roger Only, againſt the King, may be untrue, is this; that the ſaid Only (otherwiſe named Bolingbroke) took it upon his death, that they never intended any ſuch thing as they were condemned for.

KING 6 Hen. 6. Certain conjectures of the crime not to be true.

1. Conjecture.

The ſecond conjecture; for that the Lady Eleanor, and Only ſeemed then to favour and favour of that Religion ſet forth by Wickliff; and therefore it is like enough that they were hated of the Clergy. Furthermore what hatred and practiſes of Papiſts can do, it is not unknown.

2. Conjecture.

The third conjecture; for that the ſaid Maſter Roger Only, falſly noted and accuſed of Necromancy, wrote a Book in purgation of himſelf, intituled, De Innocentia ſua. Alſo another Book intituled, Contra vulgi ſuperſtitiones, recorded in Centur. 8. Bal. cap. 4. Whereupon it is not credible, that he which wrote profeſſedly againſt the ſuperſtitions of the people, was overtaken with that filth of Necromancy himſelf.

3. Conjecture.

The fourth conjecture; becauſe this accuſation againſt the Dutcheſs of Glouceſter, Duke Humfries Wife, began not before, but after the grudge kindled between the Cardinal of Wincheſter, and Duke Humfrey her Husband.

4. Conjecture.

Another conjecture may be hereof, for that if the Dutcheſs had intended any ſuch hainous Treaſon againſt the Kings life, as by burning of a Wax Candle to conſume him, it is not like (neither was there any ſuch need) that ſhe would have made ſo many privy to ſuch a pernitious Counſel, as the Witch Eye, Maſter Roger Bolingbroke, Maſter Thomas Southwell, and John Hume.

5. Conjecture.

Sixthly, It is not to be ſuppoſed, if any ſuch high Treaſon had been wrought or pretended againſt the Kings perſon by theſe, that either the Dutcheſs ſhould ſo eſcape with bearing a Taper and baniſhment; or that John Hume ſhould be pardoned his life; the fact being ſo hainous, that neither any durſt ask this pardon, nor if it had been asked, had it been like to be granted.

6. Conjecture.

To theſe we may alſo add another ſuppoſal, riſing upon the words and form of their accuſation, as it ſtandeth in Harding, Polychronicon, and other moe, wherein they were accuſed for working Sorcery and Inchantments againſt the Church and the King. Now what Sorcery can be wrought againſt the Church, that is, the whole multitude of Chriſtians, let the Reader judge; and by the truth of this conſider alſo the truth of the other, which was againſt the King. Furthermore, if by this Church is meant the Cardinal of Wincheſter, as like it is; then it may be conjectured, that all this matter roſe of that Cardinal, who was then a mortal enemy to the Houſe of Glouceſter, &c.

7. Conjecture.

Eightbly, And that all this was done and wrought by the ſaid Cardinal of Wincheſter, the Witch of Eye maketh the matter the more ſuſpicious, ſeeing that Town of Eye, as Fabian witneſſeth, was near beſide Wincheſter, and See of that Biſhop.

8. Conjecture.

Moreover, forſomuch as Polidore Virgil, among other ſtory Authors, being a man as may be ſuppoſed, rather favouring the Cardinals part than the Dukes, made no mention at all touching this Treaſon, his ſilence therefore may miniſter matter not only to muſe, but alſo to conjecture, that he had found ſomething which made him to miſtruſt the matter. Otherwiſe it is unlike that he would have ſo mewed up the matter, and paſſed it over without ſome mention.

9. Conjecture.

Finally, and briefly, the frequent practiſes and examples of other times may make this alſo more doubtful, conſidering how may ſubtil pretences after the like ſort have been ſought, and wrongful accuſations brought againſt many innocent perſons. For (not to repeat the like forgeries againſt the Lord Cobham, and Sir Roger Acton, &c.) why may not this accuſation of the Dutcheſs and Only be as falſe, as that in the time of King Edward the fifth, which was laid to the charge of the Queen and Shores Wife by the Protector, for enchanting and bewitching of his withered Arm? Which to be falſe all the world doth know, and but a quarel made, only to oppreſs the life of the Lord Haſtings; and the Lord Stanly, &c. And thus may'eſt thou ſee, gende Reader, according to the Wiſe mans ſaying, Nihil novum eſſe ſub ſole; Nihilque dictum, quod non ſit dictum prius, &c.

10. Conjecture.

Al-

KING Hen.6.

Although theſe with many moe conjectures may be alledged in ſome part of defence of this Dutcheſs, and of her Chaplains and Prieſts, yet becauſe it may not be unpoſſible again the matter laid againſt them to be true, I leave it therefore at large as I find it; ſaying as I ſaid before, That if it be true which the Stories ſay in this matter, think I beſeech thee gentle Reader, that I have ſaid nothing hereof. Only, becauſe the matter may be diſputable, and not unpoſſible to be falſe, I have but moved thereof a queſtion, and brought my conjectures, leaving the determination and judgment hereof to thy indifferent and free arbitrement. And if M. Cope be ſo highly offended with me, becauſe in my firſt Edition of Acts and Monuments, I durſt name the Lady Eleanor Cobham, and Roger only; let him take this for a ſhort anſwer, becauſe my leaſure ſerveth not to make long brawls with him, That if I had thought no imperfections to have paſſed in my former Edition before, I would never have taken in hand the recognition thereof now the ſecond time, whereby to ſponge away ſuch motes, as I thought would ſeem great ſtumbling blocks in ſuch Mens walks, which walk with no charity to edifie, but with malice to carp and reprehend, neither admoniſhing what they ſee amiſs in others, neither tarrying while other Men reform themſelves, and finally finding quarrels where no great cauſe is juſtly given. And here an end with Maſter Cope for this time.

A brief anſwer to Maſter Cope's cavillation, concerning Duke Humphrys Wife

Forſomuch as in the Proceſs before, mention was touched concerning the grudge between the Cardinal, called the rich Cardinal of Wincheſter, and the good Duke Humphry Duke of Gloceſter, the Kings Uncle and Protector of the Realm, order of Story now requireth to open ſome part of that matter more at large. Wherein this firſt is to be underſtood, that long before great flames of grudge and diſcord did burſt out between theſe two. For as the noble heart of the Duke could not abide the proud doings of the Cardinal, ſo much againſt the Cardinals in like manner ſore envied and diſdained at the rule of the Duke of Gloceſter. Notwithſtanding that, by the means of the Duke of Bedford, the braſting out between them was before appeaſed and cured: yet not ſo, but that under imperfect amity, privy hatred, as ſparkles under the embers, did ſtill remain: ſo that the Cardinal, joyning with the Archbiſhop of York, attempted many things of their own preſumption, contrary to the conſent, not only of the King (being then under age) but alſo of the Protector and Governor of the Realm. Wherewith the Duke (like a true hearted Prince) being not without juſt cauſe offended, declared in writing to the King certain complaints contained in 21 Articles, wherein the Cardinal and Archbiſhop had tranſgreſſed both againſt the King and his Laws. The tenor whereof more at large is in other Stories expreſſed, the brief abſtract thereof followeth in a ſhort Summary here to be ſeen.

The contention between the Cardinal of Wincheſter and Duke Humphry, Lord Protector.

Anno 1440

Ex Polychron.

Certain Points or Articles objected by Duke Humphry againſt the Cardinal of Wincheſter.

Wincheſter preſumeth to be Cardinal againſt the mind of the King.

First, complained to his Sovereign Prince his right redoubted Lord Duke Humphry, his Uncle and Protector of the Realm, That the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in the days of his Father King Henry the fifth, took upon him the ſtate of a Cardinal, being denied by the King, ſaying, That he had as lief ſet his own Crown beſide him, as to ſee him wear a Cardinals Hat; and that in Parliaments, he, not being contented with the place of a Biſhop among the Spiritual perſons, preſumed above his order; which the ſaid Duke deſired to be redreſſed.

Wincheſter ſued the Law of præmuniri.

2. Item, Whereas he being made a Cardinal was voided of his Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, he procured from Rome the Popes Bull, unknowing to the King, whereby he took again his Biſhoprick, contrary to the Common Law of this Realm, incurring thereby the caſe of proviſion, and forfeiting all his Goods to the King, by the Law of Præmuniri facias.

Wincheſter intruded himſelf to be the Kings Governor.

3. Item, He complained that the ſaid Cardinal, with the Archbiſhop of York, intruded themſelves to have the governance of the King, and the doing under the King of Temporal matters, excluding the Kings Uncle, and other Temporal Lords of the Kings kin, from having knowledge of any great matter.

The Cardinal defraudeth the King of his Jewels.

4. Item, Whereas the King had borrowed of the Cardinal four thouſand pounds, upon certain Jewels, and afterward had his mony ready at the day to quit his Jewels; the Cardinal cauſed the Treaſurer to convert that mony to the Payment of another Army, to keep the Jewels ſtill to his own uſe and gain.

The Cardinal deſvereth the King of Scots upon his own Authority.

5. Item, He being then Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Chancellor of England, delivered the King of Scots upon his own Authority, contrary to the Act of Parliament, Wedding his Niece afterward to the ſaid King. Alſo, where the ſaid King of Scots ſhould have paid to the King Forty thouſand pounds, the Cardinal procured Ten thouſand marks thereof to be remitted, and yet the reſt very ſlenderly paid.

The Cardinal playeth the Merchant.

6. Item, The ſaid Cardinal, for lending notable ſums to the King, had the profit of the Port of Hampton, where he ſetting his ſervants to be the Cuſtomers, Wool and other Marchandiſe was, under that cloke, exported, not ſo much to his ſingular vantage, being the chief Merchant, as to the great prejudice of the King, and detriment to his ſubjects.

7. Item, The Cardinal in lending out great ſums to the King, yet ſo deferred and delaied the Loan thereof, that coming out of ſeaſon the ſame did the King little pleaſure, but rather hinderance.

The Cardinal a defrauder of the King.

8. Item, Where Jewels and Plate were priſed at Eleven thouſand pounds in weight of the ſaid Cardinal forfeited to the King; the Cardinal for Loan of a little piece, got him a reſtorement thereof, to the Kings great dammage, who better might have ſpared the Commons, if the ſum had remained to him clear.

9. Item, Where the King's Father had given Elizabeth Bewchampe Three hundred Marks of Livelood, with this condition, If ſhe Wedded within a year; the Cardinal, notwithſtanding ſhe was Married two or three years after, yet gave her the ſame, to the Kings great hurt, and diminiſhing of his Inheritance.

The Cardinal taketh upon him like a King.

10. Item, The Cardinal, having no Authority nor Intereſt in the Crown, preſumed notwithſtanding to call before him, like a King, to the Kings high derogation.

11. Item, That the Cardinal ſued a Pardon from Rome, to be freed from all Diſms, due to the King by the Church of Wincheſter, giving thereby example to the Clergy to withdraw their Diſms likewiſe, and lay all the charge only upon the Temporalty and poor Commons.

12, 13. Item, By the procuring of the ſaid Cardinal and Archbiſhop of York, great Goods of the Kings were loſt and diſpended upon needleſs Ambaſſades, firſt to Arras, then to Calice.

14. Item, It was laid to the charge of the ſaid Cardinal and Archbiſhop, That by their means, going to Calice, the two Enemies of the King, the Duke of Orleance and Duke of Burgoin, were deduced together in accord and alliance; who being at War before between themſelves, and now confederate together again, joyned both together againſt the Kings Towns and Countries over the Sea, to the great danger of Normandy, and deſtruction of the Kings people.

The Cardinal Traitor to the Crown.

15. Item, By the Archbiſhop of York and the Cardinal, perſuations were moved openly in the Kings preſence, with allurements and inducements, that the King ſhould leave his right, his title, and honour of his Crown, in nominating him King of France, during certain years, and that he ſhould utterly abſtain, and be content only in writing with Rex Angliæ, to the great note and infamy of the King, and all his Progenitors.

16, 17. Item, Through the ſleight and ſubtilty of the ſaid Cardinal and his mate, a new convention was intended between the King and certain adverſaries of France; alſo the deliverance of the Duke of Orleance was appointed in ſuch ſort, as thereby great diſworſhip and inconvenience was like to fall, rather of the Kings ſide, than of the other.

The Cardinal a purchaſer of the Kings Lands.

18 Item, That the Cardinal had purchaſed great Lands and Liveloods of the King, the Duke being on the other ſide the Sea occupied in Wars, which redounded little to the worſhip and profit of the King; and moreover he had the King bound, to make him as ſure Eſtate of all thoſe Lands by Eaſter next, as could be deviſed by any learned Counſel, or elſe the ſaid Cardinal to have, and enjoy to him and his Heirs for ever, the Lands of the Duchy of

Lancaſter

Lancaſter in Norfolk to the value of ſeven or eight hundred Marks by the year.

Perverſe counſel of the Cardinal.

19. Item, Where the Duke the Kings Uncle had often offered his ſervice for the defence of the Realm of France, and the Dutchy of Normandy; the Cardinal ever labour-ed to the contrary, in preferring other, after his ſingular affection; whereby a great part of Normandy hath been loſt.

The Cardinal a deceiver of the King, and a briber

20. Item, Seeing the Cardinal was riſen to ſuch Riches and Treaſure, which could grow to him, neither by his Church, nor by Inheritance (which he then had) it was of neceſſity to be thought, that it came by his great deceits, in deceiving both the King and his Subjects, in ſelling Offices, Preferments, Liveloods, Captainſhips, both here, and in the Realm of France, and in Normandy; ſo that what hath been there loſt, he hath been the greateſt cauſer thereof.

The Cardinal purchaſeth a Pardon againſt his Præmuniri.

21. Furthermore, when the ſaid Cardinal had forfeited all his Goods by the Statute of Proviſion, he having the rule of the King, and of other matters of the Realm, purchaſed from the Pope a Charter of Pardon, not only to the defeating of the Laws of the Realm, but alſo to the defrauding of the King, who otherwiſe might and ſhould have had wherewith to ſuſtain his Wars, without any Tallage of his poor people, &c.

Prelates hold one with another.

When the King heard theſe accuſations, he committed the hearing thereof to his Council, whereof the moſt part were Spiritual perſons. So, what for fear, and what for favour, the matter was winked at, and dallied out, and nothing ſaid thereunto, and a fair countenance was made to the Duke, as though no diſpleaſure had been taken, nor malice born in theſe Spiritual ſtomachs. But ſhortly after, the ſmoke hereof not able to keep in any longer within the Spiritual breaſts of theſe charitable Church-men, braſt out in flames of miſchief. For upon the neck of this matter, as witneſſeth Fabian, Polychronicon, and Hall which followeth Polychronicon, firſt enſued the condemnation of Lady Eleanor the Dutcheſs and her Chaplains, as ye have heard before. Whereby it may appear, the ſaid Dutcheſs more of malice than of any juſt cauſe thus to have been troubled. Alſo within ſix years after followed the lamentable deſtruction of the Duke himſelf, as hereafter more is to be declared.

Malice burſt out.

Paul's Steeple ſet on fire by Lightning.

About which time, or not long after, Anno 1443, the Steeple of Pauls was ſet on fire by Lightning, and at laſt by diligent labour of helpers the fire was quenched.

Ann. 1445 The death of Henry Chicheſly, Archbiſhop of Canterbury. The building of Alſon College and Barnard College of Oxford.

And after the condemnation of Lady Eleanor the Dutcheſs aforeſaid, within few years, Anno 1445, followed the death of Henry Chicheſly Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by whom ſhe was condemned in St. Stephen's Chappel at Wincheſter, for Penance to bear a Taper through Cheapſide three ſundry times, and afterward Out-lawed to the Iſle of Man, under the cuſtody of Sir John Standly, Knight. This Henry Chicheſly builded in his time two Colleges in the Univerſity of Oxford, the one called Alſolne College, the other named Barnard College.

Ann. 1447 The ſtory and death of Humphry Duke of Gloceſter.

Proceeding now to the year, wherein ſuffered Humphry that good Duke of Gloceſter, which was the year of our Lord 1447, firſt we will begin in few words to intreat of his life and converſation, then of the manner and cauſe of his death. As touching the offſpring and deſcent of this Duke, firſt, he was the Son of Henry the fourth, Brother to King Henry the fifth, and Uncle to King Henry the ſixth, aſſigned to be the Governor and Protector of his perſon. Of manners he ſeemed meek and gentle, loving the Common-wealth, a ſupporter of the poor Commons, of wit and wiſdom, diſcreet and ſtudious, well affected to Religion, and a friend to verity, and no leſs Enemy to pride and ambition, eſpecially in haughty Prelates, which was his undoing in this preſent evil World.

Duke Humphry commended for his learning.

And which is ſeldom and rare in ſuch Princes of that calling, he was both learned himſelf, and no leſs given to ſtudy, and alſo a ſingular favourer and Patron to them which were ſtudious and learned. And that my commendation of him may have the more credit I will produce the Teſtimony of learned writers, who living in his time, not only do commend his famous knowledge, and ripeneſs of learning in him, but alſo commit and ſubmit their works to his Judgment to be examined. Of which writers, one is Petrus de Monte, writing, De virtutum & vitiorum differentia; who in his Epiſtle Dedicatory beginning with the ſingular commendation of this Duke, and afterward ſpeaking De optimarum artium, librorumq; ſcientiarum peritia, ſaith thus: Cui tu quidem omni conatu, omni ingenio, atque ſtudio incumbis, adeò ut nihil tibi ſine librorum lectione jucundum, gratum aut certe delectabile videatur, &c. And in further proceſs of his work, thus he further declareth, ſaying, Delectaris autem non una tantum arte aut ſcientia, quanquam & id quidem eſſet ſatis; verum fere omnibus, earumque codices magna quadam aviditate legiſti, &c. Beſides this Petrus de Monte, let us hear alſo the judgment of another writer of the ſame age, named Lapiſcaſtellius, who likewiſe Dedicating to the ſaid Duke Humphry, his Book intituled Comparatio ſtudiorum & rei militaris, Amongſt divers other words commendatory, hath theſe which follow, Ad te potiſſimum mitto, quod horum te optimum, & ſapientiſſimum judicem fore exiſtimo, qui ut ex integerrimo patre domino Zenone Bajocenſi Epiſcopo, homine tuæ laudis cupidiſſimo, accepi, ita in his humanitatis ſtudiis invigilaret, ut nullus toto terrarum orbe princeps nec doctrina, nec eloquentia, nec humanitate tecum comparandus ſit, &c. Many other arguments and places may be brought to declare what is to be eſteemed of the learning and ſtudious wit of this noble Prince.

Furthermore, As the learning of this Prince was rare and memorable, ſo was the diſcreet Wiſdom and ſingular Prudence in him no leſs to be conſidered; as for the more manifeſt proof thereof I thought here good, amongſt many other his godly doings, to recite one example reported as well by the Pen of Sir Thomas Moor, as alſo by M. William Tindal, the true Apoſtle of theſe our later days, to the intent to ſee and note, not only the crafty working of falſe Miracles in the Clergy, but alſo that the prudent diſcretion of this high and mighty Prince, the foreſaid Duke Humphry, may give us the better to underſtand what Man he was. The ſtory lieth thus:

Lapiſcaſtellius De comparatione ſtudiorum & rei militaris ad D. Humfridum.

A falſe miracle eſpied.

In the young days of this King Henry the ſixth, being yet under the governance of this Duke Humphry his Protector, there came to St. Albans a certain begger with his Wife, and there was walking about the Town begging, five or ſix days before the Kings coming thither, ſaying, That he was born blind, and never ſaw in his life, and was warned in his dream, that he ſhould come out of Barwick where he ſaid he had ever dwelled, to ſeek St. Alban, and that he had been at his Shrine, and had not been holpen, and therefore he would go and ſeek him at ſome other place; for he had heard ſome ſay, ſince he came, That St. Albans body ſhould be at Colen; and indeed ſuch a contention hath there been. But of truth, as I am ſurely informed, he lieth here, at St. Albans, ſaving ſome relicks of him, which they there ſhew Shrined. But to tell you forth my tale, when the King was come, and the Town full, ſuddenly this blind Man at St. Albans Shrine, had his ſight again, and a miracle ſolemnly Rung, and Te Deum Sung, ſo that nothing was talked of in all the Town, but this miracle. So hapned it then, that Duke Humphry of Gloceſter, a Man alſo no leſs wiſe than well learned, having great joy to ſee ſuch a miracle, called the poor Man unto him; and firſt ſhewing himſelf joyous of Gods glory ſo ſhewed in the getting of his ſight, and exhorting him to meekneſs, and to nó aſcribing of any part of the worſhip to himſelf, nor to be proud of the peoples praiſe, which would call him a good and godly man thereby; at laſt, he looked well upon his Eyes, and asked whether he could ſee nothing at all in all his life before. And when as well his Wife as himſelf affirmed falſly no, then he looked adviſedly upon his Eys again, and ſaid, I believe you very well, for me thinketh ye cannot ſee well yet. Yea Sir, quoth he, I thank God and his holy Martyr, I can ſee now as well as any Man. You can (quoth the Duke) What colour is my Gown? Then anon the begger told him. What colour (quoth he) is this Mans Gown? He told him alſo, and ſo forth, without any ſticking he told him the names of all the colours that could be ſhewed him. And when the Duke ſaw that, he bad him walk Traitor, and made him to be ſet openly in the ſtocks: for though he could have ſeen ſuddenly by miracle the difference between divers colours, yet could he not by the ſight ſo ſuddenly tell the names of all theſe colours, except he had known them before, no more than the names of all the Men that he ſhould ſuddenly ſee.

Diſſimulation well punished.

Petrus de Monte, de virtutum & vitiorum differentia, ad D. Humfridum.

By

By this may it be ſeen how Duke Humphry had not only an head to diſcern and diſſever truth from forged and faind Hypocriſie, but ſtudy alſo, and diligence likewiſe was in him to reform that which was amiſs.

Commendation of Duke Humphry. The good Duke of Gloceſter.

And thus much hitherto for the noble Proweſs and Vertues, joyned with the like ornaments of knowledge and literature, ſhining in this princely Duke. For the which as he was both loved of the poor Commons, and well ſpoken of of all Men, and no leſs deſerving the ſame, being called The good Duke of Gloceſter; ſo neither yet wanted he his enemies and privy enviers, whether it was through the fatal and unfortunate luck of the name of that Houſe, which is but a vain and frivolous obſervation of Polydore and Hall which followeth him, bringing in the examples of Hugh Spenſer, of Thomas of Woodſtock, Son of King Edward the third, of this Duke Humphry, and after of King Richard the third, Duke likewiſe of Gloceſter: or whether it was, That the nature of true vertue is ſuch, that as the flame ever beareth the ſmoke, and the body his ſhadow, ſo the brightneſs of vertue never blazeth, but hath ſome diſdain or envy waiting upon it; or elſe whether it was rather for ſome divorcement from his Wife, or for ſome other vice or treſpaſs done (as ſeemeth moſt like truth) which God as well in Dukes Houſes correcteth, as in other inferior perſons, eſpecially where he loveth. But howſoever the cauſe is to us unknown, this good Duke of Gloceſter, albeit being both the Kings ſole Uncle, and having ſo many well-willers through the whole Realm, yet lacked not his Satan, lacked not his ſecret maligners. Of whom ſpecially was Henry Beuford Cardinal, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Chancellor of England; who, of long time diſdaining and envying the rule and authority of this Duke, firſt had diſpoſed and appointed himſelf to remove the Kings Perſon from Eltham unto Windſor out of the Dukes hands, and there to put in ſuch Governors as him lifted. After that, intending the Dukes Death, he ſet Men of Arms and Archers at the end of London-bridge, and fore-barring the Highway with a draw-chain, ſet Men in Chambers, Cellers and Windows with Bows and Arrows, and other Weapons, to the purpoſed deſtruction both of the Duke and his retinue, if God had not ſo diſpoſed to turn his journy another way. Beſide other manifold injuries and moleſtations, the ambitious Cardinal, ſeeking by all means to be Pope, procured ſuch trouble againſt him, that great diviſion was thereby in the whole Realm; inſomuch that all the Shops within the City of London were ſhut in, for fear of the favourers of theſe two great Perſonages; for each part had aſſembled no ſmall number of people. For the pacifying whereof, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Duke of Quinber, called the Prince of Portingale, rode ſeven times in one day between thoſe two adverſaries. Such were then the troubles of this tumultuous diviſion within the Realm, and all by the excitation of this unquiet Cardinal.

Polyd. Hiſt. lib.23. Hall in 25. Hen.6.

The enemies of the Duke of Gloceſter.

The malicious working of the Cardinal againſt the Duke of Gloceſter.

Over and beſide this Cardinal afore-mentioned, an other capital enemy to the ſaid Duke was William de la Pole, firſt Earl, then Marqueſs, at laſt Duke of Suffolk, a Man very ill reported of in Stories, to be not only the Organ and Inſtrument of this good Mans death, but alſo to be the annoyance of the Common-wealth, and ruin of the Realm. For by him and his only device was firſt concluded the unprofitable and unhonorable Marriage between the King and Lady Margaret, Daughter of the Duke of Angeou; whereas the King had concluded and contracted a Marriage before with the Daughter of the Earl of Arminick, upon conditions ſo much more profitable and honourable, as more convenient it is for a Prince to Marry a Wife with Riches and Friends, than to take a Maid with nothing, and diſ-inherit himſelf and his Realm of old Rights, and ancient Inheritance; which ſo came to paſs. And all this the good Duke did well foreſee, and declared no leſs; but his Counſel would not be taken. Whereupon followed firſt the giving away the Dutchy of Angeou, and the City of Maine, with the whole Country of Maine, to Reiner Duke of Angeou and Father of the Damſel, called then King of Sicile, and of Jeruſalem, having thereof no penny profit, but only a vain name to play withal.

William de la Pool, Duke of Suffolk, the cauſe of the Duke of Gloceſter's death.

The unprofitable marriage between King Henry the ſixth and Queen Margaret.

Queen Margaret mortal enemy to the Duke of Gloceſter.

Another ſore Enemy and mortal Plague to this Duke was the Queen her ſelf, lately before Married to the King. Who being of haughty ſtomach, and all ſet upon glory, of wit and wilineſs, lacking nothing, and perceiving her Husband to be ſimple of wit, and eaſie to be ruled, took upon her to Rule and Govern both the King and Kingdom. And becauſe the Advice and Counſel of Humphry Duke of Gloceſter was ſomewhat a ſtay that her Authority and Regiment could not ſo fully proceed; and partly becauſe the ſaid Duke before did diſagree from that Marriage, this manly Woman and couragious Queen ceaſed not by all imaginations and practiſes poſſible to ſet forward his deſtruction, having alſo for her helper herein the Duke of Buckingham, &c.

The malice of a Woman.

Theſe being his principal Enemies and mortal Foes, fearing leſt ſome commotion might ariſe, if ſuch a Prince ſo near the Kings blood, and ſo dear to the people, and of all Men ſo beloved, ſhould be openly executed and put to death, they deviſed how to trap him, and circumvent him unknowing and unprovided. For the more ſpeedy furtherance whereof a Parliament was Summoned to be kept at Bury, Anno 1447, far from the Citizens of London, as William Tindal in his Book of practiſe writeth, where reſorted all the Peers of the Realm, and amongſt them the Duke of Gloceſter, thinking no harm to any Man, and leſs to himſelf. Who on the ſecond day of the Seſſion was by the Lord Beamond, High Conſtable then of England, accompanied with the Duke of Buckingham and other, arreſted, apprehended, and put in Ward, and upon the ſame all his ſervants diſcharged and put from him, of whom 32 of the principal, being alſo under Arreſt, were diſperſed into divers Priſons, to the great murmuring and grievance of the people. After this Arreſt thus done, and the Duke put into Ward, the night after (ſaid Hall, ſix nights after ſaith Fabian and Polychron.) he was found dead in his Bed, the 24th of February, and his body ſhewed to the Lords and Commons, as though he had been taken naturally with ſome ſuddain Diſeaſe. And although no wound in his Body could be ſeen, yet to all indifferent Perſons it might well be judged, that he died of no natural pang, but of ſome violent hand. Some ſuſpected him to be ſtrangled, ſome that a whole Spit was privily forced into his Body; ſome affirm that he was ſtifled between two Feather-beds. After the death of this Duke, and his Body being interred at St. Albans, after he had politickly by the ſpace of 25 years governed this Realm, five of his Houſhold, to wit, one Knight, three Eſquires, and a Yeoman, were Arraigned, and Convict to be Hanged, Drawn and Quartered. Who being Hanged and cut down half alive, the Marqueſs of Suffolk, there preſent, ſhewed the Charter of the Kings Pardon, and ſo they were delivered. Notwithſtanding, all this could not appeaſe the grudge of the people, ſaying, That the ſaving of the ſervants was no amends for the murthering of the Maſter.

The cruel death or Martyrdom of the good Duke of Gloceſter.

In this cruel Fact of theſe perſons, which did ſo conſpire and conſent to the death of this noble Man, and which thought thereby to work their own ſafety, the marvellous works of Gods Judgment appeareth herein to be noted, who as in all other like cruel policies of Man, ſo in this alſo turned all their policies clean contrary. So that where the Queen thought moſt to preſerve her Husband in honour, and her ſelf in State, thereby both ſhe loſt her Husband, her Husband loſt his Realm, the Realm loſt Angeou, Normandy, the Dutchy of Aquitane, with all her parts beyond the Sea, Calice only except, as in the ſequel of the matter, whoſo will read the Stories, ſhall right well underſtand.

The judgment of God upon them which perſecuted the Duke of Gloceſter.

The next year following, it followed alſo that the Cardinal, who was the principal Artificer and Ringleader of all this miſchief, was ſuffered of God no longer to live. Of whoſe wicked conditions, being more largely ſet forth in Edward Hall, I omit here to ſpeak. What he himſelf ſpake on his death-bed for example to other, I thought not beſt to pretermit. Who hearing that he ſhould die, and that there was no remedy, murmured and grudged, wherefore he ſhould die having ſo much Riches, ſaying, That if the whole Realm would ſave his life, he was able either by Policy to get it, or by Riches to buy it; adding and ſaying moreover. Fie (quoth he) will not Death be hired? Will money do nothing? When my Nephew of Bedford died, I thought my ſelf half up the wheel, but when I ſaw mine other Nephew of Gloceſter deceaſed, then

then I thought my ſelf able to be equal with with Kings, and ſo thought to encreaſe my Treaſure, in hope to have worn the Triple Crown, &c. Ex Edovar. Hallo. And thus is the rich Biſhop of Wincheſter, with all his Pomp and Riches, gone; with the which Riches he was able, not only to build Schools, Colleges, and Univerſities, but alſo was able to ſuſtain the Kings Armies in War (as is ſpecified in Stories) without any Taxing of the Commons.

William Wanflet Biſhop of Wincheſter, Magdalen Colledge in Oxford builded.

In whoſe ſeat next ſucceeded William Wanflet, preferred to the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, who though he had leſs ſubſtance, yet having a mind more godly diſpoſed, did found and erect the College of Mary Magdalen in Oxford. For the which Foundation as there have been and be yet many Students bound to yield grateful thanks unto God, ſo I muſt needs confeſs my ſelf to be one, except I will be unkind.

Gods puniſhment upon the Marqueſs of Suffolk.

Among the other miſchievous adverſaries which ſought and wrought the death of Humphry Duke Gloceſter, next to the Cardinal of Wincheſter (who as is ſaid, died the next year following) was William de la Pole, Marqueſs of Suffolk, who alſo lived not long after, nor long eſcaped unpuniſhed. For although he was highly exalted, by the means of the Queen, (whoſe Marriage he only procured) unto the favour of the King, and was made Duke of Suffolk, and magnified of the people, and bare the whole ſway in the Realm, whoſe acts and facts his vain glorious head cauſed alſo by the aſſent of the Commons to be Recorded, and ſubſtantially to be Regiſtred in the Rolls of the Parliament, for a perpetual renown to him and all his Poſterity for ever; yet notwithſtanding, the hand of Gods Judgment ſtill hanging over him, he enjoyed not long this his Triumphant Victory. For within three years after the death and ruin of the Cardinal, the voices of the whole Commons of England were utterly turned againſt him, accuſing him in the Parliament at the Black-Friers for delivery of the Dutchy of Angeou, and the Earldom of Maine; alſo for the death of the noble Prince Humphry Duke of Gloceſter. They imputed moreover to him the loſs of all Normandy, laying unto him, That he was a ſwallower up and conſumer of the Kings Treaſure, the expeller of all good and vertuous Counſellors from the King, and advancer of vitious perſons, apparent adverſaries to the publick wealth; ſo that he was called in every Mans mouth, A Traitor, a Murtherer, and a Robber of the Kings Treaſure.

The vain glory of mans heart forgeting himſelf in honour. The Commons unconſtant. The Duke of Suffolk accuſed by the Commons.

The Queen, albeit ſhe tenderly loved the Duke, yet to appeaſe the exclamation of the Commons, was forced to commit him to the Tower, where he, with as much pleaſure and liberty as could be, remained for a month, which being expired, he was delivered and reſtored again unto his old place, and former favour with the King; whereat the people more grudged than before. It hapned by the occaſion of a commotion then beginning amongſt the rude people, by one whom they called Blewbeard, that the Parliament was for that time adjourned to Leiceſter, the Queen thinking by force and rigour of Law to repreſs there the malice and evil-will conceived againſt the Duke. But at that place few of the Nobility would appear. Wherefore it was again rejourned unto London, and kept at Weſtminſter, where was a whole company, and a full appearance with the King and Queen, and with them the Duke of Suffolk as chief Counſellor. The Commons, not forgetting the old grudge, renewed again their former Articles and Accuſations againſt the ſaid Duke, againſt the Biſhop of Salisbury, and Sir James Finies, Lord Say, and other. When the King perceived that no gloſſing nor diſſimulation would ſerve to appeaſe the continual clamour of the importunate commons, to make ſome quiet pacification, firſt, he ſequeſtred from him the Lord Say, Treaſurer of England, and other the Dukes adherents from their offices. Then he put in exile the Duke of Suffolk for term of five years, ſuppoſing by that ſpace the furious rage of the people would aſſwage. But the hand of God would not ſuffer the guiltleſs blood of Humfry Duke of Gloceſter to be unrevenged, or the flagitious perſon further to continue. For when he was ſhipped in Suffolk, intending to be tranſported into France, he was encountred with a Ship of War belonging to the Tower; whereby he was taken, and brought into Dover-rode, and there on the one ſide of a Ship-boat, one ſtruck off his head; which was about the year of our Lord 1450.

The Duke of Suffolk again accuſed.

Example of Gods judgment and of blood revenged. The Duke of Suffolk beheaded.

And thus have ye heard the full ſtory and diſcourſe of Duke Humphry, and of all his adverſaries; alſo of Gods condign puniſhment upon them for their bloody cruelty. But before I remove from the ſaid ſtory of the foreſaid Duke, and of the proud Cardinal his enemy, I will here by the way annex a certain inſtrument, by the King and advice of his Council, made againſt the ſaid Cardinal, taking upon him to enter into this Realm as Legate from the Pope, contrary to the old Laws and cuſtoms of this Realm, as by the words of the ſaid inſtrument here in Latine may well appear.

The Benefit and Invention of PRINTING.

Ann. 1450 The Art of Printing Invented. Ex Typographia per Matthæum Judicem.

IN following the courſe and order of years, we find this foreſaid year of our Lord 1450, to be famous and memorable, for the divine and miraculous inventing of Printing. Nauclerius, and Wymſelingus following him, refer the invention thereof to the year 1440. In Paralip. Abbatis Urſp. it is Recorded this faculty to be found, An. 1446. Aventinus and Zieglerus do ſay, Anno, 1450. The firſt Inventor thereof (as moſt agree) is thought to be a German, dwelling firſt in Argentine, afterward Citizen of Mentz, named J. Fauſtus, a Goldſmith. The occaſion of this Invention firſt was by Engraving the Letters of the Alphabet in Metal; who then laying black Ink upon the Metal gave the form of Letters in Paper. The Man being induſtrious and active, perceiving that, thought to proceed further, and to prove whether it would frame as well in words, and in whole ſentences, as it did in Letters. Which when he perceived to come well to paſs, he made certain other of his counſel, one J. Guttemberg and P. Schafferd, binding them by their Oath to keep ſilence for a ſeaſon. After ten years John Guttemberg, compartner with Fauſtus, began then firſt to broach the matter at Strausbrough. The Art, being yet but rude, in proceſs of time was ſet forward by inventive wits, adding more and more to the perfection thereof. In the number of whom, J. Mentel, J. Prus, Adolphus Ruſchius, were great helpers. Ulricus Han, in Latin called Gallus, firſt brought it to Rome. Whereof the Epigram was made:

Carmen Ant. Campari.

Anſer Tarpeii cuſtos, vigilando quod alis
Conſtrepores, Gallus decidit, ultor adeſt
Ulricus Gallus, ne quem poſcantur in uſum,
Edocuit pennis nil opus eſſe tuis.

Printing came of God.

Notwithſtanding, what Man ſoever was the Inſtrument, without all doubt God himſelf was the ordainer and diſpoſer thereof, no otherwiſe, than he was of the gift of Tongues, and that for a ſingular purpoſe. And Printing likened to the Gift of Tongues.

well may this gift of Printing be reſembled to the gift of Tongues: for like as God then ſpake with many Tongues, and yet all that would not turn the Jews; ſo now, when the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh to the adverſaries in innumerable ſorts of Books, yet they will not be converted, nor turn to the Goſpel.

Now to conſider to what end and purpoſe the Lord hath given this gift of Printing to the Earth, and to what great utility and neceſſity it ſerveth, it is not hard to judge, who ſo wiſely perpendeth both the time of the ſending, and the ſequel which thereof enſueth.

The time conſidered when Printing was found.

And firſt, touching the time of this faculty given to the uſe of Man, this is to be marked, that when as the Biſhop of Rome with all the whole and full conſent of the Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbats, Priors, Lawyers, Doctors, Provoſts, Deans, Archdeacons, aſſembled together in the Council of Conſtance, had condemned poor John Hus, and Jerome of Prague to death for Hereſie, notwithſtanding they were no Hereticks, and after they had ſubdued the Bohemians and all the whole World under the Supreme Authority of the Romiſh See; and had made all Chriſtian people obediencies and vaſſals unto the ſame, having (as one would ſay) all the World at their will, ſo that the matter now was paſt, not only the power of all Men, but the hope alſo of any Man to be recovered: in this very time ſo dangerous and deſperate, where Mans power could do no more, there the bleſſed Wiſdom and Omnipotent Power of the Lord began to work for his Church, not with Sword and Target to ſubdue his exalted adverſary, but with Printing, Writing and Reading to convince darkneſs by light, error by truth, ignorance by learning. So, that, by this means of Printing, the ſecret Operation of God hath heaped upon that proud Kingdom a double confuſion. For whereas the Biſhop of Rome had burned J. Hus before, and Jerome of Prague, who neither denied his Tranſubſtantiation, nor his Supremacy, nor yet his Popiſh Maſs, but ſaid Maſs, and heard Maſs themſelves, neither ſpake againſt his Purgatory, nor any other great matter of his Popiſh Doctrine, but only exclaimed againſt his exceſſive and pompous Pride, his unchriſtian or rather antichriſtian abomination of life: thus while he could not abide his wickedneſs only of life to be touched, but made it Hereſie, or at leaſt matter of Death, whatſoever was ſpoken againſt his deteſtable converſation and manners, God of his ſecret Judgment, ſeeing time to help his Church, hath found a way by this faculty of Printing, not only to confound his life and converſation, which before he could not abide to be touched, but alſo to caſt down the foundation of his ſtanding, that is, to examine, confute, and detect his Doctrine, Laws and Inſtitutions moſt deteſtable in ſuch ſort, that though his life were never ſo pure, yet his Doctrine ſtanding as it doth, no Man is ſo blind but he may ſee, that either the Pope is Antichriſt, or elſe that Antichriſt is near Couſin to the Pope; And all this doth and will hereafter more and more appear by Printing.

Double confuſion upon the Pope by Printing.

The fruit and profit of Printing.

The reaſon whereof is this: for that hereby Tongues are known, Knowledge groweth, Judgment encreaſeth, Books are diſperſed, the Scripture is ſeen, the Doctors be read, Stories be opened, Times compared, Truth diſcerned, Falſhood detected, and with Finger pointed, and all (as I ſaid) through the benefit of Printing. Wherefore I ſuppoſe, that either the Pope muſt aboliſh Printing, or he muſt ſeek a new World to reign over: for elſe, as this World ſtandeth, Printing doubtleſs will aboliſh him. But the Pope, and all his College of Cardinals, muſt this underſtand, That through the Light of Printing the World beginneth now to have Eyes to ſee, and Heads to judge: He cannot walk ſo inviſible in a Net, but he will be ſpied. And although through might he ſtopped the mouth of John Hus before, and of Jerome, that they might not preach, thinking to make his Kingdom ſure: yet, in ſtead of John Hus and others, God hath opened the Preſs to preach, whoſe voice the Pope is never able to ſtop with all the puiſſance of his Triple Crown. By this Printing, as by the Gift of Tongues, and as by the ſingular Organ of the Holy Ghoſt, the Doctrine of the Goſpel ſoundeth to all Nations and Countries under Heaven, and what God revealeth to one Man, is diſperſed to many, and what is known in one Nation, is opened to all.

Good counſel to the Pope.

The firſt and beſt were for the Biſhop of Rome, by the benefit of Printing, to learn and know the truth. If he will not, let him well underſtand that Printing is not ſet up for nought. To ſtrive againſt the ſtream it availeth not. What the Pope hath loſt, ſince Printing and the Preſs began to Preach, let him caſt his Counters. Firſt, When Eraſmus wrote, and Frobenius Printed, what a blow thereby was given to all Friers and Monks in the World? And who ſeeth not that the Pen of Luther following after Eraſmus, and ſet forward by writing, hath ſet the Triple Crown ſo awry on the Popes head, that it is like never to be ſet ſtraight again?

Briefly, if there were no demonſtration to lead, yet by this one argument of Printing, the Biſhop of Rome might underſtand the counſel and purpoſe of the Lord to work against him, having provided such a way in Earth, that almost how many Printing Presses there be in the World, so many Block-houses there be against the high Castle of St. Angel; so that either the Pope must abolish Knowledge and Printing, or Printing at length will root him out. For if a Man wisely consider the hold and standing of the Pope, thus he may repute with himself, that as nothing made the Pope strong in time past, but lack of knowledge and ignorance of simple Christians: so contrariwise, now nothing doth debilitate and shake the high Spire of his Papacy so much, as Reading, Preaching, Knowledge and Judgment; that is to say, The fruit of Printing; Whereof some experience we see already, and more is like (by the Lords Blessing) to follow. For although, through outward force and violent cruelty, Tongues dare not speak, yet the hearts of Men daily (no doubt) be instructed through the benefit of Printing. And though the Pope both now by cruelty, and in times past by ignorance, had all under his possession: yet neither must he think, that violence will always continue, neither must he hope for that now which he had then; forsomuch as in those former days Books then were scarce, and also of such excessive Price, that few could attain to the Buying, fewer to the Reading and Studying thereof; which Books now by the means of this Art, are made easie unto all Men. Ye heard before, pag. 755, how Nicholas Belward bought a New Testament in those days for four Marks and forty Pence, whereas now the same Price will well serve forty persons with so many Books.

againſt

So preached the Vicar of Croyden in King Henry the eighth's days, at Paul's Cross; saying, That either we must root out Printing, or else Printing will root out us.

Moreover, it was before noted and declared by the Testimony of Armachanus, how for defect of Books and good Authors, both Universities were decaied and good wits kept in ignorance, while begging Friers, scraping all the wealth from other Priests, heaped up all Books that could be gotten, into their own Libraries; where either they did not diligently apply them, or else did not rightly use them, or at least kept them from such as more fruitfully would have perused them. In this then so great rarity, and also dearth of good Books, when neither they which could have Books would well use them, nor they that would, could have them to use, what marvel if the greediness of a few Prelates did abuse the blindness of those days to the advancement of themselves? Wherefore Almighty God of his merciful Providence, seeing both what lacked in the Church, and how also to remedy the same, for the advancement of his Glory, gave the understanding of this excellent Art or Science of Printing, whereby three singular commodities at one time came to the World. First, The price of all Books is diminished. Secondly, The speedy help of Reading more furthered. And Thirdly, The plenty of all good Authors enlarged; according as Aprutinus doth truly report:

Triple commodity by Printing.

Imprimit ille die, quantum non scribitur anno. i.

The Press in one day will do in Printing,
That none in one year can do in Writing.

By reason whereof, as Printing of Books Ministred matter of Reading, so Reading brought Learning, Learning shewed Light, by the brightness whereof blind Ignorance was suppressed, Error detected, and finally Gods Glory with Truth of his Word advanced. This faculty of Printing was after the Invention of Guns the space of 130 years; which Invention was also found in Germany, Anno 1380. And thus much for the worthy commendation of Printing.

When Guns were first invented.

The lamentable losing of Constantinople.

{Anno 1453} ANno 1453, Constantinus Paleologus, being Emperor of Constantinople, the 29th day of May, the great City of Constantinople was taken by the Turk Mahometes, after the Siege of 54 days; which Siege began in the beginning of April. Within the City, beside the Citizens, were but only 6000 rescuers of the Greeks. And 3000 of the Venetians and Genues. Against these, Mahometes brought an Army of 400 Thousand, collected out of the Countries and Places adjoyning near about, as out of Grecia, Illyrica, Wallachia, Dardanis, Triballis, Bulganis, out of Bithynia, Galatia, Lydia, Cicilia, and such other; which Places had the name yet of Christians. Thus one Neighbour for lucre sake helped to destroy another.

The losing of Constantinople.

{KING Hen.}

The City was compassed of the Turks both by the Sea and Land. Mahometes the Turk divided his Army into three sundry parts, which in three parts of the City so beat the Walls and brake them down, that they attempted by the breaches thereof to enter the City. But the valiantness of the Christians therein won much commendation; whose Duke was called John Justinianus, of Genua. But forsomuch as the assaults were great, and the number of the Christian Soldiers daily decreased, fighting both at the Walls and at the Haven against such a multitude of the Turks, they were not able long to hold out. Beside the Armies which lay battering at the Walls, the Turk had upon the Sea his Navy of 250 Sail, lying upon the Haven of the City, reaching from the one side of the Havens mouth unto the other, as if a Bridge should be made from the one Bank to the other. Which Haven by the Citizens was barred with Iron Chains, whereby the Turks were kept out a certain space. Against which Navy 7 Ships there were of Genua within the Haven, and 3 of Creta, and certain of Chio, which stood against them. Also the Soldiers issuing out of the City, as occasion would serve, did manfully gainstand them, and with wilde fire set their Ships on fire, that a certain space they could serve to no use. At length the Chains being brast, and a way made, the Turks Navy entred the Haven, and assaulted the City; whereby the Turk began to conceive great hope, and was in forwardness to obtain the City. The assault and skirmish then waxing more hot, Mahometes the tyrant stood by upon an Hill, with his warriors about him, crying and howling out unto them to scale the Walls and enter the Town; otherwise, if any reculled, he threatned to kill them, and so he did. Wherefore a great number of his Soldiers, in their repulse and retire, were slain by the Turks Men, being sent by his commandment to slay them, and so they were justly served, and well payed their hire.

The tyranny of the Turk toward his own Men.

Although this was some comfort to the Christians, to see and behold out of the City the Turks retique so consumed, yet that hope lasted not long. Shortly after by rage of War, it hapned Justinian the Duke above-named to be hurt; who notwithstanding that he was earnestly desired by Paleologus the Emperor, not to leave his Power which he had to keep, seeing his wound was not deadly dangerous; yet could he not be entreated to tarry, but left his standing, and his Fort dis-furnished, setting none in his place to award the same. And so this doughty Duke hurt more with his false-heart than with force of Weapon, gave over and fled to Chius, where shortly after for sorrow, rather than for soreness of his wound, he died. Many of his Soldiers, seeing their Captain flee, followed after, leaving their Fort utterly destitute without defence. The Turks, understanding that vantage, soon brast into the City. The Emperor Paleogolus seeing no other way but to fly, making toward the Gate, either was slain, or else troden down with the multitude. In the which Gate Eight hundred dead Mens bodies were found and taken up.

The cowardness of Duke Justinian.

The City of Constantinople thus being got, the Turks sacking and ranging about the streets, houses, and corners, did put to the Sword most unmercifully whomsoever they found, both Aged and Young, Matrons, Virgins, Children and Infants, sparing none; the noble Matrons and Virgins were horribly ravished, the Goods of the City, the Treasuries in houses, the Ornaments in Churches were all sackt and spoiled, the Pictures of Christ opprobriously handled, in hatred of Christ. The spoil and havock of the City lasted three days together, while the barbarous Souldiers murdered and rifled what them listed.

The Emperor of Constantinople slain.

Constantinople won of the Turks.

The bloody Victory of the Turks.

These things thus being done, and the tumult ceased, after three days Mahometes the Turk entreth into the City, and first calling for the heads and Ancients of the City, such as he found to be left alive, he commanded them to be mangled and cut in pieces. It is also (saith my Author) reported, that in the Feasts of the Turks, honest Matrons and Virgins, and such as were of the Kings stock, after other contumelies, were hewn and cut in pieces for their disport.

The horrible tyranny of the Turks.

And

{KING Hen.6.}

And this was the end of that Princely and famous City of Conſtantinople, beginning firſt by Conſtantinus, and ending alſo with Conſtantinus, which for the Princely Royalty thereof was named and ever honoured, from the time of the firſt Conſtantine, equally with the City of Rome, and called alſo by the name thereof New Rome, and alſo continued the ſpace of 1120. years. I pray God that Old Rome may learn of New Rome, to take heed and beware betime.

Conſtantinople called New Rome.

This terrible deſtruction of the City of Conſtantinople, the Queen of Cities, I thought here to deſcribe, not ſo much to ſet forth the Barbarous cruelty of theſe filthy Rake-hells and merciful Murderers; as ſpecially for this, that we being admoniſhed by the doleful ruine and miſery of theſe our even Chriſtened, may call to mind the plagues and miſeries deſerved, which ſeem to hang no leſs over our own heads, and thereby may learn betime to invocate and call more earneſtly upon the name of our terrible and merciful God, that he for his Sons ſake will keep us, and preſerve his Church among us, and mitigate thoſe plagues and ſorrows, which we no leſs have deſerved, than theſe above minded have done before us. Chriſt grant it, Amen. Ex Hiſt. Wittenbergica Peucer.

A warning to all Chriſtendom by Conſtantinople.

The Hiſtory of Reynol Pecock Biſhop of Chicheſter, afflicted and impriſoned for the Goſpel of Chriſt.

The Story Reynold Pecock.

After the death of Henry Chicheſley before mentioned, next ſucceeded John Stafford, Anno 1445. who continued eight years. After him came John Kemp, Anno 2453. who ſate but three years. Then ſucceeded Thomas Burſchere. In the time of which Archbiſhop fell the trouble of Reynold Pecock, Biſhop of Chicheſter, afflicted by the Popes Prelates for his Faith and profeſſion of the Goſpel. Of this Biſhop, Hall alſo in his Chronology toucheth a little mention, declaring that an overthwart judgment (as he termeth it) was given by the Fathers of the ſpiritualty againſt him. This man (ſaith he) began to move Queſtions not privately, but openly in the Univerſities, concerning the Annates Peter-pence, and other juriſdictions, and authorities pertaining to the See of Rome, and not only put forth the Queſtions, but declared his mind and opinion in the ſame; wherefore he was for this cauſe abjured at Pauls Croſs. Thus much of him writeth Hall. Of whom alſo recordeth Polychronicon, but in few words. This Biſhop, firſt of Saint Aſaph, then of Chicheſter, ſo long as Duke Humfery lived (by whom he was promoted and much made of) was quiet and ſafe, and alſo bold to diſpute and to write his mind, and wrote (as Leland recordeth) divers Books and Treatiſes. But after that good Duke was thus (as ye have heard) made away, this good Man lacking his back-ſtay, was open to his enemies, and matter ſoon found againſt him. Whereupon he being complained of, and accuſed by privy and malignant promoters unto the Archbiſhop, Letters firſt were directed down from the Archbiſhop, to cite all Men to appear that could ſay any thing againſt him. The form of which Citation here enſueth.

The Copy of the Citation ſent by the Archbiſhop.

The Citation of the Archbiſhop: Thomas Bourcher, Firſt, Burchier.

THomas by the permiſſion of God, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, to all and ſingular, Parſons, Vicars, Chaplains, Curates, and not Curates Clerks, and learned Men, whatſoever they be, conſtitute and ordained in any place throughout our Province of Canterbury, health, grace and benediction.

We have received a grievous complaint of our Reverend fellow Brother, Reynold Pecock Biſhop of Chicheſter, containing in it, that albeit our ſaid Reverend fellow Brother, the Biſhop, delivered unto us, certain Books written by him in the Engliſh Tongue, by us and our authority to be examined, collected, reformed and allowed: notwithſtanding many (the examination and reformation of the ſaid Books depending and remaining before us undiſcuſſed) have openly Preached and taught at Pauls Croſs in London, and in divers other places of our Province of Canterbury, that our ſaid fellow Brother the Biſhop hath propounded, made and written, or cauſed to be written in the ſaid Books, certain Concluſion repugnant to the true Faith, and that he doth obſtinately hold and defend the ſame. By the pretence of which preaching and teaching, the ſtate and good name and fame of the Lord Reynold the Biſhop, are grievouſly offended and hurt, and he and his opinion marvelouſly burdened. Wherefore we charge you all together, and ſeverally, and do command you, firmly enjoyning you, that openly and generally you do warn or cauſe to be warned, all and ſingular ſuch perſons, which will object any thing contrary and againſt the Concluſions of our ſaid Reverend fellow Brother the Biſhop, had or contained in his Books or Writings; that the twentieth day after ſuch monition or warning had, they do freely of their own accord appear before us and our Commiſſaries in this behalf appointed, whereſoever we ſhall then be in our City, Dioceſs, or Province of Canterbury, to ſpeak, propound or alledge, and affirm fully and ſufficiently in writing, whatſoever Heretical or Erroneous matter they will ſpeak, propound or object againſt the ſaid Concluſions contained in his ſaid Books; and both to ſatisfie and receive, whatſoever ſhall ſeem meet and right in this behalf by the holy inſtitution and ordinances.

And forſomuch as this matter depending yet undetermined and diſcuſſed, nothing ought to be attempted or renewed; we charge you that by this our authority you inhibit and forbid all and every one ſo to preach and teach hereafter. Unto whom alſo we by the Tenor of theſe preſents do likewiſe forbid, that during the examination of the Concluſions and Books aforeſaid, depending before us and our Commiſſaries undiſcuſſed, they do not preſume by any means, without advice and judgment, to preach, judge and affirm any thing to the prejudice or offence of the ſaid Lord Reynold the Biſhop: and if ſo be you do find any in this behalf gainſaying or not obeying this our inhibition, that you do cite or cauſe them peremptorily to be cited, to appear before us our Commiſſaries, in this behalf appointed, the tenth day after their Citation, if it be a Court day, or elſe the next Court day following, whereſoever we ſhall then be, in our City, Dioceſs, or Province of Canterbury, to make further declaration by form of law of the cauſe of their diſobedience, and to receive ſuch puniſhment as juſtice and equity ſhall determine in their behalf; and that by our Letters you do duly certifie us or our Commiſſaries, what you have done in the Premiſſes at the day and place aforeſaid; or that he which hath ſo executed our Commandment, do ſo certifie us by his Letters. Dated at our Mannour of Lambeth the 22d day of October, Anno 1457. and in the fourth year of our Tranſlation.

This Citation being directed, the Biſhop upon the ſummon thereof was brought, or rather came before the Judges and Biſhops unto Lambeth, where the foreſaid Thomas the Archbiſhop, with his Doctors and Lawyers, were gathered together in the Archbiſhops Court. In which convention alſo the Duke of Buckingham was preſent, accompanied with the Biſhops of Rocheſter, and of Lincoln. What were the opinions and Articles againſt him objected, after in his revocation ſhall be ſpecified. In his anſwering for himſelf, in ſuch a company of the Popes friends, albeit he could not prevail; notwithſtanding he ſtoutly defending himſelf, declared many things worthy great commendation of learning, if learning againſt power could have prevailed.

Pecock appeareth at Lambeth before the Archbiſhop.

But they on the contrary part, with all labour and travel extended themſelves, either to reduce him, or elſe to confound him. As here lacked no bluſtering words of terror and threatning, ſo alſo many fair flattering words and gentle perſwaſions were admixt withal. Briefly, to make a ſhort Narration of a long and buſie traverſe, here was no ſtone left unturned, no ways unproved, either by fair means to intreat him, or by terrible menaces to terrifie his mind, till at length, he being vanquiſhed and overcome by the Biſhops, began to faint, and gave over. Whereupon, by and by a recantation was put unto him by the Biſhops, which he ſhould declare before the people. The Copy of which his recantation here followeth.

Great labor to reduce Pecock from his opinions.

The form and manner of the retractation of Reynold Pecock.

The retractation of Biſhop Pecock.

IN the name of God, Amen. Before you the moſt Reverend Father in Chriſt and Lord, the Lord Thomas by the grace of God, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England and Legate of the Apoſtlick See, I Reynold Pecock, unworthy Biſhop of Chicheſter, do purely, willingly, ſimply, and abſolutely confeſs and acknowledge, that I in times paſt, that is to ſay, by the ſpace of theſe twenty years laſt paſt and more, have otherwiſe conceived, holden, taught and written, as touching the Sacraments, and the Articles of the Faith, than the Holy Church of Rome, and Univerſal Church; and alſo that I have made, written, publiſhed and ſet forth many and divers pernitious Doctrines, Books, Works, Writings, Hereſies, contrary and againſt the true Catholick and Apoſtolick Faith, containing in them Errors contrary to the Catholick Faith, and eſpecially theſe Errors and Hereſies here under written.

Ex Regiſt.

His Articles.

1. Firſt of all, That we are not bound, by the neceſſity of Faith, to believe that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt after his death deſcended into Hell.

2. Item, That it is not neceſſary to ſalvation to believe in the Holy Catholick Church.

3. Item, That it is not neceſſary to ſalvation to believe the Communion of Saints.

4. Item, That it is not neceſſary to ſalvation to affirm the body material in the Sacrament.

5. Item, That the Univerſal Church may err in matters which pertain unto Faith.

6. Item, That it is not neceſſary unto ſalvation to believe that which every general Council doth Univerſally ordain, approve, or determine, ſhould neceſſarily for the help of our Faith, and the ſalvation of ſouls, be approved and holden of all faithful Chriſtians.

Wherefore I Reynold Pecock, wretched ſinner, which have long walked in darkneſs, and now by the merciful diſpoſition and ordinance of God, am reduced and brought again unto the light and way of truth, and reſtored unto the unity of our holy Mother the Church, renounce and forſake all Errors and Hereſies aforeſaid.

Notwithſtanding (godly Reader) it is not to be believed that Pecock did ſo give over theſe opinions, howſoever the words of the recantation pretend. For it is a policy and play of the Biſhops, that when they do ſubdue or overcome any Man, they carry him whither they liſt, as it were a young Steer by the noſe, and frame out his words for him beforehand, as it were for a Parret, that he ſhould ſpeak unto the people; not according to his own will, but after their luſt and fantaſie. Neither is it to be doubted but that this Biſhop repented him afterward of his recantation; which may eaſily be judged hereby, becauſe he was committed again to priſon, and detained captive, where it is uncertain whether he was oppreſſed with privy and ſecret Tyranny, and there obtained the the crown of Martyrdom, or no.

The Articles of Reynold Pecock mentioned by Thomas Gaſcoigne. Ex Tho. Gaſcoig. lib. de Doctrina Theolog. part. 3.

The Dictionary of Thomas Gaſcoigne I have not in my hands at preſent. But if credit be to be given to ſuch as have to us alledged the Book, this we may find in the eighth Century of John Ball, Chapter nineteen, That the ſaid Thomas Gaſcoigne in his third part of his Dictionary, writing of Reynold Pecock, maketh declaration of his Articles, containing in them matters of ſore Hereſie. Firſt (ſaith he) Reynold Pecock at Pauls Croſs Preached openly, that the Office of a Chriſtian Prelate, chiefly above all other things, is to preach the Word of God. That Mans reaſon is not to be preferred before the Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament. That the uſe of the Sacraments, as they be now handled, is worſe than the uſe of the law of nature. That Biſhops which buy their admiſſions of the Biſhop of Rome, do ſin. That no Man is bound to believe and obey the determination of the Church of Rome. Alſo that the riches of Biſhops by inheritance, are the goods of the poor. Item, That the Apoſtles themſelves perſonally were not the makers of the Creed; and that in the ſame Creed once was not the Article, He went down to Hell. Item, That of the four ſenſes of the Scripture none is to be taken, but the very firſt and proper ſenſe. Alſo, that he gave little eſtimation, in ſome points, to the authority of the old Doctors. Item, That he condemned the wilful begging of the Friers, as a thing idle and needleſs. This out of Thomas Gaſcoigne. Leland alſo, adding this moreover, ſaith, that he, not contented to follow the Catholick ſentence of the Church in interpreting of the Scripture, did not think ſoundly (as he judged it) of the Story Euchariſt.

KING Hen. 6

At length, for theſe and ſuch other Articles the ſaid Reynold Pecock was condemned for an Heretick, by the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of Roff, Lincoln, and Winche-ſter, with other Divines moe. Whereupon he, being driven to his recantation, was notwithſtanding detained ſtill in priſon. Where ſome ſay, that he was privily made away by death.

R. Pecock detained in priſon.

Hall addeth, that ſome ſay his opinions to be, that ſpiritual perſons by Gods law ought to have no temporal poſſeſſions. Other write, that he ſaid, that perſonal Tithes were not due by Gods Law. But whatſoever the cauſe was, he was cauſed at Pauls Croſs to abjure, and all his Books burnt, and he himſelf kept in his own houſe during his natural life. I marvel that Polydore, of his extremity of the Biſhops handling, and of his Articles, in his Hiſtory maketh no memorial. Belike it made but little for the honeſty of his great Maſter the Pope.

Polydor noted.

From perſecution and burning in England now out of the way to digreſs a little, to ſpeak of foraign matters of the Church of Rome; you remember before, in the later end of the Council of Baſil, how Eugenius was depoſed. Of whoſe conditions and martial affairs, how he made War againſt Sfortia a famous Captain of Italy, and what other Wars he raiſed beſide, not only in Italy, but alſo in Germany, againſt the City and Council of Baſil, I ſhall not need to make any long rehearſal. After his depoſition ye heard alſo how Felix Duke of Savoy was elected Pope. Whereupon another great Schiſm followed in the Church during all the life of Eugenius.

Eugenius warred againſt Sforſtia and divers others.

Pope Felix.

After his death, his next ſucceſſor was Pope Nicholas the fifth, who (as you before have heard) brought ſo to paſs with the Emperor Frederick the Third, that Felix was contented to renounce and reſign his Papacy to Nicholas, and was therefore of him afterward received to the room of Cardinal for his ſubmiſſion; and Frederick for his working was confirmed at Rome to be full Emperor and there Crowned, An. 1451. For Emperors, before they be confirmed and crowned by the Pope, are no Emperors, but only called Kings of Romans.

Pope Nicholas the 5th.

Emperors are but Kings of Romans before they be Crowned by the Pope.

This Pope Nicholas here mentioned, to get and gather great ſums of Money, appointed a Jubile in the year of our Lord 1450, at which time there reſorted a greater number of people unto Rome, than hath at any time before been ſeen. At which time we read in the Story of Platina that to have happened, which I thought here not unworthy to be noted for the example of the thing. As there was a great concourſe of people reſorting up to the mount Vatican to behold the Image of our Saviour, which there they had to ſhew to Pilgrims, the people being thick going too and fro between the Mount and the City, by chance a certain Mule of the Cardinals of Saint Mark, came by the way, by reaſon whereof the people not being able to avoid the way, one or two falling upon the Mule, there was ſuch a preaſe and throng upon that occaſion on the Bridge, that to the number of two hundred bodies of Men, and three Horſes were there ſtrangled, and on each ſide of the Bridge many beſides fell over into the Water, and were drowned.

Ex Platina de vitis.

The example of Idolatry puniſhed.

The fruit of Idolatry.

By means of which occaſion the Pope afterward cauſed the ſmall Houſes to be plucked down, to make the way broader. And this is the fruit that cometh by Idolatry. Ex Platin.

In the time of this Pope one Mat. Palmerius wrote a Book De Angelis, for defending whereof he was condemned by the Pope, and burned at Corna, An. 1448. Ex Tritemio.

Mat. Palmerius a reputed Martyr.

After him ſucceeded Calixtus the Third, who amongſt divers other things ordained, both at Noon and at Even-ing the Bell to toll the Aves, as it was uſed in the Popiſh time, Tolling of Aves.

KING Hen. 6. time, to help the Souldiers that fought againſt the Turks; for the which cauſe alſo he ordained the Feaſt of the Tranſiguration of the Lord, Solemnizing it with like pardons and indulgences, as was Corpus Chriſti day.

S. Edmund of Canterbury Canonized. Alſo this Pope, proceeding contrary to the Councils of Conſtance and Baſil, decreed that no Man ſhould appeal from the Pope to any Council. By whom alſo Saint Edmund of Canterbury with divers other, were made Saints.

Pope Pius the 2d. Next after this Calixtus ſucceeded Pius Secundus, otherwiſe called Æneas Sylvius, who wrote the two Books of Commentaries upon the Council of Baſil before mentioned. This Æneas, at the time of the writing of thoſe his Books, ſeemed to be a Man of an indifferent and tolerable Judgment and Doctrine, from the which he afterward being Pope ſeemed to decline and ſwarve, ſeeking by all means poſſible how to deface and aboliſh the Books which heretofore he had written.

Promotion choketh Religion.

Sentences attributed unto this Pius.

The proverbs of Pius.

THe Divine nature of God may rather be comprehended by Faith, than by diſputation.

Chriſtian Faith is to be conſidered, not by what reaſon it is proved, but from whom it proceedeth.

Neither can a covetous Man be ſatisfied with Money, nor a learned Man with knowledge.

Learning ought to be to poor Men in ſtead of Silver, to Noblemen in ſtead of Gold, and to Princes in ſtead of precious Stones.

An Artificial Oration moveth Fools, but not wiſe Men.

Suters in the law be as birds; the Court is the baite; the Judges be the Nets; and the Lawyers be the Fowlers.

Men are to be given to Dignities, and not Dignities to Men.

The Office of a Biſhop is heavy, but it is bleſſed to him that doth well bear it.

A Biſhop without learning may be likened to an Aſs.

An evil Phyſitian deſtroyeth bodies, but an unlearned Prieſt deſtroyeth ſouls.

Marriage of Prieſts allowed by Æneas Sylvius. Marriage was taken from Prieſts not without great reaſon; but with much greater reaſon it ought to be reſtored again.

The like ſentence to this he uttereth in his ſecond Book of the Council of Baſil before ſpecified, ſaying, Peradventure it were not the worſt, that the moſt part of Prieſts had their Wives; for many ſhould be ſaved in Prieſtly marriage, which now in unmarried Prieſthood are damned. The ſame Pius alſo, as Celius reporteth, diſſolved certain Orders of Nuns, of the Orders of Saint Briget and Saint Clare, bidding them to depart out, that they ſhould burn no more, not cover a Harlot under the Veſture of Religion.

This Pius, if he had brought ſo much piety and godlineſs as he brought learning unto his Popedom, had excelled many Popes that went before him.

It ſhall not be impertinent here to touch, what the ſaid Æneas, called Pius the Pope, writeth touching the peace of the Church, unto Gaſper Schlick, the Emperors Chancellor, in his 54*th* Epiſtle.

Ex Epiſt. 54. Pii. fecund. ad Gaſparum Schlick.

All Men do abhor and deteſt Schiſm. The way to remedy this evil Charles the French King hath ſhewed us both ſafe and brief, which is, that Princes or their Orators ſhould convent and aſſemble together in ſome common place, where they may conclude upon matters amongſt themſelves. To bring this to paſs, it were needful writings to be ſent again to all Kings and Princes, to ſend their Orators to Strawesborow, or to Conſtance, with their full authority, there to intreat of matters appertaining to the peace of the Church. Neither would it require ſo great expences; For aſmuch as we ſee the year before 300 Gilderns to be ſufficient. Conſtantine the Emperor beſtowed not much more in the Congregation of the Council of Nice. And this way could not be ſtopped; neither could the Pope or the Council withſtand it, or make excuſe, as though this might not eaſily be done without them. For why? The ſecular Princes may convent and aſſemble together, will they, nill they; and yet notwithſtanding unity may there be concluded; For he ſhall be an undoubted Pope, whom all Princes would obey. Neither do I ſee any of the Clergy ſo conſtant to death, which will ſuffer Martyrdom either for the one part or the other. All we lightly hold that Faith which our Princes hold; which if they would worſhip Idols, we would alſo do the ſame, and deny not only the Pope, but God alſo, if the ſecular Power ſtrain us thereunto, for charity is waxed cold, and all Faith is gone. Howſoever it be, let us all deſire and ſeek for peace; the which peace, whether it come by a Council, or by aſſembly of Princes, call it what you will, I care not, for we ſtand not upon the term, but upon the matter. Call bread, if you will, a ſtone, ſo you give it me to aſſwage my hunger. Whether you call it a Council or a Conventicle, or an Aſſembly, or a Congregation or a Synagogue, that is no matter, ſo that Schiſm may be excluded, and peace eſtabliſhed.

The Popes Clergy will not abide the fire, either for Prince or Pope.

Thus much out of the Epiſtle of Pius.

The breath of this peſtilent ſeat corrupteth all that ſit in it, whatſoever they were before.

By this it may appear, of what ſentence and mind this Pius was in the time of the Council of Baſil, before he was made Pope. But as our common proverb ſaith, honours change manners; ſo it happened with this Pius, who after he came once to be Pope, was much altered from what he was before. For when as before he preferred general Councils before the Pope, now being Pope, he did decree that no Man ſhould appeal from the high Biſhop of Rome to any general Council.

Æneas Sylvius, now puffed up with worldly pomp and glory, impugneth the truth which he did before both know and profeſs.

And likewiſe for Prieſts marriage, whereas before he thought it beſt to have their Wives reſtored, yet afterward he altered his mind otherwiſe, inſomuch that in his Book intreating of Germany, and there ſpeaking of the Noble City of Auguſt, by occaſion he inveighed againſt a certain Epiſtle of Hulderick once Biſhop of the ſaid City, written againſt the conſtitution of the ſingle life of Prieſts. Whereby it appeareth how the mind of this Pius was altered from that it was before. This Epiſtle of Hulderick is before expreſſed at large.

Diſcord between Pope Pius and the Archbiſhop of Mentz.

Here alſo might I touch ſomething concerning the diſcord betwixt this Æneas Sylvius and Diotherus, Archbiſhop of Mentz, and what diſcord was ſtirred up in Germany upon the ſame between Frederick the Palatine, and the Duke of Wittenberge, with others; by the occaſion whereof, beſides the ſlaughter of many, the City of Mentz, which was free before, loſt her freedom and became ſervile.

The cauſes of the diſcord betwixt Pope Pius and Diotherus were theſe.

Firſt, Becauſe that Diotherus would not conſent unto him in the impoſition of certain Tallages and Taxes within his Country.

Secondly, For that Diotherus would not be bound unto him, requiring that the ſaid Diotherus, being Prince Elector, ſhould not call the other Electors together without his licence, that is, without the licence of the Biſhop of Rome.

And Thirdly, Becauſe Diotherus would not permit to the Popes Legates, to convocate his Clergy together after their own luſt. This Pope Pius began his See, about the year of our Lord 1458.

Anno 1458. P. Paulus 2. Ex Stanilla. Ruthen. vide Cent. 8. Bal.

After this Pius Secundus ſucceeded Paulus Secundus, a Pope wholly ſet upon his Belly and ambition, and not ſo much void of all learning, as the hater of learned Men. This Paulus had a Daughter begotten in fornication, becauſe he ſaw her to be had in reproach, for that ſhe was gotten in fornication, began (as the Stories report) to repent him of the Law of the ſingle life of Prieſts, and went about to reform the ſame, had not death prevented him. Ex Staniſlao Rutheno.

After this Paulus came Sixtus the Fourth, which builded up in Rome a Stews of both kinds, getting thereby no ſmall revenews and rents unto the Church of Rome. This Pope amongſt his other Acts reduced the year of Jubile from the fiftieth unto the twenty fifth. He alſo inſtituted the Feaſt of the conception, and the preſentation of Mary and of Anna her Mother, and Joſeph. Alſo he Canonized Bonaventure and Saint Francis for Saints.

The Feaſt of the conception and preſervation of our Lady. Beads brought in.

By this Sixtus alſo were Beads brought in, and inſtituted to make our Ladies Pſalter, through the occaſion of one Alanus and his Order, whom Baptiſta maketh mention of in this verſe, Hi filo inſertis numerant ſua murmura Baccis. That is, Theſe men putting their Beads upon a ſtring, number their Prayers. This Sixtus the Pope made two and thrity Cardinals in his time, of whom Petrus Ruerius was the firſt, who for that time that he was Cardinal, which was but two years, ſpent in luxurious Riot,

Wesellus Groningensis The Pope licenseth the whole family of a certain Cardinal to play the Sodomites three Months in the year.

wasted and consumed two hundred thousand Florens, and was left 60000. in debt. Wesellus Groningensis, in a certain Treatise of his de indulgentiis papalibus, writing of this Pope Sixtus, reporteth this, That at the request of the foresaid Peter Cardinal, and of Hierom his Brother, the said Pope Sixtus permitted and granted unto the whole Family of the Cardinal of Saint Lucy, in the three hot Months of Summer, June, July, and August (a horrible thing to be spoken) free leave and liberty to use Sodomitry, with this clause, Fiat ut Petitur, That is, Be it as it is asked.

Pope Innocentius the Eighth. Eight Men and six Women condemned of Heresie by Pope Innocentius the Eighth.

Next after this Sixtus came Innocentius the Eighth, as rude, and as far from all learning, as his Predecessor was before him. Amongst the noble Facts of this Pope this was one, that in the Town of Polus apud Equicolos, he caused eight Men and six Women, with the Lord of the place, to be apprehended and taken, and judged for Hereticks, because that they said none of them was the Vicar of Christ which come after Peter, but they only which followed the poverty of Christ. Also he condemned of Heresie, George the King of Boheme, and deprived him of his Dignity and also of his Kingdom, and procured his whole stock to be utterly rejected and put down, giving his Kingdom to Matthias King of Pannonia

George King of Boheme condemned of Heresie.

Now from the Popes to descend to other estates, it remaineth likewise somewhat to write of the Emperors incident to this time, which matters and grievances of the Garmans, and also other Princes, first beginning with our troubles and mutations here at home, pertaining to the overthrow of this King Henry and his Seat, now following to be shewed. And briefly to contract long process of much tumult and business in a short Narration, here is to be remembred, which partly before was signified, how after the death of the Duke of Glocester, mischiefs came in by heaps upon the King and his Realm. For after the giving away of Angeou and Main, to the French-men, by the unfortunate Marriage of Queen Margaret above mentioned, the said French-men, perceiving now by the death of the Duke of Glocester, the stay and pillar of this Common-wealth to be decayed, and seeing moreover the Hearts of the Nobility amongst themselves to be divided, foreslacked no time, having such an open way into Normandy, and in short time they recovered the same, and also gat Gascoine, so that no more now remained to England of all the parts beyond the Sea, but only Calis. Neither yet did all the calamity of the Realm only rest in this: For the King now having lost his friendly Uncle, as the stay and staff of his age, which had brought him up so faithfully from his youth, was now thereby the more open to his enemies, and they more emboldned to set upon him; as appeared first by Jack Cade the Kentish Captain, who, encamping first on Blackheath, afterward aspired to London, and had the spoil thereof, the King being driven into Warwickshire. After the suppressing of Cade, ensued not long after the Duke of York, who, being accompanied with three Earls, set upon the King near to Saint Albans, where the King was taken in the field captive, and the Duke of York was by Parliament declared Protector, which was in the year of our Lord 1453. After this followed long division and mortal War between the two Houses of Lancaster and York, continuing many years. At length about the year of our Lord 1459, the Duke of York was slain in Battel by the Queen near to the Town of Wakefield, and with him also his Son Earl of Rutland. By the which Queen also shortly after, in the same year, were discomfited the Earl of Warwick, and Duke of Norfolk, to whom the keeping of the King was committed by the Duke of York, and so the Queen again delivered her Husband.

The Duke of York against Kiffs Henry.

{Anno 1459.}

After this Victory obtained, the Northern Men, advanced not a little in pride and courage, began to take upon them great attempts, not only to spoil and rob Churches, and religious Houses, and Villages, but also were fully intended, partly by themselves, partly by the inducement of their Lords and Captains, to sack, waste, and utterly to subvert the City of London, and to take the spoil thereof; and no doubt (saith my History) would have proceeded in their conceived greedy intent, had not the opportune favour of God provided a speedy remedy. For as these michiefs were in brewing, suddenly cometh the Noble Prince Edward unto London with a mighty Army, the seven and twentieth day of February, who was the Son and Heir to the Duke of York above mentioned, accompanyed with the Earl of Warwick, and divers more. King Henry in the mean time, with his Victory, went up to York; when as Edward being at London, caused there to be proclaimed certain Articles concerning his Title to the Crown of England, which was the second day of March.

The Northern Men intended the subversion of London. Ex historia manuscripta, cui titulus, Scala mundi.

{KING 1 Hen. 6.}

London rescued by Prince Edward.

Whereupon the next day following, the Lords both temporal and spiritual being assembled together, the said Articles were propounded, and also well approved. The fourth day of the said Month of March, after a solemn general procession (according to the blind superstition of those days) the Bishop of Exceter made a Sermon at Pauls Cross, wherein he commended and proved by manifold evidences, the Title of Prince Edward to be just and lawful, answering the same to all objections which might be made to the contrary.

This matter being thus discussed, Prince Edward, accompanied with the Lords spiritual and temporal, and with much concourse of people, rode the same day to Westminster Hall, and there by the full consent, as well of the Lords, as also by the voice of all the Commons, took his possession of the Crown, and was called King Edward the Fourth.

King Edward takes possession of the Crown.

These things thus accomplished at London, as to such a matter appertained, and preparation of Money sufficiently being ministred of the people and Commons, with most ready and willing minds, for the necessary furniture of his Wars; he with the Duke of Norfolk, and Earl of Warwick, and Lord Fauconbridge, in all speedy wise took his journey toward King Henry; who now being at York, and forsaken of the Londoners, had all his refuge only reposed in the Northern Men.

When King Edward with his Army had passed over the River of Trent, and was come near to Ferebridge, where also the Host of King Henry was not far off, upon Palm-Sunday, between Ferebridge and Tadcaster, both the Armies of the Southern and Northern Men joyned together in Battel. And although at the first beginning divers Horsemen of King Edwards side turned their backs, and spoiled the King of Carriage and Victuals; yet the couragious Prince with his Captains, little discouraged therewith, fiercely and manfully set on their adversaries. The which Battel on both sides was so cruelly fought, that in the same conflict were slain to the number, as is reported, beside Men of name, 30000 of the poor Commons. Notwithstanding, the Conquest fell on King Edwards part, so that King Henry having lost all, was forced to flie into Scotland, where also he gave up to the Scots the Town of Barwick, after he had Reigned eight and thirty years and a half.

The fierce and cruel battel between King Henry the sixth, and King Edward the fourth.

King Henry the sixth conquered.

Barwick given to the Scots, by King Henry the sixth.

The claim and title of the Duke of York, and after him of Edward his Son, put up to the Lords and Commons, whereby they challenged the Crown to the House of York, is thus in the Story of Scala mundi, word for word, as hereunder is contained.

Ex Scala mundi.

And thus much for the Reign of King Henry the Sixth, who now lacked his Uncle and Protector, Duke of Gloucester, about him. But commonly the lack of such friends is never felt before they be missed.

Leaden-Hall builded. In the time of this King was builded the House in London called Leaden-Hall, founded by one Simon Eyre, Maior once of the said City of London, An. 1445.

The College of Eaton and the Kings College in Cambridge founded. Moreover the said Henry the Sixth founded the College of Eaton, and another house, having then the title of St. Nicholas, in Cambridge, now called the Kings College. Ex Scala mundi.

In the Reign of this Henry the Sixth, it is not to be passed over in silence which we find noted in the Parliament Rolls, how that Lewis Archbishop of Rhoan, after the death of the late Bishop of Ely, had granted unto him by the Popes Bulls, during his life, all the profits of the said Bishoprick, by the name of the administrator of the said Bishoprick. Lewis the foresaid Archbishop sheweth his Bulls to the King, who utterly rejected his Bulls. Notwithstanding, for his service done in France, the King granted to him the administration aforesaid, the which to all intents, at the petition of the said Lewis, should be affirmed to be of as great force as though he were Bishop, touching profits, liberties and hability.

The King rejecteth the Popes Bulls.

Ex vitupe cod. sui in stitium, Nomina custodum &c. Et ex Fabiano. Neither again is here to be overpast a certain Tragical act done between Easter and Whitsuntide of a false Briton, Anno 1427. which murdered a good Widow in her Bed (who had brought him up of Alms, without Algat in the Suburbs of London) and bare away all that she had, and afterward he took succour of Holy Church at St. Georges in Southwark; but at the last he took the Cross and forswore the Kings Land. And as he went his way, it happened him to come by the same place where he had done that cursed deed; and Women of the same Parish came out with Stones and Channel-dung, and there made an end of him in the High-street, so that he went no further, notwithstanding the Constables and other Men also which had him under governance to conduct him forward; for there was a great company of them, so that they were not able to withstand them.

Example of Gods rod and judgment.

King Edward the Fourth.

ANNO 1461. King Edward the Fourth. King Edward, after his Conquest and Victory atchieved against King Henry, returned again to London, where, upon Vigil of St. Peter and Paul, being on Sunday, he was Crowned King of England, and Reigned twenty two years, albeit not without great disquietness, and much perturbation in his Reign.

Queen Margaret fled the Land. Queen Margaret, hearing how her Husband was fled into Scotland, was also faign to flie the Land, and went to her Father Duke of Angeou; from whence the next year following she returned again to renew War against King Edward, with small succor and less luck. For being encountred by the Earl of Warwick, about November she was driven to the Seas again, and by tempest of weather she was driven into Scotland.

ANN. 1462. K. Edward sitteth his own person in the Kings Bench judging. In this year we read that King Edward, in the cause of a certain Widow for rape, sate in his own person in Westminster-Hall upon his own Bench, discussing her cause. Ex Scala mundi.

ANN. 1463. King Henry the sixth again repulsed in the battel of Exham. The year following, King Henry, issuing out of Scotland with a sufficient power of Scots and Frenchmen, came into the North Country to recover the Crown, unto whom the Lord Radulph Percy, and Lord Radulph Gray flying from King Edward, did adjoyn themselves: But the Lord so disposing, King Henry with his power was repulsed in battel at Exham by the Lord Mountecute, having then the rule of the North; where the Duke of Somerset, Lord Hungerford, Lord Ros, with certain other were taken. The Lord Radulph Percy was slain, the residue fled, Albeit the History of Scala mundi, referreth this battel to the year 1464. the 15*th* day of May. In the which Month of May were beheaded the Duke of Somerset, Lord Hungerford, Lord Ros, Lord Philip Wentworth, Lord Thomas Hussy, Lord Tho. Findern, beside Twenty one other belonging to the retinue and houshold of King Henry the Sixth. Queen Margaret, finding no resting place here in England, took her progress again from whence she came, learning in her own Country to drink that Drink, which she her self had brewed here in England.

K. Henry 6th taken, arrested, and committed to the Tower. And not long after, the next year, An. 1465. on the day of St. Peter and Paul, King Henry being found and known in a Wood by one Cantlow (as they say) was arrested by the Earl of Warwick, and at last, of a King made prisoner in the Tower of London.

ANNO. 1466. In this mean time, King Edward (after the motion of Marriage for him being made; and first the Lady Margaret Sister to James the fourth King of Scots thought upon, but that motion taking no effect, afterward the Lady Elizabeth, Sister to Henry King of Castile, being intended; but she being under age, the Earl of Warwick turning then his legation and voyage to the French King Lewes the eleventh, to obtain Lady Bona, Daughter of the Duke of Savoy, and Sister to Carlot the French Queen, and obtained the same) had cast favour unto one Elizabeth Grey, Widow of Sir John Grey Knight, slain before in the battel of St. Albans, Daughter to the Dutches of Bedford, and Lord Rivers, and first went about to have her to his Concubine. But she as being unworthy (as she said) to be the Wife of such an high Personage, so thinking her self to be too good to be his Concubine, in such sort wan the Kings heart, that incontinent before the return of the Earl of Warwick, he married her; at the which marriage were no mo than only the Dutches of Bedford, two Gentlewomen, the Priest and Clerk. Upon this so hasty and unlucky marriage ensued no little trouble to the King, much bloodshed to the Realm, undoing almost to all her Kindred, and finally confusion to King Edwards two Sons, which both were declared afterward to be Bastards, and also deprived of their lives. For the Earl of Warwick, who had been the faithful friend and chief maintainer before of the King, at the hearing of this marriage, was therewith so grievously moved and chafed in his mind, that he never after sought any thing more, than how to work displeasure to the King, and to put him beside his Cushion. And although for a time he dissembled his wrathful mood, till he might spie a time convenient, and a world to set forward his purpose, at last finding occasion somewhat serving to his mind, he breaketh his heart to his two Brethren, to wit, the Marquess Mountecute, and the Archbishop of York, conspiring with them how to bring his purpose about. Then thought he also to prove a far off the mind of the Duke of Clarence, King Edwards Brother, and likewise obtained him, giving also to him his Daughter in Marriage.

The King sudden marriage with Queen Elizabeth.

Conspiracy against King Edward.

This matter being thus prepared against the King, the first flame of his conspiracy began to appear in the North Country. Where the Northern Men in short space gathering themselves in an open Rebellion, and finding Captains of their wicked purpoſe, came down from York toward London. Againſt whom was appointed by the King, W. Lord Herbert Earl of Pembroke, with the Lord Stafford, and certain other Captains to encounter. The Yorkſhire men giving the Overthrow firſt to the Lord Stafford, then to the Earl of Pembroke, and his Company of Welchmen at Banbury Field, at laſt joyning together with the Army of the Earl of Warwick, and the Duke of Clarence, in the dead of the night ſecretly ſtealing on the Kings Field at Wolney by Warwick, killed the Watch, and took the King Priſoner, who firſt being in the Caſtle of Warwick, then was conveyed by night to Midleham Caſtle in Yorkſhire, under the cuſtody of the Archbiſhop of York, where he having looſe keeping, and liberty to go on hunting, meeting with Sir William Stanley, Sir Thomas of Borough, and other his Friends, was too good for his Keepers, and eſcaped the hands of his Enemies, and ſo came to York, where he was well received; from thence to Lancaſter, where he met with the Lord Haſting his Chamberlain, well accompanied, by whoſe help he came ſafe to London.

King Edward taken Priſoner by the Earl of Warwick.

After this tumult, when Reconciliation could not come to perfect Peace and Unity, although much labour was made by the Nobility, the Earl of Warwick raiſeth up a new War in Lincolnſhire, the Captain whereof was Sir Robert Wells Knight, who ſhortly after being taken in battel with his Father, and Sir Thomas Duncock, were beheaded, the reſidue caſting away their Coats, ran away and fled, giving the name of the Field, called Lofecoat-Field.

The Rebellion in Lincolnſhire repreſſed.

The Earl of Warwick after this, put out of comfort and hope to prevail at home, fled out of England, Anno 1470. firſt to Calice, then to Lewis the French King, accompanied with the Duke of Clarence. The fame of the Earl of Warwick and of his famous Acts was at that time in great admiration above meaſure, and ſo highly favoured, that both in England and France all men were glad to behold his Perſonage. Wherefore the coming of this Earl, and of the Duke of Clarence, was not a little grateful to the French King, and no leſs opportune to Queen Margaret, King Henries Wife, and Prince Edward her Son, who alſo came to the French Court to meet and confer together touching their Affairs; where a League between them was concluded, and moreover a marriage between Edward Prince of Wales, and Anne the ſecond Daughter of the Earl of Warwick was wrought. Thus all things falling luckily upon the Earls part, beſide the large Offers and great Promiſes made by the French King, on the beſt manner to ſet forward their purpoſe, the Earl having alſo intelligence by Letters, that the hearts almoſt of all men went with him, and longed ſore for his preſence, ſo that there lacked now but only haſte with all ſpeed poſſible to return; he with the Duke of Clarence, well fortified with the French Navy, ſet forward toward England; for ſo was it between them before decreed, that they two ſhould prove the firſt venture, and then Queen Margaret, with Prince Edward her Son, ſhould follow after. The arrival of the Earl was not ſoon heard of at Dartmouth in Devonſhire, but great concourſe of people by thouſands went to him from all quarters to receive and welcome him; who immediately made Proclamation in the name of King Henry the Sixth, charging all men, able to bear Armor, to prepare themſelves to fight againſt Edward Duke of York, Uſurper of the Crown. Here lacked no friends, ſtrength of men, furniture, nor policy convenient for ſuch a matter.

The Earl of Warwick and the Duke of Clarence flee into France.

The Earl of Warwick and the Duke of Clarence return into England.

The receiving of the Earl of Warwick into England.

King Henry again proclaimed King.

When King Edward (who before not paſſing for the matter, nor ſeeking how either to have ſtopped his landing, or elſe ſtraightways to have encountred with him, before the gathering of his Friends, but paſſing forth the time in Hunting, in Hawking, in all Pleaſure and Dalliance) had knowledge what great reſort of multitudes inceſſantly more repaired and more daily about the Earl and the Duke, he began now to provide for remedy, when it was too late. Who truſting too much to his Friends, and Fortune before, did now right well perceive what a variable and inconſtant thing the people is, and eſpecially here of England, whoſe nature is never to be content long with the preſent ſtate, but always delighting in News, ſeeketh new variety of changes, either envying that which ſtandeth, or elſe pitying that which is fallen. Which inconſtant mutability of the light people, changing with the Wind, and wavering with the Reed, did well appear in the courſe of this Kings ſtory. For he, through the favour of the people when he was down, was exalted; now being exalted of the ſame was forſaken. Whereby this is to be noted of all Princes, that as there is nothing in this mutable world firm and ſtable; ſo there is no truſt nor aſſurance to be made, but only in the favour of God, and in the promiſes of his Word, only in Chriſt his Son, whoſe only Kingdom ſhall never have end, nor is ſubject to any mutation.

The inconſtant levity of the people of England.

Theſe things thus paſſing on in England on the Earls ſide againſt King Edward, he accompanied with the Duke of Gloceſter his Brother, and the Lord Haſtings, who had married the Earl of Warwicks Siſter, and yet was never untrue to the King his Maſter; and the Lord Scales, Brother to the Queen, ſent abroad to all his truſty Friends for furniture of able Souldiers for defence of his perſon, to withſtand his Enemies. When little reſcue and few in effect would come, the King himſelf ſo deſtitute, departed to Lincolnſhire, where he perceiving his Enemies daily to increaſe upon him, and all the Countries about to be in a roar, making fires, and ſinging Songs crying, King Henry, King Henry, a Warwick a Warwick, and hearing moreover his Enemies the Lancaſtrians to be within half a days journey of him, was adviſed by his Friends to fly over the Sea to the Duke of Burgoyne, which not long before had married King Edwards Siſter.

The conſtant heart and truth of the Lord Haſtings.

King Edward forſaken of his people in his need.

The weak ſtate of King Edward.

Here might be thought, by the common judgment and policy of man, peradventure that King Edward, as he had in his hands the life of King Henry, of his Queen and Prince, ſo if he had diſpatched them out of the way, when as he might, he had not fallen into this miſery: but becauſe he took not the vantage, which time rather than godly reaſon gave him, therefore that ſparing pity of his, turned now to his confuſion and ruine. And certes I ſuppoſe no leſs, but if the ſame caſe had faln in theſe our pitileſs days, in which charity now waxeth utterly cold, and humanity is almoſt forgotten, the occaſion of ſuch a time ſhould not be ſo neglected. But let us here note and learn, how godly ſimplicity always in the end of things gaineth more than mans policy, forſomuch as man worketh with the one, but God worketh with the other.

Whether godly ſimplicity, or mans policy be ſtronger.

And ſo far is it off, that event and ſucceſs of things governed by mans adviſed policy, or unadviſed affection in this world, that that is judged to be weaker which flouriſheth in man, than that which is caſt down in the Lord; as in the double caſe of both theſe Kings may well appear. And firſt let us conſider the caſe of King Edward, who, being ſo beſet and compaſſed with evils and diſtreſſes on every ſide, firſt was compelled to take the Waſhes between Lincolnſhire and Linne (which was no leſs dangerous to his life, than it was unſeemly for his ſtate.) Being come to Linne, in what peril was he there, through the doubtful mutability of the Townſmen, if he had been known to his Enemies? And how could he be but known, if had tarried any ſpace? But though men and friends forſook him, yet the mercy of God, not forſaking the life of him which ſhewed mercy unto other, ſo provided, that at the ſame preſent there was an Engliſh Ship, and two Hulks of Holland ready to their journey. Thus King Edward without proviſion, without bag or baggage, without cloth-ſack or mail, without ſtore of money, without raiment, ſave only apparel for War; alſo without all friends, except only his Brother the Duke of Gloceſter, the Lord Scales, and Lord Haſtings; with a few other truſty friends, to the number of ſeven or eight hundred perſons, took Shipping toward Holland; at which time he was in no leſs jeopardy almoſt on the Sea, than he was on the Land. For certain Eaſterlings having many Ships of War, which lay roving the ſame time on the Sea, and had done much damage the year before, as well to the Engliſh Merchants as to the French Nation, ſpying the Kings Ship, with ſeven or eight gallant Ships, made Sail after the King and his Company. The Kings Ship was good of Saile, and gate ſome ground, albeit not much, of the Eaſterlings, that ſhe came to the Coaſt of Holland before Alquemare, and there caſt Anker; for otherwiſe, being an ebbing-water, they could not enter the Haven. The Eaſterlings with their great Ships approached as near as they could poſſibly come for the low water, purpoſing at the Flood to obtain their prey, and ſo were like to do, if the Lord had not there alſo pro-provided Mounſieur de Grounture, Governor for Duke Charles in Holland, at that ſeaſon to be perſonally preſent in the Town of Alquemare, who, hearing of the Jeopardy of the King being there at Anker, prohibited the Eaſterlings, on pain of death, to meddle with any Engliſhmen, which were the Dukes Friends and Allies.

God again providèth.

King Edward delivered from the Eaſterlings.

Thus King Edward well chaſtiſed of God for his wantonneſs, both by Sea and Land, but not utterly given over from his protection, eſcaping ſo many hard chances, was ſet on land with his company; who there well refreſhed, and newly apparelled, were conducted to Hage.

Charles Duke of Burgoyne, King Edwards Brother in law.

Duke Charles, at the hearing of the unproſperous caſe and condition of King Edward his Brother in law, was greatly amazed and perplexed in himſelf, much caſting and doubting what he ſhould do. For being then in war with the French King, he could not well provoke the Engliſh Nation againſt him, without his manifeſt grievance and decay; neither yet could he, without great ſhame and obloquie, leave the King his Brother in that neceſſity. Notwithſtanding, ſo he demeaned himſelf through fair ſpeech, pretending to the Engliſhmen to joyn part with the houſe of Lancaſter, being himſelf partly deſcended of the ſame Family by his Grandmothers ſide; that he both was his own Friend openly, and the Kings Friend covertly, pretending that he did not, and doing that he pretended not.

When tydings was ſpread in England of King Edwards flying, innumerable people of all hands reſorted to the Earl of Warwick, to take his part againſt King Edward, a few only except of his conſtant Friends which took Sanctuary. Amongſt whom was alſo Elizabeth his wife, who, deſperate almoſt of all comfort, took alſo Sanctuary at Weſtminſter, where ſhe in great penury forſaken was delivered of a fair Son called Edward, which without all pomp was baptized like another poor womans Child, the Godfathers being the Abbot and Prior of Weſtminſter, the Godmother was the Lady Scroope.

Queen Elizabeth taketh Sanctuary.

Prince Edward born in Sanctuary

To make the ſtory ſhort, the Earl of Warwick having now brought all things to his appetite, upon the twelfth day of October rode to the Tower, which was then delivered to him, and there took King Henry out of the Ward, and placed him in the Kings Lodging. The next and twentieth day of the ſame month, the Duke of Clarence accompanied with the Earls of Warwick, Shrewſbury, and the Lord Stanley, with a great company, brought him in a long Gown of blew Velvet through the high Streets of London, firſt to Pauls Church to offer, then to the Biſhops Palace of London, and there he reſumed again to the Crown Royal, Anno 1471. which he did not long enjoy.

King Henry the Sixth brought out of the Tower.

King Henry reſtored again to his Kingdom.

After this followed a Parliament, in the which King Edward with all his Partakers were judged Traytors. Queen Margaret with her Son Prince Edward, all this while was tarrying for a fair Wind, thinking long belike till ſhe came to an evil Bargain, as it proved after. For King Edward within ſix months after his departure out of England unto the Duke of Burgoyne, whether by Letters from his Friends ſollicitate, or whether by his adventurous courage incited, made inſtant ſuit to Duke Charles his Brother, to reſcue him with ſuch Power as he would beſtow upon him; for he was fully reſolved to defer the matter, and to protract the time no longer.

King Edward returneth again into England.

The Duke camped in double fear in ſuch a dangerous caſe, notwithſtanding overcome by nature and affinity, ſecretly cauſed to be delivered to him 50000 Florence, and further cauſed four great Ships to be appointed for him in a Haven in Zeland, where it was free for all men to come. Alſo the ſame Duke had for him hired fourteen Ships of the Eaſterlings well appointed, taking bond of them to ſerve him truly till he were landed in England, and fifteen days after.

King Edward only with 3000 Souldiers cometh to Ravenſpur, Yenſport.

Thus King Edward being furniſhed but only with two thouſand men of War, with more luck than hope to ſpeed, ſped his Voyage into England, and landed at Ravenſpur in the Coaſt of Yorkſhire. Although there was no way for the King with ſuch a ſmall Company of Souldiers to do any good, yet, to uſe policy where ſtrength did lack, firſt he ſent forth certain light horſemen to prove the Country on every ſide, with perſwaſions, to ſee whether the Uplandiſh people would be ſtirred to take King Edwards part. Perceiving that it would not be, King Edward flieth to his ſhifts, diſſembling his purpoſe to be, not to claim the Crown and Kingdom, but only to claim the Dutchy of York, which was his own Title, and cauſed the ſame to be publiſhed. This being notified to the people, that he deſired no more but only his juſt Patrimony and lineal Inheritance, they began to be moved with mercy and compaſſion towards him, either to favour him or not to reſiſt him; and ſo journeying toward York, he came to Beverley. The Marquiſs Mountacute, Brother to the Earl of Warwick, was then at Pomfret, to whom the Earl had ſent ſtraight charge, with all expedition to ſet upon him, or elſe to ſtop his paſſage; and likewiſe to the Citizens of York and all Yorkſhire, to ſhut their Gates and take Armor againſt him. King Edward being in theſe ſtraits, proceeded notwithſtanding near to York without reſiſtance, where he required of the Citizens to be admitted into their City. But ſo ſtood the caſe then, that they durſt not grant unto him, but on the contrary ſent him word to approach no nearer, as he loved his own ſafeguard. The deſolate King was here driven to a narrow ſtrait, who neither could retire back, for the opinion of the Country and loſs of his cauſe: neither could go further, for the preſent danger of the City. Wherefore uſing the ſame policy as before, with lovely words and gentle ſpeech he deſired the Meſſengers to declare unto the Citizens, that his coming was not to demand the Realm of England, or the Title of the ſame, but only the Dutchy of York, his old Inheritance; and therefore determined to ſet forward, neither with Army nor Weapon. The Meſſengers were not ſo ſoon within the Gates, but he was at the Gates in a manner as ſoon as they.

King Edward cometh to York.

King Edward repelled by the Citizens of York.

King Edward changeth his Title.

The gentle and fair words of King Edward.

The Citizens hearing his courteous Anſwer, and that he intended nothing to the prejudice of the King, nor of the Realm, were ſomething mitigated toward him, and began to commune with him from the Walls, willing him to withdraw his Power to ſome other place, and they ſhould be the more ready to aid him, at leaſt he ſhould have no damage by them.

Notwithſtanding he again uſed ſuch lowly Language, and delivered ſo fair ſpeech unto them, intreating them ſo courteouſly, and ſaluting the Aldermen by their names, requiring at their hands no more but only his own Town; whereof he had the name and title, that at length the Citizens, after long talk and debating upon the matter, partly alſo enticed with fair and large promiſes, fell to this convention, that if he would ſwear to be true to King Henry, and gentle in entertaining his Citizens, they would receive him into the City.

Two conditions put to King Edward.

This being concluded, the next morning at the entring of the Gate, a Prieſt was ready to ſay Maſs, in the which after the receiving of the Sacrament the King received a ſolemn Oath to obſerve the two Articles afore agreed. By reaſon of which ſo raſhly made, and as ſhortly broken, and not long after puniſhed (as it may well be thought) in his poſterity, he obtained the City of York. Where he, in ſhort time forgetting his Oath, to make all ſure, ſet in Garriſons of armed Souldiers. Furthermore, perceiving all things to be quiet, and no ſtir to be made againſt him, he thought to foreſlack no opportunity of time, and ſo made forward toward London, leaving by the way the Marquiſs Mountacute, which lay then with his Army at Pomfret, on the right hand, not fully four miles diſtant from his Camp: and ſo returning to the high-way again, he went forward without any ſtirring to the Town of Nottingham; where came to him Sir William Parre, Sir Thomas of Borough, Sir Thomas Mountgomery, and divers elſe of his aſſured Friends, with their Aids, which cauſed him by a Proclamation to ſtand to his own Title of King Edward the Fourth, ſaying, That they would ſerve no man but a King: At the ſame hereof being blown abroad as the Citizens of York were not a little offended (and that worthily) ſo from other Towns and Cities, Lords and Noble men began to fall unto him, thinking with themſelves that the Marquiſs Mountacute either favoured his Cauſe, or was afraid to encounter with the man. Howſoever it was, King Edward, being now more fully furniſhed at all points, came to the Town of Leiceſter, and there hearing that the Earl of Warwick, accompanied with the Earl of Oxford were together at Warwick with a great Power, minding to ſet on the Earl, he removed from thence his Army, hoping to give him battel. The Duke of Clarence in

The diſſembling policie of King Edward.

in the mean time about London had levied a great Hoſt coming toward the Earl of Warwick, as he was by the Earl appointed. But when the Earl ſaw the Duke to linger the time, he began to ſuſpect (as it fell out indeed) that he was altered to his Brethrens part. The King advancing forward his Hoſt, came to Warwick, where he found all the people departed. From thence he moved toward Coventry, where the Earl was; unto whom the next day after he boldly offered battel. But the Earl, expecting the Duke of Clarence his coming, kept him within the Walls. All this made for the King. For he hearing that his Brother the Duke of Clarence was not far off, coming toward him with a great Army, raiſed his Camp, and made toward him, either to entreat or elſe to encounter with his Brother. When each Hoſt was in ſight of the other, Richard Duke of Gloceſter, Brother to them both, as Arbiter between them, firſt rode to the one, then to the other. Whether all this was for a face of a matter made, it is uncertain. But hereby both the Brethren, laying all Army and weapon aſide, firſt lovingly and familiarly communed; after that, brotherly and naturally joyned together. And that fraternal Amity by Proclamation alſo was ratified, and put out of all ſuſpition.

King Edward cometh to Warwick.

The Earl of Warwick flyeth to Coventry.

The Duke of Clarence cometh with a great Army.

Concord of Brethren.

The Earl of Warwick refuſeth to be reconciled.

Then was it agreed between the three Brethren to attempt the Earl of Warwick, if he likewiſe would be reconciled; but he crying out ſhame upon the Duke of Clarence, ſtood at utter defiance: From thence King Edward ſo ſtrongly furniſhed, and daily increaſing, taketh his way to London. Where, after it was known that the Duke of Clarence was come to his Brethren, much fear fell upon the Londoners, caſting with themſelves what was beſt to do. The ſuddenneſs of time permitted no long conſultation. There was at London the ſame time the Archbiſhop of York, Brother to the Earl of Warwick, and the Duke of Somerſet, with other of King Henries Council, to whom the Earl had ſent in Commandment a little before, knowing the weakneſs of the City, that they ſhould keep the City from their Enemies two or three days, and he would follow with all poſſible ſpeed with a puiſſant Army, who, according to their commandment, defended the City with all their power, but yet to little purpoſe. For the Citizens conſulting with themſelves for their own moſt indemnity, having no Walls to defend them, thought beſt to take that way which ſeemed to them moſt ſure and ſafe, and therefore concluded to take part with King Edward. This was not ſo ſoon known abroad, but the Commonalty ran out by heaps to meet King Edward, and to ſalute him as their King. Whereupon the Duke of Somerſet, with other of King Henries Council, hearing thereof, and wondering at the ſudden change of the World, to ſhift for themſelves, fled away and left there King Henry alone. Who, the ſame day being cauſed by the Archbiſhop of York to ride about London like a King, was before night made Captive, and reduced again to the Tower.

King Edward cometh to London. Londoners take part with King Edward.

King Henries Counſellors fly away.

King Henry again taken and committed to priſon.

It was not long after theſe things thus done at London, but the coming of the Earl of Warwick was heard of; who, thinking to prevent miſchiefs with making ſpeed, came a little too late and miſſed of his purpoſe. In the Earls Army were John Duke of Exceter, Edmund Earl of Somerſet, John Earl of Oxford, and Marqueſs Mountacute, the Earls Brother. The Earl had now paſſed a great part of his Journey, when he hearing news of the World ſo changed, and of the Captivity of King Henry, was not a little thereat appalled in his mind; wherefore he ſtayed with his Army at S. Albans, to ſee what way further to take. And forſomuch as there was no other remedy, but either he muſt yield, or one conflict muſt finiſh the matter, he removed to Barnet ten miles from S. Albans.

The Earl of Warwick cometh to Barnet.

Againſt him ſet forth King Edward, well appointed with a ſtrong Army of picked and able perſons, with Artillery, Engins and Inſtruments meet for the purpoſe; bringing with him alſo King Henry. On Eaſter even he came to Barnet, and there he embattelled himſelf. In the morning upon Eaſter-day the battel began, and fiercely continued almoſt till noon, with murder on each ſide, much doubtful till both parts were almoſt weary with fighting and murdering. King Edward then deſirous to ſee an end, off or on, with a great crew of new freſh Souldiers ſet upon his wearied enemies. Where the Earls men, enouraged with words of their Captain, ſtoutly fought, but they ſore wounded and wearied could not long hold out. The Earl, ruſhing into the midſt of his Enemies, ventured ſo far, that he could not be reſcued; where he was ſtricken down and ſlain, and there lay he. Marqueſs Montacute thinking to ſuccour his Brother, whom he ſaw to be in great jeopardy, was likewiſe overthrown and ſlain. After that Richard Nevil, Earl of Warwick, and his Brother were gone, the reſt fled, and many were taken. The number of them which were in this Field ſlain, are judged about ten thouſand, as Polydore Virgil reciteth. Fabian numbreth of them that were ſlain but fifteen hundred. The Duke of Somerſet and Earl of Oxford, thinking to fly to Scotland, returned to Jaſper Earl of Pembroke in Wales. The Duke of Exceſter, hardly eſcaped to Weſtminſter, and there took Sanctuary. For the death of the Earl of Warwick, the King was not ſo glad, as he was ſorry for the Marqueſs of Mountacute, whom he took to be his Friend. The Corps of theſe two were brought to the Church of Pauls, where they lay open in two Coffins two days, and then were interred. Ex Polyd. & aliis.

The Earl of Warwick and his Brother ſlain.

In the narration of this Hiſtory Polydore Virgil, whom Hall followeth word for word, doth ſome deal differ from Robert Fabian. Neither do I doubt but both theſe had their Authors by whom they were directed. Notwithſtanding this I marvel, that Polydore, writing of ſo many things which he never ſaw, doth not vouchſafe, to cite unto us thoſe Writers of whom he borrowed. And more do I marvel or rather lament, if it be true that I have heard, that he not only nameth no Author unto us, but alſo burned an heap of our Engliſh ſtories unknown, after the finiſhing of his, in the days of King Henry the Eighth. But now to our Text again.

Difference between Polydore and Fabian.

Hall follower of Polydore.

Polydore is ſaid to have burned a number of our Engliſh Writers.

All this while yet Queen Margaret, with young Prince Edward her Son, was ſcarce come over, being long let with contrary Winds; who at length in the month of April arrived at Waymouth in Dorſetſhire, and hearing the ſorrowful tydings of theſe things lately happened to her Husband, and to the Earl of Warwick and his Brother, and of the proſperous ſucceſs of King Edward, was ſo diſmayed, diſquieted, and pierced with ſorrow, ſeeing all things contrary to her expectation, ſo to frame againſt her, that ſhe feared and took on with her ſelf, lamenting her Husband, bewailing her Son, curſing her coming, and crying out of Fortune, as though blind Fortune were ſhe that governeth times and tides (rewarding juſt puniſhments to unjuſt deſervings of men) and not the ſecret Power and terrible Juſtice of Almighty God. Such was then the impatience of that Queen, being not able to bear the vehemency of her paſſion, (who rather ſhould have ſorrowed the dolorous death of Duke Humfrey, whom before ſhe neglected, but now ſhe lacked) that her ſenſes failed, her ſpirits were taken, her ſpeech decayed, and life almoſt gone, ſhe fell to the ground, as one that would rather die than live. In this deſolate caſe Queen Margaret learning now to know her Friends from her Foes, when it was too late, fraught full of heavineſs, without ſolace or hope of remedy, ſhe with her Son and her Company departed for the next Refuge, to a Monaſtery of Monks called Beauly in Hampſhire, there to take Sanctuary and Priviledge of the Houſe.

Yet all hearts were not ſound nor ſubdued in England, eſpecially Edmund Duke of Somerſet, with Lord John his Brother, Thomas Courtney Earl of Devonſhire, Jaſper Earl of Pembroke, Lord Wenlock John Longſcrother, being Prior of the Knights of Rodes in Saint Johns. Theſe hearing of the Queens return, with ſpeed reſorted to her; by whom ſhe being ſomewhat quickned in her ſpirits, and animated to War, began to take ſome heart, and to follow their counſel; which was, in all the hot haſte, to renew War againſt King Edward, being now unprovided, by reaſon his Army was now diſperſed, and chiefeſt of his Souldiers waſted. Here great hope of Victory was ſhewed, great Promiſes made. Although the Queens mind was, being more careful for the young Prince than for her ſelf, to ſend him over into France, before ſome proof or trial made; yet following the contrary counſel of them, and partly cut off by ſhorneſs of time, which required haſte, ſhe began with all Expedition to gather their Power. Likewiſe Jaſper Earl of Pembroke poſted into Wales to do the ſame.

Queen Margaret moved by her friends to renew wars againſt King Edward.

King

KING *Edw.*4

King Edward having Intelligence of all theſe doings, firſt ſendeth out certain light Horſemen, to eſpy abroad through the Weſt parts what ways his Enemies did take. In the mean time he, uſing all celerity to meet them before they came to London, gathered a power, ſuch as he could make about London, and firſt cometh to Abingdon, from thence to Marlbridge, hearing that the Queen was at Bathe, thinking to encounter with them, before they diverted into Wales to the Earl of Pembroke, whither he thought (as they indeed intended) that they would take. But the Queen, underſtanding the King to be ſo nigh, removeth from Bathe to Briſtow, ſending word in the mean while to the Citizens of Gloceſter, that they would grant her leave, ſafely to paſs by their City. Which when it could not be obtained, with her Army ſhe departed from Briſtow to Tewkesbury; where the Duke of Somerſet, knowing King Edward to be at hand at his very back, willed the Queen there to ſtay, and in no wiſe to fly backward, for certain doubts that might be caſt: Although this counſel was againſt the conſent of many other Captains, who thought it beſt rather to draw aſide, while the Earl of Pembroke with his Army were with them aſſociate; yet the mind of the Duke prevailed, the place was prefixed, the Field pitched, the time of battel came, the King was looked for; who being within one mile of Tewkesbury, with like induſtry and policy, as his Enemies had done, diſpoſed his Army likewiſe in their array. The celerity of the King, taking the time, was to him great advantage; who otherwiſe, if he had deferred till he had conjoyned with the Earl of Pembroke, had put the matter in great hazzard. Such a matter it is to take a thing in time.

King Edward warreth againſt Queen Margaret.

Queen Margaret debarred from Gloceſter.

The battel of Tewkesbury.

A great matter to take a thing in time.

Of this battel Hall thus reporteth, adding more than Polydore, that the Duke of Somerſet, although he was ſtrongly intrenched, yet through the occaſion or policy of the Duke of Gloceſter, which had the fore-ward of the Kings part, a little reculing back, followed the chaſe, ſuppoſing that the Lord Wenlock, who had the middle-ward, would have followed hard at his back. The Duke of Gloceſter, whether for ſhame rather than of policy, eſpying his advantage, ſuddenly turned face to his enemies. Whereupon the contrary part was eſtſoons diſcomfited, and ſo much the more, becauſe they were ſeparated from their company. The Duke of Somerſet not a little agrieved, at this ſo unfortunate a caſe, returneth to the middle-ward, where he ſeeing the Lord Wenlock abiding ſtill, revileth him, and calleth him Traytor, and with his Ax ſtriketh the brains out of his head.

Thus much addeth Hall beſides Polydore; but ſheweth not his Author where he had it. Polydore, writing of this Conflict, writeth no more but this, that the Queens Army being overſet with the number and multitude of their Enemies, and ſhe having no freſh Souldiers to furniſh the Field, was at laſt overmatched, and for the moſt part ſlain or taken. In which battel were named to be ſlain, the Earl of Devonſhire, the Lord Wenlock, Lord John Duke of Somerſet his Brother, beſides other. Among them that were taken was Queen Margaret, found in her Chariot almoſt dead for ſorrow, Prince Edward, Edmund Duke of Somerſet, John Prior of Saint Johns, with twenty other Knights; all which were beheaded within two days after, the Queen only and the young Prince excepted. Which Prince Edward being then brought to the Kings preſence, it was demanded of him how he durſt be ſo bold to ſtand in battel againſt him. To this Edward Hall addeth more, and ſaith, That after the Field was finiſhed the King made Proclamation, That whoſoever would bring Prince Edward to him, ſhould have Annuity of an hundred pound during his life, and the Princes life ſhould be ſaved. Whereupon Sir Richard Creſtes, not miſtruſting the Kings promiſe, brought forth his Priſoner, &c. And ſo the King demanding of the Prince (as is ſaid) how he durſt ſo preſumptuouſly enter this Realm with his Banner diſplayed againſt him, he anſwered, ſaying, That he came to recover his Fathers Kingdom and Inheritance, from his Grandfather and Father to him deſcending; whereat (ſaid Polydore) the King with his hand diſdainfully thruſt him from him. Other ſay, that the King ſtruck him on the face with his Gauntlet.

Queen Margaret taken in battel.

The ſtout anſwer of the Prince to the King.

At the ſpeaking of theſe words was preſent George Duke of Clarence, Richard Duke of Gloceſter, and the Earl Lord William Haſtings. Who upon the ſame uncourteouſly falling upon the Prince, did ſlay him. Queen Margaret, being brought Priſoner to London, was afterward ranſomed of her Father Duke of Angeou, for a great ſum of money which he borrowed of the French King, and for the payment thereof was fain to yield unto him the Title of the Kingdom of Sicily and Naples, &c. King Edward for theſe proſperous Wars rendred to God his hearty thanks, and cauſed publickly through his Realm ſolemn Proceſſions to be kept three days together. Anno 1471.

The ſame year, and about the ſame time, upon the Aſcenſion-even, King Henry, being Priſoner in the Tower, departed, after he had raigned in all thirty eight years, and ſix months. Polydore and Hall following him, affirm that he was ſlain with a Dagger by Richard Duke of Gloceſter, the Kings Brother, for the more quiet and ſafeguard of the King his Brother. In the Hiſtory, intituled, Scala mundi, I find theſe words, Quod in turri, in vigilia aſcenſionis Dominicæ, ibidem feliciter moriens, per Thameſiam navicula uſque ad Abbatiam de Cherteſey deductus, ibi ſepultus eſt; That is, That King Henry being in the Tower, upon the Aſcenſion-even, there happily or quietly departing, was brought by Thames in a Boat to the Abbey of Cherteſey, and there buried.

King Henry buried at Cherteſey.

Polydore, after he hath deſcribed the Vertues of this King, recordeth that King Henry the Seventh did afterward tranſlate the Corps of him from Cherteſey to Windſor, and addeth moreover, that by him certain Miracles were wrought. For the which cauſe the ſaid King Henry the Seventh (ſaith he) laboured with Pope Julius, to have him canonized for a Saint, but the death of the King was the let why that matter proceeded not. Edward Hall, writing of this matter, addeth more, declaring the cauſe, why King Henries ſainting went not forward, to be this; For that the Fees of canonizing of a King were of ſo great a quantity at Rome (more than of another, Biſhop or Prelate) that the ſaid King thought it better to keep the money in his Cheſts, than with the impoveriſhing of the Realm to buy ſo dear and pay ſo much for a new Holy-day of S. Henry in the Kalender, &c. Ex Hallo. Which if it be true, it might be replied then to Pope Julius, that if Popes be higher than Kings in the Earth, and eſpecially in Heaven, why then is a Pope-Saint ſo cheap in the Market-place of Rome, and a King-Saint ſo dear? Again, if the valuation of things in all Markets and Burſes be according to the price and dignity of the thing that is bought; what reaſon is it, ſeeing the ſainting of a King beareth a bigger ſale than the ſainting of any Pope in Heaven, but that Kings ſhould be above Popes alſo upon the Earth? Sed extra jocum, as I do not doubt, but that King Henry was a good and a quiet Prince, if he had not otherwiſe been abuſed by ſome; ſo touching the ruine of his Houſe, I think not contrary, but it came not without the juſt appointment of the Lord, either for that the Henries of Lancaſters houſe were ſuch Enemies to Gods people, and for the burning of the Lord Cobham and many other; or elſe for the unjuſt diſplacing of King Richard the Second; or elſe thirdly, for the cruel ſlaughter of Humfrey the good Duke of Gloceſter his Uncle; whereof ſufficiently hath been ſaid before.

During the time of theſe doings, being about the year of our Lord, 1465. there was here in England a certain Frier Carmelite, who about the term of Michael the Archangel preached at Pauls in London, That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, being here in this preſent World, was in poverty, and did beg. To whoſe Opinion and Doctrine the Provincial of that Order ſeemed alſo to incline, defending the ſame both in his reading and preaching, with other Doctors more and Brethren of the ſame Order; unto whom alſo adjoyned certain of the Jacobites; and ſtiffly did take their parts. On the contrary ſide, many Doctors and alſo Lawyers, both in their publick Lectures and preaching, to the uttermoſt of their cunning did withſtand their aſſertion, as being a thing moſt peſtiferous in the Church to be heard. Such a bitter contention was among them, that the Defendant part was driven for a while to keep ſilence. Much like to thoſe times I might well reſemble theſe our days now preſent, with our tumultuous contention of Forms and Faſhions of Garments.

A ſore Hereſie preached at Pauls Croſs.

Contention in the Church whether Chriſt was a Beggar or not.

Times compared.

But

But I put my ſelf here in Pythagoras School, and keep ſilence with theſe Friers. In the ſtory moreover it followeth, that this beggerly queſtion of the begging-Friers, whether Chriſt did beg or no, went ſo far, that at length it came to the Popes ears, Paulus 2. who was no beggar ye may be ſure. After that the fame of this Doctrine mounting over the Alpes, came flying to the Court of Rome, which was about the Aſſumption of the Virgin Mary, the year next following, Anno 1465, it brought with it ſuch an evil ſmell to the fine Noſes there, that it was no need to bid them to ſtir; for begging to them was worſe than high Hereſie. Wherefore the holy Father Pope Paulus the Second to repreſs the ſparkles of this Doctrine, which otherwiſe perhaps might have ſet his whole Kitchin on fire, taketh the matter in hand, and eſtſoons directeth down his Bull into England, inſinuating to the Prelates here, Hæreſim illam peſtifere aſſerentem quod Chriſtus publice mendicavit, eſſe antiquitus a Romanis Pontificibus, cum ſuis conciliis damnatam, & eam pro damnata undique declarandam & conculcandam, &c. That is, that this Hereſie, which peſtiferouſly doth affirm that Chriſt did openly beg, was condemned of old time by the Biſhops of Rome, and his Councils, and that the ſame ought to be declared in all places for a damned Doctrine, and worthy to be trodden down under all mens feet, &c. This was in the ſame year when Prince Edward, King Edwards Son was born in the Sanctuary at Weſtminſter, Anno 1465.

Ex Hiſt. Sanctæ mundi, fol. ult. The Popes determined ſolution, that Chriſt was no Beggar.

As touching the reſt of the doings and affairs of this King, (which had vanquiſhed hitherto in nine battels, himſelf being preſent) how afterward he, through the incitement of Charles Duke of Burgoyne his Brother in law, ventured into France with a puiſſant Army, and how the Duke failed him in his promiſe; alſo how Peace between theſe two Kings was at lengeh concluded in a ſolemn meeting of both the ſaid Kings together (which meeting is notified in ſtories, by a white Dove ſitting the ſame day of meeting upon the top of King Edwards Tent) alſo of the Marriage promiſed between the young Dolphin and Elizabeth King Edwards eldeſt Daughter, but afterward broken off on the French Kings part; moreover as touching the death of the Duke of Burgoyne ſlain in War, and of his Daughter Mary, Niece to King Edward, ſpoiled of her Lands and Poſſeſſions wrongfully by Lewis the French King, and married after to Maximilian; Furthermore, as touching the Expedition of King Edward into Scotland, by reaſon of King James breaking promiſe in marrying with Cicely the ſecond Daughter of King Edward, and of driving out his Brother, and how the matter was compoſed there, and of the recovery again of Barwick; of theſe (I ſay) and ſuch other things more, partly becauſe they are deſcribed ſufficiently in our common Engliſh ſtories, partly alſo becauſe they be matters not greatly pertaining to the Church, I omit to ſpeak, making of them a Superſedeas. Two things I find here, among many other, ſpecially to be remembred.

King Edward vanquiſhed nine battels, being himſelf preſent at them all. Charles Duke of Burgoyne failed his promiſe with the King. Peace between the two Kings, bought with the French Kings money.

The firſt is concerning a godly and conſtant Servant of Chriſt, named John Gooſe, which in the time of this King was unjuſtly condemned and burnt at the Tower-hill, Anno 1473, in the month of Auguſt. Thus had England alſo his John Hus as well as Boheme. Wherein moreover this is to be noted, that ſince the time of King Richard the Second, there is no Reign of any King to be aſſigned hitherto, wherein ſome good man or other hath not ſuffered the pains of fire for the Religion and true teſtimony of Chriſt Jeſus. Of this ſaid John Gooſe, or John Hus, this moreover I find in another Engliſh Monument recorded, that the ſaid John being delivered to Robert Beliſdon, one of the Sheriffs, to ſee him burnt the Afternoon; the Sheriff, like a charitable man, had him home to his houſe, and there exhorted him to deny (ſaith the ſtory) his Errors. But the godly man after long exhortation heard, deſired the Sheriff to be content; for he was ſatisfied in his conſcience. Notwithſtanding this he deſired of the Sheriff, for Gods ſake to give him ſome meat, ſaying, That he was very ſore hungred. Then the Sheriff commanded him meat; whereof he took and did eat, as if he had been toward no manner of danger, and ſaid to ſuch as ſtood about him, I eat now a good and competent dinner, for I ſhall paſs a little ſharp ſhowre ere I go to Supper. And when he had dined, he gave thanks, and required that he might ſhortly be led to the place where he ſhould yield up his ſpirit unto God. The Burning of John Gooſe

The unworthy death of the Duke of Clarence.

The ſecond thing herein to be noted, is the death of George Duke of Clarence, the Kings ſecond Brother; of whom relation was made before, how he aſſiſted King Edward his Brother, againſt the Earl of Warwick at Barnet Field, and helped him to the Crown; and now after all theſe benefits was at length thus requited, that (for what cauſe it is uncertain) he was apprehended and caſt into the Tower, where he being adjudged for a Traytor, was privily drowned in a Butt of Malmſey. What the true cauſe was of his death it cannot certainly be affirmed. Divers Conjectures and Imaginations there be diverſly put forth. Some partly imputed it to the Queens diſpleaſure.

KING Edw. 4

The cauſes of his death expended. The moſt chief that Satan worketh by falſe Propheſies.

Other ſuppoſe it came for taking part in the cauſe of his Servant, which was accuſed and condemned for poyſoning, Sorcery or Inchantment. Another fame there is, which ſurmiſeth the cauſe hereof to riſe upon the vain fear of a fooliſh Propheſie, coming no doubt (if it were true) by the crafty operation of Satan, as it doth many times elſe happen among Infidels and Gentiles, where Chriſt is not known; where among high Princes and in Noble houſes much miſchief groweth, firſt murther and paricide, and thereby ruine of ancient Families, and alteration of Kingdoms. The effect of this Propheſie (as the fame goeth) was this, That after King Edward, ſhould one Reign whoſe name ſhould begin with G. And becauſe the name of the Duke of Clarence, being George, began with a G. therefore he began to be feared, and afterward privily (as is aforeſaid) was made away.

The Propheſie of G.

Propheſies not raſhly to be believed.

By theſe experiments and miſchievous ends of ſuch Propheſies, and alſo by the nature of them, it is ſoon to be ſeen from what Fountain or Author they proceed, that is (no doubt) from Satan, the ancient enemy of Mankind, and Prince of this World; againſt whoſe deceitful deluſions, Chriſtian men muſt be well inſtructed, neither to marvel greatly at them though they ſeem ſtrange, nor yet to believe them though they happen true. For Satan being the Prince of this World, in ſuch worldly things can foreſee what will follow, and can ſay truth for a miſchievous end, and yet for all that is but a Satan. So the dream of Aſtiages, ſeeing a Vine to grow out of his Daughter, which ſhould cover all Aſia, and fearing thereby that by his Nephew he ſhould loſe his Kingdom, proved true in the ſequel thereof; and yet notwithſtanding of Satan it came, and cauſed cruel murther to follow, firſt of the Shepherds Child, then of the Son of Harpagus, whom he ſet before his own Father to eat. Ex Juſt. lib. 1. Likewiſe Cyrus was prophetically admoniſhed by his dream, to take him for his Guide whom he firſt met the next morrow. In that alſo his dream fell true, and yet was not of God. In the ſame number are to be put all the blind Oracles of the Idolatrous Gentiles, which although they proceed of a lying Spirit, yet ſometime they hit truth to a miſchievous purpoſe. The like judgment alſo is to be given of Merlines Propheſies. The Sorcerers mentioned 1 Reg. 28. raiſing up Samuel, told Saul the truth, yet was it not of God. In the ſixteenth Chapter of the Acts, there was a Damoſel having the ſpirit of Pytho, who ſaid truth of Paul and Silas, calling them the Meſſengers of the high God, and yet it was a wrong ſpirit. The unclean Spirits in giving teſtimony of Chriſt ſaid the truth, yet becauſe their teſtimony came not of God, Chriſt did not allow it.

Satan can ſay truth for a wicked end. Deviliſh Propheſies although they tell truth, yet are not to be followed

Ex Juſt. lib. 1. Merlines Propheſies. 1 Reg. 18. Acts. 16.

A Spirit of divination which could gheſs and foredeem things paſt, preſent and to come; which knowledge God many times permitteth to the Devil.

Ex Paulo Diac.

Paulus Diaconus recordeth of Valence the Emperor that he alſo had a blind Propheſie, not much unlike to this of King Edward, which was, that one ſhould ſucceed him in the Empire whoſe name ſhould begin with θ. o. and σ. Whereupon one Theodorus, truſting upon the Propheſie, began rebelliouſly to hope for the Crown, and for his labour felt the pains of a Traytor. Notwithſtanding the effect of the Propheſie followed; for after Valence ſucceeded Theodoſius. Wherefore Chriſtian Princes and Noble men, and all Chriſtis faithful people muſt beware and learn.

Three things to be noted concerning falſe Propheſies.

1. Firſt, That no man be inquiſitive or curious in ſearching to know what things be to come, or what ſhall happen, beſides thoſe things only which are promiſed and expreſſed in the Word.

2. Secondly, To underſtand what difference there is, and how to diſcern the Voice of God from the Voice of Satan.

3. Thirdly, How to reſiſt and avoid the danger of falſe and deviliſh Propheſies.

Many there be, which being not contented with things preſent, curiouſly occupy their wits to ſearch what is to come, and not giving thanks to God for their life which they have, will alſo know what ſhall bechance them, how and when their end will come, how long Princes ſhall Reign, and who after ſhall ſucceed them, and for the ſame get unto them Soothſayers, Aſtrologers, Sorcerers, Conjurers, or Familiars. And theſe are not ſo much inquiſitive to ſearch or ask, but the Devil is as ready to anſwer them who either falſly doubleth with them to delude them, or elſe telleth them truth, to work them perpetual care and ſorrow. Thus was Pope Silveſter the Sorcerer circumvented by the Devil, who told him, that he ſhould be at Jeruſalem before he died, and ſo it fell out. For as he was ſaying his Maſs at a Chappel in Rome, called Jeruſalem, there he fell ſick, and within three dayes after died: To King Henry the Fourth alſo it ſeemeth it was propheſied, that he ſhould not die before he went to Jeruſalem, who being brought to the Abbots Chamber of Weſtminſter, and hearing the name of the Chamber to be called Jeruſalem, knew his time to be come, and died. Vide ſupra. Vide ſupra.

By ſuch deceitful Propheſies it cannot be lamented enough to ſee what inconvenience both publickly and privately groweth to the life of men, either cauſing them falſly to truſt where they ſhould not, or elſe wickedly to perpetrate that they would not; as may appear both by this King, and alſo divers more. So was Pompeius, Craſſus, and Cæſar (as writeth Cicero) deceived by the falſe Chaldees, in declaring to them that they ſhould not die but in their beds, and with worſhip, and in their old age. Of ſuch a falſe truſt riſing upon falſe Propheſies, S. Ambroſe in his Book of Exameron writeth, ſpeaking of rain, which being in thoſe parts greatly deſired, was promiſed and propheſied of one certainly to fall upon ſuch a day, which was at the changing of the new Moon: but (ſaith S. Ambroſe) there fell no ſuch rain at all, till at the prayers of the Church the ſame was obtained; giving us to underſtand, that rain cometh not by the word of man, nor by the beginnings of the Moon, but by the providence and mercy of our Creator. Ex Ambroſ. in Examer.

False truſt by deviliſh Propheſies.

Ambroſius in Examer.

Joan. Picus Earl of Mirandula, in his excellent Books written againſt theſe vain Star-tellers and Aſtrologers, lib. 2. writeth of one Ordelaphus a Prince, to whom it was prognoſticated by a famous cunning man in that Science, called Hieronymus Manfredus, that he ſhould injoy long continuance of health, and proſperous life; who notwithſtanding the ſelf ſame year, and in the firſt year of his marriage, deceaſed: and after divers other examples added moreover upon the ſame, he inferreth alſo mention, and the name of a certain rich Matron in Rome, named Conſtantia, who in like manner departed the ſame year, in which ſhe received great promiſes by theſe Soothſayers and Aſtrologers, of a long and happy life, ſaying to her Huſband theſe words, Behold (ſaith ſhe) how true be the Prognoſtications of theſe Sooth-tellers? If it were not for noting of them which now are gone, and whoſe names I would in no caſe to be blemiſhed with any ſpot; I could recite the names of certain, eſpecially one, which taking his journey in a certain place, after diligent calculation and forecaſting of the ſucceſs and good ſpeed of his Journey, was notwithſtanding in the ſame Journey apprehended and brought where he would not, and after that never injoying good day, in ſhort time he departed. In Baſil this I my ſelf heard of one which knew and was converſant with the party, who having a curious delight in theſe Speculations of Chances and Events to come, by his Calculation noted a certain day which he miſtruſted ſhould be fatal unto him, by ſomething which at that day ſhould befal upon him. Whereupon he determined with himſelf all that day to keep him ſure and ſafe within his Chamber; where he reaching up his hand to take down a Book, the Book falling down upon his head, gave him his deaths wound, and ſhortly after he died upon the ſame. Of theſe and ſuch like examples the World is full, and yet the curiouſneſs of mens heads will not refrain, ſtill to pluck the Apple of this unlucky and forbidden Tree.

Joan. Pic. Mirandul. contra Aſtr. l. 1. ca. 9. Experience of falſe Propheſies.

This man by falſe diſſemblers was taken, betrayed, and brought into England.

A perilous matter for a man to be curious of times and things to come.

Beſide all this, what murther and paricide cometh by the fear of theſe Propheſies, in great bloods and noble houſes, I refer it unto them which read and well adviſe the ſtories, as well of our Kings here in England, as in other Kingdoms more both Chriſtened and Turkiſh, whereof another place ſhall ſerve as well (Chriſt willing) more largely to entreat, and particularly to diſcourſe. To this pertaineth alſo the great inconvenience and hinderance that groweth by the fear of ſuch Propheſies in the vocation of men, forſomuch as many there be which fearing, ſome one danger, ſome another, leave their vocations undone, and follow unordinate ways. As if one having a blind Propheſie, that his deſtruction ſhould be on the day, would wake and do all his buſineſs by night and candle-light; and ſo forth forth in other ſeveral caſes of men and women, as every one in his own conſcience knoweth his own caſe beſt.

The ſecond part how Propheſies are to be diſcerned.

The ſecond thing to be conſidered in theſe Propheſies, is rightly to diſcern and underſtand, as near as we can, the difference between the Propheſies proceeding from God, and the falſe Propheſies counterfeited by Satan. For Satan ſometime playeth Gods Ape, and transformeth himſelf into an Angel of Light; bearing ſuch a reſemblance and colour of Truth and Religion, that a wiſe man is ſcarcely able to diſcern one from the other, and the moſt part is beguiled. Concerning Propheſies therefore, to know which be of God, which be not, three things are to be obſerved:

In the ſecond part three things to be conſidered.

1. Firſt, Whether they go ſimply and plainly, or whether they be doubtful and ambiguous: whereof the one ſeemeth to taſte of Gods Spirit, ſuch as be the Propheſies of the Scripture; the other to come otherwiſe, having a double or doubtful interpretation. Although the time of Gods Propheſies, as alſo of Miracles is commonly and ordinarily expired, yet if the Lord in theſe days now extraordinarily do ſhew any Propheſie, by the ſimpleneſs and plainneſs thereof it may partly be diſcerned.

The ſecond thing to be conſidered in the Propheſies.

2. Secondly, This is to be expended, whether they be private, tending to this Family or that Family, or publick. For as the Scriptures, ſo commonly the Propheſies of God have no private interpretation, but general; forſomuch as the care of Gods holy Spirit is not reſtrained partially to one perſon more than to another, but generally and indifferently reſpecteth the whole Church of his Elect in Chriſt Jeſus his Son. Wherefore ſuch Propheſies as privately are touching the arms of houſes or names of men, riſing or falling of private and particular Families, are worthily to be ſuſpected.

The third thing to be conſidered in Propheſies.

3. The third note and ſpecial argument to deſcry the true Propheſies of God from the falſe Propheſies of Satan and his falſe Prophets, is this, to conſider the matter and the end thereof; that is, whether they be worldly, or whether they be ſpiritual, or whether they tend to any glory or ſtate of this preſent World, or whether they tend to the ſpiritual inſtruction, admonition, or comfort of the publick Church.

The third part, how to avoid the danger of ſiniſter Propheſies.

Now remaineth thirdly, after we know what Propheſies be of God, and what not, that we be inſtructed next how to eſchew the fear and peril of all deviliſh Propheſies which make againſt us. Wherein two ſpecial remedies are to be marked of every Chriſtian man, whereby he may be ſafe and ſure againſt all danger of the enemy. The firſt is, that we ſet the name of Chriſt Jeſus the Son of God againſt them, through a true Faith in him, knowing this, that the Son of God hath appeared to diſſolve the Works of the Devil. And again, This is the Victory (ſaith the Scripture) that overcometh the World, even our Faith. Whatſoever then Satan worketh, or can work againſt us, be it never ſo forcible, Faith in Chriſt will vanquiſh it. Such a Majeſty is in our Faith, believing in the Name of the Son of God.

Two remedies againſt deviliſh Propheſies.

The firſt remedy.

The ſecond remedy againſt dangerous Propheſies.

The other remedy is faithful Prayer, which obtaineth in the Name of Chriſt all things with the Lord. So that wicked Fiend, which had killed before ſeven Husbands of Tobias Wife, could not hurt him entring his Matrimony with earneſt prayer; ſo no more ſhall any miniſter Propheſie prevail, where prayer out of a faithful heart doth ſtrive againſt it. Neither am I ignorant, that againſt ſuch Temporal evils and puniſhments to this life inflicted, a great remedy lieth alſo in this, when Satan findeth nothing wherein greatly to accuſe our conſcience. But becauſe ſuch a conſcience is hard to be found, the next refuge is to fly to repentance, with amendment of life. For many times where ſin doth reign in our mortal bodies, there alſo the operation of Satan is ſtrong againſt us, to afflict our outward bodies here; but as touching our eternal Salvation, neither work nor merit hath any place, but only our Faith in Chriſt. And thus much briefly touching the two ſpecial remedies, whereby the operation of all deviliſh Propheſies may be avoided and defeated.

Mans policy can nothing do againſt the Devil.

Now many there be, which leaving theſe remedies aforeſaid, and the ſafe protection which the Lord hath ſet up in Chriſt, take other ways of their own, ſeeking by their own policy how to withſtand and eſcape ſuch Propheſies, either in eſchewing the place and time ſubtilly, or elſe cruelly by killing the party whom they fear; whereof cometh injury, murther, and paricide, with other miſchiefs in Common-wealths unſpeakable. To whom commonly it cometh ſo to paſs, that whereby they think moſt to ſave themſelves, by the ſame means they fall moſt into the ſnare, being ſubverted and confounded in their own policy, for that they truſting to their own device, and not unto the Lord, which only can diſſolve the operation of Satan, the Lord ſo turneth their device into a trap, thereby to take them, whereby they think moſt ſurely to eſcape. Examples whereof we ſee not only in Aſtyages King of the Medes aforeſaid, and Cyrus; but in infinite other like events, which the trade of the World doth daily offer to our eyes. So Queen Margaret thought her then Cockſure, when Duke Humfrey was made away; when nothing elſe was her confuſion ſo much as the loſs and lack of that man.

KING Edw. 4. No power can withſtand Satan, but only Chriſt, and our faith in him.

So if King Richard the Second had not exerciſed ſuch cruelty upon his Uncle Thomas, Duke of Gloceſter, he had not received ſuch wrong by King Henry the Fourth as he did. Likewiſe this King Edward the Fourth, if he had ſuffered his Brother George Duke of Clarence to have lived, his Houſe had not ſo gone to wrack by Richard his other Brother, as it did. What befel upon the Student of Aſtrology in the Univerſity of Baſil ye heard before; who, if he had not mewed himſelf in his Chamber for fear of his Divination, had eſcaped the ſtroke that fell. Now in avoiding ſuch Prophetical events which he ſhould not have ſearched, he fell into that which he did fear. Theſe few examples for inſtruction ſake, I thought by occaſion to infer, not as though theſe were alone; but by theſe few to admoniſh the Reader of infinite other, which daily come in practiſe of life, to the great danger and decay, as well in private houſes, as in weals publick.

A brief rehearſal of the matter of Propheſies before paſſed.

Wherefore briefly to repeat what before ſimply hath been ſaid touching this matter, ſeeing that Satan through ſuch ſubtil Propheſies hath yet and doth daily practiſe ſo manifold miſchiefs in the World, ſetting Brother againſt Brother, Nephew againſt the Uncle, Houſe againſt Houſe, and Realm againſt Realm, gendring hatred where love was, and ſubverting privily the ſimplicity of our Chriſtian Faith; therefore the firſt and beſt thing is for godly men not to butie their brains about ſuch Phantaſies, neither in delighting in them, nor in hearkening to them, nor in ſearching for them, either by Soothſayer, or by Conjuration, or by Familiar, or by Aſtrologer; knowing and conſidering this, that whoſoever ſhall be deſirous or ready to ſearch for them, the Devil is as ready to anſwer his curioſity therein. For as once, in the old time of Gentility, he gave his Oracles by Idols and Prieſts of that time; ſo the ſame Devil, although he worketh not now by Idols, yet he craftily can give now anſwer by Aſtrologers and Conjurers in theſe our days, and in ſo doing, both to ſay truth, and yet to deceive men when he hath ſaid. Wherefore, leaving off ſuch curioſity, let every Chriſtian man walk ſimply in his preſent vocation, referring hid things not in the word expreſſed, unto him which ſaith in his word, Non eſt veſtrum ſcire tempora & momenta temporum, &c. It is not for you to know the times, and ſeaſons of times, which the Father hath kept in his own Power, &c.

The Devil ready to anſwer, in matters of Divination.

Curioſity of Propheſies to be avoided.

Secondly, In this matter of Propheſies, requiſite it is (as is ſaid) for every Chriſtian man to learn, how to diſcern and diſtinguiſh the true Propheſies, which proceed of God, and the falſe Propheſies which come of Satan. The difference whereof, as it is not hard to be diſcerned; ſo neceſſary it is that every good man do rightly underſtand the ſame, to the intent that he, knowing and flying the danger of the one, may be the more certain and conſtant in adhering to the other.

Thirdly, Becauſe it is not ſufficient that the deceitful Propheſies of the Devil be known, but alſo that they be reſiſted, I have alſo declared, by what means the operation of Satans Works and Propheſies are to be overcome; that is, not with ſtrength and policy of man, for that there is nothing in man able to countervail the power of that Enemy. Under Heaven there is nothing elſe that can prevail againſt his Works, but only the Name of the Lord Jeſus the Son of God, not outwardly pronounced only with our Lips, or ſigned in our Foreheads with the outward Croſs, but inwardly apprehended and dwelling in our hearts by a ſilent Faith, firmly and earneſtly earneſtly truſting upon the promiſes of God, given and ſealed unto us in his Name. For ſo it hath pleaſed his Fatherly wiſdom to ſet him up, to be both our righteouſneſs before himſelf, and alſo to be our fortitude againſt the enemy, accepting our faith in his Son in no leſs price than he accepteth the works and worthineſs of the ſame his Son in whom we do believe.

The ſtrength of a Chriſtian mans faith in Chriſt.

Such is the ſtrength and effect of Faith both in Heaven, in Earth, and alſo in Hell. In Heaven to juſtifie, in Earth to [illegible], in Hell to conquer. And therefore when any ſuch propheſie, or any other thing is to us objected, which ſeemeth to tend againſt us, let us firſt conſider whether it ſavour of Satan, or not. If it do, then let us ſeek our ſuccour, not in our ſelves where it doth not dwell, neither let us kill, nor ſlay, nor change our vocation therefore, following unordinate ways; but let us run to our Caſtle of refuge, which is to the power of the Lord Jeſus, remembring the true promiſe of the Pſalm, Qui habitat in adjutorio altiſſimi, in protectione Dei cœli commorabitur: That is, Who ſo putteth his truſt in the ſuccour of the Lord, ſhall have the God of Heaven to be his Protector. And then ſhall it afterward follow in the ſame Pſalm, Ipſe liberabit te a laqueo venantium, & a verbo aſpero: That is, And he ſhall deliver him from the ſnare of the hunter, and from all evil words, and propheſies, be they never ſo ſharp or bitter againſt him, &c. And thus much by the occaſion of King Edward, of Propheſies.

Only Chriſt able to withſtand the power of Satan. Pſal. 90.

Now having long tarried at home in deſcribing the tumults and troubles within our own land, we will let out our ſtory more at large, to conſider the afflictions and perturbations of other parties and places alſo of Chriſts Church, as well here in Europe under the Pope, as in the Eaſt parts under the Turk, firſt deducing our ſtory from the time of Sigiſmund, where before we left. Which Sigiſmund, as it is above recorded, was a great doer in the Council of Conſtance againſt John Hus, and Jerome of Prague. The Emperor had ever evil luck fighting againſt the Turks. Twice he warred againſt them, and in both the Battels was diſcomfited and put to flight; once about the City of Myſia, fighting againſt Bajazetes the Great Turk, Anno 1395, the ſecond time fighting againſt Celebinus the Son of Bajazetes, about the Town called Columbacium. But eſpecially after the Council of Conſtance, wherein were condemned and burned [illegible] two godly Martyrs, more unproſperous ſucceſs did then follow him, fighting againſt the Bohemians his own ſubjects, Ann. 1420, by whom he was repulſed in ſo many Battels, to his great diſhonour, during all the life of Ziſca, and of Procopius, as is afore more at large expreſſed; who was ſo beaten both of the Turks, and at home of his own people, that he never did encounter with the Turks after. Then followed the Council of Baſil, after the beginning whereof within ſix years, this Sigiſmundus which was Emperor, King of Hungary, and King of Boheme, died in Moravia, Anno 1434.

¶ Albertus, Emperor.

THIS Sigiſmund left behind him one only Daughter Elizabeth, who was married to Albert Duke of Auſtrich, by reaſon whereof he was advanced to the Empire, and ſo was both Duke of Auſtrich, Emperor, King of Hungary, and King alſo of Boheme. But this Albert, (as is afore declared) being an enemy and a diſquieter to the Bohemians, and eſpecially to the good men of Thabor, as he was preparing and ſetting forth againſt the Turks, in the mean time died, in the ſecond year of his Empire, Ann. 1439, leaving his wife great with child; who lying then in Hungary, and thinking her ſelf to be great with a Daughter, called to her the Princes and the Chiefrains of the Realms, declaring to them that ſhe was but a woman, and unſufficient to the Governance of ſuch a ſtate; and moreover how ſhe thought her ſelf to be with child of a Daughter; and therefore required them to provide among them ſuch a Prince and Governour, (reſerving the right of the Kingdom to her ſelf) as were fit and able under her, to have the Regiment of the Land committed. The Turk in the mean while, being elevated and incouraged with his proſperous victories againſt Sigiſmundus aforeſaid, began then more fiercely to invade Hungary, and thoſe parts of Chriſtendom. Wherefore the Hungarians making the more haſt, conſulted among themſelves to make Duke Uladiſlaus, Brother to Caſimirus King of Polonie, their King.

Albert Duke of Auſtrich, Emperor, K. of Hungary, King of Boheme.

Elizabeth Daughter to Sigiſmund, Wife to Albert, Emperor.

The Turk begineth to invade Hungary.

Uladiſlaus Brother to Caſimirus K. of Polonia, made King of Hungary.

But while this was in working between the Hungarians and Uladiſlaus the Duke, in the mean ſpace Elizabeth brought forth a Son called Ladiſlaus, who being the lawful heir of the Kingdom, the Queen called back again her former word, minding to reſerve the Kingdom for her Son, being the true heir thereof, and therefore refuſeth Marriage with the ſaid Uladiſlaus, which ſhe had before pretended. But Uladiſlaus joyning with a great part of the Hungarians, perſiſting ſtill in the condition before granted, would not give over; by reaſon whereof great contention and diviſion kindling among the people of Hungary, Amurathes the Great Turk taking his advantage of their diſcord, and partly ſurprized with pride of his former ſucceſs againſt Sigiſmund aforeſaid, with his whole main and force invaded the Realm of Hungary; where Huniades, Sir-named Vainoda, Prince of Tranſilvania, joyning with the new King Uladiſlaus, did both together ſet againſt the Turk, Ann. 1444, and there Uladiſlaus the new King of Hungaria, the fourth year of his Kingdom was ſlain. Elizabeth with her Son was fled in the mean while to Frederick the Emperor. Of Huniades Vainoda the Noble Captain, and of his Acts, and alſo of Ladiſlaus (Chriſt willing) more ſhall be ſaid hereafter, in his time and place.

Fredericus the Third, Emperor.

AFter the deceaſe of Albert ſucceeded in the Empire, Fredericus the Third, Duke of Auſtria, Ann. 1440. By whom it was procured (as we have before ſignified) that Pope Felix, Elected by the Council of Baſil, did reſign his Popedom to Pope Nicholas the Fifth; upon this condition, that the ſaid Pope Nicholas ſhould ratifie the Acts decreed in the ſaid Council of Baſil. In the days of this Emperor much War and diſſention raged almoſt thorough all Chriſtian Realms, in Auſtria, Hungaria, Polonia, in France, in Burgoine, and alſo here in England, between King Henry the Sixth, and King Edward the Fourth, as ye have already heard; whereby it had been eaſie for the Turk, with little maſtery, to have over-run all the Chriſtian Realms in Europe, had not the Providence of our merciful Lord otherwiſe provided to keep Amurathes the Turk occupied in other civil Wars at home in the mean while. Unto this Frederick came Elizabeth (as is aforeſaid) with Ladiſlaus her Son; by whom he was nouriſhed and entertained a certain ſpace, till at length, after the death of Uladiſlaus aforeſaid, King of Hungary, (which was ſlain in Battel by the Turks) the men of Auſtria, through the inſtigation of Ulricus Eizingerus, and of Ulricus Earl of Cilicia, riſing up in armour, required of Frederick the Emperor, either to give them their young King, or elſe to ſtand to his own defence.

Fredericus the Third Emperor.

Uladiſlaus K. of Hungary ſlain in Battel by the Turk.

When Frederick heard this, neither would he render to them a ſudden anſwer, neither would they abide any longer delay; and ſo the matter growing to war, the new City was beſieged, where many were ſlain, and much harm done. At length the Emperors part being the weaker, the Emperor, through the intervention of certain Nobles of Germany, reſtored Ladiſlaus unto their hands, who being yet under age, committed his three Kingdoms to three Governours: whereof John Huniades, the worthy Captain above mentioned, had the ruling of Hungary: George Pogiebracius had Boheme: and Ulricus the Earl of Cilicia had Auſtria. Which Ulrice having the chief cuſtody of the King, bare the greateſt authority above the reſt; a man as full of ambition and tyranny, as he was hated almoſt of all the Auſtrians, and ſhortly after, by the means of Eizingerus, was excluded alſo from the King and the Court, but afterward reſtored again, and Eizingerus thruſt out. Such is the unſtable condition of them which be next in place about Princes. But this contention between them I overpaſs.

John Huniades Governour of Hungary under the K.

G. Fogiebracius Governour of Boheme.

Ulricus Governour of Auſtria.

Not long after, Ladiſlaus the young King went to Boheme, there to be Crowned, where George Pogiebracius (as is ſaid) had the Governance. But Ladiſlaus during all the time of his being there, though being much requeſted, yet would neither enter into the Churches, nor hear the ſervice of them which did draw after the Doctrin of Hus. Inſomuch that when a certain Prieſt, in the high Tower of Prague, was appointed and addreſſed, after the manner of Prieſts, to ſay ſervice before the King, being known to hold with John Hus and Rochezana, the King diſdaining at him, commanded him to give place and depart, or elſe he would ſend him down headlong from the rock of the Tower; and ſo the good Miniſter repulſed by the King, departed. Alſo another time the ſaid Ladiſlaus ſeeing the Sacrament carried by a Miniſter of that ſide, whom they called then Huſſites, would do thereunto no reverence. Ex Æn. Sylv.

Ladiſlaus a young Poſthumus King. Ladiſlaus could not abide the Doctrine of Hus.

At length the long abode of the King, although it was not very long, yet ſeemed to the godly diſpoſed to be longer than they wiſhed; and that was not to the King unknown, which made him to make the more haſte away; but before he departed, he thought firſt to viſit the noble City Uratiſlavia in Schleſia. In the which City the foreſaid King Ladiſlaus being there in the high Church at Service, many great Princes were about him. Among whom was alſo George Pogiebracius, who then ſtood neareſt to the King, unto whom one Chilianus, playing the Paraſite about the King (as the faſhion is of ſuch as fegin themſelves fools, to make other men as very fools as they) ſpake in this wiſe as followeth, With what countenance you do behold this our Service I ſee right well, but your heart I do not ſee. Say then, doth not the order of this our Religion ſeem unto you decent and comely? Do you not ſee how many and how great Princes, yea, the King himſelf, do follow one order and uniformity? And why do you then follow rather your Preacher Rochezana than theſe? Do you think a few Bohemians to be more wiſe than all the Church of Chriſt beſides? Why then do you not forſake that rude and ruſtical people, and joyn to theſe Nobles, as you are a Nobleman your ſelf?

Chilianus a Paraſite about King Ladiſlaus.

The words of a Popiſh Paraſite to Pogiebracius

Unto whom thus Pogiebracius ſagely again doth anſwer, If you ſpeak theſe words of your ſelf (ſaith he) you are not the man whom you feign your ſelf to be; and ſo to you I anſwer, as not to a Fool. But if you ſpeak this by the ſuggeſtion of others, then muſt I ſatisfie them. Hear therefore, As touching the Ceremonies of the Church, every man hath a conſcience of his own to follow. As for us we uſe ſuch Ceremonies, as we truſt pleaſe God: Neither is it in our arbitrement to believe what we will our ſelves. The mind of man, being perſwaded with great reaſons, is captivated, will he, nill he; and as nature is inſtructed and taught, ſo is ſhe drawn, in ſome one way, and in ſome another. As for my ſelf, I am fully perſwaded in the Religion of my Preachers. If I ſhould follow thy Religion, I might perchance deceive men, going contrary to mine own conſcience, but I cannot deceive God, who ſeeth the hearts of all; Neither ſhall it become me to frame my ſelf to thy diſpoſition. That which is meet for a Jeſter, is not likewiſe convenient for a Nobleman. And theſe words either take to thy ſelf, as ſpoken to thee, if thou be a wiſe man; or elſe I refer them to thoſe which ſet thee on work. Ex Æneas Sylv. in Hiſt. Bohem.

An anſwer proceeding of a Heavenly wiſdom.

After the King was returned from the Bohemians again to Auſtria, the Hungarians likewiſe made their petitions to the King, that he would alſo come unto them. The Governour of Hungary (as ye before have heard) was Johannes Huniades, whoſe victorious acts againſt the Turks are famous. Againſt this Huniades, wicked Ulricus Earl of Cilicia did all he could with the King to bring him to deſtruction, and therefore cauſed the King to ſend for him up to Vienna, and there privily to work his death. But Huniades having thereof intelligence, offereth himſelf within Hungary to ſerve his Prince to all affairs: Out of the land where he was, it was neither beſt (ſaid he) for the King, nor ſafeſt for himſelf to come. The Earl being ſo diſappointed, came down with certain Nobles of the Court to the borders of Hungary, thinking either to apprehend him and bring him to Vienna, or there to diſpatch him. Huniades without in the fields ſaid he would commune with him, within the Town he would not be brought. After that another train alſo was laid for him, that under pretence of the Kings ſafe conduct he ſhould meet the King in the broad fields of Vienna. But Huniades ſuſpecting deceit, came indeed to the place appointed, where he neither ſeeing the King to come, nor the Earl to have any ſafe conduct for him, was moved (and not without cauſe) againſt the Earl, declaring how it was in his power there to ſlay him, which went about to ſeek his blood, but for the reverence of the King he would ſpare him and let him go.

Ulricus ſeeketh the death of Huniades.

Huniades ſpareth his enemy.

Not long after this, the Turk with a great power of fighting men, to the number of an hundred and fifteen thouſand, arrived in Hungary, where he laid ſiege to the City Alba. But through the merciful hand of God, John Huniades, and Capiſtranus a certain Minorite, with a ſmall Garriſon of Chriſtian Souldiers gave him the repulſe, and put him to flight with all his mighty hoſt: Whereof more (Chriſt willing) hereafter. Ex Hiſt. Bohemic. [illegible] Huniades ſhortly after this victory deceaſed. Of whoſe death when the King and the Earl did underſtand, they came the more boldly into Hungary, where he being received by Ladiſlaus Huniades Son into the Town of Alba there viewed the place where the Turks before had pitched their Tents. When this Ladiſlaus heard that the King was coming firſt toward the Town, obediently he opened to him the Gates. Four thouſand only of armed Soldiers he debarred from entring the City.

In the mean time while the King was there reſident in the City, the Earl with other Nobles did [illegible] Council, requiring alſo Ladiſlaus to reſort unto them; who firſt doubting with himſelf what he might do, at length putteth on a privy coat of Mail, and cometh to them. Whether the Earl firſt began with him, or he with the Earl, it is not known. The opinion of ſome is, that Ulricus firſt called him Traytor, for ſhutting the Gates againſt the Kings Soldiers. Howſoever the occaſion began, this is undoubted, that Ulricus taking his ſword from his Page let fly at his head. To break the blow, ſome putting up their hands had their fingers cut off. The Hungarians hearing a noiſe and tumult within the Chamber, brake it open upon them, and there incontinent ſlew Ulrick the Earl, wounding and cutting him almoſt all to pieces. The King hearing thereof, although he was not a little diſcontented thereat in his mind: yet ſeeing there was then no other remedy, diſſembled his grief for a time.

Ulricus Earl of Cilicia ſlain.

From thence the King took his journey again to Buda, accompanied with the foreſaid Ladiſlaus; who paſſing by the Town where the Wife of Huniades was mourning for the death of her Husband, ſeemed with many fair words to comfort her, and after he had there ſufficiently repaſted himſelf, with ſuch pretence of diſſembled love, and fained favour, that they were without all ſuſpition and fear; from thence he ſet forward in his journey, taking with him the two Sons of Huniades, Ladiſlaus and Matthias, who were right ready to wait upon him. The King being come to Buda (whether of his own head, or by ſiniſter counſel ſet on) when he had them at a vantage, cauſed both the Sons of Huniades, to wit, Ladiſlaus and Matthias, to be apprehended. And firſt was brought forth Ladiſlaus the elder Son to the place of Execution, there to be Beheaded, where meekly he ſuffered, being charged with no other crime but this, publiſhed by the voice of the Cryer, ſaying, Thus are they to be chaſtned, which are rebels againſt their Lord. Peucerus writing of his death addeth this moreover, That after the Hangman had three blows at his neck, yet notwithſtanding the ſaid Ladiſlaus, having his hands bound behind him, after the third ſtroke roſe upright upon his feet, and looking up to Heaven called upon the Lord, and proteſted his innocency in that behalf; and ſo laying down his neck again, at the fourth blow was diſpatched: Matthias the other Brother was led captive with the King into Auſtria. The reſt of the captives brake the priſon and eſcaped.

It was not long after this cruelty was wrought upon Ladiſlaus, the King being about the age of twenty and two years, that talk was made of the Kings marriage with Magdalen Daughter to the French King. The place of the Marriage was appointed at Prague, where great preparation was for the matter. At the firſt entrance of the King into the City of Prague, Rochezana with a company of Miniſters, ſuch as were favourers of John Hus, and of ſincere Religion, came with all ſolemnity to receive the King, making there his Oration to gratulate the Kings moſt joyful and proſperous acceſs into the ſame his own Realm and Country of Boheme. Unto which Rochezana, after he had ended his Oration, ſcarce would the King open his mouth to give thanks to him, or any cheerful countenance unto his Company, but fiercely ſeemed to frown upon them. In the next Pagent after theſe came forth the Prieſts of the high Miniſter, after the moſt Popiſh manner, meeting him with Proceſſion, and with the Sacrament of the Altar: For as Panacea among Phyſicians ſerveth for all diſeaſes, ſo the Sacrament of the Popes Altar ſerveth for all pomps and Pagents. Firſt it muſt lye upon the Altar, then it muſt be holden up with hands, then it muſt hang in the Pixe, it muſt ſerve for the ſick, it muſt alſo help the dead, it muſt moreover viſit the ſick, it muſt walk about the Churchyard, it muſt go about the ſtreets, it muſt be carried about the fields to make the graſs to grow, it muſt be had to the battail, it muſt ride on horſeback before the Pope: And finally it muſt welcome Kings into Cities. Wherein theſe Catholick Fathers do ſeem ſomewhat to forget themſelves. For if the Pope being inferior to the Sacrament of the Altar, at the coming of Kings do uſe to ſit ſtill while the Kings come and kiſs his feet, what reaſon is it that the Sacrament of the Altar, which is (I know) above the Pope, ſhould meet Kings by the way, and welcome them to the Town? But this by the way of Parenthesis: Let us now continue the Text.

The Sacrament of the Altar uſed to many purpoſes.

Ex Æneæ Sylvio in Hiſt. Boben.

When Ladiſlaus this Catholick King, who had ſhewed himſelf before ſo ſtout and ſtern againſt Rochezana and his company, had ſeen theſe Catholick Prieſts with their Proceſſion, and eſpecially with their bleſſed Sacrament, to come with all reverence and much devotion he lighted down from his Horſe, he embraced the Croſs and kiſſed it, and with chearful countenance ſaluted the Prieſts in order. All this while his young Wife was not yet come out of France, but Legates were ſent, after moſt ſumptuous wiſe, to conduct her. Other Legates alſo were ſent the ſame time to the Emperor Frederick, for concluſion of peace. The third Legacy was directed likewiſe to Pope Calixtus about Religion, how to reduce the Bohemians to the Church of Rome. The Author of this Story (which was Pope Pius himſelf) declareth further the opinion of ſome to be, that King Ladiſlaus the ſame time had intended to make a final end and deſtruction of all that ſect in Bohemia, which held with the Doctrine of John Hus and Hierome, by the aſſembly and concourſe of the Catholick Princes, and Popiſh Prelates which were appointed there to meet together at that Marriage in Prague. For there ſhould be firſt the Emperor Frederick, Elizabeth the Kings Mother, and his Siſters Elizabeth and Anna, the Princes of Saxony, Bajoria, Sleſia, Franconia, the Palatine, and other Princes of Rhene: many alſo of the Lords of France, beſides the Popes Cardinals, Legates, Prelates, and other Poteſtates of the Popes Church; who if they had altogether convented in Boheme, no doubt but ſome great miſchief had been wrought there againſt the Huſſites; againſt whom this Ladiſlaus, following the ſteps of Sigiſmundus his Grandfather, and Albertus his Father, was ever an utter enemy. But when man hath purpoſed, yet God diſpoſeth as pleaſeth him.

A great concourſe of Catholick Princes intended againſt the Huſſites.

Man purpoſeth, and God diſpoſeth.

Ex Æneas Sylvio.

And therefore truly it is written of Æneas Sylvius in the ſame place, ſaying, De regimine Civitatum, de mutatione regnorum, de orbis imperio, minimum eſt quod homines poſſint (tum vero de religionis conſtitutione multo minus) magna magnus diſponit Deus. That is, In Regiment of Cities, in alteration of Kingdoms, in ruling and governing the world, it is leſs than nothing that man can do; it is the High God that ruleth high things. Where-unto then I may well add this moreover, and ſay, That if the governance of worldly Kingdoms ſtandeth not in mans power, but in the diſpoſition of God, much leſs is it then that mans power can do in the Regiment and governing of Religion. Example whereof in this purpoſed device of Princes doth evidently appear. For as this great preparation and ſolemnity of Marriage was in doing, and the Princes ready to ſet it forth, with a little turn of Gods holy hand, all theſe great purpoſes were ſuddenly turned and daſhed. For in the midſt of this buſineſs, about the one and twentieth day of November, Anno 1461, this great adverſary of Chriſts people, King Ladiſlaus, King of Boheme, of Hungary, and Prince of Auſtria ſickned, and within ſix and thirty hours died; ſome ſay of a Peſtilent ſore in his Groin, ſome ſay of poyſon. But howſoever it was, as it came not without the juſt judgment of God, revenging the innocent blood of Ladiſlaus Huniades Son, wrongfully put to death before; ſo by the opportune death of this King, the poor Churches of Boheme were graciouſly delivered. And this end made Ladiſlaus one of the mightieſt Princes at that time in all Europe; in whom three mighty Kingdoms were conjoyned and combined together, Auſtria, Hungaria, and Bohemia; which Countries do lye South-Eaſt from England, in the fartheſt parts of all Germany, toward Conſtantinople, and the Dominions of the Turks, and contain theſe principal Towns in them.

Governance of Empires and Kingdoms is not in mans power, much leſs the Governance of Religion.

After the death of Ladiſlaus, the Kingdom of Boheme fell to George Pogiebracius above mentioned, whom Pope Innocent the Eighth did Excommunicate and depoſe for his Religion, as is afore declared.

Furthermore the Kingdom of Hungary was given to Matthias Son of Huniades, who was in captivity (as is ſaid) with King Ladiſlaus, and ſhould have been put to death after his Brother, had not the King before been prevented with death, as is above recorded. Moreover, here is to be noted that the ſaid King Ladiſlaus thus dying without wife and iſſue, left behind him two Sifters alive, to wit, Elizabeth, which was married to Caſimirus King of Polonia; and Anna, married to William Duke of Saxonie; Elizabeth by her Husband Caſimirus, King of Polonia, had Uladiſlaus, who at length was King of both Boheme and Hungary. This Caſimirus firſt was married to Beatrix, Wife before to Matthias. Then being divorced from her by the diſpenſation of Pope Alexander, he married a new Wife, a Counteſs of France, by whom he had two Children, Lewes and Anna; Lewes which was heir of both Kingdoms, of Boheme and Hungary, was ſlain fighting againſt the Turks. Anna was married to Ferdinandus, by whom he was Archduke of Auſtria, King of Boheme, &c.

War betweene Matthias and Frederick the Emperor.

Ye heard before how after the deceaſe of Ladiſlaus the Hungarians by their Election preferred Matthias, Sirnamed Corvinus, which was Son of Huniades, to the Kingdom of Hungary. For which cauſe diſſention fell between Frederick the Emperor and him, for that the ſaid Frederick was both nominated himſelf by divers unto that Kingdom, and alſo becauſe he had the Crown of Hungary then remaining in his hands, which Elizabeth Mother to King Ladiſlaus had brought to the Emperor, as was before declared. But this war between them was ceaſed by the interceſſion of the Princes of Germany, ſo that Matthias ranſomed that Crown of Frederick for Eight thouſand Florences.

George Pogiebracius by the Pope depoſed from his Kingdom, for favouring of John Hus.

Not long after, Pope Innocent being diſpleaſed with George Pogiebracius (or Bojebracius) King of Bohemia, for favouring of John Hus and his Religion, that is to ſay, for playing the part of a godly Prince, did Excommunicate and depoſe him, conferring his Kingdom to Matthias. But forſomuch as Frederick the Emperor would not thereto conſent, and eſpecially after the death of the aforeſaid George, when the Emperor and the Bohemians, leaving out Matthias, did nominate Uladiſlaus Son of Caſimirus King of Polonie, and of Elizabeth, to be King of Boheme, therefore great war and trouble kindled between him and Frederick the Emperor. Wherein the Emperor had utterly gone to ruin, had not Albertus Duke of Saxony, reſcued the Emperor, and repreſſed the vehemency of Matthias.

Albert D. of Saxony.

The noble acts of John and Matthias Huniades againſt the Turks. Sirmium & the borders of Illyrica, recovered from the Turks.

The noble acts of John Huniades, and of this Matthias his Son, were not only great ſtays to Hungary, but almoſt to all Chriſtendom, in repelling back the Turk. For beſide the other Victories of John Huniades the Father aforementioned, this Matthias alſo his Son ſucceeding no leſs in valiantneſs than in the name of his Father, did ſo recover Sirmium, and the confines of Illyrica, from the hands of the Turks, and ſo vanquiſhed their power, that both Mahometes and alſo Bajazetes his Son were inforced to ſeek for Truce.

Jaitza recovered. The ſubtile practiſe of Satan to ſtop good proceedings

Over and beſides, the ſame Matthias conducting his Army into Boſna (which lyeth South from Hungary) recovered again Jaitza, the principal Town of that Kingdom from the Turks poſſeſſion. Who if other Chriſtian Princes had joyned their helps withal, would have proceeded farther into Thracia. But behold here the malicious ſubtilty of Satan, working by the Pope. For while Matthias was thus occupied in this expedition againſt the Turks, wherein he ſhould have been ſet forward and aided by Chriſtian Princes, and Biſhops; the Biſhop of Rome wickedly and ſinfully miniſtreth matter of civil diſcord between him and Pogiebracius aforeſaid, in removing him from the right of his Kingdom, and transferring the ſame to Matthias. Whereupon not only the courſe of victory againſt the Turks was ſtopped, but alſo great war and bloodſhed followed in Chriſtian Realms, as well between this Matthias and Pogiebracius, with his two Sons Victorinus and Henricus, as alſo between Caſimirus Uladiſlaus, and Matthias warring about Uratiſlavia, till at length the matter was taken up by the Princes of Germany.

The Popes Excommunication not obeyed of divers in Bohemia.

Albeit, for all the execrable Excommunication of the Pope againſt Pogiebracius, a great part of Boheme would not be removed from the obedience of their King, whom the Pope had curſed, and depoſed; yet Matthias took from him Moravia, and a great portion of Sileſia, and adjoyned it to his Kingdom of Hungary, Anno 1474.

Matthias adjoyned Moravia and part of Sileſia unto Hungary.

{Anno 1474.}

The Religion of the Bohemians defended by God againſt the four greateſt Princes in Europe.

¶ Where this by the way is to be noted, that the Religion in Bohemia, planted by John Hus, could not be extinguiſhed or ſuppreſſed with all the power of four mighty Princes, Vinceſlaus, Sigiſmundus, Albertus and Ladiſlaus, notwithſtanding they with the Popes did therein what they poſſibly could; but ſtill the Lord maintained the ſame, as ye ſee by this Pogiebracius King of Boheme, whom the Pope could not utterly remove out of the Kingdom of Bohemia.

Matthias a great lover of Learning and of learned men

This forementioned Matthias, beſide his other memorable acts of Chivalry, is no leſs alſo commended for his ſingular knowledg and love of Learning and of Learned men, whom he with great Stipends procured into Pannonia; where by the means of good Letters, and furniture of Learned men, he reduced in ſhort ſpace the barbarous rudeneſs of that Country into a flouriſhing Commonwealth. Moreover ſuch a Library he did there erect, and repleniſh with all kind of Authors, Sciences and Hiſtories, which he cauſed to be tranſlated out of Greek into Latin, as the like is not thought to be found, next to Italy, in all Europe beſide. Out of which Library we have received divers fragments of Writers, as of Polybius, and Diodorus Siculus, which were not extant before. Ex Peucero.

The noble Library of Matthias K. of Hungary. Ex 5. Lib. Peuc.

The conſtant fortitude alſo of Georgius Pogiebracius, King of Boheme, is not unworthy of commendation; of whom alſo Pope Pius himſelf, in Deſcriptione Europæ, doth honeſtly report (as a Pope may ſpeak of a Proteſtant) in theſe words writing, Magnus vir alioqui, & rebus belli-cis clarus, &c. Who although Pope Innocent did execrate with his Children, yet he left not off the profeſſion of the verity and knowledg which he had received. Moreover, the Lord ſo proſpered his Sons, Victorinus and Henricus, that they ſubdued their enemies, and kept their Eſtate: Inſomuch that when Frederick the Emperor at Vienna was in cuſtody incloſed by the Citizens, Victorinus did reſtore, and deliver him out of their hands. Wherefore the Emperor afterward advanced them to be Dukes. Alſo God gave them ſometimes proſperous victory againſt Matthias, as at the City of Glogovia, &c.

The death of Pogiebracius.

After the deceaſe of Georgius Pogiebracius King of Boheme, Frederick the Emperor aſſigned that Kingdom, not to Matthias upon whom the Pope had beſtowed it before, but upon Uladiſlaus Son of Caſimirus King of Poloſie, and of Elizabeth, Daughter of the Emperor Albert, and Siſter to Ladiſlaus. out of Boheme, and alſo proclaimed war againſt Frederick. But before he accompliſhed his purpoſed preparation, death prevented him, who without iſſue departed, Anno 1490.

After the death of Matthias, departing without iſſue, Uladiſlaus Son of Caſimirus King of Polonie, and of Elizabeth Daughter to Albert Emperor, and Siſter to King Ladiſlaus, married his Wife Beatrix, whom Matthias left a Widow, and with her was Elected King of Hungary, with this condition made between him and Frederick the Emperor, that if he died without lawful iſſue, then the Kingdoms of Hungary and of Boheme ſhould return to Maximilian Son to Fredericus. But Uladiſlaus not long after did repudiate his Wife Beatrix, and depriving her of the Kingdom, cauſed the ſaid Beatrix to ſwear and to conſent to his marrying of another woman, which was the Daughter of the French King, named Anne, procuring from Pope Alexander a diſpenſation for the ſame, as is before ſignified. By this Anne Uladiſlaus had Lewis, and Anne, which Anne afterward was married to Ferdinandus, &c.

Uladiſlaus forſaketh his firſt wife. Diſpenſation from Pope Alexander to forſake his firſt Wife, and to marry another.

Ludovicus, Uladiſlaus Son, King of Hungary and Bohemie.

Lewis ſucceeding after his Father, had both the ſaid Kingdoms of Boheme and Hungary, Ann. 1492, and married Mary, Siſter to Charles the fifth Emperor. Anne, as is ſaid, was coupled to Ferdinandus, &c.

Of Charles Duke of Burgoine ſomewhat was before touched, who had married King Edwards Siſter; and what troubles by him were ſtirred up in France, partly was before notified. This Charles after he had beſieged the City Nuſſia, or Novaſium, the ſpace of a whole year, went about to alienate the Territory of Colen from the Empire to his own Dominion: wherefore war began to be moved between him and Frederick the Emperor. At length through communication had, peace was concluded, and a Marriage appointed between Mary the only Daughter of Charles, and Maximilian the Emperors Son, Anno 1475. Then from Novaſium, Charles leadeth his Army toward Helvetia, againſt Renatus, or Reinhardus Duke of Lotharing; then againſt the Helvetians, where he being thrice overcome, firſt at Granſon, then at Moratum, or Muria, in the higher part of Helvetia, at laſt at the Town of Nauſe, was overthrown and ſlain, Anno 1477. The procurer of which wars was chiefly Lewis the 11*th*, the French King, to the intent he might compaſs the Dominion of Burgundy under his ſubjection; which afterward by open wrong and privy fraud he brought about, defrauding Mary the Daughter of Charles, of her rightful inheritance; for the which cauſe the Burgundians were the more willing to joyn her Marriage with Maximilian, Son of Frederick the Emperor: by reaſon whereof the Title of Burgundy was firſt joyned to the houſe of Auſtria.

Wars between Charles Duke of Burgoyn and Frederick the Emperor.

Anno 1475. Charles Duke of Burgoine ſlain in war.

Ann. 1477.

Mary Daughter of Charles of Burgoyn married to Maximilian.

And thus have you the miſerable vexations and contentions among our Chriſtian Princes here in Europe deſcribed, under the reign of this Frederick the Third Emperor, ſo that almoſt no angle or portion of all Chriſtendom (whether we conſider the ſtate of the Church, or Civil Government) was free from diſcord, tumults, and diſſentions. This cankered worm of ambition ſo mightily creepeth, and every where prevaileth in theſe later ends of the world, that it ſuffereth neither reſt in Commonweals, nor peace in the Church, nor any ſparkle of charity almoſt to remain in the life of men. And what marvel then if the Lord ſeeing us ſo far to degenerate, not only from his precepts and counſels, but almoſt from the ſenſe and bond of nature, that Brother with Brother, Uncle with Nephew, Blood with Blood cannot agree, in ſtriving, killing, and fighting for worldly Dominions, do ſend therefore theſe cruel Turks upon us, ſo to ſcourge and devour us? Of whoſe bloody tyranny and daily ſpilling of Chriſtian blood hereafter (by the Grace of Chriſt) we will diſcourſe more at large, when we come to the peculiar conſideration of the Turkiſh Stories. In the mean time this ſhall be for us to note and obſerve not ſo much the ſcourge how grievous it is; but rather to behold the cauſes which bring the whip upon us, which is our own miſerable ambition and wretched wars among our ſelves.

War and diſſention among Chriſtian Princes.

The diſcord of Chriſtians ſcourged by the Turks.

And yet if this Chriſtian peace and love, left and commended ſo heartily unto us by the mouth of the Son of God, being now baniſhed out of Chriſtian Realms, and Civil Governance, might at leaſt find ſome refuge in the Church, or take Sanctuary among men profeſſing nothing but Religion, leſs cauſe we had to mourn. Now ſo it is, that as we ſee little peace and amity among Civil Potentates; ſo leſs we find in the ſpiritual ſort of them, which chiefly take upon them the adminiſtration of Chriſts Church. So that it may well be doubted whether the ſcourge of the Turk, or the civil ſword of Princes have ſlain more in the fields, or the Popes Keys have burnt more in Towns and Cities. And albeit ſuch as be profeſſed to the Church do not fight with Sword and Target for Dominions and Revenues, as warlike Princes do; yet this ambition, pride and avarice, appeareth in them nothing inferior unto other worldly Poteſtates; eſpecially if we behold and adviſe the doings and inſatiable deſires of the Court of Rome. Great arguments and proof hereof neither is hard to be found, nor far to be ſought, what Realm almoſt through all Chriſtendom hath not only ſeen with their eyes, but have felt in their purſes the ambition intolerable, and avarice inſatiable of that devouring Church, and alſo have complained upon the grievance thereof, but never could be redreſſed? What exactions and extortions have been here in England out of Biſhopricks, Monaſteries, Benefices, Deanries, Archdeaconries, and all other Offices of the Church, to fill the Popes Coffers? and when they had all done, yet every year brought almoſt ſome new invention from Rome to fetch in our Engliſh money; and if all the floods in England (yea in all Europe) did run into the See of Rome, yet were that Ocean never able to be ſatisfied.

Ambition and avarice of the Church of Rome.

¶ In France likewiſe what floods of money were ſwallowed up into this See of Rome? It was openly complained of in the Council of Baſil, as is teſtified by Henry Token, Canon and Ambaſſador of the Archbiſhop of Maidenburge, written in his Book intituled Rapulari, where he writeth that in the Council of Baſil, Ann. 1436, the Archbiſhop of Lions did declare that in the time of Pope Martin there came out of France to the Court of Rome, Nine Millions of Gold, which was gathered of the Biſhops and Prelates, beſides thoſe which could not be counted of the poor Clergy, which daily without number ran unto the Court of Rome, carrying with them all their whole ſubſtance. The Archbiſhop of Turonne ſaid alſo at Baſil, in the year of our Lord 1439, that Three Millions of Gold came unto Rome in his time, within the ſpace of fourteen years, from the Prelates and Prelacies, whereof no account could be made, beſide the poor Clergy which daily run to that Court. Let the man which feareth God judg what a devouring gulf this is; a Million containeth Ten hundred thouſand.

Ex Rapulario Henrici Token.

The See of Rome is turned into an Ocean, that hath no bottom.

What a Million is.

And what made Pope Pius the Second to labour ſo earneſtly to Lewis the Eleventh, the French King (who as is aforeſaid was a great enemy to the Houſe of Burgoine) that he would (according to his former promiſe) aboliſh and utterly extinguiſh the conſtitution eſtabliſhed before at the Council of Bitures, by King Charles the Seventh his Predeceſſor, called Pragmatica Sanctio; but only the ambition of that See, which had no meaſure, and their avarice which had no end? The ſtory is this, King Charles the Seventh the French King, willing to obey and follow the Council of Baſil, did ſummon a Parliament at Bitures; where by the full conſent of all the States in France, both Spiritual and Temporal, a certain conſtitution was decreed and publiſhed, called Pragmatica Sanctio; wherein was comprehended briefly the pith and effect of all the Canons and Decrees concluded in the Council of Baſil. The which conſtitution the ſaid King Charles willed and commanded through all his Realm inviolably to be obſerved and ratified for the honour and increaſe of Chriſtian Religion for ever. This was Ann. 1438.

Concilium Biturienſe.

Pragmatica Sanctio.

Ex Joan. Mario Belg. de Schiſmat. & Concilio, Cap. 24.

It followed that after the deceaſe of the foreſaid Charles the Seventh, ſucceeded King Lewis the Eleventh, who had promiſed before, being Dauphin, Pope Pius, that if he ever came to the Crown, the foreſaid Sanctio Pragmatica ſhould be aboliſhed. Whereupon Pius hearing him to be Crowned, did ſend unto him John Balvus a Cardinal, with his great Letters-patent, willing him to be mindful of his promiſe made. The King either willing, or elſe pretending a will to perform, and accompliſh that he had promiſed, directed the Popes Letters-patent, with the ſaid Cardinal, to the Council of Paris, requiring them to conſult upon the cauſe.

Pope Pius laboureth that Pragmatica Sanctio ſhould be aboliſhed.

Diſcord and Diſſention in the Church noted.

Thus the matter being brought and propoſed in the Parliament-Houſe, the Kings Attorney named Joannes Romanus, a man well ſpoken, ſingularly witted, and well reaſoned, ſtepping forth, with great eloquence, and no leſs boldneſs, proved the ſaid ſanction to be profitable, holy and neceſſary for the wealth of the Realm, and in no caſe to be aboliſhed. Unto whoſe ſentence the Univerſity of Paris adjoyning their conſent, did appeal from the attempts of the Pope to the next General Council. The Cardinal underſtanding this, took no little indignation thereat, fretting and fuming, and threatning many terrible things againſt them; but all his minatory words notwithſtanding, he returned again to the King, his purpoſe not obtained, Anno 1438. Ex Joan. Mario.

The Council of Paris appealeth from the Pope to the General Council. Vide ſupra.

Thus the Popes purpoſe in France was diſappointed, which alſo in Germany had come to the like effect, if Frederick the Emperor had there done his part likewiſe toward the Germans; who at the ſame time, bewailing their miſerable eſtate, went about with humble ſuit to perſwade the Emperor, that he ſhould no longer be under the ſubjection of the Popes of Rome, except they had firſt obtained certain things of them as touching the Charter of Appeals; declaring their eſtate to be far worſe, (although undeſerved) than the Frenchmen or Italians, whoſe ſervants (and eſpecially of the Italians) they are worthily to be called, except that their eſtate were altered. The Nobles and Commonalty of Germany did inſtantly intreat with moſt weighty reaſons and examples, both for the utility and profit of the Empire, to have the Emperors aid and help therein, for that which he was bound unto them by an Oath; alledging alſo the great diſhonour and ignominy in that they alone had not the uſe of their own laws, declaring how the French Nation had not made their ſuit unto their King in vain againſt the exactions of Popes, by whom they were defended; which alſo provided Decrees and Ordinances for the liberty of his people, and cauſed the ſame to be obſerved; the which thing the Emperor ought to foreſee within his Empire; and to provide for his People and States of his Empire, as well as other Kings do; for what ſhall come to paſs thereby, if that foreign Nations, having recourſe unto their Kings, being relieved and defended by them from the ſaid Exactions, and the Germans, and States of the Empire flying unto their Emperor, be by him forſaken, or rather betrayed and deprived of their own Laws and Decrees? The Emperor being moved, and partly overcome by their perſwaſions, promiſed that he would provide no leſs for them, than the King of France had done for the Frenchmen, and to make Decrees in that behalf. But the grave authority of Æneas Sylvius, as Platina writeth in the Hiſtory of Pius the ſecond, brake off the matter; who by his ſubtle and peſtiferous perſwaſions, did ſo bewitch the Emperor, that he, contemning the equal, juſt and neceſſary requeſts of his Subjects, choſe the ſaid Æneas to be his Embaſſador unto Calixtus then newly choſen Pope, to ſwear unto him in his name, and to promiſe the abſolute obedience of all Germany, as the only Country (as they call it) of obedience, neglecting the Ordinances and Decrees of their Country, as before he had done unto Eugenius the 4th, being Embaſſador for the ſaid Frederick, promiſing that he and all the Germans would be obedient unto him from henceforth in all matters, as well ſpiritual as temporal.

The complaint of the Germans to the Emperor, for help and aid againſt the oppreſſion of the Pope.

Thus twice Frederick of Auſtrich contemned and derided the Germans, and fruſtrating them of their native Decrees and Ordinances, brought them under ſubjection and bondage of the Pope; which partly was the cauſe that ſeven years before his death, he cauſed his Son Maximilian, not only to be choſen, but alſo crowned King of Romans, and did aſſociate him to the miniſtration of the Empire, leſt after his death (as it came to paſs) the Empire ſhould be tranſported into another Family, ſuſpecting the Germans, whom he had twice contrary to his Laws made ſubject, and in bondage unto the Popes Exactions; firſt before he was crowned in the time of Eugenius the fourth; and again, the ſecond time after his Coronation, and death of Pope Nicholas the fifth, denying their requeſts. Whereupon Germany being in this miſerable poverty and grievous ſubjection under the Popes tyranny and pollings with tears and ſighs lamenting their eſtate, continued ſo almoſt unto Luther's time; as the Hiſtories hereafter following do teſtifie.

Frederick made the Germans twice ſubject unto the Pope.

And here ceaſing with the ſtory of Frederick, we will now proceed to the Reign of Maximilian his ſon, omitting divers things elſe incident in the time of this Emperor; as firſt touching the unbrotherly contention and conflicts between this Frederick and Albertus his Brother, and Sigiſmundus his Uncle, for the Dukedom of Auſtria, after the death of Matthias afore mentioned. Omitting alſo to ſpeak of the long and cruel War between the Pruſſians and Polonians, with the religious Sect of them, which were called Tentones fratres ſanctæ Mariæ, in the time of Uladiſlaus: Omitting alſo the ſtrife and variance for the Dukedom of Millain, between Fredericus the Emperor, Alphonſus, Carolus Duke of Orleance, and Franciſcus Sfortia; And how the ſaid Princedom being after given to Sfortia, great Wars were kindled and long continued between Sfortia and the Millenerſ, then between the Milleners and Venetians, and after between the Frenchmen and the Milleners. All which tumults and commotions, as not pertinent greatly to the purpoſe of this ſtory, I refer to other Writers, where they are to be found more amply diſcourſed.

KING { 1 Ed. 4. } Frederick, Albertus his Brother, and Sigiſmund ſtrive for the Dukedom of Auſtria. War between Franciſcus Sforſa and the Venetians about Millain. War between Lewis the French K and the City of Millain.

This as more properly belonging to the ſtory of the Church, I thought good not to paſs over, touching ſuch as were condemned, and ſuffered the pains of fire for teſtimony of Chriſt and his Truth. Of whom one was John a Paſtor or a Neat-herd, which was keeper of Cattel: The other was Joannes de Weſalia, although not burned, yet perſecuted near to death, under the Reign of this Emperor Fredericus the 3d.

And firſt touching this John the Neat-herd, thus writeth Sebaſt. Munſterus, That the Biſhop of Herbipolis condemned and burned for an Heretick one John, which was a Keeper of Cattel at a Town called Nicholas Hauſen in Franconia, becauſe he taught and held that the life of the Clergy was ignominious and abominable before God. Ex Munſter.

John Neat-herd of Franconia Martyr. Anno 1476.

The other was Doctor Joannes Weſalia, who was complained upon unto Dietherus the Archbiſhop of Mentz, by the Thomiſts, upon certain Articles and Opinions gathered out of his Books. Wherefore the ſaid Dietherus fearing elſe to be depoſed again from his Biſhoprick, directeth forth Commiſſion to the Univerſities of Heidelburgh and Colen, to have the matter in examination; who conventing together the year above mentioned, called this Doctor de Weſalia before them, making him to ſwear that he ſhould preſent and give up all his Treatiſes, works and writings, whatſoever he had made or preached; that being done, they divided his Books amongſt themſelves, ſeverally every man to find out what Hereſies and Errors they could. His Articles and Opinions are theſe:

John de Weſalia perſecuted. Anno 1479.

That all men be ſaved freely, and through meer grace by faith in Chriſt. Free will to be nothing. That we ſhould only believe the Word of God, and not the Gloſs of any Man, or Fathers. That the Word of God is to be expounded with the collation of one place with another. That Prelates have no authority to make Laws, nor to expound the Scriptures, by any peculiar right given unto them more than to another. That mens Traditions, as Faſtings, Pardons, Feaſts, long Prayers, Peregrinations and ſuch like, are to be rejected. Extream Unction and Confirmation to be reproved; Confeſſion and Satisfaction to be reprehended. The Primacy of the Pope alſo he affirmed to be nothing.

The Articles and Opinions of J. de Weſal. Free-will nothing. Prelates have no more power over Scriptures than other men. Extream Unction reproved. Againſt the primacy of the Pope.

Certain other Articles alſo were gathered out of him by his adverſaries, but in ſuch ſort, that they may ſeem rather to follow their own malicious gathering, than true intelligence of his mind, whereof more is to be underſtood in this proceſs hereafter.

Thus when Weſelianus was commanded to appear, there convented together firſt the Archbiſhop, the Inquiſitor, the Doctors of Colen, and the Doctors of Heidelburgh, with the Maſters of the ſame, and the Rector of the Univerſity of Mentz, the Dean of Faculties, Bacheloss of Divinity, and many other Maſters of the ſame Univerſity, Canons, Doctors, with the Biſhops Chancellor, and his Counſellors, beſides many religious Prelates, Scholars, with a Doctor of Francfort, the Summer and Bedles, which all met together in the great Hall of the Minorites, for the examination of this Jo. de Weſalia.

Frier Elton the Inquiſitor firſt ſitteth in the higheſt place, then after him, others according to their degree. In the beginning of the Examination, firſt the Inquiſitor be-

The Inquiſitor ſpeaks.

KING Ed. 4. beginneth with theſe words, Moſt Reverend Fathers and honourable Doctors, &c. Our reverend Father and Prince Elector hath cauſed this preſent Convocation to be called, to hear the examination of Maſter John de Weſalia, in certain ſuſpected Articles concerning the Catholick Faith. But ſomething I will ſay before, that may do him good, and deſire that two or three of them that favour him, or ſome other, will riſe up and give him counſel to forſake and leave his errors, to recognize himſelf, and to ask pardon; which if he will do, he ſhall have pardon; if he will not, we will proceed againſt him without pardon. And thus Weſalianus being cited, and brought in the midſt betwixt two Minorites, being very aged, and having a ſtaff in his hand, was let before the Inquiſitor. Who beginning to anſwer for himſelf with a long proteſtation, could not be ſuffered to proſecute his Oration, but was cut off, and required briefly to make an end, and to tell them in few words, whether he would ſtand to his opinions, or to the determination of the Church. To this he anſwered, that he never ſpake any thing againſt the determination of the Church, but ſaid, That he had written divers and ſundry Treatiſes, in the which if he had erred, or were found to ſay otherwiſe than well, he was contented to revoke and call back the ſame, and do all things that were requiſite. Then ſaid the Inquiſitor, Do you aſk then pardon? The other anſwered, Why ſhould I aſk pardon, when I know no crime or error committed? The Inquiſitor ſaid, Well, we will call you to the remembrance thereof, and proceed to the Examination.

J. de Weſalia brought before the Prelates.

The anſwer of Weſalianus reaſonable.

The quiet proceeding of the Inquiſitor.

In the mean time, others called upon him inſtantly to ask pardon. Then ſaid Weſalianus, I aſk pardon. Notwithſtanding the Inquiſitor proceeded to the Examination, reading there two Inſtruments, declaring that he had authority from the Apoſtolick See; after this, he cited the ſaid John to appear to his Examination. Thirdly, he commanded him under pain of diſobedience, in the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt, and under pain of Excommunication of the greater Curſe (from the which no man could abſolve him, but only the Pope, or the Inquiſitor, except only at the point of death) to tell plainly the truth upon ſuch things as ſhould be demanded of him concerning his faith, without ambages and ſophiſtication of words. And ſo being demanded firſt whether he did believe upon his Oath taken, that he was bound to tell the truth, although it were againſt himſelf or any other; To this he anſwered, Scio, that is, I know. Then the Inquiſitor biddeth him ſay, Credo, that is, I believe. To which he anſwered again, What need I ſay that I believe that thing which I know? There the Inquiſitor ſomething ſtirred with the matter, as hot as a Toaſt (as they ſay) cried with a loud voice, Maſter Joannes, Maſter Joannes, Maſter Joannes, ſay Credo, ſay Credo; then he anſwered, Credo.

The greater curſe of the people.

Scio.

Credo.

After this, being demanded whether he had written any Treatiſe, concerning the binding of humane Laws, to one Nicholas of Boheme; and whether he had written any Treatiſe of the Eccleſiaſtical power of Indulgences and Pardons, and of Faſting and other Treatiſes; he anſwered, That he believed that he had ſo written, and had conferred with divers learned men; alſo, That he had ſent to the Biſhop of Worms a certain Treatiſe of Faſting.

Many other interrogatories were miniſtred unto him, whereof ſome were vain, ſome falſe. Such as were more principal, here we will briefly touch, leaving out ſuperfluities.

Being demanded whether he was a fautor of the Bohemians, he ſaid, he was not. Alſo, being demanded concerning the Sacrament of the holy Body and Blood of our Lord, whether he thought Chriſt there to be contained really, or only divinely, and whether he did believe in the ſaid Sacrament, the ſubſtance of Bread there to remain, or only the form thereof; To this he anſwered, not denying but the Body of Chriſt was there really contained, and alſo that with the Body of Chriſt the ſubſtance of Bread did remain.

His opinion of the Sacrament.

After this, he was demanded his Opinion concerning Religious Men, as Monks, Nuns or Begwines, whether he thought them to be bound to the Vow of Chaſtity, or to the keeping of any other Vow, and whether he ſaid to the Friers Minorites any ſuch word in effect, I cannot ſave you in this your ſtate and Order. This he confeſſed that he had ſaid, how that not your Religion ſaveth you, but the grace of God, &c. not denying but they might be ſaved.

His opinion of Monks and Nuns. The Vow of Chaſtity.

Item, Being required whether he believed, or had written, that there is no mortal ſin, but which is expreſt to be mortal in the Canon of the holy Bible; To this he anſwered, that he did ſo believe as he hath written, till he was better informed. Likewiſe, being required what he thought of the Vicar of Chriſt in earth, he anſwered, That he believed that Chriſt left no Vicar in earth; for the confirmation whereof he alledged and ſaid, That Chriſt aſcending up to Heaven, ſaid Ecce ego vobiſcum ſum, &c. Behold I am with you, &c. In the which words he plainly declared, that he would ſubſtitute under him no Vicar here in earth; and ſaid moreover, if a Vicar ſignified any man which in the abſence of the Principal hath to do the works of the Principal, then Chriſt hath no Vicar here in earth.

Mortal ſin found by the Pope, beſide that which is expreſſed to be mortal in the Scripture.

What is this Article, but to make the Pope a God? Chriſt left no Vicar in earth.

In like manner, concerning Indulgences and Pardons, ſuch as the Church doth uſe to give, they demanded of him, whether they had any efficacy, and what he thought thereof; who anſwered again, That he had written a certain Treatiſe of that matter, and what he had written in that Treatiſe he would perſiſt therein, which was thus, That he believed that the treaſure-box of the merits of Saints could not be diſtributed of the Pope to others, becauſe that Treaſure is not left here in earth, for ſo it is written in the Apocalyps, Opera enim illorum ſequuntur illos, &c. that is, their works follow them.

Pardons and Indulgences be of no effect.

The treaſure of Saints merits is not in earth

Item, That their Merits could not be applied to other men, for the ſatisfaction of their pain due unto them; and therefore that the Pope and other Prelates, cannot diſtribute that treaſure to men.

It was objected to him moreover, that in the ſaid his Treatiſe he called Pardons and Indulgences, Pias fraudes fidelium, that is, holy frauds and deceits of the faithful.

This ſaying was taken out of one Castor Parienſis, which was wont to ſay, that Pardons were holy deſerts, becauſe that lay-men there were provoked, by naughty deſerts, to give good alms.

Alſo being demanded what he thought of the hallowing and bleſſing of Altars, Chalices, Veſtments, Wax Candles, Palms, Herbs, Holy-water, and other divine things, &c. He anſwered, That they had no ſpiritual vertue and power in them to drive away Devils, and that Holy-water hath no more efficacy than other water not hallowed, as concerning remiſſion of venial ſins, and driving away Devils, and other effects, which the School Doctors do attribute to it.

Item, For degrees of Marriage forbidden in the Scriptures, he believeth, That all Chriſtian men under deadly ſin are bound unto the ſame.

Degrees in Scripture forbidden to marry.

Item, That he believeth, That God may give grace to a man, having the uſe of reaſon, without all motion of free will. Alſo he thinketh, that Saint Paul in his Converſion did nothing of his own free will for his Converſion. He believeth moreover, That God may give ſuch grace to a man having the uſe of reaſon, not doing that which in him is.

Item, He affirmed, That nothing is to be believed which is not contained in the Canon of the Bible.

Nothing to be believed, but which is in Scripture contained.

Alſo, That the Elect are ſaved only by the grace of God.

Beſides all theſe, moreover he was charged with the old Opinion of the Grecians, which they did hold contrary to the Roman Church, unto the time of the Council of Ferraria above mentioned, concerning the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt.

The Wedneſday next following, three Doctors, the Suffragan, Herwicus and Jacobus Sprenger, were ſent unto him, with perſwaſions to exhort him; and when he would not ſtand to their Canons, whereby they went about to refute his Doctrine, he was then demanded of Herwicus, why he would believe rather the four Evangeliſts, than the Goſpel of Nicodemus? To whom he anſwered, becauſe he would. Being aſked again why he believed the four Evangeliſts, he ſaid, becauſe he ſo received of his Parents. Then being demanded, why he would not believe the Doctors; becauſe (ſaid he) their Doctrine is not Canonical Scripture. Again, it was to him objected, why he would be credited himſelf when he preached, ſeeing he would not believe the holy Doctors? To whom he anſwered in this wiſe, ſaying, That he did preach as his duty was; but whether they gave credit to his words, he did not care.

The Church giveth witneſs who were the Writers of the Scriptures, but hath no authority above that which is written.

This Examination being ended, after theſe Articles were condemned by the Inquiſitor and his Aſſiſtants, then ſaid he after this manner, As you do with me, if Chriſt himſelf were here, he might be condemned as an Heretick.

By this Inquiſition, Chriſt himſelf might be condemned.

After

After this they ſent divers to him to have communication with him, and to perſwade him, ſending alſo to him, with his Articles, a form of asking pardon; at length, within three or four days after, he was content to condeſcend unto them, and to ſubmit himſelf to their holy Mother Church, and the information of the Doctors. In the Book of Orthuinus Gratius, and in Paralipomena, adjoyned to Abbas Urſpergenſis, we read theſe words written of this Joannes de Weſalia, Dempto ſolo articulo de proceſſione ſpiritus ſancti in aliis videtur non ita grave cenſura, &c. That is, Except only the Article of the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt, in other Articles it ſeemeth that he was not to be chaſtned with ſo ſharp cenſure, if reſpite and ſpace had been given him, if good counſellors had been about him, if all they which did accuſe and moleſt him had not been de via realium, as Thomiſts, that is, of the Sect of Thomas; which Thomiſts were ſet at that time againſt the other Sect of the Seculars, which were called Nominales, and therefore they ſo ſpited this Doctor, becauſe he did not hold with their Thomas, againſt whom otherwiſe (had it not been for that cauſe) they would never have been ſo fierce and malicious in proceeding againſt him. I take God to witneſs, which knoweth all things, that this Proceſs which was made againſt him, for his revoking and burning of his Books, did greatly diſpleaſe Maſter Engeline of Brunſwick, a great Divine, and alſo, Maſter John Keiſersburg, being both learned and famous men; but namely Maſter Engeline thought, that too much malice and raſhneſs was ſhewed in handling of that ſame man, and did not fear to ſay, That many of his Articles, and the greater part thereof, might be holden well enough, and greatly blamed the mad and phantaſtical diſſention of the Thomiſts, ſeeking by all manner of ways how to get the triumph over the Secular Divines, &c. Hæc ille.

Ex Ort. Gra.

Although this aged and feeble old man by weakneſs was conſtrained to give over unto the Romiſh Clergy by outward profeſſion of his mouth; yet notwithſtanding, his Opinions and Doctrine declared his inward heart, of what judgment he was, if fear of death preſent had not inforced him to ſay otherwiſe than he did think. Again, although he had revoked after their minds, yet we read no ſuch form of Recantation to be preſcribed to him to read openly unto the People, as the uſe is here in England. This ſtory of this man is more fully to be found in the Books of Orth. Gratius, &c.

Doctor John de Weſalia revoketh his opinion.

As touching the Reign of this Frederick Emperor, ſeeing we have comprehended hitherto ſufficiently the moſt principal matters in his time incurrent, we will now paſs forward (the Lord guiding us) to Maximilian, after I have firſt given a brief Memorandum of three valiant Princes and Captains, flouriſhing in the ſame time of this Frederick in Germany: Of the which, one was Albert Duke of Saxony; who for his renowned and famous acts, was called by publick voice, Dextra manus Imperii, The right hand of the Empire. The other was Albert, Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, to whom alſo the name was attribute, named of Pope Pius to be Achilles Germanicus. The third was Frederick Earl Palatine, ſirnamed Victoriosus, who manfully defended the Freedom and Majeſty of the Empire, from the fraudulent oppreſſions of the Popes tyranny.

Albert Duke of Saxony, called Dextra manus Imperii. Albert Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, called Achilles Germanicus.

{Ann. 1484} In the year of our Lord 1484, in this Emperors time died Pope Sixtus the fourth, a little before touched, a Monſter rather of Nature, than a Prelate of the Church. Of him writeth Platina, that unjuſtly he vexed all Italy with war and diſſention. Agrippa writing of him ſaith, That among all the Bawds of theſe our later days, which were builders of Brothel-houſes, this Pope Sixtus the 4th, ſurmounted all other; who at Rome erected a Stews of double abomination, not only of Women, but alſo, &c. whereupon no ſmall gain redounded to his Coffers. For every ſuch common Harlot in Rome paid him a July piece, the ſumm whereof grew in the year, ſome while to 2000, at length to 4000 Duckets. Whereunto accordeth right well the Epitaph of John Sapidus, which in the end hereof we will annex.

{KING Ed. 4.} Ex Joan. Laziardo lib. 8. Hiſt. Univerſ. ca. 284.

Of the ſaid Pope it is recorded, that he was a ſpecial Patron and Tutor to all Begging-Friers, granting them to have and enjoy Revenues in this World, and in the World to come everlaſting life. Among the which Friers there was one named Alanus de rupe, a black Frier, which made the Roſary of our Ladies Pſalter (ſo they term it) and erected a certain new fraternity upon the ſame, called Fraternitas Coronariorum, pertaining to the Order of the Dominicks, of the which Order Jacobus Sprenger, one of the condemners of Joannes de Weſalia above mentioned, was a great advancer, and eſpecially this Pope Sixtus the fourth, who gave to the ſaid Fraternities large graces and priviledges.

A large gift of this Pope to the begging Friers.

Alanus author of our Lady Pſalter.

Concerning the Inſtitution of this Roſary, there was a Book ſet forth about the year of our Lord 1480. In the beginning whereof is declared, That the bleſſed Virgin entred into the Cell of this Alanus, and was ſo familiar with him, that not only ſhe did eſpouſe him to her Husband, but alſo kiſſed him with her heavenly mouth, and alſo for more familiarity opened to him her Paps, and poured great plenty of her own milk into his mouth. For the confirmation whereof the ſaid Alanus this holy Father (ſaith the ſtory) did ſwear deeply, curſing himſelf, if it were not thus as he had made relation.

Then had the bleſſed Virgin Mary a Husband.

An ok! Knave to ſuck his Wives breaſt.

This fabulous figment when I read in the Centuries of John Bale, I began with my ſelf to miſtruſt the credit thereof, and had thought not to trouble the Reader with ſuch incredible Forgeries. But as the Providence of God worketh in all things, ſo alſo it appeared in this, that the very ſame Book came to my hands at the writing hereof, wherein this ſelf ſame narration is contained, wherein I found not only this to be true, which in John Bale is expreſſed, but alſo found in like manner another wonder as prodigious as this; where in another place not far off it is ſtoried in the ſame Book, how that about the time of Saint Dominick; there was a certain Matron in Spain, named Lucia, which being taken Captive by the Saracens, having her Husband killed, was carried great with Child into the Turkiſh Land.

When the time of her labour came, ſhe being left deſolate among Beaſts and Hogs, and remembring this twice holy Roſary; (firſt inſtituted, ſaith the Book, by Saint Dominick, and afterward renewed by Alanus) eftſoons the holy Virgin was ready and ſtood by her, and received the Child at her travel, ſupplying all the parts of a diligent Midwife; and moreover cauſing a Prieſt ſuddenly to appear, ſhe gave the Child to be Chriſtened, calling it after her own name, Marianus; and ſo was ſhe Wife to Alanus, Midwife to Lucia, and Godmother to Marianus. Which ſtory if it be true, then is the Popes Canon by this example to be controlled, which permitteth Midwives in time of neceſſity to baptiſe, ſeeing the bleſſed Virgin, playing the part her ſelf of a Midwife, durſt not baptiſe this Child without a Prieſt.

Mendacem memorem eſſe oportet.

It followeth more in the ſtory, that by the help of the ſaid bleſſed Virgin, this Lucia our Ladies Goſſip, after her Purification, was reſtored with her Child ſafe to her Country again. This Book, being in Latine and printed, beareth this Title Roſacea Auguſtiſſimæ Chriſtiferæ Mariæ corona; and in the front it ſheweth the name of Jodocus Biſſelajus, a Nobleman of Aquine. And this by the occaſion of Pope Sixtus. Which Sixtus, what a maintainer of blind Superſtition he was, partly by that afore ſpoken, partly by the end following it may be ſeen. For we read in certain Writers, that after this Pope had underſtanding that Hercules Eſtenſis, Duke of Ferraria, had joyned peace with the Venetians againſt his will, he was ſo grieved therewith, that for rancour of mind, within five days after he died; whereunto his Epitaph following giveth ſufficient Record. About whoſe time alſo died Platina, a man not unlearned, but yet a ſhameful flatterer and bearer with the wicked lives of the Popes.

But leaving here Pope Sixtus with his Verſes and Vices, let us now proceed, as we before promiſed, to enter the ſtory of Maximilian; keeping notwithſtanding, the order of our Kings here in England. For a little before the Reign of Maximilian, King Edward the fourth ceaſed his life, Anno 1483. after he had Reigned twenty two years. In the time of which King Edward this alſo is not to be forgotten, that one Burdet, a Merchant dwelling in Cheapſide, at the Sign of the Crown, which is now the Sign of the Flower-deluce, merrily ſpeaking to his Son, ſaid that he would make him inheritor of the Crown, meaning indeed his own Houſe. For the which words, King Edward cauſing them to be miſconſtrued, and interpreted as though he had meant the Crown of the Realm, within leſs ſpace than four hours, he was apprehended, judged, drawn and quartered in Cheapſide.

King EDWARD the Fifth.

K. Edward the Fifth.

THIS King Edward left behind him by his Wife Elizabeth, two Sons, Edward and Richard, and two Daughters, Elizabeth and Cecile. Which two Sons Edward and Richard, forſomuch as they were under Age, and not ripe to govern, a Conſultation was called among the Peers, to debate whether the aforeſaid young Prince and King, ſhould be under the government of his Mother, or elſe that Richard Duke of Gloceſter, Brother to King Edward the fourth, and Uncle to the Child, ſhould be Governor of the King, and Protector of the Realm, there hath been and is an old Adage, the words whereof, rather than the true meaning, wreſted out of Solomon, Væ Regno cujus Rex eſt puer, &c. i. Wo to the Kingdom, the King whereof is a Child, &c. But if I may find leave herein to thruſt in a Gloſs, I would add this, and ſay, Væ illi puero, qui ſui Regni Rex non eſt. i. Wo to that child, which is a King in a Kingdom unruly and ambitious. There was the ſame ſeaſon, among other noble Peers of the Realm, the Duke of Buckingham, a man of great authority, who had married King Edward's Wives Siſter. Becauſe the Duke being ſo near allied to the King, had been unkindly (as he thought) of the King entreated, having by him no advancement, nor any great friendſhip ſhewed, according to his expectation, he took part therefore with Richard Duke of Gloceſter, both againſt the Queen and her children, to make the foreſaid Duke the chief Governor and Protector. The which thing being brought to paſs, by the aid, aſſiſtance and working of the Duke of Buckingham, the Queen took Sanctuary with her younger Son; the elder Brother, which was the King, remaining in the cuſtody of the Duke of Gloceſter, his Uncle. Who, being now in a good towardneſs to obtain that which he had long looked for, ſought all the means, and ſoon compaſſed the matter, by falſe colour of diſſembled words, by perjury, and labour of friends, namely of the Duke of Buckingham, and the Cardinal Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that the other Brother alſo ſhould be committed to his credit. Thus the ambitious Protector and unnatural Uncle, having the poſſeſſion of his two Nephews, and innocent Babes, thought himſelf almoſt up the Wheel where he would climb; although he could not walk in ſuch miſts and clouds, but his deviſed purpoſes began to be eſpied; which cauſed him more covertly to go about to remove from him all ſuſpicion, and to blind the peoples eyes. But before he could accompliſh his execrable enterpriſe, ſome there were whom he thought firſt muſt be rid out of the way, as namely the Lord Haſtings, and the Lord Stanley; who as they were ſitting together in Council within the Tower, the Protector (the matter being ſo appointed before) ſuddenly ruſhed in among them, and after a few words there communed, he ſuddenly haſted out again, his mind belike being full of miſchief and fury, was not quiet. Who within the ſpace of an hour returned again into the Chamber, with a ſtern countenance and a frowning look, and ſo there ſate down in his place. When the Lords were in great marvel and muſe at the meaning hereof, then he out of a cankered heart thus began to bray, asking them, What are they worthy to have, which go about to imagine the deſtruction of him being ſo near to the Kings Bloud, and Protector of the Realm? At the which queſtion as the other Lords ſate muſing, the Lord Haſtings, becauſe he had been more familiar with him, thus anſwered, That they were worthy of puniſhment, whatſoever they were. Which when the other Lords alſo had affirmed; that is (quoth the Protector) yonder Sorcereſs, my Brothers Wife, meaning the Queen and other with her; adding moreover, and ſaying, That Sorcereſs and other of her Council, as Shore's Wife with her affinity, have by their Witchcraft thus waſted my body, and therewith ſhewed forth his left Arm, a weariſh withered thing, as it was never otherwiſe, as was well known.

The deviliſh Protector picketh quarrels.

The Queen and Shore's Wife falſly accuſed of the Protector to be witch his Arm.

This Shore's Wife had been before a Concubine to King Edward, and afterward was kept by the ſame Lord Haſtings. Moreover, here is to be noted, that by the conſent of the ſaid Lord Haſtings, the cruel Protector had deviſed about the ſame time, the Kindred of the Queen innocently to be beheaded at Pomfret, of meer deſpite and hatred. Wherefore, this puniſhment not undeſervedly, by the juſt hand of God, fell upon the Lord Haſtings.

Adultery puniſhed of God.

Murder juſtly puniſhed of God.

It followeth then more in the ſtory, that when the Lord Haſtings had heard of theſe falſe accuſations of the Tyrant, which he knew to be untrue; Certainly (my Lord) ſaid he, if they have ſo done, they be worthy of heinous puniſhment. Why, quoth the Protector, doſt thou ſerve me with if and with and? I tell thee, they have ſo done, and that I will make good on thy body, Traytor; and therewith giving a great rap on the Board (for a token or a watchword) one cried Treaſon without, and forthwith the Chamber was full of harneſſed men. The Protector then approaching to the Lord Haſtings, arreſted him as a Traytor. Another let fly at the Lord Stanley; who to avoid the blow, ſhrunk under the Table, or elſe his Head had been cleft aſunder; notwithſtanding he received ſuch a wound, that the bloud ran about his ears. There were in that Council the ſame time the Archbiſhop of York, and Doctor Morton Biſhop of Ely, (by whoſe procurement afterward King Henry the Seventh was ſent for into England, and he made Archbiſhop after that of Canterbury) theſe with the Lord Stanley diverſly were beſtowed in divers Chambers. The Lord Haſtings was commanded to ſpeed and ſhrieve him apace, for before Dinner the Protector ſware by Saint Paul that he ſhould die; and ſo incontinently, without further judgment, his Head was ſtricken off, by whoſe counſel the Queens Kindred were at the ſame time and day beheaded at Pomfret.

L. Haſtings arreſted for a Traytor.

The tyranny of the Protector.

The Lord Haſtings beheaded.

After this tyrannous Murder accompliſhed, the miſchievous Protector aſpiring ſtill to the Crown, to ſet his devices forward, firſt through gifts and fair promiſes, did ſuborn Doctor Shaw a famous Preacher then in London, at Pauls Croſs to inſinuate to the people, that neither King Edward with his Sons, nor the Duke of Clarence were lawfully begotten, nor the very Children of the Duke of York, but begotten unlawfully by other perſons in Adultery on the Dutcheſs their Mother, and that he alone was the true and only lawful Heir of the Duke of York. Moreover, to declare and to ſignifie to the audience, that King Edward was never lawfully married to the Queen, but his Wife before was Dame Elizabeth Lucy, and ſo the two Children of King Edward to be baſe and Baſtards, and therefore the Title of the Crown moſt rightly to pertain unto the Lord Protector. Thus this falſe flatterer and loud lying Preacher, to ſerve the Protectors humour, ſhamed not moſt impudently to abuſe that holy Place, that reverend Auditory, the ſacred Word of God, taking for his Theme, Adulteræ plantationes non dabunt radices altas, &c. which he Example for all flattering Preachers to beware.

When this Sermon would take no effect with the people, the Protector, unmercifully drowned in ambition, reſted not thus, but within a few days after excited the Duke of Buckingham, firſt to break the matter in covert talk to the Mayor and certain Heads of the City picked out for the purpoſe; that done, to come to the Guildhall, to move the people by all flattering and lying perſwaſions to the ſame, which ſhameleſs Shaw before had preached at Pauls Croſs. Which the Duke with all diligence and helps of eloquence, being a man both learned and well ſpoken, endeavoured to accompliſh, making to the people a long and artificial Oration, ſuppoſing no leſs, but that the people, allured by his craftie inſinuations, would cry, King Richard, King Richard. But there was no King Richard in their mouths, leſs in their hearts. Whereupon the Duke looking to the Lord Mayor, and asking what this ſilence meant, contrary to the promiſe of the one, and the expectation of the other; it was then anſwered of the Mayor, that the people peradventure well underſtood him not: wherefore the Duke, reiterating his narration in other words, declared again that he had done before. Likewiſe the third time he repeated his Oration again and again. Then the Commons which before ſtood mute, being now in amaze, ſeeing this opportunity, began to mutter ſoftly among themſelves, but yet no King Richard could ſound in their lips, ſave only that in the nether end of the Hall, certain of the Dukes ſervants, with one Naſhfield, and other belonging to the Protector, thruſting into the Hall among the Preaſe, began ſuddenly at mens backs to cry King Richard, King Richard, throwing up their Caps, whereat the Citizens turning back their heads, marvelled not a little, but ſaid nothing.

The Duke and the Lord Mayor with that ſide, taking this for ſufficient teſtimony, incontinent came blowing for haſte to the Protector, then lying at Baynards Caſtle. Where the matter being made before, was now ſo contrived, that forſooth humble petition was made in the name of the whole Commons, and that with three ſundry ſutes, to the humble and ſimple Protector, That he, although it was utterly againſt his will to take it, yet would of his humility ſtoop ſo low, as to receive the heavy Kingdom of England upon his ſhoulders. At this their tender requeſt and ſute of the Lords and Commons made (ye muſt know how) the mild Duke, ſeeing no other remedy, was contented at length to yield, although ſore againſt his will (ye muſt ſo imagine) and to ſubmit himſelf ſo low, as of a Protector to be made King; not much herein unlike to our Prelates in the Popiſh Church, who when they have before well compounded for the Popes Bulls, yet muſt they for manner ſake make courteſie, and thrice deny that for which they ſo long before have gaped, and ſo ſweetly have payed for.

King RICHARD the Third, Uſurper.

K. Richard, Uſurper.

AND thus Richard Duke of Gloceſter took upon him to be made and Proclaimed King of England, the year aforeſaid, Anno 1583. in the Month of June. Who then coming to the Tower by Water, firſt made his Son, a child of ten year old, Prince of Wales, and John Haward (a man of great induſtry and ſervice) he advanced to be Duke of Northfolk, and Sir Thomas Haward his Son he ordained Earl of Surry. Alſo William Lord Barkley was appointed Earl of Nottingham. Francis Lord Lovel was made Viſcount Lovel. Lord Stanley for fear of his Son was delivered out of the Tower, and made Steward of the Kings Houſhold. Likewiſe the Archbiſhop of York was ſet free; but Morton Biſhop of Ely was committed to the Duke of Buckingham, by whom was wrought the firſt device to bring in Henry Earl of Richmond into England, and to co conjoyn Marriage between Elizabeth King Edward's Daughter and him, whereby the two Houſes of York and Lancaſter were united together.

After the Kingdom of England was thus alotted to King Richard the Uſurper, as in manner above remembred, he tarried not long for his Coronation, which was ſolemnized the Month next enſuing, the ſixth day of July.

{KING Ric. 3.}

K. Richard crowned.

The triumph and ſolemnity of his uſurped Coronation being finiſhed, and all things to the ſame appertaining, this unquiet Tyrant yet could not think himſelf ſafe, ſo long as young Edward the right King and his Brother were alive; wherefore the next enterpriſe which he did ſet upon was this, how to rid thoſe innocent Babes out of the way, that he might reign King alone.

In the mean time, while all this ruffling was in hand, what dread and ſorrow the tender hearts of theſe fatherleſs and friendleſs children were in, what little joy of themſelves, what ſmall joy of life they had, it is not ſo hard as dolorous for tender hearts to underſtand. As the younger Brother lingred in thought and heavineſs; ſo the Prince which was eleven years old, was ſo out of heart, and ſo fraught with fear, that he never tyed his points, nor joyed good day, till the traiterous impiety of their cruel Uncle had delivered them of their wretchedneſs which was not long in diſpatching. For after King Richard their Uncle had firſt attempted to compaſs his deviliſh device by Robert Brakenbury Conſtable of the Tower, and could not win him to ſuch a cruel fact (to die therefore) then he got one James Tyril, joyning with him J. Dighton, and Miles Forreſt, to perpetrate this heinous murther. Which Dighton and Forreſt, about midnight entring into their Chamber, ſo bewrapped and intangled them amongſt the Cloths, keeping down the Featherbed and Pillows hard unto their mouths, that within a while they ſmothered and ſtifled them piteouſly in their Bed.

And thus ended theſe two young Princes their lives, through the wretched cruelty of theſe forenamed tormentors, who, for their deteſtable and bloudy murther committed, eſcaped not long unpuniſhed by the juſt hand of God. For firſt Miles Forreſt, at S. Martins le graund, by piece-meal miſerably rotted away; John Dighton lived at Calis long after, ſo diſdained and hated, that he was pointed at of all men, and there died in great miſery. Sir James Tyril was beheaded at Tower-Hill for Treaſon. Alſo King Richard himſelf, within a year and a half after, was ſlain in the field, hacked and hewed of his enemies hands, torn and tugged like a Cur-dog.

Furthermore, the ſaid juſtice of Gods hand let not the Duke of Buckingham eſcape free, which was a great maintainer and ſetter up of this butcherly Uſurper: for leſs than within a year after, ſo God wrought, that he was himſelf beheaded for Treaſon by the ſaid King, whom he ſo unjuſtly before had advanced and ſet up.

The puniſhment of God upon the Duke of Buckingham

In the ſame Catalogue and order of theſe wicked doers afore recited, we have alſo to comprehend two other, as well worthy of memorial as the beſt, or rather as the worſt. The name of the one was Doctor Shaw above rehearſed; The other Doctor Pinky, Provincial of the Auſten Friers; both famous Preachers, and both Doctors in Divinity, both of more learning than vertue (ſaith the ſtory) of more fame than learning, and yet of more learning than truth. Shaw made a Sermon in praiſe of the Protector, before his Coronation. Pinky preached after his Coronation. Both were ſo full of tedious flattery, that no good ears could abide them. Pinky in his Sermon ſo loſt his voice, that he was feign to leave off and came down in the midſt. Dr. Shaw by his Sermon loſt his honeſty, and ſoon after his life, for very ſhame of the world, ſo that he never durſt after that ſhew his face again. But as for the Friar, he was ſo far paſt ſhame, that the loſs thereof did little touch him. Mention was made a little before of Doctor Morton Biſhop of Ely, by whoſe means the device was firſt broached, for the conjoyning of the two Houſes of York and Lancaſter together. This deviſe was firſt broken to the Duke of Buckingham, which ſoon after coſt him his life. But that Biſhop, more crafty to ſave himſelf, incontinent fled into Britain. Notwithſtanding, the device once being broached, was ſo plauſible and took ſuch effect, that meſſage was ſent over the Sea to Henry Earl of Richmond, by his Mother, and by the Queen, Mother to the Lady Elizabeth, that if he would make his return, and promiſe to marry with the ſaid Lady Elizabeth King Edward's Daughter, he ſhould be received. matter which is ſufficiently ſet forth by Sir Tho.More, ſo ornately, it needeth not.

Earl Henry maketh preparation toward his journey.

Briefly, (to contract that in a ſmall compaſs of words, which was not ſo ſmall a thing in doing) after that the Earl Henry, with ſuch other baniſhed men as fled out of England at the taking of the Duke of Buckingham, had perfect intelligence by his Mother, and by the Queen and other friends more out of England, how the caſe of the Realm ſtood, and how it was here purpoſed by his friends, that is, that he ſhould with all convenient ſpeed haſte his return over into England, promiſing to marry with Lady Elizabeth; he with all diligence, as time and preparation would ſerve, advanced forward his journey, being well helped and furniſhed by Francis Duke of Britain, and ſo ſhipped his men. Albeit his firſt Voyage ſped not; for that, the Winds turning contrary, by force of Weather his Ships were diſperſed, and he repulſed back into France again.

The arriving of Henry Earl of Richmond in Wales.

His ſecond Voyage was more proſperous. Who taking the Seas at Harfler, in the Month of Auguſt, Anno 1485, accompanied only with two thouſand men, and a ſmall number of Ships, arrived at Milford-Haven in Wales, and firſt came to Dale, then to Harford weſt, where he was joyfully received, and alſo by the coming in of Arnold Butler and the Pembroke men, was in power increaſed. From thence he removing by Cardigan to Shrewsbury, and then to [illegible], and ſo to Stafford, from thence to Lichfield, his Army ſtill more and more augmented. Like as a great flood, by coming in of many ſmall Rivers, gathereth more abundance of water; ſo to this Earl, divers noble Captains and men of power adjoyned themſelves, as Richard Griffith, John Morgan, Rice ap Thomas, then Sir George Talbot, with the young Earl of Shrewsbury his Ward, Sir William Stanley, Sir Thomas Burchier, and Sir Walter Hungerford, Knights. At the laſt the ſaid Earl, hearing of the Kings coming, conducted his whole Army to Tamworth.

K. Richard gathered his power to encounter with Earl Henry.

King Richard firſt hearing of the arrival of the Earl Henry in the parts of Wales after ſuch a ſlender ſort, did give little or no regard unto it. But after underſtanding that he was come to Lichfield, without reſiſtance or incumbrance, he was ſore moved, and exceedingly took on, curſing and crying out againſt them which had ſo deceived him, and in all poſt ſpeed ſent for John Duke of Northfolk, Henry Earl of Northumberland, Thomas Earl of Surry, with other his friends of ſpecial truſt. Robert Brakenbury alſo, Lieutenant of the Tower, was ſent for, with Sir Thomas Burchier, and Sir Walter Hungerford, with certain other Knights and Eſquires, of whom he partly miſdoubted, or had ſome ſuſpicious jealouſie. Thus King Richard, after moſt forcible manner, well fortified and accompanied, leaving nothing undone that diligence could require, ſet forward toward his enemies. The Earl by this time was come to Tamworth, to whom ſecretly in the Evening reſorted Sir John Savage, Sir Bryan Sanford, Sir Simon Digby, and many other, forſaking the part of King Richard, whom all good men hated, as he no otherwiſe deſerved. The King, having perfect knowledge the Earl to be encamped at Tamworth, embattelled himſelf in a place near to a Village called Boſworth, not far from Leiceſter, appointing there to encounter with his adverſaries. Here the matter lay in great doubt and ſuſpence concerning the Lord Stanley, (which was the Earls Father-in-law, and had married his Mother) to what part he would encline. For although his heart went (no doubt) with the Earl, and had ſecret conference with him the night before, yet becauſe of his Son and Heir George Lord Strange, being then in the hands of King Richard, left the King ſhould attempt any prejudicial thing againſt him, he durſt not be ſeen openly to go that way where in heart he favoured, and therefore cloſely kept himſelf between both, till the puſh came that his help might ſerve at a pinch.

K. Richard taketh the field of Boſworth.

This Lord Stanley was he, which was hurt at the Tower when the L. Haſtings was arreſted.

The number of the Earls part exceeded not to the one half of the ſide of King Richard. When the time and the place was appointed, where the two Battels ſhould encounter and joyn together, ſore ſtripes and great blows were given on both ſides, and many ſlain. If number and multitude might govern the ſucceſs of Battel, King Richard had double to the Earl. But God is he, not Man that giveth Victory, by what means it ſeemeth to his Divine Providence beſt. In what order, and by what occaſion this Field was won and loſt, the certain intelligence we have not certainly expreſſed, but only the Hiſtory of Polydore Virgil, whom Sir Thomas More doth follow word for word. In the which ſtory it doth appear, that as theſe two Armies were coupling together, King Richard underſtanding by his Eſpials where the Earl of Richmond was, and how he was but ſlenderly accompanied, and ſeeing him to approach more near unto him, rather carried with courage, than ruled with reaſon, ſet Spurs to his Horſe, and ranging out of the compaſs of his Ranks, preſſed toward the Earl, ſetting upon him ſo ſharply, that firſt he killed Sir William Brandon the Earls Standard-bearer, Father to the Lord Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, then after overthrew Sir John Cheinie, thinking likewiſe to oppreſs the Earl. But as the Lord by his ſecret Providence diſpoſeth the event of all things, as the Earl with his Men about him, being overmatched, began to deſpair of Victory, ſuddenly and opportunely came Sir William Stanley with three thouſand well appointed able men, whereby King Richard's men were driven back, and he himſelf, cruelly fighting in the thick of his enemies, was there ſlain, and brought to his confuſion and death, which he worthily deſerved.

In the mean time the Earl of Oxford, who had the guiding of the foreward, diſcomfited the forefront of King Richard's Hoſt, and put them to flight, in which Chaſe many were ſlain, of Noblemen eſpecially above other, John Duke of Northfolk, Lord Ferrers, Sir Richard Radcliff, and Robert Brankenbury Lieutenant of the Tower, &c. Lord Thomas Haward Earl of Surrey there ſubmitted himſelf, and although he was not received at firſt to grace, but long remained in the Tower, yet at length for his fidelity, he was delivered and advanced to his recovered honour and dignity again.

Duke of Northfolk ſlain. L. Thomas Haward Earl of Surrey advanced by King Henry 7th.

This King Richard had but one Son, who, ſhortly after the cruel Murther of King Edward's Sons, was taken with ſickneſs and died. The Wife of the ſaid King Richard (whether by poyſon or by ſickneſs) died alſo a little before the Field of Boſworth, after whoſe deceaſe, the ſtory of Polydore and of Sir Thomas More affirmeth, that he intended himſelf to marry the Lady Elizabeth, his own Brothers Daughter, and ſo to prevent the Earl of Richmond.

K. Richard's Son puniſhed for the wickedneſs of his Father. K. Richard purpoſed to marry Elizabeth his Brothers Daughter.

Morever, as touching the Lord Stanley, thus reporteth the ſtory, that King Richard being in Boſworth Field, ſent for the Lord Stanley by a Purſevant, to advance forward with his company, and come to his preſence; otherwiſe he ſware by Chriſts Paſſion, that he would ſtrike off his Sons Head before Dinner. The Lord Stanley ſent word again, That if he did, he had more Sons alive. Whereupon the King immediately commanded the Lord Strange to be beheaded; which was the very time when both the Armies were within ſight, and were ready to joyn together. Wherefore the Kings Counſellors, pondering the time and the caſe, perſwaded the King that it was now time to fight, and not to do execution, adviſing him to delay the matter till the Battel were ended. And ſo (as God would) King Richard breaking his Oath, or rather keeping his Oath, for he himſelf was ſlain before Dinner, the Lord Strange was committed to be kept Priſoner within the Kings Tent; who then, after the Victory gotten, was ſought out and brought to his joyful Father. And thus have ye the tragical life and end of this wretched King Richard.

The Lord Strange marvellouſly preſerved

Henry the Earl of Richmond, after hearty thanks given to Almighty God for his glorious Victory obtained, proceeded to the Town of Leiceſter, where was brought to him, by the Lord Strange, the Crown, and put on the Earls Head.

In the mean time the dead Corps of King Richard was ſhamefully carried to the Town of Leiceſter, being naked and deſpoiled to the skin; and being truſſed behind a Purſevant of Arms, was carried like a Hog or a Dog, having his Head and Arms hanging on the one ſide of the Horſe, and the Legs on the other ſide, all ſprinkled with mire and bloud. And thus ended the uſurped Reign of King Richard, who reigned two Years and two Months, Ex Polyd. & Th. More. { Anno 1485

King HENRY the Seventh.

King Henry the 7th.

WHEN King Henry, by the Providence of God, had obtained this Triumphant Victory and Diadem of the Realm, firſt ſending for Edward Plantaginet Earl of Warwick, Son to George Duke of Clarence, and committing him to ſafe cuſtody within the Tower, from Leiceſter he removed to London, and not long after, according to his Oath and Promiſe made before, eſpouſed to him the young Lady Elizabeth, Heir of the Houſe of York; whereby both the Houſes of York and Lancaſter were conjoyned together, to the no little rejoycing of all Engliſh hearts, and no leſs quiet unto the Realm, which was Anno 1485. This King Reigned 23 Years and 8 Months, and being a Prince of great Policy, Juſtice and Temperance, kept his Realm in good tolerable rule and order. And here interrupting a little the courſe of our Engliſh matters, we will now (the Lord willing) enter the ſtory above promiſed, of Maximilian the Emperor, and matters of the Empire, eſpecially ſuch as pertain to the Church.

King Henry married with Elizabeth. The two Houſes of York and Lancaſter joyned together.

¶ Maximilian the Emperor.

{Ann. 1486} Maximilian Emperor.

IN the Year of our Lord 1486, Fredericus waxing aged, and partly alſo miſtruſting the hearts of the Germans, who had complained before of their grievances, and could not be heard; and therefore miſdoubting that his Houſe, after his deceaſe, ſhould have the leſs favour among them, for that cauſe in his life time did aſſociate his Son Maximilian to be joyned Emperor with him; with whom he Reigned the ſpace of ſeven years, till the death of the ſaid Frederick his Father, who departed Anno 1494, after he had Reigned over the Empire 53 years, lacking only but three years of the Reign of Auguſtus Cæſar, under whom was the Birth of our Lord and Saviour Chriſt.

The Reign and Death of Frederick Emperor. {Anno 1494.}

This Maximilian, as he was a valiant Emperor, prudent and ſingularly learned, ſo was his Reign intangled in many unquiet and difficil Wars; firſt in the lower Countries of Flanders and Brabant, where the ſaid Maximilian was taken captive, but ſhortly after reſcued and delivered again by his Father, Anno 1487. It was ſignified before how this Maximilian, by the advice of the Burgundians, had to Wife Mary the only Daughter of Charles Duke of Burgundy afore mentioned, by whom he had two children, Philip and Margaret, Anno 1477. Which Mary not long after, about the year of our Lord 1481. by a fall from her Horſe, fell into an Ague, and departed. Other Wars many more the ſame Maximilian alſo atchieved, both in France, in Italy, in Hungary, and divers beſides.

Maximilian marrieth the Dutcheſs of Burgoin. This Mary was Neece to King Edward the fourth.

The learning of Maximilian the commended

So happy was the education of this Emperor in good Letters, ſo expert he was in Tongues and Sciences, but eſpecially ſuch was his dexterity and promptneſs in the Latine ſtile, that he, imitating the example of Julius Ceſar, did write and comprehend in Latine Hiſtories his own acts and feats done, and that in ſuch ſort, that when he had given a certain taſte of his Hiſtory to one Pircamerus a learned Man, asking his judgment how his warlike ſtile of Latine did like him, the ſaid Pircamerus did affirm and report of him to John Carion (the witneſs and writer of this ſtory) that he did never ſee nor read in any German ſtory, a thing more exactly (and that in ſuch haſte) done, as this was of Maximilian. Moreover, as he was learned himſelf, ſo was he a ſingular Patron and advancer of learned Students, as may well appear by the erecting and ſetting up the Univerſity of Wittenburgh. By this Emperor many in thoſe days were excited to the embracing as well of other Liberal Arts, as alſo namely, to the ſearching out of old Antiquities of Hiſtories, whereby divers were then by him firſt occaſioned in Germany, to ſet their minds, and to exerciſe their diligence in collecting and explicating matters pertaining to the knowledge of Hiſtory, as well of ancient as alſo of later times, as namely Cuſpinianus, Nauclerus, Conradus, Peutingerus, Manlius, and other.

Maximilian Writer of his own ſtories. Ex Joan. Carione.

Maximilian firſt ordainer of the Univerſity of Wittenberg.

Here now it began right well to appear, what great benefit was broached to the World by the Art and Faculty of Printing, as is before mentioned. Through the means of which Printing the Church and Commonwealth of Chriſt, began now to be repleniſhed with learned Men, as both may appear by this Emperor, being ſo indued himſelf with ſuch excellent knowledge of good Letters, and alſo by divers other famous and worthy wits, which began now in this age exceedingly to encreaſe and fruitfully; as Baptiſta Mantuanus, Aug. Politianus, Hermolaus, Barbarus, Picus Mirandula, and Franciſcus his Coſin, Rodol. Agricola, Pontanus, Philippus, Beroaldus, Marſilius, Ficinus, Volateranus, Georgius Valla, with infinite other.

{KING Hen. 7. Learned men begin to grow in Chriſtendom}

Among whom is alſo to be numbred Weſelus Groningenſis, otherwiſe named Baſilius, who was not long after Joan. de Weſalia above recited, both much about one time, and both great friends together. This Weſelus died in the year of our Lord 1490. After that Johannes Doctor de Weſalia aforeſaid, was condemned, this Weſelus being familiar with him, thought that the Inquiſitor would come and examine him alſo, as he himſelf in a certain Epiſtle doth write. He was ſo notable and worthy a man, that of the people he was called Lux Mundi, that is, The light of the World.

Dr. Weſelus Groningenſis.

Weſelus called Lux Mundi.

Concerning his Doctrine, firſt he reprehended the Opinion of the Papiſts, as touching Repentance, which they divided into three parts, of the which three parts, Satisfaction and Confeſſion he did diſallow. Likewiſe Purgatory and Supererogation of works and pardons he did diſprove, both at Rome and at Paris. He ſpake againſt the Popes Indulgences, by the occaſion whereof divers of the Popes Court perſwaded by him, began to ſpeak more freely againſt the ſame matter, than he himſelf had done.

The Doctrine of Weſelus Groningenſ.

The abuſes of Maſſes, and praying for the dead he diſallowed; and likewiſe the Supremacy of the Pope he utterly rejected (as appeareth in a Book of his, De ſacramento pœnitentiæ) denying utterly that any ſupream Head or Governor ought to be in the World over all other; affirming alſo, and ſaying many times, That the Pope had no authority to do any thing by commandment, but by truth, that is, ſo far as truth goeth with him, ſo far his ſentence to ſtand; neither that he ought to prevail by commanding, but only by teaching, ſo as every true Chriſtian Biſhop may prevail over another. Alſo in ſome place in his writings he denieth not, but that Popes and their ſpiritual Prelates, proceeding againſt Chriſts Doctrine, be plain Antichriſts. Such as were infirm and not able to perform the bond of Chaſtity taken upon them, he ſaid they might well break their Vow.

Ex lib. D. Weſeli. De ſacramento pœnitentiæ. The Popes ſupremacy written againſt.

Alſo the ſaid Weſelus witneſſeth, that the forefathers which were before Albert and Thomas, did reſiſt and withſtand the Popes Indulgences, calling them in their Writings plain Idolatry, meer fraud and error; adding moreover, that unleſs the ſeverity of ſome good Divines had withſtood theſe Pardons and Indulgences of the Pope, innumerable errors had overflown the Church.

Amongſt theſe works of Weſelus, there is a certain Epiſtle of one written to him, in which the Author of the Epiſtle confeſſeth, that in his time there was a certain learned man at Paris, called Mr. Thomas de Curſelis a Dean; who being in the Council of Baſil, where as divers began to advance the power of the Pope too far, declared and affirmed, to be ſaid to him of Chriſt, Quicquid ligaveris ſuper terram, erit ligatum & in cœlo, &c. Et non quicquid dixeris eſſe ligatum; that is, Whatſoever thou ſhalt bind upon earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven, but not, Whatſoever thou ſayſt to be bound. As who ſhould ſay, the Pope can not nor doth not bind therefore, becauſe he ſo ſaith, except truth and righteouſneſs go alſo with him; then he doth ſo bind indeed. There is a certain Book of this man amongſt divers others, which he intituled, De ſubditis & ſuperioribus, in the which he diſputeth greatly againſt the Pope and his Prelates; affirming that the Pope, unleſs his Faith and Doctrine be ſound, ought not to be obeyed. He affirmeth alſo that the Pope may err, and when he erreth, men ought by all manner of means to reſiſt him. Item, That great and ſuperfluous riches in the Clergy do not profit, but hurt the Church. That the Pope doth wickedly diſtribute the Rents of the Church, and the Church it ſelf, to unworthy Miniſters by Simony, for his own profit and gain, whereby it may appear, that he neither careth for God, nor the health of the Church. Item, That the precepts and commandments of the Pope and Prelates be no otherwiſe but as the counſels and precepts of Phyſicians, binding no further than they are found to be wholeſome and ſtanding with the truth of the word.

Ex epiſt. cujuſdam in opere Weſeli. Chriſts anſwer to Tho. de Curſelis touching this place, Quicquid ligaveris. Not whatſoever is ſaid to be looſed on Earth, is looſed in Heaven; but whatſoever is looſed in every deed in earth, there is alſo looſed indeed in Heaven.

Againſt riches in the Church. The precepts of the Pope and Prelates ſlow they bind.

{KING Hen.7.} The Popes keys. Vows. Doctrine to be received without examination.

word. Item, That the Pope can command no man under pain of deadly ſin, except God command him before. He ſaith, that the Keys of the Pope and of the Prelates be not ſuch wherewith they open the Kingdom of Heaven, but rather ſhut it, as the Phariſees did. Concerning Vows, he diſputeth that ſuch as be fooliſh and impoſſible ought to be broken; that the hearers ought to diſcern and judge of the doctrine of their Prelates, and not to receive every thing that they ſay, without due examination.

Excommunication.

He ſheweth moreover that the ſentence of Excommunication is of more force, proceeding from a true godly, honeſt, ſimple and learned man, than from the Pope; as in the Council of Conſtance, Bernard was more eſteemed than Eugenius. Alſo if the Pope with his Prelates govern and rule naughtily, that the inferiors, be they never ſo baſe, ought to reſiſt him.

Writing moreover of two Popes, Pius the Second, and Sixtus the Fourth, he ſaith, that Pius the Second did uſurpe unto himſelf all the Kingdoms of the whole World, and that Sixtus the Pope did diſpenſe with all manner of Oaths, in cauſes temporal, not only with ſuch Oaths, as have been already, but alſo with all ſuch as ſhall be made hereafter; which was nothing elſe but to give liberty and licence for men to forſwear themſelves and deceive one another.

Eg Noviomage. A Probeſſe of Weſelus. This Oſtendorpius was a man well learned and Canon of the Minſter of Lubeck.

This Weſelus being a Phrygius born, and now aged in years, upon a certain time when a young man, called M. Joannes Oſtendorpius, came to him, ſaid theſe words; Well my child, thou ſhalt live to that day, when thou ſhalt ſee that the doctrine of theſe new and contentious Divines, as Thomas and Bonaventure, with others of the ſame ſort, ſhall be utterly rejected and exploded from all true Chriſtian Divines. And this which Oſtendorpius then being young heard Weſelus to ſpeak, he reported himſelf to Noviomagus, which wrote the ſtory, Anno 1520, and heard it of the mouth of the ſaid Weſelus, An. 1490, Martij. 18.

Heſt it appeareth that this Rodulphus Agricola was of good judgment though the Friers afterward buried him in a Friers weed. Rodulphus Agricola, Weſelus lamenteth the darkneſs of the Church.

Philippus Melanchthon writing of the life of Rodulphus Agricola, ſaith, that Joſquinus Groningenſis, an ancient and a godly man, reported that when as he was young, he was oftentimes preſent at the Sermons of Rodulphus and Weſelus, wherein they many times lamented the darkneſs of the Church, and reprehended the abuſes of the Maſs and of the ſingle life of Prieſts. Item, that they diſputed oftentimes of the righteouſneſs of Faith, why Saint Paul ſo oftentimes did inculcate, that men be juſtified by Faith, and not works. The ſame Joſquine alſo reported, that they did openly reject and diſprove the opinion of Monks, which ſay that men be juſtified by their works. Item, Concerning mens Traditions their opinion was, that all ſuch were deceived, whoſoever attributed unto thoſe Traditions any opinion of Gods worſhip, or that they might not be broken. And thus much for the ſtory of Doctor Weſellianus and Weſelus.

By this it may be ſeen and noted, how, by the grace of God and gift of Printing, firſt came forth learning; by learning came light to judge and diſcern the errors of the Pope from the truth of Gods Word; as partly by theſe above ſaid may appear, partly by other that follow after (by the grace of Chriſt) ſhall better be ſeen.

About the very ſame time and ſeaſon, when as the Goſpel began thus to branch and ſpring in Germany, the Hoſt of Chriſts Church began alſo to muſter and to multiply likewiſe here in England, as by theſe Hiſtories here conſequent may appear. For not long after the death of this Weſelus, in the year of our Lord 1494, and in the ninth year the Reign of Henry the 7th, the 28*th* of April, was burned a very old Woman named Joane Boughton widow, and Mother to the Lady Young, which Lady was alſo ſuſpected to be of that opinion which her Mother was. Her Mother was of fourſcour years of age or more, and held eight of Wickliffs opinions (which opinions my Author doth not ſhew) for the which ſhe was burnt in Smithfield the day aboveſaid. My Author ſaith, ſhe was a Diſciple of Wickliff, whom ſhe accounted for a Saint, and held ſo faſt and firmly eight of his ten opinions, that all the Doctors of London could not turn her from one of them: and when it was told her that ſhe ſhould be burnt for her obſtinacy and falſe belief, ſhe ſet nothing by their menacing words, but defied them; for ſhe ſaid ſhe was ſo beloved of God, and his holy Angels, that ſhe paſſed not for the fire, and in the midſt thereof ſhe cryed to God to take her ſoul into his holy hands. The night following that ſhe was burnt, the moſt part of her aſhes were had away of ſuch as had a love unto the Doctrine that ſhe dyed for.

{Anno 1494.} Joane Boughton Mother to the Lady Young, Martyr.

Shortly after the Martyrdom of this godly aged Mother, in the year of our Lord, 1497, and the 17*th* of January, being Sunday, two men, the one called Richard Milderale, and the other James Sturdy, bear Faggots before the proceſſion of Pauls, and after ſtood before the Preacher in the time of his Sermon. And upon the Sunday following ſtood other two men at Pauls Croſs all the Sermon time; the one garniſhed with painted and written papers, the other having a Faggot on his neck. After that in Lent ſeaſon upon Paſſion Sunday one Hugh Glover bear a Faggot before the proceſſion of Pauls, and after with the Faggot ſtood before the Preacher all the Sermon while at Pauls Croſs. And on the Sunday next following four men ſtood, and did their open Penance at Pauls, as is aforeſaid, in the Sermon time, and many of their Books were burnt before them at the Croſs.

{Ann. 1497.} Richard Milderale. James Sturdy. Hugh Glover. Four other bear Faggots.

Furthermore the next year following, which was the year of our Lord 1498, in the beginning of May, the King then being at Canterbury, was a Prieſt burnt, which was ſo ſtrong in his opinion that all the Clerks and Doctors then there being could not remove him from his Faith: Whereof the King being informed, he cauſed the ſaid Prieſt to be brought before his preſence, who by his perſwaſion cauſed him to revoke, and ſo he was burnt immediately.

{Anno 1498.} A Prieſt burnt.

In the ſame year above mentioned, which was the year of our Lord 1498, after the beheading of Edward Plantaginet Earl of Warwick, and ſon to the Duke of Clarence, the King and Queen being removed to Calis, a certain godly man and a conſtant Martyr of Chriſt, named Babram, in Norfolk, was burnt in the month of July, as is in Fabian recorded, after the Copy which I have written. Albeit in the Book Fabian Printed, his burning is referred to the next year following, which is, An. 1500. Ex Fabianio, & alio ſcripto codice.

ABout which year likewiſe, or in the year next following, the twentieth day of July, was an old man burnt in Smithfield.

{Anno 1499.} Hieronymus Savanarola with two Friers Martyrs.

In the ſame year alſo, which was of the Lord, one thouſand four hundred ninety and nine, fell the Martrydom and burning of Hieronymus Savanarola, a man no leſs godly in heart, then conſtant in his profeſſion. Who being a Monk in Italy, and ſingularly well learned, preached ſore againſt the evil life and living of the ſpiritualty, and ſpecially of his own Order, complaining ſore upon them as the ſprings and authors of all miſchiefs and wickedneſs. Whereupon by the help of certain learned men he began to ſeek reformation in his own order. Which thing the Pope perceiving and fearing that the ſaid Hierom, which was now in great reputation amongſt all men, ſhould diminiſh or overthrow his authority, he ordained his Vicar or Provincial to ſee reformation of theſe matters; which Vicar with great ſuperſtition began to reform things: but the ſaid Hierom did always withſtand him, whereupon he was complained of to the Pope, and becauſe that contrary unto the Popes commandment he did withſtand his Vicar, he was accurſed. But for all that Jeronymus left not off preaching, but threatned Italy with the wrath and indignation of God, and prophecied before unto them, that the Land ſhould be overthrown for the pride and wickedneſs of the people, and for the untruth, hypocriſie and falſhood of the Clergy, which God would not leave unrevenged, as afterward it came to paſs, when as K. Charles came into Italy and to Rome, and ſo ſtraightly beſet Pope Alexander, that he was forced to make compoſition with the King.

Prophſie of Jer. Savanarola againſt Italy.

Pope Alexander beſieged by Charles the French King.

Now forſomuch as the ſaid Hierom would not leave off preaching, he was commanded to appear before the Pope, to give account of his new learning (for ſo then they called the truth of the Goſpel) but by means of the manifold perils, he made his excuſe that he could not come. Then was he again forbidden by the Pope to preach, and his learning pronounced and condemned as pernitious, falſe and ſeditious.

Savanarola cited to appear before the Pope.

The doctrine of Savanarola condemned becauſe he would not come before the Pope.

This Jeronymus, as a man worldly wiſe, foreſeeing the great perils and dangers that might come unto him, for fear left off preaching. But when as the people, which ſore hungred and longed for Gods Word, were inſtant upon him that he would preach again, he began again to preach in the year of our Lord, 1496, in the City of Florence, and albeit that many counſelled him that he ſhould not ſo do without the Popes commandment, yet did he not regard it, but went forward freely of his own good will. When as the Pope and his ſhavelings heard news of this, they were grievouſly incenſed and inflamed againſt him, and now again curſed him, as an obſtinate and ſtiffnecked Heretick. But for all that, Jeronymus proceeded in teaching and inſtructing the people, ſaying that men ought not to regard ſuch curſes, which are againſt the true doctrine and the common profit, whereby the people ſhould be learned and amended, Chriſts Kingdom enlarged, and the Kingdom of the Devil utterly overthrown.

Savanarola preacheth contrary to the Popes commandment.

In all his preaching he deſired to teach no other thing than the only pure and ſimple Word of God, making often proteſtation that all men ſhould certifie him if they had heard him teach or preach any thing contrary thereunto, for upon his own conſcience he knew not that he had taught any thing but the pure Word of God. What his doctrine was all men may eaſily judge by his Books that he hath written.

Hierom with two other Friers committed to priſon.

After this, in the year of our Lord, 1498, he was taken and brought out of Saint Marks Cloiſter, and two other Fryers with him, named Dominick and Silveſter, which favoured his learning, and was carried into Priſon, where he wrote a godly meditation upon that moſt comfortable thirty firſt Pſalm; In te Domine ſperavi, non confundar in æternum, ſed in juſtitia tua libera me. Wherein he doth excellently deſcribe and ſet forth the continual ſtriſe between the fleſh and the ſpirit.

The commentary of Jerom. Savana. upon the Pſalm beginning. In te domine ſperavi.

After this the Popes Legates came to Florence and called forth theſe three good men, threatning them marvelouſly; but they continued ſtill conſtant. Then came the chief Counſellers, of the City, with the Popes Commiſſioners, which had gathered out certain Articles againſt theſe men, whereupon they were condemned to death; the tenor of which Articles hereafter enſue.

Articles objected againſt Jerom and the two Friers.

1. The firſt Article was as touching our free Juſtificaſion through Faith in Chriſt.

2. That the Communion ought to be miniſtred under both kinds.

3. That the Indulgences and Pardons of the Pope were of no effect.

4. For preaching againſt the filthy and wicked living of the Cardinals and ſpiritualty.

5. For denying the Popes Supremacy.

KING Hen.7.

6. Alſo that he had affirmed that the Keys were not given unto Peter alone, but unto the Univerſal Church.

7. Alſo, that the Pope did neither follow the life nor doctrine of Chriſt, for that he did attribute more to his own Pardons and Traditions, than to Chriſts merits, and therefore he was Antichriſt.

8. Alſo, that the Popes excommunications are not to be feared, and that he which doth fear or flee them is excommunicate of God.

9. Item, That Auricular confeſſion is not neceſſary.

10. Item, That he had moved the Citizens to uproar and ſedition.

11. Item, That he had neglected and condemned the Popes Citation.

12. Item, That he had ſhamefully ſpoken againſt, and ſlandred the Pope.

13. Item, That he had taken Chriſt to witneſs of his naughtineſs and Hereſie.

14. Alſo, that Italy muſt be cleanſed through Gods ſcourge, for the manifold wickedneſs of the Princes and Clergy.

Theſe and ſuch other like Articles were laid unto them and read before them. Then they demanded of the ſaid Hierom and his companions, whether they would recant and give over their opinions. Whereunto they anſwered, that through Gods help they would ſteadfaſtly continue in the manifeſt truth, and not depart from the ſame. Then were they degraded one after another by the Biſhop of Vaſtion, and ſo delivered over to the ſecular Rulers of Florence, with ſtraight commandment to carry them forth, and handle them as obſtinate and ſtiffnecked Hereticks

Hierom with his two companions hanged and burnt for the Goſpels truth.

Thus was the worthy witneſs of Chriſt, with the other two aforeſaid, firſt hanged up openly in the Market place, and afterward burnt to aſhes, and the aſhes gathered up, and caſt into the River of Arum, the 24*th* of May, in the year of our Lord, 1499. Ex Catal. teſtium Illyrici.

This man foreſhewed many things to come, as the deſtruction of Florence and Rome, and the renewing of the Church; which three things have hapned in theſe times within our remembrance. Alſo he foreſhewed that the Turks and Mores in the later days ſhould be converted unto Chriſt. He alſo declared that one ſhould paſs the Alpes into Italy, like unto Cyrus which ſhould ſubvert and deſtroy all Italy. Whereupon Johannes Franciſcus Picus, Earl of Mirandula, called him a Holy Prophet, and defended him by his writings againſt the Pope. Many other learned men alſo defended the innocency of the ſaid Savanarola. Maſilius Ficinus alſo in a certain Epiſtle doth attribute unto him the ſpirit of Propheſie, greatly commending and praiſing him. In like manner Philippus Comineus a French Hiſtoriographer, which had conference with him, witneſſeth that he was a holy man, and full of the ſpirit of Propheſie, forſomuch as he had foreſhewed unto him ſo many things which in event had proved true.

Whilſt flames unjuſt (bleſt Saint) thy body burns,
Weeping Religion with diſhevel'd hairs,
Cries out, and ſays, Oh ſpare his ſacred urnes,
Spare cruel flames; that fire our ſoul impairs.

There were beſides theſe, many other, not to be paſſed over or forgotten: as Philip Norice an Iriſhman, profeſſor at Oxford, who albeit he was not burned, yet (as it is ſaid) he was long time vexed and troubled by the religious rout. But would to God, that ſuch as have occupied themſelves in writing of Hiſtories, and have ſo diligently committed unto memory all other things done in forreign Common-wealths, had beſtowed the like diligence and labour in noting and writing thoſe things which pertain unto the affairs of the Church: whereby the poſterity might have had fuller and more perfect underſtanding and knowledge of them.

This Savanarola abve mentioned, ſuffered under Pope Alexander the Sixth, of which Pope more leiſure and opportunity ſhall ſerve hereafter (Chriſt willing) to entreat, after that we ſhall firſt make a little digreſſion, to entreat of certain caſes and complaints of the Germans, incident in the mean time, which as they are not to be overpaſt in ſilence, ſo can they have no place nor time more convenient to be inferred. What complaints of the Germans were made and moved unto the Emperor Frederick againſt the Popes ſuppreſſions and exactions, mention was made before; where alſo was declared, how the ſaid Germans at that time were twice put back and forſaken of the Emperor, whereby they continued in the ſame yoke and bondage untill the time of Luther. Wherefore it cometh now to hand, and we think it alſo good here briefly to declare, how the ſaid Germans, in the time of Maximilian the Emperor, renewing their complaints again, delivered unto the Emperor ten principal Grievances, whereby, the Germans have been long time oppreſſed; ſhewing alſo the remedies againſt the ſame, with certain adviſements unto the Emperors Majeſty, how he might withſtand and reſiſt the Popes ſubtilites and crafts: The order and tenor whereof here enſueth.

The complaint of the Germans againſt the Popes grievances renewed.

The ten Grievances of the Germans.

Ten Grievances complained of by the Germans.

1. THat the Biſhops of Rome, ſucceſſors one unto another, do not think themſelves bound to obſerve and keep the Bulls, Covenants, Priviledges, and Letters, granted by their Predeceſſors, without all derogation; but by often diſpenſation, ſuſpenſion and revocation, even at the inſtance of every vile perſon, they do gainſay and withſtand the ſame.

2. That the elections of Prelates are oftentimes put back.

3. That the elections of Preſidentſhips are withſtood, which the Chapter houſes of many Churches have obtained with great coſt and expence, as the Church of Spire and Haſell do well know; whoſe Bull, touching the election of their Preſident, is fruſtrate, he being yet alive which granted the ſame.

4. That Benefices, and the greateſt Eccleſiaſtical dignities are reſerved for Cardinals and head Notaries.

5. That expectative graces, called Vowſons, are granted without number, and many oftentimes unto one man, whereupon continual contentions do ariſe, and much money is ſpent, both that which is laid out for the Bulls of thoſe Vowſons, which never take effect, and alſo that which is conſumed in going to Law. Whereupon this proverb is riſen, Whoſoever will get a Vowſon from Rome, muſt have C. or C. C. pieces of Gold laid up in his Cheſt, for the obtaining of the ſame, which he ſhall have need of, to proſecute the Law withal.

6. That Annates, or yearly revenews are exacted without delay or mercy, even of the Biſhops lately dead, and oftentimes more extorted than ought to be, through the new Offices and new Servants, as by the examples of the Churches of Mentz and Strausbourgh, may be ſeen.

7. That the rule of the Churches is given at Rome unto thoſe that are not worthy, which were more fit to feed and keep Mules, than to have the rule and governance of men.

8. That new Indulgences and Pardons, with the ſuſpention and revocation of the old, are granted to gather and ſcrape money together.

9. That Tenths are exacted, under pretence of making War againſt the Turk; when as no expedition doth follow thereupon.

10. That the cauſes which might be determined in Germany, where there are both learned and juſt Judges, are indiſtinctly carried unto the Court of Rome; which thing S. Bernard writing to Pope Eugenius, ſeemeth wonderfully to reprove.

Here enſueth the remedy againſt the ſaid Grievances.

Remedies againſt the foreſaid Grievances.

IF it ſhall ſeem good unto the Emperors Majeſty, let it be declared unto the Biſhop of Rome, how grievous and intolerable a thing it is unto the Germans, to ſuffer continually ſo great charges and grievances, to pay ſo great Annates for the confirmation of the Biſhops and Archbiſhops, and eſpecially in ſuch Biſhopricks, whereas the Annates by ſucceſs of time are enhanſed, and in many (as it is ſaid) doubled. For the Archbiſhops See of Mentz (as it is ſaid) ſometime paid only ten thouſand Florens; which ſum, when as one which was choſen there, refuſed to give, and ſo continued even unto his death, he which was afterward elect, being deſirous of confirmation, fearing to withſtand the Apoſtlick See, offered the old ſum of 10000 Florens: but notwithſtanding, he could not get his confirmation, except he would pay the other 10000, which his predeceſſor before him had not paid.

The Archbiſhops Pall of Mentz, what it coſteth.

By this means he was compelled to pay 20000 Florens. Which being enrolled in the regiſter of the Chamber, as much hath been exacted of every Archbiſhop ſince, until theſe our days; and not only 20000, but alſo 25000 for their new offices, and new ſervants. At laſt, the ſum drew to 27000 Florens, which James the Archbiſhop of Mentz was commpelled to pay, as his Commiſſary did report. So by this means, in a little time there was ſeven times 25000 Florens payd out of the Archbiſhoprick of Mentz unto Rome, for the confirmation of the Archbiſhop. And when this Archbiſhop James had kept the Archbiſhoprick ſcarce four years, the Lord Uriel was elect after him, who was compelled to pay at the leaſt 24000, or 25000 Florens. Whereof a part he borrowed of Merchants: but to ſatisfie and pay them again, he was forced to exact a Subſidy of his poor Subjects and Husbandmen, whereof ſome have not yet ſatisfied and paid the tribute for the Biſhops Pall, ſo that by this means our people are not only tormentd and brought to extream poverty, but alſo are moved unto rebellion, to ſeek their liberty by what means ſoever they may, grievouſly murmuring againſt the cruelty of the Clergy.

The Popes Pall dearly bought.

The Pope alſo ſhould be admoniſhed, how that, through divers and ſundry Wars and Battels, the Lands of Germany lye deſolate and waſte, and through many mortalities, the number of men is diminiſhed, ſo that for the ſcarſeneſs of Husbandmen, the Fields for the moſt part lye untilled, the Tolls are by divers means diminiſhed, the Mines conſumed, and the profits daily decay, whereby the Archbiſhops and Biſhops ſhould pay their Annates unto the Apoſtolick See, beſides their other neceſſary and honeſt charges; inſomuch, that not without juſt cauſe, James the Archbiſhop of Mentz, being even at the point of death, ſaid, That he did not ſo much ſorrow for his own death, as for that his poor Subjects ſhould be again forced to pay a grievous exaction for the Pall. Wherefore let the high Biſhop, as a godly Father, and lover of his children, and a faithful and prudent Paſtor, deal more favourably with his children the Germans, leſt that perſecution happen to riſe againſt the Prieſts of Chriſt, and that men following the example of the Bohemians, do ſwerve from the Church of Rome.

The people polled for the Popes Pall.

At the leaſt, let him be more favourable, as often as any Archbiſhop or Biſhop hapned to rule his Church but a few years; as it hapned to the Biſhops of Bamberge, whereof three died within few years. The like alſo might happen by other Biſhopricks, whereof (as Æneas Sylvius witneſſeth) there are in Germany to the number of fifty, beſides Abbots, whereof a great number are confirmed at Rome.

About fifty Biſhopricks in Germany.

And admit that in Germany there were greater profits and Revenues riſing of the Ground, Mines and Tolls; notwithſtanding the Emperor and the other Princes ſhould lack treaſure and munition of War againſt their enemies, and ſpecially the Infidels, and to preſerve Germany in peace and quietneſs, and to miniſter juſtice unto every man: for which purpoſe the Council of the Chamber, being moſt holily inſtructed and furniſhed with great coſt and charges, doth chiefly ſerve. Beſides that, the Emperor hath need of treaſure, to ſuppreſs the Rebels in the Empire, to baniſh and drive away Thieves and Murtherers, whereof a great number are not aſhamed to ſpoil Churches only, and to rob them of their goods, but alſo to aſſail the Clergy themſelves. Finally, our Nation and Country of Germany hath need of great riches and treaſure, not only for the repairing of Churches and Monaſteries, but alſo for Hoſpitals for Children that are laid out in the Streets, for Widows, for Women with Child, for Orphans, for marriage of the Daughters of poor Men, that they be not deflowred, for ſuch as have need and neceſſity, for the Old and Weak, for the Sick and the Sore, whereof (the more is the ſorrow) Germany is fully repleniſhed and filled.

{KING Hen.7.}

Advertiſements unto the Emperors Majeſty.

The Emperor advertiſed of the ſubtil practices of the Pope and popiſh Prelates.

LEt the Emperors Majeſty foreſee and provide that the begging Friers do not preach againſt his Majeſty, which are wont to complain gladly unto the Apoſtolick See, fearing to loſe their priviledges, which I would to God were as well grounded upon Chriſt, as they are upon profit. Let the Emperors Majeſty alſo beware, that the Pope do not give commandment unto the Electors to proceed to the Election of a new King of the Romans, as he did againſt Frederick the Second, when as the Landgrave of Thurin, and William Earl of Holland, were elect by the commandment of the Pope. Let the Emperors Majeſty alſo fear and take heed of all the Prelates of the Churches, and eſpecially of the Preſidents, which by their Oath are bound to advertiſe the Pope. Let the Emperors Majeſty alſo fear and beware, that the Pope do not take away from his Subjects their obedience, and provoke the people bordering upon him, to make invaſion into the Emperors Dominions and Archduchy of Auſtrich; which thoſe men, under colour ſhewing obedience unto the Popes commandment, be ready to do.

Let the Emperors Majeſty alſo take heed of the Apoſtolick cenſures, from which the Pope will in no caſe refrain. Finally, let the Emperors Majeſty diligently foreſee and take heed, that the Pope do not perſwade the people with moſt ſubtil Arguments, contrary to the Pragmatical ſanction, excuſing himſelf, and getting the good will of the ſimple, alledging that with great coſts and charges, he will repair the Church of Saint Peter in Rome, and build in certain places againſt the Turks, and recover again the Lands and Patrimony partaining unto the Church of Saint Peter, as he is bound by his Office. Therefore let your Majeſty diligently foreſee and deliberate, how through your moſt wiſe and diſcreet Counſel, if need ſhall require, you will anſwer to thoſe ſubtilties of the Pope.

The Popes pretence of building S. Peters Church in Rome.

A certain godly Exhortation unto the Emperors Majeſty.

A ſupplication or Exhortation to Maximilian Emperor of the Church.

YOur Majeſty can do nothing better, nothing more acceptable, or more worthy eternal remembrance, than to moderate the great exactions and oppreſſions of the Germans; to take away all occaſions from the Laity, to perſecute the Clergy: alſo to take away the Benefices out of the hands of Courteſans, which can neither preach, comfort, nor counſel any man (of which Benefices, as Æneas Sylvius writeth, ſome are equal to the Biſhopricks of Italy) to encreaſe Gods honour and worſhip; and ſo to bridle the avarice and ungodlineſs of thoſe Courteſans, whereby your Majeſty may the better provide for the children of many Noble and famous men and Citizens of Germany; which being brought up from their youth in the Univerſity, learning both the Scriptures, and other humane letters, may without unquiet vexations, and moſt ſumptuous charges and contentions, aſpire to the Eccleſiaſtical promotions, who by their Counſel and prayers may be helps unto the whole Church: for there is no ſmall occaſion, why the Realm of France ſhould ſo flouriſh, having ſo many notable learned men in it. If the Emperor would aboliſh this impiety, and reſtore Germany unto their ancient liberty, which is now oppreſſed with grievous tributes, and would make way for learned and honeſt men unto Eccleſiaſtical promotions; then might he truly and perpetually be called of all men, and in all places, the reſtorer of Germany to his ancient liberty, and the father of his Country, and ſhould obtain no leſs glory thereby unto himſelf, and profit unto Germany, than if he had by force of Arms ſubdued any Province unto them. And ſo ſhall Germany render no leſs thanks unto the ſaid Maximilian, than unto all the reſt, which having tranſlated the Empire from

KING Hen. 7. from the Grecians unto Germany, have reigned many years before.

Hereafter enſueth the Copy of a certain Letter of the Emperor Maximilian, given out in manner of a Decree or Commandment againſt certain abuſes of the Clergy. Whereunto we have alſo annexed the anſwer of Jacobus Seleſtadienſis unto the Emperors Letters, wherein he ſeemeth alſo to have ſought advice for the remedy of the like abuſes, which we thought good here not to be omitted.

An Edict of Maximilian the Emperor.

WE according to the example of our dearly beloved Father, Frederick Emperor of Rome, reverencing the chief Paſtor of the Church, and all the Clergy, have ſuffered no ſmall revenues of the Eccleſiaſtical dignities to be carried out of our dominion by the Prelates and Clergy that are abſent, whoſe faults committed by humane frailty, with Conſtantine our Predeceſſor, we have not diſdained to hide and Cover. But forſomuch as through our liberality, the decay of Gods honour is riſen, it is our part to foreſee (which are elect unto the Empire, without any deſert) that among all other affairs of Peace and War, the Churches do not decay, Religion quail not, or Gods true worſhip be not diminiſhed; which we have manifeſtly experimented, and daily do perceive by the inſatiable covetouſneſs of ſome, which are never ſatisfied in getting of Benefices, through whoſe abſence (being reſident but only upon one) GODS honour and worſhip is diminiſhed, houſes decay, Churches decreaſe, the Eccleſiaſtical liberty is hurt, Learning and Monuments are loſt and deſtroyed, Hoſpitality and Alms diminiſhed, and by their unſatiable greedineſs, ſuch of the Clergy, as for their Learning and Vertue were worthy of Benefices, and their Wiſdom profitable in Commonwealths, are hindered and put back. Wherefore according to the office and duty of our eſtate, for the love of the encreaſe of GODS honour, we exhort and require, that no man from henceforth, having any Canonſhip or Vicarage in one City of our Empire, ſhall occupy or poſſeſs a Prebend in another Church of the ſame City, except he give over the firſt within a years ſpace unto ſome perſon fit and profitable for the Church; neither that he do by unjuſt quarels, vex or trouble any man in getting of Benefices, neither that any man do falſly feign himſelf to have been of the Emperors houſhold, which hath not been comprehended within the league and agreement made by the Princes, neither that any man attempt to take away the Patronages from any Lay-man, or aggravate the ſmall Prebends of Curates, or Churches with Penſions, neither that they do uſe in getting of Benefices and Bulls, any fraud, deceit, falſe inſtruments, corrupt witneſſes, and cloaked Simony; neither that any man preſume to obtain any regreſs, or other thing contrary to the ſacred Canons, right, honeſty, equity and reaſon, upon pain of the moſt grievous offence of Treaſon: the which we will, that not only they going ſo contrary to God and all honeſty; but alſo all their favourers, which do help, Council, harbour or give them any thing, all their Meſſengers, and Writers, Proctors, Sureties, and other their friends, ſhall incur, and receive condign puniſhment for ſo great offence and contempt of our commandment. From Oenopent, &c.

No man to have two Canonſhips or Prebends at once.

¶ Here enſueth the Copy of a Letter written unto the Emperor Maximilian.

To our Moſt victorious Lord, Maximilian the Emperor, Jacobus Seleſtadienſis moſt humble commendations.

MOſt Victorious Emperor, when I had read your Majeſties Epiſtle, and received inſtructions of your Secretary, I prepared my ſelf with all my whole endeavour to ſatisfie your Majeſties deſire. For even from my youth hitherto, I have applyed all my care and ſtudy, firſt for the honour of your Majeſty, and conſequently for the amplifying of the German nation, and ſacred Roman Empire. Albeit I know my ſelf far unable to ſatisfie your deſire and purpoſe, and there are many which can fulfill this matter much better, which have greater learning and experience of theſe common matters. There be alſo with other Princes, and in the Senates of Commonwealths, many excellent learned men, which can exornate and beautifie Germany, and perſwade to reduce all the Clergy unto a Chriſtian Diſcipline, and to an unity and peace of the univerſal Church. Wherein, not only your Majeſty, but alſo your predeceſſors, as Charles the Great, and his Son Ludovicus Pius, the Othoes, Conrades, Fredericks, and Henricks, and laſt of all, Sigiſmundus, have with all labour and diligence travelled, being ſtirred thereunto undoubtedly through the zeal and charity which they bear unto Almighty God, and thankfulneſs to Chriſt for his benefits which he hath beſtowed upon mankind, and ſpecially for the benefit of his moſt bitter paſſion. For Chriſt became not poor for us, that we ſhould live in all riot and wantonneſs upon his patrimony, and ſhew forth our ambition and covetouſneſs; neither did he ſuffer hunger, that we ſhould glut up our ſelves; nor ſuffered labours, chaſtity, and grievous torments, that we ſhould live in idleneſs, wantonneſs, and all kind of voluptuouſneſs. Neither they which were contributers, and Benefactors to Churches, enduing the Miniſters thereof with their temporal riches, had any ſuch reſpect herein, that the Clergy ſhould live only in idleneſs, having all things at their will, without labour. Surely there was another cauſe, why that they in times paſt did impoveriſh themſelves and theirs, to endow the Church; verily, that they might the better attend unto Divine Service, without care of want of living (which they might eaſily get and gather out of the Fields, Woods Medows and Waters), and to the intent that they ſhould liberally give Alms unto the poor Chriſtians, Widows, Orphans, Aged and Sick perſons. For in the Inſtitutions of the Canonical profeſſion, which we ſuppoſe was written by the commandment of Ludovicus Pius the Emperor, and allowed by the Council of the Biſhops, thus it is read; The goods of the Church (as it is alledged by the Fathers, and contained in the Chapters before) are the vows of the faithful, and patrimony of the poor. For the faithfull, through the ferventneſs of their faith and love of Chriſt, being inflamed, having an earneſt deſire of that heavenly Kingdom, have enriched the holy Church with their own goods, that thereby the Souldiers of Chriſt might be nouriſhed, the Church adorned, the poor refreſhed, and captives according to the opportunity of time redeemed. Wherefore ſuch as have the adminiſtration of thoſe goods, ought diligently to be looked upon, that they do not convert them unto their own proper uſe, but rather according to their ſubſtance and poſſibility they do not neglect them, in whom Chriſt is fed and cloathed. Proſper is alſo of the ſame mind, affirming that holy men did not challenge the Church goods to their own uſe, as their own proper goods, but as things commended unto the poor, to be divided amongſt them. For that is to contemn that which a man poſſeſſeth, not to poſſeſs a thing for himſelf, but for others, neither to covet the Church goods with covetouſneſs to have them to himſelf, but to take them with a godly zeal to help other. That which the Church hath, is common to all them which have nothing, neither ought they to give any thing of that unto them (ſaith he) which have of their own; for to give unto them which have enough, is but to caſt things away. Ex Illyrico.

To return now to the order of Popes, where we left before, ſpeaking of Innocentius the eighth. After the ſaid Innocentius, next ſucceeded Pope Alexander the ſixth. In which Alexander, among other horrible things, this is one to be noted, that when Gemes (Peucerus named him Dames) brother to Bajazetes the Great Turk, Pope Alexander.

was committed by the Rhodians to the ſafe cuſtody, firſt of Pope Innocent, then of Alexander the ſixth, for whoſe keeping, the Pope received every year 40000 Crowns; yet notwithſtanding, when Pope Alexander afterward was compelled to ſend the ſaid Gemes to Charles the eighth, the French King, for a pledge, becauſe the French King ſhould not procure the Great Turks favour, by ſending his Brother Gemes to him to be ſlain, he being hired by the Turk, cauſed the ſaid Gemes to be poyſoned, who, in his journey going toward the French King, died at Terracina. Ex Hieronymo Mario.

The Pope poyſoneth Gemes the Turks Brother, being committed to his cuſtody. Ex Paulo Jovio lib. 2. Ex Peucero lib. 6. Ex Hieronym Mario.

Moreover, in the ſaid Hieronymus Marius, it appeareth that this Alexander taking diſpleaſure with the foreſaid Charles the French King, about the winning of Naples, ſent to Bajazetes the Turk, to fight againſt the forſaid Charles. Ex eodem.

The Pope ſetteth the Great Turk againſt the French King. Ex Seb. Munſtero lib. 4. Coſmograph.

Munſterus lib. 4. Coſmog. declaring the foreſaid Hiſtory of Gemes ſomething otherwiſe, firſt calleth him Zizimnus, and ſaith that he was firſt committed by the Rhodians to the French King. And when as Joannes Huniades aforementioned did labour to the French King to have him, thinking by that means to obtain a noble victory againſt the Turk, as it was not unlike: This Alexander the Pope, through his fraudulent flattery, got him of the French King into his own hands, by whoſe means the ſaid Gemes afterward was poyſoned, as is in manner before expreſſed.

Unto theſe poyſoned acts of the Pope, let us alſo adjoyn his malicious wickedneſs, with like fury exerciſed upon Antonius Mancinellius, which Mancinellus being a man of excellent learning, becauſe he wrote an eloquent Oration againſt his wicked manners and filthy life, with other vices, he therefore commanded both his hands and his tongue to be cut off, playing much like with him, as Antoninus the Tyrant once did with M. Cicero, for writing againſt his horrible life, at length, as one poyſon requireth another, this poyſond Pope, as he was ſitting with his Cardinals, and other rich Senators of Rome at dinner, his ſervants unawars brought to him a wrong Bottle, wherewith he was poyſoned, and his Cardinals about him.

Mancinellus, writing againſt the wickedneſs of the Pope, loſt his hands and tongue.

Poyſon requited with poyſon.

In the time of this Pope Alexander alſo it hapned (which is not to be pretermitted) how that the Angel, which ſtood in the high top of the Popes Church, was beaten down with terrible Thunder; which thing ſeemed then to declare the ruine and fall of the Popedom. After this Pope, next ſucceeded Pius the third, about the year of our Lord, 1503. After whom came next Julius the ſecond, a man ſo far paſſing all other in iniquity, that Wicelius, and ſuch other of his own friends writing of him, are compelled to ſay of him, Marti illum quam Chriſto deditiorem fuiſſe; that is, that he was more given to War and Battel, than to Chriſt. Concerning the madneſs of this man; this is moſt certainly known, that at what time he was going to War, he caſt the Keys of Saint Peter into the River Tibris, ſaying, that forſomuch as the Keys of Peter would not ſerve him to his purpoſe, he would take himſelf to the Sword of Paul. Whereupon Philip Melanchthon, amongſt many other writing upon the ſame, maketh this Epigram.

The high Angel of the Palace thrown down.

Pope Pius 3. Pope Julius 2.

Cum contra Gallos bellum Papa Julius eſſet
Geſturus, ſicut fama vetuſta docet:
Ingentes Martis turmas contraxit, & urbem
Egreſſus ſævas edidit ore minas.
Iratuſque ſacras claves in flumina jecit
Tibridis, hic urbi pons ubi junget aquas.
Inde manu ſtrictum vaginâ diripit enſem,
Exclamanſque truci talia voce refert:
Hic gladius Pauli nos nunc defendet ab hoſte,
Quandoquidem clavis nil juvat iſta Petri.

Whereupon alſo Gilbert Ducherius maketh this Epigram.

In Gallum, ut fama eſt, bellum geſturus acerbum,
Accinctus gladio, claves in Tibridis amnem
Projicit, & ſævus talia verba facit:
Quum Petri nihil efficiant ad prælia claves,
Auxilio Pauli forſitan enſis erit.

{KING Hen. 7.}

The ſenſe of theſe Epigrams in Engliſh, is this.

When Julius Pope againſt the French determined to make War:
As fame reports, he gathered up great troops of men from far.
And to the Bridge of Tibur then,
marching as he were wood;
His holy Keys he took and caſt them down into the flood.
And afterward into his hand
he took a naked Sword:
And ſhaking it broke forth into this fierce and warlike word:
This Sword of Paul (quoth he) ſhall now defend us from our foe;
Since that this Key of Peter doth.
nothing avail thereto.

Of this Julius it is certainly reported, that partly with his Wars, partly with his curſings, within the ſpace of ſeven years, as good as 200000 Chriſtians were deſtroyed. Firſt, he beſieged Ravenna againſt the Venetians, then Servia, Imolia, Faventia, Forolivium, Bononia, and other Cities, which he gate out of Princes hands, not without much bloodſhed. The Chronicles of John Sleyden make mention, that when this Julius was made Pope he took an Oath, promiſing to have a Council within two years: but when he had no leiſure thereunto, being occupied with his Wars in Italy among the Venetians, and with the French King, and in Ferraria, and in other Countries; nine of his Cardinals, departing from him, came into Millain, and there appointed a Council at the City of Piſe; amongſt whom, the chief were Bernardus, Crucei-us, Gulielmus Preneſtinus, Franciſcus, Conſtantinus, with divers others; unto whom alſo were adjoyned the Procurators of Maximilian the Emperor, and of Charles the French King. So the Council was appointed the year of our Lord, 1511, to begin in the Kalends of September. The cauſe why they did ſo call this Council, was thus alledged, becauſe the Pope had ſo broken his Oath, and all this while he gave no hope to have any Council; and alſo becauſe there were divers other crimes, where upon they had to accuſe him. Their purpoſe was to remove him out of his ſeat, the which he had procured through Bribes and ambition. Julius hearing this, giveth out contrary commandment, under great pain, that no man ſhould obey them, and calleth himſelf another Council againſt the next year, to be begun the 19*th* day of April. The French King underſtanding Pope Julius to joyn with the Venetians, and ſo to take their part againſt him, convented a Council at Thurin, in the Month of September; in which Council theſe Queſtions were propoſed.

The Popes Law given leave to kill all that be accurſed of him.

The Wars and bloodſhed of Pope Julius 2.

A Council called to depoſe Pope Julius.

The Pope perjured.

Whether it was lawful for the Pope to move War againſt any Prince without cauſe.

Whether any Prince in defending himſelf, might invade his adverſary, and deny his Obedience.

Unto the which Queſtions it was anſwered, That neither the Biſhop ought to invade, and alſo that it was lawful for the King to defend himſelf. Moreover, that the Pragmatical ſanction was to be obſerved through the Realm of France: Neither that any unjuſt Excomunications ought to be feared, if they were found to be unjuſt. After this the King ſent to Julius the anſwer of his Council, requiring him either to agree to Peace, or to appoint a general Council ſome other where, where this matter might be more fully decided. Julius would neither of both theſe, but forthwith accurſed Charles the French King, with all his Kingdom. At the length Ravenna, in a great War he was overcome by the French King, and at laſt, after much ſlaughter and great bloodſhed, and mortal War, this Pope died in the year of our Lord, 1513, the 21. day of February.

The Pragmatical ſanction eſtabliſhed, mentioned before.

No unjuſt Excommunication to be feared.

{KING Hen.7.}

The Turks doings requiſite to be known of Chriſtians.

IF it were not that I fear to overlay this our Volume with heaps of forreign Hiſtories, which have profeſſed chiefly to intreat of Acts and Monuments here done at home; I would adjoyn after theſe Popes above rehearſed, ſome diſcourſe alſo of the Turks ſtory; of their riſing and cruel perſecution of the Saints of God, to the great annoyance and peril of Chriſtendom: yet notwithſtanding, certain cauſes there be, which neceſſarily require the knowledge of their order and doings, and of their wicked proceedings, their cruel tyranny, and bloody victories, the ruine and ſubverſion of ſo many Chriſtian Churches, with the horrible murders and captivity of infinite Chriſtians, to be made plain and manifeſt, as well to this our country of England, as alſo to other Nations.

The firſt cauſe.

Firſt, For the better explaining of the Propheſies of the new Teſtament, as in Saint Pauls Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and alſo in the Revelation of Saint John. Which Scriptures otherwiſe, without the opening of theſe Hiſtories, cannot ſo perfectly be underſtood. Of the which Scriptures, we mind hereafter (Chriſt granting) orderly, as the courſe of matter ſhall lead us, to make rehearſal.

The ſecond cauſe.

Another cauſe is, that we may learn thereby, either with the publick Church to lament with our Brethren, ſuch a great defection and decay of Chriſtian faith, through theſe wicked Turks; or elſe may fear thereby our own danger.

The third cauſe.

The third cauſe, that we may ponder more deeply with our ſelves the ſcourge of God for our ſins, and corrupt doctrine; which in the ſequel hereof, more evidently may appear to our eyes, for our better admonition.

The fourth cauſe.

Fourthly, The conſideration of this horrible perſecution of the Turks, riſing chiefly by our diſcord and diſſention among our ſelves, may reduce us again from our domeſtical Wars, in killing and burning one of another, to joyn together in Chriſtian patience and concord.

The fifth cauſe.

Fifthly, But chiefly, theſe great victories of the Turks, and unproſperous ſpeed of our men fighting againſt them, may admoniſh and teach us, following the example of the old Iſraelites, how to ſeek for greater ſtrength to encounter with theſe enemies of Chriſt, than hitherto we have done. Firſt, we muſt conſider that the whole power of Satan, the Prince of this World, goeth with the Turks. Which to reſiſt, no ſtrength of mans Army is ſufficient, but only the name, ſpirit, and power of our Lord Jeſus the Son of God, going with us in our battels; as among the old Iſraelites the Ark of Gods covenant and promiſe went with them alſo fighting againſt the enemies of God. For ſo are we taught in the Scripture, that we Chriſtian men have no ſtrength but in Chriſt only. Whether we War againſt the Devil, or againſt the Turk, it is true that the Scripture ſaith, Sine me nihil poteſtis facere, i. without me you can do nothing. Otherwiſe there is no puiſſance to ſtand againſt the Devil, or to conquer the world, Niſi fides noſtra, that is, our Faith only, to which all the promiſes of God (touching ſalvation) be annexed, beyond which promiſes we muſt not go, for the Word muſt be our rule. He that preſumeth beyond the promiſes in the Word expreſſed, goeth not, but wandreth, he cannot tell whether. Neither muſt we appoint God how to ſave the World, but muſt take that way which he hath appointed. Let us not ſet God to ſchool, nor comprehend his holy ſpirit within our Sculs. He that made us without our Councel, did alſo redeem us as pleaſed him. If he be merciful, let us be thankful. And if his mercies ſurmount our capacity, let us therefore not reſiſt but ſearch his Word, and thereunto apply our Will; which if we will do, all our contentions will be ſoon at a point. Let us therefore ſearch the Will of our God in his Word, and if he will his ſalvation to ſtand free to all Nations, why do we make merchandiſe thereof? If he have graciouſly offered his waters to us, without mony or money worth, let us not hedge in the plenteous ſprings of his grace given us.

Admonition to fight againſt the Turk.

Chriſtian faith neceſſary to be joyned with outward force againſt the Turk.

Gratis venumdati eſtis, gratis redimimini. Eſay 52.

Omnes ſitientes venite ad aquas, emite abſque argento & commutatione. Eſay 55.

And finally, if God have determined his own Son only to ſtand alone, let not us preſume to admix with his Majeſty any of our trumpery. He that bringeth Saint George or Saint Dennis as Partrons to the field to fight againſt the Turk, leaveth Chriſt (no doubt) at home. Now how we have fought theſe many years againſt the Turk, though ſtories keep ſilence, yet the ſucceſs declareth. We fight againſt a perſecutor, being no leſs perſecutors our ſelves. We wreſtle againſt a bloody Tyrant, and our hands be as full of blood as his. He killeth Chriſts people with the Sword, and we burn them with fire. He obſerving the works of the Law, ſeeketh his juſtice by the ſame; the like alſo do we. But neither he nor we ſeek our juſtification as we ſhould, that is, by Faith only in the Son of God.

And what marvel then, our Doctrine being as corrupt almoſt as his, and our converſation worſe, if Chriſt fight not with us, fighting againſt the Turk? The Turk hath prevailed ſo mightily, not becauſe Chriſt is weak, but becauſe that Chriſtians be wicked, and their Doctrine impure. Our Temples with Images, our hearts with Idolary are polluted: our Prieſts ſtink before God for Adultery, being reſtrained from lawful Matrimony. The Name of God is in our mouths, but his fear is not in our hearts. We War againſt the Turk with our Works, Maſſes, Traditions and Ceremonies; but we fight not againſt him with Chriſt, and with the Power of his Glory, which if we did, the Field were won.

Reformation of religion requiſite before we fight the Turks.

Wherefore briefly to conclude, ſaying my judgment in this behalf, what I ſuppoſe; this hope I have, and do believe, That when the Church of Chriſt with the Sacraments thereof ſhall be ſo reformed, that Chriſt alone ſhall be received to be our Juſtifier, all other Religions, Merits, Traditions, Images, Patrons and Advocates ſet apart, the Sword of the Chriſtians, with the ſtrength of Chriſt, ſhall ſoon vanquiſh the Turks pride and fury. But of this more largely in the proceſs of this ſtory.

Faith getteth victory.

The ſixth and laſt cauſe, why I think the knowledge of the Turks Hiſtory requiſite to be conſidered, is this: becauſe that many there be, which for that they be further from the Turks, and think therefore themſelves to be out of danger, take little care and ſtudy what hapneth to their other Brethren. Wherefore, to the intent to excite their zeal and prayer to Almighty God, in this ſo lamentable ruin of Chriſts Church, I thought it requiſite, by order of Hiſtory, to give this our Nation alſo ſomething to underſtand, what hath been done in other Nations by theſe cruel Turks, and what detriment hath been, and is like more to happen by them to the Church of Chriſt, except we make our earneſt invocation to Almighty God, in the Name of his Son, to ſtop the courſe of the Devil by theſe Turks, and to ſtay this defection of Chriſtians falling daily unto them, and to reduce them again to his Faith which are fallen from him. Which the Lord Jeſus of his grace grant with ſpeed. Amen.

The ſixth cauſe.

Earneſt invocation neceſſary in the Church of Chriſt.

Before we enter into this ſtory of the Turks and Saracens, firſt let us call to remembrance the Propheſie and forewarning of Saint Paul writing to the Theſſalonians, in his ſecond Epiſtle, in theſe words: Be not moved or troubled in your minds, either by preaching or writing, or by Letter from us, as though the day of the Lord were at hand; for the Lord will not come, except there come a defection firſt, and the wicked perſon be revealed. &c. Of this defection, ſundry minds there be of ſundry Expoſitors: ſome thinking this defection to mean a falling away from the Empire of Rome: ſome from the obedience of the Pope. But as Saint Paul little paſſed upon the outward glory of the Roman Empire; ſo leſs he paſſed upon the proud obedience of the Pope. What Saint Paul meant by this defection, the reading of theſe Turkiſh ſtories, and the miſerable falling away of theſe Churches by him before planted, will ſoon declare.

2 Theſſ. 2.

The place of S. Paul expounded, 2 Theſſ. 2. Speaking of the defection to come.

Another Miſtery there is in the Revelation, Apocal. 13. where the number of the Beaſt is counted 666. Whereby may ſeem, by all evidences, to be ſignified the firſt Origin and ſpringing of theſe beaſtly Saracens, as by the ſequel hereof may appear, by the firſt riſing of this deviliſh ſect of Mahomet.

The number of the Apocalypſe cap. 13. expounded.

Moreover, another place there is, cap. 16. Apocal. where we read, that by pouring out of the Vial of Gods wrath, of the ſixth Angel, the great flood Euphrates was dryed up, to let in the Kings of the Eaſt; the opening of which propheſie may alſo more evidently appear, in conſidering the order and manner of the coming of theſe Turks into Europe.

Another place Apoc. 16.

Some alſo apply to the Turks certain Propheſies of Daniel, Ezechiel, and other places of the Old Teſtament which here I omit, forſomuch as the Propheſies of the Old Teſtament, if they be taken in their proper and native ſenſe, after my judgment, do extend no further than to the death of our Saviour, and to the end of the Jews Kingdom. Albeit herein I do not prejudicate to any mans opinion, but that every man may abound in his own ſenſe.

Et ſexto Angelus effudit phialam ſuam ſuper &c.

The time of Mahomet the falſe Prophet expounded.

As touching the year and time when this peſtiferous ſect of Mahomet the firſt began, Hiſtories do not fully conſent, ſome affirming that it began, Anno 621. and in the tenth year of Heraclius the Emperor of Conſtantinople; in which mind is Joannes Lucidus. As Munſterus counteth, it was in the year of our Lord, 622. Martin Luther and John Carion refer it to the 18*th* year of the reign of Heraclius, which is the year of our Lord, 630. Unto the which number, the computation of the Beaſt ſignified in the Apocalypſe, doth not far diſagree, which numbereth the name of the Beaſt, with three Greek letters χ ξ σ, which Greek letters, after the ſupputation of the Grecians, make the number of ſix hundred ſixty and ſix.

The number of the Beaſt in the Apoc. c. 13.

Mahomet of the ſtock of the Iſhmaelites, dwelling in Arabia.

In this all writers agree, that this damnable Mahomet was born in the Country of Arabia, bordering on the Eaſt part of Jewry. His father was a Syrian, or a Perſian, his mother was an Iſhmalite, which Iſhmalites being a people of Arabia, were called the Agarens; Which term Mahomet afterward turned to the name of Saracens. Of this wretched Mahomet, mention was made before, where we ſhewed, how he making himſelf the higheſt Prophet, of all other, yet denieth not Chriſt to be an holy Prophet, and next to him, and Moſes alſo to be another. Moreover, he denieth not Mary the Mother of Chriſt to be a Virgin, and to have conceived Chriſt by the Holy Ghoſt: affirming further, that Chriſt in his own perſon was not crucified, but another called Judas for him. He greatly commendeth alſo John the ſon of Zachary for a Virgin: when he himſelf permitteth a man to have four Wives, and as many Concubines as he is able to find: and ſaith that whereas Chriſt and other Prophets had the gift given them to work miracles, he was ſent by force of ſword, to compel men to his Religion.

The prodigious lies and blaſphemies of Mahomets Alchoran.

Mahomets Alchoran mingled with divers Laws.

The prodigeous vanities, lyes and blaſphemies contained in his Law called Alchoran, are rather to be laught at, than recited.

It is thought that Sergius a Neſtorian was a great doer with Mahomet, in contriving of this lying Alchoran, and ſo it doth well appear by the ſcope and pretence thereof, which eſpecially tendeth to this end, to take the divinity from the perſon of Chriſt, whom he granteth notwithſtanding to be a moſt holy man, and alſo that he is received up to God, and ſhall come again to kill Antichriſt, &c.

Moreover, this ridiculous Alchoran is ſo blanched and poudered with divers mixtures of the Chriſtians, Jews, and the Gentiles Laws, giving ſuch liberty to all wantonneſs of fleſh, ſetting up Circumciſion, abſtaining from ſwines fleſh, and Judaical lotions, and ſo much ſtandeth upon Father Abraham, that it is ſuppoſed of ſome, this filthy Alchoran, not to be ſet out in the days of Mahomet, but that certain Jews had ſome handling alſo in this matter, and put it out after his death, and ſo ſeemeth firſt to take his force about the number of years limited in the Apocalypſe, as is aforeſaid, where thus it is written: He that hath intelligence, let him count the number of the Beaſt: for it is the number of a man, and his number is ſix hundred ſixty and ſix.

The numeration of the Apocal. 66c.

After this deviliſh Mahomet had thus ſeduced the people, teaching them that he came not by miracles, but by force of ſword to give his Law, and that they which will not obey it, muſt either be put to death, or elſe pay tribute (for ſo be the words of the Alchoran;) and after that he had gathered ſtrength about him of the Arabians, which Arabians had then occaſion to rebel againſt the Emperor, becauſe their ſtipends were not paid them of Heraclius the Emperors Officers, he began to range with force and violence in the parts of Syria, bordering near unto him, and firſt ſubdued Mecha, then Damaſcus; and further increaſing in power, he entred into Ægypt, and ſubdued the ſame. From thence he turned his power againſt the Perſians, with whom Coſroes the King of Perſia encountred with a puiſſant Army, overthrew the Saracens, and put Mahomet to flight. Of theſe Perſians came the Turks, which afterward joyning with the Saracens, maintained them againſt the Chriſtians. Ex Munſter.

Damaſcus ſubdued of the Saracens.

Mahomet put to flight by Cofroes, King of the Perſians.

After the death of this Beaſt, which as ſome ſay, was poyſoned in his houſe, ſucceeded Ebocara, or Ebubecer his Father in law, or as Bibliander affirmeth, his Son in law, who took upon him the government of the Chriſtians, and got the City Gaza, and beſieged alſo Jeruſalem two years. He reigned two years, having for his chief City Damaſcus.

{KING Hen. 7.}

Jeruſalem beſieged.

After him followed Omar, or Ahumer, who conquered a great part of Syria, and got Ægypt.

The fourth King of the Saracens, after Mahomet, was Odman, then followed Haly, and after him Muhanio: which after a Siege of 7 years, obtained and got the Chriſtian City of Ceſarea; alſo overcame the Perſians, with their King Orimaſda, and ſubdued that Country to his Law.

Ceſarea got of the Saracent.

The Kingdom of the Perſians ſubdued to the Saracens.

Thus the wicked Saracens, in the ſpace of thirty years, ſubdued Arabia, got Paleſtina, Phenicia, Syria, Ægypt, and Perſia, which came directly to the 666 years, Propheſied of in the Revelation of Saint John, as is aforeſaid. And not long after they proceeded further, and got Afrik, and then Aſia, as in the proceſs of their ſtory ſhall appear, the Lord willing.

Arabia, Paleſtina, Phenicia, Syria, Ægypt, and Perſia, ſubdued of the Saracens.

Not long after Heraclius Emperor of Conſtantinople, ſucceeded Conſtance his Nephew, who in the 13. year of his Empire, fighting unluckily againſt the Saracens in Lycia, was overthrown of Muhamas aforeſaid, in the year of our Lord 655. Which Conſtence, if he were not propered by the Lord in his Wars, it was no great marvel, conſidering that he had ſlain his brother Theodoſius before at home; moreover, lived in inceſtuous Matrimony: alſo, being inclined to certain new Sects, could not abide the contrary teachers, but ſlew them which admoniſhed him thereof. The ſaid Conſtance going afterward to Italy, was alſo overcome of the Lumbards, &c. The Saracens after this victory, ſpoiled all Rhodes.

Conſtance the Emperor overcome by the Saracens.

Murder commonly proſpereth not with the Lord.

Rhodes ſpoiled of the Saracens.

Although theſe curſed Saracens in theſe their great victories and conqueſts, were not without domeſtical ſedition and diviſions among themſelves, yet the Princes of the Saracens, being called then Sultans, had in their poſſion the government of Syria, Ægypt, Afrik, and of a great part of Aſia, about the term of 400 years, till at length the Saracen King which ruled in Perſia, fighting againſt the Saracen of Babylon, ſought aid of the Turks, to fight with him againſt the Sultan of Babylon. The which Turks by little and little ſurpriſed upon the Sultan of Perſia, and not long after putting him out of place, uſurped the Kingdom of Perſia: which afterwards went further, as ye ſhall hear, the Lord willing. And this is the firſt beginning of the Turks dominion.

Sultans firſt called.

The firſt riſing of the Turks.

Theſe Turks, after they had thus overcome many Countries and Provinces, and made their power large and mighty both in Aſia and Europa, began to divide their Kingdoms and Countries amongſt themſelves. But when they could not agree, but with deadly War contended for the bounds of thoſe Kingdoms and Dominions, in the mean time four of the principal Families, conquering and ſubduing all the reſt, parted the whole Empire amongſt themſelves. And yet they alſo not ſo contented, fell to ſuch cruel hatred, contention, war and ſlaughter, (no doubt by the juſt Judgment of God againſt his blaſphemous Enemies) that there was no end thereof, until the remnant of the ancient Turks was utterly rooted out.

The Turkiſh dominions parted into four families.

For it is evident that there are few now remaining, which are Turks indeed by birth and blood, and that the State of that great Empire is not upholden, but by the ſtrength and power of Soldiers, which have been Chriſtians, and now are turned to Mahomets Religion; ſo that even their own natural Language is now out of uſe amongſt them, ſaving in certain Families of their Nobility and Gentlemen.

Theſe four Families above-mentioned, with their Captains and Armies, about the year of our Lord 1330, went raging throughout all Aſia and Europe, and every one of them conquered ſome part of the Countries where they paſſed.

The cauſes of theſe great Invaſions and Victories were the diſſention and diſcord, falſhood, idleneſs, unconſtancy, greedy avarice, lack of truth and fidelity among Chriſtian Men of all ſtates and degrees, both high and low. For by the wilful defection and back-ſliding of the Chriſtians, the Turkiſh power did exceedingly increaſe, in that many

KING Hen. 7.

many deſiring the licentious life and liberty of War, and allured with the proſperous ſucceſs of things, forſook the Church of God, and made themſelves bondſlaves to Mahumet and his Deviliſh Sect; both becauſe that fleſhly liberty is delightful to all Men, and partly alſo becauſe as fortune favoureth, ſo commonly the wills of Men incline. And again, ſuch as be prophane and without the fear of God, (whereof there is an infinite number in the Church) in all Ages are wont commonly to judge of Religion, according to the ſucceſs of Realms and Kingdoms. For many, not only for the variety of opinions, but alſo for the diverſity of events and fortune amongſt Men, have enquired and do enquire, Whether there be any Church of God diſtinct from other Nations: what it is, and where it is: eſpecially, forſomuch as the greateſt part of Men, both in the old time, when as the four Monarchies flouriſhed in order, was ignorant of this Doctrine, which is peculiar to the Church alone, and now alſo the barbarity of Mahumet prevaileth and reigneth in the moſt part of the World. And how ſtandeth this with Mans Reaſon, that a ſmall number, both miſerable and alſo feebled and broken with many Battels, ſhould be regarded and loved of God, and the other flouriſhing in all Wealth, Proſperities, Victories, Authority and Power, ſhould be rejected and deſpiſed of God, ſeeing there is no Power and Authority, but by the Ordinance of God? Albeit therefore the power of the Turks hath been, for theſe two hundred years, of greater force than any other Monarchy of the World beſides, yet is there no Imperial Dignity to be eſteemed in that Turkiſh tyranny, but amongſt thoſe Nations only, where the Heavenly Doctrine of the Goſpel is preached, and other Diſciplines neceſſary for the Church of God, and the common life of Man maintained and regarded; where the Laws of God, and other honeſt and civil Ordinances agreeable to the ſame, do flouriſh and reign: where lawful Judgment is exerciſed; where vertue is honoured and rewarded; where ſin and wickedneſs is puniſhed; where honeſt Families are maintained and defended.

No Imperial Country in all the Turkiſh Dominions.

Theſe things are not regarded amongſt the Turks, the enemies of the Son of God, and all lawful Empires: becauſe they diſſolve and reject all godly Societies, honeſt Diſcipline, good Laws, Policies, righteous Judgment, the Ordinance of Matrimony, and godly Families. For what hath the Empire of the Turks been hitherto, but moſt deadly, cruel, and perpetual War, to work all miſchief, deſtruction and deſolation? To ſubvert good Laws, Cities, Kingdoms, Policies, and to enlarge their cruel Power and Dominion? The ſtay and ſtrength whereof is not love and favour proceeding of vertue and juſtice, as in Lawful and well Governed Empires; but fear, violence, oppreſſion, ſwarms and infinite thouſands of barbarous and moſt wicked people, Miniſters of Satans malice and fury. Which kind of Dominion and Tyranny hath been condemned by the Voice of God many years ago; the Teſtimonies whereof the Lord would have to remain in the Church, leſt the godly, being moved with the power and ſucceſs thereof, ſhould fall away and forſake the Son of God.

The deſcription of the Turks unfortunate Empire.

Ezek. 39 Apo. 20.

Wherefore, let us not ſeek for any Imperial ſtate in that barbarity: but let us be thankful, and acknowledge the great benefit of God, for that he hath reſerved to us certain remnants of the Roman Empire: And let us call upon him daily with hearty petitions and groans, and with zeal and love to the Houſe of God, that this Turkiſh power joyned with the malice of Satan againſt the Son of God, prevail not againſt the poor Congregations and little Remnant of his Church, as it hath hitherto done againſt thoſe ſtrong and noble Chriſtian Kingdoms and Churches, where now we ſee the Turkiſh tyranny to reign, and Satan to have taken full poſſeſſion. Whoſe ſtate was once far better than ours is now, and more like to continue without ſuch horrible overthrows and deſolation. Oh that we might foreſee a little the great danger that hangeth over our heads. For though the Turk ſeemeth to be far off, yet do we nouriſh within our breaſts at home, that which may ſoon cauſe us to feel his cruel hand and worſe, if worſe may be; to over-run us; to lay our Land waſte; to ſcatter us amongſt the Infidels, the Enemies and Blaſphemers of the Son of God.

The Chriſtian Kingdoms and Churches deſtroyed by the Turks are a warning for us whom God hath yet ſpared.

Now, although theſe four Families above-mentioned long continued together in bloody Wars, deadly hatred, yet one of them paſſed the reſt in all cruelty and tyranny, and ſubduing the other three Families, took upon him the Government alone, and ſo became the firſt Monarch, or Emperor, that reigned amongſt them, called Ottomannus; of whom all that reigned after him were called Ottomanni. Who ſucceeding orderly of his Line, have occupied the ſame Dominion and Seat of the Turks, from the year of our Lord 1300, unto this preſent time, which have been to the number of 12, of the which 12, in ſuch order as they lived and reigned, I intend (Chriſt ſo permitting) ſeverally and compendiouſly ſomething to intreat, briefly abſtracting, out of prolix and tedious writers, ſuch ſpecialties, as for us Chriſtians ſhall be briefly requiſite to be known.

Four principal Families of the Turks.

The Family of Ottomannus.

Ottomannus the firſt great Emperor, or Tyrant of the Turks.

THIS Ottomannus was at the firſt of poor eſtate, and obſcure amongſt the common ſort of Men, coming of a baſe Progeny, and of ruſtical Parents; but through his valiantneſs and activity in War, he got him a great name amongſt the Turks. For he being a Man of fierce courage, refuſing no labour, and delighting in War, and gathering together by great ſubtilty a multitude of common Soldiers, began to make War, and by conqueſt and victories to advance himſelf and his Family. Firſt, He began to rob and ſpoil with a great band of rovers, and afterward he attempted to ſet upon all Men. Neither did he vex and deſtroy the Chriſtians only, but ſet upon his own Nation alſo, and ſought all occaſion to ſubdue them wholly unto him. For now the Princes and Captains of the Turks inflamed with ambition and deſire of rule, began to fall out and contend among themſelves, inſomuch that they fell to domeſticial and inward War, with all the power they could.

Ottomannus the firſt Emperor of the Turks.

Inward War among the Turks.

Ottomannus having this occaſion very fit and meet to accompliſh that which he long had ſought for, gathering unto him all ſuch as he thought to be given to robbing and ſpoiling, and ſet all upon miſchief, in ſhort time began to grow in Authority, and firſt ſet upon certain Towns, as he ſaw opportunity to ſerve him. Of which Towns ſome he took by force, ſome by yielding, other ſome he ſpoiled and overthrew to terrify the reſt, thus laying the firſt foundation of his riſing. In the mean time, the diſcord which was amongſt the Chriſtians was no ſmall advantage to this Ottomannus, by occaſion whereof, he within ten years ſpace ſubdued Bithynia, and all the Provinces about Pontus; alſo Natolia, which comprehendeth all the Dominion of the Greeks within Aſia: Ancyra a in Phrygia: Synope a City in Galatia; and Sabaſtia a City in Cappadocia: and thus ſtill prevailing, he increaſed in ſhort time to a mighty power, either through the ſecret Judgment of God againſt that Nation, or elſe becauſe God would have them ſo far and ſo cruelly to prevail, for the puniſhment of the ſins of other Nations, like as it was Propheſied before, that ſuch a Kingdom there ſhould be of Gog and Magog.

The coming up of Ottomannus. Bithynia, Natolia, Ancyra, Synope, Sabaſtia ſubdued.

Ezek. 38

This Ottomannus, after he had reigned 28 years, in the year of our Lord 1327, died, and departed to his Mahumet, leaving behind him three Sons, of whom Orchanes, being the youngeſt, killed his two Brethren, whilſt they were at variance between themſelves.

Orchanes the ſecond Emperor after Ottomannus.

ORchanes, the youngeſt of the Sons of Ottomannus, after he had ſlain his two Brethren, took the Regiment of the Turks after his Father. Who after he had drawn to him the hearts of the multitude, ſuch as had their diſpoſitions ſet upon the licentious life of War, converted his power further to enlarge his Fathers Dominion, winning and ſubduing Myſia, Lydia, Lycaonia, Phrygia and Caria: All which Countries, being within the compaſs of Aſia, unto the Sea-ſide of Helleſpontus, and the Sea Euxinus, he added to the Turkiſh Empire. Alſo he wan Pruſia, which was the Metropolitan City of Bithynia, Orchani the ſecond Emperor of the Turks after Ottomannus.

Myſia, Lydia, Lycaonia, Phrygia, Caria, Pruſia, Nicea, Nicomedia. Chriſtian Cities ſubdued of the Turks.

nia, which then he made the chief seat of the Turks Empire. Besides these moreover, he conquered Nicea, and got Nicomedia: all which were before Christian Cities and Regions. And yet all this could not make the Christian Princes in Grecia to cease their civil Wars, and to joyn and accord among themselves; Such debate and variance, was then between Cantacuzenus on the Greeks part, and Paleologus the Emperor of Constantinople. By reason whereof, the Turks aid was sent for out of Asia to help our Christians one to kill another, and at length to get all those parts of Europe from them both. Who if they had, according to their profession, so well joyned in Brotherly Unity, as they did in cruel hostility dissent, neither had Orchanes so prevailed in getting Prusia from the Grecians, neither had the Turks so soon presumed into Europe as afterward they did. Orchanes after these victories, when he had reigned two and twenty years, was strucken, some say, with a Dart in the shoulder, at the Siege of Prusia. The opinion of other is, that he fighting against the Tartarians, where he lost a great part of his Army, was there also slain himself, Anno 1349.

Civil War among the Grecians.

By the discord of Christians the Turks increase.

Amurathes the third after Ottomannus.

THE Greek writers do hold that Orchanes had two Sons Solimannus and Amurathes. Of which two, first Solimannus reigned, albeit not long. After him followed Amurathes, who after that Asia now was subdued by his predecessors, sought by all means and ways how to proceed further, and to invade Europe. To whose ambitious purpose the Domestical Wars of the Christians gave unprosperous occasion, which occasion is thus declared. Certain discord fell between the Princes of Greece (whose Captain was Cantacuzenus) and Paleologus Emperor of Constantinople. Whereupon Paleologus, for that he was not able to make his party good with the Grecians, most unwisely sent for Amurathes to help him. Who being glad to have such an occasion offered, which he so long had sought, sent to aid him 12000 Turks into Thracia: but first he used all delays he cou'd of crafty policy, to the intent that the Greeks first should waste their strength, and power upon themselves, whereby he might be more able afterward to set upon them, and to accomplish his conceived desire.

Amurathes the third after Ottomannus. Amurathes seeketh occasion to invade Europe.

The Turks thus being called into Europe, by the Christians, whether they tasting the sweetness of the soil, incensed Amurathes their Emperor to make Invasion, or whether Amurathes of his own head thought good to use the time, in the year of our Lord 1363, he came himself over into Europe with 60000 Turks, falling upon the Grecians, being wasted and spent with their long Wars and Battels before. The pretence of the Devilish Turk was, to aid and assist the Emperor Paleologus, whether he would or no, and to subdue such as had fallen from him. The Christian Ships of the Ligurions, for mony were hired to conduct them over, taking for every Soldier a piece of Gold. Ex Peucer & aliis.

The first coming of the Turks into Europe.

The covetousness of the Christians brought over the Turks.

Thus the Turks Army being conveyed over by the Grecian Sea called Hellespontus, first got Calipolis, with other Towns and Cities bordering about the Sea, and their planting themselves, and preparing Ships of their own for transporting their Munitions out of Asia, advanced their power further into Thracia, and there won Philippolis, then got Adrianopolis, which was not far from Constantinople, and there Amurathes made his chief seat. Then began Paleologus the Emperor at length to bewail his offer and covenant made with Amurathes. When the Turks had expugned thus a great part of Thracia, they extended forth their Army unto Mysia, which they soon subdued: from thence proceeding and conquering the Bessos and Triballos, they entred into Servia and Bulgarsa, where they joyning Battel with Lazarus Despota, Prince of Servia, and with other Dukes of Dalmatia and Epyrus, won of them the Field, and put them to the worse; where Lazarus Despota being taken, and committed to Prison, ended his life. This Lazarus had a certain faithful client or servant, who to revenge his Masters death, with a bold courage, although seeing death before his eyes, yet ventured his life so far, that he came to the Tyrant and thrust him through with his Dagger. This Amurathes reigned 23 years, and was slain in the year of our Lord, 1372.

KING Hen. 7.

The death of Amurathes.

Bajazetes the fourth after Ottomannus.

THE power of the Turks began to increase in Europe, what time Bajazetes, the first of that name, after the death of his Father, entred the possession of the Turks Kingdom. This Bajazetes had two Brethren, Solimannus and Sauces: which Sauces had his Eyes put out by his Father, for striving for the Kingdom. Solimannus was slain of his Brother. Thus Bajazetes, beginning his Kingdom with the murther of his Brother, reduced his Imperial Seat from Prusia a City of Bithynia, unto Adrianople, intending with himself to subdue both Asia and Europe to his own power. First he set upon the Servians and Bulgarians, thinking to revenge his Fathers Death, where he gave the overthrow to Marcus Despota, with all the Nobility of the Servians and Bulgarians, and put all those parts under his subjection, unto the Fines and Borders of the Illyrians. All Thracia moreover he brought likewise under his yoke, only Constantinople and Pera excepted. That done, he invaded the residue of Grecia, prevailing against the Countries of Thessalia, Macedonia, Phocides and Attica, spoiling and burning as he passed without any resistance; and so, returning with innumerable spoil of the Christians unto Adrianople, laid Siege to Constantinople the space of eight years, and had expugned the same, but that Paleologus, being brought to extremity, was driven to crave aid of the French-men, and of Sigismund the Emperor. Who, being accompanied with a sufficient power of French-men and Germans, came down to Hungaria, and toward Servia, against the Turk. Bajazetes hearing of their coming, raised his Siege from Constantinople, and with 60000 Horsemen came to Nicopolis, where he encountring with them, overthrew all the Christian Army, took John the Captain of the French power Prisoner: Sigismundus, which before in the Council of Constance had burned John Hus and Jerome of Prague, hardly escaped by flying. Bajazetes, after the Victory got, carried away Duke John, with five other in Bands, into Prusia, where before his face he caused all the other Christian Prisoners to be cut in pieces. Afterward the said John, being Ransomed with 200000 Crowns, was delivered. Some Authors refer this Story to the time of Calepinus, as followeth hereafter to be seen.

Bajazetes the fourth after Ottomannus.

Marcus Despota slain of the Turk. Servia, Macedonia, Bulgaria, Phocides, Thracia, Attica, Thessalia: with other Christian Countries, conquered of the Turks. Constantinople Besieged eight years by the Turks.

The Christians overthrown of the Turks. Sigismund the Emperor put to flight.

The barbarous cruelty of the Turk against the Christians.

Bajazetes the cruel Tyrant after this Victory won, and Tyranny shewed upon the Christians, returned again to the Siege of Constantinople, fully bending himself to conquer and subdue the same; which thing no doubt he had accomplished, but that the Providence of God had found such a means, that Tamerlanes King of Parthia, with an hundred thousand Horsemen, and swarms of Footmen, like a violent flood over-running Asia, and pressing upon Syria and Sebastia, had taken Orthobules, the Son of Bajazetes, Prisoner, and afterward slew him, exercising the like cruelty upon his Prisoners, as Bajazetes had done before upon the Christians; insomuch that he spared neither Sex nor Age of the Turkish multitude: of whom he caused twelve thousand at one time to be over-ridden and trodden down under his Horses feet. By reason whereof, Bajazetes the Tyrant was enforced to raise his Siege from Constantinople, and to return his power into Asia; where he, near the Hill called Stella, pitched his Tents there to encounter with Tamerlanes.

Tamerlanes a Parthian stirred up of God, to revenge the Christians. Bajazetes Son taken and slain. Cruelty justly revenged with cruelty. Bajazetes raiseth his Siege from Constantinople.

The Fight between these two, was long and great on both sides, which was in the year of our Lord 1397, and the second year after the slaughter of our Christians at Nicopolis in Pannonia; but the Victory of this Battel fell to Tamerlanes at length. In the which Battel, as Munsterus writeth, were slain 200000 Turks. Among whom Bajazetes the Tyrant, having his Horse slain under him, was taken Prisoner; and to make a spectacle of his wretched fortune, he was bound in Golden Fetters, and so being inclosed in an Iron Grate (whom before all Grecia could not hold) was led about and shewed through all Asia, to be scorned and laught at: and moreover, was used instead of a footstool to Tamerlanes, or a block, as often as he mounted upon his Horse. Some add also, That he was made like a Dog to feed under Tamerlanes Table. The tyranny of which Bajazetes against the Christians, as it was not much unlike to the cruelty of Valerianus the Roman Emperor above-mentioned, so neither was the example of his punishment much discrepant; for as Sapores King of the Persians did then with Valerianus in time of the Eighth Persecution of the Primitive Church, so likewise was Bajazetes this Persecutor worthily handled by Tamerlanes King of the Parthians, as in manner above-said.

The great victories of Tamerlanes in Asia.

Tamerlanes after this Conquest passed with his Army into Mesopotamia, to Egypt, and all Syria, where he victoriously subduing the Cities and Munitions of the Turks, at length also conquered Damascus. In his Sieges his manner was, the first day to go all in White attire, the second day in Red, the third day in Black, signifying thereby Mercy the first day, to them that yielded; the second day the Sword; the third day fire and ashes. At last after great Victories, and Spoils gotten of the Turks, he returned into his Country again, and there died, Anno 1402.

Ex Seb. Munstero lib. 4. Cosmographiæ.

Seb. Munsterus, writing of this Tamerlanes, Recordeth that he had in his Army 20000 Men: and that he overcame the Parthians, Scythians, Hiberians, Albans, Persians, Medes, and Conquered all Mesopotamia: and after he had also subdued Armenia, passing over the River Euphrates with Six hundred thousand Footmen, and Four hundred thousand Horsemen, he Invaded all Asia Minor, Conquering and subduing from the Flood Tanais unto Nilus in Egypt, and was called Terror Orbis, the Terror of the World. He left behind him two Sons, who, falling in discord for their Possessions, lost all again that their Father got.

Tanais is the uttermost flood in the North-side; and Nilus the uttermost flood in the South-side of Asia. A generation of Vipers.

In the mean time Bajazetes, in the second year of his Captivity, died, leaving behind him divers Sons, Jesus or Josua the eldest, Mulsumanes, Moses, Celebinus, or Calepinus, Jesus the younger; Mustaphas and Hali, of whom, first Jesus the eldest was overcome and slain of Mulsumanes, which Mulsumanes afterward was delivered to Moses his Brother, and by him was slain likewise; which Moses had also the like end by his Brother Calepinus, having his Neck broken with a Bow-string, which was then the usual manner among the Turks in killing their Brethren. The same Calepinus sparing only the life of Mustaphas his other Brother, condemned him to perpetual Prison. Jesus the younger was Baptised, and shortly after departed at Constantinople. In these such discords and divisions among the Turks, what occasions were given to the Christians to have recovered again of the Turks that they had lost, if they had not been either negligent, or in their own private Wars otherwise occupied with themselves?

Calepinus the Fifth after Ottomannus.

Calepinus the fifth, after Ottomannus.

Calepinus or Celebinus, was the Son of Bajazetes, and of four Brethren the eldest; who being all taken Captives of the Parthians, he only escaped and obtained his Fathers Kingdom. This Calepinus encouraged by the sloth and negligence of the Princes of Europe, and by the discord of the Grecians amongst themselves and other Nations near about them, long troubled and vexed the Bulgarians, Servians, and Macedonians, even to the time of Sigismundus. Which Sigismundus seeing now Bajazetes to be overcome and taken of Tamerlanes, and the power of the Turks weakned in Europe, and having such occasion offered him, as it were from Heaven, to destroy and utterly to root out, not only out of Asia, but also all Europe, that barbarous Nation, and cruel Enemies to the Name and Religion of Christ: and also to revenge the great slaughter and discomfiture of his Army Fighting before with Bajazetes at Nicopolis a City in Mysia; with great Power made War against Calepinus at Columbatium a Town in Servia, as is also before-mentioned, but as unluckily and with as little success as he did before against Bajazetes his Father. For in that Battel were slain of the Christians to the number of Twenty thousands and the rest utterly discomfited, the King himself escaping so hardly, that he entred not again into his Kingdom for the space of Eighteen months after. Some write that this was done under Bajazetes; otherwhile refer this Battel to Amurathes; but howsoever it was, most pernicious was it to the Christians. He Reigned but Six years and died very young, Anno 1404.

Some stories Record this conflict to be after the time of this Turk.

Orchanes and Moses his Uncle, the Sixth after Ottomannus.

Orchanes and Moses his Uncle. Diversity in Historie.

After the Captivity of Bajazetes above-mentioned, Histories diversly do dissent. The Greek writers, making no mention at all of Calepinus, only make mention of the Sons of Bajazetes, and of the contention among them, until the time of Mahumetes. The Latin Stories writing of the Children of Bajazetes and of their succession, do not therein agree, some affirming, That Bajazetes had two Sons, Orchanes, surnamed Calepinus, and Mahumetes his Brother, which within two years slew the said Calepinus, and entred his Dominion. Other attribute to Bajazetes more Sons, as is above-rehearsed. Some again do give to Bajazetes only these two Sons, Celebinus and Mustaphas; and hold that Calepinus or Celebinus had two Sons; to wit, Orchanes and Mahumetes; and add moreover, That the said Orchanes, being somewhat young, was slain of his Uncle Moses, who governed but two years. For Mahumetes, to revenge his Brothers death, slew Moses, and invaded his Dominion. The Greek Stories make no mention at all of Orchanes.

Mahumetes the Seventh after Ottomannus.

Mahumetes the seventh after Ottomannus, Wallachia assaulted by Mahumetes.

THIS Mahumetes, whether he was the Son of Bajazetes, or else of Calepinus, converted to himself alone the Kingdom, or tyranny rather of the murdering Turks. Who afflicted the Christians with sore Wars within Europe, especially the Country called Wallachia, lying not far from the Flood Danubius, between Hungary and Thracia. From thence he removed into Asia, where he recovered divers parts in Galatia, Pontus, Cappadocia, Cilicia, which before Tamerlanes had alienated from the Turks. This Mahumetes planted his Chief Imperial Seat in Adrianople not far from Constantinople, within the Country of Thracia. In some Writers the conflict between Sigismund and the great Turk, wherein the Christians were so discomfited, is referred rather to this Mahumetes, than to Calepinus; of which conflict mention is above made in the Story of Sigismundus. This Mahumetes Reigned, as some say, fourteen years, and died in the year of our Lord 1419. Others affirm seventeen years.

Amurathes the Second, Eighth after Ottomannus.

Amurathes the Eighth after Ottomannus.

Amurathes, as Philelphus saith, was the Son of Celebinus as Laonicus Chalcondiles testifieth, of Mahumetes: whose Son soever he was, a wretched Tyrant he was, and permitted as a scourge of God, to correct the sins of the Christians. In the story of Bajazetes mention was made before of Mustaphas his Son, who was condemned to perpetual Prison by Calepinus his Brother. This Mustaphas escaping out of his Brothers Prison, was conveyed to the Grecians, where he remained long in custody, till at length they understanding the purpose of Amurathes, set him up with sufficient Habiliments and Furniture of War, to Fight against the said Amurathes his Nephew. But in conclusion he being not able to make his party good, came into the hands of his Enemy, and had his neck broke with a Bow-string, after the manner of the Turkish execution.

Mustaphas murdered by Amurathes his Nephew.

The Grecians then terrified with this sinister adversity, required truce of the Turk; but when that would not be granted, they procured unto them Mustaphas, the other Brother to Amurathes, being of the age of 13 years; who, likewise being Armed of the Grecians, got the City of Nice in Bithynia, from Amurathes his Brother. Albeit it was not long but he was circumvented in the same City, and brought to Amurathes; who caused him likewise to taste of the same Whip, as the other Mustaphas had done before. Amurathes being now out of all fear and doubt of Brethren and Kinsfolks to rise against him, converted all his

This Theſſalonica is a City in Greece, bordering upon Macedonia, to the Citizens whereof Saint Paul writeth, foreſhewing unto them, in his ſecond Epiſtle, of a defection to come before the coming of the day of our Lord, 2 Theſ. 2. By the which Apoſtaſie or defection what the holy Apoſtle doth mean, this ſtory of the Turks may eaſily declare. After Theſſalonica was ſubdued, Phocis with all the Country about Athens, Beotia likewiſe, Ætolia, Acarnania, with all the Region beyond Peloponneſus, unto the Coaſt of Corinth, to whom Saint Paul alſo wrote other two Epiſtles, were brought in bondage and ſlavery unto the Turk.

In Epirus, and in that quarter that adjoyneth to Macedonia named Albania, Reigned then one Joannes Caſtriotus; who, perceiving himſelf too weak to match with the Turks power, made with the Turk this converſion, that he ſhould have Croia, a Famous City in Grecia, and alſo gave to him his three Sons for hoſtages, to wit, Conſtantinus, Repoſius, and Georgius.

In this George ſuch towardneſs of noble courage, ſuch vigor of mind, and ſtrength of body ſingularly did appear, that the Turk cauſed him more freely to be inſtructed after the Turkiſh Religion and manner in his own Court: where he being trained up, did ſo ſhoot up as well in feats of activity, as in ſtrength of body, that he excelled all his equals; inſomuch that he was named Scanderbeius, which ſoundeth as much as Alexander Magnus.

The valiant Acts of Georgius Scanderbeius.

After this Alexander was grown up to mature ripeneſs of age, and was well trained up in feats of War, he was ſent out by the Turk, to War againſt Caramannus of Cilicia, the Turks enemy. In which expedition he ſped himſelf moſt manfully, fighting hand to hand, firſt with a footman of Scythia, then with an Horſeman of Perſia, being challenged by them both to encounter, firſt with the one, after with the other; whom he ſo valiantly overthrew that he wan great renown with the Turk: In ſo much that he truſting to the Turks favour, when he heard of the deceaſe of his Father, durſt ask of the Turk the grant of his Fathers Dominion to be given unto him. Which requeſt although Amurathes the Turk did not deny him; yet notwithſtanding, he perceiving the matter to be dallied out with fair words, by ſubtile means and policy ſlipt out of the Turks Court, and came to Epyrus his own inheritance, where firſt by forged Letters he recovered Croia. The other Cities of their voluntary mind yielded themſelves unto him; who then gathering unto him the people of Epyrus and Macedonia (which were not ſo many in number, as with good willing minds they ſtuck unto him ſo manfully and valiantly behaved himſelf, that againſt all the puiſſance both of Amurathes, and alſo of Mahumetes, he maintained his own, repulſed their violence, and put to flight their Armies many years together. But to return again to the courſe of Amurathes victories, after he had thus prevailed (as is before ſignified) againſt the Eaſt parts of Europa and Grecia, and had convented thus for the Dominion of Epyrus, he invaded Illyricum, (otherwiſe called now Sclavonia) containing in it Dalmatia, Croatia, Iſtria, and Liburnia: which Countries after he had ſpoiled and waſted, he continued his courſe to Albania and Boſna. In which Regions, when he had ſubdued a great part, and had led away an innumerable multitude of captives, he moved further to Walachia and Servia, upon hope to Conquer all Pannonia.

There Reigned at the ſame time in Servia a certain Prince named Georgius Deſpota, who made great ſute to the Turk for Truce and Peace, promiſing to give his Daughter to marriage; for by the Turks Law they marry as many wives as they liſt. It was not long after Amurathes had married the Daughter of Deſpota, but he contrary to his league and promiſe, made War upon Deſpota his Father-in-law, and expelled him out of his Kingdom, taking from him divers Cities, as Scopia, Novomonte, Sophia, and all Myſia. Georgius himſelf fled into Hungary, leaving behind him his Son to defend the Town of Sinderonia. Amurathes underſtanding of the flight of Deſpota his Father in law, compaſſed the City of Sinderonia with a ſtrong Siege, which when in few days had expugned, he took his Wives Brother the Son of Deſpota, and without all regard of mercy and affinity, after the barbarous Tyranny of the Turks, put out his eyes, with a Baſon red hot ſet before his eyes, and after that led him about with him in deriſion in deſpite of his cowardly Father. *Ex Chriſtoph. KING Hen. 7. The cruelty of the Turk upon his wives Brother.

Servia being thus won and gotten, Amurathes, thinking to go further into Hungary, beſieged the City called Belgradum, and no doubt had alſo ſuppreſſed the ſame, had not the Providence of God found means, that partly through ſlaughter of his men, partly for lack of Victual and other Forrage, he was compelled to raiſe his Siege and retire.

Belgradum beſieged of the Turk.

In the mean time Joannes Huniades (of whom mention was made before:) had got great victories againſt the Turkiſh power, and had recovered part of Servia, and all Muldavia; againſt whom Amurathes the Turk, with a mighty Army, moved into Pannonia. But Huniades with the power and aid of Ladiſlaus King of Polonia (but ſpecially by the power of the Lord) did ſoon infringe the puiſſance of the Turk, and gave him the overthrow, recovering unto the Chriſtians the greateſt part of Servia and Bulgaria.

Joannes Huniades Valvoda.

In this Battel Huniades had five ſundry conflicts with the Turks upon one day, and with five Victories put them to the worſe, and toward night did ſo diſcomfit and overthrow the great Captain of Amurathes, called Baſſa, the Duke of Anatolia (which is otherwiſe named Aſia Minor) that he ſlew of the Turks that day to the number of Thirty Thouſand. Amurathes, although, he was not a little thereat diſcouraged, yet diſſembling his fear, with ſtout countenance ſent for Carambeius his principal ſtay and Captain, with a new power brought out of Aſia to aſſiſt him in his wars. This Carambeius in the Downs of Tranſylvania, Ladiſlaus the foreſaid King of of Polonia (the Lord ſo working through the induſtry of Joannes Huniades, ſo received and with ſuch celerity oppreſſed him unprovided, that all his ſtout and ſturdy Army either was ſlain down right, or elſe put to flight and diſparkled, Carambeius the Captain being himſelf taken priſoner in the ſame field.

Five Victories of Johannes Huniades, againſt the Turk, gotten in one day. The great Baſſa or Duke of the Turks overthrown by Huniades. The Victory of Huniades againſt Carambeius the great Captain of the Turks. The Great Turk brought to great diſtreſs.

Theſe Victories of Huniades ſtrook no little terror to Amurathes, inſomuch that for diſtreſs of mind he was ready to deſtroy himſelf (as ſome do write) but being confirmed by Helibeus Baſſa his Counſellor, he kept himſelf within the ſtraits of Mount Rhodope. Who then hearing that Caramannus invaded the ſame time the Country of Bithynia and Pontus in Aſia, was glad to take truce with Ladiſlaus and Huniades upon ſuch conditions as they liſted to make themſelves: which conditions were theſe, that Amurathes ſhould depart clearly from all the Region of Servia, and ſhould remove from thence all his Garriſons, which were placed in the Caſtles and Forts of the ſame; alſo he ſhould reſtore George Deſpota (which is to ſay) Prince of Servia, unto his poſſeſſion, and ſet his children free, whom he had in captivity, and reſtore them to their inheritance. Item, that he ſhould make no more claim nor title to the Country of Muldavia above mentioned, nor to that part of Bulgravia which he had loſt; and that he ſhould deſiſt hereafter from all wrongs and injuries againſt the Chriſtians. Upon theſe conditions the Turk being agreed, ſo was truce concluded on both parts for ten years, and with ſolemn Oath between them confirmed.

Amurathes ſeeketh truce of the Chriſtians. The conditions between Ladiſlaus King of Polonia, and Amurathes.

This done, Amurathes the Tyrant addreſſeth himſelf toward Aſia, to reſiſt the invaſion of Caramannus aforeſaid. At what time Pope Eugenius ſo ſoon as he heard the Turk to be returned into Aſia, ſendeth Julianus Cæſarianus his Cardinal (whoſe ſtory is before touched) unto Ladiſlaus the foreſaid King, with full diſpenſation and abſolution to break his Oath and league with the Turk, promiſing moreover great hope and aid, if he would go in Arms ſtoutly againſt the Tyrant.

Truce between the Chriſtians and the Turks for ten years. Amurathes returned into Aſia. The Popes diſpenſation and abſolution abuſed.

¶ Where by the way is to be noted, that as there is no truth of promiſe in that Peſtilent Sea of Rome, neither was there ever any War proſpered, which was taken in hand by the Popes Council: ſo was there never any Council of the Pope that brought with it more detriment to Chriſtianity, than this. But the Pope belike thought, that that as he might lawfully break promiſe with John Hus, and with other Chriſtians, ſo alſo he needed not to obſerve any League of Truce taken with the Turk: But it turned much otherwiſe than the Popes blind Brains imagined, as by the ſequel is to be ſeen. For Ladiſlaus being thus excited by the unadviſed and ſiniſter inſtigation of Pope Eugenius, contrary to the Truce eſtabliſhed a little before, ſet out with his Army from Seledinus, and ſo proceeding to Walachia and Burgaria, came to Varna, a Town of Bulgary, where he fell ſick.

The day of battel being ſet, the Armies joyned on both ſides. Huniades was himſelf there preſent, but all the matter was ruled by Julianus the Cardinal, and the Popes Clergy. The Fight continued three days and three nights together, with great courage and much bloodſhed on each ſide; inſomuch that the field did ſtand with lakes of blood. It ſeemed at the firſt to incline to the Chriſtians, by breaking the firſt ranks of the Turks. But the Prieſts and Prelates which were at the field (which had been more fit to have been in the Church) ſeeing the Turks to begin to flie, unskilfully left their array to purſue the Enemy, ſo that they leaving the other ſtandings of the Chriſtians naked, gave great advantage to the Turks with their Darts and ſhot to diſturb the Chriſtian rangs. By the which occaſion Amurathes incloſing the Chriſtians with his Army round about, obtained the Victory. In the which field, Ladiſlaus the young King of Polony, having his Horſe firſt killed under him, was ſtrucken down and ſlain. The Popes Biſhops flying to ſave themſelves, fell into the Marſhes, and there were deſtroyed, ſuſtaining a durty death condign to their filthy fallhood and untruth. Julianus the Cardinal, which with the Pope was the chief doer in breaking the League, in the way was found dead, being full of Wounds, and ſpoiled to his naked skin. Of the reſt of the Army that eſcaped by flying, part was drowned in the Marſhes, ſome periſhed miſerably for hunger, ſome for cold, watching and wandring in the Woods. Huniades hardly eſcaped the danger, by the merciful providence of God, being reſerved to the further profit and Commodity of Chriſtendom.

This John Huniades the worthy Warrior was born in Walachia, being Earl of Biſtice, of all Captains that ever went againſt the Turks moſt famous and ſingular, prudent in wit, diſcreet in Councel, expert and politick in War, prompt of hand, circumſpect before he attempted, quick in expedition: in whom wanted almoſt no good property requiſite in a warlike Captain. Againſt two moſt mighty and fierce Tyrants, Amurathes and Mahumetes, through the Lords Might, he defended all Pannonia, and therefore was called the Thunderbolt and Terror of the Turks. Like as Achilles was unto the Grecians, ſo was he ſet up of God to be as a Wall or Bulwark of all Europe againſt the cruel Turks and Enemies of Chriſt and of his Chriſtians. Neither was there any King or Prince that ever atchieved ſuch noble Victories, either ſo many in number, or ſo profitable for the publick utility of all Europe, as did he, and that not only in the days of this Amurathes, but alſo of Mahumetes his ſucceſſor, as hereafter remaineth further to be ſeen.

The worthy commendation of John Huniades.

This battel of Amurathes againſt the Chriſtians at Varna in Bulgaria, was fought in the year of our Lord, 1404.

Amurathes by reaſon of this Victorious overthrow againſt the Chriſtians, ſurpriſed with no ſmall Pride, directed his journey incontinent toward the Grecians, where Caſtriotus was, otherwiſe called Scanderbeius. And firſt coming to Peloponneſus, and breaking down the Wall about the Straits of Corinth, encountred with the Brother of the Emperor of Conſtantinople, whom with his ſudden coming he oppreſſed, with all the Greeks Army, ere they were provided. Paleologus the Emperor after that, did build up the Wall again, but at the Turks bidding he was compelled to undo it again: which Wall afterwards the Venetians did repair. After the demolition of the Wall, Amurathes entring into * Peloponneſus took divers Towns and Cities, as Sycione, and Patris; and moreover made all the parts of Theſſalia and Achaia Tributaries unto them.

Amurathes taketh his Voiage againſt the Grecians.

* Peloponneſus Sycione, Patris, with all the parts of Theſſalia and Achaia, brought under the Turk.

The next year after this battel of Amurathes fought againſt the Chriſtians at Varna, the Turk being now about the parts of Grecia, purpoſed to bend all his force and main againſt the Country of Epyrus belonging to Georgius Caſtriotus Scanderbeius. Of this Scanderbeius mention was made before, how he was brought up in the Turks Court, from whence we declared alſo how ſubtilly he conveyed himſelf, and came to the poſſeſſion of his own patrimony of Epyrus. * Which Epyrus this noble and victorious Scanderbeius (whom the Lord alſo had raiſed up the ſame time with Huniades, to bridle the fury of the Turks) valiantly defended againſt all the power of Amurathes; inſomuch that he diſcomfited and vanquiſhed ſeven of the moſt expert Baſſaes or Dukes of the Ottoman Emperor, one after another, with all their Armies of moſt picked and choſen Souldiers, diſlodged them of their Tents, and expulſed them utterly out of all Epyrus. Alſo when Amurathes himſelf with his whole puiſſance had invironed about the City of Croja, with cruel ſiege and ordinance out of meaſure, yet notwithſtanding the ſaid Scanderbeius (through the power and bleſſing of the Lord) beat him out of the field, and repulſed him from the ſiege.

The memorable Acts of Scanderbeius againſt Amuralbes.

* This Epyrus is a Country in Grecia, bordering near to the parts of Macedonia.

Seven Captains of the Turks overcome by Caſtriotus Scanderbeius.

After this diſcomfiture, the ſaying is, that Amurathes, to keep his Vow made before, after his Victory at Varna, gave himſelf unto a religious Order, living a contemplative life with certain other Prieſts joyned unto him, in the Forreſt of Bithynia, renouncing the government of his Realm to the hands of Haly, one of the Princes (for thou muſt underſtand, good Reader, that the Turks alſo be not without their ſundry Sects of Religion, no more than we Chriſtians are without our Friers and Monks.)

Amurathes renounced his Dominion, and made himſelf a Turkiſh Monk.

In the mean time while Amurathes this Turkiſh Tyrant was cloyſtered up in his Monkiſh Religion, Joannes Huniades in the Kingdom of Hungary, and Caſtriotus Scanderbeius in Grecia, kept a great ſtir againſt the Turks. By reaſon whereof Amurathes was taken again from his Monkiſh vow and profeſſion, and brought again into the field: For firſt Huniades had reſcued the whole Country of Hungaria, and had propulſed moreover all the might of the Turks far from Servia. And although the peeviſh practice of Georgius Prince of Servia had oftentimes diſcloſed his Councils unto the Turks, whereby twice he was brought in danger, yet notwithſtanding (through the Lords gracious Protection) ye was preſerved and delivered by the ſaid George unto the Hungarians again, and after that manfully vanquiſhed the Turks, ſo that they had no reſting place about thoſe parts of Servia and Bulgaria, ſo long as he lived.

Two Chriſtian Warriors in Europe ſtirred up of God to vanquiſh the Turks.

This John Huniades is reported of twenty battels with the Turk, to loſe but two.

On the other ſide in Grecia, Caſtriotus Scanderbeius ſo foiled the Turk in defence of his Country Epyrus and Macedonia, and kept Amurathes ſo ſhort, that not only he was not able to win any great Town in all Epyrus, but alſo coming from Epyrus in the Straits, he was ſo intangled by Caſtriotus, that he was forced to give battel: In the which battel he was ſo vanquiſhed, and moſt part of his Army ſlain, that, for grief and ſorrow conceived, he falling into a raving ſickneſs, was tranſported out of his Pavillion unto Adrianople, and there in fury and madneſs died, after he had Reigned 34 years, which was about the year of our Lord, 1450.

Epyrus and Macedonia, defended by Scanderbeius.

Amurathes overcome by Scanderbeius.

This Amurathes firſt ordained the order of the Janizarites. Which were the Men-children of ſuch Chriſtians as he conquered and took captive; whom he forced to renounce the Faith of Chriſt, wherein they were Baptized, and brought them up in Mahumets Law, and exerciſed them in the ſame Feats of War as he did his own people, and after that they came to Mans eſtate, he named them Janizari (that is to ſay) Souldiers of a ſtrange Country, and made them to guard his perſon. They wear on their head, inſtead of an Helmet, a white Attire made of the groſſeſt ſort of Wooll, and in ſo many folds folds about their head that it cannot be pierced with a Sword. It hangeth down on the back with a Tail, and before on the forehead it is garniſhed with Gold and Silver. They were wont to uſe Bows and Lances in the field, but now they uſe Dags as our Horſemen do.

Janizari among the Turk.

At the firſt inſtitution there were but Eight thouſand in their Garriſon, but now there be twice ſo many. This of all bondage and ſervitude that the Chriſtians ſuffer under the Turks is moſt intolerable, and greatly to be of all true Chriſtians lamented. For what can godly minds behold more to their grief, than to ſee their Children pulled from the Faith of Chriſt wherein they were Baptized, and by whoſe blood they ſhould eternally be ſaved, and to be inſtructed and nouriſhed with the blaſphemous Doctrine of Mahumet, and ſo be profeſſed Enemies of Chriſt and his Church, to make War againſt Heaven, and to periſh everlaſtingly? And finally, what a lamentable thing is it, to ſee and behold our own Children born of our own bodies, to become our mortal and cruel Enemies, and to cut our Throats with their own hands? This ſervitude of mind is far greater than death it ſelf: which if our Princes would well conſider, it would cauſe them the rather to agree, and bend their whole force and power againſt this cruel Enemy.

Mahumetes Second, the ninth after Ottomannus.

Mahumetes the ninth Turk after Ottomannus

Murathes left behind him three Sons, Mahumetes born of the Daughter of Deſpota, Prince of Servia, being Twenty years of Age, the ſecond Son called Turcines, the Third named Calepinus. This Turcines being an Infant, and but eighteen Months old, was Strangled at the commandment of the Turk by his ſervant Moſes, himſelf being there preſent and beholding the horrible Murther. And when Moſes the Executer of the murther had deſired him not to pollute his hands with the blood of his Brother, he anſwered, that it was the manner of all the Ottoman Turks, that all the other Brethren being deſtroyed, none ſhould be left alive but one to goven the Empire. Wherefore Moſes was commanded by the Tyrant, there preſently, and in his ſight, to kill the Infant. This horrible Fact when the Mother of the Child underſtood, ſhe cried out, and almoſt mad for ſorrow, curſed the Tyrant to his face. But he to mitigate the rage of his Mother, at her requeſt, being deſirous to be revenged upon the Executer of her Sons death, delivered the ſaid Moſes bound into her hands, who then in the preſence of the Tyrant thruſt him to the Heart with a Knife, and opening his ſide took out his Liver, and threw it to the Dogs to be devoured.

The Tyranny of Mahumetes in murthering his Brethren.

The third Son called Calepinus, which was but ſix Months old, the foreſaid Amurathes his Father commended to the cuſtody of Halibaſſa, one of his Nobles, who, to gratifie and pleaſe the Tyrant, betrayed the Infant, and brought him unto him, and thereupon he at the Tyrants commandment was ſtrangled. Some affirm, that in ſtead of Calepinus another Child was offered unto the Tyrant, and that Calepinus was conveyed to Conſtantinople, and after the taking of Conſtantinople was carried to Venice, and then to Rome to Pope Calixt, where he was Baptized, and afterward came into Germany to Frederick the Emperor, and there was honorably entertained, and kept in Auſtrich during his life. Where note how the merciful Providence of God, whom he liſt to ſave, can fetch out of the Divels mouth. And note moreover the foreſaid Halibaſſa the betrayer of the Infant, how he eſcaped not unrevenged. For Mahumet underſtanding him to be a Man of great ſubſtance and riches, through forging of falſe Crimes, with great Torments put him to death to have his Riches; for this Tyrant was given to inſatiable avarice. Thus this bloody Mahumet began regiment with horrible Murther, after the example of other curſed Tyrants his Predeceſſors.

Halibaſſa a Traytor to his Maſter. Horrible parricide of the abominable Turk. Gods providence can fetch out of the Divels mouth whom he liſt to ſave. Note here Gods puniſhment upon the betrayer of innocent blood.

Although this Mahumet, notwithſtanding that he came of a Chriſtian Mother, being the Daughter of Deſpota Prince of Servia, and by her was brought up and inſtructed from his Childhood in the Precepts of Chriſtian Religion and manners, yet he ſoon forgetting all, gave himſelf to Mahumets Religion, and yet ſo, that he being addicted to neither Religion became an Atheiſt, believing and worſhipping no God at all, but only the Goddeſs of good Fortune, irriding and mocking the minds and judgments of Men, which believe that God by his Providence governeth and regardeth the ſtate of human things on Earth.

KING Hen. 7.

After that this Mahumet heard of the Victories and Conqueſts of other his Predeceſſors, and had underſtanding how Bajazetes lay eight years about Conſtantinople, and could not win it; he diſpraiſing Bajazetes, and diſdaining that ſo long time ſhould be ſpent about the ſiege thereof, and yet no Victory gotten, bent all his ſtudy and device how to ſubdue the ſame. But firſt having a privy hatred againſt the City of Athens, and having his hands lately imbrued with the blood of his Brethren, this murthering Mahumet firſt of all taketh his Voyage to ſubvert and deſtroy the City aforeſaid, being a famous School of all good learning and diſcipline. Againſt the which City he did ſo furiouſly rage for the hatred of good Letters, that he thought he ought not to ſuffer the Foundation thereof to ſtand, becauſe that City was a good nurſe and foſterer of good Arts and Sciences; wherefore he commanded the City to be raced and utterly ſubverted; and whereſoever any Monumets or Books could be found, he cauſed them to be caſt into durty Sinks, and the filthieſt places of the City, or put to the moſt vile uſes that could be deviſed, for extirping and aboliſhing of all good literature; and if he underſtood any to lament the caſe, and ruine of that noble Place, thoſe he grievouſly puniſhed and put to death.

Mahumet firſt letteth upon Athens.

The fury of Mahumet the Turk againſt the City and School of Athens.

Athens deſtroyed.

Thus the famous and ancient School of Athens being deſtroyed and overthrown, he returned his Army and Power into Thracia, where in all haſte he, gathering up his Power together both by Sea and Land, with a mighty multitude compaſſed the City of Conſtantinople about, and began to lay his ſiege againſt it, in the year of our Lord, 1453. and in the four and fiftieth day of the ſaid ſiege it was taken, ſacked, and the Emperor Conſtantinus ſlain. As touching the cruelty and fierceneſs of the Turks in getting of this City, and what ſlaughter there was of Men, and Women, and Children, what calamity and miſery was there to be ſeen, forſomuch as ſufficient relation, with a full deſcription thereof, hath been made before, it ſhall be ſuperfluous now to repeat the ſame. This only is not to be omitted touching three principal Cauſes of the overthrow of this City; whereof the firſt was the filthy avarice of thoſe Citizens, which hiding their Treaſures in the Ground, would not imploy the ſame to the neceſſary defence of their City. For ſo I find it in Story expreſſed, that when the Turk, after the taking of the City, had found not ſo much Treaſure as he looked for, ſuſpecting with himſelf (as the truth was) the Treaſures and riches to be hidden under the Ground, commanded the Earth to be digged up, and the Foundations of the Houſes to be ſearched: where when he had found Treaſures incredible. What (quoth he) how could it be that this place could ever lack munition and fortification, which did flow and abound with ſuch great Riches as here is, and plenty of all things? The ſecond cauſe was the abſence of the Navy of the Venetians, which, if they had been ready in time, might have been a ſafeguard againſt the invaſion of the enemies. A third cauſe alſo may be gathered upon occaſion incident in Stories, either for that the City of Conſtantinople fifteen years before, did yield to the Biſhop of Rome, as is before to be ſeen, or elſe becauſe (as in ſome Writers it is evident) the Images were there received and maintained in their Churches, and by the Turks the ſame time deſtroyed.

Joannes Ramus, writing of the deſtruction of this City, amongſt other matters maketh relation of the Image of the Crucifix, being there in the high Temple of Sophia, which Image the Turk took, and writing this ſuperſcription upon the head of it, Hic eſt Chriſtianorum Deus, i. This is the God of the Chriſtians, gave it to his Souldiers to be ſcorned, and commanding the ſaid Image with a Trumpet to be carried thorow all his Army, made every Man to ſpit at it moſt contumeliouſly. Wherein thou haſt (good Reader) by the way to note, what occaſion of ſlander and offence we Chriſtians give unto the barbarous Infidels by this our ungodly ſuperſtition, in having Images in our Temples, contrary to the expreſs preſs commandment of God in his Word. For if Saint Paul, writing to the Corinthians, ſaith, We know Chriſt now no more after the fleſh; how much leſs then is Chriſt to be known of us in blind Stocks and Images ſet up in our Temples, ſerving for none other purpoſe, but for the Infidels to laugh both us and our God to ſcorn, and to provoke Gods vengeance? which by the like example (I fear) may alſo fall upon other Cities, which ſuch Images and Idolatrous ſuperſtition is maintained; whereof God grant Vienna to take heed betime, which hath been ſo long, and yet is in ſuch great danger of the Turk, and polluted with ſo many Images, and plain Idolatry.

Vienna admoniſhed.

In ſumma, to make the Story ſhort, ſuch was the cruelty of theſe Turks in winning the City, that when Mahumet had given licence to the Souldiers three days together, to ſpoil, to kill, and to do whatſoever they lifted, there was no corner in all Conſtantinople, which did not either flow with Chriſtian blood, or elſe was polluted with abominable abuſing of Maids, Wives, and Matrons, without all reverence of nature. Of the which Citizens, ſome they Murthered, ſome they Roſted upon Spits, of ſome they flayed off their skin, hanging them up to conſume with Famine, of otherſome they put Salt into their Wounds; the more terrible to torment them, inſomuch that one of them contended with another, who could deviſe moſt ſtrange kinds of new Torments and Puniſhments, exerciſing ſuch cruelty upon them, that the place where the City was before, ſeemed now to be no City, but a Slaughter-houſe or Shambles of Chriſtian Mens bodies. Among the dead bodies, the body alſo of Conſtantine the Emperor was found; whoſe Head being brought to Mahumet, he commanded it to be carried upon a Spear thorow the whole City for a publick ſpectacle and deriſion to all the Turkiſh Army. And becauſe he would diminiſh the number of the Captives, which ſeemed to him to be very great, he never roſe from his Table, but he put every day ſome of the Nobles to death, no leſs to fill his cruel Mind with Blood, than his Body was filled with Wine; which he uſed ſo long to do as any of the Nobles of that City was left alive. And of the other ſort alſo, as the Stories do credibly report, there paſſed no day in the which he did not orderly ſlay more than three hundred Perſons, the reſidue he gave to his raſcal Souldiers to kill, and to do with them what they would. Where is to be noted, that as Conſtantinus the Son of Helena was the firſt Emperor of Conſtantinople, ſo Conſtantinus the Son alſo of Helena was the laſt Emperor thereof.

The bloody cruelty of the Turk againſt the Chriſtian Captives.

Not far from the ſaid City of Conſtantinople there was another little City called Pera, and once called Gallatia, ſituated by the Sea ſide; who hearing of the miſerable deſtruction of Conſtantinople, and ſeeing the City flaming with fire, ſent certain of the chief Men with ſpeed to Mahumet, declaring unto him, that they neither had ſent any help to the City of Conſtantinople, neither yet wrought any detriment to any of his Army: wherefore they deſired and prayed him, that as they would gladly yield unto him, ſo he would be favourable unto them and ſpare them, and not to puniſh the guiltleſs with the guilty. Mahumet, although he was not ignorant that for fear, rather than of any good will, they ſubmitted themſelves, and that they would rather reſiſt him if they had been able, yet he received for that time the ſubmiſſion of the Meſſengers: but ſending with them his Ambaſſadors into the City, he commanded alſo his Army to follow withal, and to enter with him into the City, which although it was greatly ſuſpected and miſliked of the Citizens, yet they durſt not otherwiſe do but ſuffer them to enter: which being done, the Ambaſſador gave a ſign to the Souldiers, every Man to do whatſoever he was bidden; of whom, ſome ran to the Walls, ſome to the Temples and Churches, ſome to the Streets and Houſes of the City, plucking all things down to the ground, ſacking and ranging with no leſs fury and abominable filthineſs, than they had done at Conſtantinople before, ſaving only that they abſtained from murther: but the ſame day Letters came from Mahumet to the Ambaſſador, that he would ſpare none, but deſtroy and murther all that ever were in the City; which meſſage, becauſe it ſeemed to the Ambaſſador to be too cruel, forſomuch as they had yielded themſelves, he ſtayed his hand a little until night came. In the mean time, drunken Mahumet coming ſomething to himſelf (whom drunkenneſs had before overcome) ſent his ſecond Letters to revoke the firſt. Where again is to be noted the merciful Providence of God towards his people in their deſerved Plagues, by ſtaying the hands, and bridling the fury many times of their Enemies, when otherwiſe the caſe ſeemeth to be paſt all remedy.

Mahumet thus being in himſelf not a little advanced and elevated by the winning of Conſtantinople, where he had now made the Imperial Seat of the Turkiſh Dominion the third year next following, to adventure more maſteries, he ſet out to the ſiege of Belgradum, a City of Hungary, lying near to the Banks of Danubius, thinking to have the like ſucceſs there, as he had in the winning of Conſtantinople, albeit, through the Lords diſpoſing, it fell out much otherwiſe. Within the City of Belgradum, the ſame time of the ſiege thereof, was Joannes Huniades, the valiant Captain, of whom in divers places mention hath been made before; who with a ſufficient ſtrength of of picked Souldiers, albeit in number nothing equal to the Turks Army, valiantly defended the City with great courage, and no leſs ſucceſs. In the which ſiege great diligence was beſtowed, and many of the Turks ſlain. Among whom alſo Mahumet himſelf, being ſtrucken with a Pellet under the left Arm, was fain to be carried out of the Field for half dead, and the reſt ſo put to flight. that of the Turks the ſame time were deſtroyed to the number, or not much under the number of forty thouſand, beſides the loſs of all their Ordinance, which the Turks in haſte of their flight, were forced to leave behind them.

Conſtantinople made the Imperial ſeat of the Turk.

The ſiege of Belgradum in Hungary. John Huniades.

Hieronymus Zieglerus, writing of the ſiege of this Belgradum, addeth moreover, that when Mahumet was at the ſiege thereof, ſeeing the Town to be ſo ſmall and weak of it ſelf, that it could not be won with all his great multitude, he ſtaring and faring like a mad Man, commanded all his brazen pieces to be laid, to batter down the Walls and Towers of the Town: So that the Chriſtians within the Walls were vehemently diſtreſſed; for the Siege continued both night and day without intermiſſion. Among the reſt of the Chriſtians which defended the Town Hieronymus Zieglerus maketh mention of a certain Bohemian, much worthy of his condign commendation; Who being upon the Walls, and ſeeing a Turk with a Banner or Enſign of the Turks to be gotten up, by the ſight whereof, the whole Town was in danger to be conquered and taken, runneth unto the Turk, and claſping him about the middle, ſpeaking to John Capiſtranus ſtanding below, asking him, whether it were any danger of damnation to him, if he of his voluntary mind did caſt himſelf with that Dog (ſo he termed him) down headlong from the Wall to be ſlain with him; what ſhould become of his ſoul, and whether he might be ſaved or not? To whom when the other had anſwered, that he ſhould be ſaved without doubt, he eſtſoons tumbleth himſelf with the Turk down off the Wall, where by his death he ſaved the ſame time the life of all the City. Mahumet being ſo wounded, and in deſpair of winning the City, was carried (as ye heard) out of the field. Who at length coming again to himſelf, partly for fear, and partly for ſhame, was ready to kill himſelf. And thus was the Town of Belgradum at that time reſcued through Gods Providence, by the means of Joannes Huniades and this good Bohemian.

Of whom more than forty thouſand (as is aforeſaid) were ſlain, where the victory fell to the Chriſtians through the proſperous ſucceſs given of God to Joannes Huniades, and Capiſtranus. Which Huniades not long after the ſaid victory, through the importune labour and travel in defending of the Town, was taken with a ſore ſickneſs, and thereof departed; to whoſe valiant proweſs and ſingular courage, Stories do give great laud and commendation.

returned againſt the Chriſtians.

From thence the Turk reduced again his power againſt the Chriſtians, and firſt ſubdued unto him Synope and all Paphlagonia: Alſo the Kingdom of Trapezunce, which he beſieging both by Land and water, wan from the Chriſtians, and ſent David the King of the ſame with his two Sons, and Calus his Uncle, unto Conſtantinople, where they were miſerably and cruelly put to death, and all the ſtock of the Comneni, which were of the Kings ſtock, by the Turk were deſtroyed. Which was about the year of our Lord, 1459. at which time this miſchievous Mahumet was firſt ſaluted Emperor.

Synope, Paphlagonia, Trapezuntus gotten of the Turk.

David Emperor of Trapezuntus with his two Sons, and Uncle cruelly killed of the Turk.

Not long after, he got from the Grecians Corinthus and Mitylene, not without great ſlaughter of Chriſtian men; inſomuch that the whole City of Mitylene was utterly to the ground almoſt deſtroyed. The Iſles alſo of Lemnus and Lesbos he wan from the Venetians; in the which Iſland of Lesbos is the City of Mitylene aforeſaid.

Corinthus, Mitylene, Lesbos, Lemnus ſubdued of the Turk.

Not far from this Iſle of Lesbos and Mitylene, there is a Country in Aſia toward the Sea ſide bordering next to Europe, called Miſia, or of ſome called Maeſia, wherein ſtood the City of Troy. This Country Mahumet coveting to win rather by policy and falſhood, than by doubtful danger of War, ſecretly ſent for the Prince thereof to come to ſpeak with him for certain cauſes (as he pretended) which would concern the profit and commodity of them both. Which when the King of Myſia either for ſhame would not, or for fear durſt not deny, he came to him as to confer upon neceſſary affairs in common to them appertaining. Mahumet, when he had brought that to paſs which he would, he cauſed the King to be apprehended, and cruelly to be ſlain, or rather torn in pieces; and ſo invading the Land of Myſia, he exerciſed the like Tyranny upon his kindred and affinity.

The falſhood of the wretched Turk againſt the Prince of Myſia.

The cruelty of the Turk againſt the King of Myſia.

This Myſia by fraud being taken and loſt, Mahumet flyeth again toward Europe, where he aſſailed the Iſland Euboia, otherwiſe called Nigroponte, making a Bridge of a marvelous frame over the Sea Euripus, to convey over his Army out of Grecia, and there laid his ſiege to the City Chalcis, which at length in thirty days he overcame, not without a great ſlaughter of his Army; who in the ſiege thereof, is ſaid to have loſt Forty thouſand of the Turks. But the ſlaughter of the Chriſtians was greater; for when the City was won, the Tyrant commanded moſt cruelly, none to be ſpared within the whole City, but to be put to the Sword, whoſoever was above the Age of Twenty years. This cruelty was ſhewed of the barbarous Tyrant for anger and fury, becauſe ſuch a number of his Turks were ſlain at the ſiege thereof, being reckoned (as is ſaid) to Forty thouſand. In the fierce ſiege of this City it is memorable that is in Stories recorded, how that the Women of that City, ſeeing the Men begin to faint, and the City to lie in preſent danger, took the matter themſelves in hand, and playing the Men, went to the Walls, and there defended the City with no leſs trouble to the Enemy, than the Men had before done, and ſo for a ſpace continued, ſo long as any Mans ſtrength and diligence could do any good. A great cauſe of the loſs of this City and Iſland, is imputed to the cowardly timidity of the Venetians Navy; who being there preſent, and having proſperous Wind, yet durſt not, or would not adventure upon the Turks Bridge, which if they had done, the Iſland of Euboia and Chalcis had not ſo ſoon been overmatched of the Turks.

The noble ſtratagem of women in defending that City.

Thus all the Eaſt parts of Grecia being ſubdued to the Turkiſh Tyrant, with all Achaia, Attica, Acarnania and Euboia, ſhortly after followed alſo Peloponneſus, brought, in like ſubjection to the Turk. Within Peloponneſus were theſe Provinces contained, Achaia, Meſſenia, Laconia, Argolica and Archadia, &c. The Venetians in this Peloponneſus had great poſſeſſions, and had made up the Wall again toward the Sea ſide, near to the Straits of Corinth before mentioned, where for the more ſpeed of the work, they had Thirty thouſand Work-men to the building thereof: which, when it came to the knowledge of the Turk, he braſt into the Country of Peloponneſus with an Army of Eight thouſand, and firſt waſted the Regions of the Coroneans, and Methoneans, and making a great ſlaughter of the Venetians, in ſhort time he brought the whole Dominion of Peloponneſus under his yoke and tribute.

Peloponneſus, Achaia, Meſſenia, Laconia, Argolica, Archadia, Chriſtian Provinces in Grecia, ſubdued of the Turk.

KING Hen. 7.

Long it is, and more lamentable to recite all the victories of this Mahumet, gotten againſt the Chriſtians both by Land and Sea; who, after he had overcome the Iſle Lesbos above mentioned, and had cruelly ſlain Nicholas Cataluſius the Prince thereof, turning his Army toward the Sea of Pontus Euxinus, got the Country of Capha from the Genuans. Before was declared how Truce was taken between Georgius Scanderbeius, and the Turk for Ten years: which Truce being expired, Mahumet leaveth no time unſpent, no diligence unſought, but maketh all his Power to Epyrus and Albania, which he, after long fatigation of ſiege, at length overcame and ſubdued. In the which Tract alſo he wan from the Venetians, Scodra, Lyſſon and Dinaſtrum. Notwithſtanding, when Scanderbeius the valiant Captain had done againſt the Turk, what in Mans ſtrength did lie, yet being overmatched with power and multitude, ſeeking no poſſibility to make his party good, he was forced to depart his Country as an exile, and went to Italy, and there being ſent for by the Popes Letters, openly declared that it was not poſſible otherwiſe to reſiſt the furious rage of the barbarous Turks by the ſtrength of any one King or Prince, unleſs all Europe with one conſent ſhould joyn their power and force together. And thus Gregorius Scanderbeius, a Man of puiſſant courage, being driven out of his Country, continued his age in exile. Whoſe courage and vehemency is reported to have been ſuch, that in fighting againſt the barbarous Eenemy, for very eagerneſs of Spirit, his blood was ſeen to burſt out of his Lips. It is teſtified alſo of him, that being provoked, he neither denied to fight, and in his fighting, never turned his back, neither yet was ever wounded but only once with a light ſhaft in his foot, neither ever ſet againſt the Turk with moe than ſix thouſand Horſemen, and three thouſand Footmen; who is ſaid with his own hand to have ſlain above 2000 Turks, whom with ſuch violence he did ſtrike, that many of them he did cleave aſunder from the head to the middle.

Capha taken of the Turk.

The Counſell of Scanderbeius how to fight againſt the Turk.

A notable example of ſingular courage in a Captain.

The commendation of Scanderbeius againſt the Turk.

Neither yet was the unſatiable greedineſs of this Turkiſh Hell-hound with all this ſatisfied, but ſtill he conceived greater things in his mind, thinking to conquer the whole World? and ſo paſſing forward towards Europe, he ſubdued all Illyria, ſlaying Stephanus the King of Boſna, about the year of our Lord 1463. But afterward Matthias Corvinus, the Son of Huniades afore mentioned, recovered again the ſaid Kingdom of Boſna, with many other Cities near unto Croatia and Dalmatia, and moreover repulſed Mahumet the Turk in his ſecond ſiege of Jaitza, taking his Tents and munitions left behind him.

Matthias the Son of Huniades.

Moreover, the ſaid Mahumet paſſing unto Walachia, ſet upon Dracula the Prince thereof; which Dracula, although he had no greater power of Souldiers, yet he ſo encloſed and environed the Turk, that he had almoſt loſt his whole Army, of whom a great part notwithſtanding was deſtroyed, and many of his Enſigns taken. Into Dalmatia were ſent two Captains of the Turk, who, fighting againſt the Provinces of the Venetians, made great ſpoil and waſte about the Regions of Stiria and Carinthia; whoſe alſo the Venetian Power was diſcomfited, and Hieronymus Novel their Captain ſlain. At length Truce was taken between the Turk and the Venetians, upon this condition, that Scodra, Tenarus and Lemnus ſhould be yielded unto him, and that they ſhould pay to him yearly, Eight thouſand Duckets, for the free paſſage of their Merchants.

Stiria and Corinthia taken of the Turk.

After this peace concluded with the Venetians, Mahumet himſelf ſaileth over into Aſia, ſending two of his great Captains abroad to ſundry places; of whom, Meſithes was ſent againſt the Rhodes with a mighty Navy. The other called Acomates Baſſas was ſent into Italy to take Rome, and all the Weſt Empire. Concerning the Voiage of which two Captains, this was the event, that Maſithes, after his great Travel, and bloody ſiege againſt the Rhodians, was fain to retire, at length with great ſhame and loſs. The other Captain Acomates (as is ſaid) was ſent into Italy with a Navy of a hundred Ships, and fifteen thouſand Men, who by the way ſailing, got Leucadia (which now they call S. Maure) Caphalania and

Rhodes beſieged.

KING Hen. 7. Leucadia, Cephalonia, Zacynthus, Favelona taken of the Turks.

and Zacynthus, and ſailing by Favelona, arrived in Apulia, and ſo paſſing along by the Sea ſide, ſpoiled and waſted divers parts by the coaſt, till at length he came to Hidruntium, a City in Calabria in Italy, which after long ſiege he overcame and ſubdued, and brought ſuch a terror into all Italy, that the Pope forgetting all other things, yet mindful of himſelf, with all haſte fled out of Rome. After the City of Hydruntium was taken, and the Turks placed in the ſame, which was the year of our Lord 1481. Mathias Corvinus, Huniades Son, was ſent for by the Italians, to ſet upon the ſaid City, upon the reſcue whereof, when Acomates was about to make his return with five and twenty thouſand Turks, in the mean time news came, that Mahumet the great Turk was dead; by reaſon whereof, the ſiege brake up, and the City was delivered to the Italians again, and ſo was Italy delivered at that time out of that preſent peril and danger. This Mahumet wan from the Chriſtians two hundred Cities, and twelve Kingdoms, and two Empires, which he joyned both together. He died in the year aboveſaid, Anno 1481.

Hydruntium taken.

The Pope flieth for fear of the Turk.

These two Empires were Conſtantinople and Trapezzande.

Bajazetes the Second, the tenth after Ottomannus.

Mahumetes aforeſaid had three Sons; of the which Moſtapha the Eldeſt, through voluptuouſneſs and carnal Luſt, died before his Father. The other two were Bajazetes and Demes, otherwiſe called Zizimus. About whom great controverſie aroſe amongſt the Turks, which of them ſhould ſucceed in their Fathers Kingdom. For neither of them was preſent at Conſtantinople when Mahumetes died; Bajazetes being in Cappadocia, and Demes, in Lycaonia, wherefore, when great diſſention was among the Nobles for the ſucceſſion, and great ſtriſe and bloodſhed for the matter, the Janizarites, which were the Turks guard, did proclaim Bajazetes Emperor; others, in the abſence of Bajazetes the Father, did chooſe Corchuthus his Son. Bajazetes the Father coming at length from Cappadocia, partly through yielding, partly by corrupting with Money, got the Wills of the Janizarites, and was made Emperor. Demes the other Brother being in Lycaonia more near, although he made no leſs ſpeed in his coming, yet was prevented of Bajazetes, and excluded out of Conſtantinople. Wherefore he being put back from all hope of his Kingdom, incited by ſome of his Friends, moved War againſt his Brother; who being overcome in three Battels by Acomates, Bajazetes Captain, who had got Hydruntum before, did flie to the great Maſter of the Rhodes, leaving in a place called Carræ, his Mother and two young Children, whom Bajazetes ſlew.

Of theſe Janizarites, read before.

Bajazetes ſlayeth his Brothers and Mother, and his two Nephews.

This Demes being with the Maſter of the Rhodes, was deſired firſt of Pope Innocent the fourth, then of Ludovicus the ſecond French King, but eſpecially of Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, intending by him to obtain great victory againſt Bajazetes. But in concluſion, the Knights of the Rhodes ſent him to the Biſhop of Rome, where he being kept, and afterwards ſent to Charles the 8th French King, for an Hoſtage of Pope Alexander the Sixth, was poiſoned by the way of Terracina, by the ſaid Pope Alexander, as is before declared. After whoſe death, Bajazetes, to requite the foreſaid Acomates for his good ſervice, put him to the Halter, partly miſdoubting his power, partly for lucre ſake to have his Treaſure: Whoſe death redounded to the great profit of the Chriſtians, forſomuch as he was ever an utter enemy to the Religion and name of Chriſt.

Read before.

Falſe Treaſon worthily recompenſed.

Bajazetes thus being confirmed in his Tyranny, made his expedition againſt Wallachia, where he ſubdued two great Forts, one called Lithoſtomus, the other called Mancaſtrum. From thence he removed his Power, taking his Voiage into Aſia, thinking to be revenged of the Sultan of Egypt, which had ſuccoured and entertained both his Brother Demes againſt him; where he loſt two great Battels, the one fought at Adena, the other at Tarſus; but eſpecially at the field at Tarſus, the Army of the Turk took ſuch a wound, that of an hundred thouſand brought into the field, ſcarce the third part remained unſlain. But as touching the Rhodians, although they were ſuccourers of Demes aforeſaid, yet Bajazetes (whether for fear, or for ſubtilty) abſtained to provoke them with War, but rather entring with them the League of peace; requiring the Maſter of the Rhodes to keep his Brother ſafe under his cuſtody, promiſing for his yearly ſalary, to be payed unto him every year in every Month of Auguſt, 45000 Duckets.

Lithoſtomus, Moncaſtrum, Chriſtian Forts ſubdued of the Turk.

The Turk overthrown at Tarſus.

Thus Bajazetes being overthrown and terrified with evil luck, fighting againſt the Sultan of Egypt, removed from Aſia, and directed his Army into Europe, where he got Dyrachium near unto Velona, and had a great victory over the Chriſtian Army in the Country of Croatia, where the Illyrians, Pannonians and Croatians, joyning their Powers together, encountred with the Turk, and loſt the field, about the year of our Lord, 1493.

Dyrachium taken of the Turk.

From thence the Turk leading his Army againſt the Venetians, had with them divers and doubtful conflicts, where the Turk ſometimes was put to the worſe, and ſometimes again prevailed, out of Jadra and divers other Cities about Dalmatia, carried away great multitudes of Chriſtians into Captivity, which was about the year of our Lord, 1498.

The Turk againſt the Venetians.

The Chriſtians carried away captives.

Two years after this, which was the year of our Lord 1500. Bajazetes with 150000 armed Men, entred into Peloponneſus; which although Mahumet had expugned before, yet the Venetians had defended Methone, otherwiſe called Modon, all this while againſt the Turks. Which Methone the Turk beſieged with three Armies, having about the Walls five hundred great braſen Canons, whereof twenty two were moſt violent and hurtful, wherewith he battered the City both day and night: but the Citizens, which were within the City, committing themſelves to God, defended their City as well as they could, rather chuſing to die than to yield unto the Turks Tyranny. But the Turk prevailing, and they not able to withſtand the ſiege, the Chriſtians convented together into a certain Houſe prepared for the purpoſe, both Men, Women and Children; where they ſetting the Houſe on fire, gave themſelves rather to be burned, than to come into the Tyrants hands. Certain Women alſo, with their Children, caſt themſelves headlong into the Sea, by that means to avoid the Turkiſh Captivity. Some writers there be, which affirm that the Methonians, ſeeing five great Ships of the Venetians coming with Men and Victuals toward them, iſſued down from the Walls to the Sea ſide to receive them; which were all taken Captives, being above the number of a thouſand: which all being tyed with long Ropes, were brought before the Tyrant, and in his ſight were cruelly ſlain, except certain Nobles, whom Cherſeogles, Son in Law to Bajazetes, got to be pardoned, amongſt whom was Andreas Gritto. The City of Coron, and alſo Pilus, Cities in Greece, being terrified with the example of the Methonians, yielded themſelves to the Power of the Turks. Criſſeum, otherwiſe called Caput Sancti Galli, was expugned by Cherſeogles, by force of Guns.

Peloponneſus again invaded by the Turk.

Methone taken of the Turks, and miſerably deſtroyed.

Coron, Pilus, Criſſeum yielded to the Turk.

Theſe things thus atchieved, although Bazajetes went away Victor unto Conſtantinople, yet notwithſtanding the Venetians, through the help of the Kings of France and Spain, had won from the Turk, Chephalania an Iland very commodious for their Traffick. Alſo they had gotten other two Lands, Leucas and Nerius, otherwiſe called Sancta Maura, ſlaying all the Garriſon of the Turks. But afterwards peace being taken between the Venetians and the Turks, by the Counſel of Andreas Gritto aforeſaid, the Turks ſo agreed, that Leucas and Nericus, the Illands aboveſaid, ſhould be rendred unto the Turks, and the Venetians ſhould keep ſtill the poſſeſſion of Chephalania.

Chephalania, Leucas, Nericus, Illands recovered of the Turks by the Venetians.

Truce between the Venetians and the Turk.

Unto this League the Turk did the rather condeſcend, for that he had to maintain War againſt Iſmael Sophus in Aſia, King of Perſia. Which Sophus was ſtirred up by Gods Providence to War with this Bazajetes, whereby the Chriſtian Churches in Europe might have ſome breathing time, and freedom from the Turks cruel Tyranny and bloodſhed. This Sophus was a valiant Turk, who with great Power and Victories had over-run a great compaſs of the Eaſt parts of Aſia; then paſſing from Aſſyria into Media, and returning again into Armenia, he made War againſt the Albanians, Hiborians, and Scythians, and from thence coming into Aſia Minor, encountred with Corchuthus Bajazetes Son, and afterward coming to Bithynia, fought with Caragius Baſſa, Bajazetes Captain, whom he overcame and put to flight, and afterward took him alive, and his Wife, priſoners. Afterward he was encountred by Halibaſſa another Captain of the Turks, whom Techellus one of the ſaid Sophus Captains, meeting in the plain of Galatia, did withſtand, and ſo by the way ſlew Caragius the Captain, and hanged him upon a Pole in the ſight of Halibaſſa; which Halibaſſa ſhortly after was ſlain in War, and his Army ſcattered and put to flight.

Caragius the Turks Captain taken Priſoner and ſlain of Sophus.

Halibaſſa the Turks Captain ſlain.

Thus through the admirable example of Gods Juſtice and Providence, were theſe Turks kept occupied, and ſo came it to paſs, that theſe Barbarians being blaſphemous againſt the Son of God, ſhould thus horribly run on to the deſtruction one of another, being worthily puniſhed with mutual ſlaughter and bloodſhed, for their Impiety and Blaſphemy againſt Chriſt and his Religion, whereby in the mean time ſome reſt was given to the Chriſtians.

Reſt given to the Chriſtians by the diſcord of the Turks.

Bajazetes partly by theſe Victories diſcouraged, partly diſeaſed and languiſhing of the Gout, and partly alſo broken with age, finding himſelf unweildy to the Regiment of that tumultuous Kingdom, began to have talk with his Nobles about the chuſing of one to ſucceed him. The occaſion whereof miniſtred much matter of inward Wars amongſt the Turks. This Bajezetes had in all ſix Sons, whereof three died before him, and three yet were left alive; to wit, Acomates, Corchutus and Zelymus. Bajazetes himſelf had moſt mind to Acomates, but the chiefeſt of his Nobles did favour rather Zelymus; who through their traiterous incitation, provoked him to ſtir War againſt his Father: and notwithſtanding that he was overcome in War, yet through interceſſion, he was reconciled again to his Father, and afterward proclaimed again Emperor againſt his Fathers will, through the help and favour of the Souldiers, entring the firſt beginning of his Kingdom, with the murthering of his own Father. The ſtory whereof in ſome Authors is thus declared.

Zelymus made Emperor againſt his Fathers will

After that the Janizarites had perſwaded with Bajazetes, for that he himſelf was unweldy, therefore he ſhould do well to conſtitute ſome Succeſſor, and that he had aſſigned Acomates to ſucceed him; the Janizarites being offended with the ſaid Acomates, becauſe he would not inlarge their ſtipends, and bribe them, compaſſing about the Kings Palace with their privy Swords which they had under their Garments, with a mighty cry, required Zelymus to be appointed for their Emperor. Unto whom when Bajazetes had anſwered, That he had aſſigned Acomates, they refuſed him, becauſe he was fat, groſs, and unable thereunto: but needs would have Zelymus, which was ſtout and warlike, to be made Emperor: and withall they drew out their Swords, crying Zelymus, Zelymus. Then Bajazetes giving place to their fury, ſhewed himſelf content to give them Zelymus; whom the Janizarites receiving, brought him into the Palace: unto whom Bajazetes his Father giving place, willed him not to be ſo haſty and furious in his doings, but to be modeſt and take heed what he did, and not to follow his fury, but to give place unto time, which revealeth all things, and think himſelf to be a man ſubject to dangers and jeopardies as other men are: and thus ſpeaking, he reſigned his Imperial Throne and Seat unto him, and went away all heavy, entring into a certain Order of their Religion. Whereupon followed great exclamations of the people, ſaluting Zelymus as Emperor. Who then taking the Rule upon him, began with great cruelty to govern, deſtroying many of his Nobles, ſuch as had ſtood againſt him, ſome with poiſon, ſome by other cruel means, and advancing his own ſide, with great Honours and Promotions.

What theſe Janizarites were, read before.

The counſel of Bajazetes to his Son Zelymus.

Not long after that Zelymus was thus ſetled in his Kingdom, Bajazetes his Father intending to ſee and prove how he behaved himſelf in his Government, firſt entred into his Treaſure-houſe, where he found all his riches to be ſcattered and gone. Afterward he came into his Armory, where all the ſpoils gotten by War were likewiſe waſted; then he entred into the Jewel-houſe, where all his Plate and Gifts ſent from Kings and Princes were kept, which likewiſe were diſperſed and given away. At length he came into the Stable, where alſo he ſeeing his principal Horſes to be lacking, ſighing with himſelf, and crying Vengeance upon him, he prepared himſelf, with the reſidue of the treaſure which was remaining, to ſail over into Natolia unto his eldeſt Son; and paſſing by an Orchard near to the Sea-ſide, where he had appointed to take Ship, in the mean time whilſt the Ships were in furniſhing, he ſate down under a Tree, and began to curſe his Son, and to ask Vengeance upon him, for that he had ſo deſpiſed his Father, and was become ſo impious a Wretch.

The diſpleaſure of Bajazetes againſt his Son Zelymus.

Zelymus underſtanding of his Fathers departure came into the Orchard where his Father was, ſeeming to be very heavy, and much lamenting that his Father would ſo privily depart and go away, ſeeing that he deſired not the Government of the Empire, but was contented only with the Title thereof. O Father (ſaid he) do not thus privily depart away; do not procure this ſhame to your Son, who ſo tenderly loveth you. Let me have but the name only, and be you the Emperour indeed. The end of your natural life moſt patiently I ſhall expect, which I pray God may long continue. And thus uſing many fair and flattering words to his Father, he commanded a Banquet with many dainty Junkets to be brought unto him, but tempered and infected with poyſon. Which aſſoon as Bajazetes had begun to taſte of, and felt the ſtrength of the poiſon working in his body, he took his laſt Farewel of his Son, and going out of the City accompanied with a great retinue of men, yelling and crying out in the Streets, in the middle of his way they fell down and miſerably died, in the year of our Lord, 1512. Here maiſt thou ſee, good Reader, a curſed brood of this Turkiſh Generation, where the Father dieth in curſing the Son, and the Son reigneth by poiſoning his Father.

The diſſembling words of Zelymus to his Father.

Zelymus the Son, poiſoneth his Father.

Zelymus the Eleventh after Ottomanus.

AFter that this wretched Zelymus had exerciſed his barbarous cruelty upon his Father, with like impiety he ſeeketh the deſtruction of his Brethren and their Children, firſt beginning his murther with the five Children his Nephews, which were the Sons of his three Brethren before departed. Which done, then remained his other two Brethren yet alive, Acomates and Corchutus with their Children, likewiſe to be deſtroyed. Of whom the one had three Sons, whom the Father ſent to Zelymus his Brother, and their Uncle, with fair and gentle words, to intreat him to be good unto their Father, offering to him their duty and ſervice in all things, honouring him alſo as Emperor. But cruel Zelymus commanded forthwith his ſaid Nephews to be ſtrangled. The Father hearing of the cruel murther of his Sons, leaving houſe and home, went and hid himſelf in Mountains, where he lived for a ſpace with herbs and wild honey; but being betrayed by one of his men, he was brought to Zelymus, and ſo was ſtrangled.

Zelymus the Eleventh after Ottomanus.

The cruelty of Zelymus againſt his Father and his Brethren

The cruelty of Zelymus againſt his Coſins.

Chriſtopherus Richerus, writing of theſe matters, ſeemeth ſomething to differ from other ſtories, and ſaith, That Zelymus, after the death of his Brother Corchutus, came to Burſia, where he under the colour of making a great Triumph, ordained a Feaſt for his Friends and Kinſfolk, whereunto were called eſpecially his Nephews, who then at the end of the Feaſt calling his Nephews aſide (as under the pretence of conferring with them ſecretly about his neceſſary affairs) committed them to his Servants to be ſtrangled and put to death. All this while Acomates his other Brother, through the help and inſtruction of his Mother, was kept out of the Tyrants hands, till at length, after great labour and ſearch made how to get him, certain forged Letters were caſt abroad, wherein was contained, that Acomates to revenge the great Impiety, and ſubdue the tyranny of Zelymus his Brother, ſhould ſhew himſelf abroad. Which if he would do, he ſhall find Friends enough to take his part. Acomates circumvented with theſe ſubtil trains, partly for hope of revengement, partly for deſire of the Empire, ſhewed himſelf abroad with ſuch power and ſtrength as he had; who, being ſet upon incontinent by Zelymus his Brother, was overcome in battel, and falling from his horſe, being a man corpulent and groſs, and his horſe falling upon him, was ſo overpreſſed and ſlain.

Ex Chriſt. Rich.

Zelymus the Turk warreth againſt his Brother.

Touching the death of this Acomates, Munſterus ſomewhat differing from this Narration, addeth moreover, and ſaith, That he was not killed with the fall from his horſe, but ſitting all diſmayed upon a ſtone, and ſeeing no other remedy but death, deſired the Captain, taking his Rings from his Fingers, to deliver the ſame to his Brother, deſiring him that he might not be put to any extream cruelty of death, but that he gently would ſuffer him to be let blood in the Bath, and ſo to die. But Zelymus, being not ignorant

ignorant of this, ſuborneth privy Tormentors, who binding his hands behind him, with their feet, caſt him down upon the ground, and ſo twiſting his Neck with a cord, did ſtrangle him. This Acomates had two Sons, who hearing of the death of their Father, did fly for ſuccour, the one to Sophus in Perſia, and the other to the Sultan in Egypt.

The cruelty of Zelymus againſt his Brother.

The two Sons of Acomates fly from the tyranny of Zelymus the Turk.

By the means whereof, new occaſion of War grew unto Zelymus, whereby he was kept in Aſia, at home, to fight againſt the Perſians and Egyptians: ſo that through the Lords Providence, Chriſtendom by that means was delivered from great danger and peril of the Turks tyranny. For otherwiſe the Turk was wholly minded, with all his Force and Puiſſance, to Invade the Chriſtians, being in doubt whether firſt to begin with Rhodes, or whether to aſſault Pannonia, or elſe to ſet upon Italy, being then at great diſcord within it ſelf: but this cauſe occupied the Turks mind otherwiſe, and kept him at home. Such was then the Providence of the Lord for the ſafeguard of his people.

The Providence of God, in ſtirring up occaſions for his people.

Wherefore, forſomuch as the affairs and doings of this Turk were ſpent for the moſt part in the Turkiſh and Heathenish Countries; it ſhall not be greatly neceſſary to trouble our Chriſtian ſtories therewith, but only ſhall ſuffice to contract them in a brief ſum, declaring ſuperficially what unquietneſs was amongſt them there, which could never be quieted, but ever working ſome miſchief either abroad or at home. Amurathes the Turks Nephew aforeſaid, after he had obtained Aid of Sophus the King of the Perſians, firſt invaded Cappadocia; not long after whom followed Iſmael Sophus the Perſian King. By reaſon whereof, a great battel was fought betwixt the Perſians and Zelymus, in the fields of Armenia major. In the which battel, Iſmael Sophus the Perſian King was hurt on the ſhoulder with a pellet, and ſo being carried out of the field, left the Victory to Zelymus: who, albeit he had an Army of 150000 men, yet in the ſame field loſt about 30000 of his Turks. Which field was fought in year of our Lord, 1514. Zelymus after this Victory, went to Tauricia, the Imperial City of the Perſians, which he, by yielding, ſubdued.

War between Zelymus and Sophus the Perſian King.

In this mean time it hapned that one Aladulus, a King of Armenia the greater, was alſo a helper to Iſmael againſt the Turk; whereupon Zelymus the Turk taking great indignation, the next year following, leaving the Perſians, fought againſt the ſaid Aladulus, and in the end overcame him; and afterward being found in a Cave in a Wood, he was taken out and brought to Zelymus, and ſo beheaded: whoſe head, being firſt carried about Aſia for a Triumph, was afterward ſent to the Senate of Venice for a terrour unto them. The eldeſt Son of Aladulus, ſcaping the hands of his Purſuers, fled into Egypt. This battel thus fought and ended, Zelymus after he had divided the Kingdom of Aladulus into three Provinces, went to Lyconia, and from thence to Europe, there to defend the City of Samandria, againſt the Chriſtians in Hungary, but the Hungarians being ſoon repreſſed by Juno Baſſa the Turks Captain, great preparation began to be made by the Turks againſt the Confines of Servia bordering upon Hungary. The terrour whereof ſtirred up Maximilian the Emperor, and Ladiſlaus King of Hungary, and Sigiſmundus King of Polony, to conſult together, and conjoyn their Power for defence of Chriſtendom. But through new incumbrances incident, the Turk leaving Europe, made haſte again into Aſia, to renew again his Wars againſt the Perſians, who had made a Vow not to give over that War before Iſmael was overthrown.

A Turkiſh Vow.

But before he entred that War, firſt he ſent his Meſſengers to the Sultan of Egypt, requiring him not to intermeddle in that War; for this Sultan before had promiſed to aſſiſt the Perſians againſt the Turk. The name of the Sultan which reigned then in Egypt was Campſon, ſet up by the Mamalucs. Theſe Mamaluci were a certain Order amongſt the Egyptians, much like to the Janizaries about the Turk, who being the Children of Chriſtian men, and after denying Chriſt, were the chiefeſt doers in the Sultans Court, and being grown into a great multitude, did degenerate into a Turkiſh barbarity, or rather became worſe than Turks. This Campſon unto the Meſſengers of the Turk, gave this Anſwer again, That unleſs he would leave off this War againſt Iſmael, and reſtore the Son of Aladulus, he would not lay down his Armour.

Campſon the Sultan or Ruler of the Egyptians. Mamalugi.

Zelymus being incenſed not a little with this inſolent Anſwer of the Sultan, leaving all other Wars aſide, with great celerity advanced his Power againſt the Sultan. Which Sultan, partly through the falſehood of his Captain Cajerbeius, partly by the ſuddenneſs of the Turks coming, not far from the City of Damaſcus, encountred with the Turk, and there overthrown from his horſe, being a fat and groſs body, and falling under his horſe, and his horſe alſo falling upon him, was quaſhed in pieces, and ſo died, which was the year of our Lord, 1516.

Campſon ſlain.

The Mamaluci, of whom more than a thouſand in this battel were ſlain, flying from thence to Memphis, ſet up Tomumbeius in ſtead of Campſon: whoſe Captain Gazelles was overcome at the City of Gaza, and he afterward himſelf driven out of Memphis, where a great part of the Mamaluci were deſtroyed. Then Tomumbeius, flying over the Flood Nilus, renewed his Army again; but in the end was diſcomfited and chaſed into a Mariſh, where he was found ſtanding in the water up to the chin, and ſo being brought to Zelymus, was put to the rack and great torments, to make him confeſs where Campſons treaſures were: but when he would not declare, he was carried about the Town with an halter about his Neck, and hanged up upon an high Gibbet for a Spectacle to all Egypt; which was the year of our Lord, 1517. And thus were the two Sultans of Egypt deſtroyed with the Mamaluci, which there had born the Rule in Egypt, the ſpace of 243 years. The Progeny of the which Mamaluci remaining of the Wars, the Turk commanded in the priſon gates of Alexandria to be cut in pieces. Zelymus from thence triumphing, departed to Conſtantinople, intending to ſpend the reſt of his time in perſecuting the Chriſtians. But in that mean ſpace he was ſtricken with a cankered ſore rotting inward, and died after he had reigned ſeven years like a Beaſt, in the year of our Lord 1520.

Note again the Providence of God.

The death of Zelymus.

The Reign of this Turk was but ſhort in number of years; but in number of his murders and cruel bloodſhed it might ſeem exceeding long, which lived more like a beaſt than a man; for he never ſpared any of his friends or kindred. His Father firſt he poiſoned, his Brethren and all his couſins he quelled, leaving none of all his Kindred alive. Moreover, his chief and principal Captains for ſmall occaſions he put to death, as Muſtapha, Calogere, Chondage, Boſtang his Son in law, and Juno Baſſa.

The beaſtly cruelty of Zelymus againſt his Kindred.

It is ſaid moreover, that he intended the poiſoning of his own Son Solyman, ſending unto him a ſhirt infected with poiſon, becauſe he ſeemed ſomething freely to ſpeak againſt the cruel demeanor of his Father: but by the means of his Mother, the gift being ſuſpected, was given to another which was his Chamberlain, who putting on the ſhirt was ſtrucken with the poiſon thereof, and therewithall died.

The cruelty of Zelymus againſt his Son Solyman.

As touching this Turk Zelymus, by the way here may be noted how the ſecret Providence of the Lord kept him occupied with his Turkiſh Wars at home, while that the Reformation of Chriſtian Religion here in Europe, the ſame time begun by Martin Luther, might the more quietly take ſome rooting without diſturbance or interruption. For ſo it appeareth by the computation of time, that in the days of this Zelymus, Martin Luther firſt began to write againſt the Popes Indulgences, which was in the year of our Lord, 1516.

A note of Gods Providence for the Reformation of Religion.

Solymannus the Twelfth after Ottomannus.

Solymannus the Twelfth after Ottomannus.

SOlymannus the only Son of Zelymus ſucceeded after his Fathers death, who in the firſt beginning ſeemed to ſome to be ſimple and ſheepiſh, and not meet for the Turkiſh Government. Wherefore certain of his Nobles, conſulting how to depoſe him, intended to ſet up another Emperor. In which Conſpiracy eſpecially are named Cajerbeius and Gazelles. This Cajerbeius was he that betrayed before Campſon the Sultan of Egypt to Zelymus, as is aforeſaid; who now alſo being in conſultation with Gazelles and other about this matter, detected them alſo unto Solyman. Wherefore the ſaid Gazelles and his Fellows being thus detected, were put to death by Solyman, declaring thereby that he was not ſo ſheepiſh as he was thought of them to be, and as alſo by his Acts afterward did more appear.

Solymannus,

KING Hen. 7.

Belgradum again beſieged of the Turk. Read before.

Solymannus, after this execution done upon the Conſpirators, taking his Voyage into Europe, firſt beſieged Belgradum; which being a City in Hungary was the ſtrongeſt Fort of all the Roman Empire, and the chief defence at that time of all Chriſtendom; which alſo aſſaulted before time by Amurathes the Second, was valiantly defended by Joannes Huniades, as is above ſpecified. But here now lacked ſuch an one as Huniades was. For the Kingdom of Hungary at that time was under the government of Ludovicus a young King, unexpert and of a ſimple wit. Whom other Princes, and ſpecially the covetous Churchmen did ſo pill and poll, that they left him nothing but only the bare Name and Title of his Kingdom, whereby, he being unfurniſhed both of men and money, was unable to match with ſuch an Enemy.

Diſcord amongſt Chriſtian Princes, what miſchief it bringeth.

Another vantage alſo the Turks had in beſieging Belgrade: For the Chriſtian Princes at that time were in civil diſſention and variance amongſt themſelves; and the Pope with his Churchmen alſo were ſo buſie in ſuppreſſing of Luther, and of the Goſpel then newly ſpringing, that they minded nothing elſe, except it were to maintain the wealth of their own Bellies: Which Pope if he had ſet his care (as his duty was) ſo much in ſtirring up Princes againſt the common Enemy, as he was bent to deface the Goſpel, and to perſecute the true Profeſſors thereof; ſome might have brought to paſs, not only that Belgrade might have been defended againſt the Turk, but alſo that to be recovered again which was loſt before; and moreover he might have ſtopped the great dangers and perils which now are like to fall upon the Religion and Church of Chriſt; which the Lord of his great mercy avert and turn away.

The Pope ſo buſie againſt Luther, that he neglecteth the ruine of Chriſtendom.

Certes whatſoever the Pope then did, this had been his duty, ſetting all other things apart, to have had an earneſt compaſſion of ſo many miſerable and loſt Captives, which were faln from their Faith and Religion, unto the miſery and ſlavery of the Turk, and thraldom of the Devil, and to have ſought all means poſſible to have reduced them, as loſt ſheep, into the Fold again. Which then might ſoon have been done, if Prelates and Princes, joyning together in Chriſtian concord, had loved ſo well the publick Glory of Chriſt, and Souls of Chriſtians, as they tendered their own private, worldly, and frivolous quarrels.

True compaſſion lacking in the Pope.

And admit that the Pope had conceived never ſo much malice againſt Luther, his quarrel alſo being good; yet the publick Church ſtanding in ſuch danger, as it then did by the Invaſion of the Turk, Reaſon would, Nature led, Religion taught, time required, that a good Prelate, forgetting lighter matters, ſhould rather have laid his ſhoulder to the excluding of ſo great a danger, as then was imminent both to himſelf, and the univerſal Church of Chriſt: But now his quarrel being unjuſt, and the cauſe of Luther being moſt juſt and godly, what is to be ſaid or thought of ſuch a Prelate, who forbearing the Turk, whom in a time ſo dangerous he ought chiefly to have reſiſted, perſecuted the Truth which he ſhould ſpecially have maintained? But Chriſt of his mercy ſtand for his Church, and ſtir up zealous Princes and Prelates, if not to recover that that is loſt, yet at leaſt to retain that little which is left.

The City of Belgrade won of the Turk.

Solyman therefore taking this occaſion, and uſing the commodity of time, while our Princes were thus at variance betwixt themſelves, without any reſiſtance or interruption brought his Army unto Belgrade, in the year of our Lord, 1521. Which City being but ſlenderly defenced, the Turk through his Underminers, Guns, and other Engins of War, without great difficulty, and with little loſs of his Souldiers, ſoon ſubdued and overcame.

After this Victory, Solyman reſting himſelf a whole year, and caſting in his mind how to make all ſure behind him, for fear of Enemies to come upon his back, thought it expedient for his purpoſe if he might obtain the Iſland of Rhodes; for that only remained yet Chriſtian betwixt him and Aſia: wherefore the next year following, he brought his Army of 450 Ships, and 300000 Men, to the beſieging thereof. This Rhodes was a mighty and ſtrong Iſland, within the Sea called Mare mediterraneum. The Inhabitants whereof at the firſt did manfully reſiſt the Turk, ſparing no labour nor pains for the defence of themſelves and of all Chriſtendom. But afterward being brought to extremity, and pinched with penury, ſeeing alſo no Aid to come from the Chriſtians, ſomewhat began to languiſh in themſelves. The Turks, in the mean time caſting up two great Mountains with ſtrength of hand, two miles off from the City, like rolling Trenches carried them before them near unto the City, in the tops whereof they planted their Ordnance and Artillery, to batter the City. The Maſter of the Knights of the Rhodes was then one Philippus Villadamus, a Frenchman, in whom no diligence was lacking that appertained to the defence of the City. The Rhodians likewiſe ſo valiantly behaved themſelves upon the Walls, that with their ſhot all the Ditches about the City were filled with the Carkaſſes of dead Turks. Beſides this, ſuch a diſeaſe of the Bloody-Flux reigned in the Turks Camp, that 30000 of them died thereof, and yet for all this Solyman would not ceaſe from his ſiege begun: who, at length by Underminers caſting down the Vamures and uttermoſt parts of the City, won ground ſtill more and more upon the Rhodians, and with Mortar-pieces ſo battered the houſes, that there was no free place almoſt ſtanding in all the City. And thus continued the ſiege for the ſpace of five or ſix months, and yet all this while came no help unto them from the Chriſtians. Wherefore they being out of all hopes through the advice of Villadamus yielded themſelves unto the Turk, upon condition that he would ſpare them with life and goods; which converſion the Turk kept with them faithfully and truly.

Chriſtian Princes negligent in helping their Fellows.

Thus Solyman with his great glory, and utter ſhame to all Chriſtian Princes, and alſo ruine of all Chriſtendom, got the noble Iſle of Rhodes, although not without great loſs and detriment of his Army, inſomuch that at one aſſault twenty thouſand Turks about the Walls were ſlain with Fire, Sword, Stones, and other Engins. Whereby it may be conjectured what theſe Rhodians might or would have done, if ſuccour had come to them from other Chriſtian Princes as they looked for. This City was won upon Chriſtmas-day, Anno 1522.

Rhodes won of the Turk.

This Conqueſt of Rhodes obtained, Solyman the fourth year after bringeth back his Army again into Hungary, where he found none to reſiſt him but only Ludovick the young King, who being accompanied with a ſmall Army, and nothing able to match with the Turk, yet of a haſty raſhneſs and vain hope of victory, would needs ſet upon him; who if he had ſtaid but a little, had proſpered the better. For Joannes Vaivoda, being a Captain well exerciſed in Turkiſh Wars before, was not far off, coming with a ſufficient Power of able Souldiers. But Paulus the Archbiſhop of Coloſſ. a Franciſcan-Frier, a man more bold than wiſe, with his temerity and raſhneſs troubled all their doings. For the whole ſum of the Army of the Hungarians, contained in all but only four and twenty thouſand Horſemen and Footmen, who at length coming unto the battel, and being compaſſed about with a great multitude of the Turks Army, were brought into great diſtreſs. The Turks twice ſhot off their pieces againſt the Chriſtian Army; yet ſcarce was any Chriſtian touched with the ſtroke thereof: which was thought to be done of purpoſe, becauſe they were Chriſtians which had the ordering of the Guns, for then the ſpecial Gunners of the Turks were Chriſtians, whom for the ſame cauſe they ſpared. Then the Turks Horſemen, coming upon the back of the Chriſtian Army, compaſſed them about, and by reaſon of their multitude overcharged their Horſemen. Amongſt whom was ſlain the ſame time the Archbiſhop Frier abovеſaid, with the Biſhops of Strygone and Varadine, and many other Nobles beſide. Alſo the King himſelf, being deſtitute of his neceſſary aid and ſuccour, was compelled to fly into a Marſh, where he falling from his Horſe, being heavy laden with the Harneſs, was not able to riſe again, but there miſerably periſhed.

Chriſtian wars againſt the Turk never ſped well under the guiding of Popiſh Prelates.

Chriſtians were the ſpecial Gunners to the Turks.

The raſh Archbiſhop ſlain.

King Ludovick periſhed in War.

Solyman the Turk marvelled at the fooliſhneſs of Ludovick the King, who with ſo ſmall an Army would preſume to encounter with ſuch a great Hoſt of two hundred thouſand. This battel in Hungary was fought, Anno 1526.

Ferdinandus of Hungary.

After the deceaſe of Ludovick, Ferdinandus ſucceeded in the Kingdom, being Duke of Auſtria and King of Hungary. Then Solyman, ſetting contention betwixt Joannes Vaivoda and Ferdinandus for the Kingdom of Hungary, ſped his Voyage to the City of Buda, which alſo

Rhodes beſieged.

In ſhort time he made to be yielded unto him upon condition that they ſhould eſcape with their lives and goods; which condition ſome ſay he kept, and ſome ſay he did not. Beſides Buda, divers places and munitions the ſaid Turk, contrary to his League made before, did ſpoil and waſte; as Varadinum, Quinque Eccleſias, and other Forts and Munitions more, bordering about the Coaſts of Hungary.

Buda, Varadinum, and the City called Quinq; Eccleſiæ taken of the Turk.

In the year of our Lord, 1529. Ferdinandus King of Hungary, aforeſaid recovered divers Holds gotten of the Turk before; and alſo warring againſt Joannes Vaivoda his Enemy, with whom he had variance (as ye heard before) expulſed him out of his Kingdom. Whereupon Vaivoda, flying to the Turk, deſired his aid. The Turk, glad to take that occaſion, with great preparation addreſſed himſelf to return into Hungary, where he recovering again the City of Buda which Ferdinandus had gotten from him a little before, removed his Army into Auſtria, ſpoiling and deſtroying by the way all that came to his hands, ſhewing many examples of great cruelty and tyranny moſt lamentable to hear and underſtand. For of ſome he put out their Eyes, of ſome he cut off their Hands, of ſome their Ears and Noſe; and of their Children he cut off their Privy Members. The Maidens he corrupted, the Matrons had their Breaſts cut off, and ſuch as were with child were ript and their Children caſt into the fire. And theſe examples of horrible and barbarous tyranny this wretched Turk perpetrated by the way coming toward Vienna a noble City in Auſtria, beſides the Captives which he took by the way and led into Servitude moſt miſerable, mounting to the number of 30000.

Contention between Ferdinandus and Vaivoda.

Vaivoda flieth to the Turk.

Horrible examples of the Turks cruelty.

Among other Holds by the way as the Turks came, there was a Caſtle called Altenburch, ſtrongly by nature ſituated, and by art defenced; which Caſtle the Turk intending not to overpaſs, becauſe he would make all things ſure behind him, began to make his Aſſault, and lay his Ordnance againſt it. The Warders and Keepers of the Caſtle, ſo ſoon as the Turk began to lay ſiege againſt them, making no reſiſtance, of a womanly cowardlineſs ſent their Meſſengers to the Turk, to yield themſelves ready to do his commandment, and further him with their victual. Amongſt whom were three hundred Bohemians, who were commanded to follow the Hoſt, that the Turk by them might learn what ſtrength was in the City of Vienna; alſo where the King was, and what was to be done for the winning thereof.

The effeminate cowardlineſs of the Souldiers in Altenburch.

The Caſtle of Altenburch yielded to the Turk.

Of whom when the Turk had underſtanding how all things ſtood, and how that there were but twenty thouſand men in Vienna able to bear Armor, and that other Cities of Auſtria would ſoon yield if that were gotten, and that Vienna was victualled but for two months, and that the King was of late in Boheme; thus the Turk of all things being certified, having no doubt in his mind of Victory, made ſpeed toward Vienna; and firſt coming to Neapolis, a City but eight miles diſtant from Vienna, he required them to yield themſelves; who notwithſtanding withſtood them, and repulſed them valiantly. Then the Turks aſſigned a placed for the pitching of their Tents; which becauſe it ſeemed ſomething too little for ſuch a great multitude, they took in more ground to the compaſs of ſeven miles circuit. The multitude of his Army, which he there planted, is accounted of ſome to extend to 250 thouſand Souldiers. The Turk thus being planted, made daily excurſes over all the Country of Auſtria, ſpecially about the City of Vienna, waſting and ſpoiling with great cruelty and murther amongſt the poor Chriſtians.

Neapolis beſieged of the Turk.

The Turks Army of two hundred and fifty thouſand Souldiers.

Moreover, to make all things more ſure toward the preparation of the ſiege, Scouts were ſent abroad, and Ambuſhments were laid about the River ſide of Danubius, to provide that no aid nor victual ſhould be brought to Vienna. So it pleaſed the Providence of the Lord (who diſpoſeth all things) that three days before the coming of the Turk. Fredericus the Earl [redacted], which was then aſſigned by the Empire to take the charge of Vienna, was come down by the River of Danubius with 14000 and with a certain Troop of Horſemen well appointed and picked for the purpoſe. After the coming of this Frederick, proviſion alſo of victual was appointed to follow ſhortly after by the ſaid River of Danubius.

Vienna beſieged of the Turk.

Fredericus Earl Palatine Captain in Vienna.

In the mean time, they which had the carriage and tranſporting thereof, hearing how the ways were laid, and all the Paſſages ten miles about Vienna ſtepped by the Turks, although they knew the City to ſtand in great need of victual, yet ſeeing there was no other remedy, rather than it ſhould come to the Enemies hand, thought it beſt to ſink their Boats with their carriage, and ſo they did. Whereby albeit the Chriſtians wanted their relief, yet were the Turks diſappointed of their prey and purpoſe. The Captains which had the keeping of the City, which were chiefly Fredericus the Earl Palatine, Gulielmus Rogendorfius, and Nicolaus Earl of Salme, ſeeing themſelves ſo ſtraitned contrary to their expectation, although they had great cauſes to be diſcouraged, yet calling their courage unto them, they conſulted together for the beſt way to be taken: and ſeeing that the little City Neapolis (above mentioned) being eight miles diſtant from them, ſo valiantly withſtood the Turks, that in one day they ſuſtained ſeven grievous Aſſaults againſt all the main force of the Turkiſh Army; by their example and manful ſtanding being the more animated and encouraged, thought to abide the uttermoſt before they would give over; and firſt plucking down all the Suburbs and Buildings without the Walls, whereby the Enemy might have any Succour, they willed all the Farmers and Inhabitants about the City to ſave themſelves, and to bring in their goods within the Walls. Such places as were weak within the Walls, they made ſtrong. About the Towers and Munition of the Walls they provided Rampiers and Bulwarks diſtant eighty foot one from another, to keep off the ſhot; and every man had his place and ſtanding awarded to him upon the Wall, and his office appointed what to do: but eſpecially that ſide of the City which lieth to the River of Danubius they fortified after the beſt wiſe; for that way only now remained for victual to be tranſported from the Bohemians unto them. Wherefore eight Enſigns were aſſigned to the keeping of the Bridge, and in the Plain, which was like an Iſland incloſed within the River, a ſufficient Garriſon of Horſemen were placed, lying within the gunſhot of the City, to the intent that if any grain or victual were ſent from the Bohemians, they might provide the ſame ſafely to be brought into the City.

Fredericus Earl Palatine, William Rogendorfius, Nicolaus Earl of Salme, Captains of Vienna.

Preparation within the City of Vienna, againſt the Turk.

Proviſion made for victualling the City.

Theſe things thus being diſpoſed and ſet in order, Lord William Rogendorff, to aſſay the ſtrength of the Turks, made divers Rodes out with his Horſemen, albeit myſh againſt the minds of the Auſtrians; who, knowing the manner of the Turks, thought it better to ſuffer them, while either with time they might be overwearied, or for lack of victuals conſumed. Among many and ſundry Skirmiſhes which the Chriſtians had with the Turks, one eſpecially was to our men unproſperous; in which certain of the Horſemen, eſpying a ſmall Troop of the Turks ſcattering abroad from their company, made out after them, who ſuddenly and guilefully were incloſed and circumvented by the Turks, before they could recover the Gates of the City, and ſo were all taken alive: Of whom three were ſent from the Turks into the City, to declare to the Viennians what ſtrength they had ſeen in the Camp of their Adverſaries, and to ſollicite them to yield their City for fear of puniſhment which would follow. The reſidue they reſerved to torments and puniſhment, whom in the ſight of the whole Army, and of the Chriſtians (which ſhould tell the ſame to the Citizens) they cauſed every man to be drawn with four Horſes apieces, and ſo to be diſmembred and pluckt aſunder.

Good counſel and experience refuſed.

Raſh hardineſs of the Chriſtians in skirmiſhing with the Turk.

The wretched cruelty of the Turks againſt the Chriſtian Captives.

After this done, the barabrous Turk immediately ſent his Herald to talk with the Captains of the City, whether they would yield the City upon honeſt conditions, or elſe would abide the arbitrement of War. If they would gently ſubmit themſelves, they ſhould have all gentleneſs to them ſhewed. If they would be ſtubborn, and ſtand to their defence, he would alſo ſtand to his ſiege begun, ſo that he neither would ſpare man, woman, or child. To this the Captains anſwered again, That they were contented that Solyman ſhould ſtand to his ſiege begun, and do his uttermoſt, what he would, or what he could. As for them, they were at a point to defend themſelves and their City ſo long as they might; the event and fall of Victory to be doubtful, and many times ſo to happen, that they which begin the War, are wearied ſooner than they which be provoked; neither that they were ſo unmindful either of themſelves, or of their Country, but that they did remember well what they are, and what they be called, named to be Germans, who who are always firſt to aſſay the Adverſary, what he is able to do, and not raſhly to commit themſelves into their Enemies hands.

Solymannus approacheth Vienna with three great Armies.

Solyman not a little diſdaining at this Anſwer, firſt burning and conſuming all the Villages, Houſes and places round about the City, infecting alſo the Springs and Fountains which gave water into the City, and ſo ſtopping all Paſſages that no Relief ſhould have way unto them, began with angry mood to approach more near to the City, with three great Camps; ſending them word in ſcorn and contumely by one of his Captains, that if they ſtood in need of help of Souldiers, he would ſend unto them the three hundred Bohemians (mentioned a little before) to aid them in their defence. To whom the Palatine directed anſwer again, That they had more Souldiers in the City than they needed. As for the Bohemians which had yielded themſelves, he might do with them what he would, for Vienna ſtood in no great need of them.

A Meſſenger ſent from Ferdinandus to Vienna.

In the mean time a Meſſenger coming from Ferdinandus was privily let in by night into the City, which brought word that they ſhould play the men in keeping out the Enemy a while; for it would not be long, but both Ferdinandus and Carolus his Brother, with the ſtrength of all Germany, would be ready to reſcue them. At which Meſſage the hearts of the Souldiers began ſomewhat to be cheared, and to contemn the huge multitude of the Adverſaries, being ſo great as they never did behold, nor did ever almoſt hear of before. The largeneſs of whoſe Army extended no leſs in compaſs (as is above-ſaid) than of ſeven miles round about the City Walls.

The ſiege of Vienna beginneth.

Long it were to recite the whole Order of this terrible ſiege, with all the parts and circumſtances thereof. Briefly to touch ſo much as ſhall ſuffice for this Hiſtory, with fewer words than were ſtripes given at the ſiege thereof; this is to be judged and confeſſed, whoſoever beholdeth the number and fierceneſs of the Turks, the abſence of King Ferdinandus, the lack of proviſion and victual within the City, the noiſe of the Guns, the violence of the ſhot, the terrour of the fight, and yet no ſuccour ſent unto them; that the cuſtody of that City was no mans doing, but the Arm only of the Lord God of Hoſts, according to the true ſaying of the Pſalm, Unleſs the Lord do keep the City, the Watchmen watch in vain which watch to ſave it: Unleſs the Lord do build the Houſe, the Builder ſtriveth in vain which taketh upon him to build it. Experience whereof in keeping this City may well appear.

The Lords Power and Providence in keeping the City of Vienna.

Firſt, Solyman bending his ſhot and Ordnance againſt the City, beat down to the ground the Vamures with all the uttermoſt Suburbs of the City, and that in ſuch a ſhort moment of time, that the hearts of the Viennians, a little before refreſhed, were now as much appalled again with fear, miſdoubting with themſelves, leſt the Turk with the ſame celerity and violence would have prevailed againſt the inward Walls, as he did in beating down the outward Vamures. And no doubt the ſame time the Turk had put the City in great hazard, had not night coming on, broken off the ſiege for that day.

The ſlaughter of the Turks about the walls of Vienna.

In the mean time the Citizens laboured all night in repairing and refreſhing the Walls, to make all things ſure againſt the next Aſſault. The next day early in the morning the Turks approaching the City again with a new Aſſault, thinking to ſcale the Walls, were ſo repulſed and manfully reſiſted by the Germans, that unneth any ditches about the Walls could be ſeen for the bodies of the dead Turks, wherewith they were repleniſhed; ſo that the Turks were fain to fight ſtanding upon the bodies of them which were ſlain. By the which Calamity the force of the Enemy was not a little abated.

The manlineſs of Captain Rogendorffius againſt the Turks.

It happened the ſame time, that a Company of the Turks being ſpied out of the City wandering out of order, the Captain Rogendorffius with two Legions of Horſemen iſſuing out of the City Gate called Salmaria, and ſo paſſing cloſely under the hills ſide, did ſo ſet upon them, that they ſlew a great number of them; the reſt being driven to take the River, whom with ſtones and ſhot likewiſe they deſtroyed, and ſo retired back into the City again. By this Victory the Captain Rogendorffius began to be terrible to the Turks. For in the ſame Skirmiſh (as after was known) were ſlain of them ſo many, that of 5000 and 300 Horſemen and Footmen ſcarce 140 eſcaped alive.

Solyman diſdaining at this repulſe thought to prove another way, and ſo bringing his Power toward the Gate called the Kings-Gate, there making his Trenches and Bulwarks, planted his Ordnance, with the violence whereof the Walls were ſo battered and ſhaken, that no man was able there to ſtand. Wherefore the Turk, ſeeing two great breaches made in the Wall, commanded his Souldiers covertly in the dark ſmoke of the Gunpowder to preſs into the City. The like alſo was done at the Scotiſh Tower, whereby the City was invaded in two ſundry places at one time. The Viennians at the firſt freſhly began to withſtand them, new Souldiers ſtill coming in the place of them that were ſlain and hurt; and ſo this aſſault continuing more than ſix hours together, our men began at length to languiſh and faint, not only in ſtrength but alſo in courage, whereby the City had been in great danger of loſing, had not the two aforeſaid Captains, Rogendorffius in the one place, and the Earl of Salme in the other place, manfully encouraged the Souldiers to abide the brunt, and to bear out a while the violence of the Turks, promiting that immediately they ſhould have aid from Ferdinandus.

KING Hen. 7. Another Aſſault of the Turks againſt Vienna.

Another repulſe of the Turks.

In the mean time the Turks came ſo thick for the greedineſs of the Victory, ſcaling, climbing, and fighting upon the Walls, that had it not been for that preſs and throng of the great multitude of the Turks, coming ſo thick that one of them could not fight for another, Vienna that ſame day had been taken and utterly loſt. But by the policy of the Captains giving a ſign within the City, as though new Souldiers were called for, our men began to be encouraged, and the Turks hearts to be diſcomfited.

Vienna undermined by the Turks.

When Solyman ſaw his Army the ſecond time repulſed, he began to attempt a new way, purpoſing by undermining to overthrow the City; in the which work ſpecially he uſed the help of the Illyrians, of whom he had a great number in his Camp, expert in that kind of feat. Theſe Illyrians beginning to break the earth at the Gate Carinthia, and coming near to the foundations of the Tower, which they by ſtrength of hand attempted to break, could not work ſo cloſely under the ground, but they were perceived by certain men above, which were ſkilful and expert in that kind of matter; who contrariwiſe undermining againſt them, and filling their Trenches as they went with Gunpowder, ſo conveyed their train, that when fire ſhould be ſet unto it, the violence thereof ſhould burſt out by the trenches of the Enemies: which done, ſuddenly the ground beneath made a great ſhaking, ſo that the Tower did cleave aſunder, and all the Underminers of the Turks, working in their Trenches, were ſmothered and deſtroyed, which came to the number (as it was ſuppoſed afterward) of eight thouſand perſons; inſomuch that yet till this day a great number of dead mens ſculs are found in the ground.

Another aſſault of the Turks againſt Vienna.

When Solyman ſaw that this way alſo would not ſerve, and had privy Intelligence that the Walls about the Gates of Stubarium were negligently kept, and that he might have there more eaſie entrance; ſecretly he conveyeth about ten Garriſons of freſh Souldiers, in ſuch ſort as the Townſmen ſhould not perceive them: who came ſo ſuddenly upon them, that they had filled their Ditches, and were upon the top of the Fortreſſes and Munitions, before that our men were aware of them, or could make themſelves ready to reſiſt them. For although there was no lack of Souldiers within the City, yet forſomuch as the whole brunt of the ſiege did lie, eſpecially at the two Gates aforeſaid, from whence the Souldiers which were there warding could not be well removed, for a ſhift the Reſcuers (which within the City were ready for all ſudden adventures) were ſent to the Walls; by whoſe coming, thoſe few which kept the Enemies off before, being ſore hurt and wounded, were ſuccoured and ſent to Surgery; and thus the ſaid Aſſault continued terrible and doubtful until (the dark night coming upon them) they could not well know the one from the other. In this bickering were counted of the Turks to be ſlain more than 3000.

Then the Captain Rogendorffius commending the valiant ſtanding of his Souldiers, miſdoubting with himſelf (as it hapned indeed) that the Turks would not ſo give over, but would ſet upon him the next day with a freſh aſſault, providing with all diligence for the purpoſe, made up the breaches of the Walls, and prepared all things neceſſary for reſiſtance. The next morning following, which was ſomething dark and miſty, the Turks thinking to prevent our men with their ſudden coming, began again buſily to bicker upon the top of the Walls.

It would require a long tractation here to deſcribe the great diſtreſs and danger that the City thoſe three days following was in. During all the which time there was no reſt, no intermiſſion, nor diligence lacking, either in the Enemies, fighting againſt the City, either in our men in defending the ſame. For the Turks, beſides the multitude of the great Ordnance, wherewith (as with a great tempeſt of Gun-ſhot) they never ceaſed, till battering the Walls, and beating the Munitions of the City, ſent alſo ſuch heaps and multitudes of the Turks, to the ſcaling and climbing of the Walls, that unneth with all the Ordnance and ſhot of the City, either the violence of them could be broken, or the number of them diminiſhed; till at the laſt the Souldiers of the Turks, perceiving themſelves able by no means to prevail, but only to run in danger of life, and to do no good, began to wrangle among themſelves, grudging and repining againſt their Dukes and Captains, imputing the whole cauſe only to them, that the City was yet untaken, ſeeing there was in them neither diligence nor good will lacking; and ſo ceaſed the ſiege for that time.

Another aſſault of the Turks repelled.

The Turks at variance among themſelves.

After this, when Solyman had purpoſed in himſelf with his laſt and ſtrongeſt ſiege to try againſt the City the uttermoſt that he was able to do, and had encouraged his Souldiers to prepare themſelves in moſt forcible wiſe thereunto: the Souldiers ſhewed themſelves much unwilling to return again from whence they were ſo often repulſed before; by reaſon whereof great commotion began to riſe in the Turks Camp. The rumor whereof when it came to Solymans ears, he ſendeth his grand Captain to keep all the Souldiers in Order and Obedience; or if they would be ſtubborn, to compel them, whether they would or not, to accompliſh his Commandment. Who coming to the Souldiers, ſhewed to them the great Turks Meſſage; and to animate and incourage them, declared that the opportunity of the time preſent was not to be neglected, neither could they now without great ſhame give over, after ſo many Aſſaults attempted; who, if they would ſuſtain but one brunt more, the Victory were in their own hands. The Townſmen, he ſaid, were waſted, and their Victuals ſpent; and the more to enflame their minds, he promiſed them not only great Thanks and Reward of their Emperor, but alſo the whole ſpoil of the City, in recompence of their travel.

The Turk and his Souldiers could not agree.

The Turk entreateth his Souldiers.

Compulſion of mariage not where the Lord defended.

But when all this could not ſtir up the ſturdy ſtomacks of the tired Turks, uſing compulſion where perſwaſion would not ſerve, he appointed a number of Horſemen to be ſet at their backs; whereby to inforce them either to go forward, or if they be denied, with Guns and Spears to deſtroy them. The Turks ſeeing themſelves in ſuch a ſtrait, that whether they went or tarried it was to them like peril, yet would they not ſet forward except the Captain would take the venture before them. Who warding forward in his array thus ſpake unto his Fellows, ſaying, Do you forſake your Faith and Allegiance, and betray the Emperor of Conſtantinople unto the Chriſtians if you will; but I will diſcharge my duty towards the Common-wealth and my Emperor, and with that word advanced his Enſign, making toward the City Walls. Whom when other followed, and ſtill more and more preſſed after, ſo it came to paſs that whole routs of them were overthrown and ſlain of our men upon the Walls, before it was known what they meant. Others terrified by their example gave back and left their Array, and winding themſelves by by-ways and under covert of hills, returned again into their Tents, and ſo came it to paſs, that the ſtrength of the Enemies daily more and more decreaſing, they had leſs hope every day more and more than other of obtaining the City. For beſides the innumerable ſlaughter of Turks upon the Walls, the Townſmen alſo watching the Forrages and Purveyers of the Turks, as they ranged about for Victual for the Camp, ever as occaſion ſerved them did compaſs them about, and ſo encountred with them by that way, that of a whole Legion ſcarcely the tenth part returned again to their Fellows alive, by means whereof the courage of the Enemies began greatly to faint. Whereby ſuch a marvelous alteration happned, that as our men began to receive more hope and courage, ſo the Turks began ſtill more to droop and to languiſh with diſpair; ſo that at length ſcarce durſt they appear without the bounds where they were intrenched, but only in light Skirmiſhes, when they were provoked by our men to come out and to ſhew themſelves.

The Turks ſlain.

Solyman perceiving his Souldiers thus daily to go to wrack, of whom he had loſt already more than eighty thouſand, and that with long tarrying he could do no good, being alſo in lack of Forrage, for that the Country about him was waſted, beginneth to conſult with his Captains and Counſellors, what remained beſt to be done, Of whom the moſt part adviſed him to raiſe his ſiege, and betime to provide for himſelf. Which to do many cauſes there were that moved him. Firſt, the loſs of his men, which daily were cut from him by great numbers, beſides them which lay in his Camp wounded, or ſick, or famiſhed. Secondly, lack of purveyance. Thirdly, the approaching near of Winter. But the chiefeſt cauſe was, for that he heard Frederick Palatine above mentioned, coming with a great Army at Ratisbone towards Vienna, and there had done great moleſtation to a great number of the Turks Forragers, whom by the way he prevented, and ſo encloſed in the Woods that he ſlew them. Whereof when Solyman had intelligence, thinking it not beſt to abide the coming of the Palatine, made haſte with bag and baggage to remove his Camp, and to retire; and firſt ſending away his Carriage before him, he made ſpeed himſelf with his Army to follow ſhortly after.

The Turk beginneth to take counſel to retire.

Solyman removeth and raiſeth his ſiege from Vienna.

The Viennians, when they heard of the removing away of the Turks, although at the firſt they ſcarcely believed it to be true, being afterward certified out of doubt, both of their removing, and alſo of the Order thereof, how it was in a manner of a flight or chaſe, were greatly deſirous to make out of the City after them. Wherein, albeit the preſence of the Palatine with his Army, if he had been there preſent, might have ſtood them in great ſtead, yet notwithſtanding they took the opportunity of the time preſent, and iſſuing out of the City, in moſt ſpeedy wiſe ſet after them with their Horſemen; and firſt overpaſſing the Tents (where the Turks had pitched their ſtations or pavilions) for haſte of the way, they made ſuch purſuit after them, that within little time they overtook the rereward or later end of the Army, whereof they made ſuch havock and deſtruction, that (as the Author reporteth) there was never a ſhot of the Purſuers, nor Weapons drawn, nor ſtroke ſtrucken, which light in vain. Which was no hard thing for our men to do. For as the Turks in their flight went ſcattered out of order and array, neither would they in the fore-rank (being ſo far off from jeopardy) return back to help their Fellows, it was eaſie for our men, without reſiſtance, to come upon their backs as they would. Yet notwithſtanding in long purſuits, when our men could not ſee the Carriage of the Turks, which was wont in Armies to come away behind after the Hoſt, and ſuſpecting (as truth was) ſome ambuſh to be left in privy waight behind them, to come betwixt them and home; they called themſelves to retreat, and conſulted upon the matter, thinking good, firſt to ſend out certain Scouts, to eſpy and bring them word where the Enemies lay, and what was the number of them. Whereof when intelligence was given them that the remnant of the Turks Army was remaining in the Tents behind, word was ſent to their Fellows in Vienna to iſſue out, and to join alſo with them againſt the tail of the Turks, which had entrenched themſelves within the Camp. Other were appointed to follow the chaſe, leſt peradventure the Turks ſeeing our men to recul back, might return again upon them and help their Fellows. Which things being thus ordered and appointed, in the mean time, while part of the Viennians were hovering after the main Army, the reſt encountred with them that were left in the Camp. Who ſeeing themſelves overmatched, firſt defenced their Camp with a deep Ditch and Bulwark, to delay the time until ſome help might come to them from the Army. Secondly, they directed Meſſengers to the Chriſtians, to intreat for peace. Thirdly, they conveyed their privy Letters unto Solyman for ſpeedy aid and reſcue. But all the ways and paſſages being ſtopped by the Chriſtians, their Letters were intercepted, and ſo the miſerable Turks being deſtitute of all hope and ſuccour, ſeeing no other remedy, made out of their Camp, to hazard and prove the uttermoſt for their defence; but in concluſion, in their deſperate venture they were enclosed about by our men on every side, and there put to the Sword and slain, a few only excepted, who escaping out very hardly by secret passages, shifted after the rest of their Fellows, as well as they could. Their carriage and other furniture left behind them in their Tents was distributed amongst the Souldiers, only such things reserved as might serve for their publick use and commodity of the City.

The rest of the Turks slain in the Camp.

Thus through the merciful protection and benefit of Almighty God, Austria was delivered from the fierce and barbarous Hostility of the cruel Turks. Notwithstanding, that neither Ferdinandus the King, nor the Emperor his Brother were there present, but only the Power of God, through the valiantness of the worthy Germans, defended that City; in defence whereof consisted the safety and deliverance (no doubt) of all these West parts of Christendom. For the which immortal praise and thanks be unto our immortal God in Christ our Lord, according as he hath of us most graciously and worthily deserved. Wherein by the way take this for a note (gentle Reader) how and after what manner Gods blessing goeth with the true Reformers of his Religion; and so much the more is it to be noted, for that the Turks in so many battels and sieges heretofore were never so repulsed and foiled, as at this present time in encountring with the Protestants and Defenders of sincere Religion. This City of Vienna was besieged and delivered the year of our Lord, 1529. The Assaults of the Turk against the City are numbred to be twenty, and his repulses as many. The number of his Army which he first brought, was 250000, whereof were reckoned to be slain eighty thousand and above. During the time of his siege he led away out of the Country about, many Captives, Virgins and Matrons he quelled, and cast them out naked, the Children he stuck upon stakes.

The merciful protection of God over Christendom.

Gods blessing goeth with the Maintainers of his true Worship and Religion.

Solyman thus put from the hope of Victory of Vienna, after he had breathed himself a while at home, the second year after, which was Anno 1531, repairing his Host, returned again into Hungary, with no less multitude than before; where first he got the Town called Gunza, being but slenderly kept with a small Garrison. By reason whereof the Townsmen and Souldiers, yielding themselves unto the Turks, were constrained to agree upon unreasonable conditions. Ex Joanne Ramo.

Melchior Soiterus in his Second Book writing De bello Pannonico, touching the foresaid Town of Gunza or Gunzium, differeth herein something from Ramus, declaring how this Gunza, being a small Town in Hungary, and having in it but only an hundred Souldiers (or as Wolfgangus Drechslerus in his Chronicle reporteth, at the most but two hundred Souldiers) under the valiant Captain Nicholaus Jureschitz, defended themselves so manfully and wonderfully, through the notable Power of God, against the whole puissance of two hundred thousand Turks, that they being notwithstanding distressed with lack and penury of purveyance, and suddenly of the Turks invaded, yet with pure courage and promptness of heart sustained the uttermost force and violence of thirteen Assaults of that great multitude, for the space of twenty five days together.

Ex Melc. Soit. lib. 2. de bello Pannonico.

Nicolaus Jureschitz a valiant Captain.

Although the Narration of the Author may seem to some incredible, yet thus he writeth, That what time the great Ordnance and Battering pieces of the Turks were planted upon two Mountains much higher than the Town, whereby they within the Town were oppressed both before and behind, insomuch that eight Ensigns of the Turks were already within the Town, yet by the reason of Women and Children, and other impotent persons, who in the middle of the Town were congregate in an house together, such a noise and clamor went up to Heaven, praying and crying to God for help, that the Turks within the Walls, supposing a new Army of fresh Souldiers to be sent into the Town, for sudden fear voided the Town, and leaped down from the Walls again, (which before they had got) whom no man either pursued or resisted; for never a Souldier almost was left on the Walls, which was not either slain or else wounded with the Turks Ordnance. At what time through the Lords Providence it so hapned, that one Ibrahimus Bassa near about the Turk, seeing both the Town to be small, and the great destruction of the Turks in the siege thereof, and that the Captain in no case would yield, perswaded to the Turk, declaring how the Town being so little was not worth the loss of so many men, in the winning whereof there was no glory, and if he were repulsed, great dishonour might follow: whereby the Turk being perswaded did follow his counsel, which was this; that Nicolaus the Christian Captain being called unto him, under pledges and safe conduct, should receive the Town as of his hand and gift, with condition that he should do no violence to his Souldiers left behind and wounded, but should procure such means as he could for the recuring of them; and so he raising his siege departed. Another cause might be also, which moved him to suddenly to raise his siege, for that he heard the Palatinate not to be far off in pursuing after him; and therefore taking his flight by the Mountains of the Noricians, he returned with much spoil of Christian mens goods unto Constantinople. Ex Melchiore Soit. lib. 2. de bello Pannonico.

A miraculous example of the Lords protection and providence.

The Turk raiseth his siege from Gunza.

For so it was provided the same time in Germany, after the Council of August and Ratisbon (at what time the Controversie of Religion between the Protestants and the Papists was deferred and set off to the next general Council) that Charles the Fifth and Ferdinandus his Brother, having understanding of the Turk thus ranging in Hungary, should collect of the Germans, Hungarians, and Spaniards, and others, an able Army of eighty thousand Footmen, and thirty thousand Horsemen to repulse the Invasions of the Turk. But Solyman having intelligence of this preparation of the Christian Power coming toward him, whether for fear, or whether to espy further opportunity of time for his more advantage and our detriment, refused at that time to tarry their coming, and so, speeding his return unto Constantinople, retired with much spoil and prey sent before him, as is above premised: which was in the year of our Lord, 1532.

The Emperor Charles and Ferdinand begin at length to stir against the Turk.

The Turk refuseth to tarry for the Christian Army.

Not long after, being the year of our Salvation, 1534. Solyman intending two Wars at once, first sent Conradinus Barbarossa the Admiral of his Navies into Afriek, to war against the King of Tunis; whom Barbarossa also dispossessed and deprived of his Kingdom: but Charles the Emperor, the next year following, Anno 1535, restored the said King again into his Kingdom, and delivered in the same Voyage twenty thousand Captives out of Servitude.

The same time the Turk also sent another Captain into Hungary, to War against Vaivoda, while he himself taking his course to Persia, planted his siege against the City Taurus, which he in short space subdued and expugned. Albeit he long enjoyed not the same; For Tahames King of the Persians, suddenly coming upon the Turks unprepared, slew of them twenty thousand, and took his Concubines, to the great foil and reproach of the Turk.

Two years after this, which was the year of our Lord, 1537. Solyman, who could not be quiet at home, nor rest in peace, returning again out of Asia into Europe with 270 Ships, great and little, set upon Corcyra, another Island belonging to the Venetians, which he besieged ten days, wasting and burning the Towns and Fields as he went, beside the destruction of much people therein, whom partly he slew, partly led away Captives. From thence he sailed to Zacinthus and Cythara, another Island not far from Corcyra, bordering near to the Coasts of Epyrus and Grecia. Where he suddenly by night invading the Husbandmen in Villages and Fields, sleeping and mistrusting no harm, drew them out of their Houses and Possessions, Men and Women, besides Children, to the number of nine hundred, whom he made his Bondslaves; burning moreover their Houses, and carrying away all the Goods and Cattel being without the said City of Zacinthus and Cythara. Ex Joan. Crispo.

From thence these Hellhounds turned their course to the siege and spoil of Egina, a rich and populous Island, lying between Grecia and Asia. Where first the Eginians did manfully in battel resist them, and were like to have prevailed: but being wearied at length, and oppressed with innumerable thousands of fresh Turks, which still were sent in, to rescue the other which were overcome before, were compelled to fly unto the City of Egina. Which City the cruel Turks (or rather Devils on earth) with much labour, and violence of their great Ordnance set out of their Ships, subdued and cast down to the ground; the Citizens and Inhabitants whereof the Turk after he had

The Women both noble and unnoble, with their Infants, were given to the Mariners to be abuſed, and from thence being ſhipped unto Conſtantinople, were led away to perpetual miſery and Slavery, which was in the Year of our Lord, 1537.

In the ſame Journy Solyman alſo took the Iſle in the ſaid Sea of Eugeum, called Parum; alſo the Iſle adjoyning to the ſame named Naxus, and made them to him Tributaries. This done, Solymannus directed his Navy unto Apulia, where he ſet on Land Ten thouſand Foot-men, and 2000 Horſe-men, which ſpoiled likewiſe and waſted thoſe parts, while the Emperor, the Pope, and the Venetians were together in War and Diſſention. Furthermore, the next Year following, Anno 1538. great Attempts began in Stiria, but by the reſiſtance of the Inhabitants, the force of the barbarous Turks was repulſed, notwithſtanding great ſpoils of Men and Cattel were carried from thence, and the Country miſerably ſpoiled. In the which Year alſo, the Turk turning into Hungary, gave Battel unto the Chriſtians in Savia; where, through fraudulent falſhood of the Captain Caſſianerus (Wolfgangus nameth him Calcianus) being (as they ſay) corrupted with mony, our men were put to the worſe. Anno 1538.

Note, what hurt cometh by the diſſention of Chriſtian Princes.

Stiria is a Country or Province near adjoyning to Auſtria.

After that the Turks had invaded the Iſland of Corcyra aboveſaid, the Venetians, with Solyman the Turk, had joyned Truce for a certain time, for the which they gave the Turk 300 thouſand Crowns, with the City Neapolis, and Maluaſia, in the borders of Macedonia. But within four or five Years, the Turk, to get a new ſtipend of the Venetians, brake his League, and invaded their Dominions, whereby they were enforced to enter new Conditions again with him.

The falſhood of the Turks with the Venetians.

In the Year of our Lord, 1540. the reſtleſs Turk making his return toward Hungary by the way paſſing by Dalmatia, lay againſt the Town called Newcaſtle, being defended by the Spaniards. In the which Town, becauſe they refuſed to yield themſelves, all the Inhabitants and Souldiers were put to the Sword, and ſlain every one. This Novum Caſtellum, or New Caſtle, was a ſtrong Fort of the Chriſtians, which being now in the Turks power, he had great advantage over all thoſe Quarters of Dalmatia, Stiria, Carinthia, and Hungaria. From thence he proceeded further, keeping his courſe into Hungary, where he planted his Power againſt the City of Buda.

Novum Caſtellum in Dalmatia overthrown by the Turks, and the people ſlain.

This Buda was a principal City in Hungary, about which great Contention had been (as ye have heard before) between Joannes Vaivoda and Ferdinandus. By reaſon whereof the Turk occaſioned by Vaivoda, came into Hungary, and delivered the City of Vaivoda. This Vaivoda living not long after, left behind him a Son, whom being an Infant, he committed to the Government of one Georgius Monachus, who, being left Tutor unto the Infant, reduced all Tranſylvania, Buda, Peſta, with other parts of Hungary, which belonged to Vaivoda before, to the ſubjection of the Child. Ferdinandus hearing thereof, in great haſte and anger, levied an Army to recover his Lands in Hungary, and ſo laid ſiege to Buda. Monachus ſeeing his part weak, firſt ſent his Legate to Ferdinandus, deſiring him to talk and confer with him upon matters, as he pretended, pertaining to the behoof of them both. Whereupon, both the Parties being agreed, the place and manner of their Convention was appointed, and alſo the day and time aſſigned. Thus the parties (according to the Agreement) conventing together with their Armies, withdrawing a little aſide, as they were entred in Communication, ſuddenly among Ferdinandus men there was a Dog to be heard, which by the heat of the day (as is thought) looſing of his own accord, gave a crack. The ſound whereof coming to the Ears of Monachus, he ſuppoſing the ſame to have been diſcharged againſt him, in great anger drew out his Sword, bidding Ferdinandus avaunt with his doubling diſſimulation, ſaying, That he would never any more truſt the Promiſes of Chriſtians; and immediately upon the ſame, ſent to Solymannus the Turk for aid againſt the Chriſtians, promiſing that he would ſurrender to him free poſſeſſion of Hungary, if he would come and vanquiſh the Army of Ferdinandus lying about the Siege of Buda. The Turk maketh no long tarrying, but taketh the occaſion, and with a mighty Power flyeth into Hungary, and eftſoons diſcharging the Hoſt of Ferdinandus, and putting them off from the Siege of Buda, getteth the City into his own hands, commanding the ſon of Vaivoda, with his Mother, to follow after his Camp.

What hurt may come of rash ſuſpicion.

The Turk called again into Hungary by the diſſention between Monachus and Ferdinandus.

In the Hiſtory of Joannes Ramus, it followeth, that when Solyman the Turk had thus prevailed againſt the City of Buda aforeſaid, and againſt other parts more of Hungary, by the aſſent of the Empire, one Joachimus Duke of Brandenburg, Prince Elector, was aſſigned with a puiſſant Army of choſen Souldiers of all Nations, collected to recover the City of Buda from the Turk, and to deliver the other parts of Chriſtiandom from the fear of the Turk, Anno 1542. Which Joachimus at his firſt ſetting forth, appeared ſo Couragious and Valiant, as though he would have Conquered the whole World: but this great heat was ſo ſlacked in ſhort time by the Turk, that before any great jeopardy was offered unto him, he was glad to be diſcharged of the Voyage, and with ſhame enough returned home again. And would God he had left behind him in the Fields no more but his own ſhame. For the Enemies having intelligence before of his cowardly departure, thinking to work ſome point of Maſtery or Victory before his going, did ſet upon the Right wing of his Army (which chiefly conſiſted of Dutchmen of Low Germany) out of the which they took away with them above Five hundred ſtrong and valiant Souldiers, not killing them, but carrying them away alive. For whom it had been much better to have ſtood to their Weapon, and to have died manfully upon the Turks, than by yielding themſelves to be diſgarniſhed of Weapon and Armor, and ſo to be left to the curſed courteſie of the foul Turks. To whom what courteſie was ſhewed by the ſequel, did appear. For after the Turks had led them out of Hungary into their own Dominions, after a moſt horrible and beaſtly ſort they diſfigured and mangled them, and ſo ſent them abroad through all Græcia, to be witneſſes of the Turks Victory. Their kind of puniſhment was thus. Firſt, They had their right Arm thruſt through with an Iron red hot, whereby they ſhould be unable and unmeet to all labor and warfare. Secondly, Their Heads were ſhaven to the very Sculls, after the manner of our Friers and Monks, when they are newly ſhaven. Thirdly, They had all their Privy Members cut off from their Bodies, to the intent to make them unfruitful for Propagation; which wound was ſo grievous unto them, that the greateſt part of them died thereupon: the few that recovered the torment thereof, led a life more bitter and more miſerable than death it ſelf. And this kind of Cruelty was executed in order upon them all. In much like ſort did cruel Pharaoh exerciſe his Tyranny againſt the People of God in Egypt; who to deſtroy the Generation of them, cauſed all the Male Children to be drowned in the River. Whereby it is the more to be hoped, that ſeeing the Tyranny of this Turkiſh Pharaoh is come to ſuch an Extremity, the merciful Goodneſs of God will the more ſhortly ſend ſome Moſes or other unto us for our ſpeedy Deliverance. This was by the cruel Turks done, Anno 1542. witneſſed by Joannes Ramus, which not only writeth the Story, but by the Teſtimony alſo of his own Eyes recordeth the ſame to be true, beholding with his Eyes one of the ſame number in the City of Vienna, who having Wife and Children in Bruxelles, either for ſhame or ſorrow, had no mind to return home to his own Houſe. *Ex Joan. 500 Chriſtian Souldiers taken and carried away of the Turks.

The horrible puniſhments practiſed of the Turks againſt the Chriſtians.

Ex Joanne Ramo de rebus Turcicis, lib. 2.

But to return again to the City of Buda, from whence we have digreſſed, here is not to be pretermitted, what falſhood and what cruelty the Turks uſed toward the Chriſtians there after their Victory. For after that Solyman the Turk, upon yielding and ſubmiſſion of the Men of Buda, had given to them his promiſe of Safety and Life, within ſhort time the ſaid Turk picking a Quarrel with them for ſelling Oxen unto the Chriſtians, and for bargaining with them, ſlew all the Magiſtrates of the ſaid City of Buda; like as in all other Cities whereſoever the Chriſtians yielded unto him, he never, or very rarely kept his promiſe with them, neither did ever any

The falſeneſs of the Turks in keeping no promiſe with the Chriſtians.

Chriſtians ſpeed better with the Turk, than they which moſt conſtantly did reſiſt him.

An horrible example of the beaſtly cruelty of the falſe Turks.

And as his Promiſe with the Magiſtrates of Buda was falſe and wretched; ſo his Cruelty with the Souldiers thereof, was much more notorious and abominable. For in the expugnation of Buda, amongſt the reſt which were ſlain, two Cohorts or Bands of Chriſtian Souldiers came alive to his hands. To whom, when he ſeemed at the firſt to grant Pardon of Life, he commanded to put on their Armor again, and to diſpoſe themſelves in order and Battel array, after the Warlike manner of the Chriſtians. Which when they had accompliſhed readily, according to his Commandment, and he riding about the Ranks of them, had diligently viewed and beholden them a certain ſpace, at length he commanded them to put off their Armor again. Which done, certain of the talleſt and ſtrongeſt of them he picked out, the reſidue, he commanded by his Souldiers coming behind them with Swords, to be cut in pieces and ſlain. Of the other, whom he had elected and choſen, ſome he ſet for Marks and Buts to be ſhot at; ſome he appointed to his two Sons, for them to ſlaſh with their Swords and try their ſtrength, which of them could give the deeper Wound, and (as they termed it) the fairer blow, whereby the moſt Blood might follow out of their Chriſtian Bodies. Ex Epiſt. Mart. Stellæ de ſucceſſibus Turcarum.

Ex Epiſt. Mart Stellæ, de Succeſſibus Turcarum, &c.

After the winning of Buda, the Turk purpoſing not ſo to ceaſe, before he had ſubdued and brought under his obedience all Hungary; proceeding further with his Army, firſt, brought under a ſtrong Hold of the Chriſtians, named Peſtum or Peſta, where a great number of Chriſtian Souldiers partly were ſlain, partly were led away to more cruel affliction.

The Caſtle of Walpo won of the Turks.

Then he came to another Caſtle called Walpo, ſituate in the Confines of Boſna, Croatia, and Hungary. Which Fort or Caſtle he beſieged three months, while no reſcue or aid was ſent unto them, neither from Ferdinandus King of Hungary, nor from any other Chriſtian Prince or Princes. Whereupon at length the Fort was given up to the Turk; but more through the falſe treachery, or cowardly heart of the Souldiers than of the Captain. Wherein is to be noted an Example not unworthy of memory. For when the cowardly Souldiers, either for fear or flattery, would needs ſurrender themſelves and the place unto the Turk, contrary to the mind of the Captain, which in no caſe would agree to their yielding: they thinking to find favour with the Turk, apprehended their Captain and gave him to Solyman. But ſee how the Juſtice of God, ſometimes by the hand of the Enemy, diſpoſeth the end of things to the rewarding of Virtue and puniſhing of Vice. For where they thought to ſave themſelves by the danger of the faithful Captain, the Event turned clean contrary; ſo that the Turk was to the Captain bountiful and very liberal, and the Souldiers, notwithſtanding that they had all yielded themſelves, yet were all put to death, and commanded pitiouſly to be ſlain. Ex Joan. Martino Stella de Turcarum in Hungaria ſucceſſibus &c.

A notable example of Gods Judgements lighting upon themſelves, which mean ſ thood toward the innocent.

The City of five Churches yielded to the Turks.

There is in Hungary another Town, bearing the name of Five-Churches, called Quinque-eccleſienſis, which being partly ſpoiled before, as is above-mentioned, which now through the loſs of Walpo, and by the hugeneſs of the Turks Army (containing in it two hundred and twenty thouſand fighting Men) ſo diſcouraged, and put out of hope and heart, that the Biſhop and chief Nobles of the Town, fled before the Jeopardy: the reſt of the Commons, which were partly prevented by the ſudden coming of the Turks partly for poverty could not avoid, ſent their Meſſengers to the Turk, to yield and ſurrender the Town, upon promiſe of life, unto his hands. Whoſe promiſe how firm it ſtood, the ſtory leaveth it uncertain. This is affirmed, that three days after the yielding of this Quinque-eccleſienſis, never a Turk durſt enter the City, Anno 1543. Ex Joan. Martino Stella, & aliis.

The Biſhop leaveth his Flock in the bryers.

Socloſia, a Town in Hungary ſubdued of the Turks.

The next Fort or Hold gotten by the Turks in Hungary, was Socloſia. The Town at the firſt Invaſion of the Turks was won, ſack'd, and fired. The Caſtle within the Town did ſomething hold out for a time, and firſt requiring truce for fourteen days, to ſee what aid ſhould be ſent unto them, to deliberate upon the Conditions that ſhould be propoſed unto them, after the fourteen days expired, they truſting to the ſituation and munition of the place, which was very ſtrong) began for a certain ſpace ſtoutly to put back the Enemy. But afterward, ſeeing their Walls to be battered, their Foundations to ſhake (for the Turk had ſet twelve thouſand Underminers under the Ditches of the Caſtle) and their ſtrength to diminiſh, and miſdoubting themſelves not to be able long to hold out, agreed in like manner to yield themſelves, upon condition to eſcape with Life and Goods. Which condition of ſaving their Goods was the loſing of their Lives, eſpecially of the richer ſort. For the Turks perceiving by that condition, that they were of Wealth and Subſtance, omitting the inferior or baſer ſort, fell upon the Wealthy men for their Riches, and ſlew them every one, Anno 1543. Ibid.

KING Hen. 7.

Covetouſneſs of worldly goods is the deſtruction of many a man.

The Turk keepeth no promiſe.

In the which his Hiſtory, this is alſo to be noted, that during the time while the Caſtle of Socloſia was beſieged, the Villages and Pages round about the ſame, came of their own accord, ſubmitting and yielding themſelves unto the Turk, bringing in (as they were commanded) all kind of Victuals and Forrage into the Turks Camp. Which done, Solyman the Turk commanded all the Headmen of the Pages to appear before him, which humbly obeyed and came. Then the Turk warned them to return again the next day after, every one bringing with him his Inferior Retinue and Houſhold Servants. Which when they had with like diligence alſo according to his Commandment accompliſhed, the Turk immediately commanded them every one, in the face of his whole Army to be ſlain, and ſo was this their reward. Which reward, the more that it declareth the Bloody Cruelty of the Turk, the more Courage it may miniſter to our Men the more conſtantly to withſtand him. Ex Martino Stella.

Example what cometh by Chriſtian mens yielding to the Turk.

Strigonium, a City in Hungary, beſieged of the Turks.

Another ſtrong Town there is in Hungary, named Strigonium, diſtant from Buda aboveſaid, the ſpace of five Dutch Miles, againſt the which the Turks made great preparation of Ordnance, and all other Inſtruments of Artillery neceſſary for the Siege thereof. Which City in like manner began alſo to be compaſſed and incloſed by the Turks, before it could be ſufficiently prepared and garniſhed of our Men, but that the Archbiſhop only of Strigon privily conveyed unto them two hundred Oxen. Such was then the negligence of Ferdinandus King of Hungary, which ſo ſlenderly looked unto the neceſſary defence of his Towns and Cities. Moreover, ſuch was the Diſcord then of Chriſtian Kings and Princes, which in their Civil Diſſention and Wars were ſo occupied and hot in needleſs Quarrels, that they had neither leiſure nor remembrance to help in time there where true need required. Which ſlender care, and cold zeal of the Chriſtian Rulers, not in tendring the publick Cauſe, while they contended in private Trifles, hath cauſed the Turk to come ſo far as he hath; and yet farther is like, unleſs the mercy of the Lord do help more than our diligence. One of the chief Captains within the City, was Martinus Laſcanus, a Spaniard.

Negligence of Chriſtian Princes in publick defence.

The Turks in the beginning of the Siege, began firſt to attempt the Citizens with fair words, and accuſtomed promiſes, to yield and gently to ſubmit themſelves. But they not ignorant of the Turks promiſes, wiſely refuſed, and manfully ſtood ſo long as they could to the defence of their City; now and then skirmiſhing with them in out-corners, and killing certain numbers of them; ſometime with their ſhot diſturbing their munitions, and breaking the Wheels of their Guns, &c.

Three ſpecial helps of the Turks in winning Towns and cities.

Three ſpecial means the Turks uſe in winning great Forts and Cities; great multitude of Souldiers, great Ordnance and Mortar Pieces; the third is by Undermining. All which here in the Siege of this City lacked not. This Siege continued by the ſpace of a certain ſpace; in which the Strigonians had born out four ſtrong Aſſaults, and ſlew many thouſands of the Turks, till at length the Turks either departing away, or elſe ſeeming to depart unto Buda, the people at laſt being ſo perſwaded and made to believe of ſome chief Rulers of the City (perad venture not the trueſt men) the Citizens being erected with hope and comfort, and ſinging Te Deum, as though the City had been free from all danger, ſuddenly (by whoſe counſel it is unknown) conveyed themſelves all out of the {KING Hen. 7.} The Citizens of Strigonium fly the City.

City

City, 300 Horſemen alſo paſſed over the River and departed. The Italians which were under Franciſcus Salamanca a Spaniſh Captain, hardly could be perſwaded by him to abide, which were in all ſcarce 600.

The Town of Strigonium deſtroyed after the flying of the Citizens and the Caſtle defended.

Within three days after, Three hundred German Souldiers, with two Ships laden with Shot, Powder, and Artillery, were privily let into the Town; ſo that of our men in all there were ſcarce 1300 Souldiers. Who ſeeing the ſmall quantity of their number, burning and caſting down the Town and Suburbs, took them to the Caſtle; from whence they beat off the Turks valiantly with their Ordnance a good ſpace, and with Wild-fire deſtroyed great Companies of them, till at laſt they ſeeing their Walls to fail them, and the whole Caſtle to ſhake by Undermining, but eſpecially by the working of a certain Italian ſurnamed Presbyter, they gave over. This Italian, whether for fear or falſhood, ſecretly unknown to the reſt of the Souldiers, accompanyed with two other, conveyed himſelf down from the Walls, and being brought into the Tents of the next Captain or Baſſa of the Turks, there in the name of all his Fellows covenanted with the Turks, to give up to them the Caſtle: whereupon the Turks were bid to ceaſe the ſhooting. This Italian ſhortly after, with two other Turks, was ſent back to Salamanca his Captain, with the Turks Meſſage. The going out of this Italian being privy to the reſidue of his Fellows, contrary to the Laws and Diſcipline of War, although it ſeem'd to come of his own head: yet forſomuch as the other Souldiers were not ſo ſure, but rather ſuſpected leſt the other Italians his Country-men had been in ſome part of co. ſent therein, and would take his part; they neither durſt offer him any harm for that his doing, nor yet could well adviſe with themſelves what was beſt to do, for fear of privy Confederacy within themſelves.

An Italian feat in yielding the Caſtle of Strigonium to the Turk.

A Turkiſh truce taken with the Chriſtians, they not knowing thereof.

Thus, while Laſcanus the chief Captain of the Chriſtians aforeſaid, with his Fellow-Souldiers, were in a maze what to do, or not to do; in the mean time came one running, who giving a Sign both to the Chriſtians and the Turks to hold their hands and weapons, for that it was againſt all Law of War to fight after Peace and Truce taken: our men, as they were commanded, went into the inward Tower. The Turks in the mean time had got into the Caſtle, and occupied all the utter parts. Then was Salamanca, by the conſent of the reſt, ſent out to the Turk, who there being ſtayed that night; the next morrow the Turks Bull or Warrant was ſent into the Caſtle, permitting free liberty to the Chriſtians to depart with Bag and Baggage: who now being ready to depart, firſt were commanded by the Turks, compaſſing them round about, to caſt from them their Dags, Lances, Battelaxes, into the Trench. Then coming to the Gate to go out, their Swords were taken from them, looking then for nothing but preſent death.

The falſe Turks never true in promiſe.

At laſt, when they were come a little further, other were ſent to them to diſcharge them of their Helmets, their Targets, Curets, and whatſoever piece of Harneſs was about them: whereupon great fear came upon them, leſt ſome great cruelty ſhould be ſhewed upon them. Solyman, after he had long deliberated with himſelf, whether to kill them or not; at laſt, contrary to all expectation, granted their lives: but before they ſhould be diſmiſſed, he firſt cauſed them, in deriſion of Chriſtianity, to be baited with ſcorns and mocks throughout all the Turkiſh Army; and ſo the next day commanded them, being ſtript of their Coats and Apparel, to be reduced again into the Caſtle by Companies, ſetting over them certain Turks with Cudgels and Bats to lay upon their backs and ſides, cauſing them to bury the dead Carkaſſes, and to gather up the rubbiſh broken down from the Caſtle-walls, and to ſcour the Ditches: which done, the next day following he demanded of them, by an Interpreter, whether they would enter wages with him, and take Horſe and Armor to ſerve him in his Wars; which Condition, divers for fear were contented to take, ſeeing no other remedy to avoid preſent death. Some, neither by menacing words, nor for any fear of death, could be compelled thereunto; of whom certain, which ſtood ſtoutly in refuſing thereof, were preſently ſlain, whom I may worthily recite in the number and Catalogue of Martyrs.

The miſerable affliction of our Chriſtian Souldiers taken at Strigonium.

Holy Souldiers and Martyrs ſlain of the Turks for their faithful Religion.

Of the aforeſaid Chriſtians, part were carried over the River Danubius, not without great villany, and contumely moſt deſpightful. For ſome had their Wives taken from them, and carried away, ſome had their Wives raviſhed before their face; and ſuch as made or ſhewed any reſiſtance thereat, had their Wives before them caſt into the River and drowned; alſo their Infants and young Children, being appointed by the Turks to the abominable Order of the Janizarites, mentioned before, their Parents not conſenting thereunto, were precipitate and thrown into the River and drowned. All which things are teſtified by John Martinus Stella, in his Epiſtles in Print extant, written to his two Brethren, William and Michael, &c. which Martin Stella moreover addeth and affirmeth this, That he himſelf, being the ſame time at Vienna, did ſee one of the foreſaid Wives, who being held faſt by the hair of the Head; yet notwithſtanding having her Hair pluckt off, caſt her ſelf into the River Danubius, for the ſingular love to her Husband, and ſo ſwam to the Ship where he was. And thus this miſerable company of Germans, Spaniards and Italians mixt together, macerate with labors, with hunger pined, with watchings, dolours and ſorrow conſumed, came at length to Schinda.

Ex Joan. Mart. Stella in Epiſt. ad fratres.

When the tidings thereof was noiſed at Vienna, partly with fear and dread, partly with indignation, all mens hearts were moved and vexed diverſly. Some thought them not worthy to be received into their City, ſhewing themſelves ſo daſtardly and cowardly. Others thought again, that mercy was to be ſhewed unto them, and commended their Fact, for that they being ſo few, and unfurniſhed of aid, neither able to match by any means with ſuch an innumerable multitude of the Turks, kept themſelves till better time might ſerve them. But howſoever the matter was to be thought of, the Captains brought the poor remnant of that ruful company unto Poſſidonium, where the ſaid Captains were laid faſt, and there kept in durance, to render account of the whole matter how it was wrought and handled. And thus have ye the lamentable ſtory of Strigonium.

Divers opinions of the Viennians touching theſe miſerable afflicted Souldiers.

The Turk proceeding in his Victories conducted his Army next unto Tath, and to the parts lying near about Comaron. This Tath was alſo a ſtrong Hold in Hungary, wherein were placed certain Garriſons, partly of the Germans, partly of the Italians. The Chieftain of the Italians was one Annibal Taſſo, conſtitute by Philippus Tornelius. This Taſſo was a Man well expert in Proweſs of War, but of a filthy corrupt Life, and alſo a fowl Swearer, and horrible Blaſphemer of God and his Saints. To make the ſtory ſhort, this Fort of Tath, before any Siege was laid unto it, was yielded and given up to the Turks; upon what conditions, or by whoſe means, the Author ſheweth not. Thus much he ſheweth, That the ſaid Annibal ſhortly upon the ſame, returning into Italy, was commanded by Tornelius aforeſaid, to be apprehended and beheaded.

Tath ſubdued of the Turks.

Victory hath never ſucceſs under a wicked Captain and Swearer.

After the Turks had ſubverted and deſtroyed the Fort of Tath, they turned their Power againſt Alba, ſurnamed Regalis, for that the Kings of Hungary have been always wont there to be Crowned and Buried. This Alba is a little well compacted City in Hungary, having on the one ſide a Mariſh ſomewhat foggiſh or fenny, which made the Town leſs aſſaultable. But near to the ſame was a Wood, from the which the Turks every day with ſix hundred Carts brought ſuch matter of Wood, and Trees felled for the ſame purpoſe, in the Mariſh, that within leſs than twelve days, they made it apt and hard to their feet, which the Townſmen thought never could be gone upon, but only in the hard Froſts of winter. At the firſt beginning of the Siege, there ſtood a little without the Munitions, in the front of the City, a certain Church or Monaſtery, which the Citizens pretending to maintain and keep againſt the Turks, had privily conveyed light matter eaſily to take flame, with Powder in ſecret places thereof, and had hid alſo Fire withal: which done, they (as againſt their wills being driven back) withdrew themſelves within the Munitions, waiting the occaſions when this Fire would take. Thus the Turks having the poſſeſſion of the Church, ſuddenly the Fire coming to the Powder, raiſed up the Church, and made a great ſcatter and ſlaughter among the barbarous Turks.

Alba Regalis beſieged of the Turk.

The Turks device in filling up the Mariſh.

A ſtratagem of the Chriſtians againſt the Turks.

This was not ſo ſoon eſpied of them within the Town, but they iſſued out upon them in this diſturbance, and ſlew of them a great number. Among whom, divers of their Nobles alſo the ſame time were ſlain, and one Baſſa an Eunuch, which was of great eſtimation with the Turks. Moreover, in the ſame skirmiſh was taken one of thoſe Gunners which the French King is ſaid to have ſent to the Turk a little before. Which if it be true, let the Chriſtian Reader judge what is to be thought of thoſe Chriſtian Princes, which not only forſaking the common cauſe of Chriſts Church, joyned League with the Turk, but alſo ſent him Gunners to ſet forward his Wars to the deſtruction of Chriſts People, and to the ſhedding of thir blood, for whom they know the blood of Chriſt to be ſhed. If this be not true, I ſhew mine Author; if it be, then let the Pope ſee and mark well how this Title of Chriſtianiſſimus can well agree with ſuch doings.

A note touching the French King that then was.

Ex Epiſt. Joan. Marii Stellæ ad fratres de Turcar. in Hungaria ſucceſſib.

But to let this matter ſleep, although the Turks (as ye heard) had won the Fen with their Policy and Induſtry againſt the City of Alba, yet all this while the Albanes were nothing inferior to their Enemies, through the valiant help and couragious indeavor of Octavianus Scruzetus, a Captain of Millain. By whoſe prudent Counſel and conſtant ſtanding, the buſie Enterprizes of the Turks did little prevail a long time, till at length ſuddenly aroſe a thick Fog or Miſt upon the City, whereas round about beſides the Sun did ſhine bright. Some ſaid it came by Art Magical, but rather it may appear to riſe out of the Fen or Mariſh, being ſo preſſed down with Mens feet, and other matter laid upon it.

The outward Walls got by the Turks.

The Turks uſing the occaſion of this miſty darkneſs, in ſecret wiſe approaching the Walls, had got up to a certain Fortreſs where the Germans were, before our Men could well perceive them: where they preſſed in ſo thick, and in ſuch number, that albeit the Chriſtian Souldiers, ſtanding ſtrongly to the defence of their Lives, did what valiant Men in caſes of ſuch extremity were able to do; yet being over-matched by the multitude of the Turks, and the ſuddenneſs of their coming, gave back, ſeeking to retire unto the inward Walls. Which when their other Fellows did ſee to reſcue, then was there flying of all hands, every man ſtriving to get into the City. There was between the outward Walls or Vamures, and inward Gate of the City, a ſtrait or narrow Paſſage, caſt up in the manner of a Bank or Cauſway, ditched on both ſides; which Paſſage or Ingreſs hapned the ſame time to be barred and ſtopped. By reaſon whereof the poor Souldiers were forced to caſt themſelves into the Ditch, thinking to ſwim as well as they could into the City, where many of them ſticking in the Mud were drowned, one preſſing upon another; many were ſlain of their enemies coming behind them, they having neither heart nor power to reſiſt. A few which could ſwim out, were received into the City; but the chief Captains and Warders of the Town were there ſlain.

A miſerable ſlaughter of Chriſtian Souldiers.

The Citizens being deſtitute of their principal Captains and Warriors, were in great perplexity and doubt among themſelves what to do, ſome thinking good to yield, ſome counſelling the contrary. Thus while the minds of the Citizens were diſtract in divers and doubtful Sentences, the Magiſtrates minding to ſtand to the Turks gentleneſs, ſent out one of their Heads unto the Turk, who in the name of them all ſhould ſurrender to him the City, and become unto him Tributaries, upon condition they might enjoy liberty of Life and Goods; which being to them granted, after the Turkiſh Faith and Aſſurance: firſt, the Souldiers which were left within the City, putting off their Armor, were diſcharged and ſent away: who being but only 300 left of four Enſigns of Italians, and of 1000 Germans, by the way were laid for by the Tartarians for hope of their ſpoil; ſo that they ſcattering aſunder one one way, and another another to ſave themſelves as well as they could, fled every one what way he thought beſt. Of whom, ſome wandring in Woods and Mariſhes fainted for Famine; ſome were taken and ſlain by the Hungarians; a few, with bare and empty withered Bodies, more like Ghoſts than Men, eſcaped and came to Vienna. And this befell upon the Souldiers.

Let never good Chriſtians ſtand to the Turks gentleneſs.

Now underſtand what hapned to the yielding Citizens. So in the Story it followeth, That when the Turk had entred the Town, and had viſited the Sepulchre of the Kings, for three or four days he pretended much Clemency toward the Citizens, as though he came not to oppreſs them, but to be revenged of Ferdinandus their King, and to deliver them from the ſervitude of the Germans. On the fourth day, all the Chief and Head men of the City were commanded to appear before the Turk, in a Plain not far from the City, where the condemned Perſons before were wont to be Executed, as though they ſhould come to ſwear unto the Turk. At this commandment of the Turk, when the Citizens in great number, and in their beſt Attire were aſſembled; the Turk, contrary to his Faith and Promiſe, commanded ſuddainly a general ſlaughter to be made of them all. And this was the end of the Citizens of Alba.

KING Hen. 7.

The cruelty of the Turks againſt the Chriſtians. What it is to yield to the Turk, & to trick to his promiſe. The Citizens of Alba deſtroyed of the Turks.

In the mean time, during the Siege of Alba, the Hungarians meeting ſometimes with the Horſemen of the Tartarians, which were ſent out to ſtop their Victuals from the City, ſlew of them at one bickering, three thouſand Turks. In which ſtory is alſo reported and mentioned of mine Author, an horrible ſight and example of Miſery, concerning a certain Captain (a Chriſtian belike) who coming unto Vienna, was found to have in his Scrip or Satchel the half of a young Child of two years old, which remained yet uneaten, the other half being eaten before, Anno 1543. Ibid.

Half of a young child found in the fatchel of a Captive coming from the Turk.

Next after this, was expugned the Caſtle of Pappa by the Turks. Let the Caſtle now of Pappa take heed, leſt one day it follow after.

The Caſtle of Pappa won by the Turks.

The like fidelity the Turks alſo kept with the Fort of Wizigradum, and the Souldiers thereof. This Wizigradum is ſituate in the mid-way between Buda and Strigonium. Of the which Fort or Caſtle, the higheſt Tower ſo mounteth upon the Hill, that unleſs it be for Famine or lack of Water, they have not to dread any Enemy. Notwithſtanding ſo it hapned, that the lower piece being won, they in the higher Tower abiding four days without drink, were compelled, with liberty granted of Life and Goods, to yield themſelves. But the Deviliſh Turks keeping no Faith nor Promiſe, ſlew them every one: only Petrus Amandus the Captain of the Place, excepted: who privily was conveyed by the Captain of the Turks out of the ſlaughter, Anno 1544.

Wizigradum got and forprized of the Turks. The falſe dealing and cruelty of the Turks againſt the Chriſtians.

To theſe moreover, may be added the winning of Novum Caſtellum in Dalmatia, where he ſlew all that were within, both Souldiers and other, for that they did not yield themſelves in time. Thus the Turk, whether they yielded to him or not, never ſpared the People and Flock of Chriſt.

Novum Caſtellum in Dalmatia won by the Turks.

As the falſe and cruel Turk was thus raging in Hungary, and intended further to rage without all mercy and pity of the Chriſtians, and might eaſily then have prevailed and gone whither he would, for that Charles the Emperor, and Franciſcus the French King, were at the ſame time in War and Hoſtility, and alſo other Chriſtian Princes; as Henry Duke of Brunſwick againſt John Frederick Duke of Saxony; alſo Princes and Rulers were contending among themſelves: Behold the gracious Providence of our Lord and God toward us, who, ſeeing the miſery, and having pity of his poor Chriſtians, ſuddenly as with a ſnaſle reined this raging Beaſt, and brought him out of Europe into his own Country again, by occaſion of the Perſians, who were then in great preparation of War againſt the Turks, and had invaded his Dominion. By reaſon whereof the Turks were kept there occupied, fighting with the Perſians a long continuance. Which Wars at length being atchieved and finiſhed (wherein the ſaid Turk loſt great Victories, with ſlaughter of many thouſands of his Turks) he was not only provoked by the inſtigation of certain evil diſpoſed Hungarians, but alſo occaſioned by the diſcord of Chriſtian Princes to return again into Europe, in hope to ſubdue all the parts thereof unto his Dominion. Whereunto when he had levied an Army incredible of ſuch a multitude of Turks, as the like hath not lightly been heard of, ſee again the merciful providence and protection of our God toward his People. As the Turk was thus intending to ſet forward with his innumerable multitude againſt the Chriſtians, the hand of the Lord ſent ſuch a Peſtilence through all the Turks Army and Dominions, reaching from Bythinia, and from Thracia to Macedonia, and alſo to Hungary, that all the Turks poſſeſſions ſeemed almoſt nothing elſe, but as an heap of dead Corſes, whereby his Voyage for that time was ſtopt, and he almoſt compelled to ſeek a new Army.

Beſides this Plague of the Turks aforeſaid, which was worſe to them than any War, other lets alſo and domeſtical Calamities, through Gods providence, hapned unto Solymanus, the great rover and robber of the world, which ſtayed him at home from vexing the Chriſtians, eſpecially touching his eldeſt Son Muſtapha.

This Muſtapha being hated, and partly feared of Ruſtanus the chief Councellor about the Turk, and of Roſa the Turks Concubine and after his Wife, was divers times complained of to his Father, accuſed, and at length ſo brought into ſuſpition and diſpleaſure of the Turks, by them aforeſaid, that in concluſion, his Father cauſed him to be ſent for to his Pavilion, where ſix Turks with Viſors were appointed to put him to death: who coming upon him, put (after their manner) a ſmall Cord or Bow-ſtring full of knots about his Neck, and ſo throwing him down upon the ground, not ſuffering him to ſpeak one word to his Father, with the ſame thereof throtled and ſtrangled him to death, his Father ſtanding in a ſecret corner by, and beholding the ſame. Which Fact being perpetrate, afterward when the Turk would have given to another Son of his and of Roſa, called Granger, the Treaſures, Horſe, Armor, Ornaments, and the Province of Muſtapha his Brother: Granger crying out for ſorrow of his Brothers death: Fy of thee, ſaith he to his Father, thou impious and wretched Dog, Traytor, Murtherer, I cannot call thee Father, take the Treaſures, the Horſe and Armor of Muſtapha to thy ſelf: and with that, taking out his Dagger, thruſt it thorow his own body. And thus was Solyman Murtherer and Parricide of his own Sons: which was the year of our Lord, 1552.

Solyman the Turk murdereth Muſtapha his own ſon.

Wherein notwithſtanding, is to be noted the ſingular providence and love of the Lord toward his afflicted Chriſtians. For this Muſtapha, as he was couragious and greatly expert and exerciſed in all practiſe of War, ſo had he a cruel heart, maliciouſly ſet to ſhed the Blood of Chriſtians: wherefore great cauſe have we to congratulate, and to give thanks to God for the happy taking away of this Muſtapha. And no leſs hope alſo and good comfort we may conceive of our loving Lord hereby miniſtred unto us, to think that our merciful God, after theſe ſore afflictions of his Chriſtians under theſe twelve Turks afore recited, now after this Solyman intendeth ſome gracious good work to Chriſtendom, to reduce and releaſe us out of this ſo long and miſerable Turkiſh captivity, as may be hoped now, by taking away theſe young Imps of this impious Generation, before they ſhould come to work their conceived malice againſt us: The Lord therefore be glorified and praiſed. Amen.

The loving providence of our Lord for his Chriſtians.

Good hope at Gods hand to be conceived of the Chriſtians.

Moreover, as I was in writing hereof, opportunely came to my hands a certain Writing out of Germany, certifying us of ſuch News and Victory of late atchieved againſt the Turk, as may not a little increaſe our hope and comfort us, touching the decay and ruine of the Turks power and tyranny againſt us. Which News are theſe: That after the Turkiſh Tyrant had beſieged, with an Army of 30000 Men, the famous and ſtrong Town and Caſtle of Jula in Hungary, lying forty Dutch miles beyond the river Danubius, which City had by the ſpace of ſix weeks ſuſtained many grievous aſſaults: God through his great Mercy and Goodneſs ſo comforted the ſaid Town of Jula, and the poor Chriſtians therein, at their earneſt Prayers, that the Turk, with all his Hoſt, was driven back by the hands of the General, called Karetſhim Laſlaw, and his valiant Company: who not only defended the ſaid Town, but alſo conſtrained the Turks to retire to their great ſhame and confuſion, with a great ſlaughter of the Turkiſh rabble; for the which, the everlaſting God be praiſed for ever.

Good newes of the Turks lately repulſed by the Chriſtians.

The manner of the overthrow was this. As the foreſaid General did ſee his Advantage, with Captain George, and other Horſe-men of the Silaſians and Hungarians, they ſet on the Rereward of the Turks and killed about eight thouſand of them, and took alſo ſome of their Artillery, and followed them ſo faſt, that the Turks were conſtrained to flye into a Mariſh Ground, and to break the wheels of the reſt of their Artillery to ſave themſelves, and therewith they got a very rich Booty, reſcuing beſides, and taking from the Turks, a great number of Chriſtian Priſoners. Like thanks are alſo to be given to God, for the proſperous ſucceſs given to Magotzchy the valiant Captain of Erla, who making toward the Turks and encountring with the Tartarians, ſlew of them about eight hundred.

8000 Turks ſlain.

Chriſtian captives reſcued and taken from the Turks. 800 Turks ſlain.

Not long after this it hapned, through the like providence of our God, a Turkiſh Captain called Begen, accompanied with a thouſand freſh Horſemen, came newly out of Turky, to go toward the City named Quinque Eccleſiæ, or Finffenkyrchen, with whom the Earl of Serin by the way did encounter, and in the night ſetting upon him, killed the Captain, and took eight Camels, and eight Mules laden with Treaſure, and alſo got two red Guidons, with a whole great piece of rich Cloth of Gold, and with another fair and ſtrange Jewel. The Horſe of this foreſaid Turkiſh Captain was betrapped and decked moſt richly. The Saddle whereof had the Pommel and back part covered over with Plate of fine Arabick Gold, and the reſt of the Saddle, beſide the ſitting place, was plated with Silver very fair gilded. The Seat of the Saddle was covered with purple Velvet; the Trappers and Bridle beſet with little Turkies and Rubies; which Horſe was ſent to Vienna unto the Emperor Maximilian for a Preſent.

Although the Earl would very fain have ſaved the Captain, not knowing what he was, yet the Janizarites laboring to carry away their Captain, ſo ſtifly defended themſelves, that the Earl with his Company, was conſtrained to kill both them and their Captain. From whom the ſaid Earl of Serin the ſame time got fifteen thouſand Turkiſh and Hungarian Ducates; which mony was brought for the payment of the Turkiſh Souldiers in the Town aforeſaid of Finffenkyrchen, &c. All which be good beginnings of greater Goodneſs to be hoped for hereafter, through the Grace of Chriſt our Lord, eſpecially if our Chriſtian Rulers and Potentates, firſt the Church-men and Prelates for their parts, then the Civil Powers and Princes for their parts, with-holding their affections a little, will turn their brawls and variance into brotherly concord and agreement; which the Lord of Peace put in their minds to do. Amen. Or otherwiſe, if it will ſo pleaſe the Lord that the Turk come further upon us, ſo as he hath begun for our puniſhment and caſtigation, his Grace then give to the Flock of his poor Chriſtians conſtancy of Faith, patience in Suffering, and amendment of Life. For ſo I underſtand by publick fame, although uncertainly rumored by the voice of ſome, that the Turks power of late, this preſent year of our Lord, 1566. hath pierced the parts of Apulia within Italy, waſting and burning the ſpace of an hundred miles toward Naples. Which if it be certain, it is to be feared, that the Turk having thus ſet in his foot, and feeling the ſweetneſs of Italy, will not ſo ceaſe before he get in both head and ſhoulders alſo ſo far into Italy, that he will diſplay his Banners within the Walls of Rome, and do with old Rome the like, as Mahumet his great Grandfather did with new Rome, the City of Conſtantinople, and as the Perſians did with Babylon.

The Turks piercing into Italy.

The cauſes why we have ſo to judge, be divers: firſt, That the See of Rome hath been defended hitherto and maintained with much Blood; and therefore it may ſeem not uncredible, but that it will not long continue, but be loſt with Blood again, according to the verdict of the Goſpel: He that ſtiketh with the Sword, ſhall periſh with the Sword, &c. Another cauſe is, the fulfilling of the eighteenth Chapter of the Apocalyps, where it is written, That great Babylon ſhall fall, and be made an habitation of Devils, and a Den of unclean Spirits, and a cage of filthy and unclean Birds: the fall whereof ſhall be like a mill-ſtone in the Sea, that is, which ſhall not riſe again. And this to come before the Day of Judgment, the Text of the ſaid Chapter doth apertly declare; where the words do follow, ſhewing, That the Kings of the Earth, and the Merchants which had to do with the whoriſh City, ſtanding afar off for fear of the heat, and beholding the ſmoke of the ſaid City flaming and burning with fire, ſhall bewail and rue her deſtruction and deſolation, &c. What City this is, called Great Babylon, which which like a Milſtone ſhall fall and burn, and be made an habitation of unclean Spirits and Beaſts; let the Reader conſtrue. This is certain and plain by theſe her Kings and Merchants ſtanding afar off for fear, and beholding her Burning, that the deſtruction of this City (what City ſoever it be) ſhall be ſeen here in Earth before the coming of the Lords judgment, as may eaſily be gathered by theſe three circumſtances, that is, by the ſtanding, the beholding and bewailing of her Merchants. By the which, Merchants and Kings of the Earth, peradventure may be ſignified the Pope, the rich Cardinals, the great Prelates and fat Doctors, and other Obediencies of the Romiſh See, who at the coming of the Turks, will not adventure their Lives for their Church, but will flye the City (no doubt) and ſtand afar off from danger; and when they ſhall ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears the City of Rome to be ſet on fire and conſumed by the cruel Turks, the ſight whereof ſhall ſeem to them pitious and lamentable, to behold the great and fair City of Rome, the tall Caſtle of Saint Angel, the Popes mighty See, (where they were wont to fiſh out ſuch Riches, Dignities, Treaſures and Pleaſure) ſo to burn before their Eyes, and to come to ſuch utter deſolation, which ſhall never be re-edified again, but ſhall be made an habitation of Devils and unclean Spirits, that is, of Turks and Heathen Sultans, and barbarous Saracens, &c. This (I ſay) peradventure may be the meaning of that Prophetical place of the Apocalyps; not that I have here any thing to pronounce, but only give my gueſs what may probably be conjectured. But the end at length will make this and all other things more plain and manifeſt. For myſtical Prophecies lightly are never ſo well underſtood, as when the event of them is paſt and accompliſhed.

The Prophecie of the 18 chapter of the Apocalips expounded.

Another cauſe, concurring with the cauſes aforeſaid, may be collected out of Paulus Jovius, who writing of the ſubverſion of Rhodes, which was as ye heard. Anno 1522. upon Chriſtmas day, ſaith, That it chanced ſuddenly the ſame day in Rome, that as Pope Hadrian the ſixth, was entring into the Church to his Service, ſuddenly over his head the upper frontier or top of the Chappel fell, which was of Marble, immediately as the Pope was entring, fell down, and ſlew certain of his Guard waiting upon him. Whereby peradventure may be meant, that the ruine of Rome was not long after to follow the loſs of Rhodes.

The third cauſe. Ex Paulo Jovio.

The fourth cauſe I borrow out of Joannes Aventinus, who in his third Book alleaging the names, but not the words of Hildegardis, Brigit, and other Prophetical Men, hath theſe words; Si vera ſunt carmina & vaticinia, D. Hildegardæ, & Brigittæ, Sybillarum Germaniæ, & Bardorum fatidicorum, qui ea quæ noſtro ævo completa vidimus longo ante tempore nobis cecinerunt; Agrippinenſis Colonia, nolimus velimus, Turcarum caput erit, &c. that is, If the Sayings and Prophecies of Hildegard, of Brigit, and of other Prophetical Perſons be true, which being foretold long before, we have ſeen now in theſe our days accompliſhed; the Town of Colen, will-we nill-we, muſt needs be the head City of the Turk, &c.

The fourth cauſe.

Ex Joan. Aventino Annal. lib. 3. fol. 30. A Prophecie.

And this I writ, not as one pronouncing againſt the City of Rome what will happen, but as one fearing what may fall. Which if it come to paſs (as I pray God it do not) then ſhall the Pope well underſtand, whether his wrong underſtanding of the Scriptures, and his falſe flattering Glofers upon the ſame, have brought him.

Wherefore my counſel is to the Pope, and all his Popiſh maintainers and upholders, to humble themſelves, and to agree with their Brethren betime, letting all contention fall; leſt that while the Biſhop of Rome ſhall ſtrive to be the higheſt of all other Biſhops, it ſo fall out ſhortly, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhall be found the loweſt of all other Biſhops, or peradventure no Biſhop at all.

A Caveat to the Biſhop of Rome, if he be wiſe.

Whereunto alſo another cauſe may be added, taken out of Jeronymus Savanarola, who Propheſieth, that one ſhall come over the Alpes like unto Cyrus, and deſtroy Italy. Whereof ſee more before.

Ex Paulo Jovio.

This Solymannus, if he be yet alive, hath now raigned forty ſix years, who began the ſame year in the which the Emperor Charles the fifth was Crowned, which was, Anno 1520. and ſo hath continued by Gods permiſſion, for a ſcourge to the Chriſtians, unto this year now preſent, 1556. This Solyman, by one of his Concubines, called Roſa, he had four Sons, Mahumet, Bajazetes, Zelymus, and Gianger. Of the which Sons, Muſtapha and Gianger were ſlain (as ye heard before) by the means of their own Father. And thus much concerning the wretched Tyranny of the Turks, out of the Authors hereunder written.

¶ A notice touching the miſerable Perſecution, Slaughter and Captivity of the Chriſtians under the Turks.

Perſecution under the Turks.

HItherto thou haſt heard (Chriſtian Reader) the lamentable Perſecutions of theſe later days, wrought by the Turks againſt the People and Servants of Chriſt. In the reading whereof, ſuch as ſit quietly at home, and be far from jeopardy, may ſee what miſery there is abroad; the knowledge and reading whereof ſhall not be unprofitable for all Chriſtians earneſtly to weigh and conſider, for that many there be, which falſly deceiving themſelves, imagine that Chriſtianity is a quiet and reſtful ſtate of Life, full of pleaſure and ſolace in this preſent World, when indeed it is nothing leſs teſtified by the mouth of our Saviour himſelf, who rightly defining his Kingdom, teacheth us, That his Kingdom is not of this World, premoniſhing us alſo before, That in this World we muſt look for affliction, but in him we ſhall have peace. Examples hereof in all parts of this Hiſtory through all Ages, are plenteous and evident to be ſeen, whether we turn our Eyes to the firſt Ten Perſecutions in the Primitive Church, during the firſt three hundred years after Chriſt: or whether we conſider the later three hundred years in this laſt Age of the Church, wherein the poor Flock of Chriſt hath been ſo afflicted, oppreſſed and devoured, that it is hard to ſay, whether have been more cruel againſt the Chriſtians, the Infidel Emperors of Rome in the Primitive Age of the Church, or elſe theſe barbarous Turks in theſe our later times of the Church now preſent.

Compariſon between the perſecutions of the Primitive Church and of the later Church.

Thus from time to time the Church of Chriſt almoſt hath had little or no reſt in this Earth; what for the Heathen Emperors on the one ſide; what for the proud Pope on the other ſide; on the third ſide, what for the barbarous Turk: for theſe are and have been from the beginning, the three principal and capital Enemies of the Church of Chriſt, ſignified in the Apocalyps, by the Beaſt, the falſe Lamb, and the falſe Prophet, from whom went out three foul Spirits like Frogs, to gather together all the Kings of the Earth to the Battle of the day of the Lord God Almighty, Apoc. 16. The cruelty and malice of theſe Enemies againſt Chriſts People hath been ſuch, that to judge which of them did moſt exceed in Cruelty of Perſecution, it is hard to ſay; but that it may be thought that the bloody and beaſtly Tyranny of the Turks, eſpecially above the reſt, incomparably ſurmounteth all the afflictions and cruel ſlaughters that ever were ſeen in any Age, or read of in any ſtory. Inſomuch, that there is neither Hiſtory ſo perfect, nor Writer ſo diligent, who writing of the miſerable Tyranny of the Turks, is able to expreſs or comprehend the horrible Examples of their unſpeakable cruelty and ſlaughter, exerciſed by theſe twelve

Three ſpecial enemies of Chriſts Church.

Apoc. 16. The cruelty of the furious Turks deſcribed.

Turkiſh

KING Hen. 7. Turkiſh Tyrants upon poor Chriſtian mens bodies, within the compaſs of theſe later Three hundred years. Whereof although no ſufficient relation can be made, nor number expreſſed; yet to give to the Reader ſome general gueſs or view thereof; let us firſt perpend and conſider what Dominions and Empires, how many Countries, Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, ſtrong Holds, and Forts, theſe Turks have ſurprized and won from the Chriſtians. In all which Victories, being ſo many, this is ſecondly to be noted, That there is almoſt no place which the Turks ever came to and ſubdued, where they did not either ſlay all the Inhabitants thereof, or led away the moſt part thereof into ſuch Captivity and Slavery, that they continued not long after alive, or elſe ſo lived, that Death almoſt had been to them more tolerable.

Two things to be noted in the Turks, how many victories they have got, and how cruelly they have uſed their victories.

Like as in the time of the firſt Perſecutions of the Roman Emperors, the Saying was, That no man could ſtep with his feet in all Rome, but ſhould tread upon a Martyr: ſo here may be ſaid, That almoſt there is not a Town, City or Village in all Aſia, Grecia, alſo in a great part of Europa and Africa, whoſe Streets have not flowed with the Blood of the Chriſtians, whom the cruel Turks have murdered. Of whom are to be ſeen in Hiſtories, heaps of Souldiers ſlain, of Men and Women cut in pieces, of Children ſticked upon Poles and Stakes, whom theſe deteſtable Turks moſt ſpitefully (and that in the ſight of their Parents) uſe to gore to death: ſome they drag at their Horſe tails, and famiſh to death; ſome they tear in pieces, tying their Arms and Legs to four Horſes; otherſome they make Marks to ſhoot at; upon ſome they try their Swords how deep they can cut and ſlaſh, as before ye have read. The aged and feeble they tread under their Horſes: Women with Child they ſpare not, but rip their Bodies, and caſt the Infants into the Fire, or otherwiſe deſtroy them. Whether the Chriſtians yield to them, or yield not, all is a matter. As in their promiſes their is no truth, ſo in their Victories there is no ſenſe of Manhood or Mercy in them, but they make havock of all.

Ex Marino Barletio de Scod. expugnat. lib. 2.

So the Citizens of Croja, after they had yielded and were all promiſed their Lives, were all deſtroyed, and that horribly. In Myſia, after the King had given himſelf to the Turks hand, having promiſe of life, Mahumet the Turk ſlew him with his own hands. The Princes of Raſia had both their Eyes put out, with Baſons red hot ſet before them. Theodoſia, otherwiſe called Capha, was alſo ſurrendred to the Turk, having the like aſſurance of life and ſafety; and yet contrary to the League, the Citizens were put to the Sword and ſlain. At the winning and yielding of Lesbos, what a number of young Men and Children were put upon ſharp ſtakes and poles, and ſo thruſt thorow? At the winning of the City of Buda, what tyranny was ſhewed and exerciſed againſt the poor Chriſtians which had yielded themſelves, and againſt the two Dukes, Chriſtopher Biſſerer, and Joannes Tranbinger, contrary to the promiſe and hand-writing of the Turk, is to be ſeen in the Story of Melchior Soiterus, De bello Pannonico.

Ex Michael. Soiter lib. 1. de bell. Pannonico. fol. 515.

The like alſo is to be read in the Story of Bernardus de Breydenbach, who writing of the taking of Hydruntum, a City in Apulia, teſtifieth of the miſerable ſlaughter of the young Men there ſlain, of old Men troden under the Horſe feet, of Matrons and Virgins raviſhed, of Women with child cut and rent in pieces, of the Prieſts in the Churches ſlain, and of the Arch-Biſhop of that City, who being an aged Man, and holding the Croſs in his hands, was cut aſunder with a wooden Saw, &c. The ſame Bernardus, alſo writing of the overthrow of Negropontus otherwiſe called Chalcides, Anno 1471. deſcribeth the like terrible ſlaughter which there was exerciſed, where the Turk, after his promiſe given before to the contrary, moſt cruelly cauſed all the Youth of Italy to be pricked upon ſharp ſtakes; ſome to be daſhed againſt the hard ſtones, otherſome to be cut in ſunder in the midſt, and otherſome with other kinds of Torments to be put to death: ſo much, that all the ſtreets and ways of Chalcides, did ſtink with the Blood of them which were there ſlain. In which Hiſtory the foreſaid Writer recordeth one memorable example of Maidenly chaſtity, worthy of all Chriſtians to be noted and commended. The Story is told of the Pretors Daughter of that City, who being the only Daughter of her Father, and noted to be of an exceeding ſingular Beauty, was ſaved out of the ſlaughter, and brought to Mahumet the Turk to be his Concubine. But ſhe denying to conſent to his Turkiſh appetite and filthineſs, was commanded therewith to be ſlain and murdered, and ſo dyed ſhe a Martyr, keeping both her Faith and her Body undefiled unto Chriſt her Spouſe. Ibid.

Ex Bernardo de Breydenbach. Decan. Eccl. Magunt.

The ſuperſtitious uſe of the material croſs.

Vide ſupra. Ex Bernard. Breydenb.

A notable example of maidenly chaſtity.

The like cruelty alſo was ſhewed upon them which kept the Caſtle, and afterward yielding themſelves upon hope of the Turks promiſe, were ſlain every one. What ſhould I ſpeak of the miſerable ſlaughter of Methone, and the Citizens thereof dwelling in Peloponneſus? who, ſeeing no other remedy but needs to come into the Turks hands, ſet the Barn on fire where they were gathered together, Men, Women and Children; ſome Women alſo with child, voluntarily caſt themſelves into the Sea, rather then they would ſuſtain the Turks captivity.

Vide ſupra. The miſerable ſpilling of Chriſtian mens blood by the wretched Turks.

Miſerable it is to behold, long to recite, incredible to believe, all the cruel parts and horrible ſlaughters wrought by theſe miſcreants againſt the Chriſtians through all places almoſt of the World, both in Aſia, in Africa, but eſpecially in Europe. Who is able to recite the innumerable Societies and Companies of the Grecians Martyr'd by the Turks Sword, in Achaia, Attica, Theſſalia, Macedonia, Epyrus, and all Peloponneſus? beſides the Iſland of Rhodes, and other Iſlands and Cyclades adjacent in the Sea about, numbred to two and fifty; of the which alſo Pathmos was one, where Saint John being baniſhed, wrote his Revelations. Where did ever the Turks ſet any Foot, but the Blood of Chriſtians there, without pity or meaſure, went to wrack? and what Place or Province is there almoſt through the World, where the Turks either have not pierced, or are not likely ſhortly to enter? In Thracia, and through all the Coaſts of Danubius, in Bulgaria, Dalmatia, in Servia, Tranſilvania, Boſna in Hungaria, alſo in Auſtria, what havock hath been made by them of Chriſtian mens Bodies, it will rue any Chriſtian heart to remember. At the Siege of Moldavia, at the winning of Buda, of Peſta, of Alba, of Walpo, Strigonium, Soclosia, Tathe, Wizigradum, Novum Caſtellum in Dalmatia, Belgradum, Varadinum, Quinque Eccleſia: alſo at the Battel of Verna, where Ladiſlaus King of Polony, with all his Army almoſt, through the raſhneſs of the Popes Cardinal, were ſlain: At the winning moreover of Xabiacchus, Lyſſus, Dynaſtrum: At the Siege of Gunza, and of the faithful Town Scorad, where the number of the Shot againſt their Walls, at the Siege thereof, were reckoned to Two thouſand five hundred thirty nine. Likewiſe at the Siege of Vienna, where all the Chriſtian Captives were brought before the whole Army and ſlain, and divers drawn in pieces with Horſes: but eſpecially at the winning of Conſtantinople, above mentioned; alſo at Croja and Methone, what beaſtly cruelty was ſhewed, it is unſpeakable. For as in Conſtantinople, Mahumet the drunken Turk, never roſe from Dinner, but he cauſed every day, for his diſport, Three hundred Chriſtian Captives of the Nobles of that City to be ſlain before his face: ſo in Methone, after that his Captain Omares had ſent unto him at Conſtantinople, five hundred Priſoners of the Chriſtians, the cruel Tyrant commanded them all to be cut and divided in ſunder by the middle, and ſo being ſlain, to be thrown out into the Fields.

A brief recital of Chriſtian Towns and Forts won of the Turk in Europe.

The cruelty of the Turk againſt the Citizens of Conſtantinople. Vide ſupra.

The cruelty of the Turk againſt the Priſoners of Methone. Ex Leonico Chalcondyla de rebus Turcicis. lib. 10.

Leonicus Chalcondyla writing of the ſame Story, addeth moreover, a prodigious Narration (if it be true) of a brute Ox, which being in the Fields, and ſeeing the Carcaſes of the dead Bodies ſo cut in two, made there a loud noiſe after the lowing of his kind and nature: and afterwards coming to the Quarters of one of the dead Bodies lying in the Field, firſt took up the one half, and then coming again, took up likewiſe the other half, and ſo (as he could) joyned them both together. Which being eſpied of them which ſaw the doing of the brute Ox, and marvelling thereat, and word being brought thereof to Mahumet, he commanded the Quarters again to be brought where they were before, to prove whether the Beaſt will come again, who failed not (as the Author recordeth) recordeth) but in like ſort as before, taking the fragments of the dead Corps, laid them again together. It followeth more in the Author, how that Mahumet, being aſtonied at the ſtrange wonder of the Ox, commanded the Quarters of the Chriſtian Mans body to be interred, and the Ox to be brought to his Houſe, and much made of. Some ſaid it to be the body of a Vehetian; ſome affirmed, that he was an Illyrian: but whatſoever he was, certain it is, That the Turk himſelf was much more Beſtial than was the brute Ox; which being a Beaſt, ſhewed more ſenſe of humanity to a dead man, than one man did to another. Ex Leonic. Chalcondyla.

A ſtrange and prodigious wonder of a brute Beaſt toward a dead Chriſtian Body.

The Biſhop, with the Citizens of Methone ſlain of the Turk.

To this Cruelty add moreover, That beſide theſe five hundred Methonians thus deſtroyed at Conſtantinople, in the ſaid City of Methone, all the Towns-men alſo were ſlain by the foreſaid Captain Omares, and among them their Biſhop likewiſe was put to death. Ex Andr. de Lacuna, & ex Wolfg. & aliis.

Ex Andrea de Lacuna, & aliis. Ex Joanne Fabro, in oratione ad regem Hen. 8.

John Faber, in his Oration made before King Henry the Eighth, at the appointment of King Ferdinandus, and declaring therein the miſerable Cruelty of the Turks toward all Chriſtians, as alſo toward the Biſhops and Miniſters of the Church, teſtifieth, how that in Mitylene, in Conſtantinople, and Trapezunda, what Biſhops and Arch-biſhops, or other Eccleſiaſtical and Religious Perſons the Turks could find, they brought them out of the City into the Fields, there to be ſlain like Oxen and Calves. The ſame Faber alſo writing of the Battel of Solyman in Hungary, where Ludovicus the King of Hungary was overthrown, declareth, That eight Biſhops in the ſame Field were ſlain. And moreover, when the Arch-biſhop of Strigon, and Paulus the Arch-biſhop of Coloſſenſis were found dead, Solyman cauſed them to be taken up, and to be Behcaded and chopt in ſmall pieces. Anno 1526.

The cruelty of the Turk in Euboea.

What Chriſtian heart will not pity the incredible ſlaughter done by the Turks in Euboia, where the ſaid Faber teſtifieth, That innumerable people were ſticked and gored upon ſtakes, divers were thruſt thorow with a hot Iron, Children and Infants not yet weaned from the Mother, were dalhed againſt the ſtones, and many cut aſunder in the midſt? Ex Joban. Fabro, & aliis.

The Prince of Servia ſlain, and ſlain of the Turk.

But never did Country taſte and feel more the bitter and deadly Tyranny of the Turks, than did Raſia, called Myſia Inferior, and now Servia. Where (as writeth Wolfgangus Drechſterus) the Prince of the ſame Country being ſent for, under fair pretence of words and promiſes, to come and ſpeak with the Turk, after he was come of his own Gentleneſs, thinking no harm, was Apprehended, and wretchedly and fally put to Death, and his Skin ſlain off, his Brother and Siſter brought to Conſtantinople for a Triumph, and all the Nobles of his Country (as Faber addeth) had their Eyes put out, &c.

Let never Chriſtian Prince truſt the Turk.

The Turke ſtirred up of the Devil, to fight againſt Chriſt. The Turke are butchers of the Chriſtians.

Briefly to conclude, by the vehement and furious rage of theſe curſed Caitiffs, it may ſeem that Satan the Old Dragon, for the great hatred he beareth to Chriſt, hath ſtirred them up to be the Butchers of all Chriſtian People, inflaming their beaſtly hearts with ſuch malice and cruelty againſt the Name and Religion of Chriſt, that they degenerating from the nature of Men to Devils, neither by reaſon will be ruled, nor by any blood or ſlaughter ſatisfied. Like as in the Primitive Age of the Church, and in the time of Dioclesian and Maximilian, when the Devil ſaw that he could not prevail againſt the Perſon of Chriſt which was riſen again, he turned all his fury upon his ſilly ſervants, thinking by the Roman Emperors utterly to extinguiſh the Name and Profeſſion of Chriſt out from the Earth: So in this later Age of the World, Satan being let looſe again, rageth by the Turks, thinking to make no end of murthering and killing, till he have brought (as he intendeth) the whole Church of Chriſt, with all the Profeſſors thereof, under foot. But the Lord (I truſt) will once ſend a Conſtantinus to vanquiſh proud Maxentius, Moſes to drown indurate Pharaoh, Cyrus to ſubdue the ſtout Babylonian.

The miſerable ſtate of the Chriſtian captives under the Turk.

And thus much hitherto touching our Chriſtian Brethren which were ſlain & deſtroyed by theſe blaſphemous Turks. Now for ſo much as beſides theſe aforeſaid, many other were pluckt away violently from their Country, from their wives and children, from liberty, and from all their poſſeſſions, into wretched captivity and extreme penury, it remaineth likewiſe to intreat ſomewhat alſo concerning the cruel manner of the Turks handling of the ſaid Chriſtian Captives. And firſt here is to be noted, that the Turk never cometh into Europe to war againſt the Chriſtians, but there followeth after his Army a great number of brokers or merchants, ſuch as buy men and children to ſell again, bringing with them long chains in hope of great cheats. In the which chains they link them by fifty and ſixty together, ſuch as remain undeſtroyed with the ſword, whom they buy of the ſpoils of them that rob and ſpoil the Chriſtian Countries; which is lawful for any of the Turks Army to do, ſo that the tenth of their ſpoil or prey (whatſoever it be) be reſerved to the head Turk, that is, to the great maſter Thief.

KING Hen. 7.

The buying and ſelling of Chriſtian captives under the Turks.

Of ſuch as remain for tithe, if they be aged (of whom very few be reſerved alive, becauſe little profit cometh of that age) they be ſold to the uſe of husbandry or keeping of beaſts. If they be young men or women, they be ſent to certain places, there to be inſtructed in their Language and Arts, as ſhall be moſt profitable for their advantage, and ſuch are called in their Tongue, Sarai: and the firſt care of the Turks is there to make them deny the Chriſtian Religion, and to be Circumciſed; and after that they are appointed, every one as he ſeemeth moſt apt, either to the learning of their Laws, or elſe to learn the feats of War. Their firſt rudiment of War is to handle the Bow; firſt beginning with a weak Bow, and ſo as they grow in ſtrength coming to a ſtronger Bow, and if they miſs the Mark, they are ſharply beaten; and their allowance is two pence or three pence a day, till they come and take wages to ſerve in War. Some are brought up for the purpoſe to be placed in the number of the wicked Janizarites, that is, the Order of the Turks champions, which is the moſt abominable condition of all other. Of theſe Janizarites, ſee before. And if any of the foreſaid young men or children ſhall appear to excel in any Beauty, him they ſo cut, that no part of that which Nature giveth to man, remaineth to be ſeen in all his body; whereby while the freſhneſs of age continueth, he is compelled to ſerve their abominable abomination; and when age cometh, then they ſerve inſtead of Eunuchs to wait upon Matrons, or to keep Horſes and Mules, or elſe to be ſcullions and drudges in their kitchins.

Chriſtian captives ſithed of the Turks.

O wickedneſs paſſing all miſery.

O miſery above all miſeries!

Such as are young Maidens and beautiful, are deputed for concubines. They which be of mean beauty, ſerve for Matrons to their drudgery work in their houſes and chambers, or elſe are put to ſpinning, and ſuch other labors; but ſo, that it is not lawful for them either to profeſs their Chriſtian Religion, or ever to hope for any liberty. And thus much of them wch fall to the Turk by tithe.

The ſervitude of young women captives.

The other which are bought and ſold amongſt private ſubjects, firſt are allured with fair words and promiſes to take Circumciſion: which if they will do, they are more favorably intreated; but all hope is taken from them of returning again into their Country, which if they attempt, the pain thereof is burning. And if ſuch coming at length to liberty, will marry, they may; but then their Children remain bond to the Lord, for him to ſell at his pleaſure; and therefore ſuch as are wiſe amongſt them will not marry. They which refuſe to be Circumciſed, are miſerably handled; for example whereof, the Author (which giveth teſtimony hereof) doth infer his own experience. Such Captives as be expert in any manual Art or Occupation, can better ſhift for themſelves; but contrariwiſe, they which have no Handicraft to live upon, are in worſe caſe. And therefore ſuch as have been brought up in Learning, or be Prieſts or Noble-men, and ſuch other whoſe tender Education can abide no hardneſs, are the leaſt reputed, and moſt of all other neglected of him that hath the ſale or keeping of them, for that he ſeeth leſs profit to riſe of them than of the other; and therefore no coſt of rayment is beſtowed upon them, but they are carried about bare-head and barefoot, both Summer and Winter in froſt and ſnow. And if any faint and be ſick in the way, there is no reſting for him in any Inn, but firſt he is driven forward with Whips, and if that will not ſerve, he is ſet peradventure upon ſome Horſe; or if his weakneſs be ſuch that he cannot ſit, then is he laid overthwart the Horſe upon his belly like a Calf; and if he chance to dye, they take off his garment, ſuch as he hath, and throw him in a ditch.

Ex Bartholo. Georgievitz. Peregrina lib. de affli. ctione Chriſtianorum ſub Turca.

In

{KING *Hen.*7.} In the way moreover, beſide the common Chain which doth incloſe them all, the hands alſo of every one are manacled, which is, becauſe they ſhould not harm their Leaders; for many times it hapned, that ten perſons had the leading of fifty Captives; and when night came their feet alſo were fettered, ſo that they lodged in no Houſe, but lay upon the ground all night.

The miſerable calamity of Chriſtian Women being in captivity under the Turks.

The young Women had a little more gentleneſs ſhewed, being carried in Paniers in the day time. But when night came, pity it was to hear the miſerable crying out of ſuch as were incloſed within, by reaſon of the filthy injuries which they ſuffered by their Carriers, inſomuch that the young tender age of ſeven or eight years, as well of the one Sex as of the other, could not ſave them from the moſt filthy villany of the Beſtial Turks.

The manner of Chriſtian Captives how they are brought to Markets and ſold.

When the Morning cometh, they are brought forth to the Market to to ſale, where the Buyer, if he be diſpoſed, plucking off their Garments, vieweth all the Bones and Joynts of their Body; and if he like them he giveth his price, and carrieth them away into miſerable ſervitude, either to tilling of their Ground, or to paſture their Cattle, or to ſome other ſtrange kind of Miſery incredible to ſpeak of: Inſomuch that the Author reporteth, that he hath ſeen himſelf, certain of ſuch Chriſtian Captives yoked together like Horſe and Oxen, and to draw the Plough. The Maid-ſervants likewiſe are kept in perpetual toil and work in cloſe places, where neither they come in ſight of any Man, neigher be they permitted to have any talk with their fellow-ſervants, &c. Such as are committed to keep Beaſts, lie abroad day and night in the wild Fields, without houſe and harbor, and ſo changing their Paſture go from Mountain to Mountain; of whom alſo, beſide the Office of keeping the Beaſts, other handy-labor is exacted at ſpare hours, ſuch as pleaſeth their Maſters to put unto them.

Chriſtians in their Captivity, out to draw in the Plough like Horſes.

The great danger of Chriſtian Captives which fly out of Turkie.

Out of this miſery there is no way for them to flye, eſpecially for them that are carried into Aſia beyond the Seas; or if any do attempt ſo to do, he taketh his time chiefly about Harveſt, when he may hide himſelf all the day-time in the Corn, or in Woods or Mariſhes, and find Food; and in the Night only he flyeth, and had rather be devoured of Wolves and other wild Beaſts, than to return again to his Maſter. In their flying they uſe to take with them an Hatchet and Coards, that when they come to the Sea ſide, they may cut down Trees, and bind together the ends of them, and ſo where the Sea of Helleſpontus is narroweſt, about the Seſtos and Abidos, they take the Sea, ſitting upon Trees, where, if the wind and tide do ſerve luckily, they may cut over in four or five hours. But the moſt part either periſh in the Floods, or are driven back again upon the Coaſts of Aſia, or elſe be devoured of wild Beaſts in Woods, or periſh with Hunger and Famine. If any eſcape over the Sea alive into Europe, by the way they enter into no Town, but wander upon the Mountains, following only the North-Star for their guide.

The manner and ſhift of our men in getting over the Sea.

The manifold dangers by the way in flying.

The miſery of Chriſtian Cities and Provinces which live under the Turks tribute.

As touching ſuch Towns and Provinces which are won by the Turk, and wherein the Chriſtians are ſuffered to live under tribute: Firſt, All the Nobility there they kill and make away, the Church-men and Clergy hardly they ſpare. The Churches, with the Bells and all the Furniture thereof, either they caſt down, or elſe they convert to the uſe of their own blaſphemous Religion, leaving to the Chriſtians certain old and blind Chappels, which when they decay, it is permitted, to our men to repair them again for a great ſum of Mony given to the Turk. Neither be they permitted to uſe any open Preaching or Miniſtration, but only in ſilence and by ſtealth to frequent together. Neither is it lawful for any Chriſtian to bear Office within the City or Province, nor to bear Weapon; nor to wear any Garment like to the Turks. And if any contumely or blaſphemy, be it never ſo great, be ſpoken againſt them, or againſt Chriſt, yet muſt thou bear it, and hold thy peace. Or if thou ſpeak one word againſt their Religion, thou ſhalt be compelled (whether thou wilt or no) to be circumciſed: And then if thou ſpeak one word againſt Mahumet, thy puniſhment is Fire and Burning. And if it chance a Chriſtian being on Horſe-back to meet, or paſs by a Muſulman, that is, a Turkiſh Prieſt, he muſt light from his Horſe, and with a lowly look devoutly reverence and adore the Muſulman; or if he do not, he is beaten down from his Horſe with clubs and ſtaves.

If Chriſtians may not go like Turks, why ſhould our Goſpellers go like Papiſts? The Turks have their fire and faggots as well as our Papiſts. The Chriſtians muſt light from their Horſes meeting a Turkiſh Prieſt, and adore him.

Furthermore, for their Tribute they pay the fourth part of their ſubſtance and gain to the Turk; beſide the ordinary Tribute of the Chriſtians, which is to pay for every Poll within his Family a Ducket unto the Turk; which if the Parents cannot do, they are compelled to ſell their Children into bondage. Other being not able to pay, go chained in Fetters from door to door begging, to make up their payment, or elſe muſt lye in perpetual Priſon.

Another miſery moſt lamentable in taking away Chriſtian mens children from their Parents, to ſerve the Turk.

And yet notwithſtanding, when the Chriſtians have diſcharged all duties, it remaineth free for the Turks, to take up among the Chriſtians children whom they beſt like, and them to Circumciſe, and to take them away being young from the ſight of their Parents to far places, to be brought up for the Turks Wars, ſo that they may not return to them again; but firſt are taught to forget Chriſt, and then their Parents; ſo that if they come again amongſt them, yet are they not able to know their kinsfolks and parents.

O miſery.

This miſery paſſing all other miſeries, no Man is able with Tongue to utter, or with words to expreſs. What weeping and tears, with ſorrow and lamentation; what groaning, ſighs, and deep dolour, doth fear and rent aſunder the woful hearts of the ſilly Parents at the plucking away of their Babes and Children? To ſee their Sons and their own Children, whom they have born and bred up to the ſervice of Chriſt Jeſus the Son of God, now to be drawn away violently from them to the warfare of Satan, and to fight againſt Chriſt? to ſee their Babes born of Chriſtian blood, of Chriſtians to be made Turks, and ſo to be pluckt out of their arms, and out of their ſight, without hope ever to return to them again? to live perpetually with aliens, barbarous and blaſphemous Turks, and ſo to become of the number of them which are called fatherleſs and motherleſs?

This is with tears rather than with words to be expreſſed.

Privy Goſpellers in Turky.

Albeit the ſame Children afterward do greatly degenerate from the Faith of Chriſt, yet very many of them have privily about them the Goſpel written of St. John, In principio erat verbum, &c. Which for a token or remembrance of their Chriſtian Faith they carry under their Arm-hole, written in Greek and Arabick, who greatly deſire, and long look for the revenging Sword of the Chriſtians to come and deliver them out of their dolourous thraldom and captivity, according as the Turks themſelves have a Propheſie, and greatly ſtand in fear of the ſame. Whereof more ſhall be ſaid (Chriſt willing) in the Chapter following.

An old Propheſie of the Turks, touching the Sword of the Chriſtians.

¶ And thus have ye heard the lamentable afflictions of our Chriſtian Brethren under the cruel Tyranny and Captivity of the Turks, paſſing all other Captivities that ever have been to Gods people, either under Pharaoh in Egypt, or under Nebuchadonozer in Babylon, or under Antiochus in the time of the Macchabees. Under the which Captivity, if it ſo pleaſe the Lord to have his Spouſe the Church to be nurtured, his good will be done and obeyed. But if this Miſery come by the negligence and diſcord of our Chriſtian Guides and Leaders, then have we to pray and cry to our Lord God, either to give better hearts to our Guiders and Rulers, or elſe better Guides and Rulers to his Flock.

Neceſſary for many cauſes that the troubles of the Church be known.

And theſe Troubles and Afflictions of our Chriſtian Brethren ſuffered by the Turks, I thought good and profitable for our Country People here of England to know, for ſo much as by the ignorance of theſe, and ſuch like Hiſtories worthy of conſideration, I ſee much inconvenience doth follow. Whereby it cometh to paſs, that becauſe we Engliſhmen being far off from theſe Countries, and little knowing what miſery is abroad, are the leſs moved with zeal and compaſſion to tender their Grievances, and to pray for them whoſe Troubles we know not. Whereupon alſo it followeth, that we not conſidering the miſerable ſtate of other, are the leſs grateful to God, when any Tranquillity by him to us is granted. And if any little Cloud of perturbation ariſe upon us, be it never ſo little, as poverty, loſs of living, or a little baniſhment out of our Country for the Lords Cauſe, we make a great matter thereof, and all becauſe we go no further than our own Country, and only feeling our own croſs, do not compare that which we feel with the the great croſſes whereunto the Churches of Chriſt commonly in other places abroad are ſubject. Which if we did rightly underſtand, and earneſtly conſider, and ponder in our minds, neither would we ſo exceſſively forget our ſelves in time of our proſperity given us of God, nor yet ſo impatiently be troubled, as we are in time of our Adverſity, and all becauſe either we hear not, or elſe we ponder not the terrible croſſes which the Lord layeth upon our other Brethren abroad in other Nations, as by this preſent ſtory here prefixed may appear.

KING Mar. 7.

NOw conſequently remaineth, as I have ſhewed hitherto what Tyranny hath been uſed of the Turks againſt Chriſts People, ſo to declare likewiſe how far this Tyranny of the Turks hath extended and ſpread it ſelf, deſcribing as in a Table, to the Chriſtian Reader, what Lands, Countries and Kingdoms the Turks have won and got from Chriſtiandom; to the intent, that when Chriſtian Princes ſhall behold the greatneſs of the Turks Dominions ſpread almoſt thorow all the World, and how little a part of Chriſtianity remaineth behind, they may thereby underſtand the better how it is time now for them to beſtir them, if ever they think to do any good in Gods Church. And therefore to make a compendious Draught, as in a brief Table, of ſuch Countries, Kingdoms and Dominions, got from us by the Turks: We will firſt begin with Aſia, deſcribing what Tracts, Countries, Cities and Churches the Turk hath ſurprized, and violently pluckt away from the Society of Chriſtian Dominions, taking only ſuch as be moſt principal, and chiefly them that be in Scripture contained, for that it were too long to Diſcourſe all and ſingular ſuch Places by name, as the Turk hath under his ſubjection.

The largeneſs of the Turks Dominions declared.

The World being divided commonly into three parts, Aſia, Africa, and Europa; Aſia is counted to be the greateſt in compaſs, containing as much as both the other, and is divided into two Portions, the one called Aſia Major; the other called Aſia Minor. And although the Empire of the Turk extendeth unto them both; yet eſpecially his Dominion ſtandeth in the other Aſia, which is called Aſia Minor, which reacheth from the Coaſts of Europa unto Armenia Major, beyond the River Euphrates, and comprehendeth theſe Regions and Cities following.

Islands belonging to Asia minor.

¶ Æneas Sylvius, otherwise Pope Pius the Second, in describing Asia Minor, chap. 74. reciteth a certain Fact of a worthy Virgin; who at what time the Turks were besieging a certain Town in Lesbos, and had cast down a great part of the Walls, so that all the Townsmen had given over, putting on mans Harnes, stepped forth into the Breach, where not only she kept the Turks from entring in, but also slew of them a great sort. The Citizens seeing the rare Courage, and good success of the Maiden, took to them again their Hearts and Harnes, and so lustily laid about them, that an incredible number of the Turks were slain. The rest being repulsed from the Land, reculed into their Ships; who being then pursued by a Navy of Calisa, were worthily discomfited likewise upon the Sea. And thus was the Isle of Lesbos at that time by a poor Virgin, that is by the strong hand of the Lord working in a weak Creature, preserved from the Turks. Æneas Syl. Et Seb. Munst. lib. 5.

This Cyprus King Richard the first did once subdue, fighting against the Saracens: Eneas Sylvius de Europ. cap. 74. A memorable fact of a Virgin, in defence of her Country.

Besides these Regions and Countries of Asia minor above described, Sebast. Munster in the fifth Book of his Cosmography declareth moreover, that the Turks and Sultanes have under their subjection, both Arabia, Persia, and also India exterior, wherein is Calecute. The which Persia, although it be under the Sophi, which is an enemy to the Turk, yet it is to be thought, that he is a Sultane, one of the Turkish and Mahumetish Religion. This Persia and India were once seasoned with Christs Gospel, as may appear by the Primitive Church. And thus have you the parts of Asia described, which in times past being almost all Christened, do now serve under the Turk.

After the description of Asia, let us next consider the Parts and Countries of Africk. Where although the greatest part either consisteth in Deserts desolate, or is possessed with Prester John, which professeth Christ and his Gospel; yet the Turk hath there also no little portion under his Dominion, as,

¶ As I was writing hereof, a certain ſound of lamentable News was brought unto us, how the Turk, whom we had hoped before to have been repulſed by the Emperor Maximilian out of Chriſtendom, hath now of late, this preſent year 1566. got the Town of Gyula about Tranſylvania, after they had ſuſtained fixteen of his moſt forcible Aſſaults, deſtroying in the ſame moſt cruelly many thouſand of our Chriſtian brethren, men, women, and children; but becauſe we have no full certainty, we will refer the ſtory thereof to further Information.

The

KING Hen. 7.

The Prophecies of the holy Scriptures conſidered, touching the coming up and final ruine and deſtruction of this wicked Kingdom of the TURK, with the Revelations and foreſhewings alſo of other Authors concerning the ſame.

Prophecies conſidered for the beginning and falling of the Turks Kingdom.

FOrſomuch as you have hitherto ſufficiently heard to what quantity and largeneſs the Dominion of the Turks hath increaſed, and do underſtand what cruel tyranny theſe wretched miſcreants have and do daily practice moſt heinouſly wheresoever they come againſt the ſervants and profeſſors of Chriſt; it ſhall not be unprofitable, but rather neceſſary, and to our great comfort, to conſider and examine in the Scriptures, with what Prophecies the holy Spirit of the Lord hath premoniſhed and forewarned us before of theſe heavy Perſecutions to come upon his people by this horrible Antichriſt. For as the government and conſtitution of times and ſtates of Monarchies and Policies fall not to us by blind chance, but be adminiſtred and allotted unto us from above, ſo it is not to be ſuppoſed, that ſuch a great alteration and mutation of Kingdoms, ſuch a terrible and general Perſecution of Gods people almoſt through all Chriſtendom, and ſuch a terror of the whole earth as is now moved and gendred by theſe Turks, cometh without the knowledge, ſufferance, and determination of the Lord before, for ſuch ends and purpoſes as his divine wiſdom doth beſt know. For the better evidence and teſtimony whereof, he hath left in his Scriptures ſufficient inſtruction and declaration, whereby we may plainly ſee to our great comfort how theſe grievous afflictions and troubles of the Church, though they be ſharp and heavy unto us, yet they come not by chance or by mans working only, but even as the Lord himſelf hath appointed it, and doth permit the ſame.

Two things to be conſidered in the time and order of the Old Teſtament. The Scriptures, and the people.

And firſt to begin with the time of the Old Teſtament, let us ſeriouſly adviſe and ponder, not only the Scriptures and Prophecies therein contained, but alſo let us conſider the whole ſtate, order and regiment of that people; the Church I mean of the Iſraelites. For although the Scriptures and Prophets of the Old Teſtament were properly ſent to that people, and have their relation properly to things done, or that ſhould be done in that Commonwealth, of which Prophets John Baptiſt was the laſt and made an end, as our Saviour himſelf witneſſeth, ſaying, the Law and Prophets be unto the time of John, &c. Yet notwithſtanding the ſaid people of that Old Teſtament beareth a lively image and reſemblance of the Univerſal Church which ſhould follow, planted by the Son of God through the whole earth. So that as the Prophets of God ſpeaking to them from the Mouth and Word of God, propheſied what ſhould come to paſs in that people; ſo likewiſe the whole courſe and Hiſtory of thoſe Iſraelites exemplifieth and beareth a prophetical Image to us, declaring what is to be looked for in the Univerſal Church of God diſperſed through the World, planted in Chriſt Jeſus his Son, according as Philip Melanchthon, gravely gathering upon the ſame, teſtifieth in divers places in his Commentary upon the Prophet Daniel.

Phil. Melan. in Dan. Prophet.

As firſt the Hiſtory of godly Abel ſlain by wicked Cain, what doth it import or propheſie, but the condition of the people and ſervants of God, which commonly go to wrack in this world, and are oppreſſed by the contrary part which belongeth not to God?

Gen.

The like may be ſaid alſo of Iſaac and Iſmael; of Jacob and Eſau. Of whom thoſe two which were the children of promiſe, and belonged to the Election of God, were perſecuted in this world of the other which were rejected. Where moreover is to be noted concerning Iſmael, that of his Stock after the fleſh came the Saracens, whoſe Sect the Turks do now profeſs and maintain. And as Iſmael had but 12 Sons; ſo it were to be wiſhed of God, that this Solyman, which is the 12th of the Turkiſh Generation, may be the laſt. But of this better occaſion ſhall follow (the Lord willing) hereafter.

The Saracens come of Iſmael. Reſemblance between the twelve Sons of Iſmael, and the Ottoman Turks.

4 Reg. 17.

Furthermore, of the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, the ſacred Hiſtory ſo reporteth, that after they had a long ſeaſon continued together by the ſpace of eight or nine hundred years, at length, for their idolatry and tranſgreſſion of their forefathers Ten Tribes of them were cut off, and diſperſed among the Gentiles an hundred and thirty years before the Captivity of Babylon; ſo that but two Tribes only remained free, and they alſo at laſt, after an hundred and thirty years, were captived under the Babylonians for a certain time. No otherwiſe hath it hapned with the Church of Chriſt almoſt in the Univerſal World, of which Church the greateſt part, both in Aſia, in Africa, and almoſt in Europe) where the holy Apoſtles ſo laboured and travelled) we ſee now to be diſparkled among the Turks, and their Candleſticks removed (the Lord of his great grace reduce them again, Amen.) So that of twelve parts of Chriſtendom, which was once planted in Chriſt, ſcarce two parts remain clear, and they how long they ſhall ſo continue the Lord knoweth: And albeit through the mercy of the Lord they eſcape the danger of the Turks, yet have they been ſo beaten with the Pope, that they had been better almoſt to have been in the Turks hands.

The old Church of the Iſraelites beareth a repreſentation or Image of the publick Church of Chriſt Jeſu.

Again, After the ſaid Iſraelites returned, being reſtored of Cyrus, let us conſider well their ſtory, the continuance of time, the manner of their regiments, and what afflictions they ſuſtained in the time of the Macchabees, and we ſhall ſee a lively repreſentation of theſe our days expreſſed in that Prophetical People, according as St. Paul writing of them ſheweth how all things hapned to them in Figures; that is, the actions and doings of that one Nation, be as Figures and Types of greater matters, what ſhall happen in theſe later times of the whole Church univerſally in Chriſt collected.

1 Cor. 1

So the tranſmigration and deliverance again of thoſe two Tribes, declareth to us the affliction of Chriſts Church for ſin; and yet that God will not utterly reject his people for his Sons ſake, as by manifold examples of the Church hitherto may well appear.

The Church of the Jews a figure of Chriſts Church.

Again, The continuance of the Law firſt given by Moſes unto the deſtruction of the ſaid people by Titus, amounteth to 1564 years; ſo we counting the age of the New Teſtament, and reckoning from the day of our Redemption unto this preſent, be come now to the year 1534, lacking but only three and thirty years of the full number.

Ex Phi. Melanct. in Dan. cap. 9

Likewiſe, In counting the years from their deliverance out of Captivity to the end of their diſſolution, we find 564 years, during which year as the Church of the Jews was not governed under the authority of Kings, but the High Prieſts took all the power and authority to themſelves; ſo we Chriſtians, for the ſpace eſpecially of theſe later 564 years, what have we ſeen and felt, but only the juriſdiction and domination of the Pope and High Prieſts playing the Rex in all Countries, and ruling the whole? whereby, by the count of the years, it is to be thought the day of the Lords coming not to be far off.

The times and years of the old Church, compared with the new. The rule and dominion of the High Prieſts in the Jews Commonwealth, and our Prelates compared.

Furthermore, in thoſe later years of the Jews Kingdom, what troubles and afflictions that people ſuſtained 300 years together, but chiefly, the laſt 166 years before the coming of Chriſt, by Antiochus and his fellows, the Hiſtory of the Macchabees can report. Wherein we have alſo notoriouſly to underſtand the miſerable vexations and perſecutions of Chriſtian Churches in theſe later ends of the World by Antichriſt. For by Antiochus Antichriſt (no doubt) is figured and repreſented. This Antiochus ſirnamed Magnus, and Antiochus Epiphanes his Son, came of the Stock of Seleuchus Nicanor; much like as the Mahumetes, the Turk, and Solymannus came of the ſtock of Ottomannus. Wherein this is to be noted and pondered, That like as of the ſaid Seleucus iſſued Twelve Syrian Kings one after another of that generation, which reigned over the Iſraelites with much ſeverity and tyranny; ſo of this Deviliſh Generation of Ottomannus have come Twelve Turkiſh Tyrants, whereof this Solyman is now the twelfth; God grant he may be the laſt. And

Antiochus beareth a figure of Antichriſt.

The Family of Antiochus.

The Family of the Turks

as the two laſt Antiochi, being Sons of the two Brethren, did fight together for the Kingdom, and in fighting were both ſlain, and ſhortly after the Kingdom fell to the Romans; ſo the Lord grant for Chriſts ſake, that the bloudy brood of this old Solyman, (which has reigned now ſix and forty years) may ſo fight together, and periſh in their own bloud, that the bloudy tyranny of theirs may come to a final end for ever, Amen.

And that the truth hereof may the better appear to ſuch as be diſpoſed to meditate more upon the matter, I thought good and profitable for the Reader, to ſet before his eyes, in Table-wiſe the Catalogue of both theſe Antichriſtian Families, with the names and ſucceſſion of the perſons, firſt of the Twelve Syrian Kings, then of the Twelve Ottomanni, in like number and order. {KING Hen. 7.}

THeſe two peſtilent Families and Generations, riſing out (doubtleſs) from the bottomleſs Pit; to plague the people of God, as in number of ſucceſſion they do not much differ; ſo in manner of their doings and wicked abominations they be as near agreeing, being both enemies alike to the People and Church of Chriſt, both murtherers and parricides of their own Brethren and Kindred, both blaſphemers of God, and troublers of the whole World. Wherein we have all to learn and note, by the way, the terrible anger of Almighty God againſt ſin, and wickedneſs of men.

The time of Antichriſt examined by Prophecies.

One Antichriſt prefigured another.

Furthermore, who ſo is diſpoſed to conſider and caſt the courſe of times, and to mark how things be diſpoſed by the marvellous operation of Gods Providence, ſhall find the times alſo of theſe two adverſaries in much like ſort to concur and agree. For in conſidering with our ſelves both the Teſtaments and Churches of God, the firſt of the Jews, the ſecond of the Chriſtians; look what time had the Syrian Kings to rage then in Jeruſalem, the ſame proportion of time hath now the tyranny of the Turks to murther the Chriſtians; ſo that the one Antichriſt may well repreſent and prefigure the other. For as by the Book of Macchabees may appear, Antiochus Epiphanes was about the 191 year before the Paſſion of our Saviour, and day of our Redemption; ſo now caſting the ſame number from this preſent year backward, we ſhall find it to be about the ſame year and time, when Bajazetes, the fourth Turk after Ottoman, began to remove his Imperial ſeat from Burſa in Bithynia to Adrianople in Europe, which is a City of Thracia. In which year and time began all the miſchief in Europe, as is to be ſeen before, and this was the year of our Lord 1375. Unto the which year if we add 191. it maketh 1566. according to the Prophecy of the Apocalyps, Chapter 20. where it is propheſied of Gog and Magog, that they ſhall compaſs about the Tents of the Saints, and the welbeloved City, by the which welbeloved City is meant (no doubt) Europa; and this was in the year aboveſaid 1375. Although touching the preciſe points of years and times, it is not for us greatly to be requiſite therein; but yet where diligence and ſtudious meditation may help to knowledge, I would not wiſh negligence to be a pretence to ignorance. And thus much for the times of Antiochus and his fellows. Apoc. 20.

Now what cruelty this Antiochus exerciſed againſt the people of God, it is manifeſt in the Hiſtory of the Macchabees; where we read that this Antiochus in the 8th year of his Reign, in his ſecond coming to Jeruſalem, firſt gave forth in commandment, that all the Jews ſhould relinquiſh the Law of Moſes, and worſhip the Idol of Jupiter Olympius, which he ſet up in the Temple of Jeruſalem. The Books of Moſes and of the Prophets he burned. He ſet Garriſons of Soldiers to ward the Idol. In the City of Jeruſalem he cauſed the Feaſts and Revels of Bacchus to be kept, full of all filth and wickedneſs. Old Men Women and Virgins, ſuch as would not leave the Law of Moſes, with cruel torments he murthered. The Mothers that would not circumciſe their Children, he ſlew. The Children that were circumciſed he hanged up by the necks. The Temple he ſpoiled and waſted. The Altar of God, and Candleſtick of Gold, with the other orna- Mac. lib. 1. cap. 1. The cruelty of Antiochus againſt Gods people.

KING Hen. 7. Ornaments and Furniture of the Temple, partly he caſt out, partly he carried away. Contrary to the Law of God he cauſed them to offer and to eat Swines fleſh. Great murther and ſlaughter he made of the people, cauſing them either to leave their law, or to loſe their lives. Among whom, beſides many other, with cruel torments, he put to death a godly Mother with her ſeven Sons, ſending his cruel Proclamations through the whole Land, that whoſoever kept the obſervances of the Sabbath, and other Rites of the Law, and refuſed to condeſcend to his abominations, ſhould be executed. By reaſon whereof the City of Jeruſalem was left void and deſolate of all good men, but there was a great number that were contented to follow and obey his idolatrous proceedings, and to flatter with the King, and became enemies unto their Brethren. Briefly, no kind of calamity, nor face of miſery could be ſhewed in any place, which was not there ſeen. Of the tyranny of this Antiochus it is hiſtoried at large in the Book of Macchabees; and Daniel prophecying before of the ſame, declareth that the people of the Jews deſerved no leſs for their ſins and tranſgreſſions.

1 Mac. 1. Dan. 9.

By conſent of all Writers, this Antiochus beareth a figure of the great Antichriſt, who was to follow in the later end of the World, and is already come, and worketh what he can againſt us. Although, as Saint John ſaith, there have been, and be many Antichriſts, as parts and members of the body of Antichriſt, which are forerunners; yet to ſpeak of the head and principal Antichriſt, and great enemy of Chriſts Church, he is come in the later end of the world, at what time ſhall be ſuch tribulation as never was ſeen before; whereby is meant (no doubt) the Turk, prefigured by this Antiochus. By this Antichriſt I do alſo mean all ſuch, which following the ſame Doctrine of the Turks, think to be ſaved by their works and demerits, and not by their Faith only in the Son of God, of what title and profeſſion elſe ſoever they be; eſpecially if they uſe the like force and violence for the ſame, as he doth, &c.

The name of Antichriſt, what it containeth.

Of the tyranny of this Antiochus aforeſaid, and of the tribulations of the Church in the later times, both of the Jews Church, and alſo of the Chriſtian Church to come, let us hear and conſider the words of Daniel in the 11th Chapter, and alſo in his 7th Chapter, prophecying of the ſame as followeth:

Dan. 11. He ſhall return and fret againſt the holy Covenant; ſo ſhall he do, he ſhall even return and have intelligence with them that forſake the holy Covenant. And arms ſhall ſtand on his part, and they ſhall pollute the Sanctuary of ſtrength, and ſhall take away the daily Sacrifice, and they ſhall ſet up the abominable deſolation. And ſuch as wickedly break the Covenant ſhall flatter with him deceitfully; but the people that do know their God ſhall prevail and proſper. And they that underſtand among the people ſhall inſtruct many; yet they ſhall fall by ſword and by flame, by captivity and by ſpoil many days.

Now when they ſhall fall they ſhall be holpen with a little help, but many ſhall cleave unto them feignedly. And ſome of them of underſtanding ſhall fall to be tried, and to be purged, and to make them white, till the time be out; for there is a time appointed. And the King ſhall do what him liſt; he ſhall exalt himſelf, and magnifie himſelf againſt all that is God, and ſhall ſpeak marvellous things againſt the God of Gods, and ſhall proſper till the wrath be accompliſhed, for the determination is made. Neither ſhall he reguard the God of his Fathers, nor the deſires of women, nor care for any God; for he ſhall magnifie himſelf above all. But in his place ſhall he honour the God Mauzzim, and the God whom his Fathers knew not, ſhall he honour with gold and with ſilver, and with precious ſtones, and pleaſant things.

Thus ſhall he do in the holds of Mauzzim with a ſtrange God, whom he ſhall acknowledge; he ſhall increaſe his glory, and ſhall cauſe them to rule over many, and ſhall divide the land for gain. And at the end of time ſhall the King of the South puſh at him, and the King of the North ſhall come againſt him like a whirlwind, with Chariots, and with Horſemen, and with many Ships, and he ſhall enter into the Countrys, and ſhall overflow and paſs through. He ſhall enter alſo into a pleaſant land, and many Countries ſhall be overthrown: but theſe ſhall eſcape out of his hand, even Edom and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon. He ſhall ſtretch forth his hands alſo upon the Countrys, and the land of Egypt ſhall not eſcape, but he ſhall have power over the treaſures of gold and of ſilver, and over all the precious things of Egypt, and of the Lybians, and of the black Moors where he ſhall paſs. But the tidings out of the Eaſt and the North ſhall trouble him; and therefore he ſhall go forth with great wrath to deſtroy and root out many. And he ſhall plant the Tabernacles of his Palace between the Seas in the glorious and holy Mountain, yet he ſhall come to his end, and none ſhall help him.

To this place of Daniel above prefixed, might alſo be added the Prophecy of the ſaid Daniel written in the 7th Chapter, and much tending to the like effect; where he entreating of his Viſion of four Beaſts (which ſignifie the four Monarchies) and ſpeaking now of the fourth Monarchy, hath theſe words: Dan. 7.

After this, I ſaw in the viſions by night, and behold the fourth beaſt was grim and horrible, and marvellous ſtrong. It had great iron teeth; it devoured, and brake in pieces, and ſtamped the reſidue under his feet; and it was unlike the other Beaſts that were before it, for it had ten horns. As I conſidered the horns, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the firſt horns pluckt away. And behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth ſpeaking preſumptuous things, and ſeemed more ſtout than the other. Which horn alſo (when I looked on) made battel with the Saints, and prevailed againſt them; until the old aged came, and judgment was given to the Saints of the higheſt, and till the appointed time was come, that the Saints ſhould have the Kingdom.

Thus have you heard the plain words of Daniel. In the which as he doth manifeſtly deſcribe the coming of Antiochus the great adverſary, toward the later end of the Jews; ſo by the ſame Antiochus is figured alſo to us the great adverſary of Chriſt, which is the Turk.

Although ſome there be notwithſtanding, which with great learning and judgment do apply this place of Daniel above recited, not to the Turk, but rather to the Pope, and that for ſix or ſeven ſpecial cauſes herein touched and noted. Vide Rodul. Gualt. de Antichriſto.

The firſt note.

The firſt is this, That the wicked tranſgreſſors of the Covenant ſhall joyn with him deceitfully and hypocritically, which ſhall pollute the Tabernacle of ſtrength, and take away the perpetual ſacrifice, and bring in the abomination of deſolation.

The 2d note.

The ſecond note is, that the Prophet declareth, how the learned among the people ſhall teach many, and that they ſhall fall upon the ſword, into fire and captivity, and ſhall be baniſhed, whereby they ſhall be tryed, choſen, and made bright and pure, &c. All which (ſay they) is not among the Turks to be ſeen, but only in the Popes Church; where the faithful preachers and teachers of the people are ſlain and burned, and go to wrack, &c. Where likewiſe it followeth, that they ſhall be holpen againſt Antichriſt, and that many falſe brethren ſhould joyn unto them diſſemblingly, &c. To this they alledge, that the Chriſtians have no ſuch help againſt the Turk, whereunto ſuch falſe brethren ſhould joyn themſelves, as is and hath been commonly ſeen among the Chriſtians againſt the Pope, from time to time, almoſt in all Countries; as in Germany by the Proteſtants, and free Cities; in England in King Henry's time by the Lord Cromwel, and afterward by King Edward, and now by Queen Elizabeth; in Scotland by the godly Nobility; in France, by the Queen of Navar and her Son; and alſo by the Prince of Condy and the worthy Admiral, and his two brethren, and many others; in Flanders, by them whom the Regent called Beggers; ſo as was in the time of the Macchabees, againſt Antiochus. Helps of Chriſtians againſt the Pope.

The 3d note.

Thirdly, That the King ſhall exalt himſelf above all that hath the name of God, and ſhall lift up his mouth to ſpeak preſumptuouſly againſt God.

The 4th note.

Fourthly, That he careth not for the deſires of women; which may ſeem to note how the Popes Doctrine ſhall forbid the honeſt and lawful marriage in Church-men.

The 5th note.

Mauzzim the Popes God.

The fifth ſpecialty which they apply to the Pope, is that which followeth in the Prophet ſaying, Neither ſhall he regard the God of his Fathers, nor any God; but inſtead of him ſhall ſet up his God Mauzzim, and ſhall wor- worſhip him with ſilver and gold, and precious ſtone, &c. which they do apply to the Pope, ſetting up his God of bread, and worſhipping him with gliſtering golden ornaments, and moſt ſolemn ſervice.

The ſixth Note.

Sixthly, It followeth, and he ſhall increaſe them with much glory and riches, and ſhall divide unto them lands and poſſeſſions, &c. meaning that the Pope having dominion over treaſures of gold and ſilver, and all precious things of the land, ſhall indue his Cardinals, Prelates, his flattering Doctors, with Friers Monks and Prieſts, and all ſuch as ſhall take his part, with great priviledges, liberties, revenues and poſſeſſions. And thus I ſay, ſome there be which apply this Prophecy of the ſeventh and eleventh Chapters of Daniel unto the Biſhop of Rome. Whom although I take to be an extream Perſecutor of Chriſts Church; yet I judge rather thoſe two Chapters of Daniel concerning the little horn in the middle of the ten horns, and the great deſtroyer of the pleaſant Land and glorious holy Mountain, to mean firſt Antiochus, and by him ſecondly to mean the great Antichriſt, the Turk; who hath now ſet already the Tabernacles of his Palace between the Seas, according to the Prophecies of Daniel, as is aboveſaid.

The ſeventh and 11th. Chapters of Daniel, mean the great Antichriſt, the Turk.

Over and beſides theſe Prophecies above alledged, there may be added alſo the Prophecy of Ezekiel, cap. 39. ſpeaking of Gog and Magog; which as it may be applied to the oppreſſion of the Jews under the heathen multitude, which ſtopped the building of the City, and under the Syrian Kings, &c. yet in the ſame alſo are expreſſed the calamities and afflictions of Chriſts Church in theſe later times, under the Saracens and the Turks, &c.

Ezek. Chap. 38. 39. Gog and Magog.

Proceeding further in this matter, let us come now to the Propheſies of the New Teſtament, and mark the words of St. Paul, writing to the Theſſalonians, which then were Chriſtened, and now either are Turkiſh, or under the Turk, which words be theſe, Be ye not ſuddenly moved in your mind, nor troubled, neither by ſpirit, nor by word, nor by letter as ſent from us, as though the day of Chriſt were at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means, for the Lord will not come before there come a defection, or a departing firſt, and that wicked man be revealed, the ſon of perdition, which is an adverſary, and is extolled above all power, and that which is called God; ſo that he ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, boaſting himſelf to be God, &c. Although this defection and departing may have a double underſtanding, as well of the Popes ſect (which is gone and departed from the free juſtification by faith only in Chriſt through the promiſe of Grace) as of the Turks; yet leaving a while to ſpeak of the Pope, becauſe it appeareth more notoriouſly in the Turk, we will chiefly apply it to him; in whom ſo aptly it doth agree, that unleſs this great defection from faith in ſo many Churches had hapned by the Turk, it had been hard to underſtand the Apoſtles mind, which now by the Hiſtory of theſe Turks is eaſie and evident to be known, conſidering what a ruin hath hapned to the Church of Chriſt by theſe miſerable Turks, what Empires, Nations, Kingdoms, Countries, Towns and Cities be removed from the Name and profeſſion of Chriſt, how many thouſands, and infinite multitudes of Chriſtian men and children, in Aſia, in Africk, and in Europe, are carried away from Chriſts Church to Mahumets Religion, ſome to ſerve for the Turks Guard among the Janizarites, ſome for Soldiers, ſome for Miners, ſome for Gunners, to fight and war againſt the Chriſtians; ſo that the moſt part of all the Churches, planted once by the Apoſtles, are now degenerated into Turks, only a ſmall handful of Chriſtians reſerved yet in theſe Weſt parts of Europe, of the which ſmall reſidue what ſhall alſo become ſhortly, except Chriſt himſelf do help, Chriſt only himſelf doth know. How great this defection hath been, ſpoken of by St. Paul, thou mayeſt ſee (gentle Reader) in the Table above deſcribed.

The Propheſies of the New Teſtament concerning the Turk. 2 Theſ. 2

The defection in time of Antichriſt declared.

Vide ſupra.

Notwithſtanding this Text of the holy Apoſtle (as I aforeſaid) may be verified alſo with no leſs reaſon upon the Biſhop of Rome, than upon the Turk, but for that he is a man of ſin, that is, his ſeat and City is a great maintainer of wickedneſs, and alſo for that he is an adverſary, that is, contrary in all his doings and proceedings to Chriſt.

The place of Saint Paul, 2 Theſ. 2. applied to the Pope.

Thirdly, For that he ſitteth in the Temple of God, and ſo did not Mahumet.

Fourthly, Becauſe he is an exalter of himſelf, and ſitteth more like a god than a man in Rome, whereof ſee more in the Book ſet forth in Engliſh, called, The Conteſtations of the Popes.

{KING Henry}

Fifthly, For that he ſeduceth, and hath ſeduced by his Apoſtaſie the moſt part of all Chriſtendom from the Doctrine and free promiſes of God, into a wrong and ſtrange way of ſalvation, which is not to be juſtified freely before God only by our Faith in Chriſt his well beloved Son, (unto the which Faith the promiſe of God freely and graciouſly hath annexed all our ſalvation only, and to no other thing) but hath taught us to work our ſalvation by an infinite number of other things. Infomuch, that he bindeth the neceſſity of our ſalvation alſo to this, that we muſt believe (if we will be ſaved) and receive him to be the Vicar of Chriſt in earth, &c.

Ex Bonifacio Extravag.

But to return again unto the Turks, among all the Propheciesboth of the Old Teſtament and of the New, there is none that painteth out the Antichriſtian Kingdom of the Turks, better than doth the Revelation of Saint John, whoſe words let us weigh and conſider. Who in the Apocalyps 9. where he ſpeaketh of opening the Seventh and laſt Seal, (which ſignifieth the laſt age of the world) and there uniting of the Seven Trumpets of the Seven Angels, at the ſounding of the Sixth Angel ſaith, Looſe the four Angels which are bound in the great River Euphrates. And the four Angels were looſed, which were ready both day, and hour, and month, and year, to ſlay the third part of men. And the number of Horſemen were twenty thouſand times ten thouſand: and I heard the number of them. And thus I ſaw in a viſion horſes, and them that ſat on them, having fiery Habergions, and of Jacinth-ſtone, and of Brimſtone, and the heads of the horſes were as the heads of Lions, and out of their mouths went forth fire, and ſmoke, and brimſtone; of theſe three plagues was the third part of men killed, that is, of the fire, ſmoke, and brimſtone, which proceeded out of their mouths, &c.

Apoc. 9.

By the Seventh Seal is meant the ſeventh and laſt Age of the World, which laſt Age of the World is from Chriſt to the Judgment and Reſurrection of the Dead.

Trumpets of the Seven Angels in the Apocalypſe expounded.

By the Seven Angels with their Seven Trumpets is ſignified the ſeven Plagues that come in this ſeventh and laſt Age of the World.

By the Sixth Trumpet of the ſixth Angel is meant the ſixth Plague coming laſt and next before the Plague of the great Judgment-day, which ſixth Plague is here deſcribed to come by the Eaſt Kings, that is, by the Turks, as followeth to be ſeen.

The ſixth Trumpet.

By looſing the Angels which had rule of the great River Euphrates, is ſignified the letting out of the Eaſt Kings, that is, the Turks out of Scythia, Tartaria, Perſia, and Arabia, by whom the third part of Chriſtendom ſhall be deſtroyed, as we ſee it this day hath come to paſs.

Looſing of the Angels upon the river Euphrates.

It followeth in the Prophecy, Their power ſhall be in their mouths, and in their tayls. For their tayls ſhall be like Serpents, having heads, and with them they hurt, &c. Meaning that theſe Turks with the words of their mouths ſhall threaten great deſtruction of fire and ſword, to them that will not yield unto them, and in the end, when the Chriſtians ſhall yield unto them, truſting to their promiſes, they like Serpents ſhall deceive them in the end, and kill them, as appeareth by the ſtory of the Turks above paſt.

Apoc. 9.

The like Prophecy alſo, after the like words and ſenſe, is to be ſeen and read in the ſixteenth Chapter of the Apocalypſe, where Saint John entreating of ſeven Cups filled with the wrath of the Living God, given to the hands of ſeven Angels, by one of the four Beaſts (that is, in the time of one of the four Monarchies, which was the Monarchy of Rome) ſpeaketh likewiſe of the ſixth Angel, which poured his vial of Gods wrath upon the great River Euphrates, and the waters thereof dried up, that the way of the Kings of the Eaſt ſhould be prepared, &c.

Apoc. 16

The Four Beaſts in the Apocalyps meant the four Monarchies.

By the ſixth Angel with the ſixth Vial is meant, as before the laſt Plague ſave one, that ſhall come upon the Chriſtians. By the Kings of the Eaſt are meant the {KING Rettn. 7.} Saracens, and twelve Ottoman Turks. By drying up the River of Euphrates, is ſignified the way of theſe Turks to be prepared by the Lords appointment, to come out of the Eaſt to the Weſt parts of the World, to moleſt and afflict the Chriſtians. It followeth more in the Text. And I ſaw three unclean ſpirits like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beaſt, and out of the mouth of the falſe prophet, for they are the ſpirits of devils, doing wonders, to go unto the Kings of the whole earth, to aſſemble and gather them together to the battel againſt the day of the great God omnipotent, &c. And it followeth ſhortly after, And he aſſembled them together into a place which is called in Hebrew Armagedon, that is, a trap or train of deſtruction. And immediately it followeth in the ſame place, And the ſeventh Angel poured out his Vial in the air, and a mighty voice came from Heaven, out of the Throne, ſaying, factum eſt, it is done or finiſhed, &c. Whereby it is to be underſtood, that toward the laſt conſummation of the World great force ſhall be ſeen, and a mighty Army of the enemies ſhall be collected and gathered againſt the People and Saints of the higheſt, and then cometh the conſummation, with factum eſt, &c.

Saracens,

The Kings of the Eaſt. Drying up of Euphrates. Iſa. 11.

Wherefore it is not for nought that the holy Spirit of God in the ſame place, a little before the ſixth Angel doth pour out his Vial, doth exhort all the faithful, ſaying, Behold, I come like a thief in the night, Bleſſed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, leſt he walk naked, and men ſee his filthineſs, &c.

Ibidem. An exhortation of the Holy Ghoſt to the faithful.

Nicholas de Lyra, and Paulus Biſhop of Burdens, and Matthias Dorinke writing upon the 13th Chapter of the Apocalyps, and expounding the myſtery of the ſecond Beaſt riſing out of the earth, having the horns of a Lamb, &c. do apply the ſame to Mahumet and the Turks, with a ſolemn Declaration made upon the ſame. Which interpretation of theirs, although in ſome points it may ſeem to have ſome appearance of probability, neither can it be denied but that Mahumet and the Turk be peſtilent and picked enemies of Chriſt our Lord, and moſt bitter Perſecutors of his Church; yet as touching the proper and natural meaning of the Apoſtle in that place, ſpeaking of the falſe Lamb, &c. if we conſider well all the circumſtances of that Beaſt, and mark the conſequence of the Text, both of that which goeth before and followeth after, we muſt needs grant, that Nicholas de Lyra with his fellows, and with all ſuch like of the Popes School that follow that School, be deceived, and that the deſcription and interpretation of that falſe horned Lamb muſt neceſſarily be applied only to the Biſhop of Rome, and none other, which is to be proved by ſix principal cauſes or arguments.

Apoc. 13. The Prophecy of Apoc. 13. diſcuſſed.

The Beaſt having horns like the Lamb, muſt needs mean the Pope.

The firſt is, for that this Beaſt is deſcribed to bear the horns of a Lamb; By the which Lamb, no doubt, is meant Chriſt. By the horns of the Lamb is ſignified the outward ſhew or reſemblance of Chriſt our Saviour; which ſhew or reſemblance can have no relation to Mahumet, for that he taketh himſelf to be above Chriſt, and Chriſt as an excellent Prophet of God ſitting at his feet. Wherefore ſeeing Mahumet cometh neither as equal to Chriſt, nor as Vicar under Chriſt, this Prophecy cannot agree to him, but only to him which openly in plain words proteſteth, that all Chriſts Lambs and Sheep not ſingularly, but univerſally through the whole world, are committed to him as Vicar of Chriſt, and ſucceſſor of Peter, and that all men muſt confeſs the ſame of neceſſity, or elſe they are none of Chriſts ſheep, &c. Wherein it is eaſie to ſee where the pretenſed horns of the Lamb do grow.

The firſt reaſon.

Bo Boniface. 8. Extrav de Majorit. & obed.

The ſecond Argument, And he ſpake like the Dragon, &c. A Lambs Horns and the Mouth of a Dragon do not agree together. And as they do not agree together in nature, ſo neither can they be found in any perſon, either Turk or other (if we judge truly) ſo lively, as in the Biſhop of Rome. When thou hearеſt him call himſelf The Apoſtolical Biſhop, The Vicar of Chriſt, The Succeſſor of Peter, The Servant of Gods Servants, &c. Thou ſeeſt in him the two Horns of a Lamb, and wouldſt think him to be a Lamb in deed, and ſuch a one as would waſh your feet for humility; but hear him ſpeak, and you ſhall find him a Dragon. See and read the Epiſtle of Pope Martin the Fifth above mentioned, charging, commanding, and threatning Emperors, Kings, Dukes, Princes, Marqueſſes, Earls, Barons, Knights, Rectors, Conſuls, Proconſuls with their Shires, Counties and Univerſities of their Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, Caſtles, Villages, and other places. See the anſwer of Pope Urban the ſecond, and his meſſage to King William Rufus. Behold the works and doings of Pope Innocent againſt King John.

The ſecond reaſon. {Aſino 1553}

Vide ſupra.

Note alſo the anſwer of another Pope to the King of England, which for the price of the Kings Head would not grant unto him the inveſting of his Biſhops. Mark well the words and doings of Pope Hildebrand againſt the Emperor Henry the fourth; alſo of Pope Alexander the ſecond, treading upon the neck of Fredericus Barbaroſſa, not like a Lamb treading upon a Dragon, but like a Dragon treading upon a Lamb; ſo that his own Verſe might be turned upon himſelf, Tanquam aſpis & baſiliſcus ſuper oviculam ambulans, & tanquam Leo & draco conculcans agnum. Conſider moreover the behaviour, manner, condition, and property almoſt of all the Popes which have been theſe ſix hundred years, and what Dragon or Serpent could be more viperous than their own doings and words can ſpeak and give teſtimony againſt themſelves.

The Pope both the horns of a Lamb, but the mouth of a Dragon.

It followeth moreover in the ſame Prophecy of the Apocalyps for the third Argument, And he doth all the power of the firſt Beaſt preſently before his face, and cauſeth the earth, and all the inhabitants therein, to honour the firſt Beaſt, the ſtripe of whoſe deadly wound was cured, &c.

The third reaſon.

In this Prophecy two things are to be noted; firſt, what the firſt Beaſt is, whoſe power the ſecond Beaſt doth execute. Secondly, what this ſecond Beaſt is which ſo doth exerciſe his power in his ſight. The firſt of theſe Beaſts in the Apocalyps deſcribed, having ſeven heads and ten horns, muſt needs ſignifie the City of Rome, which may eaſily be proved by two demonſtrations. Firſt, by the expoſition of the 17 Chapter of the ſame Apocalyps, where is declared and deſcribed the ſaid Beaſt to ſtand of ſeven Hills, and to contain ten Kings, having the whole power of the Dragon given; and alſo the ſame City to be named The Whore of Babylon, drunken with the bloud of the Saints. All which properties joyned together, can agree in no wiſe but only to the Heathen Empire of Rome, which City at that time of writing theſe Prophecies had the government of the whole world. The ſecond demonſtration or evidence may be reduced out of the number of the Months aſſigned to this Beaſt, Apoc. 13. For ſo it is written, that this Beaſt had power to make, that is, to work his malice againſt Chriſts people forty two months, which months counted by Sabbaths of years, (that is, every month for ſeven years) maketh up the juſt number of thoſe years in which the Primitive Church was under the terrible Perſecutions of the Heathen Emperors of Rome, as is afore ſpecified.

The two Beaſts in the 13th chap. of the Apocalyps expounded.

A deſcription of the City and Monarchy of Rome.

Which thing thus ſtanding, proved and confeſſed, that the firſt Beaſt muſt needs ſignifie the Empire and City of Rome, then muſt it neceſſarily follow that the ſecond Beaſt with the Lambs Horns, muſt ſignifie the Biſhop and Pope of the ſame City of Rome. The reaſon whereof is evident and apparent by that which followeth in the Prophecy, where it is declared, that the ſecond Beaſt, having two Horns of a Lamb, received and exerciſed all the power of the firſt Beaſt, before or in the ſight of the ſaid Beaſt, which cannot be verified either in the Turks or in any other, but only in the Pope of Rome, who (as you ſee) receiveth, uſurpeth and deriveth to himſelf all the power of that City and Monarchy of Rome; inſomuch that he ſaith, that when Conſtantine or Ludovicus yielded unto him the rule and Kingdom of that City, he gave him but his own, and that which of right and duty belonged to him before.

The deſcription of the Beaſt with the 2 Horns of the Lamb, Apoc. 13.

The Pope having all the rule and power of Rome.

And this authority or power over all the Empire of Rome he worketh not in Aſia, or in Conſtantinople as the Turk doth, but in the ſight of the Beaſt which gave him the power, that is, in the City of Rome it ſelf, which is the firſt Beaſt here in this Prophecy of the Apocalyps deſcribed.

Fourthly, It followeth more, And he cauſeth the earth, and all the inhabitants therein, to worſhip and honour the firſt Beaſt, which had a deadly wound, and was cured, &c. The interpretation of this part, as alſo of all the other parts of the ſame Chapter, ſtandeth upon the definition of the firſt Beaſt; for it being granted, as cannot be denied, that the firſt Beaſt ſignifieth the City and Empire of Rome; it muſt conſequently follow, that the Biſhop (whom we call the Pope) of the ſaid City of Rome, muſt be underſtood by the ſecond Beaſt, forſomuch as neither Turk nor any other, but only the Biſhop of Rome hath holden up the eſtimation and dignity of that City, which began to be in ruine and decay by the Vandalians, Goths, Herulians and Lombards, about the year of our Lord 456, but afterward by the Biſhop of Rome the priſtine ſtate and honour of that City revived again, and flouriſhed in as great veneration as ever it did before. And that is it which the Holy Ghoſt ſeemeth here to mean of the firſt Beaſt, ſaying, That he had a wound of the Beaſt, and was cured. For ſo it followeth.

Apoc. 13. The fourth reaſon.

The 5th reaſon.

Fifthly, And he cauſed all the inhabitants of the earth to make the image of the beaſt, which had the ſtripe of the ſword and lived. And it was given to him to give life to the image of the beaſt, and to make the image thereof to ſpeak, and to cauſe all them that worſhipped not the image of the beaſt, to be killed; forcing all perſons, both little and great, rich and poor, bond and free, to take the mark of the beaſt in their right hand, and in their foreheads, and that none might buy or ſell, but they which had the mark, or the name of the beaſt, or the number of his name, &c.

Rome almoſt dead.

Rome called Odacria.

By giving life to the image of the beaſt, and making it to ſpeak, is to be preſuppoſed that the beaſt was at a near point of death, and lay ſpeechleſs before, inſomuch that the City of Rome began to loſe and change his name, and was called a while Odacria, of Odacer King of the Herulians, which by dint of ſword ſurpriſed the Romans; and yet notwithſtanding, by the means of this Roman Prelate, the ſaid City of Rome, which was then ready to give up the ghoſt, recovered his majeſty and ſtrength again, that it is hard to ſay, whether Rome did ever ruffle and rage in his tyranny before, in the time of Nero, Domitian, Diocleſian, and other Emperors, more tragically, than it hath done under the Pope; or whether that Rome had all Kings, Queens, Princes, Dukes, Lords, and all ſubjects more under obedience and ſubjection, when the Emperors reigned, or now in the reign of the Pope. And therefore it is ſaid not without cauſe of the Holy Ghoſt,

To give life to the image of the beaſt. The image of Rome ſpeaketh again as cruelly as ever it did.

That it is given to him, to give life and ſpeech to the image of the beaſt, cauſing all them to be ſlain which will not worſhip the image of the beaſt, &c. As for example hereof, who ſeeth not what numbers and multitudes of Chriſtian Men, Women and Children in all Countries hath been put to fire and ſword? Stories of all times will declare, what havock hath been made of Chriſtian bloud about the preheminence and majority of the See of Rome; what Churches and Countries, both Greeks and Latines, have been excommunicated; what Kings have been depoſed, and Emperors ſtripped from their Imperial Seat, and all becauſe they would not ſtoop and bend to the Image of the Beaſt, that is, to the Majeſty and Title of Rome, advanced up ſo highly now by the Biſhop thereof, as it was never higher before in the Reign of Nero or Diocleſian. Wherefore taking the firſt Beaſt to ſignifie the Empire of Rome, which cannot be denied, it is plain, that the ſecond Beaſt muſt neceſſarily be applied to the Pope and not to the Turk, foraſmuch as the Turk ſeeketh nothing leſs than the advancement of that Empire, but rather ſtriveth againſt it to pluck it down.

Et faciet eos occidi qui non adoraverint imaginem beſtiæ. Apoc. 13.

The 6th reaſon. The number of the name of the Beaſt diſcuſſed. 666. λ The number of theſe letters in Greek, υ maketh the full numbet of 666.

The ſixth and laſt argument is grounded upon the number of the name of the Beaſt, expreſt by the Holy Ghoſt in the ſame Propheſie, by the Letters χ ξ ſ. In which Letters, although there lieth great darkneſs and difficulty to be underſtood, yet certain ancient Fathers which were Diſciples and hearers of them which heard St. John himſelf, as Irenæus and other, do expound the ſaid Letters conjecturally, to contain the name of the Beaſt, and to be the name of a man under this word λατεῖνος: Whereas elſe, no other name lightly of any perſon, either in Greek or Latine, will agree to the ſame, ſave only the foreſaid named λατεῖνος. Although ſome later Writers, giving their conjectures upon the ſame, do find the name of Lateranus in Hebrew Letters to anſwer to the ſame number. Some feign other names, as ἀντεμος or τεῖτας, made words, which ſignifie nothing, as Diclux, or Luduuic, by Roman Letters, &c. But of all names properly ſignifying any man, none cometh ſo near to the number of this Myſtery, (if it go by order of Letters (as doth the word λατεῖνος aforeſaid. And thus much by the way, and occaſion of Nicholaus de Lyra, Paulus Burgen, Matthias Dorinkus, the Author of Fortaliſium fidei, and other Commentaries more of the ſame Faction; who writing upon this thirteenth Chapter of the Apocalyps, and not conſidering the circumſtances thereof, both are deceived themſelves, and deceive many other, applying that to the Turk, which cannot otherwiſe be verified, but only upon the Pope, as may appear ſufficiently by the premiſſes. Not that I write this of any mood or malice, either to the City of Rome, or to the perſon of the Biſhop as being Gods creature; but being occaſioned here to entreat of the Prophecies againſt the Turks, I would wiſh the Readers not to be deceived, but rightly to underſtand the ſimple Scriptures according as they lie, to the intent that the true meaning thereof, being bolted out, it may be the better known what Prophecies directly make againſt theſe Turks, what otherwiſe.

{KING Hen. 7. Nichol. de Lyra, and other Foreign Writers, deceived in the 13th Chapter of the Apoc.

In the which Prophecies againſt the Turks, now to proceed, let us come to the 20th Chapter of the Apocalyps, wherein the holy Scripture ſeemeth plainly and directly to notifie the ſaid Turks. The words of the Prophecy be theſe.

Apoc. 20.

And I ſaw an Angel deſcending from Heaven, having the key of the bottomleſs pit, and a great chain in his hand; and he took the Dragon, the old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satanas, and bound him up for a thouſand years, and caſt him in the pit, and ſealed him up, that he ſhould not ſeduce the people any more, till the thouſand years were expired; and after that he muſt be let looſe for a little while, &c.

And it followeth after, And when the thouſand years ſhall be compleat, Satanas ſhall be let out of his dungeon, and ſhall go abroad to ſeduce the people, which are on the four corners of the land of Gog and Magog, to aſſemble them to battel, whoſe number is like to the ſands of the Sea. And they went up upon the latitude or breadth of the earth, and compaſſed about the tents of the Saints, and the welbeloved Cities, &c.

The binding and looſing out of Satan examined 3 things to be noted in this Prophecy.

To the perfect underſtanding of this Prophecy, three things are neceſſary to be known. Firſt, what is meant by binding up, and looſing out of Satan as the old Dragon. Secondly, at what time and year firſt he was chained up and ſealed for a thouſand years. Thirdly, at what year and time theſe thouſand years did end, when as he ſhould be looſed out again for a little ſeaſon. Which three points being well examined and marked, the Prophecy may eaſily be underſtood directly to be meant of the Turk. Albeit Anagogically ſome part thereof may alſo be referred not unproperly unto the Pope, as is above notified.

What is meant by binding up of Satan.

Firſt, by binding and looſing of Satanas ſeemeth to be meant the ceaſing and ſtaying of the cruel and horrible Perſecution of the Heathen Emperors of Rome againſt the true Chriſtians, as is to be ſeen in The Ten firſt Perſecutions in the Primitive Church above deſcribed in the former part of theſe Acts and Monuments, in the which moſt bloudy Perſecutions, Satanas the Devil then raged without all meaſure, till the time it pleaſed Almighty God to ſtop this old Serpent, and to tie him ſhorter. And thus have you to underſtand what is meant by the binding up of Satan for a thouſand years; whereby is ſignified, that the Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians ſtirred up by the Beaſt (that is, in the Empire of Rome, through the inſtigation of Satan) ſhall not always continue, but ſhall break up after a certain time, and ſhall ceaſe for a thouſand years, &c.

The time of binding up of Satan.

Now at what time and year this Perſecution, that is, the fury and rage of Satan ſhould ceaſe, is alſo declared in the Apocalyps before; where in the 11 and 13 Chapters we read, that the Beaſt afore mentioned ſhall have power to work his malice and miſchief the ſpace of 42 months, and no more, and then that Satan ſhould be locked up for a thouſand years. The computation of which months, being counted by Sabbaths of years (after the example of the ſixty nine Weeks of Daniel, Chapter 11.) it doth bring us to the juſt year and time, when that terrible Perſecution in the Primitive Church ſhould end, and ſo it did. For, give to every month a Sabbath of years, that is, reckon every month for seven years, and that maketh 294 years, which was the full time between the eighteenth year of Tiberius, (under whom Christ suffered) and the death of Maxentius the last Persecutor of the Primitive Church in Europe, subdued by Constantinus, as may appear by the calculating the years, months and days between the said year of the Reign of Tiberius, and the later end of Maxentius; and so have you the supputation of the year and time when Satan was first bound up, after he had raged in the Primitive Church two and forty months. Which months, as is said, being counted by Sabbaths of years, after the usual manner of the Scripture, amount to 294 years; and so much was the full time between the Passion of our Lord, which was in the 18th year of Tiberius, unto the last year of Maxentius.

Apoc. 11. 13. 42 months in the Apocalyps declared.

KING 3. Rev. 7.

Supputation of Years between the beginning and ceasing of the persecutions in the Primitive Church.

Vide supra.

And here by the way cometh a note to be observed, That forsomuch as by the number of these 42 months specified in the Apocalyps, the Empire of Rome must necessarily be confessed to be the first beast; therefore it must by like necessity follow, the Bishop of Rome to be the second beast, with the two Horns of the Lamb: for that he only hath and doth cause the said Empire of Rome to revive and to be magnified, and so doth not the Turk, but rather labours to the contrary. Wherefore let every Christian man be wise, and beware betime how he taketh the mark of the Beast, lest peradventure it follow upon him, that he drink of that terrible Cup of wrath mentioned, Apoc. chap. 14.

The Pope proved to be the 2d Beast mentioned in the Apoc. 13

Et hic bibet de vino iræ Dei Apo. 14.

Thirdly, It remaineth to be discussed touching the third point in this foresaid Prophesie, that as we have found out (through the help of Christ) the year and time of Satans binding, so we search out likewise the time and season of his loosing out, which by the testimony of Scripture was approved to be a thousand years after his binding up, and rightly according to the time appointed it came to pass. For if we number well by the Scripture the year of his binding up, which was from the Passion of our Lord 294 years, and add thereto a thousand years, it mounteth to 294; which was the very year when Ottomannus the first Turk began his Reign, which was the first spring and Wellhead of all these woful calamities that the Church of Christ hath felt both in Asia, Africa and Europe, almost these 300 years past. For so we find in Chronicles, that the Kingdom of the Turks being first divided into four Families, Anno 1280. at length the Family of Ottomannus prevailed, and thereupon came these whom we now call Turks, which was about the same time when Pope Boniface the 8th was Bishop of Rome.

The 2d part of the Prophecy for the loosing out of Satan

The beginning of Turks Empire

Where by the way, this is again to be noted, that after the decree of Transubstantiation was enacted in the Council of Laterane by Pope Innocent the third, the year of our Lord 1251, not long after, about the year of our Lord 1260, was stirred up the Power and Arms of the Oguzians, and of Orthogules Father of Ottomannus, who about the year of our Lord 1294, began first to vex the Christians about Pontus and Bithynia, and so beginning his Kingdom, Anno 1300, reigned 28 years, as is afore mentioned.

Transubstantiation. The time of the Turks.

Ex Leonico Chalcondyla lib. 1.

Mention was made before of Ezekiel prophesying against Gog, whose words divers Expositors do apply against the Turk, and are these, Thou shalt come from thy place out of the North parts, thou and much people with thee, all riding upon horses, a great and a mighty army, and thou shalt come up against my people of Israel as a cloud, to cover the Land. Thou shalt be in the later days, and I will bring thee upon my land, that the Heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes. Thus saith the Lord God, Art not thou he, of whom I have spoken in the old time by the hand of my servants the Prophets of Israel, that prophesied in those days and years, that I would bring thee upon them? At the same time also when Gog shall come against the Land of Israel, saith the Lord God, my wrath shall arise in mine anger, for in mine indignation, and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken it. Surely at that time there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel, so that the fishes of the sea, the fowls of the heaven, the beasts of the field, and all that move and creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the earth shall tremble at my presence; the mountains shall be overthrown; the stars shall fall, and every man shall fall to the ground, &c.

The Prophecy of Ezek. c. 38.

The Prophecies of Methodius, Hildegardis, and other concerning the Reign and Ruine of the Turks.

Methodius Prophesies.

UNTO these testimonies above excerpted out of the holy Scriptures, let us add also the Prophetical Revelations of Methodius, Hildegardis, Sibylla, and others. This Methodius is thought of some to be the same Methodius of whom Hierom and Suidas make mention; which was Bishop first of Olympus in Licia, then of Tyrus, and suffered Martyrdom in the last Persecution of the Primitive Church under Diocletian. Unto whom also Trithemius attributeth the Book entituled De quatuor novissimis temporibus. But that cannot be, forasmuch as the said Methodius doth cite and alledge the Master of Sentences, namely, in his second Book, and sixth Distinction, which Master of Sentences followed more than a thousand year after Christ; besides certain other fabulous matters contained in the same Book. Albeit, because he speaketh there of many things concerning the state of the Church under Antichrist, and the Reformation of Religion, as seemeth rightly to come to pass, and more is like to follow, I thought not to defraud the Reader thereof, leaving the credit of the Author to his Arbitrement, to esteem and judge of him as he seeth cause. Among divers other places of Methodius, prophecying of the later time, these words do follow. After that the children of Ishmael had multiplied in their generations to an infinite and innumerable multitude, in the desart aforesaid, they came out of the Wilderness of Araby, and entred into the habitable land, and fought with the Kings of the Gentiles, which were in the land of promise, and the land was filled with them. And after 70 Weeks, and half of their power wherewith they have subdued all the Kingdoms of the Gentiles, their heart was exalted, seeing themselves so to have prevailed, and to have conquered all things, &c. And afterward it followeth of the same matter in this sort.

The book of Methodius mistaken.

The Prophesies of Methodius concerning the Turks.

It shall come to pass that the said Seed of Ishmael shall issue out and obtain the whole World, with the Regions thereof, in the entring of peace, from the Land of Egypt unto Ethiopia; and from the Flood Euphrates unto India; and from the River Tygris to the entring of Nabaot, the Kingdom of Jonithus, the Son of Noah; and from the North unto Rome and Illyricum, Egypt and Thessalonica, and Albania, and so forth to the Sea Ponticum, which divideth the said Kingdoms from Germany and France; and their yoke shall be double upon the necks of all Nations and Gentiles; neither shall there be Nation or Kingdom under Heaven, which shall be able to stand against them in Battel, until the number of eight weeks of years, &c.

Eight weeks of years, counting every week for a Sabbath of years, that is, every day for a year, cometh to 56 years.

The first state or alteration of time concerning the coming of the Saracens.

Briefly, as in a gross summ, this shall suffice, to admonish the Reader touching the meaning and method of Methodius Prophecies, which Methodius, first describing the long and tedious afflictions of Christs Church, maketh mention of the Seed of Ishmael, which coming out of the parts and Deserts of Araby, shall destroy (saith he) and vanquish the whole earth. So that the Christians shall be given of God to the hands of the filthy Barbarians, to be slain, polluted, and captived; Persia, Armenia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, Syria, Egypt, the East parts, Asia, Spain, all Grecia, France, Germania, Agathonia, Sicilia. The Romans also shall be slain and put to flight: also the Islands of the Seas shall be brought to desolation and to captivity, and put to the sword. The which tribulation of the Christians shall be without mercy or measure; the ransom of Gold and Silver and other exactions intolerable, but especially the dwellers of Egypt and Syria shall be most in the affliction of those times: And Jerusalem shall be filled with multitudes of people brought thither in captivity, from the four Winds which are under Heaven. So that Beasts also, and Fowls, and Fish in the water, and the waters of the Sea shall be to them obedient. Cities and Towns, which were before full of people, shall be laid waste. Women with child shall be ript; their children sticked, Infants taken from their Mothers, and cast in the Streets, and none shall bury them. The rulers and sage of the People shall be slain; and thrown out to the Beasts. Churches shall be spoiled; the Priests destroyed; Virgins deflowred, and men compelled to ſell their children, and the coming of them ſhall be chaſtiſement without mercy, and with them ſhall go their four plagues, Captivity, Deſtruction, Perdition, and Deſolation: with much more, which for brevity I overpaſs. And this affliction, ſaith he, ſhall laſt eight weeks, or Sabbaths of years, which I take to ſignifie eight hundred years, &c.

Christians plagued by the Saracens.

men

The ſecond ſtate or alteration of the Chriſtians relieved of their plagues and tribulations

Secondly, After theſe terrible Plagues thus deſcribed by Methodius upon the Chriſtians, which he ſaith ſhall fall upon them for their wicked abominations recited in the firſt and ſecond Chapter of Saint Paul to the Romans; the ſaid Methodius afterward in this great diſtreſs of the Chriſtians, being out of all hope and comfort of relief, declareth and ſpeaketh of a certain King of the Greeks or Romans, which ſhall reſtore peace again to the Chriſtians. In which peace they ſhall reedifie their Cities and Manſions again; the Prieſts ſhall be delivered from their grievances, and men at that time ſhall reſt from their tribulations, and then ſhall the King of the Romans dwell in the City of Hieruſalem a week or Sabbath, and a half of times, &c.

Chriſtians abuſing Gods benefits.

The third alteration by the coming of the Turks.

Thirdly, During the time of this peace the ſaid Methodius ſaith, that men ſhall fall into licentious ſecurity, and careleſs life; and then according to the words of the Apoſtle, ſaying, When they ſhall ſay, Peace, peace, ſudden deſtruction ſhall fall upon them: Then (ſaith he) ſhall be opened the Gates of the North, and the beaſtly people ſhall break in, which King Alexander the Great did cloſe up within two mountains, making his prayer unto the Lord God, that he would bind up that beſtial and execrable people, leſt with their filthy and deteſtable pollutions they ſhould come out and pollute the holy Land. Whoſe interceſſion being heard, the Lord commanded them to be incloſed within two mountains in the North parts, to the deepneſs of twelve cubits. (which ſignifieth peradventure 1200 years) ſo that neither by witchcraft, nor by any means they could get out, or any might come unto them, until the time of the Lord appointed which are (ſaith he) the later times, and then according to the Prophecy of Ezechiel, in the latter time of the conſummation of the world, God and Magog out from the North ſhall come forth into the land of Iſrael, and ſhall work all this miſchief againſt Chriſtians above recited. And then (ſaith Methodius, proceeding in his Propheſies ſhall the King of the Romans, after he hath reigned in Jeruſalem a Sabbath of times, and a half, that is, (ſaith Methodius) ten years and a half, take the Crown from his head, and yield it up to the Croſs in Golgotha, where Chriſt was crucified, and ſhall die. And the Croſs with the Crown ſhall be taken into Heaven, which ſhall not appear again before the coming of the Lord.

The reign of Chriſtian Kings in Hieruſalem laſted 88 years. Ann. 1187. By this reſigning up the Crown to the Crucifix in Golgotha, is ſignified the ceaſing of the Chriſtians in Hieruſalem till the coming of Chriſt. By this Tribe of Dan, and the City Chorozaim Bethſaida, and Capernaum, to ſignifie Gods great malediction upon Antichriſt.

Fourthly, It followeth then moreover in the Propheſies of Methodius, which declareth that when the week or Sabbath, and half week of times ſhall end, and when the King of Romans ſhall give up his Crown in Jeruſalem, and die, Then immediately ſhall Antichriſt the ſon of perdition begin to appear, and be born in Jewry, of the Tribe of Dan, whereof alſo came Judas Iſcariot, and he ſhall be born (ſaith Methodius) in Chorozaim, and ſhall be bred in Bethſaida, and ſhall reign in Capernaum; to the which three Cities, Chriſt the Lord gave his third Væ. And whoes great tribulation ſhall increaſe and multiply in the days of this Antichriſt, and all Lordſhip and Dominion ſhall be deſtroyed, the Lord ſhall ſend his two faithful and dear ſervants, Enoch and Hely, to reprove and detect the falſe ſeducing and lying forgeries of this Antichriſt, openly before all men; ſo that the people ſeeing themſelves falſly beguiled and ſeduced by this ſon of perdition, coming out of the Temple diſſemblingly, to the deſtruction of many, ſhall leave and flie from him, and joyn themſelves to the ſaid two holy Prophets. Which ſon of perdition and Antichriſt ſeeing his proceedings ſo to be reproved, and brought into contempt, in his fury and anger ſhall kill the two Prophets of God. And then ſhall appear (ſaith Methodius) the ſign of the coming of the Son of Man, and he ſhall come in the clouds of Heavenly glory, and ſhall deſtroy the enemy with the ſpirit of his mouth, &c.

The deſtruction of Antichriſt.

INTERPRETATION.

{KING Hen. 8.}

The Interpretations.

TO theſe Propheſies and teſtimonies of Methodius, what credit is to be given, I leave it to the Reader. But if the meaning of his Propheſies go by ſuch order of times as is ſet and diſpoſed in his Book; he ſeemeth to deſcribe unto us four principal ſtates and alterations of times to come.

The firſt ſtate and alteration is by Mahumet and the Saracens, which be the off-ſpring and Sons of Iſmael, coming out of Arabie in the time of Heraclius Emperor of Conſtantinople, Ann. 630, which rebelling againſt Heraclius increaſed and prevailed ſtill more and more againſt the Chriſtians both in Aſia and Africa, and alſo in many places in Europe, eſpecially in Spain and Italy.

The coming of the Saracens.

The ſecond ſtate and alteration he propheſieth to come by the Turk, which firſt coming out of the far parts of Scythia, that is, out of the North, firſt overcame the Saracens, ſubdued the Perſians, and afterward joyning together with the Saracens, conquered the Kingdom of Hieruſalem, about the year of our Lord 1187, then ſubdued Syria and moſt part of Aſia, &c. And theſe be they which Methodius ſeemeth to mean of, ſpeaking of the vile and miſerable people cloſed up of the Lord God, at the interceſſion of Alexander the great Captain in the North, between two mountains the deepneſs of twelve cubits, leſt that filthy corrupt Nation ſhould pollute the earth with their wickedneſs. Whereby are meant theſe Turks, which coming out from the uttermoſt parts of the North, that is, out of Scythia, and the Mountains of Caucaſus, or elſe Imaus, were with-holden and kept back of Almighty God for Chriſts cauſe, that they might not harm his Church a long ſpace, during the time of twelve hundred years; yea, and then the ſins of the Chriſtians ſo deſerving, they were permitted of Almighty God to break out, and to invade the Church; who now joyning together with the Saracens, have wrought and daily do work, all theſe grievances againſt our Chriſtian Brethren; as we ſee this day is come to paſs, and more is like to follow, except the hand of the Lord, which let them out, do pluck them in again.

The coming of the Turks.

Scythia juxta Caucaſum

Victory of the Chriſtians got againſt the Saracens. Ex Paulo Jovio.

The City of Hieruſalem recovered by the Chriſtians from the Saracens. Hieruſalem poſſeſſed of the Chriſtians 88 years. Hieruſalem won from the Chriſtians by the Turks, Ann. 1187.

Moreover, in the mean ſpace, between the reign of the Saracens and the Turks, where Methodius ſpeaketh of the King of Romans, which ſhould reſtore quietneſs to the Church, and ſhould reign in Hieruſalem a Sabbath of times, and half a Sabbath; thereby ſeemeth to be underſtood the Voyage of Chriſtian Princes out of the Weſt-parts of Europe, under Gotfridus Duke of Lotharing, and his two Brethren, and many other Chriſtian Princes, with 300000 Footmen, and 100000 Horſemen; who fighting againſt the Saracens, recovered again from them the City of Hieruſalem, in the year of our Lord 1099, which City before had been in their poſſeſſion the term of 490 years. After which Victory got, firſt Gotfridus, then Baldwinus his Brother, and other after them, to the number of nine Chriſtian Kings reigned in Jeruſalem the ſpace of eighty eight years, and after that through the diſcord of the Chriſtians not agreeing amongſt themſelves, both Hieruſalem and Syria, with other parts of Aſia beſides, were ſubdued and won of the Turks, which to this day they keep ſtill. And this was in the year of our Lord 1187.

The coming and marks of Antichriſt deſcribed.

About which year and time (as followeth in Methodius) when the City of Hieruſalem ſhall be won of the Turks, then ſhall Antichriſt begin to be born of the Tribe of Dan, of whom came Judas Iſcariot, and ſhall be born in Chorozaim, and bred in Bethſaida, and reign in Capernaum; meaning that this Antichriſt or ſon of perdition ſhall be full of Gods malediction, noted by Judas Iſcariot, and theſe three Cities againſt whom were ſpoken thrice Væ of the Lord.

And here is moreover to be noted, that Methodius ſaith not that Antichriſt ſhall be born among the Saracens or Turks, but among the people of God, and of the Tribe of Iſrael. Whereby is to be collected, that Antichriſt ſhall not come of the Saracens, nor Turks, but ſhall come up among the Chriſtians, and (ſaith Methodius) ſhall ſeem to come out of the Temple, to deceive many, &c. Whereby the Pope may ſeem, rather than the Saracen or the Turk, to be deſcribed, forſomuch as the Pope being elected, nouriſhed and reigning in the midſt of Gods people at Rome, ſitteth in the Temple, and very place of Chriſt, and (no doubt) deceiveth many, &c.

And

KING 1 Men. 7.

The time of Antichriſt.

And now to come to the time aſſigned of Methodius, here is to be added alſo, that which we read in Antoninus, Par. 3. that about this ſaid preſent time, a certain Biſhop of Florence preached that Antichriſt was then coming. But the Pope commanded him to keep ſilence, and to ſpeak no more thereof. Now why the Pope ſo did, and why he could not abide the preaching of Antichriſt, I refer it to them which liſt to muſe more upon the matter. This is certain, that about this time here aſſigned by Methodius, came Petrus Lombardus, Gratianus, and Pope Innocent the Third, the firſt Authors and Patrons of Tranſubſtantiation. At which time alſo began the firſt Perſecution by the Church of Rome againſt the Albigenſes or Waldenſes, about Tolous, Bitures, and Avinion. Of whom 17000 the ſame time were ſlain, by the Popes Croſſed Soldiers. Among whom Frier Dominick was then the chiefeſt doer. About which time alſo was Frier Francis, of which two came the two Orders of Begging Friers: all which began much about one time together, Ann. 1215, which were near within twenty years after the Kingdom of the Chriſtians was taken of the Turks, according to the Propheſie aboveſaid.

Tranſubſtantiation.

The firſt Perſecution by the Church of Rome.

Dominick. Frier Francis.

Ex Antonin. part 3. tit. 19 cap. 1.

The Orders of Friers began.

It followeth moreover in Methodius, That in his time the Lordſhip and Domination ſhall ceaſe and give over, &c. The verity whereof we ſee now accompliſhed in the Pope. For where the Pope with his double Sword and Triple Crown doth come, there all Secular power muſt give place, both Emperors, Kings and Princes muſt ſtoop.

The Pope exalting himſelf above Kings and Emperors.

So King John yielded up his Crown to Pandulphus the Popes Legate, and was in his hands five days, An. 1217.

Childerick the French King had his Crown taken from him, and given to Pepin, Ann. 747.

Henry the Fourth Emperor, was forced to ſubmit himſelf and his Scepter to Pope Hildebrand, Ann. 1077.

Notes of Antichriſt.

Fredericus Barbaroſſa Emperor, in St. Marks Church in Venice, was fain to lay down his neck under Pope Alexanders feet, Ann. 1277. Which Frederick alſo before was fain to hold the Stirrop to Pope Adrian, &c.

What ſhould I ſpeak of the Ambaſſador of Venice, named Franciſcus Dandulus? who being ſent to Pope Clement the Fifth, was made to lye under the Popes Table like a Dog, and gather up the Crumbs, mentioned in Sabell. Ænn. 9. Lib. 7.

Henry the Third being Emperor, had his Diadem firſt ſet on with the feet of the Pope, and afterward ſtroken off from his head with the Popes foot again.

And what ſhall I ſpeak more hereof? when as Carolus Magnus ſubmitted himſelf ſo low to kiſs the feet of Pope Leo, Ann. 800.

It followeth then in the Prophecy of Methodius, That in the tribulation of thoſe days ſhall be ſent from God two ſpecial Prophets, Enoch and Hely, to reprove and diſcloſe the fraudulent falſhood of Antichriſt, and that many ſeeing his deluſion, ſhall forſake him, and follow them: Whereat Antichriſt being grieved, ſhall kill them, &c.

Enoch and Hely.

John Hus and Hierome of Prague.

Vid. in primo Tom. operum Joan. Hus de Anatomia Hieronymi Pragenſis.

We never read yet in any ſtory of any ſuch two Prophets to be ſent either to the Saracens, or to the Turks: whereas againſt the Pope we read John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, two learned Martyrs and Prophets of God to have been ſent, and to have reproved and deſcribed the Anatomy of Antichriſt, and at laſt to have been burned for their labour. And what Prophet can ſpeak more plainly, either Enoch or Hely, than did Hierome of Prague, prophecying of the coming of Martin Luther, an hundred years after him? when the Pope and his fellows ſhould anſwer to God and to him. The time we ſee came juſt. Now let the Pope ſee with his fellows, what anſwer they can make.

Hierome of Prague a Prophet and a Martyr.

The nearneſs of the Lords judgment.

It followeth further in Methodius, concluding his Propheſie, And then (ſaith he) ſhall appear the coming of the ſon of man in the clouds of Heaven, with celeſtial glory, &c.

Wherefore after the burning of theſe two notable Prophets, with many other thouſands burned alſo ſince their time by the Biſhop of Rome, it is to be thought that the coming of Chriſts judgment in the clouds, is not far off. Veni cito Domine, Amen.

And thus much touching Methodius, of whoſe Propheſies, how much or how little is to be eſteemed, I leave it indifferent unto the Reader. For me it ſhall ſuffice ſimply to have recited his words, as I find them in his Book contained; noting this by the way, that of this Book of Methodius, De noviſſimis temporibus, neither Hierome in his Catalogue, nor Suidas, nor yet Aventinus in the place where he intreateth purpoſely of ſuch Propheſies, maketh any mention. As touching Hildegardis and Brigit, and other whom the French call Bardi, for their Songs and Prophetical Verſes, ſufficient hath been alledged before out of Aventinus: who in his third Book of Chronicles, writing of the teſtimonies of Hildegard, Brigit and Bardi, ſeemeth to ground upon them, That the Turks, whether we will or not, ſhall have their Imperial ſeat at Colen; and I pray God that it come not to paſs, that the Turk do giue ſome attempt againſt England by the Seas, before that he come to Colen by land.

Brevity cauſeth me to cut off many teſtimonies and revelations of theſe above ſaid, or elſe I could here rehearſe the Prophetical words of Brigit, Lib. 4. Cap. 57. concerning the City and Church of Rome, which as ſhe ſaith, muſt be purged and ſcowred with three things, to wit, with ſharp ſword, with fire, and with the plough, and that God will do with that City, as one that removeth plants out of one place unto another: and finally that the City of Rome ſhall ſuſtain the ſentence, as if a Judg ſhould command the skin to be flain off, the blood to be drawn from the fleſh to be cut in ſmall pieces, and the bones thereof to be broken, ſo that all the marrow may be quiſed from the ſame, &c. But for brevity I let Brigit paſs, and will declare ſomething out of Erythrea Sibylla, in her Book of Propheſies found in St. Georges Church in Venice; where ſhe prophecying many thing of the Birth of Chriſt under Auguſtus, and of the Birth of John Baptiſt, and of Baptiſm, of the Apoſtles, of the Converſion of the Gentiles, and of Conſtantinus, &c. hath theſe words, After that the peaceable Bull ſhall conclude all the climes of the world under tribute, in thoſe days a heavenly Lamb ſhall come; and the days ſhall come, when the power of the flowing ſtream ſhall be magnified in water, and the Lion the Monarch ſhall be converted to the Lamb, which ſhall ſhine to all men, & ſubvert Kingdoms.

The Propheſies of Erythrea Sibylla named Eripbila.

Ex Erythrea Sibylla in ſuo Naxiographo 3. Imperiali ſcripto.

Moreover ſaith Sibylla, In the later age God ſhall be humbled, and the Divine off-ſpring ſhall be abaſed, and Deity ſhall be joyned with Humanity, the Lamb ſhall lye in Hay, and God and man ſhall be bred up under a Maidens attendance, ſigns and wonders ſhall go before amongſt the circumciſed, &c. Alſo, An aged woman ſhall conceive a child, having having knowledg of things to come. The world ſhall marvel at Bootes (the Star) which ſhall be a leader to his birth. He having thirty two feet, and ſix thumbs, ſhall chuſe himſelf out of fiſhers and abjects, the number of Twelve, and one Devil, not with ſword nor with battel, &c. afterward this followeth moreover in Sibylla, ſaying, * The health of the Lamb lying ſhall be clothed with a few ſpoils of the Lion. Black ſhall be turned into red. He ſhall ſubdue the City of Æneas, and Kings, but in the Book of the Fiſhes: In dejection and poverty he ſhall conquer riches, and ſhall tread down pride with his own death. In the night he ſhall riſe up, and be changed, he ſhall live and reign, and all theſe things ſhall be conſummated, and regeneration (or new things) be made: at laſt he ſhall judg both good and evil, &c. And thus much briefly collected out of Sibylla Erythrea, concerning Chriſt our Lord.

* The Lamb lying, that is, the Church, without travel ſhall be maintained with ſome living or poſſeſſions of the chief rulers.

Furthermore, touching the ſtate and courſe of the Church, and of Antichriſt, it followeth in the ſaid Sibylla, ſaying, Then ſhall four winged Beaſts riſe up in teſtimony, they ſhall ſound out with Trumpets the name of the Lamb, ſowing righteouſneſs, and the Law irreprehenſible. Againſt which Law the Beaſt ſhall gain-ſtand, and the abomination and froth of the Dragon. But a marvellous Star ſhall riſe, having the Image of the four Beaſts, and ſhall be in a marvellous multitude; he ſhall bring light to the Greeks, and ſhall illuſtrate the world. The Lake of the fiſher ſhall bring the name of the Lamb with power into the City of Æneas, unto the end of the world (or time.) Then in the City of Æneas the Star joyned ſhall [illegible] were bound of the Devil, and thereof he ſhall rejoyce and glory, and glorious ſhall be his end, &c.

By theſe 4 Beaſts is meant the 4 Monarchies of the World, that is, the multitude of all the Kingdom of the Gentiles, as in the Apocal. By the City of Æneas is meant Rome.

After this Sibylla writing (as it ſeemeth) of Antichriſt, importeth theſe words, And it ſhall come to paſs, that an horrible Beaſt ſhall come out of the Eaſt, whoſe roaring ſhall be heard to Africk, to the people of Carthage, which hath ſeven heads, and ſcepters innumerable, feet 663. He ſhall gainſtand the Lamb, to blaſpheme his Teſtament, encreaſing the waters of the Dragon. The Kings and Princes of the world he ſhall burn in intolerable ſweat, and they ſhall not diminiſh his feet. And then two ſtars like to the firſt ſtar ſhall ariſe againſt the beaſt, and ſhall not prevail, till the abomination ſhall be come, and the will of the Lord ſhall be conſummate. And again ſpeaking of the ſame matter he inferreth theſe words of the foreſaid two ſtars above mentioned. And toward the later days two bright ſtars ſhall ariſe, raiſing up men lying dead in their ſins, being like to the firſt ſtar, having the face of the four Beaſts, which ſhall reſiſt the beaſt, and the waters of the Dragon, teſtifying (or preaching) the name and law of the Lamb, the deſtruction of abomination and judgment, and ſhall diminiſh his waters, but they ſhall be weakned in the bread of affliction, and they ſhall riſe again in ſtronger force, &c.

The Prophecy of Sibylla of Antichriſt. The 663. feet do mean the years of his reign.

These two ſtars ſeem to mean Enoch and Elias, who being put to death by the Pope, their Doctrine roſe again more ſtrongly than before.

And it followeth moreover, After the abomination, then ſhall truth be revealed, and the Lamb ſhall be known, to whom Regions and Countries ſhall ſubmit their necks, and all earthly men ſhall agree together in one, to come into one fold, and to be ruled under one diſcipline, and after this ſhall be but a ſmall time, &c.

And ſhortly after, the ſaid Sibylla ſpeaking of the later judgment to come, declared how all the abominations of ſins ſhall come before the Lamb; and that terrible fire ſhall fall from Heaven, which ſhall conſume all earthly things created unto the top of Heaven, &c.

Ex libro cui titulus, onus Eccleſiæ.

And thus much out of Sibylla, touching her Prophecies of Chriſt and Antichriſt, according as I found them alledged of a certain Catholick Romiſh Writer, in his Book intituled Onus Eccleſiæ, excerpted, as he ſaith, out of the Library of St. George in the City of Venice.

Philip Melanchthon in his Preface upon Bartholomæus Georgienitz Peregrinus, writing of the origine and manners of the Turks, alledged a certain Prophecy of Hiltenus, mentioned hereafter, which foretold that the Turks ſhould bear rule in Italy and in Germany, Anno 1600.

5 KING Hen. 7.

Now it remaineth, in concluſion of theſe Prophecies of the Turks, ſomething to ſay of the Turks own Prophecies, concerning the enduring and ending of their own Kingdom, whoſe prophetical Prognoſtication, being taken out of their own Language, and their own Books, I thought here to inſert, as I find it alledged in the Book of the foreſaid Bartholomæus Georgienitz, as followeth:

A Turkiſh Prophecy in the Perſian tongue, of the Reign and Ruine of the Turks.

PAtiſſahomoz ghelur, Ciaferum memleketi alur, keuzul almai alur, Kapzeiler; iediy ladegh Gyaur keleci eſiknaſſe, on ikiyladegh onlarn beghlig eder: euſi iapar, baghi diker baheſai baghlar, oglikezi olur, ovichi yldenſora Hriſtianon Keleci eſichar, ol Turchigeteſſine tus chure.

The ſame in Latine.

IMperator noſter veniet, ethnici Principis regnum capiet, rubrum quoque pomum capiet, in ſuam poteſtatem redigetur: quod ſi ſeptimum uſque annum Chriſtianorum gladius non inſurrexit, uſque ad duodecimum annum eis dominabitur. Domos ædificabit, vineas plantabit, hortos ſepibus muniet, liberos procreabit, & poſt duodecimum annum, apparebit Chriſtianorum gladius, qui Turcum quaqua verſum in fugam aget.

By the Prince of the Gentiles the Turke do here mean the Kingdoms and Dominions of the Chriſtians; whom they call Gentiles, becauſe they are not circumciſed after their manner.

The ſame in Engliſh.

OUR Emperor ſhall come; he ſhall get the Kingdom of the Gentiles Prince; alſo he ſhall take the red Apple, and ſhall bring it under his ſubjection; and if the ſword of the Chriſtians ſhall not riſe unto the ſeventh year, he ſhall have dominion over them unto the twelfth year. He ſhall build Houſes, plant Vineyards, ſhall hedge about his Orchards, ſhall procreate Children; and after the 12th year ſhall appear the ſword of the Chriſtians, which ſhall put the Turk to flight every where.

They which make declaration of this Turkiſh Prophecy, do expound this 12th year to ſignifie the 12th year after the winning of Conſtantinople; which Conſtantinople, ſay they, is meant by the red Apple; and after that twelve year, ſay they, ſhall riſe the ſword of the Chriſtians, &c. And this Prophecy being written and tranſlated out of the Perſian Tongue, with this Expoſition upon the ſame, it is to be found in the Book of Bartholomeus Georgienitz. Albeit, concerning the expoſition thereof, it ſeemeth not to be true which is there ſpoken of the 12th year after the winning of Conſtantinople, being now 100 years ſince the winning thereof.

The Expoſition of the Turks Prophecy. Ex Bartholo. Georgienitz.

Wherefore it may rather ſeem probable, that by the 7th and 12th year of the Turks, this to be the meaning, that if the 7th of the Ottoman Turks do eſcape the ſword of the Chriſtians, they ſhall continue, build and plant, &c. until the 12th Turk, which is this Solymannus, and then after that ſhall riſe the Chriſtians ſword, which ſhall put them to flight, and vanquiſh them in all Quarters. And this Expoſition may ſeem to accord with the place of Geneſis; wherein is written of Iſmael, that he had twelve Sons, and no more: So that this Solymannus being the 12th Turk after Ottomannus, may (by the grace of Chriſt) be the laſt; whom we heard credibly to be reported, at the Printing hereof, to be dead. But howſoever this Prophecy is to be taken, it appeareth by their own Oracles, that at length they ſhall be overcome by the Chriſtians.

Another Expoſition. Gen. 25.

KING Hen. 7.

A Table describing the times and years of the Saracens, Turks and Tartarians, for the better explaining of the Story above prefixed.

The Saracens begin their reign.

Anno 632, began the Kingdom of the Saracens or Arabians, after the death of Mahumet the first Ring-leader of the mischief, which Saracens reigning in Babylon over Persia and Asia, continued about 198 Years.

Anno 667, Jerusalem was taken of the Saracens. These Saracens after they had subdued Ormisda King of Persia, set up to themselves a new Kingdom, calling their chief Prince Calipha, which signifieth a General Lord; and under him Seriphes, that is an under Prince; and again under him their Soldan; which is a ruler or Captain; under the which Soldans all the Provinces were divided. And thus ruled they the space above said of 198 years.

The Egyptian Saracens or Sultans.

Anno 703, The Egyptians being weary of their subjection under the Romans, called for help of the Saracen Calipha; and so casting off the Romans, submitted themselves to the Law of the Saracens, and had also their Calipha, and their Babylon called Cairus, where their Calipha continued unto Saraco or Syracinus

447 years.

The Saracens Kingdom ceaseth.

Ann. 810, Maugimetus, or Muchumetus the chief Sultan of Persia, being at variance with Imbraell the Sultan of Babylon, sent for the aid of the Turks out of Scythia: by whom when he had got the victory against the Babylonians, the said Turks shortly after conquered the Persians, and subdued their Country within the space of 20 years.

Ann. 830, The Saracens being expulsed out of Asia by the Turks, wandred about Africk, Spain and Italy, and were in divers places dispersed, and so remain.

The Turks Kingdom beginneth.

Ann. 830, The Turks after they had expulsed the Saracens out of Asia, began to reign in Asia, in Persia, and in Arabia, and there reigned without interruption, till the coming of the Tartarians, the space of 192 years.

Ann. 1009, The Turks wan the City of Hierusalem from the Saracens, which City the Sultan of Egypt wan again from the Turks shortly after, and possessed the same till the coming of Gotfridus.

Ann. 1051, Began the first King of the Turks, called Zaduke, to reign in Asia, and joyned League with Calipha of Egypt, and there reigned till the conquest of Gotfridus and the Christians the space of 46 years.

Ann. 1078, Solymannus Nephew to Aspasalem the Turkish King in Asia, otherwise called Turquinia, subdued Cappadocia, which had continued now the space of 500y ears.

Ann. 1099, Gotfridus Bulion, Duke of Lotharing a Christian Prince, taking his Voyage into Asia with 700000 Christian Soldiers, first got the City of Nicea against the Sultan of the Turks; then Lycaonia, Silicia, Syria; afterward Mesopotamia, and Comagena: then Antiochia, Ann. 1098. and the next year recovered Jerusalem, being then in the hands of the Saracens, which they a little before had won from the Turks, as is aforesaid. After this Gotfridus succeeded eight Christian Kings, which kept the Kingdom of Jerusalem and Asia, both from the Turks and Saracens, the space of 88 years.

Ann. 1100, The Georgians, which be a people of Armenia the greater, vanquished the Turks out of the Kingdom of Persia, after they had cut their King in pieces. Whereby the Turks flying to Cappadocia, there remained under Solomon, and joyned themselves to the Soldan of Egypt, and waxed then strong in Asia minor, called now Turquinia.

Anno 1170, When Almericus the Seventh King of Hierusalem after Gotfridus had overcome the Calipha, or Sultan of Egypt, the Sultan being overcome, called for the help of Saracon the Sultan of Syria. This Saracon after he had expulsed the Christians out of Egypt, turned his power against the Sultan of Egypt, and vanquished him, took to himself the Kingdom of Egypt: which Kingdom he with his posterity did hold till the coming of the Tartarians, and the Mamaluches about the space of 88 years.

Anno 1187, Saladinus the Nephew of Saracon the Sultan of Egypt, perceiving the dissention among the Christian States of Palestina, got Antioch, where he slew Raymundus the Prince with his own hands: Then got Tiberias: From thence he went to Accon, where he took Guido King of Jerusalem, and Master of the Templars, prisoners; for whose ransom the Turk had Ascalon yielded up to him of the Christians. That done, he subdued Jerusalem, which had been in the hands of the Christians before, the space of 88 years.

Anno 1189, Frederick the Emperor, Philip the French King, Richard King of England made their Voyage into Asia, where Frederick, washing in a River at Cilicia, died. In this voyage at the siege of Acon, Saladinus wan the field of our men, of whom 2000 were slain in the chase. Acon at length was got of the Christians. King Richard got Cyprus. The two Kings fell at strife. Philip retired home without any good doing. King Richard laid siege to Jerusalem, but in vain, and so returning homeward, was taken near to Vienna in Austria, after he had taken truce before with the Soldan, upon such condition as pleased him. And this good speed had the Popes sending out against the Turks.

Ann. 1215, There was another Council holden at Rome by Pope Innocent the third, where was Enacted a new Article of our Faith for Transubstantiation of Bread and Wine to be turned into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. In this Council also great excitation was made by the Pope, and great preparation was through all Christendom to set forward for recovery of the Holy Land. A mighty army was collected of Dukes, Lords, Knights, Bishops and Prelates, that if Gods blessing had gone with them, they might have gone throughout all Asia and India.

Transubstantiation.

An. 1219, The Christians after eighteen months siege, got a certain Town in Egypt, called Damiata, or Elipolis, with much ado, but not much to the purpose. For afterward as the Christian Army of the Popes sending went about to beliege the City Cairus, or Babylon, the Sultan through his subtil train so intrapped and inclosed them within the danger of Nilus, that they were constrained to render again the City of Damiata, with their prisoners, and all the furniture thereof as they found it, into the Soldans hand, and glad so with their lives to pass

paſs forward to Tyrus. Anno 1221.

In the mean time the Egyptian Turk cauſed the City of Jeruſalem to be raſed, that it ſhould ſerve to no uſe to the Chriſtians. What great thing elſe was doſſe in that voyage, it doth not greatly appear in ſtories. Albeit Fredericus the Second Emperor was not unfruitfully there occupied, and much more might have done, had it not been for the violence and perſecution of the Biſhop of Rome againſt him; whereby he was inforced to take truce with the Sultan for ten years, and ſo returned. After which things done, not many years after, at length the laſt City of all belonging to the Chriſtians, which was Ptolomais, or Akers, was alſo taken from them by the Sultan, ſo that now the Chriſtians had not one foot left in all Aſia.

Vid. ſupra.

An. 1230. Thus the Chriſtians being driven out of Aſia by the Sultans and Turks, yet the ſaid Turks and Sultans did not long enjoy their victory. For eſtſoons the Lord ſtirred up againſt them the Tartarians, who breaking into Aſia by the Ports of Caſpius ſubdued divers parts of Aſia, namely about Comana, Colchis, Iberia, Albania, &c. Theſe Tartarians as they had got many Captives in their wars; ſo for gain they uſed to ſhip them over cuſtomably to Alexandria in Egypt to be ſold; which ſervants and captives Melechſala the great Sultan was glad to buy to ſerve him in his wars. Which captives and ſervants after they had continued a certain ſpace in Egypt, and through their valiant ſervice grew in favour and eſtimation with the ſaid Melechſala, and began more to increaſe in number and ſtrength; at length they ſlew him, and took to themſelves the name and Kingdom of the Sultan. And thus ceaſed the ſtock of Saracon and Saladinus aforementioned, which continued in Egypt, about the ſpace, as is ſaid, of Tartariani. Ports Caſpia — 100 years. — Saladins ſtock in Egypt ceaſeth.

An. 1240. After the death of Melechſala, the Army of theſe foreſaid Raſcals and captives ſet up to themſelves a King of their own company, whom they called Turquemenius. Who to fill up the number of their company that it ſhould not diminiſh, deviſed this order, to get or to buy Chriſtian mens children, taken young from their parents, and the mothers lap; whom they uſed ſo to bring up, to make them to deny Chriſt, and to be circumciſed, and inſtructed in Mahumets Law, and afterward to be trained in the feats of war; and theſe were called Mamaluchi. Among whom this was their order, that none might be advanced to be King but out of their own number, or elſe choſen by them; neither that any ſhould be made Knights or Horſemen but only the Children of Chriſtians which ſhould deny Chriſt before, called Mamaluchi. Alſo it was among them provided, that to this dignity neither Saracens nor Jews ſhould be admitted. Item, that the ſucceſſion thereof ſhould not deſcend to the children and off-ſpring of theſe Mamaluchi. Alſo that the ſucceſſion of the Crown ſhould not deſcend to the children of the foreſaid Sultan, but ſhould go by voice and election. The Tartarians with Turquemenius their King, about this time obtained Turquia, that is, Aſia minor, from the Turks, and within two years after, prevailing againſt the Turks, expelled them from their Kingdom, and ſo continued theſe Mamaluchi reigning over Egypt, and a great part of Aſia, till the time of Tomumbeius their laſt King, which was deſtroyed and hanged at the Gates of Memphis, by Zelymus the Turk, Father to this Solymannus, as in his Hiſtory is declared. Theſe Mamaluchi continued the ſpace of Mamaluchi in Egypt. — 260 years. — Vide ſupra.

Ann. 1245. Theſe Tartarians ranging through the Countries of the Georgians, and all Armenia, came as far as Iconium, which was then the Imperial City of the Turks.

{KING Hen. 7.}

Ann. 1289. The Soldan of Egypt and Babylon got from the Chriſtians Tripolis, Tyrus, Sidon, and Berithus in Syria.

Ann. 1291. Laſtly, Ptolomais, which alſo is called Akers, was ſupriſed by the ſaid Soldan, raced and caſt down to the ground, and all the Chriſtians therein (which were not many left) were ſlain. And this was the laſt City which the Chriſtians had in Aſia. So that now the Chriſtians have not one foot (as is ſaid before) left in all Aſia. Thus the Egyptian Soldans and the Tartarians reigned and ranged over the moſt part of Aſia above the Turks, till the reign of Ottomannus the Great Turk, about the ſpace of 80 years.

¶ And thus have ye the whole diſcourſe of the Turkiſh ſtory, with their Names, Countries, Towns, Dominions, alſo with their times, continuance, interruptions and alterations, in order deſcribed, and in years diſtinguiſhed: Which otherwiſe in moſt Authors and Writers be ſo confuſed, that it is hard to know diſtinctly, what difference is between the Saracens, Turks, Tartarians, the Sultans or Soldans, Mamalukes, or Janizarits; what is their Caliphs, their Seriphes, their Sultan, or Baſſa; in what times they began, and how long, and in what order, years they reigned. All which in this preſent Table manifeſtly to thine eye may appear.

¶ Wherein this thou haſt moreover (gentle Reader) to conſider, which is worthy the noting, how the Biſhop of Rome all this ſeaſon, from the firſt beginning of the Turks reign, hath not ceaſed from time to time continually, calling upon Chriſtian Princes and ſubjects to take the Croſs, and to war againſt the Turks; whereupon ſo many great voyages have been made to the Holy Land, and ſo many Battels fought againſt the Turk and Soldan for winning the holy Croſs; and yet no lucky ſucceſs hath followed thereof hitherto, nor ever came it proſperouſly forward, whatſoever through the exciting of that Biſhop hath been attempted againſt that great enemy of the Lord; inſomuch that the Chriſtians have loſt not only all that they had in Aſia, but alſo are ſcarce able to defend that little they have in Europe againſt his violence. What the cauſe is of this hard luck of the Biſhops doings, it is hard for man to define. Let men muſe as their mind leadeth, and as the Goſpel ſaith. He that hath eyes to ſee, let him ſee. This is certain, that as there hath lacked no care nor diligence in the Biſhop of Rome, to ſtir men up to that buſineſs; ſo on the Princes behalf there hath lacked no courage nor ſtrength of men, no contribution of expences, no ſupportation of charges, no furniture or abilement of war; only the bleſſing of God ſeemeth to have lacked. The reaſon and cauſe whereof I would it were ſo eaſie to be reformed, as it may be quickly conſtrued. For what man beholding the life of us Chriſtians, will greatly marvel why the Lord goeth not with our army to fight againſt the Turks? And if my verdict might here have place for me to add my cenſure, there appeareth to me another cauſe in this matter, yet greater than this aforeſaid: which to make plain and evident, in full diſcourſe of words, leiſure now doth not permit. Briefly to touch what I conceive, my opinion is this, that if the ſincere Doctrine of Chriſtian Faith, delivered and left unto us in the word of God, had not been ſo corrupted in the Church of Rome; or if the Biſhop of Rome would yet reclaim his impure Idolatry and prophanations, and admit Chriſt the Lamb of God to ſtand alone, without our impure additions, to be our only juſtification, according to the free promiſe of Gods grace; I nothing doubt, but the power of this Faith, grounding only upon Chriſt the Son of God, had both framed our lives into a better diſpoſition; and alſo ſoon would, or yet will bring down the pride of that proud Holofernes. But otherwiſe, if the Biſhop of Rome will not gently give place to the mild voice of Gods word, I think not contrary, but he ſhall be compelled at laſt to give place and room to the Turk whether he will or not. And yet notwithſtanding, when both the Turk and the Pope ſhall do againſt it what they can, the truth and grace of Gods Teſtament ſhall fructifie and increaſe by ſuch means as the Lord ſhall work, which beginneth already (praiſe to the Lord) to come graciouſly and luckily forward in moſt places.

Why the Pope cannot prevail againſt the Turks.

God offended with Idolatry & wrong faith of the Chriſtians.

A Prayer againſt the Turks.

A Prayer againſt the Turks.

O Eternal Lord God, Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Creator and diſpoſer of all things, juſt, gracious, and wiſe only, in the name and reverence of thy Son Jeſus, we proſtrate our ſelves, deſiring thine Omnipotent Majeſty to look down upon theſe afflicted times of thy poor Creatures and Servants; relieve thy Church, increaſe our Faith, and confound our enemies: and as thou haſt given thine only begotten Son unto us, promiſing with him life to all that ſhall believe upon his name; ſo incline the obedience of our Faith to thy promiſes in him, that our hearts may be far off from all other ſinful additions and prophane inventions, which are beſides him, and not in him, grounded upon thy will and promiſe. And grant (we beſeech thee) to thy Church, more and more to ſee how terrible a thing it is, to ſet up any other means or help of Salvation, but only in him whom thou only haſt ſent and ſealed.

Coloſſ. 2. iſh Agarens have riſen up againſt us. Many hard and ſtraight ways we have paſſed, but the ways of the Lord we have not found. Much coſt we have beſtowed on bread that ſwageth no hunger, but that bread which only feedeth and cometh freely we have not taſted. We have ſailed far and near in Barks of our own building, but have not kept within the Ark only of thy promiſe, and therefore theſe floods have taken us. We have prayed much, but not in thine appointed Temple, and therefore we have not been heard. We have plowed and tilled, but without thy heifer, and therefore this untidy ground of ours bringeth forth ſo many weeds. We do fiſh apace and that all night, but becauſe we fiſh not on the right ſide of the Boat, in our fiſhing we catch never a fin. Our buildings be full of good intentions and great devotions, but becauſe the ground-work is not ſurely laid upon the rock of thy promiſe, the Eaſt wind riſeth and ſhaketh them all to ſhivers. We walk and have walked long after the precepts and doctrines of men, having a ſhew of wiſdom, but not a holding the head, where lyeth all our ſtrength, and therefore theſe Philiſtin Turks have hitherto ſo prevailed againſt us. Briefly, all the parts and bones of the body be ſhaken out of place. Wherefore we beſeech thee (O Lord) put to thy holy hand, and ſet them in the right joynt again. And finally, reduce this ſame thy myſtical body again to his perfect and natural head, which is thine only Son Jeſus Chriſt, and none other. For him only haſt thou annointed and appointed. Neither is there any other head that can miniſter ſtrength and nutriment to this body, but he alone; Foraſmuch as all other heads be ſinful, and are not able to ſtand in thy ſight, but make this body rather worſe than better. Only this thy welbeloved and perfect Son is he, in whom only dwelleth all our ſtrength and fullneſs; him only we confeſs and knowledge. For whom and with whom, we beſeech thee (O Lord God of hoaſts) grant to thy Church ſtrength and victory againſt the malicious fury of theſe Turks, Saracens, Tartarians, againſt Gog and Magog, and all the malignant rabble of Antichriſt, enemies to thy Son Jeſus our Lord and Saviour. Prevent their devices, overthrow their power, and diſſolve their Kingdom, that the Kingdom of thy Son ſo long oppreſſed, may recover and flouriſh over all; and that they which wretchedly be fallen from thee, may happily be reduced again into the fold of thy Salvation, through Jeſus Chriſt our only Mediator and moſt merciful Advocate. Amen.

Ann. 1500

IN this long digreſſion, wherein ſufficiently hath been deſcribed the grievous and tedious perſecution of the Saracens and Turks againſt the Chriſtians, thou haſt to underſtand (good Reader) and behold the image of a terrible Antichriſt evidently appearing both by his own doings, and alſo by the Scriptures, Propheſied and declared to us before. Now in comparing the Turk with the Pope, if a queſtion be asked, whether of them is the truer or greater Antichriſt, it were eaſie to ſee and judge, that the Turk is the more open and manifeſt enemy againſt Chriſt and his Church. But if it be asked whether of them two hath been the more bloody and pernicious adverſary to Chriſt and his members; or whether of them hath conſumed and ſpilt more Chriſtian blood, he with ſword, or this with fire and ſword together, neither is it a light matter to diſcern, neither is it my part here to diſcuſs, which do only write the Hiſtory, and the Acts of them both. Wherefore after the ſtory of the Turks thus finiſhed, now to reenter again there where we left, in deſcribing the domeſtical troubles and perſecutions here at home under the Biſhop of Rome; after the burning of Babram in Norfolk above declared. I ſignified alſo of another certain aged man, mentioned in an old written Chronicle borrowed of one in the Tower, intituled Polichron, (although I find not his name in the ſaid Chronicle expreſſed) which ſuffered the pains of burning in Smithfield, about the ſame time, which was the year of our Lord, 1500. Ex Polychron.

A queſtion whether is the greater Antichriſt the Turk or the Pope.

Babram and an old man Martyr. Vide ſupra. Ex ſcripto Polichronico.

This aged Father I ſuppoſe, is he of whom I find mention made in certain old Papers and Records of William Cary Citizen (albeit the day of the month doth a little differ) wherein is thus teſtified, That on the 20*th* day of July, Anno 1500, upon the day of Saint Margaret, there was an old man burned in Smithfield for an Heretick, and the ſame perſon upon the 10*th* day before he was burnt, would have ſtolen out of the Lollards Tower, and ſo falling out of the Tower, did foully hurt himſelf; whereupon he was carried in a Cart to his death, as he went to his burning.

In the foreſaid Papers of ancient record, is furthermore declared, how in the year above prefixed, which was An. 1499. In the time of one Perſevel, many were taken for Hereticks in Kent, and at Pauls Croſs they bear Fagots and were abjured, and ſhortly after the ſame year there went thirteen Lollards afore the Proceſſion in Pauls; and there were of them eight women and a young Lad, and the Lads Mother was one of the eight, and all the thirteen bear Fagots on their necks afore the Proceſſion.

William Tylſworth Martyr.

FOrſomuch as the world is come now to ſuch a moroſity and peeviſh inſenſibility in theſe contentions and cavilling days of ours, that nothing can be ſo circumſpectly written and ſtoried, but ſhall lye in danger of one Sycophant or another, which never will credit there, where they liſt not to like: neither will they ever like that which ſeemeth prejudicial to their faction, or not to ſerve the humor wherewith their fantaſies be infected: therefore to ſtop the mouths of ſuch carping cavillers with as much poſſibility as I may, be it known to all and ſingular ſuch perſons, who by evidence of truth and witneſs will be ſatisfied, that in the Town of Amerſham be yet alive both men and women, which can and do bear witneſs of this that I ſhall declare. Alſo there is of the ſaid compacy, one named William Page, an aged Father and yet alive, witneſs to the ſame. Alſo another named Agnes Wetherly Widow, being about the age of an hundred years, yet living and witneſs hereof; that in the days of King Henry the ſeventh, Anno 1506, in the Dioceſs of Lincoln

William Tylſworth Martyr.

Lincoln in Buckinghamſhire (William Smith being Biſhop of the ſame Dioceſs) one William Tylſworth was burned in Amerſham, in a Cloſe called Stanley, about ſixty years ago. At which time one Joan Clerk, being a married woman, which was the only daughter of the ſaid William Tylſworth and a faithful woman, was compelled with her own hands to ſet fire to her dear Father: and at the ſame time her husband John Clerk did penance at her Fathers burning, and bear a Faggot, as did alſo.

All theſe bear Faggots, and afterward were compelled to wear certain badges, and went abroad to certain Towns to do Penance, as to Buckingham, Alesbury, and other Towns more. And alſo divers of theſe men were afterward burned in the Cheek, as William Page, which at this preſent is alive, and likewiſe did bear a Faggot with the aforeſaid. Furthermore, the foreſaid Agnes Wetherly teſtifieth, that at the burning of this William Tylſworth, were 60 and above, that were put to bear Faggots for their Penance, of whom divers were injoyned to bear and wear Faggots at Lincoln the ſpace of ſeven years, ſome at one time, ſome at another, &c. In which number was alſo one Robert Bartlet a rich man, who for his profeſſions ſake was put out of his Farm and Goods, and was condemned to be kept in the Monaſtry of Aſhryge, where he wear on his right ſleeve a ſquare piece of Cloath, the ſpace of ſeven years together.

{KING} {Hen.7.} Amerſham men bearing faggots.

It followeth moreover in the teſtimony of the forenamed, that about the ſame time of the burning of William Tylſworth (as the Amerſham men do ſay) or the next day after) as recordeth the foreſaid Agnes) was one Father Roberts burned at Buckingham. He was a Miller, and dwelled at Miſſenden: And at his burning there were about twenty perſons that were compelled to bear Faggots, and to do ſuch Penance as the wicked Phariſees did compel them. After that, by the ſpace of two or three years, was burned at Amerſham, Thomas Bernard, a Husband man, and James Mordon, a laborer they two were burned both at one Fire, and there was William Littlepage (who is yet alive) compelled to be burned in the right Cheek, and Father Rogers, and Father Rever, alias Reive, which after was burned. This Father Rogers was in the Biſhops Priſon 14 weeks together, night and day, where he was ſo cruelly handled with cold, hunger and irons; that after his coming out of the ſaid priſon, he was ſo lame in his back, that he cou'd never go upright as long as he lived, as can teſtifie divers honeſt men that be now living. Alſo there were thirty more burned in the right Cheek, and bear Faggots the ſame time. The cauſe was that they would talk againſt Superſtition and Idolatry, and were deſirous to hear and read the holy Scriptures. The manner of their burning in the Cheek was this: their necks were tyed faſt to a poſt or ſtay with Towels, and their hands holden faſt that they might not ſtir, and ſo the Iron being hot, was put to their Cheeks, and thus bear they the prints and marks of the Lord Jeſus about them.

The cruel handling of Thomas Chaſe of Amerſham, wickedly ſtrangled and martyred in the Biſhops Priſon at Wooburn, under William Smith Biſhop of Lincoln.

AMong theſe aforeſaid, which were ſo cruelly perſecuted for the Goſpel and Word of Chriſt, one Thomas Chaſe of Amerſham, was one of them that that was thus cruelly handled: Which Thomas Chaſe by the report of ſuch as did know him, was a man of a godly ſober and honeſt behaviour (whoſe vertuous doings do yet remain in memory) and could not abide Idolatry and ſuperſtition, but many times would ſpeak againſt it. Wherefore the ungodly and wicked did the more hate and deſpiſe him, and took him and brought him before the blind Biſhop, being at that time at Wooburn in the County of Buckingham, and as it is written Acts 12. that wicked Herod did vex certain of the congregation, and killed James the Brother of John with the Sword; and becauſe he ſaw that it pleaſed the Jews, &c. he proceeded farther, and had this ſame Thomas Chaſe before him, asking him, many queſtions touching the Romiſh Religion, with many taunts, checks, and rebukes, but what anſwer this godly man Thomas Chaſe made them, it is unknown. Howbeit it is to be ſuppoſed, that his anſwer was moſt zealous and godly in profeſſing Chriſts true Religion and Goſpel, and to the extirpation of Idolatry, and ſuperſtition, and hypocriſie, for that the ſaid Thomas Chaſe was commanded to be put in the Biſhops Priſon, called little eaſe, in the Biſhops houſe at Wooburn, which Priſon had not been miniſtred unto him, had not his anſwers been found and upright. There Thomas Chaſe lay bound moſt painfully with Chains, Gyves, Manicles and Irons, oftentimes ſore pined with hunger, where the Biſhops Alms was daily brought unto him by his Chaplains: Which Alms was nothing elſe but checks, taunts, rebukes and threatnings, ſloutings and mockings. All which cruelty the godly Martyr took moſt quietly and patiently, remembring and having reſpect to Chriſts promiſes. Matth. 5. Bleſſed are they which ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſs ſake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven: and as followeth, Bleſſed are ye when men revile you and perſecute you, &c. When the Biſhop with his band of Shavelings, perceived that by their daily practiſes of cruelty they could not prevail againſt him, but rather that he was the more fervent and earneſt in profeſſing Chriſts true Religion, and that he did tolerate and bear moſt patiently all their wickedneſs and cruelty miniſtred unto him, they imagined how and which way they might put him to death, leſt there ſhould be a tumult or an uproare among the people. And as Richard Hun ſhortly after was hanged or ſtrangled in Lollards Tower, about the year of our Lord, 1514, even ſo theſe blood-ſuckers moſt cruelly ſtrangled and preſt to death this ſaid Thomas Chaſe in Priſon, which moſt heartily called upon God to receive his ſpirit; as witneſſeth a certain woman that kept him in Priſon.

Tho. Chaſe brought before the Biſhop.

Tho. Chaſe condemned to the Biſhops Priſon at Wooburn calle little Eaſe.

A worthy Alms of a Biſhop.

The perfect patience and conſtancy of Tho. Chaſe.

Tho. Chaſe cruelly Murthered in the Biſhops Priſon.

After that theſe ſtinging Vipers, being of the wicked brood of Antichriſt, had thus moſt cruelly and impiouſly murthered this faithful Chriſtian, they were at their wits end, and could not tell what ſhift to make, to cloke their ſhameful murther withall: at laſt to blind the ignonorant ſilly people, theſe bloody Butchers moſt ſlanderouſly cauſed it by their Miniſters to be bruted abroad, that the foreſaid Thomas Chaſe had hanged himſelf in Priſon; which was a moſt ſhameful and abominable lie, for the Priſon was ſuch, that a man could not ſtand upright, nor lie at eaſe, but ſtooping, as they do report that did know it. And beſides that, this man had ſo many manicles and Irons upon him, that he could not well move either hand or foot, as the woman did declare that ſaw him dead, inſomuch that they confeſſed that his blood-bulk was broken by reaſon they had ſo vilely beaten him and bruiſed him. And yet theſe holy Catholicks had not made an end of their wicked act in this both killing and ſlandering of this godly Martyr; but to put out the remembrance of him, they cauſed him to be buried in the Wood called Norlandwood, in the High-way betwixt Wooburn and little Marlow, to the intent he ſhould not be taken up again to be ſeen: And thus commonly are innocent men laid up by theſe Clerkly Clergy men. But he that is effectually true of himſelf hath promiſed at one time or at another, to clear his true ſervants, not with lies and fables, but by his own true Word. No ſecret, ſaith he, is ſo cloſe, but once ſhall be opened; neither is any thing ſo hid, that ſhall not at the laſt be known clearly. Such a ſweet Lord is God always to thoſe that are his true ſervants. Bleſſed be his holy Name therefore for ever and ever, Amen.

Tho. Chaſe falſly ſlandered to hang himſelf.

God brings to light the ſecret murthers of the Papiſts. Matth. 10. Luk. 12.

Thomas Harding being one of this company, thus moleſted and troubled, as is aforeſaid, in the Town of Averſham, for the truth of the Goſpel, after his Abjuration and Penance done, was again ſought for, and brought to the fire, in the days of King Henry the Eighth, and under D. Longland then Biſhop of Lincoln, ſucceeding after Cardinal Wolſey. Of whoſe death and Martyrdom we ſhall likwiſe record (Chriſt willing and granting) in order when we ſhall come to the time and year of his ſuffering.

After the Martyrdom of theſe two, I read alſo of one Thomas Noris, who likewiſe for the ſame cauſe, that is for the Profeſſion of Chriſts Goſpel, was condemned by the Biſhop, and burnt at Norwich, the laſt day of March, Anno 1507.

Tho. Noris Martyr. Ann. 1507

In the next year following, which was An. 1508, in the conſiſtory of London, was convented Elizabeth Sampſon, of the Pariſh of Aldermanbury, upon certain Articles, and ſpecially for ſpeaking againſt Pilgrimage and adoration of Images, as the Image of our Lady at Wilſdon, at Stanings, at Crome, at Walſingham, and the Image of Saint Savior of Barmondſey, and againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and for that ſhe had ſpoken theſe or like words; that our Lady of Wilſdon was but a burnt arſe elf, and a burnt arſe ſtock; and if ſhe might have holpen men and women which go to her on Pilgrimage, ſhe would not have ſuffered her tail to have been burnt: and what ſhould folk worſhip our Lady of Wilſdon, or our Lady of Crome; for the one is but a burnt arſe ſtock, and the other is but a Puppet: and better it were for the people to give their Alms at home to poor people, than to go on Pilgrimage. Alſo ſhe called the Image of S. Saviour, Sim Saviour with kit lips, and that ſhe ſaid ſhe could make as good bread, as that which the Prieſt occupied, and that it was not the body of Chriſt, but bread, for that Chriſt could not be both in Heaven and in Earth at one time. For theſe and certain other Articles, ſhe was compelled to abjure before Maſter William Horſey, Chancellor, the day and year above written. Ex Regiſt. Lond.

¶ Laurence Gheſt.

LAmentable it is to remember, and a thing almoſt infinite to comprehend the names, times, and perſons of all them which have been ſlain by the rigour of the Popes Clergy, for the true maintaining of Chriſts cauſe, and of his Sacraments. Whoſe memory being regiſtred in the book of Life, albeit it need not the commendoration of our ſtories, yet for the more confirmation of the Church, I thought it not unprofitable, the ſuffering and Martyrdom of them to be notified, which innocently have given their blood to be ſhed in Chriſts quarrel.

Laurence Gheſt Martyr.

In the Catalogue of whom, next in order, cometh the memorial of Laurence Gheſt, who was burned in Salisbury for the matter of the Sacrament, in the days of King Henry the Seventh: He was of a comely and tall perſonage, and otherwiſe (as appeareth) not unfriended; for the which the Biſhop and the Cleſe were the more loath to burn him, but kept him in Priſon the ſpace of two years. This Laurence had a wife and ſeven children. Wherefore they thinking to expugne and perſwade his mind, by ſtirring of his fatherly affection toward his Children, when the time came which they appointed for his burning, as he was at the ſtake, they brought before him his wife and his foreſaid ſeven Children. At the ſight whereof, although nature is commonly wont to work in other, yet in him Religion overcoming nature, made his conſtancy to remain unmoveable, in ſuch ſort, as when his wife exhort and deſired him to favour himſelf, he again began to deſire her to be content, and not to be a block in his way, for he was in a good courſe, running toward the mark of his Salvation: and ſo fire being put to him, he finiſhed his life, renouncing not only wife and children, but alſo himſelf to follow Chriſt. As he was in burning one of the Biſhops men threw a firebrand at his face. Whereat the Brother of Laurence ſtanding by, ran at him with his Dagger, and would have ſlain him, had he not been otherwiſe ſtaid.

Laurence Gheſt two years in Priſon at Salisbury.

Laurence would not be turned for Wife nor Children.

Laurence died a Martyr.

Teſtified and witneſſed by the credible report of one William Ruſſel, an aged man dwelling of late in Coleman-ſtreet, who was there preſent the ſame time at the burning of Laurence, and was alſo himſelf burned in the Cheek, and one of the perſecuted flock in thoſe days, whoſe Daughter is yet living: the ſame is confirmed alſo with the teſtimony of one Richard Wh, late Witneſs of the ſtory.

Faith full Woman burned.

A notable ſtory of a faithful woman burned in Cheaping-Sadbury.

BUt amongſt all the examples of God, whereof ſo many have ſuffered from time to time for Chriſt and his truth. I cannot tell if ever were any Martyrdom more notable and admirable, wherein the plain demonſtration of Gods mighty power and judgment hath at any time been more evident againſt the perſecutors of his flock, than at the burning of a certain godly Woman put to death in Cheaping-Sadbury, about the ſame time, under the Reign of King Henry the Seventh.

The conſtancy of which bleſſed Woman, as it is glorious for all true godly Chriſtians to behold; ſo again the example of the Biſhops Chancellor, which cruelly comdemned the innocent, may offer a terrible ſpectacle to the eyes of all Papiſtical perſecutors to conſider, and to take example, which the living God grant they may, Amen. The name of the Town where ſhe was Martyred, was, as is ſaid, Cheaping-Sadbury. The name of the Woman is not as yet come to my knowledge. The name of the Chancellor, who condemned her, was called Doctor Whittington. The time of her burning was in the Reign and time of King Henry the Seventh, orderly therefore in this place and time to be inſerted. Wherein is to be noted moreover the opportunity of this preſent Hiſtory brought to my hands, and that in ſuch convenient ſeaſon, as I was drawing toward the end of the foreſaid Kings Reign: ſo that it may appear to them which behold the opportunity of things, not to be without Gods holy will and providence, that this foreſaid example ſhould not lye hid and unremembred, but come to light and knowledge, and that in ſuch order of placing, according as the due courſe of our ſtory hitherto kept, requireth.

D. Whittington Chancellor a perſecutor.

After this godly woman, and manly Martyr of Chriſt was condemned by the wretched Chancellor above named, Doctor Whittington, for the faithful profeſſion of the truth, which the Papiſts then called Hereſie, and the time now come when ſhe ſhould be brought to the place and pains of her Martyrdom, a great concourſe of all the multitude, both in the Town and Country about (as the manner is in ſuch times) was gathered to behold her end. Among whom was alſo the foreſaid Doctor Whittington the Chancellor, there preſent to ſee the Execution done. Thus this faithful woman, and true ſervant of God, conſtantly perſiſting in the teſtimony of the truth, committing her cauſe to the Lord, gave over her life to the Fire, refuſing no pains nor torments to keep her Conſcience clear and unreproveable in the day of the Lord. The Sacrifice being ended, the people began to return homeward, coming from the burning of this bleſſed Martyr. It hapned in the mean time, that as the Catholick Executioners were buſie in ſlaying this ſilly Lamb at the Towns ſide, a certain Butcher was as buſie within the Town ſlaying of a Bull; which Bull he had faſt bound in Ropes, ready to knock him on the head. But the Butcher (belike not ſo skilful in his Art of killing Beaſts, as the Papiſts be in murdering Chriſtians) as he was lifting his Ax to ſtrike the Bull, failed in his ſtroke, and ſmote a little too low, or elſe how he ſmit, I know not: this was certain that the Bull, although ſomewhat grieved at the ſtroke, but yet not ſtricken down, put his ſtrength to the Ropes, and brake looſe from the Butcher into the Street, the very ſame time as the people were coming in great preaſs from the burning. Who ſeeing the Bull coming towards them, and ſuppoſing him to be wild (as it was no other like) gave way for the Beaſt, every man ſhifting for himſelf as well as he might. Thus the people giving back, and making a lane for the Bull, he paſſed through the throng of them, touching neither man nor child, till he came where the Chancellor was. Againſt whom the Bull, as pricked with a ſudden vehemency, ran full butt with his Horns, and taking him upon the paunch, gored him thorow and thorow, and ſo killed him immediately, carrying his guts, and trailing them with his Horns all the Street over, to the great admiration and wonder of all them that ſaw it.

A faithful Chriſtian woman and Martyr, burned at Cheaping-Sadbury.

A compariſon beween Butchers, and the Popes murthering Miniſters.

A rare and ſpecial example of the juſt puniſhment of God upon a perſecutor D. Whittington ſlain of a Bull.

KING Hen. 7.

Although the carnal ſenſe of man be blind in conſidering the works of the Lord, imputing many times to blind chance the things which poperly pertain to Gods only praiſe and providence; yet in this ſo ſtrange and ſo evident example, what man can be ſo dull or ignorant, which ſeeth not herein a plain miracle of Gods mighty power and judgment, both in the puniſhing of this wretched Chancellor, and alſo in admoniſhing all other like perſecutors, by his example, to fear the Lord, and to abſtain from the like cruelty?

Now for the credit of this ſtory left I be ſaid upon mine own head to commit to ſtory things raſhly, which I cannot juſtifie, therefore to ſtop ſuch cavelling mouths, I will diſcharge my ſelf with authority I truſt ſufficient, that is, with the witneſs of him which both was a Papiſt, and alſo preſent at the ſame time at the burning of the Woman, whoſe name was Rowland Webb: which Rowland, dwelling then in Cheaping-Sadbury, had a ſon named Richard Webb, ſervant ſometime to Maſter Latimer, who alſo induring with him in time of his trouble ſix years together, was himſelf impriſoned and perſecuted for the ſame cauſe. Unto the which Richard Webb, being now aged, then young, the foreſaid Rowland his Father; to the intent to exhort him from the ſect of Hereſie (as he then called it) recited to him many times the burning of this woman, and withall added the ſtory of the Bull aforeſaid, which he himſelf did ſee and teſtifie. This Richard Webb is yet living, a witneſs of his own Fathers words and teſtimony, which I truſt may ſatisfie all indifferent Readers, except only ſuch as think no truth to be believed, but that only which is in their Portues.

And thus much concerning the ſtate of the Church. Wherein is to be underſtood, what ſtorms and perſecutions have been raiſed up in all quarters againſt the flock and congregation of Chriſt, not only by the Turks, but alſo at home within our ſelves, by the Biſhop of Rome and his retinue. Where alſo it is to be noted in the days and Reign of this King Henry the Seventh, how mightily the working of Gods Goſpel hath multiplied and increaſed, and what great numbers of men and women have ſuffered for the ſame with us in England, as by theſe ſtories above paſt may be apparent.

The ſtate of the Commonwealth commonly followeth the ſtate of the Church.

Now theſe things declared, which to the Church matters be appertaining, conſequently it remaineth ſomething to intreat of the ſtate likewiſe of the Commonwealth, which commonly doth follow the ſtate of the Church. Where the Church is quietly and modeſtly governed verned, and the flock of Chriſt defended by Godly Princes in peace and ſafety, from devouring and violence of bloody Wolves; the ſucceſs of civil eſtate, for the moſt part, there muſt needs flith, and the Princes long continue through Gods preſervation, in proſperous reſt and tranquility. Contrariwiſe, where either the Church of Chriſt through the negligence of Princes, or through their ſetting on, the poor members of Chriſt be perſecuted and devoured; ſhortly after enſueth ſome juſt recompence of the Lord upon thoſe Princes, that either their lives do not long continue, or elſe they find not that quiet in the Commonwealth, which they look for. Examples hereof, as in all other ages be abundant, ſo in this preſent time be not lacking, whether we conſider the ſtate and condition of other Countries far off, or elſe of our own Country near at home.

KING Hen.7.

The duty of Princes to defend their Subjects from the ſlaughter of the Church of Rome.

And here not to wander in our ſtory farther than to France only, let us a little behold the example of King Charles the eighth, who living in this Kings time, dyed alſo not long before him. This Charles is commended of Philippus Commineus, to be a moderate, valiant and victorious Prince, adorned with many ſpecial vertues to a Prince appertaining. And yet the ſame King, becauſe he was ſlack and remiſs in defence of Chriſts Church, neither did uſe his authority, nor took his occaſion offered to him of God, to amend and reform the eſtate of the Biſhop and Clergy of Rome when he might, he was therefore himſelf puniſhed and cut off of the Lord, as by his ſtory enſuing may right well appear. For ſo it is of him recorded, that being marvellouſly excited and provoked, of his own mind (contrary to the Counſel of moſt of his Nobles) he took his journey into Italy, neither being furniſhed with money, nor the ſeaſon of the year being convenient thereunto. And that this may appear the better to proceed of the Lords doing, to the intent he would have the Church and Clergy of Rome reformed by the Princes Sword, which ſo vexed all Chriſtendom at that time, we ſhall hear what is teſtified in the Commentaries of the ſaid Philip Commineus, Lib. 3. de bello Neapolit. writing in this wiſe.

Ex commentariis Phil. Cominei. De bello Neapolitano, lib. 3.

The Propheſie of Jerom Savanarola.

There was (ſaith he) in the City of Florence the ſame time a Dominick Friar, named Hieronymus Savanarola (of whom mention was made before) a man of a right godly and approved life: Who in the ſaid City of Florence preached and Propheſied long before, that the French King ſhould come with an Army into Italy, being ſtirred up of God to ſuppreſs the Tyrants of Italy, and none ſhould withſtand him. He ſhould alſo come to the City of Piſæ and the ſtate of Florence ſhould be altered; all which happened true. He affirmed moreover to be ſignified to him of the Lord, that the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate of the Church muſt be redreſſed Per vim armorum. i. by the Sword or force of Arms. Many things alſo be Propheſied of the Venetians, and of the French King, ſaying, that the King with ſome danger and difficulty ſhould paſs that journey, yet notwithſtanding ſhould overcome it and eſcape, albeit his ſtrength were never ſo ſlender; for God would ſafely conduct him in that journey, and ſafely bring him home again. But becauſe he had not done his Office, in amending the ſtate of the Church, and in defending his people from injury, and from devouring, therefore it ſhould come to paſs (ſaith he) and that ſhortly, that ſome incommodity or detriment ſhould happen to the King: or if he ſhould eſcape that danger of his ſickneſs and recover health, then if he did reſiſt the cruelty of the wicked, and procure the ſafety of the poor and miſerable, God would ſhew mercy unto him, &c. And this the ſaid Hieronymus declared before to Commineus, one of the Kings Counſellors, which was the writer of the ſtory, and required him to ſignifie the ſame unto the King; which ſo did, and he moreover, himſelf coming to the preſence of the King declared no leſs.

Vide Phil. Cominæum de bello Neapol. lib 5.

All which things as he had foretold, came directly to effect. For the King being but eaſily accompanied with a ſmall power entred into Italy; where firſt he came to Aſta, then to Genoa, and to Piſa, from thence proceeded to Florence, which alſo he obtained, diſplacing there Petrus Medices the Duke, who had uſed great Tyranny upon the Subjects. From thence he removed toward Rome, where a great part of the City Wall, at the coming of the French King fell down.

Afterward, when the King was entred into the City, and the Pope (who then took part with Alphonſus King of Neapolis againſt the French King) had immured himſelf within the mount of Adrian, the Wall of the Caſtle fell down of it ſelf: whereby when the King was both occaſioned, and exhorted alſo by his Captains to invade the Pope, and to depoſe him, and to reform the Church of Rome (which he might then eaſily have done, as it had pleaſed him) yet all theſe occaſions offered ſo opportunely of God, moved not the King to do his duty, and to help the poor Church of Chriſt: wherefore ſhortly after, returning home into France from Neapolis, either the ſame year, or the next year following, he was ſtricken with a ſudden ſickneſs at Amboiſe, as he was looking on them that played at Tennis, and that in the ſtinkingeſt place in all the Caſtle, where he fell down and died within 12 houres, according to the forewarning of Hieronymus, who wrote unto him a little before, both of his Sons death, and of his own, which was about the year of our Lord, 1498. Ex Philip. Comineo, lib. 5.

De bello Neapol. lib. 5.

Like examples we have many here alſo in this our Realm of England. So long as King John kept out of the Realm the Popes authority and power, he continued ſafe and quiet with his Nobles: but ſo ſoon as he brought the Realm under tribute and ſubjection to that foraign Biſhop, God ſtirred up his Nobles againſt him, whereby he had much diſquiet and trouble, and ſoon thereupon decayed.

Examples of Kings of England, which were bleſſed of God with long proſperity being enemies to the Biſhops of Rome.

Of all the Kings of England, from William the Conquerer to this King Henry the Seventh, were none which either longer continued, or more proſperouſly flouriſhed, than King Henry the Second, K. Henry the third, King Edward the firſt, King Edward the third, of whom the firſt, how ſtout he was in withſtanding Thomas Becket and Pope Alexander the Third, is ſufficiently before comprehended.

Auguſtus Reigned 55 years.

The ſecond, which was Son of King John, albeit through the wretchedneſs of that time his power was not ſufficient to repulſe the Popes uſurped juriſdiction out of the Realm, yet his will was good: at laſt he ſo defended and provided for his Subjects, that they took no great wrong at the Popes hands; who Reigned one year longer than Auguſtus Cæſar, which hath not commonly been ſeen in any Prince.

The third, which was King Edward the Firſt, ſo vigilantly behaved himſelf for the publick commodity and ſafety of his people, that he defended them from all foraign power and hoſtility both of the Scots (then our enemies, now our friends) and alſo from the Biſhop of Rome, taking part with them againſt us, as may appear above. Furthermore of the ſame King, and of his worthy Nobles and houſe of Parliament, how valiantly they ſtood in denyal of the Popes Subſidies, and alſo how the ſaid King ſecluded out of his protection the Biſhops, and eſpecially the Archbiſhop Pecham, for ſtanding with the Pope, read before.

Vide ſupra.

Now as touching King Edward the Third, how little he regarded, how Princely he with his Nobles likewiſe reſiſted the Popes reſervations and proviſions, how he bridled the Archbiſhop John Stratford, and rejected the vain authority of the Biſhop of Rome, both in defence of his Subjects, and alſo in defence of claiming his right title in the Realm of France, read before.

Not that I do here affirm or define, as in a general rule, that worldly ſucceſs and proſperity of life always follow the godly, which we ſee rather to be given more often to the wicked ſort: but ſpeaking of the duty of Princes, I note and obſerve by examples of Hiſtories, that ſuch Princes as have moſt defended the Church of Chriſt committed to their governance, from injury and violence of the Biſhop of Rome, have not lacked at Gods hand great bleſſing and felicity: whereas contrariwiſe, they which either themſelves have been perſecutors of Chriſts members, or have not ſhielded them by their protection from foraign Tyranny and injuries, have lacked at Gods hand that protection, which the other had, as may appear by King Edward the Second, Richard the Third, King Henry the Fourth, King Henry the Fifth, King Henry the Sixth, &c. who becauſe either negligently they have ſuffered, or cruelly cauſed ſuch perſecuting laws to be made and ſo much Chriſtian blood injurioully to be devoured; therefore have they been the leſs proſpered of the Lord, ſo that they were depoſed, or if they flouriſhed for a while, yet they did not long continue, almoſt not half the time of the other Kings before named.

Vide ſupra. What diſference between moderate Princes, and them that were perſecutors.

And therefore, as the ſtate of the Commonwealth doth commonly follow the ſtate of the Church, as ye heard before; ſo it had been to be wiſhed, that this King Henry 7th being otherwiſe a prudent and temperate Prince, had not permitted the untemperate rage of the Popes Clergy ſo much to have their wills over the poor flock of Chriſt, as then they had; according as by theſe perſecutions above mentioned may appear. The which King Henry the Seventh, albeit he had a ſufficient continuance, who had now Reigned 24 years, yet notwithſtanding here cometh the ſame thing to be noted, whereof I ſpake before; That when the Church of Chriſt beginneth to be injured with violence, and to go to wrack through miſorder and negligence, the State of the Commonwealth cannot there long endure without ſome alteration, and ſtroke of Gods correction. But howſoever this mark is to be taken, thus lieth the ſtory: that after the burning and vexing of theſe poor ſervants of Chriſt above recited, when the perſecution began now in the Church to be hot, God calleth away the King, the ſame year above mentioned, which was 1509, after he had Reigned the term of 24 years: Who if he had adjoyned a little more pitiful reſpect, in protecting Chriſts poor members from the fire of the Popes Tyranny, to his other great vertues of ſingular wiſdom, excellent temperance, and moderate frugality; ſo much had he been comparable with the beſt of thoſe Princes above comprehended, as he had been inferior but to a few: but this defect which lacked in him, was ſupplied moſt luckily (bleſſed be the Lord) by his poſterity ſucceeding after him. Of whom in the next Volumn following (Chriſt thereunto aſſiſting us) we have to ſpecifie more at large.

The death of King Henry.

Country men perſecuted.

Among many other things incident in the Reign of this King Henry the Seventh, I have overpaſſed the Hiſtory of certain godly perſons perſecuted in the Dioceſs of Coventry and Lichfield, as we find them in the Regiſters of the Dioceſs recorded, here following.

The year of our Lord, 1485, March the 9th, amongſt divers and ſundry othe good men in Coventry, theſe nine here under named, were examined before John Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield in Saint Michaels Church, upon theſe Articles following in order.

J. Blomſtone.

The power of Peter ſhifteth not to his Succeſſors.

FIrſt, John Blomſton was openly and publickly infamed, accuſed, reported and appeached, that he was a very Heretick, becauſe he had preached, taught, holden and affirmed, that the power attributed to Saint Peter in the Church of God, by our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt immediately, did not ſhit or paſs from him, to remain with his ſucceſſors.

Item, That there was as much vertue in an herb, as in the Image of the Virgin Mary.

Purgatory denyed.

Item, That Prayer and Alms avail not the dead; for incontinent after death, he goeth either to Heaven or Hell, whereupon he concludeth there is no Purgatory.

Images not to be worſhipped.

Item, That it was fooliſhneſs to go on Pilgrimage to the Image of our Lady of Dancaſter, Walſingham, or of the Tower of the City of Coventry: for a man might as well worſhip the bleſſed Virgin by the fire ſide in the Kitchin, as in the aforeſaid places, and as well might a man worſhip the Bleſſed Virgin, when he ſeeth his Mother and Siſter, as in viſiting the Images, becauſe they be no more but dead ſtocks and ſtones.

Item, That he ſaid in Engliſh with a frowning countenance, as it appeared: a vengeance on all ſuch Horſon Prieſts, for they have great envy that a poor man ſhould get his living among them.

Richard Hegham. Merits condemned.

RIchard Hegham of the ſame City was accuſed, &c. to be a very Heretick, becauſe he did hold that a Chriſtian man being at the point of death, ſhould renounce all his own works good and ill, and ſubmit him to the mercy of God.

Item, That it was fondneſs to worſhip the Images of our Lady of Tower in the foreſaid City, or of other Saints, for they are but ſtocks and ſtones.

Images ſerve rather to be burned than to be worſhipped.

Item, That if the Image of our Lady of Tower were put into the fire, it would make a good fire.

Item, That it were better to deal mony unto poor folks, than offer to the Image of Chriſt and other Saints which are but dead ſtocks and ſtones.

Robert Crowther.

RObert Crowther of the ſame City was accuſed, that he was an Heretick, becauſe he did hold, that who-ſo receiveth the Sacrament of the Altar in deadly ſin, or out of charity, receiveth nothing but Bread and Wine.

Item, That neither Biſhop, nor Prieſts or Curates of Churches, have power in the Market of Penance to bind and looſe.

Againſt Pilgrimage.

Item, That Pilgrimage to the Image of our Lady of Tower is fooliſhneſs; for it is but a ſtock or a ſtone.

Joh. Smith.

The Lords Prayer to be in Engliſh.

JOhn Smith was accuſed to be a very Heretick, becauſe he did hold, that every man is bound to know the Lords Prayer, and the Creed in Engliſh, if he might for theſe falſe Prieſts.

Item, That who ſo believed as the Church men did believe, believe ill: and that a man had need to frequent the Schools a good while, ere that he can attain to the knowledge of the true and right Faith.

Item, That no Prieſt hath power to abſolve a man in the Market of Penance, from his ſins.

Roger Brown.

Againſt Pilgrimage.

ROger Brown of the ſame City, was alſo accuſed to be an Heretick, becauſe he did hold that no man ought to worſhip the Image of our Lady of Walſingham, nor the blood of Chriſt at Halies, but rather God Almighty, who would give him whatſoever he would ask.

Item, That he held not up his hand, nor looked up, at the elevation of the Euchariſt.

Item, That he promiſed one to ſhew him certain books of Hereſie, if he would ſwear that he would not utter them, and if he would credit them.

Fleſh eating in Lent.

Item, That he did eat fleſh in Lent, and was taken with the manner.

Item, If any man were not ſhriven in his whole life long, and in the point of death would be confeſſed, and could not, if he had no more but contrition only, he ſhould paſs to joy without Purgatory: And if he were confeſſed of any ſin, and were enjoyned only to ſay for Penance one Pater-Noſter, if he thought he ſhould have any puniſhment in Purgatory for that ſin, he would never be confeſſed for any ſin.

Againſt Purgatory and confeſſion Auriculare.

Item, Becauſe he ſaid all is loſt that is given to Prieſts.

Againſt confeſſion and Satisfaction.

Item, That there was no Purgatory, that would pardon all ſins, without confeſſion and ſatisfaction.

Tho. Butler.

THomas Butler of the ſame City was likewiſe openly accuſed to be a very Heretick, becauſe he did hold that there were but two ways, that is to ſay, to Heaven and to Hell.

Againſt Purgatory.

Item, That no faithful man ſhould abide any pain after the death of Chriſt, for any ſin, becauſe Chriſt dyed for our ſins.

Item, That there was no Purgatory; for every man immediately after death paſſeth either to Heaven or Hell.

Againſt Merits.

Item, That whoſoever departeth in the faith of Chriſt and the Church, howſoever he hath lived, ſhall be ſaved.

Item, That Prayers and Pilgrimages are nothing worth, and avail not to purchaſe Heaven.

John Falkes.

Againſt Images.

JOhn Falkes was accuſed to be a very Heretick, becauſe he did affirm, That it was a fooliſh thing to offer to the Image of our Lady, ſaying, Her head ſhall be hoar or I offer to her: What is it but a block? If it could ſpeak to me, I would give it an half peny worth of Ale.

Item, That when the Prieſt carrieth to the ſick the Body of Chriſt, why carrieth he not alſo the Blood of Chriſt?

Item, That he did eat Cow-milk upon the firſt Sunday of Lent.

It is Hereſie to ſay a ſtone is a ſtone, and a block is a block.

Item, That as concerning the Sacrament of Penance and Abſolution, no Prieſt hath power to aſſoil any Man from his ſins, when as he cannot make one Hair of his Head.

Item, That the Image of our Lady was but a Stone or a Block.

R. Hilmin.

RIchard Hilmin was accuſed that he was a very Heretick, becauſe he did ſay and maintain, That it was better to part with Mony to the Poor, than to give Tithes.

KING Hen.7. Tithes to Prieſts, or to offer to the Images of our Lady; and that it were better to offer to Images made by God, than to the Images of God painted.

Item, That he had the Lords Prayer and the Salutation of the Angel and the Creed in Engliſh, and another Book did he ſee and had, which contained the Epiſtles and Goſpels in Engliſh, and according to them would he live, and thereby believed to be ſaved.

Scripture in Engliſh. Item, That no Prieſt ſpeaketh better in the Pulpit than that Book.

Item, That the Sacrament of the Altar is but Bread and that the Prieſts make it to blind the people.

Item, That a Prieſt whiles he is at Maſs, is a Prieſt; and after one Maſs done, till the beginning of another Maſs, he is no more than a Lay-man, and hath no more power than a meer Lay-man.

¶ After they were enforced to recant, they were abſoiled and put to Penance.

IN the year of our Lord 1488, the third of April, Margery Goyt, Wife of James Goyt of Aſburn, was brought before the foreſaid John Biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield, who was there accuſed that ſhe ſaid, That that which the Prieſts lift over their heads at Maſs, was not the True and very Body of Chriſt: For if it were ſo, the Prieſts could not break it ſo lightly into four parts, and ſwallow it as they do: for the Lords Body hath Fleſh and Bones, ſo hath not that which the Prieſts receive.

Againſt the Sacrament of the Altar. Item, That Prieſts buying forty Cakes for a half peny, and ſhewing them to the people, and ſaying, That of every of them they make the Body of Chriſt, do nothing but deceive the people and enrich themſelves.

Item, Seeing God in the beginning did create and make Man, how can it be that Man ſhould be able to make God?

¶ This Woman alſo was conſtrained to recant, and ſo was ſhe abſoiled and did Penance.

Thus much I thought good here to inſert, touching theſe foreſaid Men of Coventry, eſpecially for this purpoſe, becauſe our cavilling adverſaries be wont to object againſt us the newneſs of Chriſts old and ancient Religion. To the intent therefore they may ſee this Doctrine, not to be ſo new as they report, I wiſh they would conſider both the Time and Articles here objected againſt theſe foreſaid perſons, as is above-premiſed.

I ſhould alſo in the ſame Reign of King Henry the Seventh, have induced that ſtory of Johannes Picus Earl of Mirandula, the mention of whoſe name partly is touched before. This Picus Earl of Mirandula, being but a young Man, was ſo excellently witted, and ſo ſingularly learned in all Siences and in all Tongues, both Latin, Greek and Hebrew, Chaldey, and Araby, that coming to Rome booted and ſpurred, he ſet up 90 Concluſions, to diſpute in the ſame with any in all Chriſtendom, whoſoever would come againſt him. Of which Concluſions divers were touching the matter of the Sacrament, &c. And when none was found in all Rome, nor in Europe, that openly would diſpute with him, privily and in corners certain of the Popes Clergy, Prelates, Lawyers and Friers, by the Pope appointed, conſulted together to enquire upon his Concluſions, whereupon they did articulate againſt him for ſuſpition of Hereſie. And thus the unlearned Clergy of Rome privily circumvented and entangled this learned Earl in their ſnares of Hereſie, againſt whom they durſt never openly diſpute. He died being of the age of 32 years, of ſuch wit and towardneſs, as is hard to ſay, whether ever Italy bred up a better. In his ſickneſs Charles the Eighth, then French King, moved with the fame of his Learning, came to viſit him. The Furniture of his Books coſt him 7000 Florens. A little before his death his mind was to give all away, and to take a Coul, to go about and Preach, but the Lord would not permit him. His ſtory, requireth a long tractation, which if place do ſerve, we will not peradventure forget. With two Popes, that is, with Pope Innocent, and Alexander the ſixth he had much vexation. Picus Mirandula Earl.

A brief note of Eccleſiaſtical Laws Ordained by Ancient Kings in this Realm.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws ordained by ancient Kings of this Realm. FOrſomuch as it is, and hath been a perſuaſion long gendred in the heads of many, that the Biſhops of Rome be the univerſal heads of the whole Militant Church of Chriſt in Earth, and havea lways ſo continued from the beginning of the Primitive time; and that no Prince, King nor Emperor in his own Realm hath any intereſt to intermeddle with matters and Laws Eccleſiaſtical, but only the ſaid Biſhops of Rome: to reſel and remove that Opinion out of the heads of all Engliſh-men, as a thing moſt falſe, and contrary both to Hiſtories of Time, and examples of ancient Kings and Governors of this Realm, I thought to fill up a little end of Paper here left, with ſome ſuch brief rehearſal of Laws deviſed and appointed by Kings and Rulers of this Land, for the ordering of the Church, and cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, to the intent that all the World may ſee that the Government of Chriſts Church here in Earth under Chriſt hath not depended only of the Pope from ancient time, but hath been rather directed by ſuch Kings and Princes as God here had placed under him to govern the people of this Realm of England, as followeth here in this preſent Table to be noted.

A brief recapitulation of Ancient Eccleſiaſtical Laws, by ſundry Kings of this Realm Ordained, for Government of the Church, before the Conqueſt.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Inas, or Ina.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Ina. 1. FIrſt, King Inas, who Reigned in this Land the year of our Lord 712, commanded the Miniſters ſhould frame their converſation of life according to the form in Laws preſcribed.

2. That Infants ſhould be Baptized within 30 days.

3. Item, That no Man Lay or Spiritual, Free or Bond, ſhould labour on the Sunday.

4. Item, He eſtabliſhed immunity of Churches, and Sanctuary. Alſo he took order for the true payment of the Church-duties, and of the firſt fruits of all that was ſown to be paid at the day of St. Martin.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Alured, or Alfred.

King Alured's Laws. KIng Alured after he had ordained divers judicial puniſhments for violating the Holy Precepts of God commanded by Moſes, he alſo confirmed and enlarged the priviledge of Sanctuary; he laid double pain upon ſuch as committed offences in the Solemnities of certain Feaſts; Alſo againſt them that committed Sacriledge.

2. He made a Law againſt Prieſts committing Murther.

3. Alſo he made a Law againſt Whoredom, Adultery and Fornication.

4. He

4. He appointed days of Faſting and ceaſing from Labour.

5. Item, He ſet order for making and keeping Vows.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Edward the Elder, and Gythrum the Dane King.

King Edward's Laws

1. FIrſt, They agreed upon the Sanctuary; they forbad Gentiliſm and Paganiſm; they laid puniſhment upon the Clergy committing Theft, Perjury, or Murther, Fornication, or any capital crime.

2. They puniſhed Prieſts, that pretermitted their Office in pronouncing Feſtival, or Faſting-days.

3. They made a Law againſt all Labour, Buying and Selling upon the Sabbath, alſo for keeping of Feaſts.

Item, For no Execution to be done on the Sunday. Alſo againſt Witches and Sorcerers, &c.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Ethelſtane.

King Ethelſtane's Laws.

1. KIng Ethelſtane, who Reigned the year of our Lord 924, commanded that every Village of his own ſhould give a monthly Corody to a poor perſon.

2. That fifty Pſalms ſhould be ſung daily in the Church, for the King, &c.

3. He alſo Ordained puniſhment for Witches and Sorcerers, &c.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Edmund.

King Edmund's Laws.

1. AFter King Ethelſtane followed King Edmund about the year of our Lord 940, who eſtabliſhed and provided Laws againſt the unchaſte living of Churchmen.

2. Item, He made Laws concerning Tithes, with firſt Fruits of every Mans Crop, and Alms-mony duly to be paid.

3. Item, He Enacted, That Biſhops of their own proper charges ſhould repair Churches, and ſhould alſo admoniſh the King for the furniſhing of the ſame.

4. For Perjury alſo, and for Fighting within the Church, he ſet Laws and Pains.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Edgar.

King Edgar's Laws.

1. KIng Edgar, who began his Reign about the year of our Lord 959, amongſt other Conſtitutions Eccleſiaſtical, Ordained, That the Sunday ſhould be kept Holy from Saturday at noon till Monday in the morning.

2. Item, He Ordained and Decreed concerning Liberties and Freedoms of the Church; for Tithes alſo, and firſt Fruits of Corn, and paying of Peter-pence.

3. Item, For Holy-days and Faſting-days.

4. Item, That Aſſemblies or Synods ſhould be kept twice every year, whereat as well the Biſhop of the Dioceſs ſhould be preſent, as the Civil Magiſtrate.

KING Hen. 7.

King Ethelrede, Anno 979.

King Ethelred's Laws.

KIng Ethelrede alſo, which ſucceeded after Edgar and Edward, appointed divers Laws for publick Regiment, whereof we find but few touching matters Eccleſiaſtical, for Tithes, Lights, Feaſts and nothing elſe, and therefore we paſs further to the Laws of Canutus.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Canutus.

King Canutus's Laws.

CAnutus the Dane King began to Reign in this Land in the year of our Lord 1016. The ſaid Canutus (as Ethelrede had done before) divided his Laws into Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal.

1. That Eccleſiaſtical perſons being accuſed of Fighting, Murder, or any other offence, ſhould purge themſelves thereof.

2. That Prieſts ſhould be degraded for Perjury, and put in Sureties of good behaviour.

3. He prayeth Prieſts, that they will live chaſt, and commanded other Religious.

4. He limited the Degrees of Marriage.

5. Item, He command Celebration of the Sabbath from Saturday at noon till Monday morning, as Edgar had done before, forbidding Markets, Huntings, Labours, and Court-keepings during the ſaid ſpace.

6. He Ordained each Chriſtian Man to come to the Houſel thrice yearly at the leaſt; That they ſearch and injure after Gods Law, and his Commandements.

7. That every Chriſtian Man underſtand the points of his Faith, and that at leaſt he learn perfectly the Lords Prayer and the Creed; and that whoſoever cannot, the ſame ſhall be excluded from the Euchariſt, and ſhall not be received to undertake for others in Baptiſm.

8. That Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould do their Duties; that they cry out and warn their Flocks when the Woulf cometh.

9. That at the Court of every Shire the Biſhop of the Dioceſs ſhall be preſent with the Sheriff, and that the one ſhall teach them Gods Law, and the other Mans Law, as ye heard in King Edgar's Laws before.

Many other Laws, both Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal, beſides theſe were enacted by theſe and other Kings here in England before the Conqueſt, but theſe be ſufficient to give the underſtanding Reader to conſider, how the Authority of the Biſhops of Rome, all this while, extended not ſo far to preſcribe Laws for Government of the Church, but that Kings and Princes of the Realm, as they be now, ſo were then full Governors here under Chriſt, as well in cauſes Eccleſiaſtical as Temporal, both in directing Orders, inſtituting Laws, in calling of Synods, and alſo in conferring Biſhopricks and Benefices, without any leave of the Romiſh Biſhops. Thus Odo, Dunſtane, Oſwold, Ethelwold, Adelmus, and Lanfrancus, although they fet their Palls afterward from Rome, yet were they made Biſhops and Archbiſhops by Kings only, not by Popes.

Kings of England before the Conqueſt as well in Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical as Temporal

When Kings of England came firſt under the Popes ſubjection.

And thus ſtood the Government of this Realm of England all the time before the Conqueſt, till Pope Hildebrand, through the ſetting on of the Saxons, began firſt to bring the Emperor (which was Henry 4*th*) under foot. Then followed the ſubduing of other Emperors, Kings, and Subjects after that; as namely here in England, when Lanfrancus, Anſelmus, and Becket, went to complain of their Kings, and Governors, then brought they the Popes Judicial Authority firſt from Rome over this Land, both over Kings and Subjects; which ever ſince hath continued, till theſe later years. Albeit the ſaid Kings of this Realm of England being prudent Princes, and ſeeing right well the ambitious preſumption of thoſe Romiſh Biſhops, did what they could to ſhake off the yoke of their Supremacy, as appeareth by the Laws and Acts of their Parliaments, both in King Edward the Thirds time, King Richard the Second, and King Henry the Fourth, above in their Parliament Notes ſpecified; yet for fear of other Foreign Princes, and the blind opinion of their Subjects, ſuch was then the calamity of that time, that neither they could nor durſt compaſs that which fain they would; till at laſt the time of their Iniquity being compleat, through the Lords wonderful working, their Pride had a fall, as in the Volume enſuing (the Lord ſo granting) ſhall by proceſs of Hiſtory be declared.

{KING 2 Hen. 7. 5}

The proud Primacy of Popes described, in order of their rising up by little and little, from faithful Bishops and Martyrs, to become Lords and Governors over Kings and Kingdoms, exalting themselves in the Temple of God, above all that is called God, &c. 2 Thessal. 2.

The Martyrdom of good Bishops under wicked Emperors in the Primitive Church.

IN the Description of the Primitive Church hath been (gentle Reader) set forth and exhibited before thine eyes the grievous afflictions and sorrowful torments, which through Gods secret sufferance fell upon the True Saints and Members of Christs Church in that time, especially upon the good Bishops, Ministers and Teachers of the Flock, of whom some were Scourged, some Beheaded, some Crucified, some Burned, some had their Eyes put out, some one way, some another, miserably consumed: which days of woful calamity continued (as is foreshewed) near the space of Three hundred years. During which time the Dear Spouse and Elect Church of God, being sharply assaulted on every side, had small rest, no joy, nor outward safety in this present World, but in much bitterness of heart, in continual tears and mourning under the Cross passed over their days, being spoiled, imprisoned, contemned, reviled, famished, tormented and martyred every where, who neither durst well tarry at home for fear and dread, and much less durst come abroad for the Enemies, but only by night, when they assembled as they might, sometime to sing Psalms and Hymns together. In all which their dreadful dangers, and sorrowful afflictions, notwithstanding the goodness of the Lord left them not desolate; but the more their outward tribulations did increase, the more their inward consolations did abound; and the farther off they seemed from the joys of this life, the more present was the Lord with them with grace and fortitude, to confirm and rejoyce their Souls. And though their Possessions and Riches in this World were lost and spoiled, yet were they enriched with Heavenly Gifts and Treasures from above an hundred fold. Then was True Religion truly felt in heart. Then was Christianity not in outward appearance shewed, but in inward affection received, and in the True Image of the Church, not in outward shew pretensed, but in her perfect state effectual. Then was the Name and Fear of God true in heart, not in lips alone dwelling. Faith then was fervent, Zeal ardent, Prayer not swimming in the lips, but groaned out to God from the bottom of the spirit. Then was no Pride in the Church, nor leisure to seek Riches, nor time to keep them. Contention for trifles was then so far from Christians, that well were they when they could meet to pray together against the Devil, author of all Dissention. Briefly, the whole Church of Christ Jesus, with all the members thereof, the farther it was from the type and shape of this World, the nearer it was to the blessed respect of Gods favour and supportation.

The true Riches of the Church described.

The first rising of the Bishops of Rome.

The first rising of the Bishops of Rome.

AFter this long time of trouble it pleased the Lord at length mercifully to look upon the Saints and Servants of his Son, to release their Captivity; to release their misery, and to bind up the old Dragon the Devil, which so long vexed them, whereby the Church began to aspire to some more liberty: and the Bishops which before were as abjects, utterly contemned of Emperors, through the Providence of God (which disposeth all things in his time after his own Will) began now of Emperors to be esteemed and had in price. Furthermore, as Emperors grew more in Devotion, so the Bishops more and more were exalted, not only in favour, but also preferred unto honour, insomuch that in short space they became not quarter Masters, but rather half Emperors with Emperors.

After this, in process of time, as Riches and Worldly wealth crept into the Clergy, and that the Devil had poured his Venom into the Church (as the Voice was heard, the same time over Constantinople) so true Humility began to decay, and Pride to set in his foot, till at last they played as the Ivy doth with the Oak-tree, which first beginning with a goodly green shew, imbraceth him so long, till at length it overgroweth him, and so sucketh all his moisture from him, setting his Root fast in his Bark, till at last it both stifleth the Stock, and killeth the Branches, and so cometh to be a Nest for Owls and all unclean Birds. Not untruly therefore it was said of Augustine, Religio peperit divitias, & filia devoravit matrem; that is, Religion begat Riches, and the Daughter hath devoured the Mother. The verity whereof notoriously may appear above all other in the Church of Rome, and the Bishops of the same. For after that the Church of Rome, through favour of Emperors was indued with Lands, Donations, Possessions and Patrimonies, so that the Bishops thereof feeling the smack of Wealth, Ease and Prosperity, began to swell in Pomp and Pride; the more they flourished in this World, the more Gods Holy Spirit forsook them, till at last the said Bishops, who at the first were poor, creeping low upon the Ground, and were persecuted a long time, every Man treading upon them in this World, now of persecuted people, began to be persecutors of others, and to tread upon the necks even of Emperors, and to bring the heads of Kings and Princes under their Girdle. And not only that, but furthermore through Pride and Riches, they were so far gone from all Religion, that in the very end they became the great adversary of God (whom we call Antichrist) prophecied of so long before by the Spirit of God to come, sitting in the Temple of God, &c. Of whom thus we read in the Epistle of Paul, 2 Thess. 2. where he saith, We beseech you Brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our fellowship together in him, that ye be not suddainly moved in your mind, nor troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor letter, as it were from us; as though the day of Christ were at hand. Let no man in any wise deceive you, for that day shall not come except there come a departing first, and that man of sin be revealed, even the son of perdition, that adversary which exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he shall sit in the Temple of God, as God, and set forth himself as he were God, &.

The Spiritual Riches of the Church turned to Worldly Riches. Ex lib. Serm. Discipuli. Look Tyndal in his Book of the practice of Prelates.

The great adversary called Antichrist, described by St. Paul, 2 Thess. 2.

By which words of St. Paul, we have divers things to understand: First, That the day of the Lords coming was not then near at hand. Secondly, The Apostle giving us a token before, to know when that day shall approach, biddeth us look for an adversary first to be revealed. Thirdly, To shew what adversary this shall be, he expresseth him not to be as a common adversary, such as were then in his time. For although Herod, Annas, and Caiaphas, the High Priests and Pharisees, Tertullus, Alexander the Coppersmith, Elymas and Simon Magus, and Nero the Emperor, in Paul's time were great adversaries: yet here he meaneth another besides these, greater than all the rest, not such a one as should be like to Priest, King or Emperor, but such as far exceeding the state of all Kings, Priests and Emperors, should be the Prince of Priests, should make Kings to stoop, and should tread upon the neck of Emperors, and make them to kiss his feet. Moreover, where the Apostle saith, That he shall sit in the Temple of God; thereby is meant, not the personal sitting of the Pope in the City only of Rome, but the Authority and Jurisdiction of his See exalted in the whole Universal Church, equal with God himself. For let Men give to the Pope that which he in his Laws, Decrees, and in his Pontifical requireth, and what difference is there between God and the Pope? If God set Laws and Ordinances, so doth he. If God have his Creatures, so hath he. If God require obedience, so doth he. If the breach of G[illegible]

OFF-

Commandments are puniſhed, much more be his. God hath his Religion, the Pope alſo hath his, yea for Gods one Religion, he hath an hundred. God hath ſet up an Advocate, he hath an hundred. God hath Inſtituted but a few Holy-days; for Gods one, he hath Inſtituted forty. And if the Holy-day that God hath appointed be ſimplex, the Feaſt that the Pope appointeth, is duplex & triplex. Chriſt is the Head of the Church; ſo is the Pope. Chriſt giveth influence to his Body; ſo doth the Pope. Chriſt forgiveth ſin; the Pope doth no leſs. Chriſt expelleth evil ſpirits by his Power; ſo pretendeth the Pope by his Holy Water. Furthermore, where Chriſt went bare-foot upon the bare Ground, he with his Golden Shooes is carried on Mens Shoulders. And where Chriſt was called Sanctus Sanctorum; he is called Sanctorum Sanctiſſimus. Chriſt never practiſed but only the Spiritual Sword; he claimeth both Spiritual and Temporal. Chriſt bought the Church; he both buyeth and ſelleth the Church. And if it be neceſſary to believe Chriſt to be the Saviour of the World; ſo it is neceſſary to believe the Pope to be the head of the Church. Chriſt paid Tribute unto Cæſar; he maketh Cæſar pay Tribute unto him. Finally, the Crown of Chriſt was of ſharp Thorn; the Pope hath three Crowns of Gold upon his head, ſo far exceeding Chriſt the Son of God in glory of this World, as Chriſt exceedeth him in the Glory of Heaven. The image and patern of whoſe intolerable Pride and Exaltation, according as St. Paul doth deſcribe him in his Epiſtle aforeſaid, we have here ſet forth, not only in theſe Tables to be ſeen, and by his own Facts to be noted, but alſo in his own Words and Regiſters, Clementines, Extravagants, and Pontificals expreſſed, as in order (the Lord willing) ſhall follow.

The exaltation of Popes above Kings and Emperors, out of Hiſtories.

John Patriarch of Conſtantinople ſubdued by the Biſhop of Rome.

FIrſt, after that Italy and the City of Rome were overrun by the Gothes and Vandales, ſo that the Seat of the Empire was removed to Conſtantinople, then began Joannes Patriarch of Conſtantinople to put forth himſelf, and would needs be called Univerſal Biſhop of the World; but the Biſhop of Rome in no caſe would ſuffer that, and ſtopped it. After this came the Emperors Deputy, and Exarch of Ravenna to rule Italy, but the Biſhop of Rome through aid of the King of Lombards, ſoon quailed him.

The Emperors Lieutenant of Ravenna ſubdued by the Lombards and Roman Biſhops.

Not long after, about the year of our Lord 500, came Phocas the murderer, who ſlew the Emperor of Conſtantinople, his Maſter Mauritius and his Children. By which Phocas the Biſhops of old Rome aſpired firſt to their preheminence, to be counted the head Biſhops over the whole Church, and ſo together with the Lombards began to rule the City of Rome. Afterwards when the Lombards would not yield unto him, in accompliſhing his ambitious deſire, but would needs require of the Biſhop the ſaid City of Rome; he ſtirred up Pipinus, but firſt depoſed Childericus the King of France, and ſo thruſting him into an Abby, ſet up in his place Pipinus and his Son Carolus Magnus to put down the ſaid King of Lombards called Aiſtulphus. And ſo he tranſlated the Empire from Conſtantinople into France, dividing the ſpoil between him and them; ſo that the Kings of France had all the Poſſeſſions and Lands which before belonged to the Empire, and he to receive of them the quiet Poſſeſſion of the City of Rome, with ſuch Donations and Lordſhips, which now they challenge unto them under the name of St. Peter's Patrimony, which they falſly aſcribe to that Donation of Conſtantine the great.

Boniface the Third obtained of Phocas to be called Univerſal Biſhop.

Pope Zachary putteth down Childericus the French King, and ſetteth Pipinus in his place.

Pipinus and Carolus Magnus ſet up by Pope Zachary.

How the Biſhops of Rome came firſt to be the head Biſhops of the Church.

Donation of Conſtantine, a thing falſe and forged.

It followeth then in proceſs of time, after the days of Pipinus, Carolus and Ludovicus (who had indued theſe Biſhops of Rome, called now Popes, with large Poſſeſſions) when the Kings of France were not ſo appliable to their beck, to aid and maintain them againſt the Princes of Italy, who began then to pinch the ſaid Biſhops for their wrongful uſurped Goods, they practiſed with the Germans to reduce the Empire to Otho, firſt of that name, Duke of Spain, referring the Election thereof to ſeven Princes Electors of Germany, which was about An. 1002. notwithſtanding, reſerving ſtill in his hands the Negative voice, thinking thereby to enjoy that they had in quietneſs and ſecurity, and ſo did for a good ſpace.

Pope Gregory the Fifth practiſeth, with the Germans to reduce the Empire to Germany, An. 1002.

At length, when ſome of theſe German Emperors alſo after Otho began a little to ſpurn againſt the ſaid Biſhops and Popes of Rome, ſome of them they accurſed, ſome they ſubdued and brought to the kiſſing of their feet, ſome they depoſed, and placed other in their Poſſeſſions.

KING Hen. 9. Otho firſt German Emperor.

So was Henry 4th by theſe Biſhops accurſed, the Emperor himſelf forced with his Wife and Child to wait attendance upon the Popes pleaſure three days and three nights in Winter, at the Gates of Canoſſus. Read before. Beſides all this, the ſaid Pope raiſed up Rodulphus to be Emperor againſt him; who being ſlain in War, then the ſaid Pope Gregory 7th, not reſting thus, ſtirred up his own Son Henricus the 5*th*, to Fight againſt his own natural Father, and to depoſe him, which Henricus the 5*th* was alſo himſelf afterward Accurſed and Excommunicated, and the Saxons at laſt ſet up by the Biſhops to Fight againſt him.

Emperors brought to kiſs the Popes feet.

Henricus the Fourth, accurſed, expireth at the Pope's Gate three days.

Rodulphus, and at laſt his own Son ſet up to Fight againſt him.

After this, the Emperors began to be ſomewhat calmed, and more quiet, ſuffering the Biſhops to Reign as they liſted, till Frederick the firſt, called Barbaroſſa, came and began to ſtir Coals againſt them. Howbeit they hampered both him, and his Son Henry in ſuch ſort, that they brought firſt the Neck of Frederick, in the Church of Venice, under their Feet to tread upon; and after the ſaid Biſhops, Crowning Henricus his Son in the Church of St. Peter, ſet his Crown on his Head with their Feet, and with their Feet ſpurned it off again, to make him know that the Popes of Rome had power both to Crown Emperors, and Depoſe them again. Whereof read before.

Read before under the Pope Alexander the Third treadeth upon the Neck of Frederick the Emperor.

Pope Celeſtine Croweth Henry the Fifth, Emperor, with his Foot, and with his Foot ſpurneth the Crown from his head again.

Then followed Philippus Brother to Henry aforeſaid, whom alſo the Popes Accurſed, about the year of our Lord 1198, and ſet up Otho Duke of Saxony. But when the ſaid Otho began to be ſo ſaucy, to diſpoſeſs the Biſhops of their Cities and Lands which they had encroached into their hands, they could not bear that, but incontinent they put him beſides the Cuſhion. The like alſo fell upon Otho the 4th, that followed after Philip, who was ſuffered no longer than four years to Reign, about the year of our Lord 1209.

At this time Fredericus the Second, the Son of Fredericus Barbaroſſa above-mentioned, was but young, whom the Biſhops of Rome ſuppoſing to find more mortified and tamed to their hand, advanced to be Emperor after his Father. But that fell out much contrary to their expectation. For he perceiving the immoderate Pomp and Pride of the Roman Biſhops, which he could in no caſe abide, ſo netled them and cut their Combs, and waxed ſo ſtout againſt them, intending to extirp their Tyranny, and to reduce their pompous Riches to the ſtate and condition of the Primitive Church again, putting ſome of them to flight, and priſoning ſome of their Cardinals, that of three Popes, one after another, he was Accurſed, circumvented by Treaſon, at laſt Depoſed, and after that Poyſoned, and at laſt forſaken and died.

Honorius 3. Gregory 9. Innocent 4. againſt Frederick 2. Emperor.

War raiſed againſt Conradus, by the Biſhops of Rome.

After this Frederick followed his Son Conradus, whom the foreſaid Biſhops for his diſobedience ſoon diſpatched, exciting againſt him in mortal War the Lantgrave of Thurin, whereby he was at length driven into his Kingdom of Naples, and there deceaſed.

Suevia.

This Conradus had a Son called Conradinus, Duke and Prince of Suevia. When this Conradinus, after the deceaſe of his Father came to enjoy his Kingdom of Naples, the ſaid Biſhops ſtirred up againſt him Charles the French Kings Brother, in ſuch ſort, that through crafty conveyance, both Conradinus which deſcended of the blood of ſo many Emperors, and alſo Frederick Duke of Auſtria, were both taken, and after much wretched handling in their miſerable indurance, unſeeming to their ſtate, at length were both brought under the Axe by the Pops procurement, and ſo both beheaded. And thus ended the Imperial ſtock of Frederick the Firſt, ſumamed Barbaroſſa.

The inſolency of Pope Boniface 8. againſt Philip the French King.

The like as hapned to Frederick the Emperor, had almoſt alſo fallen upon Philip the French King, by Pope Boniface the Eighth, who, becauſe he could not have his Commodities and Revenues out of France after his will, ſens out his Bulls and Letters Patents to diſplace King Philip aforeſaid, and to poſſeſs Albertus King of Rhodus in his room.

And thus hitherto in Foreign Stories. Now touching our Country Princes here in England, to ſpeak ſomewhat likewiſe of them: did not Pope Alexander the Third preſumptuouſly taking upon him where he had nothing to do, to intermeddle with the Kings Subjects, for the death of Becket the rebel, albeit the King ſufficiently cleared himſelf thereof; yet notwithſtanding, did he not wrongfully bring the ſaid K. Henry the Second to ſuch Penance as it pleaſed him to enjoyn, and alſo violently conſtrained him to Swear obedience to the See of Some? The like alſo was ſhewed before in this ſtory to happen to King John his Son. For when the ſaid King like a valiant Prince had he'd out the tyranny of thoſe Biſhops ſeven years together, were not all the Churches in England barred up, and his Inheritance with all his Dominions given away by Pope Innocent the Third, to Ludovicus the French King, and he afterward compelled to ſubmit both himſelf, and to make his whole Realm fedotary to the Biſhops of Rome, and moreover the King himſelf driven alſo to ſurrender his Crown to Pandulphus the Popes Legate, and ſo continued as a private perſon five days, ſtanding at the Popes courteſie, whether to receive it again at his hands or no? And when the Nobles of the Realm roſe afterward againſt the King for the ſame, was not he then fain to ſeek and ſue to the foreſaid Pope for ſuccour, as by his own Letter, taken out of the publick Rolls, may appear?

King John's ſupplication to Pope Innocent the Third.

Ex Radulfo Dicet. De gen. Regis Joannis 8.

Kings John's Supplication to Pope Innocent the Third.

Reverendiſ. Domino ſuo & Patri Sanctiſ. Innocentio Dei gratia, Joan. eadem gratia R. Angliæ, &c. Cum Comites & Barones Angliæ nobis devoti eſſent, antequam nos & noſtram terram Dominio veſtro ſubjacere curaſſemus, ex tunc in nos ſpecialiter ob hoc, ſicut publice dicunt, violenter inſurgunt. Nos vero præter Deum vos ſpecialem dominum & patronum habentes, defenſionem noſtram & totius Regni, quod veſtrum eſſe credimus, veſtræ paternitati commiſſam, & nos quantum in nobis eſt, curam & ſolicitudinem iſtam veſtræ reſignamus diſpoſitioni, devotius ſupplicantes quatenus in negotiis noſtris, quæ veſtra ſunt, conſilium & auxilium efficax apponatis, prout melius, videritis expedire, latores præſentium, &c. Teſte meipſo apud Dour. 18. Septem. 6.

And yet all this notwithſtanding that the ſaid K. John did ſo yield to the Pope, he was both purſued by his Nobles, and alſo in the end was Poyſoned by a ſubject of the Popes own Religion, a Monk of Swinſted; as I have ſufficiently to prove, not only by William Caxton above in my ſtory alledged, Pag. 332, but alſo have teſtimony of the moſt part of Chronicles for the ſame (a few only excepted) as of Thomas Gray in his French Chronicle; alſo of an other French Chronicle in Meeter; of Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis; Thomas Rudburn alſo doth witneſs the ſame; ſo doth Richard Rede, in novo Chronico ad tempora, Henr. 6. The like alſo doth the Chronicle called Eulogium Monachi Cant. The words of Walter Cisborn an ancient Hiſtoriographer, be plain. No leſs is to be found in Joan. Major. de geſtis Scotorum, Libr. 4. cap. 3. fol. 56. where he not only maketh mention of the Monk and of the Poyſon, but alſo of the Abbot, of his abſolution, and of the Three Monks every day ſinging for the ſaid Monks Soul. To theſe I could alſo annex divers other writers both Engliſh and Latin, without name, which witneſs that King John was Poyſoned; one beginning thus, Here beginneth a Book in the Engliſh Tongue, called Brute, &c. Another beginneth, Becauſe this Book is made to tell what time any thing, notable, &c. The Third in Engliſh beginneth, The reign of Britain that now is called England, &c. Of Latin Books which have no name, one beginneth thus: Britannia, quæ & Anglia dicitur, a Bruto nomen eſt ſortita, &c. Another hath this beginning: Adam pater generis humani, &c.

Ex D. Paulo, 2 Theſſ. 2.

1. FOraſmuch as it ſtandeth upon neceſſity of Salvation, for every human Creature to be ſubject unto me the Pope of Rome, it ſhall be therefore requiſite and neceſſary for all Men that will be ſaved, to learn and know the Dignity of my See and Excellency of my Domination, as here is ſet forth according to the truth and very words of mine own Laws, in ſtyle as followeth: 2. Firſt my Inſtitution began in the Old Teſtament, and was conſummate and finiſhed in the New, in that my Prieſthood was prefigured by Aaron; And other Biſhops under me were prefigured by the Sons of Aaron, that were under him. 3. Neither is it to be thought that my Church of Rome hath been preferred by any General Council, but obtained the Primacy only by the Voice of the Goſpel, and the mouth of the Saviour. 4. And hath in it neither ſpot nor wrinkle, nor any ſuch like thing. 5. Wherefore as other Seats be all inferior to me, and as they cannot Abſolve me: ſo have they no power to bind me or to ſtand againſt me, no more than the Axe hath power to ſtand or preſume above him that heweth with it, or the Saw to preſume above him that ruleth it. 6. This is the Holy and Apoſtolick Mother-Church of all other Churches of Chriſt; 7. from whoſe Rules it is not meet that any perſon or perſons ſhould decline; but like as the Son of God came to do the Will of his Father, ſo muſt you do the Will of your Mother the Church, the head whereof is the Church of Rome. 8. And if any other perſon or perſons ſhall err from the ſaid Church, either let them be admoniſhed, or elſe their names taken, to be known who they be that ſwerve from the Cuſtoms of Rome. 9. Thus then foraſmuch as the holy Church of Rome whereof I am Governor, is ſet up to the whole World for a glaſs or example, reaſon would what thing ſoever the ſaid Church determineth, or ordaineth, that to be received of all Men for a general and a perpetual rule for ever. 10. Whereupon we ſee it now verified in this Church, that was fore-propheſied by Jeremy, ſaying, Behold, I have ſet thee up over Nations and Kingdoms, to pluck up and to break down, to build and to plant, &c. 11. Whoſo underſtandeth not the Prerogative of this my Prieſthood, let him look up to the Firmament, where he may ſee two great Lights, the Sun and the Moon, one ruling over the day, the other over the night; So in the Firmament of the Univerſal Church, 12. God hath ſet two great Dignities, the Authority of the Pope, and of the Emperor. Of the which two, this our Dignity is ſo much more weightier, as we have the greater charge to give account to God for Kings of the Earth, and the Laws of Men. 13. Wherefore it known to you Emperors, which know it alſo right well, that you depend upon the judgment of us; we muſt not be brought and reduced to your will. 14. For (as I ſaid) look what difference there is betwixt the Sun and the Moon, ſo great is the power of the Pope ruling over the day, that is, over the Spiritualty, above Emperors and Kings, ruling

Yet in anſwering again in my Decretal, I expounded the mind and the words of St. Peter to pertain to his Subjects, and not his Succeſſors, willing the ſaid Emperor to conſider the perſon of the ſpeaker, and to whom it was ſpoken. For if the mind of Peter had been there to debaſe the Order of Prieſthood, and to make us underlings to every human Creature, then every Jack might have dominion over Prelates; which maketh againſt the example of Chriſt, ſetting up the Order of Prieſthood to bear Dominion over Kings, according to the ſaying of Jeremy, Behold, I have ſet thee up over Kings and Nations, &c.

Having both Swords in my power, both of the Spiritual and Temporal Juriſdiction, 62. ſo far ſurmounting the Authority of the Emperor, that I of mine own power alone without a Council, have Authority to depoſe him, or to transfer his Kingdom, and to give a new Election, as I did to Frederick and divers other. 63. What power then or poteſtate in all the World is comparable to me, who have Authority to bind and looſe both in Heaven and Earth? 64. That is, who have power both of Heavenly things, and also of Temporal things, 65. To whom Emperors and Kings be more inferior, than Lead is inferior to Gold. 66. For do you not see the necks of great Kings and Princes bend under our knees, yea and think themselves happy and well defenced, if they may kiss our hands? 67. Wherefore the sauciness of Honorius the Emperor is to be reprehended, and his constitution abolished, who with his laity would take upon him to intermeddle, not only with the temporal Order, but also with matters Ecclesiastical, and Election of the Pope. 68. But here perchance some will object the examples and words of Christ, saying, That his Kingdom is not of this World, and where he being required to divide betwixt two Brethren their Heritage, did refuse it. But that ought to be no prejudice to my power, 69. For if Peter, and I in Peter, if we I say, have Power to bind and loose in Heaven, how much more then is it to be thought, that we have Power in Earth to loose and to take away Empires, Kingdoms, Dukedoms, and what else soever mortal Men may have, and to give them where he will? 70. And if we have authority over Angels, which be the Governours of Princes, what then may we do upon their inferiors and servants? 71. And for that you shall not marvel that I say Angels be subject to us, you shall hear what my blessed Clerk Antoninus writeth of the matter, saying, That our power, of Peter and me is greater than the Angels in four things; 1. In jurisdiction, 2. In administration of Sacraments, 3. In knowledge, 4. and in reward, &c. 72. And again in Bulla Clementis, do I not there command in my Bull the Angels of Paradise, to absolve the soul of Man out of Purgatory, and to bring it into the glory of Paradise? 73. And now besides my Heavenly power, to speak of mine Earthly Jurisdiction, who did first Translate the Empire from the Greeks to the Almains, but I? 74. And not only in the Empire am I Emperor, the place being empty, but in all Ecclesiastical Benefices have full right and power to give, to Translate, and to dispose after my arbitrement. 75. Did not I Zacharias put down Childerick the old King of France, and set up Pipinus? 76. Did not I Gregorius the Seventh set up Robert Wyfard, and make him King of Sicilia and Duke of Capua? &c. 77. Did not I the same Gregorius also set up Rodulphus against Henry the Fourth Emperor? 78. And though this Henricus was an Emperor of most stout courage, who stood 62 times in open field against his Enemies, 79. yet did not I Gregorius bring him coram nobis, and make him stand at my Gate three days and three nights bare-foot and bare-leg, with his Wife and Child, in the deep of Winter, both in Frost and Snow, intreating for his absolution, and after did excommunicate him again, so that he was twice Excommunicated in my days? 80. Again, did not I Paschalis, after Gregory, set up the Son of the said Henricus against his Father in War, to possess the Empire, and to put down his Father, and so he did? 81. Item, Did not I, Pope Alexander bring under Henry the Second, King of England, for the death of Thomas Becket, and cause him to go bare-foot to his Tomb at Canterbury with bleeding feet? 82. Did not I Innocentius the Third, cause King John to kneel down at the feet of Pandulphus my Legate, and offer up his Crown to his hands; also to kiss the feet of Stephen Langhton Bishop of Canterbury, and besides merced him in a thousand Marks by year? 83. Did not I Urbanus the Second, put down Hugo Earl in Italy, discharging his Subjects from their Oath and Obedience to him? 84. Did not I Paschalis Excommunicate also his Son Henry the 5*th*, and get out his of hands all his Right and Title of Elections and Donations of spiritual Promotions? Did not I Gelasius the 2*d* bring the Captain of Cintius under, unto the kissing of my feet? And after Gelasius, did not I Calixtus the 2*d* quail the foresaid Emperor Henricus the 5*th*, and also bring in subjection Gregory, whom the said Emperor had set up against me to be Pope, bringing him into Rome upon a Camel, his face to the Horse tail, making him to hold the Horse tail in his hand in stead of a Bridle? 85. Further, did not I Innocentius the 2*d* set up and make Lotharius to be Emperor for driving out Pope Anacletus out of Rome? 86. Did not I the said Innocentius take the Dukedom of Sicile from the Empire, and make Roger to be King thereof, whereby afterward the Kingdom became the patrimony of Saint Peter? 87. Did not I Alexander the 3*d* suspend all the Realm, and Churches of England for the Kings Marriage, Anno 1159? 88. But what do I speak of Kings? Did not the said Alexander bring the valiant Emperor Frederick the first to Venice, by reason of his Son Otho there taken prisoner, and there in Saint Marks Church made him fall down flat upon the ground while I set my foot upon his neck, saying the verse of the Psalm, Super aspidem & basiliscum ambulabis? &c. 89. Did not I Adrianus Pope, an English-man born, Excommunicate W. King of Sicile, and refuse his peace, which he offered? And had not he overcome me in plain field, I would have shaken him out of his Kingdom of Sicile, and Dukedom of Apulia. 90. Also did not I the said Adrianus Control and Correct the foresaid Fredericus Emperor, for holding the left Stirrup of my Horse, when he should have holden the right? 91. And afterward did not I Excommunicate and Curse him, for that he was so saucy to set his own name in writing before mine? 92. And although a poor Fly afterward overcame and strangled me, yet I made Kings and Emperors to stoop. 93. Did not I Innocentius the 3*d* deject Philippus, Brother to Fredericus, from the Imperial Crown, being elected without my leave, and after set him up again? And also set up Otho of Brunswick, and after did Excommunicate and also depose the same Four years, setting up the French King to War against him? 94. Then was Fredericus the 2*d* set up by me, and Reigned 37 years; and yet 5 years before he died. 95. Did not I Honorius intredict him, for not restoring certain to their possessions at my request? 96. Whom also Gregorius the 9*th* did Excommunicate twice together, and raised up the Venetians against him, 97. And at length Innocentius spoiled him of his Empire; after that he caused him to be poisoned, at length to be strangled by one Manfredus, and did Excommunicate his Son Conradus after him, not only depriving him of his right Inheritance, but also caused him with Frederick Duke of Austria to be beheaded. 98. Thus then did not I Excommunicate and depose all these Emperors in order? Henry the Fourth, Henricus the Fifth, Fredericus the First, Philippus, Otho the Fourth, Fredericus the Second, and Conradus his Son? 99. Did not I interdict King Henry the Eighth? 100. And all his Kingdom of England? 101. And had not his Prudence and Power prevented my practise, I had displaced him from his Kingdom also. Briefly, who is able to comprehend the greatness of my Power and of my Seat? 102. For by me only general Councils take their force and confirmation, 103. and the interpretation of the said Councils, and of all other causes hard and doubtful, ought to be referred and stand to my determination. 104. By me the Works of all Writers, whatsoever they be, either be reproved or allowed. 105. Then how much more ought my Writings and Decrees to be preferred before all other? 106. Insomuch that my Letters and Epistles Decretal be equivalent with the general Councils, 107. And where whereas God hath ordained all cauſes of Men to be judged by Men, he hath only reſerved me, that is, the Pope of Rome, without all queſtion of Men, unto his own judgment.

108. Pope Innocentius 6. q. 3. c. Nemo. 108. And therefore where all other creatures be under their Judge, only I, which in Earth am the Judge of all, can be judged of none, either of Emperor, nor the whole Clergy, nor of Kings, nor of the People. 109. For who hath

109. Ibidem.

110. Pope Gelaſius, 9. q. 3. cap. Cuncta. power to judge upon his Judge? 110. This Judge am I, and that alone, without any other reſiſtance of any Council joyned to me. For I have Power upon Councils; Councils have no Power upon me. But if the Council determine amiſs, it is in my authority alone to infringe it, or to condemn whom I luſt without any Council. 111. And

111. Ibidem.

all for the Preheminence of my Predeceſſor Bleſſed Saint Peter, which by the voice of the Lord he received, and ever ſhall retain. 112. Furthermore, and whereas all other Sentences and Judgments, both of Councils, Perſon or Perſons, may and ought to be examined, 113. for that they may be corrupted four ways, by fear, by gifts, by hatred, by favour, only my Sentence and judgment muſt ſtand, 114. as given out of Heaven by the mouth of Peter himſelf, which no Man muſt 115. break, nor retract, 116. no Man muſt diſpute or doubt of. 117. Yea, if my judgment, ſtatute, or yoke ſeem ſcarcely tolerable, yet for remembrance of Saint Peter it muſt be humbly obeyed. 118. Yea and moreover Obedience is to be given, not only to ſuch Decrees ſet forth by me in time of my Popedom, but alſo to ſuch as I do foreſee and commit to writing before I be Pope. 119. And although it be thought by ſome writers, to be given to all Men to err, and to be deceived; 120. yet neither am I a pure Man. 121. And again, the Sentence of my Apoſtolick Seat is always conceived with ſuch moderation, is concoct and digeſted with ſuch patience and ripeneſs, and delivered out with ſuch gravity and deliberation, that nothing is thought in it neceſſary to be altered or detracted. 122. Wherefor it is manifeſt, and teſtified by the voice of Holy Biſhops, that the Dignity of this my Seat is to be reverenced through the whole World, in that all the faithful ſubmit themſelves to it as to the head of the whole body; 123. Whereof it is ſpoken to me by the Prophet, ſpeaking of the Ark; If this be humbled, whither ſhall you run for ſuccour, and where ſhall your glory become? Seeing then this is ſo, that ſo holy Biſhops and Scriptures do witneſs with me, what ſhall we ſay then to ſuch as will take upon them to judge of my doings, to reprehend my proceedings, or to require Homage and Tribute of me to whom all other are ſubject? 124. Againſt the firſt ſort the Scripture ſpeaketh, Deut. Thou oughteſt not to put thy Sithe into another Mans Corn. Which thing to attempt againſt me, what is it but plain Sacrilege? 125. According to my Canoniſts, which thus define Sacrilege to conſiſt in three things; either when a Man judgeth of his Princes judgment; or when the Holy-day is prophaned; or when reverence is not given to Laws and Canons. 126. Againſt the ſecond ſort maketh the place of the Book of Kings, where we read the Ark of God was brought from Gaba to Jeruſalem, and in the way the Ark inclining by reaſon of the unruly Oxen, Ozias the Levite put to his hand to help, and therefore was ſtrucken of the Lord. By this Ark is ſignified the Prelates; by the inclination thereof, the fall of Prelates, 127. which alſo be ſignified by the Angels that Jacob did ſee going up and coming down the Ladder: 128. Alſo by the Prophet where he ſaith, He bowed down the Heavens and came down, &c. By Ozias, and by the unruly Oxen are meant our ſubjects. 129. Then like as Ozias was ſtricken for putting his hand to the Ark inclining; no more muſt Subjects rebuke their Prelates going awry. 130. Albeit, here may be anſwered again, that all be not Prelates which ſo be called; for it is not the name that maketh a Biſhop, but his life. 131. And againſt the third ſort of ſuch as would bring us under the tribute and exactions of ſecular Men, maketh the New Teſtament, where Peter was bid to give the Groat in the Fiſhes mouth, but not the head nor the body of the Fiſh; No more is the Head or Body of the Church ſubdued to Kings, but only that which is in the mouth, that is, the externe things of the Church. And yet not they neither. 132. For ſo we read in the Book of Geneſis, that Pharaoh in time of dearth ſubdued all the land of the Egyptians, but yet he Miniſtred to the Prieſts ſo that he took neither their poſſeſſions from them, nor their liberty. If then Prelates of the Church muſt be neither judged nor reprehended, nor exacted, how much more ought I to be free from the ſame, 133. which am the Biſhop of Biſhops, and head of Prelates? 134. For it is not to be thought that the caſe betwixt me and other Prelates; betwixt my See and other Churches, be like, 135. Although the whole Catholick and Apoſtolick Church make one Bride-chamber of Chriſt; yet the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church of Rome had the Preheminence given over all other by the mouth of the Lord himſelf, ſaying to Peter, Thou art Peter, &c. 136. Thus a diſcretion and difference muſt be had in the Church as it was betwixt Aaron and his Children; 137. Betwixt the Seventy two Diſciples, and the Twelve Apoſtles; betwixt the other Apoſtles and Peter: 138. Wherefore it is to be concluded, that there muſt be an order and difference of Degrees in the Church betwixt Power Superior and Inferior; without which order the Univerſity of the whole cannot conſiſt. 139. For as amongſt the Angelical Creatures above in Heaven there is ſet a difference and inequality of Powers and Orders, ſome be Angels, ſome Archangels, ſome Cherubins, and Seraphins: 140. So in the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy of the Church militant in the Earth, Prieſts muſt not be equal with Biſhops, Biſhops muſt not be like in Order with Archbiſhops, with Patriarchs or Primates, 141. who contain under them three Archbiſhops, as a King containeth three Dukes under him. In the which number of Patriarchs cometh in the ſtate of 142. Cardinals or Principals, ſo called, becauſe as the Door turneth by his hinges, ſo the Univerſal Church ought to be ruled by them. 143. The next and higheſt Order above theſe is mine, which am Pope, differing in Power and Majority, and Honor reverential, from theſe and all other degrees of Men. 144. For the better declaration whereof, my Canoniſts make three kinds of power in Earth; Immediata, which is ſaid immediately from God; Derivata, which belongeth to other Inferior Prelates from me; 145. Miniſtralis, belonging to Emperors and Princes to Miniſter for me. For the which cauſe the annointing of Princes, and my conſecration doth differ; for they are anointed only in the arms or ſhoulders, and I in the head, to ſignifie the difference of Power betwixt Princes and me. 146. This Order therefore of Prieſts, Biſhops, Archbiſhops, Patriarchs and other, as a thing moſt convenient, my Church of Rome hath ſet and inſtituted through all Churches, following therein not only the example of the Angelical Army in Heaven, but alſo of the Apoſtles. 147. For amongſt them alſo there was not an uniform equality or inſtitution of one degree, 148. but a diverſity or diſtinction of Authority and and Power. Albeit they were all Apoſtles together, yet it was granted notwithſtanding to Peter (themſelves alſo agreeing to the ſame) that he ſhould bear Dominion and Superiority over all the other Apoſtles; 149. And therefore he had his name given him Cephas, that is, head or beginning of the Apoſtlehood. 150. Wherefore ſeeing ſuch power is given to Peter, 153. and to me in Peter, being his ſucceſſor, 154. who is he then in all the World that ought not to be ſubject to my Decrees which have ſuch Power in Heaven, in Hell, in Earth, with the quick and alſo the dead? 155. Commanding and granting in my Bull of Lead ſent to Vienna unto all ſuch as died in their Peregrination to Rome, that the pain of Hell ſhould not touch them: And alſo that all ſuch as took the holy Croſs upon them, ſhould every one at his requeſt, not only be delivered himſelf, but alſo deliver three or four ſouls whomſoever he would, out of Purgatory: 156. Again, having ſuch promiſe and aſſurance that my faith ſhall not fail, who then will not believe my Doctrine? For did not Chriſt himſelf firſt pray for Peter that his faith ſhould not fail? 157. Alſo have I not a ſure promiſe of Pauls own mouth, writing to my Church by theſe words; God is my witneſs whom I ſerve in my Spirit, in the Goſpel of his Son, that without ceaſing I make mention of you always in my Prayers? Rom. 1. 158. Wherefore as I condemn all ſuch worthily which will not obey my Decrees, to be diſpoſſeſſed of all their honour without reſtitution: 159. So all they that believe not my Doctrine, or ſtand againſt the priviledge of the Church, eſpecially the Church of Rome, I pronounce them Hereticks: 160. And as the other before is to be called unjuſt, ſo this Man is to be called an Heretick: 161. For why? he goeth againſt the faith which goeth againſt her who is the Mother of Faith. 162. But here may riſe percaſe a doubt or ſcruple, that if my faith and knowledge ſtand ſo ſure by the promiſe of Chriſt, and by the continual Prayer of Saint Paul; whether is it true, or is it to be granted, that any other ſhould excel me in knowledge, or interpretation of holy Scripture? 163. For look whoſe knowledge is grounded on moſt reaſon, his words ſhould ſeem to be of more authority. 164. Whereunto I anſwer and grant, that many there be, and have been more abundantly indued with fuller grace of the Holy Ghoſt and greater excellency of knowledge; and therefore that the tractations of Auguſtine, Jerom and others ought to be preferred before the conſtitutions of divers Popes; yet I ſay in determination of cauſes, becauſe they have not the vertue and height of that authority which is given to me, therefore in expounding of Scriptures they are to be preferred, but in deciding of matters they ſtand Inferior to my authority. By vertue of which authority, 165. both they themſelves be allowed for Doctors, and their Works approved, and alſo all other matters be ruled, through the Power of the Keys which is given to me immediately of Chriſt. Although I deny not but the ſame Keys be alſo committed to other Prelates, as they were to other Apoſtles beſides Peter, 166. yet it is one thing to have the Keys, another thing to have the uſe of the Keys. 167. Wherefore here is to be noted a diſtinction of Keys, after the mind of my ſchool Doctors; one Key which is called Clavis ordinis, having authority to bind and looſe, but not over the perſons whom they bind and looſe, and this authority they take not immediately of Chriſt, but mediately by me the Vicar of Chriſt. The other Key is called Clavis juriſdictionis, which I the Vicar of Chriſt take immediately of him, having not only authority to bind and looſe, but alſo Dominion over them on whom this Key is exerciſed. By the juriſdiction of which Key the fulneſs of my Power is ſo great, that whereas all other are Subjects; 168. yea and Emperors themſelves ought to ſubdue their executions to me: Only I am ſubject to no Creature, 169. no not to my ſelf, except I liſt, In foro pœnitentiæ, to my ghoſtly Father ſubmitting my ſelf as a ſinner, but not as Pope. So that my papal Majeſty ever remaineth unpuniſhed; Superior to all Men, 170. whom all perſons ought to obey, 171. and follow, 172. whom no Man muſt judge nor accuſe of any Crime, either of Murder, Adultery, Simony, or ſuch like; 173. No man depoſe, but I my ſelf; 174. No man can Excommunicate me, yea though I Communicate with the Excommunicate, for no Canon bindeth me. Whom no Man muſt lie to, 175. For he that lieth to me is a Church Robber, 176. And who obeyeth not me is an Heretick, and an excommunicate Perſon. 177. For like as all the Jews were commanded to obey the High Prieſt of the Leviticall Order, of what ſtate or condition ſoever they were; ſo are all Chriſtian men more and leſs bound to obey me Chriſts Lieutenant in Earth. Concerning the obedience or diſobedience of whom ye have in Deut. 17. 178. Where the common Gloſs ſaith, That he who denieth to the High Prieſt Obedientiam, lieth under the Sentence and Condemnation, as much as he that denieth to God his Omnipotentiam. Thus then it appeareth, that the greatneſs of my Prieſthood, 179. began in Melchiſedech, was ſolemnized in Aaron, continued in the Children of Aaron, perfectionated in Chriſt, repreſented in Peter, exalted in the Univerſal juriſdiction, and manifeſted in Silveſter, &c. So that through this Preheminence of my Prieſthood, having all things ſubject to me, 180. it may ſeem well verified in me that was ſpoken of Chriſt, Pſalm 8. Omnia ſubjeciſti ſub pedibus ejus, Oves & Boves, & Univerſa pecora campi; Volucres cœli & piſces maris, &c.i. Thou haſt ſubdued all things under his Feet, Sheep and Oxen, and all Cattel of the Field, the Birds of Heaven, and Fiſh of the Sea, &c. 181. Where it is to be noted, that by Oxen, Jews and Hereticks; by Cattel of the Field, Pagans be ſignified. For although as yet they be out of the uſe of my Keys of binding and looſing, yet they be not out of the juriſdiction of my Keys, but if they return I may abſolve them. 182. By Sheep and all Cattel, are meant all Chriſtian men both great and leſs, whether they be Emperors, Princes, Prelates, or other. By Birds of the Air you may underſtand the Angels and Poteſtates of Heaven, who be all ſubject to me, in that I am greater than the Angels; and that in four things, as is afore declared; and have power to bind and looſe in Heaven, 183. and to give Heaven to them that fight in my Wars. 184. Laſtly, by the Fiſhes of the Sea, are ſignified the ſouls departed in pain or in Purgatory, as Gregory by his Prayer delivered the ſoul of Trajanus out of Hell, and I have Power to deliver out of Purgatory whom I pleaſe. 185. Laſtly, by the Fiſhes of the Sea are ſignified ſuch as be in Purgatory; inſomuch that they ſtand in need and neceſſity of other Mens help, and yet be in their journey Viatores, & de foro Papæ. i. Paſſengers and belonging to the Court of the Pope; therefore they may be relieved out of the Storehouſe of the Church, by the participation of Indulgence. And foraſmuch as ſome do object that my Pardons cannot extend to them that be departed, for that it was ſaid to Peter, Whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe upon Earth; and therefore ſeeing they are not upon Earth, they cannot be looſed of me: Here I anſwer again by my Doctors, that this word Super terram, &c. i. Upon the Earth, may be referred two manner of ways; Firſt to him that is the Looſer, ſo that he which ſhall looſe ſhall be upon the Earth; and ſo I grant that the Pope being dead, can looſe no Man. Alſo it may be referred to him that is looſed, ſo that whoſoever is looſed muſt be upon the Earth, or about the Earth; And ſo the ſouls in Purgatory may be looſed, which albeit they are not upon the Earth, yet they are about the Earth, at leaſt they be not in Heaven. And becauſe oftentimes one Queſtion may riſe upon another, and the heads of Men now adays are curious, a Man hearing now that I can deliver out of Purgatory, will ask here a queſtion, Whether I be able alſo to empty all Purgatory at once, or not? To whom my Canoniſt Auguſt. de Ancho. doth anſwer by a triple diſtinction: Quantum ad abſolutam meam juriſdictionem, quantum ad ordinatam executionem, quantum ad divinam acceptationem. Firſt touching my abſolute juriſdiction, he ſaith, Iam able to rid out all Purgatory together, for as many as be under my juriſdiction, as all be, except only Infants unbaptiſed, In Limbo, and Men departed only, Cum Baptiſmo flaminis, That is, with the Baptiſm of the Spirit, and ſuch as have no Friends to do for them that wherefore pardons be given; theſe only excepted. For all other beſides, the Pope (he ſaith) hath Power to releaſe all Purgatory at once, as touching his abſolute juriſdiction. Albeit Thomas Aquinas part 4. denieth the ſame, forſomuch as Chriſt himſelf (he ſaith) when he came down, did not utterly at once releaſe all Purgatory. As touching my ordinary execution they hold, that I may if I will, but I ought not to do it. Thirdly, as concerning the Divine acceptation, that is, how God would accept it if I did it, that (they ſay) is unknown unto them, and to every Creature, yea, and to the Pope himſelf.

And to the intent I would all Men to ſee and underſtand that I lack not witneſſes moe beſides theſe, if I liſt to bring them out, you ſhall hear the whole Quire of my divine Clergy brought out, with a full voice teſtifying in my behalf in their Books, Tractations, Diſtinctions, Titles, Gloſſes, and Summaries, as by their own words here followeth. The Pope (ſay they) being the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt through the whole World, in the ſtead of the living God, hath that Dominion and Lordſhip which Chriſt here in Earth would not have, although he had it in habitu, but gave it to Peter in Actu, that is, the Univerſal juriſdiction both of Spiritual things, and alſo of Temporal, which double juriſdiction was ſignified by the two ſwords in the Goſpel, and alſo by the offering of the wiſe men, who offered not only Incenſe, but alſo Gold, to ſignifie not only the ſpiritual Dominion, but alſo the Temporal to belong to Chriſt and to his Vicar. For as we read, The Earth is the Lords and the fulneſs thereof; as Chriſt ſaith, All power is given to him both in Heaven and Earth: So it is to be affirmed Incluſive, that the Vicar of Chriſt hath Power on things Celeſtial, Terreſtrial, and Infernal. Which he took immediately of Chriſt; all other take it immediately by Peter and the Pope. Wherefore ſuch as ſay that the Pope hath Dominion only on Spiritual things in the World, and not of Temporal, may be likned to the Counſellors of the Kings of Syria, 3 Reg. 20. which ſaid, That the Gods of the Mountains be their Gods, and therefore they have overcome us; but let us fight againſt them in the low Meadows and in Vallies where they have no Power, and ſo we ſhall prevail over them. So evil Counſellors now adaies, through their peſtiferous flattery, deceive Kings and Princes of the Earth; ſaying, Popes and Prelates be Gods of Mountains, that is, of Spiritual things only, but they be not Gods of Vallies, That is, they have no Dominion over Temporal things, and therefore let us fight with them in the Vallies, that is, in the Power of the Temporal poſſeſſions, and ſo we ſhall prevail over them. But what ſaith the Sentence of God to them, let us hear. Becauſe (ſaith he) the Syrians ſay that the God of Mountains is their God, and not the God of Vallies, therefore I will give all this multitude into your hand, and ye ſhall know that I am the Lord. What can be more effectually ſpoken to ſet forth the Majeſty of my juriſdiction, which I received immediately of the Lord; of the Lord, I ſay, and of no Man? For whereas Conſtantine the Emperor gave to Silveſter, enduing him with this poſſeſſion and patrimony; that is ſo to be expounded and taken not ſo much for a donation, as to be counted for a reſtitution made of that which tyrannouſly was taken from him before. And again whereas I have given at ſundry times to Ludovick the other Emperors, of my Temporal lands and poſſeſſions, yet that was done not ſo much for any recogniſing of Homage to them, as for keeping peace with them. For I owe to Emperors no due Obedience that they can claim; but they owe to me as to their Superior. And therefore for a diverſity betwixt their degree and mine, in their conſecration they take the Unction on their Arm, I on the Head. And as I am Superior to them, ſo am I Superior to all Laws, and free from all conſtitutions. Which am able of my ſelf, and by my interpretation to prefer equity not being written before the Law written; having all Laws within the cheſt of my Breſt, as is aforeſaid. And whatſoever this my See ſhall enact, approve or diſprove, all Men ought to approve or reprove the ſame, without either judging, diſputing, doubting or retracting. Such is the priviledge given of Chriſt, in the behalf of Peter, to the Church of Rome, 186. that what Country ſoever, Kingdom or Province, chuſing to themſelves Biſhops and Miniſters, although they agree with all other Chriſts faithful people in the name of Jeſus, that is, in Faith and Charity, believing in the ſame God, and in Chriſt His true Son, and in the Holy Ghoſt, having alſo the ſame Creed; the ſame Evangliſts and Scriptures of the Apoſtles: yet notwithſtanding unleſs their Biſhops and Miniſters take their Origine and Ordination from this Apoſtolick Seat, they are to be counted not of the Church. So that ſucceſſion of Faith only is not ſufficient to make a Church, except the Miniſters take their Ordination by them which have their ſucceſſion from the Apoſtles. So their Faith, Supremacy, the Chair of Peter, Keys of Heaven, power to bind and looſe, all theſe be inſeparable to the Church of Rome: ſo that it is to be preſumed, that God always providing, and Saint Peter helping the Biſhoprick and Dioceſs of Rome, it ſhall never fall from the Faith. And likewiſe it is to be preſumed and preſuppoſed that the Biſhop of that Church is good and always Holy. Yea, and though he be not always good, or be deſtitute of his own merits, yet the merits of Saint Peter, Predeceſſor of that place, be ſufficient for him, who hath bequeathed and left a perpetual dowry of merits, with inheritance of innocency, to his poſterity, 178. yea, though he fall into Homicide or Adultery, he may ſin, but yet he

KING Hen. 7. he cannot be accused, but rather excused by the Murthers of Sampson, the Thefts of the Hebrews, the Adultery of Jacob, 188. And likewise, if any of his Clergy should be found embracing a Woman, it must be expounded and presupposed that he doth it to bless her. Furthermore, the Pope (say they) hath all the Dignities, and all Power of all Patriarchs. In his Primacy, he is Abel; In Government, the Ark of Noah; In Patriarchdom, Abraham; In Order, Melchisedec; In Dignity, Aaron; In Authority, Moses; In Seat-Judicial, Samuel; In Zeal, Helias, In Meekness, David; In Power, Peter; In Unction, Christ. (Nay, thou art Antichrist) My Power (they say) is greater than all the Saints. For whom I Confirm, no man may infirm: I may favour and spare whom I please, 189. to take from one and to give to another. And if I be an Enemy to any man, all men ought to shew that person forthwith, and not tarry and look while I bid them so to do. All the Earth is my Dioces, and I the Ordinary of all men, having the Authority of the King of all Kings upon Subjects. I am all in all, and above all, 190. so that God Himself and I the Vicar of God have both one Consistory, 191. and I am able to do almost all that God can do, Clave non errante. 192. Item, It is said of me, that I have an heavenly Arbitrement, and therefore am able to change the nature of things, Substantialia unius applicando alteri, and of nothing to make things to be; and of a Sentence that is nothing to make it stand in effect; In all things that I list, my will to stand for reason. For I am able by the Law to dispense above the Law, and of Wrong to make Justice, in correcting Laws and changing them. You have heard hitherto sufficiently out of my Doctors. Now you shall hear greater things out of mine own Decrees, 193. Read there Dist. 96. Satis. 194. Also 12. Caus. 1. q. 1. cap. Sacerdotibus. 195. Also 12. q. 1. cap. Futuram. Do you not find there expressed, how Constantinus the Emperor, sitting in the General Council of Nice, called us Prelates of the Church, all gods? 196. Again, read my Canon, Decretal. De transl. Episc. cap. Quanto. Do you not see there manifestly expressed, how not Man, but God alone separateth that which the Bishop of Rome doth dissolve and separate? Wherefore if those things that I do be said to be done not of man, but of God; What can you make me but God? Again, if Prelates of the Church be called and counted of Constantinus for gods, I then being above all Prelates seem by this reason to be above all gods. Wherefore no marvel, if it be in my power to change time and times, to alter and abrogate Laws, to dispense with all things, yea with the Precepts of Christ. For where Christ biddeth Peter put up his Sword, monished his Disciples not to use any outward force in revenging themselves, 197. Do not I P. Nicolaus, writing to the Bishops of France, exhort them to draw out their material Swords in pursuing their Enemies, and recovering their Possessions, setting against the Precept of Christ, the Prophet saying, Dissolve colligationes impietatis, &c. Item, where Christ was present himself at the marriage in Cana Galilea, 198. Do not I Pope Martinus in my distinction inhibit the Spiritual Clergy to be present at Marriage-Feasts, and also to marry themselves? Item, where Matrimony by Christ cannot be loosed but only for Whoredom, 199. Do not Pope Gregorius Junior writing ad Bonifacium permit the same to be broken for impotency or infirmity of body? 200. Item, against the express caution of the Gospel, doth not Innocentius the Fourth permit vim vi repellere? 201. Likewise against the Old Testament I do dispense in not giving Tythes. 202. Item, against the New Testament in swearing, and that in these Cases, 203. Pax, fama, fides, reverentia, cautio damni. Defectus veri, poscunt sibi magna caveri.

Wherein two kinds of Oaths are to be noted. Whereof some be Promissoria, some be Assertoria, &c. 204. Item, in Vows, and that ex toto voto, whereas other Prelates cannot dispense ex toto a voto, I can deliver ex toto a voto, like God himself. 205. Item, in perjury if I absolve, my Absolution standeth. 206. Where also note, that in all swearing always the authority of the Superior is excepted. 207. Moreover, where Christ biddeth to lend without hope of gain, do not I Pope Martinus give Dispensation for the same? and notwithstanding the Council of Thuron enacted the contrary, yet with two Bulls I disannulled that decreement. 208. What should I speak of Murder, making it no Murder nor Homicide to slay them that be Excommunicate? 209. Likewise against the law of Nature. 210. Item, against the Apostle. 211. Also against the Canons of the Apostles I can and do dispense. For where they in their Canon command a Priest for Fornication to be deposed, I through the authority of Silvester do alter the rigour of that Constitution, 212. considering the minds and bodies also of men now to be weaker than they were then. 213. Briefly, against the universal state of the Church I have dispensation, scilicet quando status Ecclesiæ non decoloratur. And for Marriage in the second degree of Consanguinity and Affinity, In collateralibus æquali linea; that is, between the Brethrens Children, although not inæquali linea, so that the Uncle may not marry his Neece, unless for an urgent and weighty cause. As for all such Contracts betwixt party and party, where that Matrimony is not yet consummate by carnal Copulation, it is but a small matter for me to dispense withall. In summa, if ye list briefly to hear the whole number of all such cases as properly do appertain to my Papal Dispensation, which come to the number of one and fifty Points, that no man may meddle withall but only I my self alone, I will recite them first in Latin, then in English, as they be set forth in my Canonical Doctors.

Theſe be the caſes wherein I only have power to diſpenſe, and no man elſe, neither Biſhop, nor Metropolitan, nor Legate, without a licence from me.

The riches and poſſeſſions of the Pope.

After that I have now ſufficiently declared my Power on Earth, in Heaven, and in Purgatory, how great it is, and what is the fulneſs thereof, in binding, looſing, commanding, permitting, electing, confirming, depoſing, diſpenſing, doing and undoing, &c. I will entreat now a little of my Riches likewiſe, and great Poſſeſſions, that every man may ſee by my wealth and abundance of all things, Rents, Tythes, Tributes, my Silks, my purple Maſters, Crowns, Gold, Silver, Pearls and Gems, Lands and Lordſhips, how God here proſpereth and magnifieth his Vicar on the Earth. For to me pertaineth firſt the Imperial City of Rome; the Palace of Lateran, the Kingdom of Cicily is proper to me, Apulia and Capua be mine. Alſo the Kingdom of England and Ireland, be they not, or ought they not to be

Tributaries

KING Hen. 7.

Tributaries to me? 214. To theſe I adjoyn alſo, beſides other Provinces and Countries, both in the Occident and Orient, from the North to the South, theſe Dominions by name, 215. as Surrianum, Montembordon, & Lunæ inſulam, Corſicæ Regnum, Parvam Mantuam, Montemſelete, Inſulam Venetiarum, Ducatum Ferrariæ, Canellum, Caniodam, Ducatum Hiſtriæ, Dalmatiam, Exarchatum Ravennæ, Faventiam, Ceſenam, Caſtrum, Tiberiatus Roccam Mediolanum, Caſtrum Ceperranum, Caſtrum Cuſianum, Terram Cornulariam, Ducatum Armini, Contam, Montem Ferretum, Montem Capiniæ ſeu Olympicum, Caſtrum exforii Robin, Eugubin, Urbin, forum Sempronii, Calli, & Senogalli, Anconam, Coſam, Ducatum Peruſii, Urbenetam, & Tudertum, Caſtrum, Sinianum, Ducatum Spoletanum, Theanum, Calabriam, Ducatum Neapolim, Ducatum Beneventi, Selernum, Sorenti inſulam, Cardinam inſulam, Anciæ inſulam, Territorium Cutiſan, Territorium Preneſtinum, Terram Silandis, Terram Cluſium, Terram Tundan, Terram Vegetan, Terram Claudianen, Terram Carriſinum, Terram Fabinenſem, Terram Siram, Terram portuenſem, cum inſula Archis, Terram Oſtienſem cum maritimis, Civitatem Aquinenſem, Civitatem Larmentum, & Suffonariam, Civitatem Faliſenam, Fidenam, Feretrum, Citernam, Neapolim, Galiopolim, with divers other more, 216. which Conſtantinus the Emperor gave unto me, not that they were not mine before he did give them. 217. For in that I took them of him, I took them not as a gift (as is afore-mentioned) but as a reſtitution. And that I rendred them again to Otho, I did it not for any duty to him, but only for peace ſake. What ſhould I ſpeak here of my daily Revenues, of my Firſt-fuits, Annats, Palls, Indulgences, Bulls, Confeſſionals, Indults and Reſcripts, Teſtaments, Diſpenſations, Priviledges, Elections, Prebends, religious Houſes, and ſuch like, which come to no ſmall maſs of money? Inſomuch, that for one Pall to the Archbiſhop of Mentz, which was wont to be given for ten thouſand 218. Florens, now it is grown to twenty ſeven thouſand Florens, which I received of Jacobus the Archbiſhop, not long before Baſil Council: Beſides the Fruits of other Biſhopricks in Germany, coming to the number of fifty, whereby what vantage cometh unto my Coffers, it may partly be conjectured. But what ſhould I ſpeak of Germany, 219. when the whole World is my Dioceſs, as my Canoniſts do ſay, and all men are bound to believe, 220. except they will imagine (as the Manichees do) two beginnings, which is falſe and heretical? For Moſes ſaith, In the beginning God made heaven and earth, and not in the beginnings. 221. Wherefore as I begun, ſo I conclude, commanding, declaring, and pronouncing, to ſtand upon neceſſity of Salvation, for every humane Creature to be ſubject to me.
